WHAT IS THIS POINT YOU LONG TO KNOW?

An answer to "Tis a point I long to know," &c.

WHAT is this point you long to know?
Methinks I hear you say, 'Tis this:
I want to know I'm born of God,
An heir of everlasting bliss.

Is this the point you long to know?
The point is settled, in my view;
For if you want to love your God,
It proves he first has loved you.

I want to know Christ died for me,
I want to feel the seal within;
I want to know Christ's precious blood
Was shed to wash away my sin.

I want to feel more love to Christ,
I want more liberty in prayer;
But when I look within my heart
It almost drives me to despair.

I want a mind more firmly fixed
On Christ, my everlasting Head;
I want to feel my soul alive,
And not so barren or so dead.

I want more faith, a stronger faith,
I want to feel its power within;
I want to feel more love to God,
I want to feel less love to sin.

I want to live above the world,
And count it all but trash and toys;
I want more tokens of God's grace,
Some foretaste of eternal joys.

I want—I know not what I want;
I want that real, special good;
Yet all my wants are summed up here,
I want to love! I want my God!

Is this the point you long to know?
The dead can neither feel nor see;
It is the slave that's bound in chains
That knows the worth of liberty.

Sowhere a want like this is found,
I think I may be bold to say,
That God has fixed within thy heart
What hell can never take away.

However small thy grace appears,
There's plenty in thy living Head;
These wants you feel, my christian friend,
Were never found amongst the dead.

DANIEL HERBERT.

PSALM XLII. 2.

O CHRIST, my soul still longs to feel thee near,
While traveling on through this waste desert drear.

Grant me thy grace, and help me still to cling Close to thy wounded side; then shall I sing

The song of victory and know thy love,
Which passeth knowledge, and its fullness prove.

Oft when oppressed by cold and worldly thoughts,
Seeking relief, my heart to prayer resorts,
But finds no liberty; the heavens are brass

Above my head, through which no prayer can pass.

Why is it thus with me? O Christ, my Lord,

I cry to thee! Quicket me by thy word.

Weighted by carnal lusts, with strong desire

To please the flesh, my inward foes conspire;

Lift up my soul from thoughts of earth
and time,

And toward thyself most graciously incline.

Thou only by thy grace canst keep my soul;

Reign in my heart, its every thought control,

That I thy peace may know, and fully prove

The joy and rest of thy indwelling love.

SOME QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

A DEAR friend has sent me some questions that have occurred to her mind while reading the Scriptures, concerning the belief and practice of the Old School Baptist Church on some points. As the subjects thus presented are of general interest to seekers after truth, and some of the questions are often disturbing elements in the minds of many of the Lord's dear people, I will publish my reflections upon them in the Signs

1. Acts ii. 21, "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It does not read that they shall receive evidence that they were already saved before they called on his name, but they shall be saved. It is here and elsewhere spoken of in the future. Of course their calling upon the name of the Lord was not the cause of their salvation, but was not their salvation made in some sense to depend upon their calling upon him? It was declared concerning Jesus, "And thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." When he died and rose again that work of salvation was finished, and all of his people were saved from their sins; as Paul says, "Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ before the world began." The salvation is here spoken of as having been accomplished before they were called, before they had any knowledge of it, or even any knowledge of their need of it. And throughout the Scriptures the salvation is referred to in such manner as indicates that it is an accomplished thing. "I will show him my salvation;" "To give knowledge of salvation to the ends of the earth;" "Behold, his salvation cometh;" "Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks." But in the making known of that salvation those for whom it was prepared are brought into a condition to feel their need of it. They are separated from every other confidence, and are made to know that only God's power and mercy can avail for them. They are thus brought to "the end of the earth," as David was; to the end of earthly wisdom, strength and hope, and are made, like David, to cry unto the Lord.—Psalm lxi. 2. These are the people referred to by Joel the prophet, as quoted by the apostle, who call upon the name of the Lord. It is with them in their experience "the great and terrible day of the Lord." It is the end of the legal world, the end of all legal forms of service. The sacrifices for sin that were commanded upon the Jewish nation will from this time be recognized no more by the Lord, but will be an abomination to him. To these who had depended upon these sacrifices for acceptance with God the sun is now darkened, the moon, the law, is turned into blood; mean-their works to answer the requirements of the law now see, when the day of the Lord comes to them, that they are already condemned, and the law requires their death; and there are "signs in the heavens above," the legal ordinances and laws that were over that people, "and in the earth beneath," which means the people themselves. These signs are "blood," which means that all these ordinances signify the just condemnation of a sinner; "and fire," which is a sign of the destruction of all the works upon which they depended; "and pillars of smoke," which signifies the desolation of those whose legal hopes are thus destroyed. This wonderful and awful prophecy of Joel was fulfilled on the day of pentecost, not literally, nor in the sight of all that vast congregation, but fulfilled in the speaking of the disciples "with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance," and in the experience of the "devout men" who heard, each in his own tongue, "the wonderful works of God," and who afterward said to Peter and the rest of the apostles, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter said, "This is that which was spoken by Joel the prophet." These devout men now saw the end of that system of works, and they knew of no other way of approach unto God but by those sacrifices. When they were made to see that these would never more be accepted, and to know that there could be no power in any such works to take away sin, they said, "What shall we do?" With them the source of natural light had become darkened. These are the souls that truly call upon the name of the Lord. Peter had not told them what to say, but he had simply declared the word of the Lord, and their own condition and feelings and cries are shown in that word. No one could call upon the name of the Lord in truth who did so because he had been made to believe that he would gain something by doing so. The thought or expectation of possible reward for what we do stamps the character of our work as fleshly, selfish. The work done from such a motive cannot be true heart-work. The word was not, "If you will call upon the name of the Lord he will save you." Not only would such a call upon the name of the Lord lack every genuine quality, but the very form of the conditional expression would present the Lord as helplessly waiting to see the answer. The declaration was, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." This does not leave the thing dependent upon the will of men. The hurt soul must cry; the wounded heart must seek the water brooks; the Lord will not fail in his work in drawing his people to himself. "They shall call upon my name, and I will hear them."—Zech. xiii. 9. It is to just such people, those whom the Lord has brought to see their lost condition, to hunger and thirst after righteousness and find none in themselves, and to stand before God in the mute appeal of absolute need and longing, that Peter declares this glorious truth that such shall be saved.

To those in such condition salvation must be a future thing, and the language of Scripture thus speaks of it when referring to the poor sinner's case of need. "Thou shalt be saved." But this does not contradict in the least the truth that the salvation was fully and absolutely purposed by the Lord before the world began, and prepared for every one of all his chosen people by the work of Jesus. The poor soul who is brought to supplicate God's mercy and to plead for salvation does not cry and beg because he believes that God has already saved him, and has ordained that he shall come to enjoy that salvation by begging for it. To call upon the name of the Lord from such a principle would be as unmeaning and insincere as to call upon his name because he believed his salvation had been made to depend upon that piece of work. There would be no true calling upon that holy name in either case. There would be no more heart in such a cry than in the cry or laugh of an actor on the stage. There needs no deep hurt to cause such a cry, nor does a hired laugh indicate pleasure in the heart. "Those that come unto God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The Lord knows how to put that faith in the heart of a poor sinner by which he shall come and plead, and cry, and wait before God, that faith which will not be denied, and cannot be turned back by refusal, but will still urge his needs, and plead for mercy, and will hope for at least one of the crumbs that fall to the dogs from the Master's table. That poor suppliant does not know, of course, that this feeling of urgency in prayer and supplication which cannot be turned back, is faith, the gift of God; does not know of the purpose of God to save him, and to bring him to himself in this way. He simply calls upon the name of the Lord because he cannot help it: Joseph's brethren, when they stood before Joseph in Egypt with money in their hands to buy of him the corn that would save them from starvation, did not know anything of God's purpose in this. They did not know, when they were trembling with fear and apprehension because of his searching questions and his rough manner to them, that God had sent this man before them to save them by a great deliverance. They only knew that they must get corn of him or die; and they felt more sharply than ever before that they were very wicked, and that they richly deserved any evil he might bring upon them, and that if they were sent away empty they would have no reason to complain.

But after the poor soul has experienced a hope of salvation he learns that all his steps, both in the darkness and in the light, have been ordained by the Lord. He learns that both his salvation and his calling unto that salvation were according to God's eternal purpose, and not according to his own works. You see a shining pillar of sunlight falling in an otherwise darkened room. From your place in the dark end of the room you admire its beauty, but do not, we will suppose, know what it is, never having yet seen the sun; but when you have walked into that light, or when it has moved to where you are, then you feel its power, and for a time you will be taken up with the warmth and comfort it gives you; but soon your wondering eyes will follow the course of that light that comes so wonderfully to you, and reaching out along its shining way, your sight will not be interrupted till with joyful and sweet bewilderment it melts into the sun itself, so unspeakably glorious, so far away and yet so close to you, so great and terrible as a consuming fire, and yet gently clothing your poor, chilled body with unspeakable warmth, and comfort, and beauty. So after one has experienced the love of God shed abroad in his heart, that sweetest of all blessings ever felt by mortal man, he is made to know what was communicated of old unto the prophet who says, "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee."—Jer. xxxi. 3.

2. Act ii. 38.—"Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Here the apostle told them something to do. It looks very clear to us naturally that in this answer of the apostle, and in all the preaching of the apostles, there is presented a work for the poor sinner to do as a condition upon which the blessings of the gospel are to be received by him. And it will continue so to appear to our minds until we come to where they were who asked "what shall we do?" We cannot understand the true meaning and application of any gospel preaching until we become ourselves the characters who need just what is embraced in that preaching. Then that which had before been to us merely a subject to study and question and argue about, becomes to us truly "the gospel," "glad tidings of good things;" good news of salvation for even such justly condemned sinners as we. Then instead of burdensome tasks to be performed the gospel shows us blessed privileges to be thankfully enjoyed; instead of calling us to again measure our power with that of the law, which has steadily borne us down into the dust, the gospel is to us "the power of God unto salvation," and it is therefore indeed a "joyful sound" to our souls, and we "gladly receive the words" of those whom God sends to preach to us.

We have already noticed the condition of those to whom the apostle said "repent and be baptized." They were under the law, but it now gave them no work to do any more, but held them as transgressors already condemned. They knew of no way in which any one could approach unto God but by the works of the law, and that way was now shut up to them. Now they asked, "What shall we do?" The worst of crimes had been charged upon them, the killing of the Prince of life. The apostles had not urged them to seek salvation. Indeed that would seem unnecessary in the case of one who sees the need of it. The apostles had not told them what to do or say, but had preached to them the word, and out of the Scriptures of the prophets had shown them their own condition before God as guilty, helpless sinners, and had declared the salvation of God.

It is to be observed that these who asked this question were "devout men," not mockers. They feared God and loved righteousness, but they knew nothing of the gospel yet. Hitherto they had not been made ready for the gospel. They were now well on the road to it, and the Lord was bringing them. They were now at the end of their own works, as are all of God's people before they are prepared to see and rejoice in the works of the Lord. Peter said to them, "Repent." The natural man who has engaged in the work of preaching says, "You must repent if you would be saved," and he supposes he is preaching just as Peter did. But how different his preaching is from that of the one sent of God. Peter preached repentance in the name of Jesus; this one preaches it in the name of the sinner. "You must repent; you must be sorry for your sins and give them up, which you can easily do if you set about it in earnest, and then God will forgive your sins and save you." That is preaching repentance in the sinner's name. What has the name of Jesus to do with that?

But suppose repentance did mean sorrow, and to repent of one's sins did mean to be sorry for them; can one make himself sorry for anything that he is not sorry for already? And as for giving up one's sins, we need to think carefully what that means. Suppose one has been lying or stealing, and you persuade him to stop doing so. Has he given up his sins? He may think he has, but when arrested for what he has already said falsely, or taken unjustly, he will find that his sins have not given him up. He will find that he cannot forsake his sins, cannot get away from them, though he does not commit any more crimes. The prison walls keep him from doing any more injury to his neighbor, but his sins hold him there.

But repentance does not mean sorrow, but the effect of sorrow. The apostle says, "Godly sorrow [for sin] worketh repentance." These men were already sorry for sin, and that is why they asked what to do. The other part of that great concourse of people did not ask any such question. The preaching did not prick them in the heart, for that feeling heart had not been given them. The Lord gives that new heart, and only those to whom he gives it know what it is to feel godly sorrow for sin; and, conversely, every one who feels sorry for his sins because they are sins, not because he fears punishment for them, has been given a new heart, and will dwell forever with God in glory.

To say to one who has been justly shut up in prison, waiting for the execution of the just sentence of death, "Repent," would be mocking his helplessness, unless you gave him the repentance. For repentance in that case would mean, "Get out of prison;" "Get away from your crime and its penalty." He would say, I cannot repent. The law will not let me get away. Esau was sorry not to have his birthright, but he could not repent; he could not trade back.

To the one in prison, to the one awaiting his death, and especially who now hates and loathes his sin more than he fears its punishment, what a blessed privilege it would be to him to repent. If repentance could be preached to him with power, with authority, it would not be as a duty enjoined upon him to do, but as a gracious and glorious work done for him, and now announced to his astonished and gladdened soul. At that preaching the prison doors would fly open, the preparations for death would disappear, and under the shining heavens his soul would stand in glorious liberty, and sing the praises of him who had redeemed him from death.

This is what and how Peter preached Jesus to them who had said, "What shall we do?" Jesus, whom you crucified, has been exalted with the right hand of God to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance unto Israel, and the forgiveness of sins. He has ended the law's service and requirements by fulfilling its righteousness, and now calls you away from its bondage and death to the liberty of the gospel. This is repentance in the name of Jesus. It is not preaching a duty to one unwilling to perform it, but who may be urged to do it in order not to be lost, but it is preaching a work done for the poor sinner, a glorious release from sin, which his soul rejoices to hear as the best of tidings. The Lord has brought the poor soul to just this place and condition of helpless need and longing in order that he may know the joyful sound. The blessing of God causes him to know it. It is to the poor that the gospel is preached; the rich would not receive it, for they will not give up their riches of righteousness. To them the gospel must be of another kind, acknowledging some power and ability in themselves to please God. But he that preaches that other gospel to please men, "let him be accursed."

Repentance and the forgiveness of sins are both equally the gift of Jesus unto Israel. Turning from law to gospel is a great blessing, and is experienced as the work of this dear Savior in ourselves. The apostle directs in his preaching what Jesus has commanded, and his commands are written in the heart. He works in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and it is the highest privilege and the sweetest joy of his people to work out in their obedience what he thus works in them.

SILAS H. DURAND.

POWELLVILLE, Md., Sept. 9, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER:—While my mind goes back to my early experience I am minded to pen some of my thoughts, if the One who holds the destiny of all in his hands will direct my pen. When our minds are led to contemplate the new birth, something is brought forth that our carnal nature does not possess. When one is carnally minded they cannot write of the things pertaining to the new birth. When one is born into this world of sin and sorrow, is not the evil, carnal, corrupt principle in his nature? We know it is. Yet some say that man is born upright. But it appears to me that this carnal nature is in the man when he is born into this evil world, and as he grows up to manhood it is made manifest. It is supposed by some that the little child is sinless and harmless; but as it grows, it develops and shows the evil that is in its nature. The idea of the religious world is to teach the child while it is young, while it knows nothing of good or evil, and as it grows it will become a christian, and finally get to heaven by its good works and the influence of its religious teacher. While this is the opinion of the religious world, let us now have the mind of Christ on the subject. He says, a man must be born again, or he cannot see the kingdom of God. But the worldly teacher says, You must make the effort and be good before the Lord will bring about the change. If this be true, that we must first be good, and keep so, in order to bring about the change, when will it appear, and what will the change be when it does appear? If a child is kept good from its youth up, if there is any change it must be for the worse. While this may seem the right way to the world, it is contrary to the teaching of the Holy Spirit and of holy writ; for it is plainly taught in the Scriptures of divine truth that the carnal mind, and what the world calls good works, worketh death. It appears to me that before one experiences the new birth their works become as filthy rags before the just and holy God, and all efforts to bring themselves to Christ are in vain. And when the Lord teaches the heart of a poor sinner the way of truth, it makes them cry out, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" He then learns that there is an arm underneath that is able to save to the uttermost a poor sinner; that is able to save him from a horrible pit and miry clay, and place his feet on a rock, Christ Jesus, and establish his goings, and put a new song in his mouth, even a song of redeeming love. Then he is taught that his own work is nothing but chaff, and is blown away by the wind. This is the work of the new, spiritual life. He now feels like a new creature. He feels there is something wrought within him that is not controlled by the power or will of man. He has begun a new life, or a new life is begun in him. Well, what is the result? Let us examine ourselves. How was it with us, and how is it now? Once there was a poor, fallen sinner, sunk down into darkness, when all appeared as gloomy as a dungeon. No arm of flesh could reach his case. After passing through a sleepless night, he awoke one morning with the prison doors open, and the prisoner was let loose. He felt like singing praise to the One who had wrought the great change. When the voice said, "Come forth!" the bands were broken asunder, and he spoke peace to his soul. He then felt like one entering upon a new life. It seemed to him as though sin was no more with him. He continued in this state of mind for a few weeks, when he was led down into the baptismal water, one bright spring morning, as the winter had gone by, no darkness or gloom appearing. Apparently all evil had gone, to be remembered no more. He can remember the words uttered by his lips, while looking back to his former sinful life, and to the sin-cursed world, "I bid you adieu." He felt as though heaven had come down to him, and he would enter, never to return to this evil world. Well, it has been some time since then; but he did not remain in that frame of mind long. About twelve months passed away, in which things seemed to go along smoothly, with the hand of the Lord directing him. Did he not have any dark hours, and feel the evil promptings of a carnal nature? At times things would appear a little evil, but with patience he was enabled to endure it, for about the period of time above mentioned, when the tempter began more forcibly his work. The result was that the warfare began, and became more forcible than ever. Then he began to wonder if the work of grace was ever begun in his heart. He thought, when he was baptized, that the evil he was once possessed with would not return any more. He thought the older he grew the more he would know about God and the grace of God. O how sad it was with him when he found things different! He can now look back and remember the time when he was, as he hopes, dwelling in the house of the Lord, and when the light shined about him, and heaven seemed not far away. But alas! those happy days are past and gone, and cannot be called back. He has been made to sink down in a pit where there is no living water. The Sun of righteousness had seemingly gone down to rise no more. His own arm could not bring him up, for he had no strength of his own. While in this horrible pit a star appeared, which gave him a little hope that underneath was the arm of him who hath all power to raise up the beggar from the dunghill, and cause the lame to walk. Though one may sink down into the great depths, yet the everlasting arm is underneath. The hope, though small it appears, is an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and keeps the soul from sinking in despair. While wandering about in the desert and darkness, the evil one is ready to suggest things which are tempting to him, causing him sometimes to almost forget that the new, christian life has ever begun its work in him. Then he is reminded of the sow that was washed, returning to her wallowing in the mire. Yes, he is often led by the evil one to do and say things that do not suit the christian company. Then the thought occurs to him, Have you not entered upon the life of a christian? Have you not thought that old things are passed away, and all things become new? But here you are doing and saying the things which you did before you experienced a new life. It is written, that he that putteth his hand to the plow should not look back; but here you are back again in your old ways. Is this leading a new life? If it is, where and how are you showing the good works and conversation of one who is born again and has entered upon the life of a christian? When he begins to hunt for evidence, he again sinks down in sorrow, and cries unto the Giver of every good and perfect gift to lead him into the way of truth, in the paths of righteousness, that he may walk therein, and shun the evil that is within him. If the Lord shall direct his servant to speak a word of comfort, to the edifying and building up of his downcast soul, then again he is enabled to rejoice in the work of redeeming grace. But when those moments pass away, soon he is back into his old habits, and begins to wonder, Is it true that the man is born again? If so, why is it that he cannot lay aside his old habits and ways, and walk in newness of life, as becometh one who is possessed of the Spirit of the living God? Then occurs to his mind what is said in the writings of the apostle Paul, "The flesh [the carnal mind] lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit [the spiritual mind] against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." According to that saying the carnal mind, which is a part of the man, is not changed or born again. Yet it is plainly seen that there is a change in one who is born again. We will take the case of Saul of Tarsus, when on his way to Damascus to destroy those that called on the name of Jesus. He was stricken to the ground, and heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" It was no self-made preacher that spake to him, but the One who speaks, and it is done; who commands, and it stands fast. It was the Lord who spake to him, and told him what to do. Thus it is with every stricken sinner who feels the working of the Spirit prompting him to better things. Saul was no more called Saul, but Paul, a minister of the gospel. How different was it with him after this. We can plainly see there was a change wrought in Saul; for he was enabled by divine grace to see Jesus, and heaven opened. His speech was different after that; and instead of pursuing his boisterous and persecuting course, he was made humble at the feet of the saints. So it is with every one the Lord strikes down to the dust. While such was the case with Saul, is it the case with this one? After that Paul was given a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him. He says, "For the good I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." That seems to be the experience of this one; yet sometimes the door of hope is opened, and heaven seems not far away. O that I could always be in that frame of mind! It is a "heaven below the Redeemer to know."

In hope of better things than earth can give,

L. A. HALL.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—The inclosed letter would, I think, prove edifying to the readers of the SIGNS. I have enjoyed it much.

Yours as ever,

JOHN MCCONNELL.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 21, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER MCCONNELL:

—My mind is directed to you this evening; indeed I have thought of you for several days more than usual, but only to-night have I been impressed to write to you; and while the impression is with me, yet what I shall say to you has not been revealed. When Peter was called for by those whom the Centurian sent (after he had seen the vision on the housetop), he went, nothing doubting, yet ignorant of the Lord's pleasure concerning him at this time. When God speaks to us in these last times by his Son, we are, I think, not to question the manner of his speaking, the time nor the season, neither question or consult our convenience touching our material surroundings, but go, as Abraham went, by faith, "not knowing whither he went," not suiting his convenience, but in the spirit of obedience. The impressions of the Lord's people to act in unison with a desire for the peace and prosperity of Zion are to me solemn things, and in no sense to be disregarded. In whatever "divers manners" God spake unto his people through all the dark, shadowy dispensation, it is very apparent by every sign of the times, and through every avenue of a gracious experience, that he "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Whatever communications we may receive from our Father in heaven, and by whatever manner they may come, we may at least be assured they can come only through the one divine source; therefore are we admonished to "try the spirits, whether they are of God;" and in trying them,

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

AS WE enter upon a new volume of the SIGNS, and also stand upon the threshold of a new year, we feel like sending a New Year's greeting to all our brethren, readers of the SIGNS. As we reflect upon the year that has closed, and think of that which is now just begun, we can but say that the mercies of the past encourage us to hope for the future. The most prominent thought in our mind is the wonderful goodness of our covenant-keeping God toward us in the past, and our great unworthiness, and then, springing out of this, a deep sense of our dependence upon him to keep us and sustain us for the future.

We have been connected in an editorial capacity with the SIGNS for a little more than a year. We entered upon our labors with many fears and misgivings. The same fears and misgivings still exist in our mind. We feel no better qualified for the place now than we did at the first. If in any degree we have written or done that which has been pleasing to God, and for his glory, and for the good of Zion, to his mercy and grace does all the praise belong. We doubt not that many things have deserved the criticism and censure of those who fear God, but yet the brethren have been very forbearing toward us. We trust that we do feel some degree of gratitude to the Giver of all good for his abundant mercy toward us. We have reason to praise him that his mercy endureth forever.

The past year has been like the years which have gone before it. It has been filled with its appointed measure of hope and fear, joy and sorrow, trials and deliverances, conflicts and victories, toil and rest, and all of us have had our allotted share. By these things our God has been carrying on his purposes of grace and mercy concerning us. All have in his own way and by his own sovereign control worked together for the good of all who love God. Many during the year have been called to try the reality of the things which they have believed and in which they have hoped. Many have been born of God, and have seen and entered the kingdom of heaven. In all these things the year has been as the years before it. For ourselves, we have been enabled to rejoice amid all these "various shifting scenes" that "the Lord reigneth." Besides these things, which more especially belong to the daily travel of believers, God has reigned in all the changes that have befallen the nations of the earth. It is safe to say that natural men are no better nor worse than they have ever been. The world has not been converted to God. All the efforts of men have but shown that the world knows not God, and that no human power can reveal him to men. The doctrine of the cross is still to every Jew a stumbling-block, and to every Greek foolishness. It is still true that only to the called is Jesus Christ and him crucified the power of God and the wisdom of God. In this also all has been as it has always been. There has been no change and there never will be any change in these things. Yet God so reigns among the inhabitants of earth that all the providential changes which transpire, and all the carnal ambitions and warfare of the potshards of the earth, only subserve the purposes of goodness and mercy which he has purposed concerning his people. What reason we all have to rejoice that in all providential events also the Lord reigneth!

As we look over the past year in connection with the course which the SIGNS has pursued we can say that it has been our aim to maintain in its columns the same principles of truth to which its opening numbers more than sixty years ago were devoted; and this has been our aim not simply because we would be consistent, nor because we regard the SIGNS as having been a standard of faith, but because we have believed the same things that were then dear to the editor, and to those who sustained the SIGNS. We doubt not that editorially and otherwise many things have been said which when tested by the infallible word will prove to be very far short of the fullness of the truth. God forbid that we should claim perfection for the SIGNS! But we can say this in all sincerity, that we have endeavored to conduct the editorial department of the SIGNS so that sovereign grace should be magnified, and self and creature power should be abased. The correspondence has been mainly superintended by brother Beebe and brother Jenkins, and we think that careful readers must admit that they have done their work wisely and well. It is right that we should say that neither of us holds ourselves bound to indorse every sentiment which our correspondents may express; but we all do desire, as much as in us lies, to keep out of the SIGNS all that conflicts with the doctrine of sovereign grace. The SIGNS was started originally as a medium of correspondence between those of like precious faith who were scattered abroad. How much it has been blessed to the good of the scattered ones no one but God can know. During the short time since we were called to the position of one of the editors of the SIGNS we have not once thought that we could fill the place of the former editors, Elder Gilbert Beebe and Elder Wm. L. Beebe; but we have desired to contend for the truth as it is in Jesus, which they also contended for. Looking back over the past year we can see that our brethren have been very forbearing toward us, and we have reason to be grateful to them all for the kindness which they have shown. We hope that they all have given us credit for an anxious desire to know and do the truth.

As regards the coming year, we can say that we hope to still contend for the truth. Some things we do not desire to either write about or that others should. We desire to speak of things which may be of profit. Some things we feel sure would not be to the edification of the body of Christ. The things which should in our judgment fill the columns of the SIGNS are the same things which the people of God have believed and loved in all ages. They are summed up in the testimony which Paul bore in writing to the church at Corinth when he said, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Like Paul, we desire that through the SIGNS we may be among the brethren in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling; and like Paul again we desire that our speech and our writing shall not be with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that the faith of all who may read may not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

We desire to write of the doctrine of God our Savior experimentally. It seems to us that to meditate and to write concerning the character and attributes and name and work of our covenant-keeping God must always be good and profitable for those of a spiritual mind. There can be no real, intelligent worship of God without a definite knowledge of his character, attributes, name and works; for true worship consists in a loving, reverential ascription to him of that which is true of him. How can any man render acceptable worship to any being of whom he knows nothing? How can a man strengthen and comfort himself in a God of whose character he is ignorant? Therefore it seems to us needful, both for our good and for the glory of God, that the things which are true of him should be set forth constantly, and that we should meditate much upon them. Nothing can be more profitable for the child of God than meditations upon the God of Israel. The psalmist said, "My meditation of him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord." The truth concerning the God whom we worship is not a mere cold theory or an interesting speculation, but it is a vital necessity for the building up of our faith, hope, love, humility, confidence and trust. Our joy as well as our life is in the truth concerning God. Were it not so he would not have revealed himself in the person of Jesus Christ, nor through the word of holy men of old.

We cannot in reality divide the doctrine of God our Savior from the experience of his people. Language itself is so poor that we are compelled to speak of doctrine and of experience, but it should never be forgotten that in and by experience we always learn doctrine. The word "doctrine" literally means "teaching;" and what our God teaches he teaches in our personal experience. Because of this he has declared by the prophet that "they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them." Doctrine is a revelation of truth felt in experience, and experience seals that truth to us with power.

As the doctrine of God is sealed to our hearts through the power of the Holy Spirit in experience, the only foundation for true obedience in our heart and life is laid. Through this real experience of the doctrine of God, love to God springs up in the heart; and inspiration tells us that love is the fulfilling of the law—is obedience. All in whose hearts the love of God is shed abroad will desire to know and do the will of him whom they love. Having such desires in the heart, they will desire to hear much about the obedience, as well as about the doctrine and the experience. Every child of God, when led by the Spirit, desires to have his mind often stirred up to remember the doctrine and the experience and the obedience. If the doctrine of God revealed in his experience is a joy to him, so also is it a joy to him when by this experience he is led to walk in the path of obedience.

These are some of the things which have always been in the SIGNS, and these are some of the things with which we hope its columns may continue to be filled.

It is our desire to keep out all that savors of mere controversy. We do not mean that calm and brotherly differences of view shall not be published. This is not controversy. Any language that shall savor of personal unkindness ought not to be allowed. It always does harm, and never good. It is injurious to the writer's own soul, it provokes a similar injurious feeling in the one thus assailed, which will also war against his soul, and it always causes every truly humble, meek and spiritual mind to grieve, and the cause of God is reproached. Controversy always results, sooner or later, in more or less alienation of feeling and acerbity of speech, which is entirely foreign to the spirit of the Master, who even when reviled, reviled not again. A free, candid, kind and brotherly discussion of any scriptural theme can never do harm, but tends to clearer understanding of the truth, and therefore to a closer fellowship among the people of God; but let each writer be sure to remember that the brother who differs from him desires to know the truth as well as himself, and is as likely to be right as himself, and that it is more than likely that the difference is only seeming, and not real. Many a heated controversy, leading to declarations of non-fellowship, has arisen out of a failure to understand the meaning of each other's language. We hope in what we write to keep this in mind. May God enable us to do so.

Those who have conducted the SIGNS have always aimed as far as possible to keep unpleasant personalities out of its columns. We do not desire to depart from this rule. It can subserve no possible good to publish abroad the home difficulties of brethren. Why should such things be bruited abroad? Rather they should be hidden away from the gaze of men, as something too sorrowful and shameful to make public. One would think, where troubles occur, that all who love God would be too much grieved at heart, and too much bowed down with the burden and the shame of it, to even want to speak of it at home. How then could they seek to make the report of it public property? The result of publishing such things is that the friends of truth grieve, while its enemies rejoice. Never, brethren, talk of such things in the presence of any worldly man. If there are personal troubles, keep them locked up from the world, lest the enemies of God should rejoice. Let as little be said about such things as possible, even among ourselves. There are better things to talk about than the wrong-doing of our brethren, especially in their absence.

In conclusion, we ask our brethren to bear with us in the future as they have in the past. We hope that we do feel the need of divine help every day and hour. Brethren, we trust that we may be in your hearts to pray for us, that in all that we do and say God may be glorified and his people benefited.

We wish for all our readers a new year of blessing and happiness. May you all realize that God has blessed you with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen you in Christ before the foundation of the world, that you should be holy and without blame before him in love. God is faithful who has promised, who also will perform it.

LARGE TYPE SMALL BIBLES.

WE would especially call attention to the advertisement on last page, of small, light Bibles, printed in large full-faced type. While these Bibles weigh only from two to three pounds they are printed in large full-faced type that can be easily read by those whose sight is failing.

The extended covers lap over and protects the edges of the leaves.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

DENYING CHRIST.

"THEN began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man; and immediately the cock crew."—Matt. xxvi. 74.

How often we think of poor Peter, and wonder how his burning zeal and ardent love for his divine Lord could have become so suddenly and so strangely chilled. One hour leaves him firmly resolved to go with Jesus to the prison or to the death; but alas! the next finds him cursing and swearing, and denying that he knows the man. How unsafe then for christians to trust in the strength of their own arms, in their frames, feelings or resolutions.

But the thought has occurred to us that this account was not handed down in the Scriptures merely to let the christians of succeeding generations know the weakness and infidelity of Peter, but rather that this lesson may serve both to admonish and to encourage the saints of God in all subsequent time. We are admonished that although our zeal and self-consecration to the Lord, and our full determination may be to continue with him though all others should forsake him, yet we are liable, as he was, to be sifted as wheat, and that we are only safe so far as the everlasting arms of our covenant God are underneath and around us. We are encouraged also in the hour of deep distress and temptation, when we see and feel and realize that our own strength is perfect weakness, and that we cannot fulfill our resolutions for one hour, by the assurance that Jesus has prayed for us that our faith fail not. He is able, though we are not, to keep us from falling.

But we are about to inquire whether there be any Peters in the flock at this day. Are there any among us who, in the hour of much slighter temptation than he experienced, deny that we know the man?

When a poor, trembling soul has been thoroughly convinced of his lost and helpless condition as a sinner before God, and in the hour of his greatest extremity is made to rejoice in Jesus Christ as his full, complete and everlasting salvation, like Peter he feels a burning love and ardent zeal, his resolutions are firmly fixed that he will follow Jesus, though hell and death should obstruct the way. But how is it that many of these, instead of obeying his first command, instead of following his footsteps into the waters of baptism, are lingering upon the banks of Jordan, saying, "I know not the man," or at least, "I fear that I know not the man?" Can a redeemed, regenerated, pardoned sinner disobey this command without denying Jesus?

But allowing we have been enabled through grace abounding to take his yoke and learn of him, we have followed his footsteps in baptism, and, perhaps like him, we are led into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. How now? We are made to fast long, and Satan comes first to challenge our relationship to God. "If thou be the Son of God," he said to Jesus, and if thou be a child of God, a christian, he says to us, command these stones to become bread. Why go hungry and thirsty, in darkness, and doubtings and sorrow? If thou art a christian, make bread for thyself out of these stones, these means, as he now calls them, and feed thyself. Or cast thyself down from the pinnacle of the temple, where Satan has perhaps in temptation elevated thee; or if by these temptations you are not led to deny Jesus, and obey the devil, he will next tempt you with the vanities and glories of the earth; all these he offers thee as an inducement to deny Jesus. If a christian be tempted to undertake the experiment of making spiritual food of means, the bread of life out of stones, even the tables on which the Sinai covenant was written, he thereby says in his conduct that he does not know Jesus. If he would put the promises of God rashly to the test, to see if God's angels will truly bear him up from dashing against a stone, &c., he virtually denies Jesus.

If the riches, honors, pleasures and possessions of earth have at any time greater attractions for the christian than the cross of Jesus, does not that christian in leaving the footsteps of his flock, deny that he knows the man?

But we wish to press our inquiries home. We will suppose that the christian has owned his Lord, and in the presence of heaven and earth has come nobly forth in his public profession, has been baptized, has united with the church, has enrolled himself with the despised followers of the Son of God, and even in the congregation of the saints has openly declared what great things God has done for his soul; he has gone still farther, and has stepped boldly forth to bear his testimony to the truth of the doctrine of salvation by grace alone, and to the sovereignty of God; but is there not still room for him to deny Jesus? Let us see.

There appear to us so many ways in which christians deny Christ that we scarcely know where to begin or where to stop enumerating these ways. Thus christian brethren or sisters, sound as we may have represented them, in the articles which they profess to believe, by every departure in practice from the spirit of the gospel deny that they know the Lord.

A brother has departed from the rules of the gospel in doctrine or in practice, a wound is inflicted on the minds of many, the peace of the church is in jeopardy; but I do not like to go to him according to the rule laid down by our Lord, Matthew xviii. I leave the unpleasant task for some of my more faithful brethren, or let the case be neglected altogether. Now, do I not deny that I know him who commanded me to go and tell my offending brother his fault? If I say, "I do not know that it is my duty to go," you will ask me if I know him to be my Master who commanded me to do so. Can I know Jesus as my Master, and honor him as such, and yet disobey his express command?

Again, the seats of some of the professed followers of Jesus are vacant in the church at times appointed for the saints to be together for the worship of God, or to attend to the affairs of Zion. Do those absentees deny Jesus? Perhaps not. There are cases in which they may be providentially hindered, as Paul was once and again. But are there not nine cases of our absence out of every ten wherein we would not dare to plead that God in his providence had prevented us? But says one, "It was not altogether convenient." Is then our owning Christ as our Commander a mere matter of convenience? Has he commanded us to attend to his ordinances when convenient? But says another, "I was not well; my health was delicate." Would the same imperfect state of health have deterred you from your worldly business? Take care! There is great danger of disguising your language, as Peter did. Whatever you may think, or feel, or say, your conduct says you do not know the man. Has he bestowed on you a gift for the edification of the saints? Why do you not improve it? No matter whether it be of preaching, exhorting, praying, singing, or sitting in your place to judge of what is preached, sung or prayed. You can no more neglect your calling as a christian, without saying that you know not the man, than Paul or Peter could theirs.

Again, is a portion of your temporal goods required to relieve the poor saints, to provide a comfortable place for the worship of God, or to defray any necessary expense which the cause of Christ requires? Now comes the desperate struggle. Satan presents the glories of the earth; the earthly treasure has its charms, and Satan and self command you to hold it fast. While the wants of the church and the commands of your Master are disregarded, Christ is dishonored, Satan obeyed, and the church and the world are told by your conduct that you "Know not the man!"

It is even so whenever and in all cases where christians allow worldly interests, carnal pleasures, self-gratifications, worldly applause, a fear of want, or dread of persecution, to deter them from their obedience to Christ; they say that they do not know him. If the flesh pots of Egypt have become so palatable that your souls loathe, as light food, the heavenly manna, and the world gets between you and the church of God, and you can relinquish the privileges of the church of God rather than the gain of worldly substance, beware of those judgments with which he will assuredly judge his people. He sent quails in judgment to Israel; and will he not in judgment cause that the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways?

We have only touched briefly on a few of the many points wherein it is made to appear that Peter was not alone in denying Jesus. O may we all be as speedily looked into repentance and prepared to comfort the brethren as he was. We design to resume this subject soon.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., August 1, 1859.

GLAD TIDINGS.

It is our happy privilege to announce to those of our brethren who may have been aware of the grievance felt by our brethren of the Butler Church, of Georgia, with their brethren of the Middletown and the Warwick Churches, of New York, that all trouble has now been removed.

The Middletown and the Warwick Churches at their regular church meeting, Nov. 30th, 1895, each passed an act rescinding so much of their act of Dec. 31st, 1887, as sustained the editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in publishing in an editorial dated Sept. 15th, 1887, the following sentence, viz., "With the writer [Elder John Rowe] we would obey the command in the text, to keep no company, no, not to eat."

In accordance with the above B. L. Beebe, a member of the Middletown Church, and one of the editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, made an acknowledgment to the Butler Church of his error in publishing said objectionable editorial sentence, and asked their forgiveness for the same. In reply our heart was made to rejoice by receiving the following loving and brotherly letter from the pastor of the Butler Church, viz.:

B. L. BEEBE, MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.—MY DEAR AND MORE THAN PRECIOUS BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I am just back home from Butler, where I had the good fortune to be present when your letter and those of the other two churches were read. I wish you could have been there, and given the members of that little church an opportunity to embrace you. Your letter was so Christlike, and breathed so much of his spirit, that we could not help falling very deeply in love with you. The church mailed answers to-day to you and the two churches also, saying their statements were all she could ask, &c. The Lord bless you, which I am sure he will do.

Yours in love,

H. BUSSEY.

COLUMBUS, Ga., Dec. 16, 1895.

The two official letters of the Butler Church to our churches are in the hands of the Clerks of the two churches, and will doubtless be read at their next church meetings.

As for ourself, we know that we are but a poor, weak, erring mortal; but our prayer is that the Lord will prosper Zion.

B. L. BEEBE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

if we see not Jesus, who is "the express image of his person," we are to reject them. If the spirit of revenge is in our heart, or even the spirit of criticism, we do well to take heed to the divine teaching, lest without intending it we might wound a brother to our hurt. Again, in trying the spirits I think we should always bear in mind that spirit of self-emulation with which Satan is always so ready to deceive us. So often am I deceived in that way, I am lifted up, and my conscience is soothed with a feeling of having done at least one worthy act; but alas! when I have thoroughly sifted it I find it has all been for the lifting of self, instead of Jesus, on high. I have, however, more of that horrid selfishness than any one else, and the Lord is pleased to give me a clear view of it sometimes. God, in speaking to us by his Son, does it in an effectual and surprising way; effectual, because all his work is perfect, and must necessarily produce the effect which he designs; and surprising, because the voice comes in a way contrary to that we were looking for it. "He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." He takes away from us all other voices, that we may hear the voice of him that speaketh in the Father's name. Having fulfilled the law in us, by the sacrifice of himself in the one great atonement on Calvary, the shadow of things to come is taken away, which was "the first;" by which removal we see the substance, whose voice is as "the sound of many waters," and full of sweetness, whereby "the second" is established; for we see Jesus, by whom the way and plan of salvation is made plain before us. Therefore he speaks to us through (or by) Jesus in fulfillment. He takes away the darkness (all manner of Phariseism and Arminianism), and establishes the light, by which we see two things; first, the holiness, justice and mercy of God in perfect harmony. Second, our own total depravity, our utter weakness, and entire dependence. He takes away the love for things we once loved, and causes us to "hate the evil and love the good, and establish judgement in the gate." His kingdom is established in purity, which is the law of love. Through great tribulation the subjects of his kingdom are "tried as the gold is tried," and refined as the silver is refined. Their sins, though they be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow. They enter the kingdom as little children, and become established in purity of heart and mind. God speaks unto us by his Son in all the ordinances of the church, whereby we show forth his following in the outward form, as an earnest of an inner consciousness of divine love by a living faith. By his Son he speaks to us in the answering of faith to faith, as his love flows from heart to heart; also in the hope that enables us to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus;" and in whatever manner his speech may come to us, whether as the dew distilled, as the rain upon the mown grass, as the voice of the harpers harping with their harps, in fiery trials, in deep distresses, in judgments, or in victories won, it always presents a completeness in fulfillment, a finished salvation, a kingdom established by grace alone, and in no wise upon the efforts of the creature. If our walk is by faith, both in the outward manifestation and the inner consciousness, then do we confess that Jesus has come in the flesh. Such confession made by the lips is of itself no evidence that the statement is true, unless it is accompanied by the certain signs of a work of grace in the heart. God speaks to us by his Son in every circumstance of his mission on the earth, from Bethlehem to Calvary. His miracles, his wonderful teaching, his agony in Gethsemane, his ignominious death on the cross, are the literal manifestations of the finished work ordained and accomplished in the mind of the Father before ever the worlds were made, attesting to the profound truth that he has become the Mediator of the new testament, and of a better covenant, which is established upon better promises than the tabernacle that was made according to the pattern shown on the mount. Each individual christian experience is the manifestation of the substance realized, which was set forth in type and shadow by the literal travel of the children of Israel, from the lifting of the burden in Egypt to the great sacrifice on Calvary. The burden of the song of Moses and the Lamb in the exercised heart is sin; its consequences and its deliverance therefrom through the blood of the cross. God speaks to us by his Son in suffering; for Jesus learned "obedience by the things which he suffered." So also as meek and lowly followers of him we must learn obedience through suffering. A knowledge of sin, and dreadful sorrow because of it, is a source of untold suffering to the poor, burdened child. Inability to do the things we would causes us to suffer, because we are thereby led to believe that we dishonor him whom we profess to so dearly love. The children of Israel in Egypt were placed under heavy and grievous burdens because they were Israelites. No Egyptian was so burdened; and is it not true of all who suffer, being burdened with sin, because they are the election of grace, or spiritual Israel? They suffer not in the grave of a natural life, but at the very dawn of the spiritual life suffering begins, and from the dawn of the new existence God speaks unto us by his Son. To fear God is to hate evil; and now we hate that which once we loved, and the desires and aspirations in the new life are all bound up in Jesus. Before, the cry of the carnal heart was, "Away with him! crucify him! we will not have this man to reign over us." But now we find that without him we can do nothing. He is the Alpha and Omega of all our hopes, the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. He speaks to us in our doubting seasons; for to doubt is to show signs of life, and to live is to live in Jesus. In every condition he speaks, by which exercise we learn to know him as the only wise God our Father. Here a little, there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept, we obtain a knowledge of him who is our life. May he abundantly bless you in all that he has ordained concerning the future that is still before you.

With much love from us all to yourself and sister McConnell, I am, as ever, your brother,

B. F. COULTER.

PEASTER, Texas, Dec. 1, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS AND READERS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I feel like trying to write of the goodness and mercies of our Lord to poor sinners. I feel to say with David, that goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life. O that I could praise him more than I do, by an orderly walk and godly conversation. O for grace that I may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith I hope I have been called. Dear readers, I wish to tell you of the joys we had at our last meeting, which began on Friday before the fourth Sunday in November. For three days we had a feast of fat things. Although the weather was very cold, there were several visiting saints present, among them Elders J. W. Putnam and A. D. Bourland, and they were surely blest with the spirit of preaching. All the preaching was a unit, Christ and him crucified being the theme of all. On Saturday after the preaching the church sat in conference. The church at a previous meeting had made a call for help to ordain brethren J. G. Ellis and W. Lee Staggs to the full work of the gospel ministry, it being the mind of the church to proceed, the presbytery was formed as follows: Elders J. W. Putnam, W. O. Rutledge, A. O. Rutledge, A. D. Bourland and J. A. Rutledge. The church presented the candidates to the presbytery, and after questioning them, and being fully satisfied, they were set apart to the full work of the gospel by the laying on of hands and prayer. The right hand of fellowship was given by the presbytery and the church, and then dismissed in order. On Sunday at eleven o'clock we met again, although the weather was intensely cold. There was preaching by Elder James Staggs, who had just come that morning. He was followed by Elders A. D. Bourland and J. M. Putnam. The unworthy writer closed. All were greatly edified and built up in their most holy faith, which works by love, purifies the heart and overcomes the world. After dismissal, although having been seated for four hours, it seemed all were loth to leave. A goodly number met again at night at Deacon L. H. Stevenson's house, where there was preaching by Elders James Staggs, Putnam and Bourland. On Monday night at my house there was preaching by Elders W. Lee Staggs and A. D. Bourland. On Tuesday I conveyed them to brother Preston Staggs' house, where they preached again to quite a number of brethren, sisters and friends. On Wednesday night these two Elders preached at the house of brother Moses Jackson. That meeting called to my mind the words,

"Brethren, if your hearts be warm,
Ice and snow can do no harm."

Dear brethren, bear with my weakness. I want to say to the Elders that such preaching will never divide the flock nor cause distress in the churches. O how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity, sitting together in heavenly places in Jesus Christ, their minds centered in Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever; the good Shepherd, who gave his life for the sheep; who was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, all to bring poor sinners to God by his own mighty power.

We of Zion Hill Church do have great reason to thank God for his great blessing of peace and fellowship one with another; that fellowship which is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ; that fellowship which carnality knows nothing of. We have love and fellowship for all who love and obey our Lord Jesus Christ; for where there is no love there is no obedience in spirit. Our love goes out to the poor in spirit every where, and we feel that we have no control of our fellowship. It does seem like some look upon fellowship as though it were a commodity to be dispensed as they see fit. I have learned many things by bitter experience, and I find myself the hardest one I know of to fellowship. O! if it were not for that hope, that anchor, that Jesus in his obedient life covered all my imperfect life, and made me complete in himself, who is the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all, I would sink in despair.

With love to all saints, yours in imperfections,

JAMES A. RUTLEDGE.

BYRON, Neb., Dec. 23, 1895.

TO THE FRIENDS IN ORANGE CO., N. Y.—DEARLY BELOVED:—I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your favors, fifty-five dollars sent me by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, pastor of the Warwick Church, and a large box of clothing from Elder Benton Jenkins, pastor of the New Vernon and the Middletown & Wallkill Churches, which arrived in due time, for the benefit of our brethren here in this drouth-stricken section of the west; for which, dear brethren, if I know my poor heart, I do desire to feel thankful to our covenant-keeping God, for his mercies and blessings so richly bestowed upon us, and for putting it into the hearts of his dear children who have been more blessed than we. O how our poor hearts go out in love and gratitude to all those who so kindly responded to our request to relieve the needs of many dear brethren and friends in our midst. But one box of clothing has been received as yet, while there are several on the way.

Now, dear brethren, sisters and friends, I hope you will accept our humble thanks for your kindness to us. Praying that God, who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift, may abundantly bless you, both temporally and spiritually, I am, I hope, your unworthy brother in a precious hope,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

P. S.—I have this day (December 23d, 1895) received two barrels of clothing from Jersey City, N. J., but cannot make out the sender's name on the freight bill, and have not received any letter from Jersey City; therefore I am at a loss to know how to let the sender know that the clothing came through safely only through the SIGNS. I would be glad to receive a letter from them.

J. B.

DRESDEN, Ontario, Dec. 2, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—MY DEAR BROTHERS IN CHRIST:—I herewith send you one dollar for the SIGNS, which will pay for it up to the 15th of January next, I think. I am very sorry to have to ask you not to continue my name on your list longer than this pays for. My reason for so doing is that I am nearly blind and cannot read; and further, I have lost the power of my right side, and am very feeble. I now bid all my dear brethren and sisters good-by until we meet in that bright and heavenly land where we shall sing the songs of the blessed. I am longing for that day.

Yours faithfully,
THOMAS LEATHERDALE.

DEAR BROTHERS:—Inclosed find money-order for four dollars; two dollars for the SIGNS, and two dollars for McCabe's Pictorial History of the United States.

I do hope that the friends of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES will respond to your call and help keep up the paper, for it contains all the preaching that I get. It gives God all the glory. I have taken it ever since 1857, and will take it as long as I live if I can get the money to pay for it. I am seventy-three years old. May the good Lord bless you, is my prayer.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—On Dec. 7th, 1895, after seven days of sickness with "La Grippe," Miss R. A. Allen, aged 63 years and 2 days.

She died in full faith of her Redeemer, without a struggle, as a babe falls asleep. She was buried on Sunday following, at three o'clock p. m. A large assembly of friends attended her burial. Her funeral will be preached on Sunday, Dec. 15th, at the old Salt River meeting-house. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She had lived for twenty-five years at her late home, as gate-keeper for the Pike Company. It was my good pleasure to be with her when she passed away. I was her only brother.

C. R. ALLEN.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ky., Dec. 12, 1895.

Sarah Clark was born in Erie Co., Pa., Nov. 27th, 1836. At the age of ten years she with her parents moved to Hocking Co., Ohio. On Jan. 15th, 1846, she was united in marriage to Samuel Clark. She joined the Baptist Church in 1849, and since that time has lived a consistent christian. She with her husband moved to Van Wert, Ohio, in 1871, where they lived at the time of her death, which occurred Nov. 30th, 1895, being 69 years and 3 days old. She leaves a husband, two sisters and a brother to mourn her departure. She had been afflicted for many years with rheumatism, and for the last six years she had been perfectly helpless.

SAMUEL CLARK.

Mrs. Mary L. James, beloved wife of brother Branson James, was called from the scenes of earth to her heavenly home on Oct. 14th, 1895, after a lingering illness of ten weeks of typhoid fever.

She was born in Sussex Co., Del., Aug. 28th, 1831, and spent her entire life in the same county. She was married to brother James forty-six years ago, and was a true and faithful helpmeet, a loving mother, a kind neighbor, and a true and steadfast friend. She left to mourn their sad loss an affectionate husband, eight sons and daughters, with a number of grandchildren, and numerous other relatives and friends; but they mourn not without hope, for her life was an epistle known and read of all who knew her. She was a faithful member of the Broad Creek Church, having been baptized by the writer of this notice on Sept. 13th, 1892. May the Lord bless the dear bereaved husband and children, and comfort them in their sorrow.

Your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Dec. 17, 1895.

AGAIN it is my sad duty to record the death of a dear sister in Christ, Mrs. Thankful Sanford, of Halcottsville, Delaware Co., N. Y., who departed this life Dec. 4th, 1895, after a lingering illness of several months, which was followed by a shock of paralysis or apoplexy, aged 60 years.

Sister Sanford was a firm believer in the doctrine of sovereign and reigning grace. Although not blessed in her widowed condition with the privilege of attending meeting like some, yet she retained her undaunted interest in her Lord and Master, being rooted and grounded in the truth. In this loss our number is one less here as a church, and we know that the Lord alone can supply as he wills. We mourn not as those without hope, trusting that what is loss to us is gain to the loved one. One son, three daughters and one sister, with other relatives, besides the church, are left to mourn.

Sister Sanford was a devoted mother and a kind neighbor, and the large attendance at her funeral bespeaks the loss which is sustained. May the Lord comfort the mourners, and cause the children to recognize his hand, and imitate her example as a follower of Jesus.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Mrs. Rachel Opdyke, born August 10th, 1845, baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church at Southampton, Pa., by Elder Wm. J. Purington, 1876, and fell asleep Oct. 27th, 1895, after a painful illness of five months.

Our dear sister was one of those spiritually minded, faithful, devoted members who are a constant comfort and encouragement to the pastor of a church, and to those of the members whose interest is of that kind which causes them to be at every meeting of the church when not providentially hindered, and who therefore, in a certain sense, might be regarded as the church. Her health has been very frail for many years, and she has lived about ten miles from the meeting-house; yet she has been a constant attendant when not hindered. As our dear sister, Sarah Opdyke, her sister writes, "Her seat was never vacant when she was able to be at the meeting, and many a time she has been there when she was not able." She felt the church to be her home, and the words of the psalmist express what was very manifestly the desire of her heart, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." She was at the home of her only child, Mrs. Anderson, during the last sickness, whose constant care was given her, with tender devotion and love. Her husband also was with her, and everything was done that was possible to alleviate her terrible sufferings by them, and by her two sisters when they could be with her. I saw her but once during this sickness, and though at that time somewhat dark in her mind, her confidence in the God of her salvation was not disturbed. Her mother is still living, but is quite deaf and infirm. She also is a member with us.

The funeral was Oct. 31st, when I spoke to the assembled brethren and friends of him who has abolished death, and whose rod and staff are the comfort of his people as they walk through its valley and shadow here below. May the Lord bless and comfort our dear friends, the lonely husband and the sorrowing daughter, and the mother and sisters. Sister Sarah adds this stanza:

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 16, 1895.

DIED—At her home in Powellville, Wicomico Co., Md., Dec. 4th, 1895, Mrs. Lizzie Hall, wife of brother Lemuel A. Hall, and daughter of brother Littleton and Gertrude Bailey, aged 25 years, 4 months and 20 days, after a long attack of fever and complication of diseases. With all that the best medical aid and kind and loving hands could do, death won the victory.

The subject of this notice was a lovely girl from her childhood. She exhibited all the moral graces to make her lovely and attractive. The writer has been intimately acquainted with her from her childhood, and has known her to be a lovely daughter and a pleasant and encouraging wife. We have great reason to hope that she had an ear for the truth, for nothing seemed to do her more good than to wait upon the Lord's people and make them happy at her home. She attended the meetings with marked interest. She bore her afflictions very patiently. On Sunday morning before she died on Wednesday she had the family fix her chair where she could see the people go and come from the Indiantown meeting-house, which showed that her mind was there, and her heart also, we hope. Lizzie leaves a family in deep mourning, her mother, father, one sister, one brother, with her heart-stricken husband and one little boy; also her mother-in-law and sisters-in-law, who did all in their power to relieve her of her sufferings. She passed away with a pleasant look, like as she lived.

I was summoned to the scene of mourning, and tried to comfort the sorrowing ones, using for a text Job xiv. 14: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Afterward her mortal remains were laid away in the old family burying-ground near the Indiantown meeting-house, to await the summons from on high. Our brother Hall and all the sorrowing ones have our heartfelt sympathy.

"And is it so that thou art gone
From this unhallowed earth,
And we no more shall see thy form
Around our home on earth?"

"Dear sister, will we no more see
That smiling face of yours?
And yet thy image e'er shall dwell
Within these minds of ours.

"Thine absence is a vacuum here,
With many broken sighs;
But thou art free from care and pain,
And with the blest on high.

"We trust that thou art happy now,
In the bright land of rest,
Where sorrow cannot shade thy home,
Nor pain disturb thy breast."

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to 1893.

of Ananias must have meant the outward manifestation of that washing away of sin which is represented in the act of baptism as having been done for him, as was the case with the leper in obeying the command to offer for his cleansing as Moses commanded. That offering represented the work done in making the leper clean, and without it the law could not recognize him as having been cleansed. So the gospel church cannot recognize one as truly manifest in the righteousness of Christ, until the command of Christ to those who love him has been obeyed. Therefore this first ordinance of the gospel may in some sense be regarded as the door of entrance into the visible church, for one cannot be regarded as a member of the church fully until after he has been baptized.

"Save yourselves from this untoward generation." The untoward generation are the Jews, who "went about to establish their own righteousness, and had not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." Their company is no comfort or help to living souls, for they bind heavy burdens upon them which they nor their fathers were able to bear. In turning from the works of the law, repenting, and walking in the order of the gospel, they save themselves from this untoward generation, from the trouble and distress that their legal conversation will bring to living souls, such as "Mr. Legality" would have brought upon poor "Christian," in the "Pilgrim's Progress," if he had been able to get to his house.

"Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."—Acts iii. 19. This was spoken to all the people who ran together to the apostles in Solomon's porch, in wonder and amazement at what had been done in healing the lame man. To them Peter has proclaimed the name of Jesus, and then uses this language. He does not tell them to be baptized, as he did those to whom he gave that command on the day of Pentecost, because he was not answering the questions of living souls as he did then, and as he did to the jailor. This is a congregation in which none has yet manifested the desires of divine life. It is only those who manifest that they are gospel characters to whom the faithful servant of God can say, "Be baptized." But in the preaching of the gospel to a congregation the duties and privileges of those who have divine life are faithfully declared, with the exercises and experiences that manifest that life. By this preaching those characters are manifested, and they believe by that preacher who tells them their own exercises.—1 Cor. iii. 5. The apostle especially designated them to whom he was sent when preaching at Antioch. "And whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent."—Acts xiii. 26.

To repent and be converted was for them to turn away from any further dependence upon all the works of the law for salvation, and attend to the things of the gospel of Christ, which Paul was now preaching. This was a suitable message to those among them who felt sin to be a heavy burden. They were reminded that there is nothing in the works of the law that can show a possibility of their sins ever being blotted out—forgotten. On the contrary, in those legal sacrifices there is a continual remembrance of sins, but never any removal of them. It is in turning from those vain works, being converted from those principles of a worldly covenant that has now been taken away, and looking unto gospel things, that one sees the way of salvation. It is such waiting souls, those who have ceased from their own works, and are waiting for the Lord, who have the promise of salvation. When the Lord's presence is manifest unto such it is indeed a time of refreshing to them. The apostle could not tell them when that time would be, but to all such waiting, hungry, sin-sick souls it will surely come, and by the very appearing of Jesus to them their sins will be blotted out. Then it will be their privilege and duty to be baptized. And all the way along our journey in this mortal state, when we are walking in the truth, we are authorized to expect such seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, from time to time, when his sweet forgiving love will be especially felt, and our sins and iniquities, that are so many from day to day, will be blotted out, and remembered no more.

Such preaching as that of the apostles manifests those whom the Lord has called, as Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened to attend unto the things spoken by Paul, and Dionysius and Damaris, and others at Athens, who cleave unto him, and those on the day of Pentecost who gladly heard Peter's word, while others are manifested as still in nature by rejecting the truth preached. They have no will for those things. "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." They are witnesses against themselves.

Acts xi. 14. Cornelius was already a devout man, a living soul, as were Simeon and Anna, and others who were under the law. His works of righteousness, and the fear of the Lord in his heart, were evidences he was already accepted with God, as Peter explained in his preaching; but he did not yet know Jesus and his salvation, although he had an experience of it. This Peter was sent by the Lord to preach to him, and was especially prepared by the vision for that work; and Cornelius was especially prepared to hear the preaching. He was not of the children of Abraham, and therefore Peter up to this time would not have felt authorized to preach these things to him. But now he was ready to preach that God did not respect the person of any man because of nationality or personal merit, but respected his people in the person and merits of Christ, and through his preaching and testifying Cornelius appeared as one of them. All the animals in the sheet were pronounced clean; so all the people, whether Jews or Gentiles, who were chosen in Christ, the covenant of his people, are holy in him. They are known in this world by the fear of God in their hearts, and by works of righteousness. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil," and the Lord says, "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." It is "a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death." All works of righteousness are prompted by it. It "is clean, enduring forever." One may give much alms with the hope of being rewarded for it; in that case it would not be works of righteousness, but selfish and vile. Cornelius worked righteousness because he had a desire for the honor of God. There was no salvation in those works, but they manifested to the understanding of God's servant that there was salvation in his heart; and it was a day of rejoicing to his soul when that salvation was made known to him in the preaching of the gospel. By the words of Peter he was made to see and understand the nature of that salvation whose power he had felt; and as a child he was saved from depending upon his own works, saved from error, saved from the delusions of men. There is salvation for the children in the doctrine and order of the gospel. A child will still be a child however far away from home and however disobedient; but it is safe from harm and loss only when at home. God is known in Zion's palaces for a refuge.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 27, 1895.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 12, 1895.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have not forgotten the impression of mind I had sometime ago to write to you, and I still have the desire to obey the voice that dictated the impression. I am a firm believer in the following out of first impressions; for I know they are not contaminated with carnal reasoning, although they may emanate from a carnal mind. And because of this, the apostle warns us, saying, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." This is a very important and necessary warning, inasmuch as the infirmities of our flesh are such that (besetting us on every side, temptations within and without) we should watch always, and constantly inquire for the right path. The Lord has blessed you, my brother, with that inquiring mind which is indeed a great blessing. The apostle does not warn his brethren in anger, as though they had already been following false prophets and adopting false doctrine (nevertheless such might have been the case with them), but the admonition came from him because he loved them with a pure heart fervently; therefore he addresses them in the endearing term of "Beloved." With an experience and knowledge of his own frailty and weakness in the flesh, he addresses them in love. I have many times asked myself the question, How can we believe or disbelieve other than our own minds are acted upon and controlled by the thoughts and ideas that present themselves? But I hope I have learned the lesson, although it has come through tribulation, patience and experience, that with the Lord's people there is a constant warfare waging, and they must learn to know their enemies from their friends; otherwise they fall by the hand of the enemy; for if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?" After David came to believe that he would one day fall by the hand of Saul, he was continually upon his guard. And we know that "many false prophets are gone out into the world." So it behooves us to try (by the infallible standard of the truth of God) every doctrine that is suggested to our minds. And the apostle has not kept us in doubt as to the manner of our getting evidences, for he follows his admonition with rich and valuable instruction, saying, "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God." This is safe ground to tread upon, and sure knowledge. "Hereby know ye." No conjecture, no doubt, but positive evidence. Therefore every other spirit that comes and "confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God." When the Spirit takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us, we are enabled very clearly to see the distinction between the "works of the flesh" and the "fruit of the Spirit." The power to make us believe, and the power to make us willing, always accompanies the revelation of God's word in the heart, after which follows the glad confession that Jesus has come in the flesh; for this revelation cometh to none save those for whom Jesus died. This is the record of the salvation of every heaven-born soul, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Knowing these wonderful and blessed truths, with which we are to combat the enemy, we must continually bear in mind that "The serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made;" and if we let loose our watchfulness in trying the spirits, and become as they that are at ease in Zion, how quickly will Satan (who is ever on the alert) take advantage to deceive. You remember how Jesus spake and warned on this subject. "Then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not; for there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Now, my dear brother, how do we try the spirits whether they be of God? Surely not by any system or process of carnal reasoning, for that would lead us immediately into unutterable woe and distress and darkness; for the carnal mind is enmity against God, which enmity never could confess that Jesus is come in the flesh. It was the carnal mind of the carnal Israelites that cried out, "Away with him! crucify him! crucify him!" And it is the carnal mind of the Lord's people to-day that cries, "Away with him. We will not have this man to reign over us." Therefore it confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, and is not of God. The tempter says, Lay up for yourselves treasures on earth; satisfy the desires of your flesh; to-morrow will be time enough to think of heavenly things. But Jesus, who is come in the flesh, saith, "Sell that ye have, and give alms, provide yourselves with bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens, that faileth not; where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." The flesh suggests creature merit as a stepping-stone to future happiness. "Do and live" is the fleshly motto. The power in man to choose life or accept death, is a part of the "do and live" system. But the Spirit saith, "All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing and vanity." The foolish and clamorous woman in the Proverbs says to him that wanteth understanding, "Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant." "But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and her guests are in the depths of hell." Now let us note the wonderful contrast when wisdom speaks and the spirits are tried. Wisdom says, "Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she said to him, Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine I have mingled; forsake the foolish, and live, and go in the way of understanding." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The spirit of antichrist in the christian pilgrim leads him into confusion and much tribulation, while the spirit of life in Christ Jesus brings comfort of soul, and pours oil upon troubled waters. "In the world ye shall have tribulation," said Jesus, but in him we have peace. When faith is in lively exercise in the heart, it is an easy matter to walk in newness of life, and to know the spirits that are of God; not only to try them, but also to clearly distinguish them. But alas! when the poor soul is tossed hither and thither upon the waves of unbelief and sin, and the enemy is about him on every hand, tempting him with grievous and manifold temptations, with smooth words and oily tongue, setting his things before him in enticing array that the flesh covets and desires, how sorely he is tried. But ever and anon the still small voice of the Comforter whispers, Hope on, tried soul. "Press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Hope may be buried very deep, under fleshly lusts, creature works and vain efforts of man, but is never extinct, and out from under the grave clothes of Babylonish doctrines and false prophecies we hear the poor, torn, worried child cry, with one of old, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Gracious words! blessed creature! We believe with the Scriptures that "It is not in man that waketh to direct his steps." And we also believe that faith does exercise its subjects to try the spirits whether they be of God; that puny man cannot exercise faith, any more than he can create a world. But by faith he can say to yon mountain of sin and unbelief, Be removed into the depths of the sea, and it will be removed. How prone are the Lord's children to be always thinking they can and must do something to merit the love of God. But Jesus whispers, Faith is the gift of God, and also that "faith without works is dead." But these are not the works of the flesh; they are the works of faith; and in them is life everlasting; they are "Christ in you the hope of glory." The works of the flesh, however, bring forth and lead unto death. How do we know? The Scriptures say, "When lust is conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." And has not this great truth been verified in our daily experience?

Now, dear brother, I hope you will bear with me in my weakness and ignorance, and pray that my faith fail not. May the peace and prosperity of Zion reign richly in your heart, is the prayer of

Your very unworthy brother,
B. F. COULTER.

HAZLETVILLE, Del., Nov., 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I keep thinking that I will not bother you any more with my letters, but your kindness and forbearance toward me disarm me of my good intention, so I am again sitting down with the desire to try once more, though I almost wonder you are not disgusted instead of being willing. I feel inclined to attempt to write, in compliance with your suggestion, whatever may be given me to write. It seems to me that if I am asked to talk and give a relation of my experience, there is a consciousness rushes over me of having nothing to tell, and at the same time that I, like all who have professed a hope in Christ, am expected to tell at least a short story that would sound intelligent. Thus, many times, ideas that I would have become confused. It has often seemed to me that I must just begin in an ordinary way and talk myself into a talk of that kind before it is possible for me; and then, it seems to me, it would, if classed under the head of experience, stand almost alone. I have told you that I have no particular dates or occasions to go back to, and it seems to me I have wanted most of all for something of this kind, something to remember and to go back to. It seems to me this would be evidence which others have and which I lack. I cannot remember, when I was a child, of ever thinking or dreaming that any thoughts or feelings I had were tending in that direction, nor the desire that I always felt to go with my parents to meeting, and I do not yet know that it meant anything, for I was always very anxious to go with them wherever they went. But there is one thing I can see about it now, and that is that the going to meeting constitutes the framework of my childish recollection; and especially do I remember the high regard I felt for everything of that kind. If I think that the Lord has favored me above what I deserve, and that I am one of the blind that he leads in a way that they knew not, I must also think that there was never a time in my life that I can recall as a beginning, for there seems no dividing line. I do not remember of ever feeling any concern, only as it seemed to me natural for any child to feel, about dying, not knowing the hereafter. I thought I was a sinner, because I had been taught that all were sinners, and also because I went on daily doing things that were wrong; but farther than this I was not conscious of any feeling sense of being a sinner. I believed in a supreme Being who was ruler over all things, because I was so told, and that heaven was his abode, and that if I were good he would take me to himself, but if not I would be banished. I also learned that there were only two places, and I remember a day when it dawned upon me for the first time that I would have to go to one place or the other, and that it was inevitable to all mankind. It caused a feeling which I cannot describe, to be thus hedged in, and my childish question was, "Why can we not go on living?" But naturally I saw the preference, and I felt great awe and reverence for heaven and its King; but this also was natural, it may be, for to live on seemed preferable to me. Now, it seems that as my natural being developed from childhood to womanhood, from day to day, so that I cannot distinguish and mark out its progress, even so if I have spiritual life it must have been after the same manner, that is, gradual, so that I cannot trace it in any vivid way. The two seem so interwoven that it seems impossible to separate them or find a dividing line; and this, it seems to me, is what makes me doubt so much and fear there is no dividing line; the one is so prominent, and the other so very obscure.

As I grew older I grew more and more into the thoughts of this better life, and the desire to be a recipient of it became very great; and the love I felt for it, and the beauty I saw in it, increased as time went on, until I did not think a great deal of anything else, and even then these thoughts were underlying. But I waited all these years for the Lord to show me my sinful condition and give me repentance; for I always felt that I could not help myself to any of these conditions, and saw myself as widely separate from the church as I had always been, until such time as it should please God to do all this, and more, for me. I thought I had to pass through it all and to see it so before I could dare to think of such a thing as asking to be taken into the church. I had such a helpless and different idea from what others have expressed about working themselves into God's favor, that it seemed to me almost that it was no use for me to keep thinking about it, and I might as well put the subject away from me, as I certainly should in some way be like the rest, if I were one of them. But I did not put it away, as you can guess, so there seemed nothing to do but to wait on; and it showed me more and more of my unworthiness, until it looked like an insurmountable barrier between me and all that I loved. I did not see the hand of the Lord in it, and thought I had not seen my condition at all as I ought to, nor had supplicated at the throne of grace for the forgiveness of my sins. In short, I suppose I was looking to my own strength in a sense, though I had thought all along that I had to wait. Not that I think for a moment that I had not lived all along in my own strength, just like other people; but what I have written has looked to me just as I have written it, as near as I can express it. I had not felt any great burden that seemed to me in the least degree to compare with what I had read of others, nor the taking away of it, which I also had in my mind; and there seemed not a thing left to me except the Scripture which reads, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." I felt that surely I knew that I loved them. I did not feel to doubt that; but even this seemed not enough, if the rest were lacking; so perhaps the doubt remained much the same. Thus I went on, standing perfectly still, it seemed to me. I could not go on, and did not dream of going back, or any other way. And now, O! shall I dare say that I stood still and did see the salvation of the Lord? It seems to me that if I had felt an assurance of this fact I could have gone

THE RELIGION OF REVENGE AND THE RELIGION OF PRIDE.

FROM the Baltimore Sun of December 9th we clip the following item:

"The newly elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives, in a recent invocation to the Almighty, said, 'Make us quick, O Lord, to resent any insult offered to us as a nation.'"

In the same number of the Sun, in a report of the proceedings of "Maryland Day" at the Exposition in Atlanta, it was stated that the "Rev. Dr. Babcock," who was assigned to make the prayer upon the occasion, was compelled to return home, and therefore could not officiate; and it was also stated that he therefore wrote out a prayer, which at the proper time was read by the "Rev. Dr. Markland." Both these "Rev. Drs." were from Baltimore.

We refer to these items because we desire to speak of a few things which they suggested to us. We do not think that we are guilty of any injustice when we characterize these statements as setting forth the religion of revenge on the one side, and the religion of pride on the other. We are surprised at these effusions from these "reverend" gentlemen; not because they possess such a spirit, but because they so frankly exhibit it. No better spirit than this can be expected from that religion which has its origin in the fallen nature of man; but it is not usual, we believe, for all disguise to be so freely thrown aside as in the cases named above.

We do not wish to speak of these things lightly, nor in any spirit of scorn or sarcasm, nor in any spirit of boasting. We would speak soberly of them, because they are serious matters; and it becomes us to earnestly warn all who may read what we write against that system of doctrine out of which such a prayer could spring as is referred to in the first item, or such a course of conduct as is referred to in the second item. One would have thought that if the "reverend" gentlemen referred to did not possess sufficient of the spirit of the meek and lowly Master to guard them from such an exhibition of revenge, and of pride and vainglory, at least "good taste" would have had some weight; but it must be said that they all were lacking as much in the one as in the other.

We do not, however, mean in this editorial to assail these gentlemen personally. They were simply making a display of the true sentiments of their hearts, and of the very spirit of that fleshly religion which, while it uses the name of Christ, yet has no more use for Christ than (to quote the language of the late Elder R. C. Leachman) "a dandy has for his walking-cane." He carries it for show, not for use. This religion and this spirit is not new. Cain was its first professor and possessor. The world has a religion, as well as the subjects of Immanuel; and vanity, pride and revenge are to be seen as the moving spirits of the one, while the other is characterized by the spirit of humility, meekness, forbearance and forgiveness. The only change required in any man to profess this fleshly, worldly religion is for his worldliness to become intensified from the spirit of a Gallio, who cares for none of the things of Jesus, into the spirit of a Caiaphas, who cries out for the blood of the just One. No wonder that it was written that Jesus "was in the world, and the world knew him not." How could the spirit exhibited in the two items copied at the head of this editorial know Jesus? How can pride understand humility, or revenge understand forgiveness, or resentment understand forbearance?

How utterly lacking in comprehension of the very first principles of the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus must any man be to give utterance to such a prayer as that offered by the Chaplain of the House of Representatives! "Make us quick, O Lord, to resent any insult offered to us as a nation." That this one man should express such a sentiment under the guise of christian worship is in itself but a small matter compared to the indication which is in it of that state of things in the religious world out of which such an utterance could grow. Not only is the spirit of this Chaplain an entirely unchristian one, but it indicates the nature of the whole system of that religion of which he is one of the exponents. It is the spirit of a worldly religion, in which there is no room for the teachings of Jesus. It is safe to say that no man with the spirit of the meek and lowly One in his heart could utter such a prayer. As such a prayer could not originate from the spirit of the Savior, so is it sure that it does not enter into the ear of the God of heaven. Revenge is a deadly evil when cherished openly, as one of the fruits of the flesh; but what shall be said of it when it endeavors to justify itself by an appeal to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! What is the difference between this prayer and the blasphemy of the openly godless, who daily call down curses from God upon themselves and others, except that the author of this prayer dared to call upon God to stir up the evil passions of men under the cloak of religion; and therefore his prayer is by so much the worse. We could conceive of a follower of Mahomet or a North American savage making such an invocation as this in perfect consistency with their faith; but what shall be said of the sort of christianity that could express itself in this way?

These are the men and this is the sort of religion that of late years have been persistently moving for an amendment to the Constitution of these United States introducing and recognizing the name of God, so that every man who takes the oath of allegiance to this Government shall also make oath that he believes in God, and will uphold that name, whether he believes in God or not. It is said that this is a christian nation, and ought to be known as such. God save our nation from such a christianity as this! Woe to the followers of the meek and lowly One when our nation becomes such a christian nation as this!

These men and their religion are the legitimate descendants of those concerning whom the God of heaven once testified, "Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thyself." What a contrast between this religion and the spirit of him who prayed for his enemies, and died for them, and when reviled, reviled not again, and who taught his followers to return good for evil, and to pray for those who despitefully used them and evil entreated them. Surely there is enough of revenge in the fallen nature of most men, when insulted, without asking of God to stir it up and cause it to act quickly. If any of us have been taught a better way, what reason we have to thank and bless God for it. Every believer who is kept from the rule of such a spirit must say, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

If any shall question the right or the expediency of our taking notice of the blasphemous prayer of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, we will content ourselves with replying that we have the example of prophets and apostles, and of the Savior himself, together with the positive command of God to warn all those who love God of the evils and the snares which daily show themselves in our pathway. We would not think it needful to lift up our voice against such an openly blasphemous prayer by itself considered, but do so because it is an indication of the spirit of the spurious christianity of our day. It is the religion of Cain, manifesting the spirit of Cain. The religion of human effort and human pride, known as Arminianism, professed by the majority of men to-day, is and must ever be of this sort.

As regards the religious display made at Atlanta, to which we have referred, we desire to say only this. It manifests the same sort of spirit that was shown in the prayer of the Chaplain in Congress. Revenge and human pride and vanity are very nearly related. Pride is the fountain, and revenge or resentment is a part of the polluted stream. It is very evident that the object of writing the prayer to be read at Atlanta was not to glorify the Lord Jesus Christ, but the "Rev. Dr. Babcock;" and in consenting to read the prayer the other "Rev. Dr." was equally involved in the guilt. But why should we wonder at this? When men who profess to be christian ministers love to be called Rabbi (the modern version of which is "Reverend," "Doctor of Divinity," "Right Reverend," &c.), we need not be surprised at any display of pride or vainglory. The whole tone and spirit of modern religion is to glorify man, and not our Lord Jesus Christ; and yet men call this christianity. No wonder that this sort of christianity makes such rapid progress. It is entirely suited to a fallen nature. There is no humiliation and no cross in it. It labors for reward, and it has its rewards; but its labors are corrupt, and its crown is corruptible. May God keep all his people from such a spirit and such a course.

HYPNOTISM.

A BROTHER who wishes his name withheld has just written us, asking us to give our views upon what is called "hypnotism" through the SIGNS. He gives as his reason for desiring this that some whom he knows, members of the churches of Christ, are being entangled by it, in the hope of being healed of disease and suffering; and he thinks that a few words from us may be of benefit to them.

It is but natural that those who are suffering should seek for relief; and it is a noble calling when a man devotes himself to this work as a physician or as a nurse. Jesus healed multitudes, afflicted with all manner of diseases; and when he sent his disciples out two and two into every city whither he would also come, one of the things enjoined upon them was to heal the sick. It is sure that while the day of such miracles of healing seems to have passed, yet to minister to and relieve the afflicted is an obligation resting upon every child of God to perform as he may be able to do, and as opportunity occurs.

Those who are suffering are ready to give heed to anything or to any one that seems to promise them help. The soul burdened with the sense of guilt and condemnation is very likely to fly at first to false refuges, and to try remedies that cannot do him any good, but that rather aggravate the wound. How common this experience is among the people of God! The woman who touched the hem of the Savior's garment is a case in point. She had before this spent all her living upon physicians, of whom she had suffered many things, and by whom she had not been at all benefited, but rather had grown the worse. Now, what is true in these soul troubles is equally true in bodily sickness. Relief is the thing wanted; and it is but natural for the suffering to grasp at anything that promises relief.

We do not feel at liberty to pass by the request of our brother in silence, as he says the matter is of importance to him, though it concerns others. He is interested because of his interest in others. Neither do we feel at liberty to disregard any call for advice or warning or instruction from those who love the Lord. We feel but poorly qualified to give advice, but yet ought not, we think, withhold what seems to us to be best or right.

As we understand the subject named, hypnotism seems to us to be a matter with which a child of God, a believer in Jesus, ought to deal very cautiously. If there be anything in it that can be made use of in the practice of medicine or surgery, it is sure that reputable physicians will soon discover it and make use of it; and it is always unsafe to appeal to quacks and charlatans, or men and women of no standing in the community where they live. All that we know or want to know about it is what we hear of it. If what is said of it is true, it is claimed that by this science, or art, or whatever it may be called, some men have power to throw others into a sort of trance-like sleep, in which the subject is wholly under the power or influence of the operator—seeing, hearing, thinking and doing only what the operator desires; and this state continues at the will of the operator. We cannot see wherein all this could in the slightest degree tend to the removing of any bodily disease, though it might make the patient unconscious of it for a time. But be this as it may, we feel that it would not be advisable for any child of God to subject himself to the supreme will and control of another man. It seems to us that if we realize the truth that we are redeemed unto God, and that we are his, his in mind and body, we shall shrink from subjecting ourselves to the will of another, as we understand is said to be done in hypnotism. It seems to us that to engage in this thing cannot be for the glory of God. This is our opinion; and we believe that all who are led to engage in this thing will in the end find it to be so. It seems to us that every child of God should ask, before taking such a step, Will it be for the glory of God? Shall I honor his name by it? As one who professes to be the servant of God, we desire to hold ourself, body, soul and spirit, at his command, ready to do his will only; but we should, we think, not be doing this if we subjected ourself to do the will of another man, who might induce us to commit some folly or some crime while controlled by him.

We have said these things upon the assumption that there is some reality in the claims of hypnotism. Our belief, however, is that much of its claims are but trickery and deceit, imposed upon the weak or the ignorant by designing men. Our advice to all our brethren is to be very careful how they meddle with it.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

FUNERAL SERMONS.

By "funeral sermons" we understand sermons which are preached at funerals, or on funeral occasions, whether they be funeral or resurrection sermons, gospel or law, truth or error. We do not know that we can find any direct authority in precept or example for preaching on such occasions; certainly there is none for regarding it as a divinely authorized religious ceremony or rite; and we have often feared that even christians sometimes have observed it as such. We have uniformly attended funerals whenever called upon, and preached on the occasion if desired to do so. Our reasons for pursuing this course have been these.

First. In the commission given to the apostles by our Lord Jesus Christ, they were commanded to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel;" and we have understood that the same duty is binding on all who are called of God to preach the gospel. And as there is no particular restriction, we have believed that the preachers of the gospel should watch the openings of divine providence, and preach on all occasions where he in providence opens the door.

Second. We have generally found a collection gathered at such times and places, ready to pay a respectful attention to the preaching of the word, and we could see no good reason why we should refuse to preach to them.

Third. Opportunity is frequently afforded to preach the gospel to many on such occasions who are not in the habit of attending where it is preached at any other times.

Fourth. When christians are afflicted, bereaved and distressed, and when all their earthly comforts are being removed from them, it appears to us peculiarly appropriate to present to their minds the consolations of the gospel of Christ; and as it is not our province to search the hearts of the children of men, we may safely preach the gospel on all occasions when called upon to do so, with the firm conviction that if there is any real consolation anywhere in the time of affliction it is in the gospel.

Fifth. We have the example of our Lord in visiting the house of Lazarus, and the precepts of the apostles to visit the widows and the fatherless in their afflictions; and although there is nothing said about preaching funerals, we know that our Lord did preach the resurrection to Martha and Mary.

We are aware that papists and protestants in many instances have fallen but little if any short of pagan superstition in the adoption of "funeral rites" as by them held and practiced, and that we, as intelligent christians, taking the New Testament as our rule, can have no fellowship for the mummery of praying for the dead, or trying to operate on the fleshly passions of the living, with a view to make capital of their tried circumstances or crushed feelings, to persuade them that these feelings are religious, or that they render the season auspicious for attaining the religion of Jesus Christ; yet we see no impropriety in preaching to them the truth as it is in Jesus Christ.

We know that our preaching can have no effect on the dead, but it may be applied with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven to the hearts of God's children, on such as well as on any other occasion. We do not feel at liberty to refuse to preach the gospel whenever called upon to do so to any of the sons of Adam, whatever may be the occasion which has brought them together.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., August 1, 1850.

NOT INTENDED.

FROM the tone of a number of letters received we fear that some of our subscribers misunderstood our notice on page 390 of last volume. We did not mean by that notice that those whose subscription was paid up to the end of last year, or those who were a year or less in arrears, and intended to remit amounts due, should discontinue their paper if they were not able just at present to pay their subscription, for we can better afford to continue the paper and wait for the pay, than to lose their patronage altogether. What we wished to avoid was continuing the paper to those who did not want it, and having them censure us for doing so, and finally repudiating their account on the ground that they never authorized us to send it after the expiration of the time paid for, as thousands have done heretofore.

Through the liberality of our brethren and friends in contributing to the indigent fund, we are able to say that we have never refused to send the paper to any who have appealed to us to send it to them free, as they were not able to pay for it. All we ask is for those who do not want the paper to so notify us, or else not hold us responsible for their neglect. The SIGNS needs all the patronage that our brethren and friends are able to extend to it; and before any order their paper discontinued we ask them to consider that each subscription discontinued helps to embarrass the publication and increase our "hard times." Those who are so favorably situated with church privileges and regular preaching that they can do without the paper, we beg to consider the many who are not so highly privileged, and have no other preaching or spiritual communication with their brethren only through the SIGNS, and by their patronage they are enabling us to supply these isolated members of our Father's family with the paper. Please, brethren, assist us all you conveniently can, for we assure you that we need your aid.

CHURCH LETTERS.

TO THE ELECTION OF GRACE—DEARLY BELOVED OF THE LORD:—We, the churches formerly composing the Chemung Association, desiring to continue our correspondence with those of like precious faith with us, write this epistle, in which we desire to express our love and fellowship for our dear kindred in Christ with whom we have held sweet communion in the Lord in days that are past and gone, and desire that our brethren will continue to manifest their love and fellowship for us by mingling with us as heretofore. The year that is past has made but few changes in the fourteen churches. There have been a few deaths, and some few additions. The four yearly meetings we have held passed off pleasantly, and, we trust, profitably. Three ministers from other parts were with us, and preached Jesus to us with comfort to our souls. We welcome all such as preach Jesus, the way, the truth and the life, to our churches and houses. We still contend for the same principles we have advocated heretofore, namely, eternal vital unity, or oneness of Christ and his body, or church. The life in which every saint is manifested as such, being Christ, must be eternal; therefore we have Bible authority for saying, eternal life unity, or oneness. "For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." Again, "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ." Again, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Jesus is also declared to be the head of the body, the church. We also believe in personal election. We do not believe that by reason of our identity or standing in Adam we are children of God, for in that life we are children of wrath, even as others; but we do believe that we are of the election of grace by reason of our identity and life-standing in Jesus Christ as the elect Head of the church; hence we are sons in the sonship of Jesus Christ; and when we say we, we mean sinners of Adam's race, and not spirits only. Sinners are the purchase of his blood. We know of but one man in nature, namely, Adam. We know of but two men in grace, the outer and the inner, or the old and the new man. "Though the outer man perish, yet the inner man is renewed day by day." We do not believe that any part of that which is denominated the outer or natural man is made spiritual in the new or second birth, but that it will remain flesh, or fleshly, until mortality is swallowed up of life. We do believe that Jesus addressed himself to a man born of the flesh when he said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." Wonder of wonders! a man born of God, born from above, a sinner delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, called out of darkness, into his marvelous light; was dead, but is made alive; lost, but found; blind, but now sees; deaf, and now hears; was without understanding, but now knows the joyful sound, and gladly receives the word of truth. Here is a new creature in Christ. Old things have passed away, behold, all things are new. Yes, here is a change, a glorious change, experienced by each and every one that is born of God. "Ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light." Purged from dead works, to serve the living God; hence they delight in the law of God after the inner man. With the mind they serve the law of God; not the fleshly mind, but the mind of Christ, which every one has that is born of God. But we trust that we have said enough on this point of God's truth, as it is experienced by the saints, to show our position.

Third and last, God's sovereignty. What is God? The Author or Creator of all things. He is before all things, and by him all things consist. Without him there was nothing made that was made; and he made all things for himself. He made the lion and the lamb, Pharaoh and Judas. Did he have a purpose to accomplish in and by them? Was it accomplished? If so, in the case of these, is it any less true of all men, yea, of all created things? Is there any limit to God's sovereignty? If so, where shall we draw the line between the things that God has ordained for his glory, and the things he, as some say, permits, or has not so ordained? Did God ever permit anything that he did not predestinate to permit? And if he did predestinate to permit it, then what?

Yes, dear brethren, we do believe in God's unlimited sovereignty over all things and events; and a full recognition of God's sovereignty felt in the heart will break the hardest heart, and bring the poor penitent sinner down to acknowledge that he is a vile worm, and that God is just in punishing him for his transgressions.

We emphatically deny the false charge that some make, that this doctrine leads to lasciviousness; but to the contrary.

Our faith accepts the king James version of the Old and New Testament Scriptures as our confession; and any confession, be it ever so old, that does not harmonize with them, we are bound to reject.

And now, dear kindred in Christ, we have in our way tried to set before you some of the principles of truth that we as a people are contending for, and we believe that you are proclaiming the same; at least we thus judge from your Circular Letters published.

Written by Elder D. M. Vail, by request of the Abbington Church, and accepted by the church at her covenant meeting, December, 1895.

straight to the church and at least have asked them to consider my case; but no such thing seemed possible for me, and I waited on for months, and even years, with the prayer in my heart that all things might be done for me by him who is able to do it, as well as all things else. I knew that he was able, and thought of it with such a feeling of adoration as made me wait on, with hope that he would in his own good time show me what was my duty and privilege in the matter. I always felt it would be the highest privilege, and hoped to feel that it were mine, and also that duty urged it; but this was not granted me, and it was with the greatest timidity that I ventured to say what I could to the church, which was not much, only resting on the fact that God sees all things, even the intents of the heart, and that he would not suffer me to go on unless it were in accordance with his will. They received me, and have borne with my short comings since; but it seems to me they cannot have seen many of them.

Now I will stop. I am afraid this is already too long, and that I have wearied you. You can use your own judgment about this; but I trust you not to publish it simply because you know that I rather expect it, but only if it will do.

With love to yourself and family, from the least of sisters,

EMILY CUBBAGE.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have brother Hance's consent to send the inclosed letter to be published in the SIGNS. Will you please favor me by publishing it? Your poor, little brother in hope, though a great sinner,

A. B. BREES.

SIDNEY, Ohio, Oct., 4, 1895.

MR. A. B. BREES—DEAR BROTHER:—If such a one as I may address any of the children of God by the appellation of brother. When you and brother Newton Peters were leaving my place you requested me to write to you. I then thought, and still think, I cannot write any thing that will be of any comfort to you. Since you were here I have been very low in the valley. The cloud seemed to be so very dense that it could be felt. I am made to wonder how the brethren can fellowship me, for surely they cannot know me. This evening my mind was led back to the time when I first had a serious impression, and I followed my steps down to the present time. From some cause I have a desire this evening to write you some of the exercises of my mind, so that you may be the better enabled to judge whether you should withhold fellowship or continue to fellowship me. I was born in the county of Miami, state of Ohio. My father belonged to the Baptist Church. My mother made no profession, but was friendly to the Baptists. My father required me to go to the Baptist meetings, but permitted me to attend the meetings of other denominations. I always attended the protracted meetings, and sometimes they had very exciting times, but they did not have any effect upon me; in fact I never had any serious impressions until I was about twenty-one years of age. At that time Elder Samuel Williams was preaching for Providence Church, where my father had his membership. In his sermon he quoted this Scripture, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." This seemed to take hold on my mind, and I could not get rid of it for some time; but it finally left me for a while, then returned, and left again. Thus it continued coming and going until I was married and became the father of two children, when it returned with greater force than ever. I could not get rid of it. I became greatly troubled; so much so that while out in the woods at my work I knelt down in the deep snow and tried to pray; but I cannot remember whether I uttered a word more than "Lord, have mercy on me;" and I thought the Lord did not hear that, for it did not seem to rise higher than my head. I arose thinking I would never try again, for I could not pray. My troubles continued until sometime in the fore part of the summer, when it became so great that some nights I could not sleep. One night while lying awake for some time and trying to pray, and then thinking I would never again try, there was presented to my view a scene that pen cannot describe. It was Christ hanging on the cross. I saw the torn hands and feet where the nails were driven, and saw the pierced side. I saw a great many people, who seemed to be innumerable, at the foot of the cross. I thought they were God's people. While viewing this scene I was asked the question, "Do you love God and his people?" I thought, O how I do love him and his people. His people appeared to be the most lovely ones I ever beheld. It was said to me, "It was for you he thus died, and your sins are all forgiven." My troubles were all gone in an instant. The next morning everything seemed changed and seemed so bright. I thought I would never have any trouble again. I continued without any trouble until after harvest. I had an old man working for me, and one day he asked me whether I ever had any trouble. I replied, "Not now." I was on the point of telling the reason, but something seemed to say to me, "Don't tell him, for he will not know anything about it." One day while at my work this question was presented to my mind, "Why are you rejoicing over your sins being forgiven? You have never felt yourself to be such a sinner as you are. This is something you have learned from hearing your father and the Baptists talk." O the fears of that time! I found that I was not to be without trouble. I remained in this frame of mind for some time, and then again was made to rejoice. The following winter the "United Brethren" held a meeting, and a great many united with them. Some were immersed, but they waited until warm weather. While they were baptizing I was made to feel it to be my duty to be baptized; but I felt that I could not go with them, for I did not believe their doctrine. I went to the Nettle Creek Church meetings several times, thinking I would unite with them. Elder Williams was preaching. From some cause I did not offer myself at that time. About this time I was given a copy of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to read. I liked it very much, and subscribed for it. I commenced attending the meetings of Harmony Church about this time, and on Saturday before the first Sunday in August, 1870, when the door was opened for the reception of members I arose and told them that I did not expect to unite with them, but would like to tell some of the exercises of my mind and get their advice. When I had quit talking brother Cottrell asked me whether I did not think I would like to unite with them if they thought me worthy. I said I did, but that I was not worthy. Brother DuBoise then read their Articles of Faith and Rules of Decorum, and asked me if I could subscribe to them. I said I could. A motion was then made to receive me. I was much surprised when they voted to receive me, as I had told so little. I was baptized by Elder Cottrell the next day, and also appointed a messenger to the Greenville Association. For a number of years I took great delight in reading the Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and in attending meeting; but of late the Bible seems almost a sealed book to me. Some passage of Scripture will be presented to my mind, and I think I can see a great beauty in it; but when I get the book and read, perhaps before I get the whole chapter read it is all closed up and I can see nothing in it. When I think I have a clear view of some passage of Scripture, and the brethren ask my views on it, and I begin to tell them, everything closes and all is dark. Sometimes I have a strong desire to attend our meeting; and when I get there, and hear the preaching, and hear the brethren talk, there is nothing in it for me, and I am made to wonder why I had such a desire to go. But there are times when I can sit and hear preaching, and hear the brethren talk, and I enjoy it very much.

But I better bring this scribble to a close, for I have already written enough to weary you in trying to read it. I have written more than I expected to when I commenced, and have written as my mind ran. I find I cannot control my mind. It is in the hand of a higher power. I would like to receive a letter from you.

WM. HANCE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Sept., 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE:—Ever since our yearly meeting I have felt a desire to write to you. Some days, when too busy to write, I have had you in remembrance, and as I went about my work it seemed I was talking to you.

I would I might write of some of the meditations which I had, but it is all gone from me now. Of one thing I feel sure, if I am led by the Spirit of Christ in what I may write it will be well, but if it is only of self it will amount to nothing. O! so much of the time I feel afraid that I am none of His. What evidence have I that I am born again? I have a name and place among God's people, but have I any right? It seems I am a stone, hard, hard, hard. I go to meeting Sunday after Sunday, but where is my mind? Wandering. Sometimes some of the dear brethren and sisters will meet me after the meeting, and ask me, "Was not that good?" Why, it seems I can see in their very faces that they have been feeding, while I have been like one dead. I cannot tell them how cold and indifferent I have felt, how my mind has been so taken up with earthly vanities that I could not even listen to the preaching, and I have answered, "Yes, it was good." Then I feel that I have deceived them; I have given them reason to believe that I have been comforted and strengthened even as they. It troubles me, and I think I have made a mistake in it all. I have only grasped at the shadow. I go back over all the way I have come, and find that however dark it may have been, away down beneath all the darkness there is that little something I cannot let go. Sooner or later (it may be days, it may be months) some little word is spoken to my heart, and I find rest. To-day that hymn came very sweetly to my mind,

"Does the gospel word proclaim Rest for those who weary be?
Then, my soul, put in thy claim,
Sure that promise speaks to thee.

Marks of grace I cannot show,
All polluted is my breast,
Yet I weary am, I know,
And the weary long for rest."

It seems sometimes that I know I am weary, so weary of all the discord and confusions of life, so sick of self and sin, and I long for rest. I trust that yesterday I was brought to one of those resting places. Our season of conference seemed sweet to me yesterday. I felt I would not have missed it for anything this earth can afford. It seems to me I have been signally blessed of late in regard to these things. A few weeks ago, when our dear sisters Rosie and Lydia came to us and told of their hopes in the Savior, it seemed that my heart was melted. O that I might learn of him who was so meek and lowly in heart. We enjoyed meeting with those dear brethren and sisters who visited our meeting. I believe their coming among us has been a blessing to us. We missed you, dear brother. I think this is the first year since my memory that you have been absent. I felt to sympathize with you and dear sister Chick. All our expressions of sympathy seem so cold, but there is One who can give comfort. "He doeth all things well." How good it is when we can rest in that assurance.

All join with me in love and desire for your welfare. I hope I have not wearied you. Yours in hope of a blessed Savior, ALICE M. FORD.

MANOKILL, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS:—I am inclined to pen a few lines for your perusal, as I am not privileged to meet or converse with the loved ones often.

"Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there any one like me?"

The past year has been one of much wrestling with me, and at times I have felt that I had Jacob's God for my refuge, and that underneath were his everlasting arms. The psalmist said, "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot. The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage."

"Let Zion rejoice and exultingly sing
An anthem of joy unto Jesus her King."
We are made to rejoice when we hear the voice of the Bridegroom, and say, What a goodly heritage we have. During the past year the adversary has engrossed so much of my time that I have had to cry, "Help, Lord, I perish!" And he inclined unto me and heard me, and caused me to hear the voice of my Beloved, who came leaping upon the mountains and skipping upon the hills. "Thou maintainest my lot." Then it is that we lie down in green pastures, and his fruit is sweet to our taste. At our association I was thus fed, and also on last Sunday. Yet the enemy is in the land; but, like the children of Israel, we see the goodness of the Lord, and can ascribe greatness unto our God, and sing,

"The waters stood like walls of brass,
To let the sons of Israel pass."

When our spiritual Joshua is our leader the enemy melts before us, as did the people before the children of Israel, and we feel that we can possess the land. But we are made to know

"The peace is his, and not our own,
Our heart no better than before."

If it were possible for the enemy to drive us out of the land, we should sink to rise no more. The Comforter comes to our relief, and even the sun is made to stand still, while our Captain leads us onward and gives us the land. But as the Philistines returned again to fight, so our enemy returns. But thanks be to God, he has not left us comfortless, but has come to us again, and instructs us as he did his servant David, saying, "And let it be, when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself; for then shall the Lord go out before thee to smite the host of the Philistines." So we see it is the Lord's time, and his children always put the enemy to flight when he goeth before them. As the children of Israel did, so do we. We sin and are overcome, and cry unto the Lord, and he hears and delivers us. We find it true, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

"How good to deliver, how kind to redeem;
The feeblest believer may trust in his name."

The Lord is our sun and our shield, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift." O how we are made to rejoice when the Lion of the tribe of Judah takes the book and looses the seals thereof. O for such love! Praise the Lord! Amen.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Nov. 28th, 1895, Mabel Akerly, aged 6 years, 2 months and 4 days. She was the youngest daughter of Stephen E. and Augusta Akerly, of Providence, Pa. Her disease was membranous croup, living only a few days after being taken. Almost from the first of her sickness she said she could not live. She was a lovely, bright, affectionate girl, and will be greatly missed by all who knew her, and especially by her dear father and mother, who mourn deeply their great loss; but they do not mourn as those who have no hope, for both father and mother have a good hope through grace to comfort them in their affliction. They know that God is merciful and kind, and that what he does is best, yet mourn the absence of darling little Mabel. Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus. It is not wrong to mourn the loss of our near and dear friends. It is a relief, and sometimes the only source of relief, when filled with trouble and sorrow, to shed tears. Thank God for the relief; for some poor souls, however great their agony may be, can never cry. May the good Lord comfort the mourning friends with his precious promise, "I will not leave you comfortless."

The funeral was held in the Old School Baptist meeting-house at Justus, Pa., where a large congregation of people assembled, the writer talking to them of that salvation which is found alone in Jesus Christ.

D. M. VAIL.

Miss Anna Laytham died last Friday evening, Dec. 6th, at 7:20 o'clock, at the home of her parents near May's Lick, after a lingering illness from a complication of diseases.

The deceased was one of the most estimable christian women of the county, and had a wide circle of friends, who will learn with sincere sorrow of her demise. She was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Laytham, and was about thirty-five years of age.

The funeral occurred Monday afternoon at two o'clock at the family residence, conducted by Elder Eubanks, of Henry County. Interment at May's Lick.

The above is taken from the Maysville Bulletin. Mr. Laytham was formerly of Bourbon. We have been his guest at his Mason home, and observed what a happy family he had, the deceased being especially beloved by the entire household. They are members of the Old Baptist Church, and frequently passed here going to associations and meetings.

My dear companion, Jane Sohner (her maiden name was Hewitt), was born in Needingworth, Huntingdonshire, England, Sept. 1st, 1823, came to America in 1853, settled for a time in the state of New York, then went to Illinois, where we were married, Nov. 22d, 1855, and moved to Iowa in 1865, where we resided at the time of her death, Nov. 25th, 1895. Her age was 72 years, 2 months and 25 days.

She made a profession of religion in her youth and joined a Missionary Church, but frequently went to hear what were there called Particular Baptists, whose preaching seemed to be more satisfying to her soul; but it was hard, as she often told me, to leave the Missionaries and her youthful companions, and for three years she halted between the two, until she listened to a discourse on Deuteronomy xxii. 11, which was so imprinted by power from on high that she never afterward went to the Missionaries. In the state of New York she found a people of her choice under the ministry of Elder St. John. After coming here, by having the SIGNS we found again those whom it was our delight to meet. I was baptized June 13th, 1880, by Elder True, in the fellowship of Otter Creek Church, where my companion was a member at the time of her death. The church has truly lost one of its pillars, and not often was her seat vacant. The last few years of her life she had many tokens of her Savior's love. She gave the last testimony of her faith, the finished work of her Savior, his blood and righteousness, as her only hope of heaven; that if saved it must be by grace alone. Her disease was cancer. She died very suddenly, and was not permitted to speak, but looked upward with a smile. She breathed her last without a struggle. The writer, with two sons, two sisters, four brothers and the church, with many other friends, are left to mourn our loss, but not as those who have no hope; for we believe that her spirit is basking in the presence of him in whom her soul delighted. Elders T. Blake and T. Gill spoke words of comfort, after which her body was laid in the grave to await the resurrection.

PAUL SOHNER.

DEWAR, Iowa, Dec. 26, 1895.

It becomes our sad duty to chronicle the death of sister Elizabeth Mellotte, which occurred Nov. 6th, 1895, at the home of her father, Elijah Mellotte, in Hancock Co., Ohio. She was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, March 27th, 1852, and was at the time of her death aged 43 years, 7 months and 9 days. She leaves a kind father, three brothers and one sister, besides many friends, to mourn their loss, her mother (Jane Mellotte) and one brother having gone before her to the spirit world.

Sister Libbie received the evidence of the free pardon of all her sins in her youth. At the age of sixteen she united with the denomination called "The Church of God," but afterward became dissatisfied, and on the 19th of June, 1886, came to the Primitive Baptist Church at Van Buren, was received upon relation of her hope, and baptized by Elder Bretz. She remained in fellowship with the church until her death. She had been in poor health for many years, but until the last year of her life was always present at our meetings, so that she is greatly missed by the church. She was one of the faithful ones, always manifesting a deep interest in the cause of her Master. During the last year of her life she suffered severely, but bore all with christian patience, often expressing her willingness to live or to die, as the Lord willed. A short time before she passed away she sang the entire hymn commencing with these words, "There is a land of pure delight," and in many expressions during her life and last illness she has left for the comfort of her dear old father and friends the blessed assurance that she was one of the Lord's children. While we miss her, and feel the pain of a broken tie, it is sweet to believe that her freed spirit rests with Jesus in that land where saints immortal reign. May this be the happy portion of us all, is my prayer.

A. F. DOVE.

VAN BUREN, Ohio, Dec. 25, 1895.

Elder Stephen Bolender was born in Clermont Co., Ohio, Feb. 4th, 1820, moved to Fulton Co., Ill., in 1839, and was married to Lydia Bufman on April 24th, 1845, who preceded him to the spirit world on Nov. 23d, 1854. He was married to Mary Coleman on April 26th, 1855, who died in Christ one year and five months prior to his death, which occurred Dec. 16th, 1895, his age being 75 years, 10 months and 12 days.

Thus passes away one more watchman from the walls of Zion. He united with the Waterford Church on Oct. 20th, 1856, and was ordained Deacon on Nov. 28th, 1857, which office he filled to the satisfaction of his brethren until Feb. 15th, 1873, when he was ordained to the full functions of the gospel ministry, since which time he has acted in the capacity of pastor over the Waterford Church, and which position he has always filled to the satisfaction of the church. Owing to old age and feebleness, the writer was called by the church in March, 1893, as his assistant. He was a man well respected by all, and had a good report from them that were without. As a husband he was kind and gentle, and was beloved by all who knew him. He was ever ready to administer to all, and especially to the household of faith. One of his daughters said to me after we had returned from the funeral, "Come as you always have," showing that the training she had received from her dear father had taken root in good ground, and was even then producing fruit.

The writer spoke for about one hour to the large concourse of people that had assembled, using for a text Isaiah iii. 10; after which we bore his remains to their last resting place on earth, to await the resurrection morn, to be called forth in the image of his Savior. May the Lord bestow his blessing on the family, that they may imitate his godly walk and conduct while they remain here, and be prepared to meet their father in heaven, is the prayer of one who wishes them well.

PRAYER.

FATHER of mercies, hear me,
And come to my relief;
For darkness overwhelms me,
And I am drowned in grief.
Once I could praise my Savior,
Fly as on eagles' wings;
But now my harp is broken,
My soul no longer sings.
Once I could sing of Jesus,
And tell of all his charms;
But now I'm sad and lonely,
And buffeted with storms.
O come and shine upon me,
Dear Savior, once again;
O give me sweet assurance,
And let me cease from sin.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MANSE, Ky., Nov. 28, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I wish to write a few lines for your disposal, upon Hebrews vi. 4-8. In writing about this wonderful mystery contained in these verses I do not propose to dispute the views of any brother who has written on them and who may differ from me. The views I have have been on my mind more or less for three or four years; and, more than that, they are my experience; and I think I could not have learned these things as I view them but by experience.

The fourth verse reads thus, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened," &c. The sixth verse reads thus, "If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance," &c. Now, my friends, the thought comes to my mind, To whom is it impossible? for we are taught that with God all things are possible. Then the question comes, Is it impossible for God to renew them? Now I must go to my own experience to consider this matter. After it pleased the Lord to show me that I was a sinner, and then to remove the burden from my heart, and to shed his love abroad in my heart, I rejoiced for a season. But instead of putting off the old man with his deeds, I went on in sin and rebellion against God, and continued sinning for about four years, I believe. I well remember one evening, while I was out feeding the stock, and thoughts began to come into my mind like these, Now I know that I am committing sin in doing the way I am, for I know that it does not become a christian to do and act as I do. Then the thought came to me, that if some one would come and talk to me of the way I was doing and acting, would I yield to them and be sorry for my conduct? Then my pride and anger rose up and caused me to say, "No, I would not listen to any one, for it is none of their business; they do not have to answer for my sins." So you see there was no repentance there at all. Yet I knew I was doing wrong; but I did not at that time belong to the church. I was a Missionary Baptist then. Now, Paul tells us, "A man that is a heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself." And in 1 Cor. v. 5 he charges the church concerning a man who had committed a certain abomination, to deliver him to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. John says, "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it." So my view of the matter is that after a brother has indulged in sin until he has become so hardened that he will not yield to the admonitions of his brethren and friends (for this he can do), then it is impossible for any person on earth to cause him to repent and be sorry for what he has done. The apostle says in this same letter to the Hebrews, x. 26-35, "For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," &c. Now, brethren, you can see that I believe a man can fall away; but, mark you, I do not believe he can apostatize. I believe a man can fall from grace, for Paul says so; but I do not believe he can be lost if he is born of God; for Christ says, concerning his sheep, "I give unto them eternal life;" and he then seals it with this declaration, "And they shall never perish; nei-er shall any pluck them out of my hand." So then it is possible for us, my brethren, to sin and become so hardened that our brethren cannot cause us to repent; cannot convert us from the error of our way. When that is the case, if we are God's children we will undergo the "fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation" spoken of in Hebrews x. 27. Then, if we are the children of God, we will realize what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God. "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

Now I want to consider the seventh and eighth verses: "For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh off upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God. But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is being cursed, whose end is to be burned." The sins that we commit are the thorns and briers. I believe the Lord suffers his people to run into sin at times, in order to prove them; not to see for himself what they will do (for he knows what they will do better than they do), but to prove to them that they are but flesh, and that in their flesh there dwelleth no good thing.

Now I wish to return to my own experience, which to my mind proves what I believe is the truth contained in this eighth verse. When I had run into sin as long as the Lord would let me, he afflicted me. David says, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." I began to be troubled. I remember very well my feelings, and tried to wear them off and forget them; but my disobedience would come before me, and my burden grew heavier. I remember going out to a secret place and trying to pray; but it did me no good. I continued to grow worse and worse, until finally I told my wife about my condition; but she could not do me any good. I realized that I had sinned wilfully, and that I must suffer for it. My heart seemed to be on fire; it seemed that my heart was burning; and it did burn, and the burning was so great that I could not rest. O how I tried to pray! but I could not pray. This terrible burning continued for several days, and I took to my bed. One day while I was lying on my bed, expecting never to feel God's love again, all at once the Lord revealed himself to me. I felt my sins were forgiven, and began to clap my hands and to shout, "Bless the Lord; for he has forgiven my sins." My friends did not know what to think of it, knowing that I had professed a hope long before that time.

But, dear brethren, my story is not yet half told, nor can I tell all of it; but I will mention a little more, to show you the Lord's dealings with me, for it surely was his work. After I felt my sins pardoned, and felt God's love so plainly in my heart, I then did very well for about two months. Then I was taken sick, and my burden came back again with renewed vigor. It is not possible for me to tell you what I suffered for seven weary months; but during the time I got able to do a little work. While I was sick I talked of my disobedience all the time, and when any one would come in I would tell them I was such a sinner that I could not be saved, but was going down to hell. I could not understand how it was that I had felt God's love at two different times, and once, only about two months before, I knew he had forgiven my sins, for I felt it too plainly to be mistaken. While I was under this terrible burden, at this time, I felt impressed that it was my duty to preach the gospel. It deeply impressed me, but I would think, How can I do such a thing, such an awful sinner as I am? I began to get better, and about seven months after I had been taken sick, while reading one night, all at once my burden came back on me, and my heart began to burn like fire, as at first. I went out and tried to pray, but could not. I went to bed, but could not sleep. O how my poor heart did burn, and O how guilty of something I felt, but could not tell what. In the morning I got up and made a fire, and sat down. I had not been sitting long until I felt the fiery burden gone, and a sweet stream of peace filled my whole heart. I ran out of the house, fell down on my knees, and thanked the Lord for his mercy. I felt that sweet peace and joy all that day. I was afterward baptized in the fellowship of the Old Baptist Church, where I expect to remain until death. I am now trying to preach the glorious gospel of Christ as best the Lord enables me.

Brethren, what I have written has been my experience, whether my views of the Scripture are correct or not. If you think it worthy you may publish it; but if not, all will be right. I would be glad to have brethren write on the same subject.

I am your brother, I hope,
ELDON BARTLETT.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Nov. 7, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send this letter from sister Lizzie Himes on account of the expressions of joy in the privilege of attending an associational meeting for the first time, and her appreciation of the preaching of the word. She was in the Hospital in Philadelphia last winter, but is yet far from well in body. The Lord gives comfort of soul in the midst of pain and affliction.

SILAS H. DURAND.

HOPEWELL, Pa., Oct. 23, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE BLESSED LORD:—Once more I am permitted to take my pen to talk with you awhile, though I would much rather see you face to face, and hear you talk of Jesus and his love. But at present this is the only way to converse, hoping you will pardon me for taking up your precious time, which I know is fully taken up without reading my imperfect letters; and were it not for the joy given me by receiving letters from my dear kindred, then would my pen forever remain silent. If I tire you, tell me, and all will be well; for surely if my letters seem to you as they are to me, they are unfit for any thing. Often after I have written letters I look over them and find them so like myself that I cast them in the fire. Your letter was received August 15th. It found me prostrate; but since that I have been raised up and given "joy unspeakable and full of glory." How mysterious are the ways of the Lord, and they are truly "past finding out." I had a longing desire to attend an association, but had no thought that I should be able to get there; yet I was granted this blessed privilege on Tuesday morning, Oct. 8th. Brother Corder came up, arriving here about nine o'clock. I then made ready to go. The train left here at 10. 45; so you see how long a time I had to prepare to leave. We went to Huntingdon, from thence to Three Springs, where we were met by Mr. Chillcott, and kindly cared for. On Wednesday we went to Springfield, and I for the first time in this world met in an association; and truly was it a heaven below; and in silent meditation my mind is carried away, and for a time I seem not to dwell in this world; for this seems too good to me, that I was favored of the blessed Lord to meet and be with his dear children. But O! bless his holy name, he strengthened me, he led me safely there, and brought me safely home; and he gave me joys that will never be forgotten. And what preaching I did hear! O, what soul refreshing food was handed us from our blessed Master in and through those dear

Elders, Sawin and White. O! could I hear them oftener how blest would I be. I did not get out one night to the preaching, being too far away; and I did not get to hear all the sermon Thursday morning, owing to a giving way of physical strength. I seemed to suffer much pain, and that caused my heart to become weak and faint, and I could not remain in the meeting-house; but after I rallied I could hear the blessed word where I was. I felt as though I must go on to hear the word at other places, and having the opportunity I seized it. When I made it known to my father I intended to go with brother John McClellan to Sidling Hill Church to attend a two days meeting, he thought the trip too far; but, my dear brother, I did not think so with God strengthening me; and when the time came to start, and father and brother Corder to turn for home, I saw how bitter it was for them to do so after hearing such glorious sermons. We went as far as sister Johnson's Friday evening, intending to have another service there. When I arrived there I found I was very tired, yet I did not want any one to know it. But I gradually grew sicker, till I found I could not stay up, when kind and loving hands prepared a place for me to lie, and there I could hear the blessed truth proclaimed as it fell from the lips of our dear brother Sawin. I then began to fear lest I could not go on my journey on the morrow; but after all was stilled, the house closed, and its occupants all, perhaps, in silent prayer, then in the heavens did I behold God's promise that he would not destroy the earth by water any more. The colors of the rainbow were so bright it seemed as though I could not look thereon; but I was given eyes that I could lie and look; and there I was assured that God's promises are sure and steadfast; that whatsoever he saith he also doeth; and then was my fear removed, and the blessed assurance given me that I could go on my way and no harm should come. By the dawning of the morning I felt that I could arise, make haste and go on rejoicing, though I had slept but little; but O how rested I felt! And here again was I made to feel how good is the dear Lord to me, unworthy as I am of his blessings. And why was I favored so? Because it seemed good in his sight. We met the dear brethren and sisters at Sidling Hill, and found them there as I found them at Springfield, with God's grace and love shed abroad in their hearts; and there, too, I felt how good for brethren to dwell together in unity and love, and how each and all seemed strengthened, that we can go on our way rejoicing, knowing that Jesus doeth all things well. It seemed as though each sermon got better; and why it was I cannot tell. When Sunday morning came I began to feel the bitter agony of parting, knowing that it must soon be. My strength fast failed me, and

I felt "O! I cannot leave those dear people." And the cry from my poor, crushed heart was, "O God, strengthen me in this my most bitter trial." And here my mind was carried back to my dear Savior. How bitter was the cup, when he carried the cross on which he was to meet his cruel death, and cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Was I forsaken? Ah, no. But how fast I was sinking. Elder White preached the first sermon on Sunday morning, and as he closed his sermon I felt the bitter sting. It was the last that I could hear from his dear lips, at least for awhile. It was their communion time, and then came the most solemn of all things, that if we eat and drink unworthily, we eat and drink damnation to ourselves. So it behooved each and all to so examine themselves, whether or not that we have the grace of God in our hearts. If it so be that we have, then do we show forth his death till he come. Happy are we if we keep his commandments; and this was one of them. Then came the last sermon by our dear brother and servant of our Lord, Elder Sawin; and as he closed his sermon I felt the time is now here that I must say farewell. How can I? To some came the word good-bye, to others not a word could I utter, only sobs. I felt that this may be the last meeting on earth. With some I know it is. Perhaps I may never meet any again, and when dear Elder Sawin came to bid farewell he spoke so comfortingly of the blessed assurance that we had given us, that if no more on earth we meet, we have a home eternal in the heavens, where the word farewell is never heard, where no sickness will ever break our rest. O how sweet! How we long to meet Jesus, and see him as he is, for we have no continuing city here, but we seek one to come. So this gives us courage that we can press onward and upward, and at last hear the welcome sound, "Child, come home! Thy warfare here is done; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." So you see how little I knew of the sad farewell that had to come when I bade my kindred farewell at Springfield. You see I was not then turning back, but I was going on to hear the blessed words at other places, and the sting was not so bitter; but the kindred were just as dear, and I loved them all with the same spirit; and that spirit was what Jesus gave me, not what I had of myself, but what Jesus gave me, or how could I love them? Jesus gives us of his love, and we know this is not a natural love, for how could we love them whom we have never met? Many came to me expressing the joy they had in my letters in the SIGNS. This humbled me greatly. In my flesh there dwells no good thing. It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but it is of God who sheweth mercy, who is pleased to lead and guide us with his eye. So to him be all the praise for blessings past, now, and ever more. Since I have come home I have had two dear letters very unexpectedly from our dear sisters Phebe Falknor and Attie Curtis. Only a few days before I started from home had I received one from sister Phebe; and it not being answered yet, could I expect another one? And sister Attie, I thought, had forgotten me; but I could not blame her; but I am glad God put it in the hearts of both to write. I look over this and see how little I have told you of those heavenly meetings; but I am startled to see how many sheets of paper I have filled, and so little told. When you can find time, do write, for your letters speak the language I love to hear. Tell sister Bessie I received her good letter September 5th, and I was glad to get it. When it came I had been able to be up just one week. I have had two slight hemorrhages since I came home. The agony is indescribable, though I am glad it has not made me prostrate; for people would be so ready to say the trip caused it; for some have said, "What if you had died while you were gone?" I told them I guess they would have sent me home. If I could feel strengthened I would travel many miles to hear such glorious sermons preached as I heard whilst at those meetings. I think Elder White would not go aside a hair's breadth if there were an army of millions before him. I believe he would die at his post rather than give way to the Arminian doctrine. He reminds me of a lion in boldness, in defending the blessed truth. Yes, I could go on and say many things concerning those two dear Elders, but ere I am aware a column will be filled. I send love to you and all the family, and when it is well with you pray for me.

Affectionately your sister in Christ,

LIZZIE HIMES.

WESTCLIFFE, Colo., Dec., 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—About a year ago I promised myself, as well as promising you, that I might not trouble you with any more of my imperfect thoughts for publication in the SIGNS, but from some cause I feel like breaking that promise. The SIGNS of November 27th, present volume, contains some very precious and, to me, comforting truths, of which I desire to write.

First, I read brother H. M. Curry's article on the ability and liability of Adam to stand or fall. At first I felt a desire to write to brother Curry privately, and tell him what comfort and strength it gave me to read his letter. A number of years ago I wrote to brother F. A. Chick upon this very subject, and later to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Next, I read brother H. J. Redd's letter upon the first and second resurrections. I felt that I wanted him to know my hearty approval of his views upon that subject.

I then read brother A. H. Hagans' letter upon the same subject, and with the purest of motive I want to call his attention to one view he has taken. He says, "By reference to Matthew xxvii. 52, 53, in connection with Matthew xxviii. 6, we are forced to accept that previous to the burial of Jesus many of the saints arose and appeared to many in the holy city," &c. This he says he understands to be the first resurrection. The text of Scripture in Matthew xxvii. 52, 53, to which brother Hagans refers to prove his view, reads, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Hence it could not be before the burial of Jesus that the bodies of the saints arose, when Matthew says it was "after his resurrection." I understand that when Jesus was crucified upon the cross, and bowed his head, and gave up the ghost, life left his body; his body was dead, was taken from the cross, and laid in the tomb; and that he arose from the tomb, after which the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints arose and came out of the graves, &c. I feel like making a few quotations of Scripture which I think bear upon the subject of the first resurrection. John, in Revelation i. 5, says that Jesus Christ "is the faithful witness, and the first begotten [production] of the dead." Paul says that he is "the first-born from the dead."—Col. i. 18. Again, Paul, in speaking of the resurrection of the dead, says, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept" (died).—1 Cor. xv. 20. Again, Paul, in his defense before king Agrippa (for Paul was delivered to king Agrippa, accused of preaching the resurrection of the dead), said, "That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead."—Acts xxvi. 23. I think from these Scriptures, brother Hagans, that you are correct in presuming that the Scriptures teach that Jesus is the first resurrection, and was the first that arose from the dead.

I trust that brother Hagans will not take offense at my well-meaning in calling his attention to his erroneous view of the Scripture he cites in Matthew. If I am in error, who is my faithful brother or sister but they who will in the meekness of the blessed Master point out to me my error, that I may overcome it? I can but the more respect and love them for so doing.

Now I come, brother Beebe, to your father's editorial, written upward of forty-five years ago. Little did he think, I presume, that words which he penned would be comforting to an old man like me forty-five years after he wrote that editorial, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." In this editorial this question appears, "Will your faithful Shepherd allow his sheep or lambs to be without the evidence of their sonship?" I want to say that the evidence, if any I have, of being an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ, grows very dim indeed with me. Although I have spoken, when writing to the SIGNS before, of my surroundings, I wish to speak of them again. For some wise purpose of God, best known unto him, my lot is cast in this part of earth. Here I am deprived of all church privileges; there is not a church organization of our faith and order within the state now in existence. I am deprived of the privilege of meeting with one who knows or loves the truth, and conversing of the things pertaining to our heavenly Master's kingdom. I conclude often, with Job, that the Lord "hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass." In the year 1870 the Lord was pleased to strip me of all my worldly goods; and strive and labor with my hands as hard as I may, I have at the end of each year nothing save the bare necessities of life for myself and family, for which I try to feel thankful that it is as well with me as it is. The Master said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." As the saying is, I am in a land of plenty, yet I am hungering; not for earthly food, but spiritual. May I not say that I am in want, greatly in want? When I am led to meditate of days past and gone, when I was permitted to meet with the dear children of God at the house of prayer, and join with them in singing praise to his holy name, I feel sometimes that I cannot stay here longer; for I remember that in my Father's house there is plenty and to spare, while here I am starving. David said, "No good thing will the Lord withhold from them that walk uprightly." Sometimes it does seem to me that no greater blessing or good could be bestowed upon me in this life than to be permitted to spend the remainder of my days upon earth among those whom alone I believe worship God in spirit and in truth, and to sit at the feet of Jesus and the dear children of God, and feast upon the crumbs that fall from the Master's table. If the profession which I made before the church at Blue Grass (which church was organized at my father's house as far back as I can remember) thirty-five years ago was a good profession, in other words, if I am numbered as one of the flock of which your father has written, surely I am not walking uprightly before God, else this good would not be withholden from me. Your father said, "Only let a child of God feel perfectly certain that the Lord is his Shepherd, and he will give all his doubts to the wind." But ah, here is the great trouble with me, "perfectly certain." These two words contain much. I am so full of doubts and fears that my own actions in this life say that I am actually afraid to trust the Lord, so that many times I am made to cry out and say, Is there any one like me?

I see that I am writing at too great length, and must stop. There are many things more that I might write, but would it be profitable or comforting to any one to read? One thing more which father Beebe said I will notice. He said, "The poor, silly sheep perhaps may think it hard that walls and fences should circumscribe their liberties," &c. When I read this I could but say, That is me, if I am a sheep of the Lord's flock at all; for I have to confess that I have mourned over my lonely condition here very much. I know full well that the Lord knows best what is for my good. If it were left to me to mark out my path in this life it would be a very crooked one indeed. O that I could be more reconciled to the dispensations of providence with me!

Dear brethren, if you see fit to give this a place in the dear family paper, the SIGNS, I ask you and all the dear flock of the good Shepherd who may read it to pray for me; pray that I may be reconciled to his will in all things. Farewell.

J. H. YEOMAN.

SCIPIO SIDING, Ohio, Dec. 9, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The SIGNS continues to come to me regularly, and is laden with the good things of the kingdom. It is a great comfort to me to read its scriptural messages, and to know there are yet some scattered abroad who in this day of darkness and division love the doctrine for which it contends, that God is a Sovereign, that he rules in heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand. I am censured by some of our members here for being a subscriber to the paper and a reader of its columns; but, dear brethren, send it on, as I love to read it; and any one visiting my home will have either the pleasure or displeasure of seeing a few copies of it in conspicuous places. We do not feel the least disposed to conceal them, and if any be in too much haste to look for the paper we will without the least hesitancy, if they will ask us, plead guilty of the charge of having it. I am much pleased with the editorials, and with the correspondence generally. The Corresponding Letter of the Corresponding Meeting of Virginia meets with our approval, and we bid those dear brethren God speed in proclaiming the rich and glorious truths embraced in those principles set forth in their letter, though it be called heresy. In reading the letter we had the sweet and comforting assurance that it was a message to us from the Lord, and with praise and thankfulness to his great name we took courage. In taking a retrospective view of the church of Christ in her journey in time we see that at times she was overshadowed with clouds similar to those which are hovering over her now. But as every trial and conflict through which she has passed has been for her good and the glory of her Lord, we believe the same loving-kindness that has attended her in all her warfare in the past will continue with her to her journey's end. If there are brethren among us who do not believe that God works all things after the counsel of his own will, if they do not believe that the potter has power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel to honor and another unto dishonor, if they do not believe the words of our Lord to Pilate, that he could have no power over him except it were given him from above, then surely they will not believe us, poor creatures of a day, though we speak the same things. We cannot change the Scriptures; they were given by the inspiration of God, and are profitable for doctrine. Should we revise them, and make the sentence to read that God permits all things to work after the counsel of his permission, we would have the difficulty of making so many other portions read correspondingly, that we would find it an impossible task; and besides, it would not be the truth, and we would change the truth of God into a lie, and our reasons for so doing would be because we were more the worshipers of the creature than the Creator.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of some to restrict the servants of God in reference to certain Scriptures; that they should not quote any of them that relate to or prove God's unlimited sovereignty or predestination. But it is the duty of all who preach the word to preach as the Lord Jesus gives him light and liberty, and not keep back part of the price. If we seek to please men, we are the servants of men, and not the servants of Christ.

In examining the history of the church by our best authors we find the children of God have believed that God has universal government over all creatures, and all worlds, and that his predestination extends as far as his government. If his predestination is limited, so is his government. The question may be asked, How long has it been believed by the church that God's predestination is in all things? We would say, read the ninth chapter of Romans and you will find the argument of Paul on that point of doctrine, and his reply to those who object to it. No stronger language could be used in the declaration and defense of the doctrine of God's unlimited predestination. Many of our poets whose hymns we sing in the service of God were written and composed by those who believed that doctrine. Toplady, Cowper, Kent, Bedome, Ryland, and others, were faithful advocates of the point of doctrine now so much objected to by some professing to be Predestinarian Baptists. We would admonish those of contrary opinion to read the London Confession of 1684, and the resolutions of the brethren of 1832; and if they are still of the opinion that it is a new idea

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

IN our editorial last week we referred to the fact that an effort was on foot among a large class of fanatical and priestly religionists in this country to introduce an amendment into the Constitution of these United States acknowledging the God of heaven as the God whom this land and this nation professes to serve. This week we desire, as briefly and soberly as possible, to speak of this subject, because we believe that the very life of our religious liberties is involved in it. We said that we desired to write soberly, but we must confess that it is hard for us to express ourself calmly upon this matter. It is hard, because our civil and religious liberties, bequeathed to us by our fathers under the blessing of God, are by this movement assailed.

We desire to write upon this subject now, because in the week beginning December 9th a Congress was held in Baltimore in the name of "Moral Reform," in which, among other things, the need of making this, in name, a "christian nation" was insisted upon; and as a means thereto the one essential thing was said to be that the Constitution of our country should be amended by an article acknowledging God.

It seems upon the face of it an unusual and strange thing for a professedly christian minister to criticize and oppose such an apparently good and commendable a movement; but it is just because we occupy such a responsible position that we feel bound as the servant of God, and in the name of true christianity, to raise a protest against such false views of the religion of Jesus as are seen in such a proposition as this. As the God of heaven disappears out of the hearts and lives of the nation at large more and more, it is thought the more needful to put his name in the Constitution of our country; on the same principle, we suppose, that puts a cross upon a place of worship, when cross-bearing is not known among the people who worship there. Godlessness and pleasure-seeking among the churches of the day are compensated by putting God into the Constitution, and a cross of gilded wood or bronze upon the temple where men meet for worship.

We also call attention to this subject because it has been one of the peculiar and crowning glories of those who have borne the name of Baptists in all ages past that they have stood against kingcraft and priestcraft, and for the rights of each individual conscience in all spiritual matters. Baptist faith is that there is not, nor is it possible that there ever could be, such a thing as a "christian nation." Not even if every man, woman and child in a nation were personally believers in Jesus, and were truly his followers, would that nation be a "christian nation." The only body of people that can ever be entitled to be called a "christian nation" is the body of true believers scattered among all nations upon the globe. The believing people of God, made one in Christ out of every nation and kindred and tongue, are called in the Scriptures "a holy nation," and such a designation can of right belong to no other body of people. If it be therefore lawful at all to use the term "a christian nation," it could not scripturally be used to describe any earthly government, however good it might be, and however much pure religion might have spread there, but only the church of God, the church of the first-born, which is in every land, made up of those who love and serve God.

With all who are counted among believers God deals separately and personally. In all matters pertaining to spiritual life and worship Baptist faith and teaching always have been that no man must meddle with another. No man shall have dominion over another man's faith. Even an apostle said, "Not that we have dominion over your faith." Another said, We are not "lords over God's heritage." Any effort to compel the faith of men, while utterly abortive so far as any real dominion is concerned, is yet exceedingly fruitful of evil in various ways; chiefly, it may be said, by multiplying the number of false professors and hypocrites in the world. A forced outward conformity is at the expense of honesty and truth among the masses. A religion in which the Government interferes, compelling all to subscribe to it, is responsible for weakening the public conscience beyond anything else of which we can conceive. Baptists, therefore, in the interests of both religion and public morals, have always contended that the only part Government can have in the matter is to let religion entirely alone, and simply protect every man in his religion or in his irreligion. The irreligious man must not seek to coerce the religious man, and the religious man must exercise no compulsion over the irreligious man. Baptists have ever considered this an essential part of their faith.

The priests of a carnal religion, who look "every one for his gain from his quarter," can very easily see how it will be advantageous for the system which they uphold to use the arm of the Government to compel all to subscribe to its tenets and support (financially especially) its claims; but the followers of a pure, spiritual religion know that no alliance with any earthly power can advantage it one whit. Therefore they desire it not; and as they know that he who seeks for the "horses and chariots of Egypt" shall find it a broken staff, which shall pierce his hand, and moreover, that it is a casting of God one side, and a rejection of his power to help, therefore they must protest against it as long as life and speech are left them.

Perhaps it may be said, We admit and believe all this, but what has this to do with the proposed amendment admitting the name of God into the Constitution? We answer, Much every way. The publicly announced object of the advocates of this amendment is to make this a professedly christian nation. It involves the idea that every man who dwells here, and calls himself a citizen, shall be compelled to sign himself a believer in God, or a christian, though he may be in fact an infidel. If as a citizen he aspires to office, and is chosen thereto, ere he can serve his country in that capacity he must make oath to support that part of the Constitution as well as all others. He must either hold no office, or he must perjure himself. Surely this in itself is sufficient to array every honest man, who is not a priestridden fanatic, against such a movement. Surely that cannot be good and wholesome which puts a premium upon perjury.

Again, this proposed amendment is but the thin edge of the wedge which, if once introduced, will upon one pretext or another gradually be driven home, until it splits asunder the whole fabric of our religious and civil liberty. Our only safety as Old School or Primitive Baptists lies in the victory of the principles for which we have always contended, and which in our beloved country have heretofore prevailed. Let this proposed amendment be once adopted, and the prince of darkness will rejoice, and his followers on earth and below the earth will be jubilant. Here will be another victory scored against pure and undefiled religion. Another rivet will have been forged to the chain with which Satan is wont to bind and enslave the consciences of men. In the triumph of a false religious zeal a blow will have been struck at the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ; for the steps are not many nor very long from this first success to a complete uniting of church and state, with all that such a marriage involves. What a false and unhallowed union that of church and state has always proved itself to be! And the offspring of this union has been still more ungodliness, blasphemy, persecution, hypocrisy, and utter worldliness.

We notice in the account given of the sessions of this Congress held in Baltimore that several speeches were made by "Reverend" gentlemen in earnest support of this movement.

We saw but one ray of light in all that was recorded of this matter. After two or three addresses had been made Dr. Fulton, in whose tabernacle this meeting was held, and who had been chosen to preside, arose and said, "I have accepted an invitation to preside over to-night's meeting; but if I thought for an instant that the gentleman who has spoken represented the views of this gathering, my own feelings and my conscience would compel me to decline to take any part in it." Dr. Fulton was informed that they were but the individual views of the speaker, and professed himself satisfied; but so far as we read no one else uttered one word of protest, and we do not doubt that Dr. Fulton stood almost alone in this gathering. We wish to give honor where honor is due, and so we mention Dr. Fulton's protest; but we can but say that he would have been still nearer right had he refused to take any further part in the proceedings. The gathering was evidently, as a body, in favor of the above named amendment to the Constitution.

We wish before closing to briefly refer to some of the arguments urged in favor of this amendment; and first, it was said that "God willed it." We have not learned that the speaker adduced any proof of this remarkable assertion. So far as we were able to gather, this assertion stands unsupported by any attempt by the speaker to prove it. We might be content to call for the proof, sure that it will not be found within the compass of the New Testament, nor yet in the result of such alliances of church and state in the past. But we desire to make one or two further statements. If the speaker meant that God willed it by his eternal and everlasting decree, then it is sure to come to pass, regardless of the approval or disapproval of men. But we notice that men of the speaker's class generally have but little use for and little faith in a God of sovereign power and eternal decrees; therefore we acquit the speaker of meaning this. But if he meant that God wills it in the sense that he commands men to obey him, that is, that he has commanded it, we are persuaded that he will seek far and long before he will find any such command in the New Testament.

A second reason why the speaker favored the proposed amendment was, "We want an expression of our national allegiance to the King of kings." The speaker may have no higher conception of what true allegiance to the King of kings means than his words imply; but Baptists and every truly heaven-born soul know that allegiance to God means a real love to him and reverence for him, such as is produced in the heart alone by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Viewed in this light, such an amendment subscribed to by the nation would be a false profession by the large majority of the people. We have no such thing as a national allegiance to God. The proposed amendment, if adopted, would be a lie. All unrenewed men are, according to the word of God, godless. Scripturally speaking, every one who does not believe personally and savingly in the Lord Jesus Christ is a heathen. No natural man renders any allegiance to God. If there be any unrenewed men in our land, every time they took an oath to support the Constitution they would be guilty of perjury. Most emphatically we do not want a lie in our Constitution, especially a religious lie. There is a God who reigns, but there is no such thing as natural allegiance to him. Thank God, he has so wrought in the hearts of some that they gladly acknowledge his dominion; but such as these do not wish to put a lie in the lips of the godless, compelling them to say that they serve God when they do not.

A third reason given was this, "Political acknowledgment of Christ is the only means of freeing ourselves from the charge that we are dishonoring him." This certainly is a broad statement. This "is the only means." Putting God into the Constitution will then, in the eyes of men, and we suppose also in the eye of God, free us from the charge of dishonoring him as a nation. What a splendid salve this is to the public conscience! What a universal panacea for all the spiritual ills this nation is heir to! Put the name of God in the Constitution, and straightway we shall be honorable in the sight of God, and all our reproach will be washed away. This is the only means, remember! Lying, stealing, oppression, national injustice may continue, if only we adopt this amendment. Jehovah will see his name in the Constitution, and he will be so pleased that he will not notice such peccadillos as are named above. This "is the only means of freeing ourselves from the charge that we are dishonoring him" as a nation. Or does the speaker mean that we as a nation are so just, honest, merciful and truthful that, like the young man in the gospel, we lack but one thing? If so, we pity his conception of these virtues. England, Italy, Germany, Russia, all are professedly christian nations. In them all church and state are more or less closely blended. Are they as nations free from the charge of dishonoring God? It would seem so, according to the above astonishing statement.

Or does he mean that we shall thereby free ourselves from this charge in the sight of men? We reply to this, Put the name of God into the Constitution a hundred times, and as long as the nation is infested with the thousand evils that all see, and that it is needless to enumerate here, so far from putting away our reproach, the use of that name will but intensify our shame, and make us still more a by-word and reproach among all right-thinking men. We should be putting on the livery of heaven to serve the devil in. O religion! what crimes have been wrought in thy name, and because done in thy name were counted virtues! God forbid that we shall ever so misuse the name of the God whom believers reverence and worship! Let the meaning of the speaker have been what it may, there is not the shadow of a justification for his language.

A fourth argument that we noticed was this, "While the church does not need the state, the state does need the church." Right here we see the outcome, as it were, in the minds of those who were speakers upon this occasion. Church and state must intermarry. This is the goal aimed at. The proposed amendment to the Constitution is but the first step. If adopted, the consummation of the union will surely follow. All that would remain to be done would be a mere matter of detail; and according to the above named assertion the church would be the superior. "The church does not need the state, but the state does need the church." It need only be said that when the church gets ready to wed the state she becomes a prostitute void of shame before God or man. She has forsaken her lawful husband for another, and her virtue and her glory have forever departed. Let us notice that the whole force of the statement which we are here controverting is in the fact that the speaker was advocating a legal union of church and state. He did not argue that the state needs honest, true, brave, God-fearing men for citizens, and to sit in the halls of council, and to make and administer her laws, which no man would be insane enough to dispute; but the argument is for a state church, in which the church shall be the superior. If we were here writing upon political ground we should say that such men were traitors to their Government; but as we are writing upon the religious side of the question we will say that such men are the enemies of the cross, and, Judas-like, would traitorously betray their Lord with a kiss for a reward.

Ere the church can consent to be wedded to the state by any such legal union she must have forsaken her true husband, and become filled with all sorts of unholy lusts; and these, added to the natural evils inherent in the state, will bring in a very carnival of folly, vice and irreligion under the garb of religion itself. As hypocrisy is worse than open sin, so this unholy alliance will result in greater evil to both the church and the state.

We do not fear that the true church of Jesus Christ will yield her consent to such a move; but some true, God-fearing men and women may be ensnared by the specious reasonings of men. Therefore we have felt it incumbent upon us to do what we may to warn the unwary though sincere-hearted people of God in this matter. We do not deem any apology needful except for the imperfect manner in which we have tried to set these matters forth. We may in the future have cause to consider this subject again. Meanwhile we urge upon all our brethren to be firm and faithful in their testimony against this proposed marriage of church and state.

ORDINATIONS, COUNCILS, &C.

In replying to the queries of a brother, we cannot flatter ourself that the expression of our views will produce a uniformity in the opinions or practice of the Baptists, on the subjects involved. All the "scriptural information" that can be adduced on these or any other subject connected with the order of the gospel church must be found in the New Testament, and all our churches and brethren should examine that standard and endeavor to act as it directs. A want of uniformity in practice naturally arises from a want of uniformity in our understanding the rules laid down in the Scriptures. By our individual researches we have not been able to find that any ecclesiastical power has been vested in any other body than the church for regulating those matters concerning which our brother inquires. Wherever we find a gospel church, we find Christ presiding in regal majesty, and his apostles sitting on their twelve thrones, judging the spiritual tribes of the Israel of God. And where we fail to find these, we fail to find a gospel church. Every such church we consider perfectly competent to elect or call out and set apart for the common benefit of the church such gift as she has. Every distinct branch of the church of Christ, as we understand the subject, is independent of the dictation of all the other branches of the same spiritual kingdom; but still as no branch has any power except that which is common to all the other branches, a gospel fellowship among the several branches requires that there should be harmony in their faith and practice.

In the public recognition of the servants of the church, especially ministers of the gospel, whose peculiar calling imposes on them the duty to minister (occasionally at least) to more than one branch, it has been long considered proper that churches of the vicinity where such ordinations were to take place should be called on to unite with (not preside over) the church to which the candidate belongs, in thus setting him apart to the work whereunto they believe that the Holy Ghost has called him.

The organization of an ecclesiastical council composed of elders, bishops or other members, with delegated powers to exercise authority over any branch of the church of God, in any matter whatever, must in our view be without the least divine authority or sanction in the Scriptures.

The general practice of the Old School Baptists, so far as we are informed, is, when they wish to ordain an elder, to invite sister churches of their faith and order to send faithful brethren to sit with (not over) them in council. When these brethren come together they take their seat with the church, for the time being, as though they were members of that particular church, and in unison with the church they act in giving or withholding their approbation of the gift, or the setting apart of the brother to the work. A minister thus publicly set apart enjoys not only the expressed confidence of the members of the church to which he immediately belongs, but also of the other churches of the same order; and this course is well calculated not only to promote his usefulness, but also to strengthen the union and fellowship of the churches generally.

Volumes might be written on the subject; but after all each church must act in the matter according to her honest understanding of the divine rule.

"AND be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

This verse is a part of one of those exhortations which were constantly, from time to time, delivered to the saints by the apostles when they were here on earth in person; nor did the exhortation lose its force and usefulness when the apostle who was honored with the privilege of communicating it to his brethren had finished his course, fought the good fight, and was called home to enter into the joys of his Lord. It is just as much to be regarded now as when first written by the inspiration of God, and unless we are vastly mistaken, there is full as much need of its application at present to the brethren generally as there was in the apostle's time for its application to the church at Rome.

Two things should always be observed in reading the exhortations contained in the Scriptures of divine truth; first, who is the speaker or author of the exhortation; and second, who is addressed. The writer of this exhortation, as will be seen by a reference to the commencement of the epistle, was the apostle Paul, who was a chosen vessel unto the Lord, that he should bear his name before the Gentiles; and this address being written by him in accordance with the direction of the Holy Ghost, is entitled to just as implicit obedience from the children of God as if spoken by the lips of the Lord himself. The address, it is true, is to the saints at Rome in particular; but since the children of God have one Lord, one faith and one baptism, that inspired writing which is applicable to any portion of them is given to profit with all; and under similar circumstances the apostolic exhortation to the brethren at Rome in the primitive age of the church is equally applicable to the brethren in America now.

It does not become us as followers of the Redeemer to wander from the path marked out by him. In being conformed to this world we must lose the appearance of his disciples, so that we should become as salt which has lost its savor, and is fit only to be trodden under foot of men. We may indeed retain the name of disciples, and hold a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof by conformity to the fashions and propensities of this world; but nevertheless as we cannot serve God and man, so we cannot be Jesus' disciples if we be conformed to the world.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

FOR the first few numbers of this volume we run extra copies, so that all new subscribers may be supplied with the first numbers, and their subscription commenced with the first of this volume, as long as the back numbers last.

CORRESPONDENCE.

among the Baptists, we will conclude that farther discussion will be useless to convince them that the doctrine has been held by the Baptists from the beginning, and to depart from it now would be to forsake the foundation upon which all other points in the gospel are built. We love a gospel of certain sound; not one of chance; for whatsoever is by chance is uncertain. We sincerely hope that the dark cloud over us may now pass over by the hand of the Lord, and that his children may continue, as they have for hundreds of years in the past, to walk together in love and fellowship. But the will of the Lord be done. His fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. May his enduring mercy and his loving-kindness be with those who love his great and glorious name, is our sincere and prayerful desire.

H. E. PURRIS.

BRANTFORD, Ont., Dec. 16, 1895.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR FRIENDS:—In renewing my subscription to your paper I want to make a confession. I read with profit John McConnell's letter in a late number, and mentally could indorse most of it. Nevertheless while fully believing in the distinct operations of flesh and spirit, my trouble is always to discern between them in my own life.

Now about the paper. Never since I first took it was I so much exercised about renewal. The question was the one which faces so many of the naturally poor of the flock. Two dollars is not worth naming to those who are full of earthly stores; but to those to whom it represents food, or fuel, or garments of real necessity, or a just debt under which their spirits groan, why must they always toil, conscientiously, as far as they know, and seem to see no apparent diminution of their burdens from year to year, while other cups seem to fill at random and flow over? These, I know, are the questions of unbelief; yet they come to me unbidden and unwelcome in my daily round of life. The only comfort I get is to know, however much evil may be mixed up with man's share in their production, above all is hidden the everlasting purpose of God.

But about the two dollars and the paper I reasoned, that now I am so situated that I cannot always read it all; for what I do find time for I like to let my husband hear. Then sight does not generally improve with age. I might slowly gather the sum, but there are the daily little odds and ends which are found wanting in every home, which you cannot always account for, but which make comforts so few when they are constantly set aside. But then I began to reflect, If this paper really sets forth the truth as it is in Christ, with no catering to the worldly mind, can I cut it off? Did Jesus, veiled in flesh, spare that flesh? Did he only suffer in spirit? or did he not share, only in larger measure, the humiliations and privations which fall to the common lot of those who make up the bulk of the toiling classes? Then I thought of that wonderful "consider him" which you will find in Hebrews xii., and also of the many warnings against covetousness, which by the way may robe itself in very delusive garments; for what is it but selfishness? Then I said, I will lift my burden and carry it again. It was not all a burden, remember, only as it looked in that cloudy hour; for I knew how I should miss the sight of it and the speech of it. But I was not fully slain. Heretofore I had sent my subscription separately, supposing that those who were in clubs got it cheaper. There is a club here, and I thought I would ask the friend who gathered the names if that were so, hoping his answer would be that it was; but he replied that they made no difference. Now this was really the strain of the temptation; for I had always rejoiced in sending the whole money, and wished I had more. Hunted out of that refuge I pledged myself and set to work quietly to plan where it was to come from. Patience, friends. A few days rolled along, and one day I got a letter from a friend whom I have never seen since girlhood, but who had some idea of my straitened finances. I will just copy a sentence from it: "I wish I could help to comfort any one anywhere. For the sake of old times let me inclose a trifle to help out your Christmas; trifles light as air; but I have not time to select them, so please get some trifle for my sake and Tom's"—her husband. The trifle was exactly a two dollar bill. Yes, money is good when people know how to use it. O the loving-kindness of God! seen often more plainly in the trifles than in greater events. I knew he had sent that bill for the SIGNS, and how I felt it! What joy to hand it over! "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much."

Now, Old School Baptists and readers of the SIGNS, suffer a word from this failing and fleshly minded correspondent. Do you believe the doctrine advocated in the SIGNS is really according to the measure of light given you, the substance of Scripture teaching? Is it so that you cannot affiliate with other congregations with a clear conscience and brotherly love? Must the Head of the church stand first with you, and all other issues second? Then I ask you, Is this medium of correspondence with each other to be blotted out for lack of means? I do not speak lightly of this. A steady subscription to a poor woman or man is a real test of how it is valued. God could work miracles to keep you alive in the desert, but generally he prefers to try the faith he has given. When he has ended all the temptation, which is trial, angels will be sent to minister secretly, as you see in the Savior's case, and, I feel, repeated to me in this matter, poor weaver that I am.

One word more from my own experience. Try and not let bills gather. A yearly payment is long enough when incomes are small. Face it in the spirit of duty at least—better if as a privilege. May he who searcheth the struggles of the heart within grant us all faith to walk soberly and honestly in the midst of a crooked generation, who naturally know not God and care for none of these things.

Yours sincerely, waiting,

MRS. J. STREET.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The first number of volume sixty-four of the SIGNS is at hand, and suggests the renewing of my subscription; and in doing so it affords me an opportunity to express my satisfaction with its management, and with the sentiments so firmly and uniformly maintained in its columns. I was a youth in my teens when it made its appearance among the Baptists in Lakeville, and remember it being the subject of many conversations between members of the church to which my parents belonged, and who visited at our house. It was at the time when the new and unscriptural measures, such as Sunday Schools, protracted meetings and anxious-benches, were being introduced into the churches, to the scandal and grief of many, or a few, rather, of the old members, and caused so much agitation as to attract the attention and interest of many outside the church. I was young, but observing, and can recall many incidents of the controversy which resulted in the exclusion of my father, my uncle and two others from the fellowship of the church, for no other reason than that they "would not go along with the church," while admitting at the same time that "they were sound in the faith, and guilty of no immoral or unchristian conduct." Those four brethren were organized into a church, and I united with them about fifty-seven years ago. I have been a reader continuously ever since, and have been cognizant of the many contests with the enemies of truth and the controversies among brethren that were recorded and published in its columns to the present day; and I am confident of this one thing, that the doctrine of salvation by grace, through the atoning blood of Christ, according to the will of God, as purposed in himself before the foundation of the world, as now held forth by the present editors and correspondents, was then taught and contended for by its founder with such clearness and vigor as to encourage and strengthen the saints in their warfare with the enemies of truth. If I know anything about a christian experience, it began about the time those troubles began to manifest themselves in the church; and after sixty years of thinking, reading, praying, doubting and rejoicing in what I hope was the sunshine of God's mercy to me, anon plunged into despair and hopeless misery and condemnation on account of the corruptions of my wicked heart, with now and then a ray of the sunshine of God's loving mercy to cheer, encourage and strengthen me, these sixty years have failed to discover to me any surer way of salvation than that impressed upon my mind, either by God's holy Spirit at that time, or by the influence of the teaching and example of those to whom at that time I looked for instruction. The Scriptures teach me the same things to-day that they did then. The SIGNS gives the same explanations of Scripture that it did then. Only one thing in the case seems to differ, and that is, I have a greater conception of my sinfulness by nature, and my utter inability to perform one single good act whereby I may gain the favor of my offended God. I am compelled to accept mercy, if I have it at all, through the merits of another, and not of my own, notwithstanding my desperate efforts to establish my own worthiness according to the universal teaching of the popular religionists with whom I have come in contact since I began to investigate. The only consolation I have is in accepting God's plan of saving sinners through the atoning blood of his beloved Son, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in himself before the world was; by which plan he quickens whom he will, leads them about and instructs them by his Spirit, thus manifesting them as the subjects of his choice in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love; "having predestinated them unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." Thus Paul, with all the Old and New Testament worthies, predicated the salvation of God's people upon the sovereign will and purpose of him who is able to do all his pleasure; and what a blessed thing it is that it is so! When we, poor, bewildered and discouraged sinners, under a sense of condemnation, struggling to extricate ourselves from the maze, are ready to lie down in despair, we feel the life-giving energy of the Holy Spirit, with its beams of light illuminating our hearts, and revealing to our view Jesus on the cross, bearing our sins in his own body, thus opening a way for our escape. O blessed relief! By grace we are saved, through faith; and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God. Our works and efforts were not reckoned, but in his mercy he lifted us out of the pit where there was no water, and placed our feet upon the rock, Christ Jesus, and put a new song into our mouths, even praise to him.

In fellowship of the Spirit, I subscribe myself unworthily yours,
P. WEST.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MUCH ESTEEMED BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your editorial reply to my text in the SIGNS is short, but very comprehensive. The text was, "For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."—Lam. iii. 33. Your views are altogether satisfactory to me. I much believe you struck the key-note. It has the right ring. What a wonderful blessing is our medium of correspondence! How glad we are to communicate to each other in that way! Dear brother, this is a great pleasure to me, yet I would much rather see you and talk with you face to face—talk of the things which are uppermost in our minds, the good things of the kingdom of our God; which kingdom is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." I have just said, of these good things which are uppermost in our minds. But these good things of the kingdom are not always uppermost in our minds. No, no; but to our sad mortification we often find ourselves with evil things uppermost in our minds; and Paul says to the Roman brethren, "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Rom. viii. 6.

Brother Chick, as to my poor, sinful self I am for the most down in a horrible pit, where there is no standing, where there is no ease nor contentment of mind; and this has been my condition all along the journey of my professed pilgrimage; and the cry goes up from the very depths of my heart, "Lord, are thy mercies clean gone forever?" While down in this dreadful and terrified state of mind we cannot be content; we cannot be satisfied; and though we cannot extricate ourselves, we are constantly struggling to do so; but we are like a man in quick-sand, our struggling only seems to sink us lower and lower; or, in other words, when we make efforts to relieve ourselves from this dreadful state of mind, and effort after effort fails us, the awful stench seems more loathsome, the horror greater, and we are the more terrified, and are caused to cry out of anguish of soul, "Lord, save, I perish." Then we are made to realize that still, small voice, "Peace, be still!" and there is a great calm. Then, and not till then, can we see the hand of the Lord in all this. The Lord dwells in thick darkness, and the darkness and light are both alike unto him. Also, he leads us into darkness as well as into light, and leading us into darkness is for our good and for the glory of God.

Notwithstanding we have been down in a horrible pit so often, we cannot realize that the Lord is with us while we are down in such deep mire; but again, as heretofore, we conclude that God's mercies are gone forever, and our minds revert to times almost innumerable when we were down in a horrible pit and the Lord brought us up, and set our feet upon a rock, and put a new song in our mouth, even praise to his name. I say, notwithstanding all these things in our past experience occur so vividly to our minds, we can see no way of escape now, and we are at our wits' end, and again are caused to cry, "Lord, save, I perish." And the Lord brings us up again, and puts a new song in our mouth, even praise to his name for such a wonderful deliverance, even a joyful surprise to us. Thus we sing as in the days of our youth; sing, "Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy name be all the praise." The Lord brought me up. This phrase has in it the idea clearly that the Lord is with his children even in the horrible pit. "Brought me up." The Lord brings us up; we are passive in the process; poor, helpless, dependent creatures. If we ascend up into heaven, the Lord is there; if we make our bed in hell, behold, he is there; and if we take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost part of the sea, there God's hand leads us, and his right hand guides us. "Lo, I am with you alway." My dear brother, I think I have learned ere this that the way of man is not in himself; that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps; but that the Lord leads us in the way we knew not, and in paths that we have not known; "that all things [unlimited] work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Hence we can realize indeed and in truth that we have been again and again down in the dark and cold valley of sin and unbelief, and in the horrible pit of terror and confusion, where there was no standing, and where we could not rest; but when the Lord, at his own set time, and in his own way, brought us up, and said, "Peace, be still!" there was a great calm. O what joy! How unspeakable and full of glory!

W. J. MAY.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I have just read the glad news of the settlement of the trouble between the Middletown and Warwick Churches, of New York, and the Butler Church, of Georgia, and I shed tears of joy while reading it. I do not know when I have read anything in any of our papers that so filled me with joy. It is also some evidence to me that I am a child of God, else why should I so rejoice in the knowledge of the amicable adjustment of difficulties between brethren so far away? May the Lord be praised. "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his residence in the city of Middletown, N. Y., on Friday noon, Jan. 10th, 1896, Mr. William J. Kellam, in the 57th year of his age. The circumstances attending his death were peculiarly distressing. While explaining the mechanism of a revolver to his daughter, Miss Florine, the weapon slipped from his hand. He grasped it when it was opposite his breast, and in doing so snapped the hammer, discharging a cartridge, which entered his heart, producing almost instant death.

Mr. Kellam was a native of Pennsylvania, but has resided in this city for many years. Of late years he has been traveling salesman for wholesale shoe houses in New York City and Binghamton.

Mr. Kellam was married to Frances C., youngest daughter of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, who, with one daughter, survives him. Mr. Harry W. Tuthill is a stepson of the deceased, being a son of our sister Kellam by a former husband. He is also survived by two brothers and four sisters, and a host of warm friends.

While he had never made a public profession of religion, Mr. Kellam was a lover of God's truth, and for many years has seldom missed an opportunity to listen to the preaching of the word by our ministers, and to the writer confessed that he had a hope in God's salvation. He was a very genial gentleman, and won friends wherever he went. May the God of all comfort support the grief-stricken family and friends in their great bereavement.

The funeral services were held at his late residence on Monday, 13th, and were conducted by the writer; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was deposited in the cemetery of the New Vernon Church.

BENTON JENKINS.

John Glasscock was born August 10th, 1811, in the state of Virginia, and died Nov. 18th, 1895, aged 84 years, 3 months and 8 days.

He with his wife emigrated to Ohio in the year 1852. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Leach, at her parents' home, near Front Royal, Va., August 21st, 1835. To this union were born four sons and five daughters, one son and one daughter having preceded them so the spirit world. They lived happily together sixty years, his wife dying last February. He united with the Primitive Baptist Church more than thirty-five years prior to his death, of which he was a faithful, worthy and beloved member until death removed him from the church militant to the church triumphant. He was an ardent believer in salvation by God's grace only. He leaves to mourn his departure three sons, four daughters, numerous grand and great-grandchildren, with many other relatives and friends. His funeral was largely attended on the 20th at the Methodist meeting-house in Harrisburg, and a discourse delivered on the occasion by Elder G. N. Tusing; after which the remains were interred in the Mount Sterling cemetery, there to rest until the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, when he shall be called up higher, never to sorrow nor to suffer more.

My dear mother, Fidella Chism, departed this life at my home in Perry Co., Ark., Sept. 24th, 1895, in the 75th year of her age.

She was born in Kentucky, July 3d, 1821. Her maiden name was Hindman.

She was married to my father, Wm. T. Stout, Jan. 11th, 1842. She received a good hope through grace in her youthful days, joined the Old School Baptist Church, and was baptized in March, 1845, in Holt Co., Mo. They moved to Dekalb Co., Mo., and united by letter with Bethel Church. On May 3d, 1857, it pleased the dear Lord to call my father home, leaving mother with eight small children, one yet unborn. In February, 1863, she was married to George W. Chism, and became the mother of another child. She was left a widow the second time on Jan. 28th, 1881. She came to live with me in the fall of 1882. She was a great sufferer for many years, but bore all with christian fortitude. She often spoke of her departure, and told me not to grieve for her, as she had a good hope that when she should lay aside this mortal flesh she would be at rest. We miss her greatly, but sorrow not as those who have no hope.

NANCY J. ARMSTRONG.

DIED—At his home in Sussex Co., Del., Charley Edward James, aged 37 years and 18 days.

The subject of this memento was highly esteemed by the brethren of the Broad Creek Church, many of whom had experienced a christian fellowship for him, and were anticipating his formal addition to their number as a visible member. His attendance at our meetings and manifest love of the truth, with his dying testimony, witnessed that he had been with Jesus and learned of him. During his last illness, after rallying from a severe attack, the attending physician—thinking to encourage him, said, "Charley, if you have another similar attack do not be afraid nor alarmed." He replied, saying, "Doctor, I am not afraid nor alarmed. I believe that what is to be will be, and it is right." What more could he say, than to thus express the sentiment of our dear Redeemer in his agony in Gethsemane? "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt."

"It pass'd not, though the stormy wave
Had sunk beneath his tread;
It pass'd not, though to him the grave
Had yielded up its dead.
But there was sent him from on high
A gift of strength for man to die.

"And was the sinless thus beset
With anguish and dismay,
How may we meet our conflict yet
In the dark, narrow way!
Through him, through him, that path who trod;
Save, or we perish, Son of God."

Our deceased friend has left a widow and two interesting sons, aged respectively sixteen and ten years, an aged father, two sisters and five brothers to cherish his memory. Many sorrowing relatives and friends followed him to his funeral and burial at the Broad Creek Baptist meeting-house, where the writer tried to comfort the sorrowing ones in harmony with the words of Paul, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."—1 Thess. iv. 13, 14. We desire to commend the widow and the sons to him who was anointed to preach good tidings unto the meek, bind up the broken-hearted, and comfort all that mourn. Charley was the favorite son of dear old brother Branson James, who, while prostrated with fever, has been bereft of his beloved companion. May he be enabled by grace to say, with David, "Though my heart and my flesh fail, God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever," is the desire of

CORRESPONDENCE.

REPLY TO MR. MCPHEARSON.

[THE following letter was sent us by the writer, brother Roten Hurst, and we think it will be read with interest and profit by the subscribers of the SIGNS.—ED.]

PATTONSVILLE, Va., Oct. 14, 1895.

MR. MCPHEARSON—MY DEAR FRIEND:—I had decided not to answer your letter, but since the association my mind has led me to give a reply. I hope that what I may say you will take in a kind and christian spirit, for if I know my heart I have no desire to wound the feelings of any one. I will not take up your arguments as they come in your article, but I will answer them all before I get through. There is one doctrinal point, if we can decide, that will settle the doctrine of the atonement, and that is, how the new birth is brought about. I quoted several Scriptures bearing on this doctrine in my last letter, and you failed to even try to answer them. The reason is plain. The doctrine of the new birth, independent of any conditions that man can perform, is so plainly taught by Christ and his apostles that man with all his wisdom, learning and philosophy can never refute it. In the first place I will prove that the alien sinner has not the power to yield obedience to the gospel until after being quickened into divine life; and that, when once quickened, God has begun the work of his salvation, and will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. I ask you to read carefully what I may write, and to compare it with the word of God; and if I have not a "Thus saith the Lord" for what I say, receive it not; but if I have, do not let prejudice and tradition move you away from God's eternal truth. Paul says, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." He further says, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Then every unregenerate sinner is dead, and has no knowledge of spiritual things. Now, some kind of change has to take place before he is capable of receiving spiritual things or yielding obedience to the gospel. Can he bring about this change? That is, does man have to perform the first work, or is it brought about by some power foreign to himself? Christ represents this change by a birth, and he certainly uses a correct figure. Has the child any power to bring about its birth? Does a child know anything before it is born into the world? Can a child cry unto its parents for help or mercy until after it is born? Now, Christ compares this natural birth to that change which a sinner has to undergo in order to become a christian. If this parable be true, the man has just as much to do in bringing about the spiritual birth as the natural man had to do in bringing about his natural birth. When we make our eternal salvation conditional, we forever destroy the doctrine of the new birth. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Here the dead sinner is compared to a man naturally dead; for Jesus says, in the same way that God raises a man naturally dead, so he (Christ) raises a man spiritually dead. Is there any life in a man naturally dead? If not, there is no life in a man spiritually dead. Has the man naturally dead any power to impart life to himself? If he has, the dead sinner has power to impart spiritual life unto himself. But Christ says that God gives life to the man naturally dead, and that he quickens or gives life to the dead spiritually.

My second argument is founded on Eph. ii. 1-5, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," &c. "And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." First, the sinner is declared to be dead in sins. Second, God quickens him. Third, Christ is the medium through which he is quickened. "By grace are ye saved." "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him."—John xvii. 2. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. vi. 23. "And you, being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him [Christ], having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us; and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross."—Col. ii. 13, 14. Paul here teaches the same doctrine that he teaches in his letter to the Ephesians, that the sinner is dead, and first has to be quickened into divine life by God, through Jesus Christ. Please do not pass these plain Scriptures by unnoticed, but tell us whether sinners are dead or not in sins. If you say they are, tell us how they are quickened into divine life. You must certainly acknowledge that to quicken is the first thing that takes place in the sinner; and you will further acknowledge that when God quickens a dead sinner he has begun the work of that sinner's salvation. And Paul declares that when God begins the work he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Please let your mind linger around these plain Scriptures, and see if you can find where conditions come in. Let us hear Christ's testimony: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life," &c. Here he plainly teaches that every one that hears his word and believes on God has everlasting life. Two things are required—hearing and believing. In the very next verse Christ designates the very characters who will hear, and live, and believe. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead [sinner] shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."—John v. 25, 26. Notice that here Christ says that every one that hears shall live. There are no conditions either expressed or implied. It is the language of him that spake as never man spake. He says positively that the dead shall hear, and that they that hear shall live. I adduced these same arguments in my last letter, and you failed even to try to answer them. You know as well as I know that they cannot be answered in harmony with your theory. Now let us have your explanation of the new birth, and see if it harmonizes with the Scriptures. You say, "Though the sinner is dead in trespasses and sins, yet he is physically and intellectually alive; and that intellect is of such a nature that it can be educated by the light which is knowledge, together with the Spirit as a witness, to a proper understanding of the contrast between the light and the darkness, life and death, and leave him to a right of choice." You certainly must acknowledge that the unregenerate sinner is not a spiritual man. Then you take up the alien sinner, and cultivate his physical and intellectual powers (for he has no other powers), by educating them to such a degree as to enable him to discern between natural and spiritual things. Please tell me where you find such a doctrine recorded in the Bible. Your theory leaves out the office work of the Spirit altogether. The Bible says that no man can say Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Paul says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." And, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." "The carnal mind is enmity against God." "They that are in the flesh cannot please God." Then, please tell me how you can educate this natural man and carnal mind in spiritual things. You certainly will not claim that a man can be educated in spiritual things until after he is born of the Spirit. It is the new man that receives spiritual instruction. The fruits of the natural mind are adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, &c. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, &c.—Gal. v. 20-22. You quote the words of Joshua to prove your position. Why did you not quote Christ or some of the apostles? Simply because they do not teach any such medley of contradictions. Christ says, "The Son quickeneth whom he will." Paul says, "You hath he quickened." Christ says, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." James says, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." Joshua had no reference to the quickening of the sinner into divine life, or the new birth. The children of Israel, God's chosen people, had become idolatrous, were worshipping false gods, and Joshua exhorts them to serve the Lord; but seeing they still persist in their false worship, he says to them, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell."—Joshua xxiv. 15. Now we see clearly that the choice was between two sets of false gods, and not between the true God and the gods of this world.

You next refer to the case of Nicodemus to prove that the alien sinner can hear the gospel. There are two ways of hearing the gospel. The Scribes and Pharisees could hear in a natural sense, but they could not hear in a spiritual sense until they had received a spiritual mind. Paul heard the gospel prior to the new birth, but still he went on persecuting the church, and thought he was doing God service. Christ, talking to the Jews, said, "Why do ye not understand my speech? Even because ye cannot hear my word."—John viii. 43. "He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God."—Verse 47. Those Jews were not deaf; they heard every word Christ said, in a natural sense; yet they could not understand anything he said. So it was in the case of Nicodemus; he heard Christ's language, but could not understand what he meant by the new birth. "It all seemed a mystery to him. He said, 'How can these things be?' Jesus said to him, 'If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?'" This plainly shows that Nicodemus heard in a natural way, like all the rest of the unregenerate Jews.

You next say that if my theory be true, we cannot change God's decrees; which implies that if your theory be true we can change God's decrees. If we can change God's decrees, we can change God, who says by the prophet, "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." If all his counsels, purposes, designs and pleasure are to be accomplished, how can we change any of his decrees? He says, "I am God, I change not." "The same yesterday, to-day and forever."

You next say that if my doctrine be true we have no use for the Bible, nor for preaching, or anything of the kind. Paul says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. Here we have the use of the Scriptures given in plain language. Is it for the alien sinner, or for the man of God? Paul says, "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." He says the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and not the unbeliever. Peter says, "Feed the flock of God which is among you." Jesus says, "Feed my lambs;" "Feed my sheep." Paul says, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." We see very plainly from these Scriptures that the preaching of the gospel is not to quicken dead sinners into divine life, but to feed the sheep and lambs and collect them into the fold of God. The natural man lives and thrives upon natural food. The spiritual man lives and thrives upon spiritual food. The natural man receives natural food from nature. The spiritual man receives spiritual food through the Spirit and the preaching of the gospel. The same false accusations were urged against the apostles that are urged against the Old, Primitive Baptists of to-day. Paul says, "We be slanderously reported, and some affirm that we say, Let us do evil that good may come: whose damnation is just." The very same arguments that you have brought against my doctrine, Paul in defense of this doctrine says, "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" In further explanation of the plan of salvation by grace, Paul says that God loved Jacob and hated Esau before they were born or had done either good or evil; and then he asks, "Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy."—Rom. ix. Jacob and Esau were evidently representative characters. Jacob represented the elect, and Esau represented the non-elect. Jacob was chosen and elected before he was born, or had done either good or evil. So were all God's people chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began. Did God choose Jacob because he foresaw any goodness in him, or because he foresaw he would yield obedience to his laws? No. Paul says, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." If Paul's explanation of election be true, it forever excludes the doctrine that God elected his people on certain foreseen conditions performed by them.

You next affirm that Jesus says, The reason all are not saved is that they will not come to the light that their deeds may be made manifest. Jesus does not use that language; neither does he convey the idea that you are trying to convey. Jesus tells the unbelievers in almost every discourse that the reason why they do not believe is because they are dead in trespasses and sins. Now let me prove this. Turn to John x. 20: "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep." John viii. 47: "He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God." "Why do ye not understand my speech? Even because ye cannot hear my word."—Verse 43. If they could not understand his speech nor hear his words, how could they come to him? Read the sixth chapter of John. Jesus was there conversing with unbelievers, and the unbelievers were reasoning among themselves as to who he was. Jesus answered them, saying, "Murmur not among yourselves. No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." "But I said unto you, that ye also have seen me, and believe not." Why did they not believe? They had seen Christ, and had conversed with him, and witnessed the miracles performed by him. Christ answers this question by saying, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." This would certainly imply that God had never given all to Christ, and that some of those unbelieving Jews were not included in the eternal covenant of God. Now read John v. 40, and you will find the words you referred to, "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Jesus is addressing the same characters above referred to, and simply means that they did not have a will to come to him; that they were dead in trespasses and sins, and had never been quickened into divine life. They were still carnally minded, and the carnal mind is enmity against God; that is, it hates God, and cannot come to God. Paul says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them; because they are spiritually discerned." Another reason why they did not come is because they loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. So said Jesus. Is the alien sinner a servant of God before he is made free from sin? Does he render obedience to God while he is under sin? Let the word of God answer. "For when ye were the servants of sin ye were free from righteousness."—Rom. vi. 20. When did they become servants to God? "But now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."—Verse 22. How were they made free? "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet [or fit] to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."—Col. i. 12-14. Please notice in the above that it was God who made us meet, or prepared us to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; that it was God who translated us from the power of darkness, into the kingdom of his dear Son. The yielding was not the act of an unregenerate sinner, of his own free will and power, but it was the act of one in whom God had wrought to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

You next quote 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4: "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not," &c. To what class of people does Paul say our gospel is hid? "To them that are lost." Who does Paul say is lost? Those that believe not. Then, if Paul's reasoning be correct, the gospel is hid to all those who have not been quickened into divine life. So we see by a careful reading and analysis that there is not the slightest intimation that those characters ever knew anything about the gospel, because they are represented as lost, and in unbelief, dead in trespasses and sins. Read the next and sixth verse of this same chapter: "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Now ask yourself the question, Where did we receive the light of the knowledge of the glory of God? By anything that we have done or can do? No. Paul says that God shined in our hearts to give us that light. Through what medium does that light come? Paul says, through Jesus Christ. You certainly will not deny that a sinner must have a knowledge of that light before he can be saved; and you certainly cannot deny that after God has shined in a sinner's heart, to give him the knowledge of the glory of God, he will be saved. In the seventh verse Paul assigns the reason why our salvation is all the work of the Lord: "That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." Jesus said, "If I go away I will send the Comforter, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive." Why cannot the world receive him? "Because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him."—John xiv. 17. Now, if the alien sinner neither sees nor knows the Spirit of truth, how is it possible for him to yield obedience to the gospel? Jesus goes on and says, "But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake." The history of the church is written in blood. Thousands have been burned at the stake and tortured to death. "Yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." Why is all this? Why has the church been so persecuted during all the ages of the world? Let Christ answer: "Because they have not known him that sent me." "And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father nor me."—John xv. 21; xvi. 3. And he says in his prayer, "O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee." Many other passages can be produced to prove that the world in its unregenerate state knows not God, neither has any knowledge of spiritual things. You say my theory is that no one can hear the gospel until he is born again; and then, that God teaches him what he must do to obtain what he has already obtained; and then you enumerate what he must do; that "he must be born again;" that "he must believe;" that "he must repent;" that "he must be baptized." Will you please tell me which comes first; the birth or the belief? You certainly will not say that faith or belief comes before the birth. Can a child have faith before it is born? Certainly not. Then the birth takes place first. Faith, repentance, &c., are the fruits of the new birth. Read Gal. v. 22: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith." Then the Spirit has to dwell with you before you can have the fruit. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Then you must be born of the Spirit before you can have the fruit of the Spirit. This new birth brings about a godly sorrow, and this godly sorrow leadeth to repentance. This is not only the order of natural things, but the order of spiritual things.

You next take up the subject of conditions. What is the first condition you produce. Faith. Faith is a condition of salvation, is it? What does Paul say? Faith is "the fruit of the Spirit." "It is the gift of God." He is "the author and finisher of our faith." Do these look like conditions of salvation?

Your next condition is baptism. You certainly cannot claim that baptism is a condition to be performed in order to eternal salvation. Baptism is a duty required of one who is born of God. We are not now discussing conditions to be performed by christians in order to enjoy the blessings of the church of Christ, but whether there be conditions that the unregenerate sinner can perform in order to secure his eternal salvation. Jesus says, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead [sinner] shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." Are there any conditions here? Jesus also says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." Are there any conditions here? The apostle says, "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Are there any conditions here? "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." Show me if there are any conditions here. James says, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." Point out the conditions here. Paul says, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Are there any conditions here? Peter says, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience." Paul says the word of promise or election "is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." Paul says we were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before God in love; that whom God foreknew he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son; and whom he predestinated, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. Please point out the conditions in these passages.

PASSING FROM DEATH UNTO LIFE.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."—1 John iii. 14.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—MUCH BELOVED FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:—It has been a considerable length of time since I have written anything for our highly prized medium of correspondence, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and having been requested by some of its readers to contribute something for its columns, I have concluded to offer a few thoughts on the above portion of holy writ, and send them to you to dispose of as you think best.

John in this short but very comprehensive epistle has treated wonderfully upon the principle of love and the evidences of it. At the sixteenth verse he tells us how it is that we know that God loved us, and says, "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Laying down our lives, in this sixteenth verse, means the same as passing from death unto life, in the fourteenth verse. Notwithstanding all that has been done or said, or could be done or said, we could not know that God loved us if he had not laid down his life for us; and upon the same principle of cause and effect, we do not know that we have passed from death unto life unless we love the brethren, the church; neither do we know that we love the brethren unless we have laid our lives down for them. But if we have laid our lives down for the brethren, the church, it is prima facie evidence that we love them, and also thereby we know that we have passed from death unto life. The phrases, "We know that we have passed from death unto life," and "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren," have reference, I think, to the apostles and ministers of the gospel of Christ down to the present day; hence I shall aim to dwell mostly upon the evidences of those of this our day, as they more immediately concern us. I am well aware that the general idea of this text is, passing through regeneration, being born again, born of God. If this view of the text is right, then we know that we are regenerated and born again; therefore we could walk by sight, and not by faith.

I have tried for years to reconcile this view of the text with my experience, but have never yet been able to do so, neither can I do so now. I never have attained to a state that I could say, I know that I am regenerated and born again, or I know that I am born of God. As much as I can say on this point is, I have a morsel of hope that I am born of God. But the most of the time this morsel of hope seems ready to perish, this little spark just ready to be extinguished; therefore we can only walk by faith, and not by sight, as the Scripture demonstrates.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life." How do we know it? We know it because we love the brethren. Very well; but how do we know that we love the brethren? We know that we love them because we have laid down our lives for them. Not our natural or corporeal lives, for this could do them no good whatever; but we have laid down our lives of accumulation; have denied ourselves of worldly advantages, interests, comforts, &c.; have forsaken father and mother, brothers and sisters, wives and children, houses and lands, for Christ's sake, and for the gospel's sake, because we love the brethren for Jesus' sake. This is the life that we must lay down and pass away from; and when we do this we know that we love the brethren; and when we know that we love the brethren we know that we have passed from death unto life. This view of the text harmonizes with the experience of the servant of God who has laid down his life for Christ's and the gospel's sake; who has forsaken all things, and counted them but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord. The word "passed" denotes action on the part of those who have passed from death unto life, or laid down their lives, and gone on beyond or passed away from it, as the verb "pass" means to go over or beyond, pass away from, &c. Death means separation, the extinction of life, &c. One is the privation of the other.

The Scriptures abundantly demonstrate that the ministers of the gospel of Christ are called of God, counted faithful, putting them into the ministry, and that it is their bounden duty to "let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God," &c. For "no man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke ix. 62. The minister who has his hand to the gospel plough, and at the same time looking back, has not passed from death unto life. He does not know that he loves the brethren, for he has not laid down his life for them, which is the evidence of the fact; and in the absence of such evidence we must know that we do not love the brethren in the sense of this text. Loving the brethren, in this text, means to love them superior to father, mother, wife, children, house and land; so much so that we will forsake them, leave them all behind, count them only a secondary matter in our esteem, and take up the cross daily and follow Jesus. The phrase "looking back" is in the present tense, and denotes a continuation of looking, and shows conclusively that when a servant puts his hand to the plough, or engages in this holy and heavenly calling, and at the same time looking back after the things of the world, he has not passed from death unto life, is not letting the dead bury the dead. Hence while in this disobedient condition he is not fit for the church of God as a ministering servant, and cannot feed and care for the sheep aright. This figure or illustration is taken from the common method of ploughing in our fields. Of what use could a servant be to us in our field, ploughing corn, and looking back all the time? We know he would plough up the corn, and therefore would not be fit to plough in the field. So in the same sense is the minister who is engaged in this sacred calling, and at the same time his heart back in the things of the world. He is abiding in death; for "he that loveth not his brother abideth in death." He has no evidence that he has passed from death unto life. He does not love the brethren, in the sense of this text. He has not laid down his life for them. This special and peculiar love is manifested in laying down or losing this life, in forsaking father and mother, wife and children, &c., by letting the world attend to the things of the world, counting them all death, or but dead things, in a comparative sense; leaving them all behind and passing from them; passing from death unto life. When we have forsaken all these things for the sake of Christ and the gospel, we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren, the church, and esteem them above our chief joy. When contemplating these things I have often thought of what Jesus said to the apostle Peter, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs."—John xxi. 15.

It has often occurred to my mind that if we do not love Christ and the gospel more than these things we will not feed the lambs or flock of God very well. They will have dry and scanty pasturage; not much wholesome gospel food. We may love Christ, and have some love for the gospel of Christ, and yet not pass from death unto life; not forsake all these things for Christ's sake and for the gospel's sake. Again, Jesus says, in reference to the same class of characters under consideration in the text, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man [preacher] profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul [life]? or what shall a

REVELATION XXI. 9.

BROTHER J. S. Burns of Booneville, Miss., some time since requested some thoughts from us upon the last clause of Revelation xxi. 9, which reads as follows, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife."

We desire to say at the beginning that we cannot attempt to fully respond to this request; that is, we cannot begin to tell all that belongs to this bride of Jesus of excellency and glory and grace. It was certainly a wonderful vision which was vouchsafed to John. It was a vision of a glory and beauty transcending all that is earthly and mortal. There are two or three things to which we may call a brief attention.

It was a vision of the church of God as she was to be made manifest on earth in all the ages of the gospel dispensation. As the bridegroom had never been manifest on earth as he was now to be made manifest, so was it true of the bride. John the Baptist had before spoken of Jesus as the bridegroom, and of himself as the friend of the bridegroom; and in the gospels Jesus thus speaks of himself, or is thus spoken of, more than twenty times. In all these places the bride is spoken of, meaning the redeemed people of God whom he has bought with his blood, and adorned for himself with his own spotless robe of righteousness. These are all figurative expressions employed to set forth the love which he bears to his elect, and the closeness of the tie which unites him to his living and believing people here on earth. What a wonder, surpassing all wonders, is it that poor sinners, all defiled with sin, and lying in their blood exposed to the vengeance of God, should be washed from their sins, and clothed in spotless robes of righteousness, and should be presented unto Jesus as his bride. Who can measure what it is to be raised from the deeps of sin to the heights of holiness and heaven? She is the bride, the Lamb's wife, with all that this means.

Some things are said of her in this connection to which we will briefly refer. She is compared to a holy city. She is called (verse 2) the holy city, and the holy Jerusalem. This is in contrast with the literal Jerusalem which then was. Its inhabitants called it the holy city. It had been called by that name in the former legal, typical dispensation; but it was only ceremonially so. The outward forms of sanctity were there, but the true life of holiness had departed. Of true spiritual holiness it knew nothing. A man could be a citizen of that city, and yet not know anything about the love and fear of God in the heart; but not so with this city. Here men dwelt who worshiped God in spirit and in truth. It was the holy city because God dwelt there, and because he dwells in the heart of all her inhabitants. When Jehovah appeared to Moses in the burning bush the place was holy ground, because, and only because, God dwelt and revealed himself there. In like manner the church of redeemed sinners are in and of themselves possessed of no more holiness than other men. They are holy simply because God dwells with them.

This church is called "the new Jerusalem." The old was to pass away. The heaven and earth were to be shaken. Some things must be removed. Only that which could not be shaken could remain; and in harmony with all this Paul testifies, "He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second." The new Jerusalem was not to be like the old. Jesus did not come to re-establish and infuse life into the old dead forms, nor to build up the old Jewish theocracy. He came to reveal a better covenant, founded upon better promises. He came to establish a spiritual church, made up of spiritual men and women, chosen out from the mass of mankind from all eternity. Such a people, such an organization, based upon such principles, had never been seen on earth before; therefore it is called "the new Jerusalem."

It is from God, out of heaven. There was nothing in earth nor in the fallen nature of man that could originate such a city. It is not earthly in its origin, its nature, nor in its fruits. Let us bear in mind that this is all figurative language, and that by this holy Jerusalem is meant the manifestation of Jesus Christ with every heavenly and holy principle in the hearts and lives of men on earth. The prophet said that Jesus Christ should grow up before the Lord "as a root out of a dry ground." There was nothing in the ground to cause such a root to grow. The ground was dry. If Jesus Christ dwells and grows up in any sinner's heart to-day it is a miracle from heaven. He is still growing as a root out of ground that is very dry. All that is heavenly in us is from above. God has given it from heaven. All that enables us to cry "Abba, Father," all that brings us near to God as his children, is from above. "Ye must be born again" (margin, from above). How wonderful, that by Christ's own indwelling we should come to live in this holy city! As he dwells within us, we dwell in this city of God, and are counted a holy nation. The nations of the saved enter its gates and walk in the light of it. If we ask wherein are the redeemed people of God different from other men, we can only answer that it is in the fact that they are brought nigh to God, and dwell in the city of God. They abide with him because he abides with them. God is the author and giver of all that is spiritual, heavenly and excellent in them. It is all expressed in the words, "from God, out of heaven;" and sinners receive this city, and it receives them, and they dwell in it, and it dwells in them.

It has the glory of God. God manifests his power, his justice, his goodness, his mercy, his love here. In this church the spiritual mind beholds his stately goings forth, which are from everlasting to everlasting; and the church, which bears his glory, is not some unthinkable and intangible thing. It is just the whole body of redeemed sinners; and each separate and special redeemed sinner has the glory of God in himself or herself. The glory of God thus made manifest does not consist in great learning, nor in wisdom, nor in human powers of reason, nor in riches, nor in human praise, nor in earthly greatness of any sort, nor in numbers, nor in fine temples, nor in beautiful music and ornate forms, nor in eloquent preaching. None of these things manifest the glory of God. His glory appears in the faith, hope, love, trust, meekness, fear, spirituality and obedience which straightway spring up wherever his presence is felt; for his presence is like the gentle rain and dew that nourish every heavenly plant. These things constitute the glory of God, which every believer has, but which reveal no glory to the world. This city has not the glory of the world, but she has the glory of God.

This city also has light like a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. How striking is the testimony here to the truth that her light is but a reflection of the divine light. A precious stone, like jasper, has no light in itself. It cannot shine in the darkness. A light must shine upon it from without, and then it has light. The light of this city is like that.

It has a wall also, great and high. Thus the defense of every believer is set forth. We must never forget that this city of God, this bride of Christ, embraces individuals who are saved. It is of and for each believing, hoping, fearing, doubting child of God, individually considered, that we desire to write. There is no such thing as a church of God separate or aside from redeemed sinners. If there is, it is no concern of ours, and we need not concern ourselves about it; and so we rejoice that there is a wall great and high around such poor sinners as we and our brethren are. Nothing evil or harmful, or that can defile, shall ever enter within this wall. The redeemed dwell in safety there. This is all here on earth.

We dwell in safety here and now; not so happy as we shall be in heaven, but just as safe.

How must the love of Jesus swell toward his chosen ones to call them by such endearing names! The bride, the Lamb's wife! Well might Paul triumphantly ask, "Who shall separate us from the love of God?" The glory of it and the comfort of it and the wonder of it is that he loved sinners, and died for sinners, and brings sinners home, and is not ashamed to call sinners his brethren. This is our hope, and in it we have rejoiced for many years.

1 TIMOTHY V. 8.

OUR brother, J. F. Dale, of Navajo, Oklahoma, has requested our views of the language of Paul in 1 Timothy v. 8, which reads thus, "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

There seems to us no need of commenting upon the connection of this text, further than to say that Paul is here directing Timothy concerning the care of aged, helpless, dependent and worthy widows by the church; and that while he enforces this as the duty of the church, he yet carefully guards the church from being imposed upon by the unworthy, or by those who have other means of support. Those widows who are to be supported at the expense of the church were to be such as had commended themselves to the church by humble, devoted, christian lives, and for whom the church would therefore bear a strong affection. They were to be such indeed as all would feel it to be both a duty and a privilege to assist.

But Paul also teaches in the verse to which our brother has called attention, and also again in verse sixteen, that even the most worthy are not to be a public charge upon the church if they have children or nephews who can care for them; and in verses eight and sixteen he makes known the duty of each one to provide for his own kindred, and especially those of his own household. These children or nephews to whom Paul refers, and upon whom he lays this injunction, must have been believers and members of the church, because if they were not Paul could have had no authority to enforce his admonition here given. If any widow had been thrown upon public charity by children who were heathen, they would certainly be laid upon the heart of the church with twofold care.

Now, Paul says that if any professed disciple of Jesus refuses to provide for his own, and especially those of his immediate household, he has denied the faith. Paul means, as it seems to us, that a man's conduct counts for more than his profession. He may make loud profession of his faith in the gospel of Christ, but to neglect those whom

God has in his providence laid upon him to care for is to deny the faith. If the real faith of God be in a man's heart, it will make him very careful to fulfill every just obligation as far as he possibly can. If he refuses or neglects to do so, he declares either that he is not himself a true believer, or else that the faith which he professes does not require this at his hands. In either case he has denied the faith. We surely need not quote or refer to the Scriptures which enforce upon believers the duty of fulfilling all their natural obligations toward all classes of men.

Now, any professed disciple of Jesus who has taken the yoke of Christ upon him, and yet refuses to do what Christ has enjoined, Paul says is worse than an infidel. It seems to us that this is true for two reasons. First, even infidels acknowledge the obligation in nature of sons to care for the aged parents who gave them birth, and to whom they owe more than they can by any possibility ever repay; and for a professed christian to seek to avoid these obligations argues that he is far worse than an infidel. If any religion teaches that a child may cease to provide for his aged parents, whether father or mother, it is worse than open infidelity. Second, such a one is worse than an infidel because he professes better things, and by his conduct scandalizes the holy religion which he professes; and this is worse than avowed infidelity.

Nothing can absolve children from the obligation of loving and caring for their parents. By reason of old age they may become not only infirm, and needy of unremitting care, but also fretful, peevish and exacting, and even ungrateful; but all this the child is bound to endure, and to minister gently, cheerfully and gladly to their many wants as far as it is possible to do so. If a professed christian refuses to do this he has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

THE LORD'S TEACHING.

"AND all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."—Isaiah liv. 13.

The sweetness of this promise can only be fully realized by God's children who have been made to feel their need of that wisdom which none but the omnipotent Lord of life and glory can bestow. When perplexities, doubts and fears have distracted the mind and troubled the heart of the child of grace, when the enemy torments him with the suggestion which his own conscious unworthiness renders plausible, that although the power and goodness of God are equal to the work of saving the vilest of sinners, yet his daily walk and conversation give evidence that the application of that salvation has never been made to his case, then with what strong consolation does the Spirit, the promised Comforter, apply the support contained in this passage to strengthen and support his tried and troubled soul.

Those whose religion is something of their own manufacture, and whose dependence is on pleasing a fickle and ever changing god of their own imagination, may well heap to themselves teachers to whom to look for information of the various changes in his mind in regard to what will please and what displease him. Is it strange that while they worship such a god as they describe, "altogether such a one as themselves," they resort to every manner of means to endeavor to please him? Hence, the only salvation they know anything about is such as they describe, "Perform certain acts and grow in favor in the sight of God." This comprises the substance of all false systems of religion from avowed paganism to the doctrine of salvation by the use of means as held by those professing to be moderate Predestinarian Baptists, or, in other words, general atonement Baptists. There are but the two principles abroad on the earth—truth and error. "He that is not for us is against us."

While carnal nature in all its depravity is a fair illustration of the teaching of men and its consequent results, the very reverse of these effects is experienced by every heaven-born soul. They all have great peace; not indeed peace with the world and their own corrupt natures, but the peace of God which passeth understanding. Though the children of Zion in this world meet with trials in the form of disagreement on certain points among themselves, this peace is not interrupted; for these differences are occasioned by the corruptions of their old natures, the lusts of which remain for the trial of their faith.

The children of Zion being all taught of the Lord, know very well that it is vain to trust in man whose breath is in his nostrils; consequently they are obliged to bear testimony to the futility and utter inefficiency of all institutions of man's invention for the salvation of any of the human family. The necessary and unavoidable consequence of the popular system of manufacturing teachers in the schools of men is that there will be as many different doctrines as there are different teachers in the schools, and the confusion will be such as prevailed at the dispersion of the Babel builders of old. But not so with the church of the Redeemer; to her is the promise sure, notwithstanding all the efforts of men and devils to the contrary; and as her children have no need of any teachers other than God, therefore they are all taught alike, and great is the peace of her children.

man [preacher] give in exchange for his soul?" Or what shall he give in exchange for his life? as the word "soul" in this connection means life, or rather himself. What would a minister who has lost his usefulness give in exchange for himself, or for his life and standing among the brethren?—See Luke ix. 25. Hence we must lose our lives in these things, which are death in their nature, and pass from them, in order to find life and spiritual enjoyment, peace and tranquility of mind, in the glorious things of Christ and the gospel, in order to feed the lambs, that they may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, in the doctrine of Christ; for Paul says, "But if our gospel [doctrine] be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."—2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. This text gives us the idea clearly that there are some preachers who do not understand the doctrine of Christ and the apostles. It is hid from them. The cares of this world have blinded their minds. Hence they are in darkness and death, and have not passed from death unto life. The text is plain, that "we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

"Love is strong as death," and death means separation. Therefore this peculiar love separates us from all these things, unto the gospel of Christ. But those who do not love the brethren, the church and the cause of God, more than all these things, "abideth in death." The god of this world, or the cares of this world, have blinded their minds, and they are in darkness and death, in a doctrinal sense; both blind and dead to the doctrine and the love of it. And many of them are not only dead to the doctrine and the love of it, but dead also to those who preach the gospel, or doctrine of God. In the fifth verse Paul says, "For we preach not ourselves, but [we preach] Christ Jesus the Lord." Who does Paul have reference to that preach not themselves, but Christ, and preach themselves the servants of the brethren for Jesus' sake? Doubtless he means those to whom the doctrine of Christ is not hid; those that this glorious light or life hath shined unto. They have lost their lives in the things of this world, but have found them in the wonderful things of Christ and the gospel; have been found a hundred fold, including fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters, &c. This glorious light hath shined unto them. Hence they know the doctrine, and therefore they preach it in the face of all opposition; not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. All these have passed from death unto life, from darkness unto light. Therefore they do not, neither can they, preach themselves, but they preach Christ the way, the truth and the life, and the only name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved. Now the phrase, "We preach not ourselves," has in it the idea clearly that there are some who preach themselves, and do not preach Christ; and it seems clear to my mind that they are those to whom the gospel is hid, or those to whom the doctrine is hid. This glorious light or life of Christ, who is the image of God, hath not shined unto them; therefore they are in darkness and death, in a doctrinal sense, ignorant of Christ and his righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness. But the text says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life;" and the reason we know that we have passed from death unto life is, we know we love the brethren; and the reason we know we love the brethren is, we know we have laid down our lives for them; have denied ourselves of those things which others enjoy, and have taken up the cross daily, and are following Jesus through evil as well as good report. Then John would say to all who have thus passed from death unto life, who have lost their life in all these things for Christ's sake and the gospel's sake; I say, John would say to all such, "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." If ye were of the world, and preached the doctrine of the world, the world would both love and hear you. My brethren, let us not love in word and tongue, but in deed and in truth.

PORTLAND, Ind., Nov. 3, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BROTHERS:—In the SIGNS of Oct. 30th, 1895, you request others to write on Matt. x. 34, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." I am a weak one, and ought not to set myself up as a teacher; but my mind had, for some time, previous to reading your views, been drawn to the same Scripture. In the writings of all four of the evangelists we find the same subject referred to. The verses following the text read, "For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." The Savior instructed his twelve disciples that he had given them power over the unclean spirits to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness. Thus we see, from the office to be filled by these disciples, that they were to embark upon a mission that was certain to meet with strong opposition. They were to proclaim a system adverse to every thing then known, and consequently would result in conflicts, even from those of their own people, and possibly their own households. He tells them, "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me." So we infer that these disciples were to expect opposition in declaring the truth. In John ix. 39 we hear Jesus saying, "For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see, and that they which see might be made blind." Again, in John xv. 22, Jesus said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin." Many other Scriptures of like import might be adduced to further prove the meaning of the text, which would only lengthen the testimony. It is plain that Christ spake against the Jews; for in the beginning of the chapter containing the text Jesus instructed his disciples to "go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." It is here to be observed that Paul said to the Jews, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us." "And when the Gentiles heard this they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord. And as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." It is also to be observed that Jesus said, "The first shall be last, and the last first." Ishmael and Esau were types of the Jews. At the coming of Christ the gospel should first be preached to the Jews, that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand. It was a foregone conclusion, according to Christ's own words, that Jerusalem was to be destroyed by the Romans, as he said to his disciples, when they showed him the beautiful stones of the temple, the time should come when not one stone of that temple should be left upon another, and that before that generation should pass away. He also told them that when they should see the adomation of desolation, spoken of by Daniel, standing where it ought not, then they should know that the time was at hand, and for them to flee unto the mountains.

From what I have observed the text has direct reference to the destruction of the Jews. The disciples were first sent to them. Christ first spoke to them. It was already a prophetic decree that Christ should be crucified by the very people he came and spoke to. Christ told his disciples they should suffer all manner of abuse at the hands of the Jews. It was decreed that this people should crucify the Lord of glory, and persecute his disciples; yet it was God's purpose that Christ and the apostles should go and cry unto this people. But why? it is often asked. "That seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand." If Christ had not spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin. God gave them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and hearts that they should not understand, lest they should believe, and be converted, and he should heal them. This is the fulfillment of the prophecy wherein God told the Jews, "Behold, I work a work in your day, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." The Jews fulfilled the Scriptures in denying Christ. It may seem to some a mystery that God purposed to send Christ and his disciples to speak unto the Jews, when it was certain that they would not hear. But this is most certainly true. God sent Ezekiel and Jeremiah to cry unto the Jews the sure judgements he would send upon them by Nebuchadnezzar if they did not turn from their wicked ways; yet God told both these prophets that Israel would not hear them; but that was no excuse for these prophets to withhold. These prophets delivered their own souls by obeying God in declaring his sure judgments. The Lord said of Paul, "I will shew him what great things he must suffer for my sake." Paul and all the apostles delivered their own souls by obeying the Lord. So Christ at his coming cried unto a people that were blinded to the truth. The time had come that the Jews, which were the natural branches, were to be broken off, that the Gentiles might be grafted in. It has often occurred to my mind that as this was the sole cause of God casting away the Jews, that the Gentiles might be grafted in, therefore we ought to be ready to accept what Christ said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin." Also, "That seeing they might not see." Here we see the meaning of the text, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." This was spoken against the Jews, whose city and kingdom were now about to be destroyed and broken off, that the Gentiles might be grafted in.

It is often asked, "If these things happened according to God's decrees, for what purpose was the law given?" But Paul says, "Is the law against the promise? God forbid." God had declared the certain destruction of Israel, and at the same time sent them commandments; but the decree was certain. God sent Moses and Aaron unto Pharaoh, to command him to let Israel go; yet God had decreed the destruction of Pharaoh's host four hundred years prior to it; so the pleading of Moses and Aaron with Pharaoh was not against the foretold destruction of Pharaoh; but Moses and Aaron delivered their souls by obeying the Lord. The long-suffering of God waited in the building of the ark, while Noah preached warnings unto the old world; yet those warnings did not stop the building of the ark. The entreaties of Noah were not against the promise. So Christ coming and speaking to the Jews, warning them, was not against what he had promised. God gave them the spirit of slumber, that they should not hear, and that seeing they might not see.

In love,

NEWTON PETERS.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Dec. 12, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:— Among the old subscribers I send the remittance of dear sister Matilda West. She is ninety-three years old, and has been trying to follow the footsteps of the blessed Savior for seventy-seven years. I love to visit her, for she always has a new experience. This time she said:

"One morning when the sun shone brightly, and all nature looked smiling and peaceful, I felt cast down and restless; God seemed so far away; all his billows rose high above my head; time seemed tedious; I longed to fly away and be at rest. In the afternoon of the same day I saw a dark cloud arising in the west, such clouds as indicate a storm. My thoughts were turned from my own sinful self to the great and all-wise Sovereign who alone can make the clouds and spread them over the sky; and he can place a rainbow in the clouds, a token of his amazing love and mercy. When the boisterous wind arose I thought of how God rides upon the tempest, and holds the wind in his fist. In the midst of the hurricane I felt his presence. His power and majesty were very great. He spake peace to my soul and there was a great calm. In a few hours what a great change in my feelings! Who but God could bring light in darkness?"

"In darkest clouds, if he appear,
My dawning is begun;
He is my soul's sweet morning star,
And he my rising sun."

I asked her for her first experience, and this is what she told me:

"When I was a child, nine or ten years old, one of my mother's brothers came to visit us, who was a Baptist and a good singer. I loved to hear him talk on the subject of religion, and once when he was singing, 'What wondrous love is this,' &c., I felt very sorrowful. When he came to the words, 'Christ laid aside his crown for my soul,' I cried and wondered if it were possible he suffered and died for my sins. I felt I was the worst sinner in the world. I thought my parents could not love me as they did the rest of the children. I often went to a lonely spot on my father's farm to try and pray, but dared not speak one word aloud. I remember once going into the smoke-house to go upon my knees and beg for mercy; but I could only cry. In the fall, in the hazy autumn days, everything looked gloomy and all nature seemed mourning for my cruel sins. When Baptist people came to my father's house I would go into the next room, and leave the door open, and sit near the crack, and listen to their talk. I loved those people; they seemed holy and good. I longed to be like them, but O how sinful and helpless I felt! I dreamed one dream over and over again for many nights. In my dream I would start on a journey, and would come to a very high, steep hill, and I would toil and labor to climb this hill. I would catch hold of roots and shrubs, and they would give way, and I would catch my hands in the sand and dirt. Sometimes I would waken without reaching the top; but I did get to the top of the hill, and there I saw a most beautiful place and many people who seemed very happy; but I could not mingle with them nor speak to them. One time I went to a Baptist meeting in a log school-house; the house was much crowded, and they put several of us small girls upon a desk made by driving pegs into the logs and placing a plank on it. The preacher had for his text blind Bartimeus sitting by the wayside. He told my feelings so well, I wondered how he knew them, for I had never told any one. I cried so I was ashamed and wished I was down from my lofty seat. Thus time passed along until I was almost grown. One night I dreamed I saw the Savior coming in a cloud. As he approached he seemed very beautiful and shining. I awoke trembling with joy, when these words came into my mind,

'This earth will soon dissolve like snow,
The sun forbear to shine;
But God, who calls me here below,
Will be forever mine.'

When I arose in the morning I felt as light as a feather, my burden was gone, and everything was peaceful. I wanted to tell my mother, but waited to have her alone. I slipped the hymn book and went alone, to find it full of new, beautiful hymns. When I came to the hymn, 'Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!' I said, 'That is just what I wanted to say.' The pastor of my parents' church came to our house to stay all night. I went into the room to carry something, and he said, 'Daughter, you have something to tell me,' and before I knew I was telling him what a change there was in my feelings. He told me to tell it to the church. I was astonished, and said that I surely could not be fit to live with those good people. I was much exercised about the matter, and promised myself that if any one should go forward to the church I would follow. The Lord opened the way, and a woman told her experience, and I followed, and was received, and baptized the next day in Ohio. Then I was almost sixteen years old. How long I have been a member, such a poor, unprofitable servant! If a saint, I must be the least of all. How many seasons of joy and sorrow I have passed through! How often I have had to ask the Lord to help me just this once! My race is almost run, and if I reach that blissful home I am sure I will join in the song, 'Alleluia! Salvation and glory and honor and power unto the Lord our God!' I think alleluia is a very sweet word, and it often comes to me to cheer my loneliness."

May the Lord give the dear old sister patience to wait all his appointed time, and may she keep in remembrance what Paul says, "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

"The time of love will come,
When we shall clearly see,
Not only that he shed his blood,
But each shall say, For me."

Yours affectionately, LINA W. BECK.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am now in my eighty-fourth year, so this may be my last remittance to the SIGNS. I do not remember when I first began to send, but it is a long time ago. I still enjoy reading in the SIGNS the writings of the different brethren and sisters; yes, it does me good to read their letters, and they are a great comfort to me in my declining years. My only hope is salvation by grace, and not of works; for I still feel myself to be a poor, sinful creature.

Yours in love,
JOHN MOULDS, SR.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

FOR the first few numbers of this volume we run extra copies, so that all new subscribers may be supplied with the first numbers, and their subscription commenced with the first of this volume, as long as the back numbers last.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR highly esteemed sister, Lucy Bishop, died at the residence of her son, Hopewell Cape, Albert Co., N. B., Nov. 13th, 1895, aged 88 years.

The church here has lost one of her most faithful members. She died as she lived, believing that salvation is alone of the Lord. This, she did always claim, is what is taught both in christian experience and in the Bible. Thus is passed from earth one who, we have the evidence, loved the Lord and his dear people, the Old Baptists.

The writer attended her funeral, and spoke briefly from Revelation xiv. 13. May our God, the God of all grace, comfort those who mourn for the departed.

ALEXANDER BARNETT.

EDGETT'S LANDING, N. B., Jan. 9, 1896

Mrs. Hannah Miller died at the residence of her son, Elder James Miller, Griffin's Corners, Delaware Co., N. Y., Oct. 16th, 1895, in her 90th year.

Her husband, Peter H. Miller, died May 2d, 1862, in his fifty-ninth year. They both united with the Old School Baptist Church at Lexington, Greene Co., N. Y., some thirty-five years ago, where she remained firm in the Old School faith and doctrine. She died in full faith of her Redeemer. I was to see her a short time before her death, and she said, "When my Jesus calls I shall go." She leaves seven children, one sister, who is quite old and feeble, and a large circle of friends and relatives, to mourn their loss; but our loss is her gain.

The funeral was held at Lexington, where Elder John Clark, of Halcottsville, preached a very comforting sermon to a large congregation. Her remains were interred in the Lexington cemetery, by the side of her husband. The choir sang some of her favorite hymns.

MRS. J. P. MILLER.

JEWETT CENTRE, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1896.

AGAIN God has seen fit in his infinite wisdom and mercy to remove another of our loved ones from among us. My niece, Mary L. Green, died at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. P. Meredith, in Petersburg, Del., at 5:45 o'clock a. m., Dec. 28th, 1895.

She was a daughter of sister Sallie R. and Charles W. Green, who were called to their eternal home some time ago, and a granddaughter of the late Peter Meredith and brother Isaac Green. Her disease was rapid consumption, from which she had suffered a great deal since last July, and very intensely during the last week of her sickness. She thought it was all right for her to suffer; for once she said something about feeling so bad, and then said, "But I suppose I ought not complain, for I think it is all right." On Christmas night she told one of her cousins that she wanted to die. During our association last fall she was very miserable, but on Thursday prepared to go out to meeting, but as it began to rain she had to stay at home, although she was much disappointed; but during the preaching at home evenings she seemed to pay strict attention. We never questioned her about her feelings in regard to religious things, but feel assured, I think, from a power on high that God has taken her unto himself. If she had lived until January 4th, 1896, she would have been seventeen years old. She leaves a small sister, her grandmother Meredith, her grandfather Green and wife, and several uncles, aunts and cousins.

Her remains were carried to Bryn Zion, near Kenton, Del., where Elder Rittenhouse spoke to us beautifully from one of the Psalms; then she was laid in the lot with her father, mother, two brothers and two sisters, the last four younger than Mary.

ANNIE MEREDITH.

OUR aunt, Miss Mahala M. Lynn, died Oct. 20th, 1895. About fourteen months before her death she fell on the floor and hurt her left hip and limb, from which she never recovered. All those weary months she could not walk nor lie down, but sat in her chair day and night, yet seldom complained. She was blessed with kind friends, who did all they could for her comfort. She was in her seventy-eighth year. She was baptized about the year 1848 by Elder John Clark, and afterward was received into the fellowship of the Quantico Church, Elder R. C. Leachman serving the church at the time. At the time of her death her membership was with the Mount Zion Church, Loudoun Co., Va. She was a firm believer in the Old School Baptist doctrine.

Elder Badger preached a comforting sermon, after which she was laid in her grave. She leaves two brothers, three sisters and many friends, who firmly believe that she has been taken home where the Lord and his people dwell.

EPPA NORMAN.

WELBOURNE, Va., Jan. 3, 1896.

WITH sadness we chronicle the death of sister Sarah J. Palmer, of Toluca, Marshall Co., Ill., on Sunday night, Dec. 7th, 1895.

Sister Palmer was born Jan. 27th, 1842, married March 29th, 1864, and baptized in the fellowship of Salem Church in 1873. She was a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and always cordial and hospitable to the brethren. Her home was a Baptist home for all who visited the churches in that locality, as the writer can testify, having been a partaker of her kind hospitality. Truly a mother in Israel has departed, leaving a family of five sons to mourn their loss of a kind and loving mother, a good counselor and a faithful guide. The husband passed away nearly three years ago.

I was called upon, and used as a text Psalm lxxiii. 24-26 at her funeral. The family have the sympathy of all who know them. That they may cherish the memory of their mother, and follow in her footsteps, is my desire.

THOMAS BLAKE.

WATERLOO, Iowa.

DEPARTED this life on the morning of Oct. 11th, 1895, Wm. Shockley, at his home near Snow Hill, Md.

His parents were born and raised in Worcester Co., Md. He was also born and raised near this place, in the year 1818, and was about seventy-seven years of age. He was married to Henrietta Townsend in October, 1847. They were baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church called Nassaongo, Oct. 7th, 1865. He had been suffering more than forty years from a disease which caused his death, but was confined to his bed only a little more than one week before his death. He bore his affliction patiently, often saying that he believed that when he left this world his suffering would be ended. Two weeks previous to his death he could go around, but was very weak. He called to my mother, saying that he was soon going to leave her for only a short time, and she would soon go to him. He said that he had been walking in darkness a long time, praying to know and feel that God would not forever hide his face, and he also wanted a brighter evidence that he was a child of God before he came down to death's door. "And as we are commanded to let our light shine," he said, "I want to tell you, I feel it my duty to tell you, that this morning my prayers have been answered. I want to meet you and all my friends in heaven, and all for whom the Lord would that I should pray." He seemed to be happy, and as long as he could talk he said that his mind was dwelling on that glorious theme; that if he only could talk, and had breath to spare, he would tell us how his poor, hungry soul had been filled, and of that everlasting sabbath which God's people would enter into. He was a kind companion, a loving father, and highly esteemed by all who knew him. He leaves his companion and three children to mourn their loss, which we have great cause to believe is his eternal gain.

His remains were laid beside those of his five children who preceded him to the tomb in childhood. We greatly miss him in our home, but may God give us the spirit of reconciliation, and help us to be resigned to his holy will at all times.

GERTRUDE.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—At the request of my father, David L. Reaves, I will ask you to publish the obituary notice of our beloved mother. Her maiden name was Mary Ann Pownall, daughter of Jonathan and Mary Pownall. She was born near Romney, Hampshire Co., Va., Dec. 20th, 1826, and died at eight o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, Dec. 17th, 1895, at the age of 69 years, lacking 3 days.

When about fifteen years of age she removed with her mother and family to Cumberland, Md., her father having died when she was about six years old. In 1854 she removed to Hillsborough, Ohio, there residing until her marriage with David L. Reaves, on Dec. 14th, 1858, since which time they have resided in Bowersville, Ohio. Mother was one of a family of ten children, three sons and seven daughters, all of whom have passed away except one sister, Amanda, wife of Dempsey Overman, now residing near Hillsborough, Ohio. The deceased leaves a husband, four children and five grandchildren to mourn her departure. The children are Mrs. Ella Harness, of Bowersville, Ohio, Edson C. Reaves, of Danville, Ill., Morris C., of Tacoma, Wash., and Jonathan P., of Chicago, Ill.

Her funeral was held on Dec. 19th, and largely attended. Elder Levi Bavis, of Cincinnati, Ohio, spoke to the comfort of the living from 2 Corinthians v. 1: "For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." By request, hymn 68, Beebe's Collection, "God moves in a mysterious way," and hymn 1052, "Jesus, lover of my soul," were sung on the occasion. Interment was made at Bowersville, Ohio.

Mother's father, mother, three brothers and three sisters were members of the Primitive Baptist Church; and while our parents have never been members of any church, they have always been firm believers in the doctrine of that church, and also great lovers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, having taken that paper upwards of forty years.

Very respectfully yours,
MORRIS C. REAVES.
BOWERSVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—It now becomes my painful duty to forward you a notice of the departure of our dear sister, Anna Laytham, which occurred Dec. 6th, 1895.

While I make this attempt, I deeply realize my inability to pay to her the tribute that is due her. Our affectionate sister was favored to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin in early life, and was given a good hope through grace, and soon united with the church of which her father and mother are members. From that time until the day of her death she remained a faithful member. About two years ago her health began to fail, and grave fears were entertained by her friends that her condition might become serious. The best medical aid was had, and all was done by loving relatives and kind friends that could be done. Language fails to express what the loss of such a loving sister is. How sadly we shall miss her sweet and cheerful company. She has left behind her a record of a pure christian life. In the church none surpassed her, for she was a meek and lowly follower of the dear Redeemer, faithful in the discharge of every duty. In the home circle she was everything to the father, mother and sister. God only knows what a vacancy and gloom surround the fireside of a once happy home. The very presence of this dear sister filled the house. As a friend, to know her was but to love her, and her memory will be fondly cherished in the hearts of those who loved her. During her entire sickness, and in the midst of unbearable suffering at times, she never seemed to lose sight of a precious hope, which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast. Many portions of Scripture and familiar hymns were very sweet to her during her sickness. One hymn especially seemed to dwell and rest upon her mind, as she repeated it so many times:

"Weary of earth, myself and sin,
Dear Jesus, set me free,
And to thy glory take me in,
For there I long to be."

With that sweet and calm resignation which God alone can give, she not only expressed herself as perfectly reconciled, but time and again longed to rest in the bosom of his love. A short time before she passed away she kissed all good-by, fully realizing that the end was near, and left a fond farewell to all those whom she loved and who loved her; then quietly and peacefully fell asleep, to awake no more until she awakes in the likeness of her blessed Redeemer. It was the privilege of both brother Lester and myself to sing and pray with her in her last sickness. Can we for a moment doubt that she has but departed to be with Jesus, which is far better? Surely not. Then shall we weep? Yes, we may, but not without hope; for we now believe that she sleeps in Jesus and is infinitely happy. A dear brother, in writing of her, speaks as follows: "When I call to mind the first time I met sister Anna, she was then a magnificent specimen of womanhood, all life, vivacity and sunshine, with every apparent prospect of a long and happy life. I can now hardly realize that she has passed away. This is another forcible object-lesson of the fleetness of life and the certainty of death." Many precious letters of sympathy have been received by this bereaved family.

A short funeral service was conducted by the writer in the presence of a host of friends at the family residence. May the Lord fill her place with his presence, is the desire of one who loved her.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REPLY TO MR. MCPHEARSON.

Now let us examine the new covenant, which God made with his people, and see whether there be conditions in it. "For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."—Heb. viii. 10-12. There is not a single condition in this covenant. Every promise made in this covenant is yea and amen in Christ Jesus. He says, "I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." These promises are as certain to be fulfilled as the word of God is true. "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, As I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand."—Isa. xiv. 24. This is the reason Paul could say, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." After you have answered all the foregoing questions satisfactory to your own mind, you will please tell me what Paul did to bring about his own conversion. Did conditions, means or instrumentalities have any part to play in Paul's case? He was on his way to Damascus to persecute the saints, and thought he was doing God service, when the Lord quickened him into divine life, and he was made to see his lost condition, and cried unto God for mercy. Do not bring in any conditions after he was quickened into divine life. That is not the question. The question is, What did Paul do to bring about this quickening? He says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Paul says salvation is the gift of God. He also says, "The gifts and callings of God are without repentance." The quickening into divine life produces a godly sorrow which leadeth to repentance, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says, "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that he should walk in them."—Eph. ii. 10. Here he says the saints at Ephesus, and all the faithful in Christ Jesus, which includes the whole church of God, were created in Christ Jesus. Who created us? God. In whom did he create us? In Christ Jesus. Then, if God created us in Christ Jesus, did we have any voice in our creation? Certainly not. When did this creation take place? Paul says, addressing the same people, that they were chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world. If we are his workmanship, and were chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, does it not exclude all possibility of conditions? You know that if your conditional theory be true, the alien sinner has to perform the conditions before the creation takes place in Christ Jesus, and you make the conditions the cause of the new birth. Do you not see how foolish and illogical such a theory is? The idea of a person performing conditions before he is born, or in order to be born, is preposterous. That would be the same as to say that a man begets himself. Paul further says that we were created unto good works. Hence the creation is of such a nature as to produce good works. John says, "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Faith is here said to be born of God; but you say it is a condition to be performed by the creature in order to secure his eternal salvation. In Eph. ii. 8 it is said to be the gift of God; and in Gal. v. 22 it is said to be the fruit of the Spirit; and in Heb. xii. 2 Jesus is said to be the author and finisher of our faith. Yet you will still contend that it is a condition to be performed by the creature. If we contend that faith, repentance and baptism are conditions to be performed by the alien sinner to secure his eternal salvation, we inaugurate a system of works by which man can save himself. But Paul says salvation is not of ourselves, but is the gift of God. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us." "If it be of works, it is no more of grace." "If it be of grace, it is no more of works." It is not a mixed concern. I would like for you to tell me what use a sinner can have for the blood of Christ if he can perform all the conditions necessary to his eternal salvation. John says, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." Does not this Scripture set forth the same grand truth, that a man has to be born of God before he can believe that Jesus is the Christ? If I say, Whosoever votes this ticket is a Democrat, was he a Democrat before he voted, or did voting the ticket make him a Democrat? You or any reasonable man would say he was a Democrat before he voted, and that was the reason why he voted it. His voting the ticket was simply an evidence that he was a Democrat. So to believe that Jesus is the Christ does not produce the new birth, but is an evidence that we have been born again. This birth is not of man, nor of the will of man, and cannot be of conditions which man performs. It is not a birth of corruptible seed, it is of the divine nature, of incorruptible seed, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. You say that disobedience to the gospel is the cause of man's condemnation. Then unless a man hears the gospel and disobeys it he is not condemned. If your theory be true it would be better never to preach the gospel to any one, because their failing to obey it causes their eternal condemnation. I stated in my last letter that their fall in Adam brought about this condemnation; now I will prove my position by the Scriptures. In the third chapter of Romans Paul says, "That every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." What is the cause of this guilty, condemned state? Their disobedience to the gospel? Let Paul answer. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Whose disobedience was this that caused death to pass upon all men? You must certainly answer, Adam's, and not our disobedience to the gospel. "For if through the offense of one many be dead." "For the judgment was by one to condemnation." You refer to John iii. 18 to prove your proposition. "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Christ says the believer is not condemned, but the unbeliever is already condemned. Why is the unbeliever condemned? Because his deeds are evil. His not obeying the gospel is simply an evidence of his unbelief or condemnation. God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world. The world was already condemned when he came. Paul says that all God's promises are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. If this Scripture be true, everything that God has promised will be fulfilled. Let us read some of these promises, and examine them carefully, and see if we can find any conditions in them. "He shall save his people from their sins." "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Did he find what he sought? If he did, did he save it? I contend that he found the church, his bride, and he obtained eternal redemption for her. If he did not God's promises are not yea and amen in Christ Jesus. Isaiah says, "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand."—Isa. xiv. 24. Then every thought of the Lord of hosts shall come to pass, and every one of his purposes shall stand. The idea that man can change any of God's decrees by anything that he (man) can do, is a reflection not only upon his wisdom to foresee the final result of all things, but also upon his ability to carry out his will and designs. The angel said of Jesus, "He shall save his people from their sins." Paul says that God sent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law. Do you believe that God accomplished these two purposes? or do you think that Christ only made the way possible for his people to be saved; that he only made provision for their redemption, and then left it to their choice whether they will accept the provision or not? What kind of salvation and redemption would you call the latter? Jesus says, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." Paul says, "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified," "having obtained eternal redemption for us." How could Christ perfect forever them that are sanctified, and obtain eternal redemption for us, and at the same time make salvation conditional, or possible for all men to be saved? It seems to me that the two theories are incompatible with each other. You certainly will not claim that Christ obtained eternal redemption for a part, and made the way of salvation possible for the rest. If he obtained eternal redemption, or perfected forever a single individual by his death, he obtained eternal redemption and perfected forever all his people. He either raised all his people, or he raised none of them. You quote, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," to prove your position. If Christ took away the sin of the whole world, as you contend, how can salvation be conditional? Would not man be pure and holy? Would there be any possibility of any one being lost? If so, Christ died in vain, and failed to take away the sin of the world. We believe that Christ fulfilled in every particular his mission into the world, and that was to "save his people from their sins;" not to make the way possible or conditional, but to actually save them; also, that in the dispensation of the fullness of time he will make his salvation manifest to them. If Jesus by his death only made salvation possible, can it be said in truth that he saved any by his death?

You next comment very lengthily upon the words world and reconciliation. When Christ and his apostles in all their preaching and teaching to the children of men point out the plan of life and salvation so plainly, why is it that you and your colleagues attempt to set up a theory so contradictory to their teachings? If the word "world" in the Scriptures you quote refers to the eternal salvation of all men, universally and indiscriminately, all men, universally and indiscriminately, will be saved; because God has never promised anything but what he has sworn with an oath shall come to pass. John must have seen the fulfillment of all things in his vision on the isle of Patmos. Now read the fifth chapter of Revelation, and see if the four beasts and four and twenty elders believed in a universal atonement. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation." These four beasts and four and twenty elders saw the complete work of man's redemption in Christ Jesus. They do not say, or even intimate, that God redeemed the whole world; but they do say (and we can ask for no better authority), that he redeemed us out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. Now I will ask you, Did Christ redeem the remainder of these nations? If you say he did, you deny the plain word of God. If you say he did not, it defeats your proposition. All Scripture must harmonize. Now, if you will examine the word "world," as used in the Scriptures, you will find that it has a variety of meanings. At one time a decree went forth that all the world should be taxed; meaning only the Roman empire. In another place it is said, "We are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness;" meaning the unregenerate part of the world. Sometimes it refers to the old dispensation. Sometimes it is used to show that salvation is not only to the Jews, but that God has a people among all nations of the earth. In the same sense the words "atonement," "reconciliation" and "propitiation" are often used.—Rev. v. 9. When Christ says he came not to condemn the world, but to save the world, he evidently accomplished his purpose. Then, if Christ had reference to the eternal salvation, all the world will be saved in Christ, if the word "world" is used in its broadest sense; but if used in a limited sense, he only saved the church; which latter harmonizes with all the teachings of Christ and his apostles. There is another sense in which Christ can save the world. He can save it from destruction. He can save it from famine. He can save it from pestilence. He bequeaths to the human race all the blessings of this life. The word world may often be used in this sense.

You next claim that the gospel was preached to every creature under heaven. Paul says it was. Your idea is that the gospel was preached to every individual the world over. Do you think Paul used those words in their broadest sense? You know that when Paul used that language the gospel had not been preached to the one hundredth part of mankind in the world. Why, if a thousand missionaries had traveled day and night they could not in that short space of time have preached the gospel to one-fourth of the men, women and children in the world. So you must see it will not do to take every word in its broadest sense. Paul evidently meant that the gospel had been preached, not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles; or he may have had reference to the day of Pentecost, on which occasion there were so many nations represented.

You next say man is a free moral agent, so far as accepting or rejecting the gospel is concerned. Will you please tell me what kind of an agent a free moral agent is? If a man is an agent how can he be free? What kind of an agent is an unregenerate sinner? Is he an agent for God, or an agent for the devil? Paul says he is an agent for the devil. Read Eph. ii. 2, 3: "Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air," &c. "And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." Here Paul says those Ephesians were governed and controlled by "the prince of the power of the air," or the devil. I would like for you to tell me how an alien sinner could choose to serve God, when his mind, his thoughts and his very nature are averse to God. You may call him a free agent if you wish to, but he is not free to serve God. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them; because they are spiritually discerned." You say that the persuasive means of the gospel upon one hand, and the inducements of sin on the other, are brought to play in the case of every man; that the struggle is with the unregenerate man whom he will serve. It does seem strange to me that any Bible reader can advocate such a theory. It places the whole salvation of man within himself, so he has no use for the blood of Christ; no use for the atonement; in fact, it places the whole matter of salvation upon a system of law or works: if you obey, you are saved; if you disobey, you are lost. You cannot find a single proof text in all the Bible to sustain such a theory. If the struggle is with the unregenerate sinner, how can it be by the grace of God? The grace of God is a free gift. We do not have to struggle to obtain it. You quote Rom. vi. 16 to prove your proposition. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" Whom was Paul addressing in the above language? The alien sinner? No. He was writing to the church at Rome. "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints." Hence we see this language has no reference to regeneration or the new birth, and cannot be brought in as proof of your theory. You say the gospel is a means of converting souls. I proposed to you in my last letter that the gospel is not preached directly to the alien sinner. The sinner must first be quickened into divine life before he can hear the gospel. The gospel is good news to such a sinner; it points out to him Jesus as the Savior of all such quickened sinners. You also say, "The inducements of sin is another means of saving souls." I suppose you mean that by lecturing to the sinner of the horrors and miseries of hell, you will scare him into religion. Please show me where such a theory is found in the sacred Scriptures. Did Christ, Paul or Peter preach such a doctrine? If they did, please point out to me one of their sermons in which it is found. The new covenant says, "They shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." You say, "The Lord has evidently been set forth and crucified; that we did not see it, but upon the reliability of the apostles and witnesses, who did see it, we believe it." If such a theory be true we have no use for regeneration, the new birth, the Spirit's quickening power, but all we have to do is to read the Scriptures and believe them, just as we read any other history and believe it. But John says, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Jesus says, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." Jesus also says, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." You can see the effects of the wind, but cannot tell whence it cometh. So you can see the effect of the new birth, but cannot tell whence it cometh. But if your theory be true you do know whence it cometh, for it cometh from reading the Scriptures and believing them. You still claim that John's language in Rev. xxii. 17 is addressed to the unregenerate sinner. The book of Revelation is addressed to the seven churches in Asia, teaching them their duties and exhorting them to live in gospel order. The Spirit and the bride command all the believing children to come and enjoy all the privileges and blessings of the church. All who are thirsty, who have been quickened into divine life, and who desire to be fed on the sincere milk of the word, or gospel, are told to come to the church. "And whosoever will [not those who have never been quickened into divine life, but those in whom God hath wrought both to will and to do of his good pleasure], let him take the water of life freely." Please show me where the "invitation" is extended to the unregenerate sinner.

You next refer to the book of life. I asked you what that book was whose names were written in it, and when they were written there. You said that book was Jesus Christ, and that all the family in heaven and earth are named in that book. Do you mean the whole human race, or do you mean simply the church of God? Do you think a single one of those whose names were written in that book will ever be lost? But you say I failed to prove that their names were written there from the foundation of the world. If you will read Rev. xvii. 8 you will certainly be convinced that I am right. "And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world." And Paul says the saints were "chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world." In another place he says that grace was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began. Are not these Scriptures sufficient proof to establish the fact that all God's children had their names written in the book of life, or were chosen in Christ before the world began? But you say that number is innumerable and incomprehensible. So it is to our finite minds, but not to the mind of him who has said that the very hairs of our head are numbered. You also say that the number is indefinite—no certain number. When you say that, you limit the wisdom and power of God. The Scriptures plainly teach that God not only foreknew his people, but that all their names were written in the Lamb's book of life from the foundation of the world. Let me quote you one more Scripture on this subject, and I think it will be sufficient: "My substance was not hid from thee when I was made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there were none of them."—Psalm cxxxix. 15, 16. David here represented the church; and the book spoken of, I believe, represents the book of life. Then every member which compose the church or body of Christ had their names written in that book, "when as yet there were none of them." All these things are incomprehensible to the natural mind, but open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Paul says, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Isaiah says that God declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." You say it is God's will that all shall be saved, and God says that all his will and pleasure shall be accomplished. Then if all are not saved, God's purposes and designs have been defeated and his power limited. You say the whole world is reconciled to God. What you mean is, from your arguments, that Christ accomplished only enough in his death to bring man into a savable condition, but actually saved no one. Reconciliation takes place in more than one way. When Jesus Christ was crucified on the tree of the cross he obtained eternal redemption for all his people, and perfected forever them that are sanctified. Peter says we were redeemed "with the precious blood of Christ." "Who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree." "By whose stripes ye were healed." Now, if Jesus Christ redeemed his people from under the law and from all the penalties of sin, did he not reconcile them to God? And if he reconciled them to God by his death, how is it possible for them to be lost? Jesus says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me," and "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him." "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." It does seem to me that these Scriptures point out the characters that Christ reconciled to God by his death and resurrection. Christ emphatically says that he only has power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him; and then he says that all the Father gave him shall come to him. Then we are forced to the conclusion that Christ redeemed and reconciled to God all that his Father gave him, and at the appointed time this redemption and reconciliation will be made manifest to them.

There is another sense in which reconciliation took place. Prior to the advent of the Redeemer the Jews were God's chosen people, or in other words, the only people peculiarly favored by God. When Christ came he broke down the middle wall of partition between the Jews and Gentiles, and reconciled the Gentiles to God. Do not understand me to mean that he redeemed all the Gentile nations, in the sense of securing their eternal salvation, or even making the way possible for each and every one to be saved; but I simply mean that God had a people among the Gentiles as well as among the Jews, and that the Gentiles had now the same right to enjoy the blessings and privileges of the gospel that the Jews had.

There is also a sense in which all things are reconciled to God. Paul says Christ "is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church;" that he reconciled all things to himself, "whether they be things in earth or things in heaven." What I understand Paul to mean is this, that everything God has created, both animate and inanimate, must work in harmony with his eternal purpose and design. There is not anything, from the minutest atom of matter to the grandest body that rolls its ponderous weight through God's universe, but that moves and acts in harmony with God's laws. In this sense all things are reconciled unto God.

You say that Christ redeemed all mankind to a possible salvation. Would not that imply that salvation was not possible before the days of our Redeemer? And if so, do you not cut off the race up to that time? And if salvation was possible and conditional, why did Christ come and suffer the ignominious death of the cross to make salvation possible, when it was already possible? You make salvation depend upon the will of the creature. Peter tells us what kind of a will the alien sinner has. Is it a will to do right, or a will to do wrong? The will is an attribute of the mind; and the carnal mind is enmity against God; hence the will is enmity against God; that is, an unregenerate sinner can never have a will to serve God until such a will is given him in the new birth. I asked you in my last letter whether man's fallen nature was changed by the death of Christ. You said it was not. If your theory be true, how did Christ benefit the human race, if he did not change their depraved nature, or in some way bring them into such a relation to God as to enable them to make choice of eternal salvation? If salvation had always been conditional and possible there would have been no use of a Savior. Please tell me what you mean when you say that Christ redeemed man to a possible salvation. You may analyze that expression as much as you please, but you can never get any meaning out of it. It simply implies that Christ did nothing. Suppose no one had accepted that plan, Christ would have died in vain, and the whole economy of grace would have proved a failure. If there was a possibility of a part not accepting it, then there was a possibility of all not accepting it. You certainly do not believe in such absurdities as these. But you say that he reconciled man to God, and then say that he did not change his fallen nature. How could he reconcile man to God unless he changed him in some way? Suppose two men were to fall out, were to become enemies, could they be reconciled toward each other unless their natures, minds and wills were changed and all hindering causes removed? So it would be impossible for Christ to reconcile the whole human race to God, so as to make salvation conditional and possible, unless he in some way changed their fallen and depraved nature.

Now I am going to close; my letter is already too long. I have written very briefly on the different doctrinal points under consideration. Much more could be said. Please read them carefully and candidly, and see if I have not a "Thus saith the Lord" for what I have written. In answering this letter please take up the arguments and Scriptures that I have adduced, and harmonize them with a universal and conditional salvation. You know God has only one plan of saving souls; that it is either by grace or by works; that it is either conditional or unconditional; that all the Scriptures must harmonize, either the one way or the other. There is no such thing as a collision in the Scriptures. Men very often in discussing Bible subjects simply set up their side of the question and leave the other side unanswered. This brings in contradictions to the Scriptures. We should be very careful about this, and never rest satisfied until we are certain that all the Scriptures harmonize with the theory we advocate. Please pardon me for having this letter published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I do so in order that others may see it and know how I stand on these subjects. I have your letter in my possession; if you or any one think I have misrepresented your doctrine, just call on me and read it for yourselves.

STATE ROAD, Del., Jan. 16, 1896.

BROTHER BEEBE:—After being called to attend four funerals in rapid succession, some reflections rested upon my mind with considerable weight, which I feel a disposition to make the subject of a letter to the SIGNS. It will be sad and gloomy, but I do not just now know how to make it otherwise.

The deceased (the last funeral of the four) was a granddaughter of brother Peter Meredith, deceased. A few years ago I attended the wedding of brother Meredith's daughter, a young woman of much promise, having become a devoted member of the church, and much esteemed by all who knew her. The marriage was supposed to be a suitable and happy one. The children died one after another, until four were gone, and then the father, and soon after the mother, making six in all in quite a brief period. Two children remained, the oldest and youngest. They were immediately taken in charge by sister Meredith, who has since lost her husband, brother Peter Meredith, and her oldest daughter. The oldest one of these grandchildren, her name being Mary Green, is the one whose death I speak of above. She was, I believe, in her seventeenth year. In the bloom of youth, and surrounded with every prospect of earthly happiness, the pale destroyer enters that threshold again, so desolated by oft-repeated visits before. Four children and seven grandchildren, besides the husband and father and the son-in-law, have one after another been taken from that family. In calls like this I feel my weakness and inadequacy more than on any other occasions. If we could ever comprehend the fullness of him who is the resurrection and the life, and who has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, it seems to me desirable on such occasions above all others. I felt to read, as appropriate to the occasion, as well as to my own feelings, a part of the hymn commencing, "Hail, ye sighing sons of sorrow," the first, fourth, sixth, seventh and eighth verses. I suppose I read them as much for myself as I did for this much afflicted family. How many happy families have been broken up! How many faithful and useful members of the churches, and how many loving friends, brethren and sisters, have been called to their final home during the time allotted to me! The church with which I first united then numbered one hundred and twenty members. Of all that number but three are now living, and one of these is in the far west. It is nearly the same with all the churches with which I was then acquainted. Is it any wonder then that I should sometimes feel the sadness and gloom expressed by the poet,

BRIEF ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

BROTHER J. E. Masterson, of Fairbury, Ill., has asked us whether it is scriptural and right for a licentiate to perform the ordinance of baptism. In reply we would say that it would be directly opposite to the order of Baptist Churches, so far as we have ever known; and this order we understand to be scriptural, because we recall no instance in which any were found administering the ordinances of the church in the New Testament record except those who had been duly called and qualified by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. We do not think that any of the churches with whom we are acquainted would receive to their membership any one who had been baptized by a licentiate; and we do not know of any licentiate who would think of doing such a thing.

As to performing a marriage ceremony, concerning which he also inquires, we will say that this is not an ecclesiastical, but purely a civil act, required not by any law of Zion at the hands of a minister, but solely by the law of each state or country where it takes place. No law of Zion would be violated, except the law that bids us obey the powers that be, by a licentiate performing a marriage ceremony; but we presume that the laws of all our states would be broken. Of this, however, we are not sure. If the law of the state allows a man who holds the position of a licentiate to perform the ceremony of marriage, he would then violate no law of God or man.

Brother Masterson also asks if it is right for a woman to be appointed to act as a Clerk in a church. We have known some instances in which there were no male members in the church who were capable of filling such a position. If the records were kept at all in those cases they must have been kept by one of the sisters. We have understood Paul's admonition for the women to keep silence in the church to mean that they are not to assume authority, as he declares elsewhere. We mention this, as our brother refers to it. The admonition to be in silence must not be so understood as to conflict with the directions which Paul elsewhere gives concerning the women who pray or prophesy in the church. He does not forbid them to pray or prophesy, but directs that their heads shall be covered. We do not know of any positive rule in the Scriptures concerning Clerks of churches, from the fact that we do not recall that anything at all is said about the church having a clerk; but our judgment is that it is better for various reasons, where there are suitable male members, that one of them should be chosen to act in that capacity.

MRS. J. L. BLACKBURN, of Chatham, Ontario, desires our views upon the words, "Many are called, but few chosen." In reply we would say that twice at least within the past twenty years we have written as a correspondent for the SIGNS upon that subject, and we do not deem it best to now repeat what we then said about it. We would be glad if any other brother should feel impressed to write upon this subject for sister Blackburn's benefit and that of others. We may just say that the expression referred to was used by the Savior upon two different occasions; once at the close of the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, and again at the close of the parable of the wedding supper. We do not in either case think that what we commonly call the doctrine of election is referred to; neither do we think there is there any reference to the calling of the Lord's people by grace out from the darkness of nature. We have understood that in the first parable the motive of the believer's service is pointed out; and the difference between the people of God as to the motive which actuates them, whether it be to serve self or God, is set forth in these brief words, "Many are called, but few chosen." In the second parable the words seem to us to refer to the behavior of the people of God in his house outwardly; and the difference in their behavior is set forth in the Savior's use of these same words, "Many are called, but few chosen." The words themselves seem to have been a proverb, a common saying, in that time, signifying the difference between faithful and unfaithful servants in their service, and in the spirit of it.

BROTHER G. F. McWharter, of Palmersville, Tenn., has requested an article from our pen upon Philippians iv. 13, in connection with which he has proposed several questions. The text reads, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." We desire to say, in the first place, that the term "all things" in this text, as well as almost everywhere else, is limited in its meaning. Paul does not mean that through Christ strengthening him he can create a world, or save his soul, or the souls of others; but, as the connection shows, he meant that he could be abased or he could abound, he could be full and he could be hungry, he could have abundance or he could suffer want. All this he could not endure or be reconciled to of himself, but he could bear it all through Christ, who strengthened him. Thus he could endure crosses of all kinds cheerfully and uncomplainingly, and still be steadfast, though he knew that such things always awaited him. If it were asked, Why does not Paul falter and turn back before such great difficulties? here is the only sufficient answer, "Through Christ which strengtheneth me." This is, in brief, what we understand to be the theme of the apostle in these words and their connection.

We will now turn to some of our brother's questions. First "Is there any difference between saying, 'I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me,' and saying, 'Christ can do all things through me?'" We see this one difference at least. The first is just what Paul said; the second, so far as we now recall, is nowhere said in the Scriptures. We do not mean to imply by this that the last way of speaking would be false within proper limits, but at least there may be a question about it, which cannot be the case with the language of the apostle. We should prefer adhering to the scriptural language.

Second. "What is the moving cause of the people of God walking in good works which God has commanded?" We suppose from the general tenor of our brother's letter that by this question is meant, By what strength do they perform these good works? There can be no question concerning this when we carefully examine the word of truth. "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." The text suggested by our brother itself settles this question. Again, it is said by the apostle, "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his own good pleasure." It is true that Christ does work through his people, as the vine bears fruit through the branches; and it is just because this is true that his people can do all things through him.

Third. "Does the Scripture, 'I can do all things,' &c., prove that the Holy Spirit is not the moving cause of the people of God walking in the good works which are commanded in his word?" We see no real difference between this language of Paul and saying that the Holy Spirit is the moving cause of the christian's obedience. Certainly the one expression does not contradict the other. It is by the constant indwelling of the Holy Spirit that Jesus does strengthen his people to do or to suffer his will. We certainly think that if two brethren should enter into a dispute as to whether Jesus or the Holy Spirit is the moving cause of obedience in the people of God, it would be a dispute about words to no profit, which we all should seek to avoid.

Fourth. "Does not the word 'strengtheneth' prove that the people of God need to be strengthened continually to enable them to walk obediently?" It seems to us that there can be no question of this, both from the force of the word itself, and also from the daily experience of each and every child of God. Grace, daily grace, must be given us as we have need. Without the continual supply of grace our faith would fail, and our obedience and endurance would cease at once. We need his presence every moment.

Fifth. "When a child of God wills to walk in the good works of the gospel, is it not an evidence of the present work of the Holy Spirit working in him to that end?" We answer, Does not Paul settle this beyond possibility of denial when he says, "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure?" Left to ourselves, we never will come to Jesus, either as our Savior or our Guide or our King. Our natural will is not to come. If, therefore, we find a will to come, that will must be the product of the working of the Holy Spirit.

We trust that these brief reflections may be of some use to our brother, and to the brethren of whom he spoke in his letter to us. We leave them for the consideration of all who may read. In view of all these precious assurances we can but exclaim, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints!"

GILBERT BEEBE.

JOHN XI 26, 27.

"AND whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die. Believest thou this? She saith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world."

These words are a part of a conversation which took place between our Lord Jesus Christ and Martha, the sister of Lazarus and Mary, immediately preceding the miraculous display of his divine power in the resurrection of Lazarus from the dead. In the foregoing verse Christ had told Martha that, "I am the resurrection and the life." A clear understanding of the import of these words will undoubtedly serve as a key to the passages which follow. There is some sense in which Christ is the resurrection and the life of all who do or ultimately shall live and believe in him. That he is the life of his people is elsewhere in the Scriptures abundantly established. Yet he is not their natural life; for until they were born again they were living without spiritual life and without God in the world. Their natural life is derived from Adam, by ordinary generation, and shall cease at the appointed time according to the sentence, "Thou shalt surely die." Hence the possession of natural life cannot secure the possessors of it from that mortality which is common to all men; nor can it secure to them the immortality contemplated in our text. Lazarus, in our text, is evidently used by our Lord to exemplify the doctrine of our subject. Lazarus had, and should again soon possess a life that is subject to mortality, as a member of the human family; but he also possessed spiritual life, as a member of the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is not only free from mortality, but is absolutely eternal. "I give to them eternal life," &c.—John x. 28. And the only reliable evidence that any of us can have that we are in possession of this eternal life is from its legitimate and unwavering effects, namely: if it be in us, we live and believe in Christ; and if it be not in us, we are dead, and destitute of faith in Christ. This life being eternal and spiritual, cannot be mere Adamic life; for Adam was mortal and natural; besides, if it were derived from Adam, all the children of Adam would be in possession of eternal life; which, of course, is not the case. This life, which Christ claims to be, is not claimed as a mere emanation from him, but as identical with him. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "When Christ, who is your life, shall appear." "For me to live is Christ; and in our text, "I am the resurrection and the life." "Christ liveth in me," &c. Christ then being the life of his people, brings his people, when this life is communicated to them, not only into experimental union, but vital identity with himself; and they are one with him, even as he is one with the Father. The Father is in Christ, and Christ is in the church, and the church is in him; and upon this principle we can see how the Father hath loved the church, even as he hath loved Christ; and he loved him before the foundation of the world.—See John xvii. 23, 24. To our mind the testimony of Christ himself is conclusive, that he did exist before the world was made, not only in his independent, self-existent and eternal Godhead, but also as the head and life of his church; otherwise we cannot perceive how the Father's love to the church could be identical and co-eternal with his love for Christ. We can conceive of no sense in which the saints existed as objects of the eternal Father's love before the foundation of the world, only as their life was then and there treasured up in Christ. And this view is sustained, if we mistake not, by the express declarations, "And this is the record [borne by the three in heaven and the three on earth] that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God."—1 John v. 11-13. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men."—John i. 4. Well may we sing,

"O glorious union, firm and strong!
How great the grace, how sweet the song!

That worms of earth should ever be
One with incarnate deity.

One in the tomb, one when he rose,
One when he triumphed o'er his foes;
One when in heaven he took his seat,
While seraphs sung all hell's defeat!"

Having stated clearly as we could the sense in which we understand that Christ is the life of his church, which is his body, and the fullness of him that filleth all in all, we will next consider him as the resurrection of his church.

In identity of that life which we have been contemplating, Christ stood nearest of kin to the members of his body or church when they became partakers of flesh and blood, and when they had fallen under wrath and condemnation in their Adamic nature as transgressors of the divine law under which Adam and all his posterity were created. Christ himself, by an assumption of the same flesh and blood (see Heb. ii. 14) "was made flesh."—John i. 14. "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham."—Heb. ii. 16. See also Gal. iii. 16, 29, "Wherefore, in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren."—Heb. ii. 17. "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. iv. 4, 5. Christ having thus come in the flesh, and so under the law, as the legal representative and proprietor of his people, and as the head and embodiment of his members, possessed in himself the right, and the exclusive right, to meet, cancel, fulfill and suffer all that the law could demand of him in that relationship to them, so that by his obedience they were made legally righteous, and by his suffering and death the penalty of the divine law under which they were held was borne. When he died for them all, they were all dead. "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," &c.—2 Cor. v. 14-17. From the Scriptures we infer that Christ having been recognized by the law as the legal representative and embodiment of all his members, in his death they all died, and in his resurrection they were all raised up from under the law, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life: for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin; for he that is dead is free from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him, knowing that Christ being raised, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him; for in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God."—Rom. vi. 4-10. "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ."—Eph. ii. 4, 5. "If ye then be risen with Christ." "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 1, 3, 4. "For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."—Gal. ii. 19, 20. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away."—1 Peter i. 3, 4.

We understand the 26th verse, proposed for our consideration, to be a glorious assurance of life and immortality to all the saints of God, predicated upon the glorious basis established in the 25th verse. Christ being himself the resurrection and the life of all his people, it follows that "he that believeth" in Christ, which shall be the case with all for whom he died and arose from the dead, "though he were dead," as was the case of all the redeemed family, "yet shall he live. Death can no longer be a barrier in the way of him who is the resurrection, who has destroyed him that had the power of death, and who holds the keys of hell and death. "Yet shall he live." His living does not depend on the will or ability of the subject of his quickening power, but on God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." This life implanted, and this faith by which this life is made manifest, are the evidences of immortality to all who possess them. As this life is Christ, so this faith is "the faith of the Son of God."—Gal. ii. 20. And as Christ is "the only and blessed potentate, who only hath immortality dwelling in the light, which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, nor can see, to whom be honor and power everlastingly, Amen" (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16), none can have this life or its consequences unless they have Christ. Hence all who have this life and faith have the full assurance that they shall never die. It is true these poor, frail bodies of flesh and blood, these earthly houses, our mortal tabernacles, shall be dissolved and fall, and be laid away in their graves until the time appointed for their resurrection; but even these shall rest in hope, for they shall be eventually raised up in incorruption and immortality at the last day.

"Believest thou this?" This searching interrogatory may be applicable to us as it was to Martha. It is not demanded, Believest thou that, or something, but believest thou this? Do we possess the faith of God's elect? Have we that faith of which he is the author and finisher? Do we live by the faith of the Son of God, who hath loved us and given himself for us? Do we believe that he is the resurrection and the life? Is it the firm conviction of our souls that he alone can give life to the dead—that he alone, without any intermediate agency or instrumentality whatever, quickeneth whomsoever he will? Do we believe that he is himself that power and vitality that raises up poor, helpless sinners from death, from the curse and from the dominion of the law, and makes them sit together in heavenly places? If so, we may with Martha respond, "Yea, Lord; I believe that thou art the Christ," the Anointed Savior, and "the Son of God, which should come into the world;" the same Messiah which was promised, of whom Moses and all the prophets wrote, whom Moses said the Lord God should raise up unto his people, and whom they should hear in all things.

In conclusion, we say to all our readers, May we know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, and be made conformable to his death, is our desire and prayer for his name's sake.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

FOR the first few numbers of this volume we run extra copies, so that all new subscribers may be supplied with the first numbers, and their subscription commenced with the first of this volume, as long as the back numbers last.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Former friends, O how I've sought them,
Just to cheer my drooping mind;
But they're gone, like leaves in autumn,
Driven before a dreary wind.

"Spring and summer, fall and winter,
Each in swift succession roll;
So my friends in death do enter,
Bringing sadness to my soul."

We are sometimes brought to feel the need of finding some consolation for ourselves, and it may be that it is right and proper that it should be so. There are no depths but what some one has fathomed before, and the resources that supplied them with comfort may serve us also in our turn. At this time I had recourse to the experience of the psalmist Asaph and the record thereof. He says he was envious when he saw the prosperity of the wicked; while he was chastened every morning, and plained all the day. He could not understand why bitter waters of affliction should be wrung out to God-fearing people, while the ungodly should prosper in the world, and increase in riches, and have all the earthly comforts that heart could wish. When he thought to know it, why it should be so, it was too painful for him. Relief from all this sorrow and repining was found in the sanctuary. When he went into the sanctuary of God, then he understood that all these events have an end; and when that end is seen, the whole way will appear plain and right. The psalmist found consolation, and found it in the only source from whence it could possibly come. Here, then, he afterward delights to linger; and rising above all his repinings, his faith and hope grow stronger. Henceforth he is entirely taken up with the contemplation of those things that were revealed in the sanctuary. He now recognizes a power that has been with him all the while, upholding and supporting him through every trial. He has proved the divine faithfulness, and the sufficiency of divine grace. He has through it all enjoyed sweet communion with his God, and realized the fulfillment of gracious designs in his behalf. "Whom have I in heaven but thee," or what is there on earth to be desired besides thee? "Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." I know in whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep the objects of his love and care until the decisive day. Here, then, is strong consolation. Though the outward man perish, and my heart and flesh fail and waste away, yet that God who has been my strength and support here will be my portion forever.

"There is a place of hallowed peace
For those with cares oppress'd,
Where sighs and sorrowing tears shall cease,
And all be hushed to rest."

For myself, rather more than for anybody else, I will add a few lines of the poem:

"When a few more years are wasted,
When a few more scenes are o'er,
When a few more griefs are tasted,
I shall fall to rise no more.
Fast my sun of life declining,
Soon will set in endless night;
But my hope, pure and refining,
Rests in future life and light."

Your companion in tribulation,
E. RITTENHOUSE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Dec. 24, 1895.

DEAR SISTER IN THE PRECIOUS SAVIOR:—"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee: the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."—Num. vi. 24-26. I perused your letter with pleasure of soul, feeling as I read each line that fellowship for you as a dear child of God. I am glad, dear sister, that the Holy Spirit has taught you to feel that you are "weak and worthless." Hypocrites do not feel thus. Such an experience in the sight of the Lord belongs only to the dear children of God. Carnal religionists are strong, and in their supposed ability do many wonderful things (works), which make them, they suppose, worthy of blessings in the sight of God; but such is not the experience of those who are taught of the Lord. They confess they are not worthy.—Gen. xxxii. 10; Luke vii. 7. But Christ, the dear Lamb of God, is worthy.—Rev. iv. 11. Those who are led by the Spirit of God are taught how weak they are; too weak to keep the law; so weak that they cannot do the good that they would; too weak to contend, and to overcome the buffetings of Satan's messengers.—2 Cor. xii. 7-10. Their weaknesses are manifold. The Lord's people are daily learning their nothingness. He weakeneth their strength in the way.—Psalm cii. 23. But in all our weaknesses God's strength is made perfect. Our blessed Redeemer and great High Priest knows all our weaknesses.—Heb. ii. 17, 18; iv. 15, 16. Your soul's conscious weakness and unworthiness seal you as manifestly one of the chosen and called of God. "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Cor. i. 26-31. We are weak in ourselves, but Jehovah is our strength and our salvation. By precious faith, which is of the operation of God in our poor hearts, we look unto Jesus, and in him we are strong. The apostle Paul exclaims, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." We also read that by faith in Jehovah out of weakness they were made strong, "waxed valiant in fight, turned to fight the armies of the aliens."—Hebrews xi. 34. Our gracious God "giveth power unto the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength."

"Though weak in myself as a reed,
I'm strong in the grace of my Lord;
Upon his rich dainties I feed,
And walk in the light of his word.

"He covers my head in each storm
While crossing this world's troubled sea;

The whole of his will he'll perform
In saving a sinner like me.

"My nature discloses to view
More vileness than I can declare;
And were not the promises true
I'm sure I should sink in despair.

"But Jesus, my Savior and King,
My constant protection will be;
And led by the Spirit I sing,
He saved a sinner like me."

How good it is to hear you speak of your heart's longings after the sweet and comforting evidences that you are a child of God. Like you, dear sister, my soul craves continually some sweet tokens for good. Upon these tokens my soul lives, and my fainting heart is cheered, so that for a little season I lift up my head, and can pursue my way in the sweet enjoyment of the love of God. Often I look at myself and wonder, Can there be one like me? So often worldly minded, so destitute of spiritual mindedness, so wayward, so sinful, so forgetful of the mercies of our blessed God. I am plagued with temptations and my own vileness; then I am cast down. I sigh and inwardly moan over my wretched, barren state; but with all my sighing there spring up desires to be taken up with divine things. I want to eat and drink my fill of the precious mercies of the Lord so richly treasured up in our Savior. Jesus is all I wish or want. In him, dear sister, we are rich, and abound in all good things, and have need of nothing. You speak of your heart clinging to the precious promises of God, and of finding comfort therein, though your flesh, and Satan the tempter, dare insinuate that as they belong to the children of God, you may possibly be presuming. The saints of ancient times embraced the promises of God.—Heb. xi. 13. Is the blessed truth of God that which you love? Is its proclamation a joyful sound? Then you are one of the blessed, and the truth dwells in you, and shall be with you forever.—Psalm lxxxix. 15; 2 John 2. Does your heart pant for the living waters, for Jehovah's pardoning love, for his justifying righteousness, for Jesus' cleansing blood? Then they are yours, and you are one of the Lord's people; for of Christ and his people it is written, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power."—Psalm cx. 3. Jesus says, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. xxii. 17. The willing ones are the subjects of God's grace.

"Your feeble desires and wishes, though weak,

'Tis Jesus inspires, and bids you still seek;

The Lord, whom thou seekest, will not tarry long.

And to him the weakest is as dear as the strong."

It is the work of the Holy Spirit in your heart that causes you to "feel after" the Lord (Acts xvii. 27); for by nature no man seeketh after God.—Rom. iii. 11. Your heart feels after God, you want to be holy and pure as he is, you long to taste more and more sweet fellowship and communion with the Lord, your heart is set upon the glorious and gracious God, and in some measure your heart's language is, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." God is supreme. What is the meaning of all these aspirations of your soul? They show that you are born of God. "For he that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." It proves that you are loved of God. "We love him, because he first loved us." Your soul reaches forth after the God of salvation; and this reveals the precious and comforting truth that you are an object of Jehovah's everlasting love, and therefore with loving-kindness he hath drawn you.—Jer. xxxi. 3.

"Drawn by such cords we onward move,
Till round his throne we meet,
And captives in the chains of love,
Embrace our Conqueror's feet."

It is comforting to learn that you are exercised in your heart regarding the precious ordinance of baptism, signifying as it does your hope of salvation in the sufferings, death and resurrection of our Savior. My desire to the Lord in your behalf is that the Holy Spirit may lead you into that willing obedience to the law of Christ, and that you may be enabled, not only in baptism, but in all things, to take the dear Redeemer's yoke upon you. "Learn of me [he saith]; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

You will write to me again before long, as my heart is interested in your welfare in the things pertaining to the gospel of Christ.

I am your brother and servant in the gospel,

FRED. W. KEENE.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—There are several things I would like to write about, but do not feel able to do the subject justice, but if you will bear with me a while I will write a few lines about preaching. It is a subject upon which I have been considerably exercised, and have tried in my weakness to preach about it, but still I do not feel satisfied about it. Preaching; what is it? It is not merely talking about Christ and the word of testimony. It is not a mere moral lecture. It is not a declamation for reformatory measures. It is not, in a true evangelical or scriptural sense, discoursing on a religious subject, as our Webster defines the word. He may be correct as to literal preaching, but his meaning is quite latitudinous, broad; for the word of God's testimony refers to three religions—vain religion, the Jews' religion, and pure and unde-filed religion. So in order that we properly understand what preaching is in the true sense, we go to the unerring word of truth, and there we find that true gospel preaching is not merely telling about the gospel and Christ. For Jesus, the great and only true gospel preacher, read in Nazareth, in the synagogue, the prophecy of Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn."—Isaiah lxi. When I was in Babylon, and felt an inclination to preach, and felt my inability to do so, being so ignorant and weak, I was told of a place where I could learn, and I went. I was told they would furnish me with words. I went, and was supplied with words; but they could not impart the main element, which was the Spirit. They knew nothing of that, as I understand it, or they would not be so vain, and think they could supply something that God could not supply. I find that God has always supplied his ministers with words, and the Spirit, too. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God;" not go to a theological seminary. The would-be-wise tell us to go to the seminary. But we know that John the Baptist was endowed with the Spirit, and he found words to express his feelings, and God put words into his mouth, as he did with Jonah, and all his prophets and apostles, Peter, James and John; and as our God is the mighty God, the living and true God, of Daniel and Elijah, he is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. He qualified Paul; for Paul said to his Ephesian brethren, "whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God, given unto me by the effectual working of his power: unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."—Eph. iii. 7, 8. In all God's ways he is God. He calls whom he will, and has a right to do as he will with his own. He who made man's mouth is able to make him speak his word. Clothed with the Spirit, and that Spirit stirred within, we sit and wonder as we realize what John said, "Out of the throne proceeded thunders, and lightnings, and voices;" and we tremble and rejoice as we see the majesty of the Lord in the word of the gospel. He chooses the poor and illiterate, and makes them polished shafts in his hand. Yea, so wonderful is our God that he can thresh a mountain with a worm. Paul said, "Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many mighty, not many noble, are called. God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are."—1 Cor. i. 26-28. This was clearly evinced in the case of Balaam and his beast. The beast was not in a line of human speech and God spoke by him, and forbade the madness of the prophet. I agree with the Texas brother who said he would not serve a god who could not make a preacher of a donkey. And God's true preachers to-day may occupy that place to confound all the wisdom of the so-called learned men of this present day. We are fully assured that the ministry is not like the professions of men which a man may choose, but the choice is of God; for "no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." God fills the mouths of his true servants. He said, "Open wide thy mouth, and I will fill it;" and they having a feeling sense of their own weakness and ignorance and nothingness before God, they cry unto him, and he fills their hearts, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." How often they cry, like Isaiah, after having delivered one message given of God, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God; speak ye comfortably unto Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."—Isa. xl. 1. But afterwards he said, "What shall I cry?" and the voice said to him, cry, "All flesh is grass, and all the glory of man is as the flower of grass;" but "the word of the Lord abideth forever." So God is just in all his ways. The Lord gives the word, and great is the company of them that publish it.

But O how often they are cast down, and feel as though they cannot go any more, until his word becomes as fire shut up in the bones, and they cannot withhold, but must cry out. But Jesus said, "Go," and "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." The presence and power of Jesus emboldens, strengthens and enables them to endure all things for the elect's sake. They feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood. They speak in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, showing that the fruit of the true child of God is not founded in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. O may the Lord give unto all his ministers the spirit of the ministry, that they may preach the truth, the glorious doctrine of our God, and shun not to declare unto them all the counsel of God.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—On the morning of Jan. 13th, at his home in Ralls County, near Hannibal, Mo., Wm. F. Kercheval, aged 84 years.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—By the request of the parents, Mr. J. J. and sister M. E. Mays, I send you the obituary of their daughter, Mrs. Eula Johnston, for publication in the SIGNS.

The subject of this notice was born in Lee Co., Ala., August 18th, 1875, and was married to J. D. Johnston, of Rockford, Coosa Co., Ala., Jan. 3d, 1895, at which place her mortal career ended, Dec. 26th, 1895, and where she was buried, Dec. 27th, short services being held at the grave by Elder Suttles, a Primitive Baptist minister. I first formed Eula's acquaintance some four years since, in Opelika, where she was boarding at the time with her grandparents, Mr. and sister John McCam, and I can say of a truth that to know her was to love her; for she was possessed of such an amiable disposition, and so many noble traits and graces, that she easily won the affection and admiration of all who came in contact with her. She was the eldest of several children. Her parents gave her a liberal education, and she made a successful teacher, in which occupation she was engaged until a few days before her death. Her parents failed to reach her in time to see her pass away; but her uncle (brother Jimmie Allen) was with her in her dying hours, and from him we learn that she talked at some length, saying that she was perfectly happy, and only wished to live long enough for her father and mother to reach her bedside. She had never made a public profession to the church of her faith in Christ, but the evidence she has left behind encourages us to believe that she is at rest. Her mother and almost all her immediate relatives on both sides are Primitive Baptists, and she has left a host of those and other dear friends to mourn her departure. May the Lord reconcile each of them and us to his most gracious will in all things, is our prayer, for Christ's sake.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. J. REDD.

RIVER VIEW, Ala., Jan. 19, 1896.

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 5th, at the residence of her son, Mr. Thomas Errett, near Melbourne, Ontario, Mrs. Letitia Errett fell asleep in Jesus, aged 82 years and 10 months.

She was baptized in 1829, and was among the oldest members of the Covenanted Baptist Church of Ontario. Her husband, who was also a Deacon of the same church, was called from time to his eternal home some thirty-six years ago.

While it is sad to give up our loved ones to know them no more here, there can be no question that they are taken by the same infinite love which gave our gracious Redeemer to die for our salvation from sin; for this cause we should not mourn as those who have no hope. For the comfort of the surviving family, many of whom have received the manifestation of the same hope in the grace of God, through the blood of Jesus, which sustained their parents, their dear mother was enabled to give expression to her joy in knowing that the hour of her departure had arrived. Her physical health was remarkably good up to the month preceding her release, when she was taken with bleeding at the nose, and was conscious that her last sickness had come. With joy she hailed the messenger by whom her Savior called her to his own eternal glory. During her illness she repeated many passages of Scripture and experimental hymns. The Lord thus graciously manifested the fulfillment of his promise to come and receive to himself the subjects of his redeeming love. At the funeral, which was largely attended, Elder Pollard preached to the comfort of the friends from the words, "All flesh is grass," &c.

I will not attempt to recount the many expressions of fellowship and kindness received during my four years' residence near this family in Ontario. No mother could have been more kind to her own son than was the dear departed sister to me. The whole family made me feel that they were my own kindred, and treated me as one of themselves. It is not strange, therefore, that this dispensation seems a personal loss to myself. May the God of all grace console each of the children in their bereavement, and enable them to bow submissively to the will of the Lord in this last separation from their beloved mother; and may each of the relatives and friends be led to the everlasting consolation of that hope which sustained our dear sister through the weary pilgrimage from which she has now been released.

WM. L. BEEBE.

WARWICK, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1896.

DIED—At the residence of her father, in Roxbury, N. Y., Dec. 29th, Miss Angeline Carroll, youngest daughter of Mr. John S. Carroll, aged 22 years.

Everything that human love could prompt or human skill suggest was done to arrest the progress of her disease, typhoid fever, and for many weary weeks the battle between life and death was carried on in her sick room.

A father, brother and two married sisters are all that now survive, and they have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

The funeral services were held at the Second Old School Baptist meeting-house, Roxbury, brother J. Abner Morse speaking words of comfort to the afflicted relatives and friends from Job xxi. 19: "Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me."

SOME QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

"SIRS, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."—Acts xvi. 30, 31.

The apostles did not tell the jailer that he was already saved, but they told him what he must do in order that he might be saved. Are we not taught here that the salvation of the jailer, and therefore of others in like condition, was made conditional upon his own work in believing, and that he was dependent for the knowledge of what to do, and therefore, in some sense, for salvation, upon the teaching of the apostles?

I have expressed in the above form the substance of many questions that have at various times been asked me concerning this subject, not only by my friend referred to in my first article of this series, but by many others.

This interesting incident is not recorded in order to instruct poor sinners as to what questions they shall ask, nor is it to be used for the purpose of persuading people, whether convicted sinners or not, to say and do what the jailer did; nor is it for the purpose of telling the Lord's ministers what to say and what to do, nor as indicating that they should endeavor to induce people to feel and act as the jailer and his household did. The same may be said of the incident of Philip and the eunuch, Peter and the household of Cornelius, the interview between Ananias and Saul of Tarsus, and of every other incident of the kind recorded in the Acts and elsewhere in the New Testament. But such things are recorded for our instruction in the ways of the Lord, to show his sovereign power in bringing all his purposes to pass, in calling his people by grace and making them willing in the day of his power, in giving them knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins, and in preparing and sending forth his servants to preach the gospel to them, and to comfort them; not by telling them of some condition upon the performance of which salvation is offered to them, but by declaring unto them that their warfare is accomplished, that their iniquity is pardoned, for they have received of the Lord's hand (in the bruises and stripes that Christ suffered for them) double for all their sins.—Isa. xl. 1. The Lord works in the same way to-day that he did then, in making alive his people, in teaching and leading them, and in sending forth his laborers, and directing where they shall go and to whom they shall minister. There is no one but the Lord that can tell a truly called servant where he ought to labor, nor even advise him in the matter, only so far as the Lord's hand appears to have been manifested in providence and in the exercises of the one called.

Such incidents as the one we are considering could never instruct a poor sinner when and how to cry, and to call for instruction and help; nor can a minister learn by careful study of them what he should say and do on any occasion. The same God who taught Paul and Silas, and the jailer and his household, must and will teach each one directly by his own Spirit at the time of his need. But the principles presented in this circumstance concerning the jailer, and in all the recorded instances of the kind, will always remain the same in every work of grace, however varied the circumstances attending the case may be. Therefore the exercises of the soul that is brought to a knowledge of sin, and the words and work of the preacher, are to be tried by what has been recorded by the inspiration of the Spirit; and whatever claims to be a true christian experience, or true ministerial gospel work, if it is found to differ in principle from the experience and work recorded in the Scriptures of truth, to the extent of that difference its claim must be disallowed.

I would not be misunderstood on so important a subject as the value and authority of the Scriptures, and therefore I will more fully explain my meaning. The Scriptures fully express the doctrine of God our Savior, but that doctrine in its spirit and power cannot be learned by the study of the Scriptures. "They shall all be taught of God." The experience of soul in which the knowledge of that doctrine is received, written in the heart, is all set forth in the Scriptures of truth; but no one can receive a knowledge of that experience by reading it in the Bible. But after he has had an experience, and to the extent of that experience, he can understand the Scriptures concerning it, and can see and receive instruction in the doctrine involved. Now he is a learner, and his own exercises are explained by what is written, as the Spirit gives him light and understanding; and his hope is thus confirmed, and the way of duty made plain.

But the ordinances and order of the church are directly taught in the New Testament, and the duty of believers is plainly shown to them; and so far as these duties and privileges are concerned, in each of these incidents the believer sees an example which he is to follow. The cries and prayers and questions of any one can never be an example. These things are no more to be followed as examples than breathing is. They are simply the expression of divine life, and they are essentially alike in the case of all the Lord's people in all ages and in all the world; not because one copies another, but because all are born of the same Spirit and have one life. Nor can any preacher qualify himself for preaching the gospel to the poor by observing the manner and studying the sermons of any other preacher, whether in the Bible or elsewhere. The sermons, the replies to those who cry for light and help, and the teachings recorded in the New Testament, can never furnish a servant of God with either the burden or form of a message to his people; but they will try the message which has been delivered, whether it be from the Lord or not. Also, the reading of such blessed messages recorded in the volume of truth will sometimes so comfort the soul of the poor servant, and warm his heart with a feeling sense of the love and mercy of God, that he will feel the sweet pressure of a message filling his own heart, making him long to go and speak it to the people of God; not to repeat the words or thoughts he has read, but to speak out of his own full heart, by the teaching and constraining power of the same God, and tell of the same wonderful love and salvation and glorious grace.

But there is in all these things an example both for the quickened soul and the servant sent to attend upon him. They are both taught by all the examples as well as the precepts to obey the dear Savior's commands as soon as they are made known to them, and not to postpone obedience to suit our own fleshly convenience. Immediately, without tarrying, stopping the chariot, if the order and authority of the church can at the same time receive full recognition, or "at the same hour of the night." The examples all say, Never neglect the first opportunity to do the act of obedience to a command whose power has been felt by you.

I will now notice some things concerning the jailer and the work of grace manifested by him. First. It is commonly spoken of as the "conversation of the jailer." But that word conversation does not apply either to their case or to that of Lydia recorded in the same chapter. It was used by Peter in addressing the Jews who were still holding to the ceremonies and traditions of the legal covenant, which the Lord had taken away that he might establish the new covenant. Conversion has no reference to divine life, or to the quickening of a sinner. The apostle simply calls upon them, whoever among them fears God, to turn from those legal things to the things of the gospel. The word convert literally means to turn. The exhortation of Peter presupposes divine life in those who will receive the command or exhortation. No others could know or understand its true meaning, except those who are born of God; for they only can see the kingdom of God. The apostle James speaks of a child of God who has erred from the truth being converted, turned, from the error of his ways. The Savior speaks of the time when Peter will be converted, turned, from his undue estimate of his own ability, and be made to know where his true strength and reliance are when he will be prepared to strengthen his brethren. The jailer was a Gentile, and we are not told that he had any especial theory of religion. This was a quickening, a bringing from death to life, not a conversion from one religious system and practice to another.

Second. We have no reason to believe that anything had been said to the jailer by Paul and Silas or any other person about his condition as a sinner. There seems to have been an earthquake in his soul by the mighty power of the same God who shook open the prison door, and shook the chains off from the prisoners. The intention to kill himself seems to have been in his mind at first, seeing the prisoners escaped, as he supposed, as death would be the penalty he must suffer. From the moment Paul called to him to do himself no harm there seems to have been a new light and new feelings within him, for he asked the question as soon as he had brought them out, as though it were the all-important thing upon his mind. If one who had known nothing of the Scriptures, who had never given any sign that he had any care or concern beyond this world, should cry out to us, "What shall I do to be saved?" we should not think it necessary to urge him to seek salvation. The Lord has been before us in that work, as he always is. The sower afterward can only sow with any good result where the great Husbandman has broken up the ground. The sower may see evidences of good ground, as in the case of the jailer, or they may sow without seeing where the ground is that has been broken up, as was the case with Paul when he preached at Athens. But the word will find out those who are prepared for it, as it found Lydia and Dionysius and Damaris.

Paul and Silas were now under authority to attend upon the wants of the jailer and his household, as was Peter, when Cornelius said to him, "Now are we all here before God, to hear of thee all things that are commanded thee of God." When by word or action the subject of God's workmanship has been made manifest to the minister of the gospel, hungering and thirsting after heavenly things, then that minister feels the bonds of his holy servitude in the gospel for Jesus' sake. He is not his own servant, and therefore cannot direct his own steps; nor is he allowed to display his own wisdom and knowledge, but is to speak to the waiting souls whatever is commanded him of God for them, handing them the food placed in his hand for them; and teaching them to observe all things whatsoever God had commanded the apostles concerning them.—Matt. xxviii. 20.

Third. The question of the jailer is not precisely the same as that of the "devout men" on the day of Pentecost. They had been made to see the end of all that system of divine service upon which they had formerly depended, and they said, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They were devout men, living souls, and had truly worshiped God under those legal forms. But now they felt as well as saw that such things could not satisfy their needs any longer. They were pricked in the heart, the new heart which had already been given them, and were stirred up by the apostle's preaching to desire a spiritual service. But the nature and manner of that new service was yet hid from them. They did not yet know what they should do to serve the Lord, since the old form of service was ended, and that is the question they asked of the servants of God; for they were those whom the Lord had made to desire his service above all things. They did not ask what they must do to be saved, but simply what they should do. That was an occasion, and that a congregation, the like of which never was before, and never has been, nor can be, again. It represents Zion arising and shining because her light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon her. Those living people of God who are inquiring of the newly appointed servants of God, are the church of God, coming forth from her legal into her gospel state. He who was in the church in the wilderness (Acts vii. 38) is now bringing her out of that wilderness state, in which all his Jacobs are found, and she cometh up from the wilderness leaning on her Beloved.—Sol. Song viii. 5. This question of these devout men shows them to be looking forth as the morning, out of the legal night into the gospel day. It shows them as being separated from the children of the bond woman, who are represented by the multitude of Jews who mocked, and brought forth out of that Jerusalem which is in bondage with her children, and is to be destroyed, and being gathered into that Jerusalem which is above, which is free, and is the mother of all God's people, there to find a settled rest, and to enjoy true and everlasting felicity.

The apostle Peter answers the question of these devout men by proclaiming deliverance through Jesus Christ from the dead works of the law, and by giving them the blessed and welcome command to repent, to come away from the bondage, to shake themselves from the dust of that earthly religion, to put on her beautiful gospel garments, and arise and sit down in the rest of their Father's house. How welcome is this gospel command, how joyful the sound, to those who have felt upon their necks the bands of legal captivity.—Isa. lii. 1-3. Peter also sets in order before those inquiring souls the ordinance of baptism, which figuratively shows how they were set free from the law with all its demands, by the burial of Christ in death, and how they are brought forth into the gospel by his resurrection, and gives them that command, which is the delightful and solemn duty of those to whom it is given, to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ; thus manifesting their hope that they were baptized into his death; and that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so they also should walk in newness of life.—Rom. vi. 34.

The jailer was not one who could have been called a devout man. He had not had a religion which must now be forsaken. He had just been made alive, and for the first time he felt the sins of his heart and life coming upon him with terrible power, condemning him in the sight of a holy God. The question he asks blazes and breaks forth from a heart suddenly brought into consternation, wonder and anguish by this newly discovered condition as a vile sinner, under the frowns of an angry God, and at the same time feeling a desire for righteousness, a hatred of sin, and a longing for the favor of God.

By a flash of God's overwhelming light all this discovery so fearful is made in an instant of time, and in the steady shining of the same glorious light the apostle speaks the glorious words of power, and the poor, condemned sinner is filled with the amazing light that shows salvation's high way of holiness, and brings forth the redeemed souls upon that highway with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. The Lord can do all this great and wonderful work in the heart in an instant of time as fully, as perfectly, and as gloriously as in a thousand years. Time is nothing to him. It was created for man. God has no need of it in order to develop and bring forth his own work. It is his creature, created for some purpose of his own. But with him there is no difference between one day and a thousand years.

Fourth. The angel said to Joseph concerning Mary, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." That which the Lord has designed for his people he has said they shall inquire of him for.—Ezek. xxxvi. 37. At the time appointed for each one of that people whom he shall save from their sins to experience that salvation, he will be made to feel his need of it. He will be made to "know the plague of his own heart," and to loathe himself on account of his depravity. He will know, as no wisdom of the world could cause one to know, how impossible it is for one justly condemned to do anything to remove that condemnation. The cry of the jailer shows that he realizes his helpless condition, and that the law which is the strength of sin is now holding him to the measure of its just requirements, and his need is pressing upon him. No man has had any part in causing him to feel this, nor can any man have any part in that work to-day. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Nor can the time of that revelation to any soul be hastened or retarded; for the times are all before appointed, and they are all in the Lord's hand. And those times and seasons when the Lord will display his power, and make his goodness and mercy known to the vessels of mercy, "knoweth no man, no not the angels in heaven, nor the Son even, but the Father only."—Matt. xxiv. 36; Acts i. 7.

Fifth. The question of the jailer expresses the desire which the Lord works in his people for that salvation from sin which Jesus has accomplished for them, and will reveal in them. One might ask this question when the fear of punishment only was in his mind, and not a hatred of evil. But the first of God's work in them, the beginning of wisdom, is to put his fear in their hearts, which is to hate evil. Then we know that what they want to be saved from is, not merely the consequences of sin, but sin itself. The answer is suited to the question, as was that of Peter to the question of the devout men on the day of Pentecost. The answer to them directed their attention from the law to the gospel, and declared the promise of the Holy Ghost, who should, upon their receiving the ordinance of baptism, open up to them the fullness of gospel order, and show the goodness of the Lord's house. The answer to the jailer deals directly and simply with the manifestation and experience of salvation. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

This is to one who has known nothing on this subject hitherto, who has no false theories of religion to give up, who is a child. The question and answer both speak of salvation as in the future, as it is in reference to the poor, trembling, justly condemned sinner. The question may farther express an uncertainty as to there being any salvation at all for one so unworthy, for the sinner certainly feels very uncertain about it. But his uncertainty on the subject of God's purpose concerning him does not imply that God is uncertain. There was no uncertainty or indefiniteness concerning the work which the dear Savior said was finished when he died. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." He saved his people by his death, and will surely give that salvation to them. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."

But now we see one of these redeemed people coming to Jesus. To himself he would appear to be going away from the favor of God rather than toward it. But this is the way the Lord brings his people, away from themselves, away from all confidence in their own strength and wisdom and righteousness, in order that they may know him as all in all unto them. "What must I do?" Of course there can be no salvation for me unless I can do something to merit it, and what that can be I cannot see. The answer is, "nothing." You can do nothing. One condemned can do nothing but suffer the penalty. But a work of salvation has been done by the Lord Jesus Christ, and those for whom that salvation was obtained will be given faith as an evidence of it, and will believe. To the jailer, and to every other in like situation, throughout all time and in all the world, the answer is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

Is this a condition proposed that might possibly be neglected, a command that might be disobeyed, and so the chance of salvation be lost? Is belief something that may be done or left undone by a man? Is it an act of the creature at all? If one is longing for some one thing, above all else, and he is told that he can have it if he will only believe, would he refuse or hesitate? Would not any man be glad to believe whatever would be for his good and comfort, if he could? But will belief be the cause of anything that is the subject of belief? Belief has an effect upon the feelings and actions of the believer, but it cannot affect its own cause. One can have nothing to do in producing his own belief, only so far as he can control the evidences which control his belief. Belief, therefore, is not an act of the mind, but an effect produced upon it by evidence, an effect which cannot be resisted or controlled by the mind, but which may be disregarded, so that the conduct may be inconsistent with the belief, causing great injury and distress.

Who is Jesus Christ, the jailer might have said, upon whom you tell me to believe? I do not know him, and I do not know how to believe on him. So the man whose eyes Jesus had opened, but who had not yet seen him, when asked by the dear Savior, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" said, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" The evidence upon which that belief was to be founded was already in his mind, but he did not know it until it was shown to him. It is so with the experience of all his people. When Jesus is preached to them they have already experienced his power and love, as the blind man had when his eyes were opened. Now he had only to be told, "Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee." Then he believed; he could not help it, nor could he want to help it.

The very next thing that Paul and Silas did was to speak the word of the Lord to this inquiring sinner, and to all his house, without waiting to have their painful stripes washed, or to get a little food to satisfy their hunger, and a little rest for their aching bodies. Here is a work that is uppermost in their minds, and they could not enjoy eating or resting while that word of the Lord is in them with such a burning power, stirring up every energy of their minds and every emotion of their hearts, and those poor souls are there looking at them with their hungry eyes, and waiting for the words that shall open before them the living fountain of life and light and joy. The servant of God may be taking some rest that seems to be absolutely needed, or may be taking a little food without which it seems he would certainly faint, but if the word of the Lord comes to him as a message at such a time his desire for rest or food is gone for the time; and even if his body remains still, his soul is wide awake, and his mind is up and busy.

When Jesus is preached to a believer he believes at once, though he never before heard the things that are spoken. "Who is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?" Only to those to whom God has given the faith, which is the evidence of things not seen, and the experience of his power and grace and love, will or can believe what his servant testifies. Those to whom Jesus has revealed himself will believe when Jesus is preached. If one comes preaching another kind of Savior, one who offers salvation, one who wants to do what he cannot, the one who has had some revelation of Jesus has no witness within himself of the truth of that preaching, but has the evidence that it is not true. If he receives and follows such preaching he will find no true comfort in it, but will be restless until he again is walking in that truth that made him free.—John viii. 32.

When the jailer and all in his house heard the preaching of Paul and Silas they believed in the Lord, and rejoiced. This belief manifests life. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath [not shall have, but hath now] everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." This life is in the Son of God. He that hath the Son of God hath life. This life precedes and causes it. Belief is the evidence that Christ is in them. The preaching of Christ presents that which the saved soul has experienced, and he believes it. But, the jailer might say, I cannot help believing what I know to be true, but there is no merit in believing a truth. That cannot make me worthy of salvation. That cannot atone for my sins and remove them. No, but your belief in Jesus is an evidence that he has removed your sins, and washed you from them in his atoning blood.

Now he wants to follow Jesus in baptism, and the privilege is his at once. And his love to God and to them who are his servants is manifest in his tender care for them.

PORTLAND, Ind., Nov. 25, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—

A brother has requested that I give such views as the Spirit may present to my mind upon Gal. iii. 21: "Is the law against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." The promises here designated were those made to Abraham, that in his seed should all the nations be blessed, and also that his seed should inherit Canaan. The eighteenth verse reads, "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise." The promises of God are nothing short of fixed events and decrees of God. What God has promised to his saints is as irrevocable as the natural course of the sun. Then the inheritance was not of the law. The seventeenth verse confirms this again: "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." Hence the law being given four hundred and thirty years after God had made a solemn covenant or promise to Abraham, that his seed should inherit Canaan, that law was in no way in opposition to the decree that Abraham's seed should inherit Canaan. Many have thrown it in the teeth of those who believe the Scripture that declares that God "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," that if that means absolutely all things, they could see no purpose in God giving his people any law; for say they, the law or commandment would be against the promise, covenant or decree of God. This seems to be the same class of people that Paul was combating. Hence the declaration, "If the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise." Hence the inheritance of God's chosen people was by promise, and that promise was made long, yea, four hundred and thirty years, before the law. And Moses told Israel (Deut. iv.) that it was not because of their righteousness or any uprightness of their hearts that God drove out the Canaanites before them, but it was because of the oath or promise that God made to Abraham, when as yet he had no seed, and because of the wickedness of the Canaanites; for he told Israel they were a rebellious and stiff-necked people; but they inherited by promise. According to Moses' own acknowledgment, if that inheritance had been by law, Israel would have failed. Then, a law or commandment being given long after a promise or a decree does in no way disannul any of the promises. It has seemed, from the idea some have of the law, that the law and the promises or decrees of God run counter; and it is certain that if their ideas of the law were correct, such would be the case. Many have claimed that a commandment given after a decree had been declared, would be a piece of foolishness; that if God had commanded his people to do good, and to abstain from evil, when he had decreed the same, would certainly be foolishness. Have these people properly understood the purpose of the law? First, the law was added long after the promise, and can in no way disannul it. Then, for what purpose was the law given? Paul says it was "added because of transgression." It was given because the people were wicked. Never was a law given where it was not needed. Sin was in the world, but could not be imputed, because there was no law; for where no law is, sin is not imputed. Therefore "the law was added because of transgression." "The law entered that the offense might abound;" for it could not abound without a law to offend. We may see men doing evil, and yet may have no law to condemn them. Iniquity was in Israel; but sin could not be charged until law was established; then sin could be imputed. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." How would they have known it was sin if the law had not instructed them that it was sin? The law was to condemnation. Paul says, "Now we know that whatsoever the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." "If a law had been given that could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." But that would have conflicted with the promise by faith: law and decree would have run counter. Keep the law where it belongs, and it never runs counter to faith, or to promise. The law was given to establish the sinfulness of those who had been sinning long before the law was given. Its purpose was "That every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." "That the offense might abound." "For by the law is the knowledge of sin." "That righteousness might be imputed to them that believe." Thus we have the purpose of the law. God's chosen people were in sin; but without the law how could they have a knowledge of it, and be humbled, and made to trust in God? Even so those whom God has chosen to salvation he has given a new covenant or promise, which is eternal life, an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. His laws he writes in their hearts and imprints in their minds. Now, as the old, Mosaic law was given four hundred and thirty years after the promise was made to Abraham, and was in no way against the promise, even so God's people were "chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love." Having predestinated them unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." "Being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." The law that is written in the hearts and imprinted in the minds of these chosen people does in no way disannul the promise by faith; for that choice and promise was made before the foundation of the world. The law is not against the promise. God gave this inheritance to the saints by promise before time began. But says one, For what purpose is the law written in the hearts of the saints? For the same purpose that the Mosaic law was added. Sin was in the world from Adam to Moses; but where there is no law sin is not imputed. Sin is in the saints from their birth; but until the law is written in their hearts and imprinted in their minds they are without a knowledge of their sins. The law enters that the offense may abound, that the mouths of the saints may be stopped, and they become guilty before God. Now let Paul tell his experience: "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment [or law] came, sin revived,

THE CITIES THAT REPENTED NOT.

OUR brother, Robert Scates, of Highgate, Ontario, has asked our views upon the above named subject, which is recorded in Matthew xi. 20-24 and in Luke x. 12-15. The substance of the language in both places, without occupying space to quote it verbatim, is that it is said by the Savior that in the day of judgment it shall be more tolerable for Tyre, Sidon and Sodom than for Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum. We suppose two questions may be in the mind of our brother with regard to this matter; at least they occur to our mind, and of them we will speak in a special manner. Many reflections may grow out of these words of the Savior that would be good and profitable to be considered, and there may be shades of difference in the references to the different cities, and in the manner in which one is set over against another. Be this as it may, we do not feel moved to consider more than the following two questions. First, what does the "day of judgment" here spoken of mean? Second, why shall it be more tolerable for one city than for the other in that day?

First. The "day of judgment"—what does it mean? There does not seem to our mind to be any reference to a day or period of time in the future when these cities shall be literally arraigned at a literal bar of justice, erected in some locality, either upon earth or anywhere else in the universe, where Jehovah shall pronounce final sentence upon all men. If there be any such day or time in the future, it certainly cannot apply to any or all these cities, which long ago were destroyed from the face of the earth. Whatever may or may not be true concerning the popular idea of a coming day of judgment, it cannot apply to the Savior's words here. Long ago have all these cities been judged, and their condemnation visited upon them. Tyre and Sidon and Sodom were judged and destroyed, and so have been Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum. They were judged as cities and destroyed as cities. Jehovah not only judges individuals, but he judges nations, families, countries and cities. He is the ruler in the affairs of men in his providence as well as in the kingdom of his grace. He not only by his eternal and divine law pronounces all mankind guilty as individuals, but he has also established laws among cities and nations of various kinds; and every violation of these laws brings its sure result upon that nation or city. Cities and countries, as well as men, which maintain order and honesty and respect for mutual rights, shall be blessed, and shall live and flourish; while cities or countries which violate these laws of their being shall in the end perish as the natural result of their evil practices. It is this sort of judgment that we understand is meant here by the Savior. We do not deem it needful to enlarge upon this thought, because many instances will occur to every thoughtful reader where cities and nations have reaped a harvest of shame and woe from the seeds of vice and folly which they had sown. Men are lost forever (unless redeemed by the blood of Christ) through the fall of Adam, and nothing can be added to nor taken from that condemnation by their works, good or bad; but the present life has its temporal rewards and punishments, according to its deeds, whether we speak of individuals or communities. These rewards and punishments are temporal. They do not reach on into eternity, as it seems to us. So in the subjects under consideration the judgment is temporal, and includes only the destruction visited upon these cities as such. They were destroyed from the face of the earth, and their beauty and glory became a reproach and by-word among all men.

But now we ask, Why more tolerable for Tyre, Sidon and Sodom than for Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum? The Savior presents and emphasizes a truth here which was very distasteful to the Jews, and especially the self-righteous portion of them. It was flying in the face of every instinct belonging to them as a people to tell them that Sodom was better than Capernaum, and Tyre and Sidon than Chorazin and Bethsaida. These were Gentile cities; and could any Gentile thing be better than any Jewish thing? Yet Jesus here declares that Sodom, with all its foul licentiousness and blasphemy, and Tyre and Sidon, with all their idolatry, were superior to these cities of Israel? In the judgment of the Savior, human pride and vainglory and vice and crime and sin are more to be abhorred when cloaked by a false religious zeal, than when they stand forth naked and unblushing before men. Hypocrisy is worse than open infidelity. According to the testimony of the Savior, these cities of Israel, which dwelt in the odor of sanctity, were sunken lower in all that was abhorrent to God than had Sodom or the heathen cities of Tyre and Sidon. The openly profane man is not so hardened as the religious hypocrite. Jesus denounces no such judgments anywhere as he denounces upon the hypocritical professor; and so he says here that these Gentile cities, bad as they were, must receive more lenient judgment than these cities of Israel. Again we say, let all remember that Jesus speaks not here of the future world, nor of the final destiny of men as sinners fallen and finally condemned in Adam, but of the temporal judgments and the providential government which he exercises over all. In this present state, deep-dyed wickedness in a nation or city produces a more terrible result.

A third question may occur to some one, and we feel like briefly considering it. Jesus said that if the mighty works done in these cities of Israel had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago; and had they been done in Sodom it would have remained to that day. First, we would say that this was a most scathing denunciation of these cities of Israel. Nothing could have stated their hardness and guilt in stronger light. Terrible as was the guilt of Sodom, proud as were Tyre and Sidon, these cities of Israel were still more hardened than they. Nineveh did repent at the preaching of Jonah; but Israel did not repent at the preaching of Jesus. We never have and we do not now understand the repentance of Nineveh to mean that godly sorrow for sin which humble-hearted believers feel, but a turning away from their evil practices, and a setting up of better standards of living and government; and the life of the city was prolonged as the natural result. In like manner we understand these words of Jesus to refer to a similar sort of repentance. This repentance is not that repentance which is the gift of God, but such repentance as is often brought about through warning, reproof and exhortation, or the force of circumstances, or of good example. It is purely a mending of the outward life, such as unregenerate men often engage in. These are such reflections as we have upon the subject, and such is what seems to us to be the meaning of the Savior here.

Growing out of the above, we have been reminded that the blessed Lord deals with his living and believing people along similar lines, and we feel like adding a few reflections in this direction. We need not here stop to argue that by the blood of the atonement Jesus has secured the final redemption of his elect people. Neither their life nor their death nor any other creature shall ever separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus their Lord, is the inspired declaration of Paul. They can never perish utterly, therefore. This we need not dwell upon; all Old School Baptists believe it. The wrong doing of believers can never rob them of heaven in the least degree (if it be lawful to speak of degrees in that which is perfect), and their right doing can never add to the heaven which shall be theirs. There the blood of the atonement alone counts. The theme of the redeemed there is simply, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and hast redeemed us unto God by his blood," &c. Thank God, there are no grades of holiness or happiness in heaven. Jesus alone is exalted; and every redeemed sinner, from Paul to the penitent thief, from Abel to the last ransomed child of Adam, will there never be anything more nor less than a sinner saved by grace. Perfect holiness is perfect happiness; and less than perfect holiness cannot be in heaven, and more than perfect holiness there cannot be.

But in the life which the Lord's people now live in the flesh, through the faith of the Son of God, they have not and cannot attain to perfection. Here, therefore, they must be the subjects of discipline. They may forsake the law of God, and walk not in his statutes. In such a case the Lord visits their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquities with stripes. To the people of God, with reference to their life here on earth, it is said, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Again, Paul says, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live." All these and hundreds of similar Scriptures set forth the dealings of God with his people in this present life.

The mistake which many have made when reading the Scriptures has been that they have confounded the obedience of believers with the obedience of Christ, and the temporal judgments of God upon believers with his eternal judgment against those who are not redeemed, and with that judgment which was visited upon the head of Jesus for the redemption (eternal redemption) of his people; and so they have reached the conclusion that because of their disobedience some for whom Christ died may perish eternally. But this would be to discredit the atonement of Christ, and to deny that he could save sinners and transgressors. But we have not here intended to argue this question, but only to call attention to the difference between the eternal redemption which we have through Christ, and the discipline of the Father in heaven toward his redeemed and believing people.

This leads to the truth that our God judges his people, and becomes to them a consuming fire. In his word it is declared that the Lord shall judge his people, that they shall give account for every idle word, that the word of the Lord discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart, that every believer must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to receive according to the deeds done in the body, and that every transgression and disobedience receives a just recompense of reward. There is here no question of a judgment beyond time, nor of a final destruction; but this judgment is now. It is in the hearts and present experiences of the Lord's people. It cannot be escaped by any who transgress. It is a present chastisement. Yea, more than this may be truthfully said. So far is the present judgment and chastisement from being an evidence of final perdition, that it is an evidence of final salvation. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

It is true among the people of God that the more they sow to the flesh, the more shall they reap the full harvest of corruption. This is a universal law; it cannot be escaped. What a man sows, that shall he also reap. The conduct of some believers has been such as to mar their standing, their comfort and usefulness. The conduct of others has been such as to destroy all these things. There is a difference. It is more tolerable for the one than for the other.

In concluding these thoughts we desire to say that to us it has long seemed a terrible thing for a child of God to live in disobedience. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." That which we lose by transgression we can never regain. We may come to experience full and free forgiveness, but the wasted time and strength and comfort can never be restored. He who sells his birthright for a mess of pottage can never find a place of repentance. He may have godly sorrow for his sin—happy is he if it be so; but he must reap what he has sown. The word to believers is positive, "He shall reap." He must appear before the judgment seat of Christ to receive the things done in the body. If we realize these things sin will not seem a light thing to us. As it is exceeding sinful in itself, so is it terrible in its results. It wars against the soul. It is in the soul first, and it robs and injures the soul. Its penalty cannot be escaped. Be sure your sin will find you out. May the grace of God overcome in this conflict within us. It will finally overcome. May we all experience it daily!

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

ARE THE MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL REQUIRED TO PREACH TO SINNERS?

WE answer without hesitation, They are. If they were not to preach to sinners, we know not where on the face of the earth they could find a people to preach to. All the sons of Adam have sinned, and by the law of God every mouth is stopped, and the whole world becomes guilty before God. If therefore Christ has commissioned his ministers to preach to the whole or to any portion of the human family, they are commissioned to preach to sinners.

We understand from the Scriptures that Christ has redeemed a portion of the human family from the demands of divine justice, the curse and dominion of the law, and the guilt and consequences of sin, and that these are in due time called with a holy calling, quickened by the Holy Spirit, and that they are gathered with the glorious arm of their great Shepherd, and brought into the liberty of the sons of God, and into the order, and made partakers of, the privileges of his church; that they are and shall be translated out of the kingdom of Satan, and into the kingdom of God's dear Son. These, being thus redeemed, regenerated, and brought into the kingdom of Christ, are denominated christians, believers, saints, &c.; and those who are not so called and born again are denominated unbelievers, &c. But it is nevertheless true that even God's people, while here in the flesh, feel, know and confess that they are still sinners. It is true they hate sin, but they feel its working in their flesh, and often cry out in bitterness of spirit, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law."

So far as the proclamation of the gospel is concerned, it is to be preached to both, and to all classes of men, wherever God in his providence opens a door to his ministers to proclaim it.

The preaching of the gospel does not mean the telling men to do this or that. It signifies the work of proclaiming among the Jews and Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. Not calling on dead sinners to quicken or save themselves, but the proclamation is that "Salvation is of the Lord." It is not to tell or command sinners to repent, but to proclaim that Christ is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel and the remission of sins.

To hold forth the idea that the gospel is a system of duties which unregenerate men are required to do as a condition of salvation, or that the ministers or the preaching are means of saving dead sinners, is in our estimation a perversion of the gospel; but the ministry is to bear testimony before the whole world that there is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved, neither is there salvation in any other.

But it is frequently charged that Old School Baptists refuse to preach the gospel to sinners. This charge has probably been met and refuted a thousand times; but the reason why it is still reiterated is because they refuse to give the children's bread to dogs, or, in other words, to address the promises and consolations of the new covenant to those who are not manifestly in that covenant. Such, for instance, as "Seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The gospel is in its nature discriminating; it has charms only for the heaven-born souls. It being spiritual, cannot be received by unregenerate men. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." It is not the province of the preachers to supply the destitute with ears, nor are they in any sense the means of supplying them, for none but God can give ears to hear and hearts to understand; yet when and where God has given ears the preaching of Christ crucified is "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God;" but where God has not given ears to hear the preaching is to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness. The preacher may make the proclamation, authorized by the example of Christ and his apostles, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

It should also be observed that Christ's ministers are to preach "the gospel." They are not ministers of the old covenant, but of the new; not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for Moses has in every city them that preach him. Neither are they to preach the doctrines of men, nor traditions of men, nor a gospel, but the gospel of Christ.

When the gospel is preached in truth and soberness it will find out those who have ears to hear—it will commend itself to those within its sound who are born of God; and although its preaching will not give life to the dead, it will feed, comfort, edify and instruct the living, and it will as a general (if not universal) thing make all others angry.

No argument can penetrate the deep recesses of the unrenewed heart, to carry thither one spark of spiritual light or truth; for this sufficient reason God hath hidden these things from them, and revealed them to babes; even so, because so it seemed good in his sight.

The impenitent sinner is under the law; and what the law saith (not what the gospel saith) it saith to them that are under the law. The law curses all that are under it. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse." The law curses, but cannot bless; for if a law had been given that could give life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But, on the other hand, the gospel blesses, but cannot curse; yet all its blessings are upon those who are redeemed from under the law, and are brought under grace. Instead, therefore, of preaching the law or obedience to the law as a way of life and salvation, the ministers of Jesus, like Paul, should preach that by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified before God; and instead of preaching the gospel as the power of man or men through instrumentality unto salvation, which is not true, he should preach that the gospel is the power of God through faith unto salvation, which is true, and which the Bible affirms.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1850.

PSALM II 3.

"LET us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us."

This Psalm evidently has a predictive allusion to the time when our Lord Jesus Christ was condemned by the mob to be crucified. "The kings of the earth [Pilate and Herod] set themselves, and the rulers [the high priests and rabbies of Israel] take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder," &c.

That the object of the Jewish hierarchy and the regal powers of the Romans had in view the disbanding of the little flock of the Messiah, and the casting from themselves those restraints which they apprehended would result from the establishment of the kingdom and government of our Lord Jesus Christ, we think there can be no doubt; yet the very method they adopted to disband his kingdom and cast their cords away from them was overruled by him that sitteth in the heavens for the accomplishment of the very things which they designed to prevent.

These things were done in the green tree, and are we not admonished to look for a repetition of them in the dry? The kings of the earth, who, to say the least, have no right to intermeddle officially with the things of the kingdom of Christ, do still "set themselves." God has not authorized them to set, neither as monarchs, nor as legislative bodies, nor in any other form, to enforce religious laws. God has set his King upon his holy hill of Zion; but the kings of the earth have set themselves. What arrogance and presumption for human dignitaries to usurp dominion over the consciences of men in matters of religion! "And the rulers take counsel together." They do not ask counsel of God, for his wisdom is foolishness in their estimation; therefore they take counsel together, in order to combine the wisdom of this world, which is foolishness with God; and the grand design is to bring it all to bear against the Lord, and that government which he has indicated by the holy anointing. None can resist the government of the Lord's Anointed without resisting the government of God himself; hence every effort made by men or devils, under whatever pretense they may be made, to set themselves as dictators in divine things, or in managing the affairs of the kingdom of Christ, is regarded by him that sitteth in the heavens as against the Lord and against his Anointed, whom he hath set as his King on his holy hill. Whatever may be the ostensible object of such usurpers, the tendency of their unhallowed interference is against the Lord and against his Christ; and all such usurped governments are calculated to break the bands of the saints asunder, and to scatter the saints of God. Thus did the heathen rage when Christ was crucified, and thus do they still rage in their madly directed efforts to exterminate the church of Christ, and to oppose the doctrine and order of his kingdom.

If it be the design of raging heathen, wicked kings and corrupt judges of the earth to break the bands of Zion, and cast their cords away, may we not conclude that an opposite course will be pursued by the subjects of his spiritual kingdom? Certainly so far as we are led by the Spirit of God we shall be inclined to honor and obey him; we shall love and rejoice in "The tie that binds

Our hearts in christian love."

The bands which bind the saints to Christ and to one another, and the cords which bind them to observe all things whatsoever he hath commanded them, can never be offensive to the saints; they love the Lord, they love the government of Christ, and they love his people. Still there are admonitions in the New Testament to the saints to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" from which we infer that when christians are led by the depraved emotions of the flesh they join so far with the wicked in breaking the bands and casting away the cords of Christ's government from them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

and I died." The law is the strength of sin. "Sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence." "For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me." Paul argues that by the double strength the law had given sin, it got the power over him. He said he died daily. Now the law is in no way against the promised inheritance of the saints; but it is to give them a knowledge of their sins, that they may know they have a most corrupt, deceitful nature, and that they may cease to trust or boast in their own strength; to teach them that God must save or they perish. "That sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful;" that they may appear to themselves exceedingly miserable and desperately wicked; for can they trust in God until all confidence in self is lost?

Says one, "For what then was Abraham circumcised? Why was it necessary to observe circumcision, if no righteousness was obtained by observing that law?" Paul asked the question, "How was it [righteousness] then reckoned? When he was in circumcision or uncircumcision?" He answers, that it was before he was circumcised, or when he was in uncircumcision. Therefore Abraham believed God before he was circumcised, and his faith was imputed unto him for righteousness before he was circumcised. He received circumcision as a seal of that righteousness he had before he was circumcised. Abraham believed fully in God when he was in uncircumcision, that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; or though they be Gentiles; that righteousness might be imputed to them (the Gentiles) also. "Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him, but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." So we now have it that the seed of Abraham was Christ. And, "The law was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." Thus we have it that the law was to continue until Christ. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God." This is what "Abraham our Father hath found." "But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness;" but none of his works of the law will be. But says one, "Do you not believe in good works?" Yes, of the Spirit. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Faith is the fruit of the Spirit. We believe in all the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; "for against such there is no law." We have never heard of a law to keep a man from loving, or being meek, or temperate, or having faith in God. These are as legitimate fruits of the Spirit, as evil is of the flesh; and these are not the works of the law, but of faith; and none but those who have the Spirit can have the fruit. The Spirit is not obtained by these fruits; for a man must be in possession of the Spirit before he can have its fruits. As well might you undertake to produce the tree by its fruit, when as yet you had neither tree nor fruit. We are informed that Abraham had two sons; one by a bond maid, and the other by a free woman. He who was born of the bond maid was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. Now these are an allegory. The bond woman, or Hagar, is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answers to Jerusalem which is now in bondage with her children. Hagar is mount Sinai, where the law was delivered. Thus at Christ's coming the Jews stood in bondage to the law, as Hagar stood in bondage, under law to Sarah. Hagar's position typified the portion of the Jews at the coming of the new Jerusalem, which is above, and which is the mother of all the saints. This Jerusalem is free, and so are her children. Christ was put to death to deliver from under the law the free children; but he left all the Hagarites there. "For the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman." The Mosaic law was not given until the promised seed were manifest to receive it; and it was because they were the legal, rightful inheritors of Canaan that they were given the law. It was not because they might inherit if the law were given, for if so the law would be against the promise. They were already the children of promise and the legal inheritors of Canaan before the law was given. So the children of grace are the children of promise by faith before they receive the law, and the law does not run counter to the promise. If we seek to be heirs by the law, we make void the law of God.

Having presented these views, I will lay my pen aside, hoping that a more ready writer may open before us the two leaved gates, by the Spirit, that divideth the joints and marrow. I wish to say further that I have just received a most precious letter from Elder Chick, in answer to one from me, for which I feel to praise the Giver of all good.

Yours in hope,

NEWTON PETERS.

BALA, MUSKOKA, Canada, Nov. 20, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I find that my subscription for the SIGNS is a long time over due, and I can give no reason for not sending it but procrastination, which Arminians truly tell us is the thief of time. When I sent my last I thought from all human appearances and the testimony of medical men that I had nearly reached the end of my wilderness journey, and that this earthly house of my tabernacle, in which I have dwelt for seventy years, would long ere this have been dissolved, with all that appertains thereto. But our thoughts are not the Lord's thoughts; at least I know that very few of mine are. And in the great love wherewith, I humbly hope, he loved me, and the rich, free, sovereign and invincible grace and mercy given in his dear Son, I am still spared to wander in the wilderness, in a solitary way, to tug and toil in a barren land, and walk through dry places where no water is. I do not mean Arminian meeting-houses, but something quite a piece nearer home. O! brethren, what a tug and toil it is, fightings without and fears within. The world does not want us. The professing world will not have us at any price. They add to all this that the saint has his foes internal, external and infernal to contend with, and I assure you my experience is it will make a sinner stand with his hands on his loins, and bring paleness into all faces, and extort the cry, "I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." At the present time my experience is something like Israel of old on the shore of the Red Sea. To go forward is an impossibility; to go back, bless his name, I have not a deal of inclination. The mountains on either hand are too high for me to climb; so, as a matter of sheer necessity, I desire to "stand still and see the salvation of God." I know it is the Lord alone that brings his people here, that he watches over them while they are here, and that he will in his own time work out deliverance for them. I have found experimentally that at whatever time or in whatever way deliverance has been wrought, it has been the time and way of the enemy's destruction. God has arisen, his enemies have been scattered; and awaking as it were out of our horror of great darkness, a darkness that could be felt, we have exclaimed, "This is the Lord; we have waited for him; we will rejoice and be glad in his salvation." At such times, brethren, we blessedly realize and enter into the meaning of Paul's own words, Christ is all and in all, the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end of a poor sinner's salvation. And not only so, beloved saints, but every fresh promise opened up by his Spirit, in every fresh manifestation of his matchless beauty as the church's Head and Surety, the Life, Prophet, Priest and King, are we not led to behold in him the consummation of every thing that is lovely and beautiful, the fullness of all which as poor bankrupt sinners we can possibly enjoy or even desire, even the brightness of the Father's glory?

In the fifteenth chapter of John the dear Savior in setting forth that vital union which is manifested by a regeneration in the hearts of his true disciples, especially taught them that without him they could do nothing. How solemnly, painfully, yet blessedly, does the saint realize this in his every day experience. Take for instance those adversities and adverse powers he is called to contend with, and through grace is made to triumph over; say, for instance, sin. O what an evil and bitter thing! What an adverse power we daily prove it to be, carrying us away, like an avalanche, from every spiritual enjoyment, deadening every holy and loving feeling, and bringing us again and again unto that mountain that burned with fire and blackness and darkness and tempest. How do we then hear the voice of words, and the sound of the trumpet waxing louder and louder (not weaker and weaker), indicative of the truth, not that our sins become less and less, but that they become greater and greater as we go on. And, brethren, what can such a poor, sin-harrassed, law-tried and devil-tempted child of God do? But let the Lord Jesus now reveal himself to the poor, tried one, and what a wondrous change of scene and feeling is experienced in the heart. O how paradistical does everything appear! Sin put away, the curse annihilated, death swallowed up, hell under lock and key, the devil chained, and we are left with Jesus alone; and we say feelingly, in the sincerity of our souls, "So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast before thee. Nevertheless I am continually with thee; thou hast holden me by thy right hand. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee. My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever."—Psa. lxxiii. 22-26. Just as I sit writing it is my privilege blessedly to enter somewhat into the realization of these things. Bless the Lord, O my soul!

Well, dear brethren, I must conclude, lest I weary you with my poor scribble. When I sat down to write I only intended to write a line or so and inclose my subscription; but although a man's heart deviseth his way, the Lord directeth his steps. If you feel there is one word to encourage the tried and afflicted saint, give it a place in that able paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and if not, destroy it in the waste-basket, and all will be well.

I might add, for the information of my many dear friends, that I still suffer acutely from my old malady, and from weakness of body. I can only get to my appointments now and then. We are yet only two or three in this wild northern section, and it seems to me if we are not to be altogether annihilated by Arminianism, mongrel Calvinism, duty faith, free will, &c., we will not only need to have underneath us (I speak with reverence) the everlasting arms, but the "sword of the Lord and of Gideon" for our defense. What a mercy that it still stands on record, "Not by might, nor by power;" and "The election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Poor things; I pity them in a sense; but their doctrine is deadly poison. My love to all the dear saints, and may Israel's God be especially with all my ministerial brethren, who have to stand in the midst of the battle. May he bless and prosper the SIGNS.

Yours, a poor, old sinner,
W. KNIFTON.

ANSLEY, Neb., Jan. 20, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Thinking that perhaps many of the brethren who in times past have manifested a lively interest in our welfare would be glad to hear from us, I will drop a few lines for your disposal. On Jan. 10th Elder Isaiah Waggoner of York, Neb., paid us a visit, remaining three days and preaching freely the unsearchable riches of Christ. The services were at the house of J. N. Greenlee, near Mason City, on Friday and Saturday nights. On Sunday the services were held at a country school-house, where, my father said, he never heard a better sermon. All lovers of the truth in its purity who had heard of the meetings attended them. It was a real feast of fat things to us who seldom hear the truth from the rostrum. We expect, the Lord willing, to organize a church on the third Sunday, and Saturday previous, in April, and extend a general invitation to the brethren scattered abroad to attend this meeting. We believe that the Lord has raised up from among us a herald of the truth in the person of M. D. Pile, of Tallin, Custer Co., Neb. Brother Pile relates an experience of the Lord's dealings with him which satisfies us that he has been duly called to the work of the ministry.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
J. M. AMSBERRY.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To most of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. B. F. Coulter, 1910 North Twenty-Second St., Philadelphia, Pa., by Elder J. N. Badger, assisted by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, Dec. 23d, 1895. Mr. John B. Baker and Miss Edna M. Coulter, both of Philadelphia, Pa.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. James R. Langworthy died at her lifelong residence in Darien, N. Y., Jan. 15th, 1896, in the 65th year of her age.

Mrs. Langworthy was a daughter of brother and sister Vaughn, who were strong Old School Baptists, and among the early settlers of Darien. She and her parents have taken and read with interest the SIGNS OF THE TIMES from its commencement until the time of her death. She was a believer in the doctrine of grace, and the faith held as truth among Old School Baptists, but living far from any church of that order she never united with them. During her last illness she requested her niece to tell the writer of this notice that she was ready and waiting the Lord's time. She was married to James R. Langworthy on July 18th, 1854. She is survived only by her husband, who has the sympathy of many friends and relatives. She was the aunt of J. V. and Miss Prudence Williams, of Attica, Mrs. A. J. and Judge Lorish, Mrs. A. A. V. Nichols, of Corfu, Mrs. Emma Webster, of Holley, and Mrs. Kate Allen, of Nebraska.

SISTER Harriet J. Clore, the wife of brother Harison Clore, died at her home in Hebron, Ky., Dec. 19th, in her 58th year.

Sister Clore had been in ill health for some years, and confined to her bed several months. She was willing, ready and anxious to go, although surrounded with all the luxuries of this life. She had been for many years a faithful and consistent member of the Predestinarian Baptist Church, and her splendid home was a welcome and delightful place to all her ministers. Our sister was generous to the church and its cause, devoted to her family, and good to the poor. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Nannie Casey, of Bullittsville, Ky., a husband and one son, Mr. Joel Clore, a leading young lawyer of the Cincinnati bar.

Her funeral was attended by a large and sincere concourse of people. The exercises consisted of scriptural reading, songs, prayer, and a short oration delivered by the writer of this notice. Her remains were deposited in the vault in the Hebron cemetery.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And life's long warfare closed at last,
Now she rests in peace."

H. M. CURRY.

I HAVE been requested to send you a notice of the death of another of the aged members of the Kingwood Church. Sister Sarah Howell (widow of Richard Howell, who died many years ago) died Dec. 18th, 1895.

I do not know her exact age, but think she was something over eighty. She was baptized May 17th, 1840, and remained a devoted and faithful member of that church all her remaining days. It is something to adorn such a profession as a sincere, humble believer makes; and to keep the beautiful garments with which they are clothed always white and without stain during the long pilgrimage of fifty-five years, is indeed something worth while to say and to be remembered. Two of her daughters have been members with her for many years, and others are faithful friends. As well as I recollect, sister Howell came to the church voluntarily and unexpectedly, not being subject to any personal Baptist influence. Of how many members of that church who have gone to their reward I can unhesitatingly say, "These all died in faith." In such a life and such a death there is much to be remembered with humble and grateful hearts.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

Elia May Titus, daughter of Stevenson B. and Elizabeth Titus, departed this life May 1st, 1895, aged 16 years and 2 months.

Thus it has been the Lord's will to take from us our loved one, whom we highly prized; and not only we, but all who knew her mourn their great loss. She did not appear like a child, for she was one of deep thought; and we humbly trust and believe that she loved the truth as it is in Jesus. She suffered with that dread disease, consumption, for about four months, and was very patient and murmured not. A few days before she died she told us that she must surely die. Some time before she died she told us she was dying, but was as calm as the morning. The peaceful death she died has afforded us much comfort. We feel to say from our hearts, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

The funeral sermon was preached by Elder D. M. Vail, who ably expounded the Scriptures.

Thou art gone from the side of thy father so soon,

Who mourneth thy absence in sorrow and gloom;

Thou art gone from the eye of thy mother, and she

No longer now watcheth and hopeth for thee.

Who may now tell the full depth of that woe,

Which none like thy parents in sorrow can know?

HOPEWELL, N. J.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—It has been suggested to me to prepare a notice of the death recently of one of my sisters, Mrs. Hannah Brewer, who was called to her final home on Wednesday morning, Nov. 20th, 1895.

Although in somewhat feeble health, yet there had not appeared to be cause for alarm until quite a short time before her death. I knew nothing of her being amiss until the announcement came of her decease. In the darkest period of the history of the Kingwood Church, during and immediately subsequent to the division that they encountered, was the time when she while quite young came out, and was received into membership with the portion of the church that remained firm. She was baptized in November, 1840, so that her connection with that church had been fifty-five years. She did not reside all the time in that neighborhood, but I believe her name was never removed. Although younger than myself, she made a profession some years before I felt that I could, and I think was considered an ornament to her profession throughout that long period. She had entered the seventy-fifth year of her age at the time of her decease, and surrounded by a loving family and devoted friends, as well as surviving members of the church among whom she had so long served as a mother in Israel, she sank quietly into her last slumber. If we mourn, it should be for ourselves rather than for her. When shall we find all our waste places comforted?

E. RITTENHOUSE.

I HAVE received a letter from Mrs. W. F. Drake, of Hopewell, N. J., requesting me to write for publication an obituary notice of her father, brother Johnson Titus, who was born in Mercer Co., N. J., April 16th, 1811, and died Dec. 27th, 1895, in the 85th year of his age.

He was married Sept. 30th, 1835, to Mary A. Drake. They had seven children, three of whom survive him. His first wife died, and he was married again, Oct. 10th, 1857, to Sarah F. Drake. They had eight children, four of whom are still living. He had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church at Hopewell about forty years, and was baptized by the late Elder P. Hartwell. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by free and sovereign grace, and manifested a deep interest in the welfare of the church, and while he was able to attend his seat in the church was seldom vacant. He was often called to mourn the loss of loved ones, but was always ready to acknowledge the hand of God in all his dealings with him, realizing that what he had done was best. For several years he had been almost helpless. While he was unable to meet with the brethren, he found great comfort in reading his Bible, hymn book and the SIGNS. He was always glad to see the members of the church when they called upon him, and never tired of talking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. He lived with his daughter, Mrs. Enoch Drake, and she and her daughter did everything that loving hands could do to minister to his comfort. His last sickness was of short duration; he was confined to the bed about one week with pneumonia and heart trouble. His sufferings were great, but he bore them without a murmuring word, until he was released by death.

The funeral was held in the Old School Baptist meeting-house at Hopewell on Sunday, Dec. 29th, and was largely attended, showing the esteem in which he was held by the church and the community in which he lived. Elder E. Rittenhouse, of Delaware, preached an able and comforting sermon from 2 Corinthians v. 5: "Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit." His favorite hymn was also used at the funeral, 1213 of Beebe's Collection:

"Lord, what is man, poor, feeble man, Boon of the earth at first?"

He was buried in the cemetery adjoining the meeting-house. While the sorrowing friends have consigned all that is mortal to the narrow house appointed for all living, they have the comforting assurance that their loss is his eternal gain.

Yours in christian love,

M. J. STOUT.

ORDINATIONS.

The Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church of Jesus Christ called West Fork, of Hampton, Franklin Co., Iowa, met at their regular place of meeting on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December, 1895, and by the unanimous voice of the church agreed to ordain brethren WILLIAM STILLWELL and EDWIN A. NORTON to the gospel ministry.

A presbytery was organized and proceeded to business as follows.

Elder A. J. Norton was chosen Moderator, and Deacon David Jordan, of Sharon Church, Guthrie Co., Iowa, Clerk.

The church delivered both candidates into the hands of the presbytery, which consisted of Elder A. J. Norton and Deacon Samuel Butler, of the West Fork Church, and Deacon David Jordan, of Sharon Church, Guthrie Co., Iowa.

The presbytery being satisfied with the qualifications of the candidates, agreed to ordain them, which was done on Sunday afternoon.

Elder A. J. Norton made the ordination prayer and gave the charge.

The right hand of fellowship was given by all the members present.

Adjourned in peace.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

THE UNSPEAKABLE THINGS.

How shall I praise thy glorious name,
O Lord, my King and Savior?
Can mortal tongue declare thy fame,
Or show thy loving favor?
And yet I would thy name make known,
Though feeble be the story;
And I would speak what thou hast shown
To me of grace and glory.
When mortal strife and mortal strength
Had proved how vain their boasting,
And at the cross I bowed at length,
No longer in them trusting;
Then thou didst bring redemption near
For all thy chosen nation,
And perfect love cast out my fear,
Because of thy salvation.
When daily crosses I have borne,
And daily help have needed,
When all my life has seemed forlorn,
And constant cries unheeded;
A friend in thee I've ever found,
A friend most true and loving,
A wall of fire to me around,
My heart to gladness moving.
And when life's journeying all is past,
And I am faint and dying,
O then on thee myself I'll cast,
Who hearest all my crying:
And when I reach the home above,
Where saints abide forever,
Then will I sing thy matchless love,
Thy never-ending favor.

JANUARY 21, 1896.

EXPERIENCE.

My heart is heavy laden,
So weary and oppressed;
I look to thee, dear Jesus,
O soothe me on thy breast.
I know I'm weak and sinful,
As vile as vile can be;
But thou, O loving Savior,
Didst die for such as me.
On cruel cross thou suffered,
There thy precious blood did flow;
O plunge me in that current,
And make me white as snow.
Long, weary years I've wandered,
Far from the love of God;
But I read of hope and peace
In thy most precious word.
My eyes have long been blinded,
The light I could not see,
Till thou, O Holy Spirit,
Revealed God's grace to me.
Now on my clouded vision
Such a flood of glory falls;
O joy beyond expression!
'Tis God himself that calls.
Thy loving grace, so tender,
Prostrates me at thy feet;
Thy mercy now surrounds me,
Thy love, so infinite.
I hear thee sweetly whisper
To my soul, sin-sick and sore,
"Neither do I condemn thee;
Go, and sin no more."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

"THESE were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so. Therefore many of them believed; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few."—Acts xvii. 11, 12. Why should the Bereans be called more noble than those of Thessalonica, if the latter were dead in trespasses and sins, and had no ability to attend to the things spoken, and consequently no desire to search the Scriptures? If the Lord had not prepared them to receive the word, and it was not in their power to do so, why should any comparison be made at all between them and the Bereans, who were more favored? If God granted them repentance independent of any volition of theirs, and they searched the Scriptures simply because they could not help it, manifesting that they were the Lord's people, why should they be called noble at all, as though some credit was due them?

Such questions as these are undoubtedly in the mind of deeply interested readers of the Bible, though they may not as often be expressed. It is much easier to ask than to satisfactorily answer them. Such questions are sometimes shaped in a manner that clearly indicates a determined opposition to the doctrine of God's absolute sovereignty in the mind that formed them; while the phraseology of others shows that the question recognizes the doctrine of unconditional election as a Scriptural truth, but cannot understand how such Scriptures as that we are now considering can be explained as consistent with that doctrine. To the first the answer can only be in the letter, proving the truth of the doctrine evidently opposed and disliked, by reference to Scriptures that are clear and definite and unmistakable in their meaning, thus showing that the Scripture that is thought to militate against such doctrine must have some other meaning; for the Scriptures cannot contradict themselves, when rightly understood. To the questioner of the second kind, who is truly searching the Scriptures in the same spirit in which the Bereans did, not to attack or defend any position, but to know what they teach, and who are waiting for the Lord to open the blessings of his word to their souls, the answer enters more into experimental things. The servant of God is not a minister of the letter, and he cannot have regard merely to the arguments of the natural man against the doctrine of God our Savior, in his ministration of the word, but has in view the needs of the Lord's hungry poor, and thus is led to speak of what his own soul has felt and tasted and handled of the Word of life; and while he will still be enabled to stop the mouths of gainsayers, he will be feeding the living in Jerusalem.

In regard to the questions such as I have quoted in beginning this article, I will merely say, First. All men are dead in trespasses and sins, and no one of the race of Adam has any spiritual ability or desire until he is born of God. These things are clearly stated in the Scriptures.

The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. This quickening, or spiritual birth, is not according to the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God; and in this work "the flesh profiteth nothing."—John i. 13; vi. 63. A man who has not been born from above cannot see the kingdom of God.—John iii. 3.

Second. The Lord has caused whatever difference there is between those who are truly Christians and those who are not. "For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as though thou hadst not received it?"—1 Cor. iv. 7. Naturally, the differences in races and nations and individuals are of the Lord; and differences in regard to spiritual gifts and character are more especially presented as of him, and according to his will and power. The apostle very definitely presents this purpose and power of God in regard to the dispensation of his favors, in Romans ix., and sets forth distinctly the enmity of the natural mind against that doctrine, and tells just what we would do and say against it. If "God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth," and if "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy," then, indeed, why should we not say, "Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will?" Yet the inspired apostle sharply rebukes us for that question, and asks sternly who we are that reply against God. He does not soften or explain to our objecting minds what he has declared of God's discriminating purpose and sovereign power, but asks what right the thing formed has to say to him that formed it, "Why hast thou made me thus?"

Third. Repentance, and every other of those precious things which God hath prepared for those that love him (1 Cor. ii. 9.), is granted to his people independent of any volition of their own, except that will which he works in them, "to will and to do of his own good pleasure."—Phil. ii. 13. He works in them that which is well pleasing in his sight (Heb. xiii. 21), and his people shall be willing in the day of his power.—Psalm cx. 3.

Fourth. No one deserves any credit, nor receives any in the Scriptures, for anything he possesses of spiritual value. The credit is all given to the Lord. Faith, which is the gift of God, and a fruit of the Spirit, is expressly stated as that by which all of the Lord's people, from Abel down, did that which pleased him, and which caused their works and their persons to be accepted by him.—Heb. xi.

These elements in the questions I am considering being settled by the plainest declarations of the Scriptures, let us see if we can understand why the apostle might speak of the Bereans as more noble than the Thessalonians, without implying a question of the doctrine so plainly and universally taught in the word. He was speaking of the Jews in each place. Whenever he went to a city he went at once to the synagogue, where he had a right to go, and there, as was his right, he talked of the Scriptures, and showed to them what had been revealed to him. The difference in the dispositions of the Jews in the two places was a difference we often see among men. Some are so fixed in their attachment to whatever they have been taught to regard as the right sentiments, that they will brook no opposition. When any contrary sentiment is mentioned they will not hear the arguments in support of it, so determined are they that what they hold must be true, and all else must be false. It is the disposition of the natural mind, but more strongly manifested in some than others, to get vexed with any persistent attempt to antagonize what we believe, and to feel angry at the one so opposing. This disposition has been most marked when the doctrine of our own dear Savior has been declared by him or his disciples, even to this time. When he taught that no man could come to him except it were given him of the Father, that all such should come, and that his followers do eat his flesh, and that the Spirit quickens, and the flesh profiteth nothing, then it was that the enmity of the carnal mind was most particularly displayed.—John vi. 37-66; Luke iv. 16-29.

Those that are willing to hear the views of such as differ with them we would regard as more noble, taking the word in its figurative meaning, "generous," than those who turn a deaf ear to them, and who would injure them because of their doctrine. But in describing these as being more noble, even naturally, than those of the other class, we should not intimate that there was anything in this difference to set aside the doctrine of God's sovereign purpose and power, which are clearly manifest in providence as well as in grace. The Lord has "divided the nations, and separated the sons of Adam," and set their bounds. He has caused the distinctions between them in the features both of mind and body. Yet some are more noble than others. He has made differences, the reason of which we may not know now. He who made the lamb made also the wolf; he who made the angels formed also the crooked serpent. "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil."

In the mind and heart of man true education seeks to cultivate and bring into exercise the more noble qualities, and repress the baser; and this is for the good of men and society. But no education, no cultivation, can add a new principle to the mind, or make any change in the nature.

The Greek word which is rendered noble in this place literally means "well born," high in rank. In countries where there are titles and degrees of rank, nobility comes by birth to all the descendants of the one upon whom the title was first conferred by the sovereign. They are regarded as "well born." But of course this does not necessarily give them noble qualities of mind. They must be well born in a higher and more glorious sense in order to be truly noble, as I have no doubt many of these Bereans were.

I am inclined to praise those who show a gentle, candid, truth-loving disposition, and who seem anxious to know what the Scriptures teach, and who receive the preaching of Christ with readiness of mind, and carefully compare what they hear with the word of truth; and I am equally ready to blame those who show the opposite disposition. Yet at the same time I know that the first are rather to be congratulated, and rejoiced with, than praised; for if they have a desire for the truth, the Lord has given it to them of his abundant goodness and mercy, and as a mark of his sovereign favor. The desire to search the Scriptures is from him, if it is a desire to know concerning Jesus, and to be led to him as the Rock that is higher than we; and it is an unspeakable blessing for any one to receive the word of gospel truth with all readiness of mind, as every poor, trembling child of God knows, who has passed through winter seasons in his soul, when his mind seemed almost destitute of any spiritual desire, and cold to all spiritual things.

As for those who have only a feeling of enmity to the truth, the cause for blame is further back than the present manifestation of that enmity, though they are to blame for their inconsistent and unreasonable course, as men. But they are in nature's deadness and darkness, from which the power of man cannot lift them up. "None can by any means redeem his brother, or give to God a ransom for him."—Psalm xlix. 7. "No man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."—Matt. xi. 27. Again we feel the question arising in our rebellious, carnal minds: "Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?" "How unsearchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

It is so good that these Bereans were noble, having exalted principles, generous impulses, and above all, that they had an ardent desire to know the truth of the Scriptures.

"Therefore many of them believed." Does not the word therefore, show that they believed after they had received the word and searched the Scriptures? And although preaching does not give life, was it not through the preaching that the desire came to know whether these things were so?

I have already written in the former articles somewhat on the subject of believing, but will express some further considerations. It is clearly and definitely declared that it is given to the saints to believe on the name of Christ (Phil. i. 29); that it is not according to any independent volition or power of their own that they believe in God, but by Jesus Christ (1 Peter i. 21); that it is by the working of the mighty power of God which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead (Eph. i. 19, 20); and that it is not according as every man determines whether he will believe or not, but according as God has given to every man.—1 Cor. iii. 5.

One must have life before he can believe. As natural life is necessary in order to a knowledge and belief concerning natural things, so there can be no knowledge of spiritual things, nor any power to believe the teachings of the Spirit concerning them, until one has divine life. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Cor. ii. 11. To the living soul there must be given evidence before there can be belief of any kind. In order to an intelligent belief that shall be useful for direction or comfort, the testimony that has come into the mind must be explained and set in order by some competent teacher.

There may be a natural desire to know the truth of things, which will lead to an earnest search of the Scriptures to know what doctrine they teach, and to compare declarations we have heard with what we find there; and the result of such a study is a belief, perhaps, of the truth in its letter, though there may have never been felt any vital interest in it as concerning the purpose and dealing of God with our own souls. Such a candid desire for truth is a noble and valuable thing in any one, and such conduct with reference to any subject presented for our consideration is much to be commended. It is a very difficult question as to how much any one is to be blamed for not possessing such noble qualities of mind naturally, and, consequently, for not acting them out, as the Bereans did.

It is evident that there have been those who believed on Jesus with only a natural belief, and followed him for a time from only natural motives, and were finally manifested as having no love for the truth, no spiritual belief in the doctrine of Jesus, but as really hating him and his words, and as having pleasure in unrighteousness.—John vi. 66; viii. 30-40; Acts viii. 9-24; 2 Thess. ii. 12.

The true believer hath the witness in himself.—1 John v. 10. Jesus is the faithful and true witness, and all the real, vital knowledge any one can have of him is by experience. He is in us the hope of glory. To know him is life eternal.—John xvii. 3. Faith is the evidence to and in the poor sinner, upon which belief on Jesus and all things concerning him is founded. Now, when the Lord sends a preacher to this living soul (and no preacher can ever find such a soul unless God does send him), he enables that preacher to tell our own exercises and interpret them, to tell us what we already know of Jesus, and to set that experimental knowledge of ours before us in the light of the Scriptures; and we believe what is preached so far as it corresponds with our knowledge by experience of the man Christ Jesus, whom the Lord's ministers preach. So Jesus is the witness within the soul, faith is the evidence, the preacher brings the testimony of the Scriptures in order before us, which answers to the witness within, and belief follows. Searching the Scriptures of the prophets and of Moses was a very essential thing for the Jews to do. It was the unbelieving Jews who thought they had eternal life in the Scriptures, that Jesus told to search them, for they testified of him.—John v. 39. When the various forms of testimony are seen to perfectly correspond, then belief is established.

The preacher tells you of a Man you have seen, and tells you many blessed things concerning him that you did not know before; yet in your knowledge of the Man is embraced all that is truly said of him, and so you judge the declarations of the preacher, the message of the angel, by that Spirit of knowledge within you. God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness gave the light of that knowledge in your soul.—2 Cor. iv. 6. The preacher is telling of the road to the city of God, is describing the highway of holiness. He is not urging us to set about seeking that road, for every God-sent preacher knows that those to whom he is sent to preach are already seeking urgently and longingly for it; but he is telling about it, and to your unspeakable surprise and joy he describes the very road you are in, with all its wonderful turnings and changes, its heights and depths, its terrors and darkness, and its bright and peaceful scenes. If he talks about a road you have never traveled, a country you have never entered, a man you have never seen, you hear without interest; but when he tells of what you have seen and felt, your soul is alive with holy interest. "Who is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as God gave to every man?"

"Many of them believed;" not all of them. "As many as were ordained unto eternal life believed" when Paul preached at Antioch.—Acts xiii. 48. Just that number, neither more nor less, have believed on every occasion when the truth has been preached before and since; and so it will be always, even to the end of the world.

A man without any interest in spiritual things may be much engaged in a search for truth in regard to what the Scriptures teach, from the same motive that would cause him to study any worldly science or system of philosophy. Again, a man may have divine life, and yet be so governed by prejudice against the doctrine of election, and against "the sect that is everywhere spoken against," that for a time he will close his eyes and ears to any of their teachings. But when the Lord's time comes all that opposition will melt away. How many we have known who have sat down with anger in their hearts toward the preacher, and people, and doctrine, but who have been amazed beyond measure, and filled with holy delight and love, to hear from him, through that very doctrine they hated, the secrets of their own hearts told, and to find their hope of salvation declared and confirmed.

The man of candid mind, noble principles, exalted thoughts and generous impulses, naturally, is much to be commended, and his presence and labor are desirable; for acts that result from such motives will be beneficial to others, and to himself. I do not say he is to be praised, for he did not order and arrange the various circumstances and powers, past and present, which now distinguish him mentally, physically and socially, from the lowest and most degraded of his race.

But God's family, who are all noble, all "well born," for they are all children of a King, are not at all to be praised, nor have they a desire for praise because of anything they are, or anything they do. For it is by the grace of God they are what they are as his children, redeemed from sin and death, and it is through him that they have ever been enabled to do one right thing, or think one pure and holy thought. Without him they can do nothing, and so they are unto his praise, and not to their own; unto the praise of the riches of his grace, through which the riches of his everlasting love were manifested in their souls for their comfort here in time, and for their eternal happiness in heaven.

GHEAT, Ky., Jan. 28, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—When the index of the paper for the year 1895 came to hand I was made to regret that I had so often worried the readers of that paper with my poor, feeble thoughts. But during the winter I have been suffering with a serious affliction which has confined me to my room most of the time, which I have spent in reading and sometimes in sweet meditation on the great and wonderful truths recorded in the sacred volume. In those meditations the most wonderful event ever recorded by the pen of the historian, the crucifixion of our Lord, came before me. The sacred historian says, "Then were there two thieves crucified with him; one on the right hand and the other on the left."—Matt. xxvii. 38. This question arises in the mind of the student of that sacred volume, How is that student edified, instructed or comforted by being made to know that his glorious Redeemer was crucified between two thieves? Nothing comes before him than this humiliating thought that the unbelieving Jews and the pagan idolaters of Rome intensely desired to make his crucifixion as humiliating as possible and to degrade him in his death below the lowest level of those who were punished for crimes under Roman law. But they did not know that this great and wonderful humiliation was foreknown and fixed in the eternal mind of Jehovah. Yet this was true, for the prophet Isaiah had declared, "He hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors."—Isa. liii. 12. While this wonderful humiliation sinks very deeply into the hearts of all true believers, yet they are not comforted by it if it has no deeper meaning than that sorrowful humiliation of our Lord; but if it presents to the minds of God's true people other great, deep and profound truths which are made known to them in their experience, let them meditate upon these sacred truths as they wander onward in their weary way towards their future and eternal home. The apostle says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. Those wonderful historic truths are evidently as much embraced in that declaration of the apostle as were the Old Testament Scriptures. Then it behooves the saints in these degenerate days to anxiously inquire as to what was signified by our Lord being crucified between two thieves. Matthew says, "Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others, himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him," &c. "The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth."—Matt. xxvii. 41-44. Luke says, "And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us. But the other rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? and we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke xxiii. 39-43. Now, is it not legitimate to suppose that those two men were representative characters, who very fully represent the two great classes, the unbelievers and the true believers in our glorious Lord? All of Adam's race, until they are born of incorruptible seed, require natural or ocular proofs of any great truth before they are willing to accept it. The first one of these malefactors that spoke said, "If thou be Christ, save thyself and us." Thus he demanded proof of the character of the Messiah. He demanded a sign. Luke says, "And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven."—Luke xi. 16. In verse 29 he said, "This is an evil generation; they seek a sign; and there shall no sign be given it but the sign of Jonas the prophet. Of that prophet it is written, 'Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah; and Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.' Again, 'And the Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.' It was thus the burial and resurrection of our Lord was prefigured, and before it occurred he spoke of that sign to the unbelieving Jews; but they had natural hearts and did not understand that sign which must be given. He said, 'Thus it is written, and thus it be-hooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day." Neither those unbelieving Jews nor that malefactor understood the sign of Jonas the prophet; and when that sign was fulfilled by the resurrection of our Lord those Jews tried to conceal it by the most wicked means within their reach. But the fulfillment of that sign was part of the gospel that must be preached to all nations. That malefactor and those Jews, being natural, believed not the things of the Spirit. The former demanded a sign which was an impossibility; for if his demand had been complied with, and Christ had come down from the cross and saved himself from the suffering of death, his mission to earth would have been defeated, which was to save his people from their sins. But, as quoted above, he said, "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day." Those unbelieving Jews were no exception to the unregenerate sons and daughters of an apostate Adam in every age, land and clime. The apostle says, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself. He that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son."—1 John v. 10. That record testified of the resurrection of Christ, and they disbelieved it. If further evidence were necessary to establish the truth that the malefactor who reviled our Lord on the cross, those unbelieving Jews, as well as all the unregenerate sons and daughters of the first Adam, are unbelievers in the glorious Son of God, we would say that they are all men and women, and that the natural man receiveth not the things of Spirit; for they are foolishness unto them; neither can they know them, for they are spiritually discerned. The apostle says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." That grace and that faith are the gift of God. Alone in the new and spiritual birth are those heavenly gifts received. The exercise of that faith is evidence to the true believer that he is born again; that he has been created in Christ Jesus unto good works; for it works by love and purifies the heart. Then it is evident to me that in that mournful scene on Calvary there were two representative characters: one who represented the unregenerate world of mankind in all ages and climes; the other representing true believers, who had been born of the Spirit, by which they received evidence that they were heirs of God and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ to all the ineffable glories of the redeemed. Now, dear followers of Jesus, let us look within ourselves and see how much we have been and are like that poor, condemned and dying malefactor who said to his dying Lord, "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

He had said to the other malefactor, "Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? and we justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss." Ah, dear follower of Jesus, how often have you been made to feel and to say, We are in the same condemnation with all the fallen sons and daughters of Adam; for we are sinners, and our condemnation is just. How deeply has that language of the prophet entered your inmost being, who said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. xviii. 20. Your sad and sorrowful experience has made you know that you are a sinner, and against the justice of your condemnation you have not a single plea. Touching that condemnation you in deep contrition of heart would say with that poor, dying malefactor, "We indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds." Surely,

"When to the law I trembling fled,
It poured its curses on my head."

That poor malefactor was dying; and when you, dear saint, are in that sorrowful experience, you are dying to sin. The apostle says, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." By the power of the Spirit you are made to behold it in all its horrid deformity. Just then a spirit of prayer, of deep and fervent supplication, is given you, and with the poor, dying thief you cry out, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." In that prayer there is none of the gaudy tinsel work which appears in the so-called prayers spoken by the worldly educated clergy in these degenerate days. In that prayer faith was made manifest when the dying thief said, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." What a striking contrast between this and the language of the other malefactor, who said, "If thou be Christ, save thyself and us." With what irresistible force the language of the apostle comes before us, "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh unto God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." That malefactor in addressing our Lord used none of the appellations that belong to the Deity, and he did not recognize him to be "Lord of all." He did not believe he was the rewarder of them that diligently seek him. But the other made his faith manifest when he said, "But this man hath done nothing amiss;" thus declaring the pure and holy character of our ever to be adored Redeemer. Then surely he had that faith which works by love, and in that faith he received his passport into the realms of eternal bliss, when his Lord said to him, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Ah, dear saint, when you have been made by grace divine to see and know the deep seated corruption of your sinful heart, and enabled to be-

PREDESTINATION.

WE have no desire to make or ride a hobby of any sort in our preaching or writing, for hobbies are never of any use, and neither can they make any progress; neither would we make a hobby out of the doctrine of the predestination of all things that come to pass. While we have always believed this doctrine, and from our childhood dwelt among a people who believed it, yet we have never felt to make a test of fellowship out of it. We recall that quite a good many years ago we one evening discussed this doctrine until nearly midnight with a brother who was not then prepared to receive it, but who since has come to believe it, and we certainly felt no diminution of fellowship then for him, although he very ably opposed the views that we presented. We have felt the same ever since about the matter. We have been much grieved to learn from various quarters that some churches and brethren have refused their pulpits to brethren who believe this doctrine.

But of this it was not our design to speak especially. We have received several letters recently stating that in some sections those who believe this principle of doctrine are charged with denying, first, that man is accountable to God for his sins; second, that a church has any right to discipline her erring members; third, that exhortation is scriptural; fourth, with asserting that every man is doing the best he can, no matter how perverse his conduct may be; fifth, that Jehovah is the author of sin (whatever that may mean); sixth, that there is really no difference between sin and holiness; and seventh, that the sinner is doing the will of God as much as the believer. Several have written to us that they thought we should take notice of these charges against those who hold and love this doctrine.

In complying with this repeated request of brethren we will say that it is not our purpose now to discuss predestination as to whether it is scriptural or not. We have done this once or twice in the last volume of the SIGNS, and do not design to repeat what we then said. We will say that we have heard these very objections urged against the doctrine by its opponents all our life, but we have never heard any brother who believed in predestination say that he believed the things of which we have spoken. We know that believers in the doctrine have been charged with holding the above named sentiments, but we have never met one who would admit it. It may seem to the opponents of predestination that these absurd consequences logically grow out of it, but we who believe it must not be charged with holding to the conclusions which its opponents may draw out of it.

We speak for the brethren in this eastern part of the country, and we are sure that we only voice their sentiments when we say that we all deny the above named statements, and do not believe that they grow out of the doctrine of unlimited predestination.

All that we believe concerning the predestination of all things is expressed in the Scriptures concerning the predestination of some things. As we believe that Jehovah meant for Joseph to be sold into bondage to save much people alive, and yet also believe that his brethren were evil in purpose and sinful in the act of selling him, and were justly censured, though God had appointed their act; as we believe that God had appointed and raised up Pharaoh, that through his wickedness and hardened heart the power and glory of God should be exhibited, and Pharaoh met with the judgment of God for doing what he had been raised up to do, and was held accountable to his Maker, though he had but fulfilled the purpose of God; as we believe that Jesus was crucified by the determinate, eternal purpose of God, by the men whom he had set apart for that purpose, and yet they were held to have done it with wicked hands; as we believe that the thing which the hand and purpose of God determined before to be done was done by the rulers and Pontius Pilate against the Lord and against his Christ; so we also believe concerning the predestination of every other wicked thing, and concerning the guilt of those who do these things. We claim no more for all things, so far as God's predestination and man's accountability and guilt are concerned, than belongs to the special incidents that we have named. In these things man was held guilty for doing the thing which God had purposed, and so we believe is true of all the wickedness of men. Thus we believe emphatically in the guilt of man.

We do not feel under any obligation to undertake to reconcile these things, because Paul did not attempt it in the ninth chapter of Romans; but we do deny that predestination is chargeable with the consequences named above, unless it can be shown that they are chargeable upon the Bible incidents named above. When we thus speak we mean not only ourself, but our brethren in the east generally. When the brethren who oppose predestination, no doubt sincerely and honestly, will take up the Scriptures to which we have referred, and show how God's predestination there is reconcilable with the just judgment of God against those who did those things by any principle whatever, then we will gladly accept their work, and shall find no difficulty in applying the same to any other wicked act of men.

Especially as to the assertion that churches have no right to discipline their erring members, our observation is and has been, so far as our acquaintance extends, that those churches which most firmly hold the doctrine of predestination of all things are the most strict in their discipline of their members; and the individual brethren who are most firmly rooted in this doctrine are among those who most deeply deplore their transgressions. This may seem to some strange and inconsistent; but we certainly think it is no more so than Peter was when he went out and wept bitterly after denying his Lord thrice before the cock crew, although he knew that Jesus had before declared that he would, and that had he not denied the Lord that very night exactly three times the word of Jesus would have been falsified. Peter felt that he deserved discipline, although after his Lord had spoken at least he could not have avoided what he did; and so we believe in church discipline and in predestination at the same time.

We cannot speak for brethren all over the country who believe in unlimited predestination; but we at least do believe that man is accountable for his sins, that churches should discipline their erring members, that exhortation is scriptural, that we never have been able to say that we have done the best we could, and we at least deny that God is the author of sin. We believe there is an infinite difference in the sight of God between sin and holiness, and we deny that the sinner is doing the will of God as much as the believer.

We have not here been arguing the doctrine as to its truth or falsity, but simply have designed to show our freedom from the absurd ideas named above. If brethren in other sections do not hold these things they should say so in the places where the charges have been made.

HOW CAN WE KNOW?

THERE are hundreds of subscribers on our list whose subscriptions are in arrears from two or three months to two years and over, and it is impossible for us to discern who among them wish their paper continued, and intend to pay for it, and who through negligence and indifference are allowing it to come to them and do not intend to pay for it. Now, we can better afford to continue a paper and wait for the pay than to lose the subscriber altogether; but what we wish to avoid is sending the paper for two or three years after the time is out, and then receiving notice from the subscribers that they never ordered it continued after their time was out, and therefore will not pay for it. If any are now getting the paper who do not want it they will please inform us, that we may discontinue it to them. It costs us just as much to send the paper to those who do not care enough about it to even notify us that they do not want it, as it does to send to those who take the deepest interest in reading it.

Although the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is passing through the "hardest times" financially that it has ever known since our day, we can better afford to continue a paying subscriber on credit than lose his patronage altogether. Yet if those of our brethren and friends whose subscription has expired can make us a remittance without too much inconvenience to themselves, we assure them it will come very acceptable at present, and be thankfully received.

THE PATH OF THE JUST.

"But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov. iv. 18.

The wise and divinely inspired writer of our text in this connection presents the contrast between the just and the wicked; the path of the former is as stated in our text, and the way of the latter is darkness—they know not at what they stumble. A path necessarily implies a narrow passage, a beaten track, designed for foot-travelers, and not for chariots and horses; and such is the way of life and salvation: it is strait and narrow, but it leadeth unto life; while a way may be wide and broad, like the road that leads to death, in which great numbers of the human family are walking. If there had been no liability of professors of christianity walking in the broad way we conclude that our Savior would not have given his disciples the solemn charge which we find recorded Matthew vii. 13. The path of life is sufficiently wide to admit all the redeemed of the Lord when stripped of their own filthy rags—when stripped for the race and harnessed for the battle; but the professor of religion who wishes to carry the world along with him, or the doctrines, commandments and traditions of men, the religious inventions of men, and the plans and means, institutions and associations for saving the world, such professors will find the way of life quite too strait for them. They must leave their stuff behind them, or take the broad and darksome way, wherein they shall not know at what they stumble; and although that way seems right unto them, we are assured that the end thereof are the ways of death. The house of the "strange woman," antichrist, "is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death."—Prov. vii. 27.

Before we attempt a definition of the path of the just it may be proper to define the character of the just, unto whom the path is devoted. By nature we are children of wrath; but God, who is rich in mercy, for the great love wherewith he hath loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together with Christ Jesus; and thus "by grace ye are saved."—Eph. ii. 4-6. By the deeds of the law none can be justified in the sight of God, for by it is the knowledge of sin; and its office is to stop the mouth, and present the whole world guilty before God. The only reason we can give why any human being hopes for justification by the law on account of their own works is because the way in which they travel is so intensely dark that they cannot see the absurdity of their delusion. Their chains of darkness blind their minds, lest they should come to the knowledge of the truth. They are shut up in darkness, because it has seemed good in the sight of God to hide these things from them, which he reveals unto babes. The just who are spoken of in our text are those who are freely justified by the blood and righteousness of Christ, and through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, "who was delivered for their offenses, and raised again for their justification."—Rom. iv. 25. Washed in the Redeemer's blood, and clothed in the garments of his salvation; and in the robe of his righteousness, God beholds no iniquity in Jacob, nor transgression in Israel. The faith of God's elect, in the experience of heaven-born souls, apprehends this justification unto life, as they receive the atonement.—Rom. v. 1, 11.

For God's children thus freely justified, and unto whom "there is therefore now no condemnation" (Romans viii. 1), there is a path provided which no fowl knoweth; the vulture's eye has not seen it, nor the lion's whelp polluted it. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there; but it shall be for the ransomed of the Lord.—Isa. xxxv. 9.

A path is a thoroughfare or passage leading from one place to another, and the term may be applied to the way in which God's children are brought from darkness to light, from death to life, from guilt and condemnation to holiness and justification; but in all these respects Christ is himself the way, and the only way, for no man cometh unto God but by him.

The particular sense in which the term "path" is used in the text under consideration to us appears to mean the way in which the saints are led doctrinally, experimentally and practically to walk. It is the King's highway of holiness, marked by the footprints of that divine Leader whose words of command to all his children are, "Follow me."

In doctrine they are to preach, hear, receive, believe and contend earnestly for the doctrine of the gospel as laid down by him, personally, or through his apostles. Experimentally they follow him in the regeneration, in trials, temptations, submission to the will of the Father, in reproaches, sufferings and deliverances. And as he, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, so they are, in anticipation of the glory that shall be revealed in them, to travel in the same blood-stained pathway, expecting only to be fully satisfied when they shall awake with his likeness.

In practice. As he learned obedience, and faithfully performed the work which was given him to do, and as it was his meat and his drink to do the will of him that sent him, and to finish his work, so has he enjoined on his disciples to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded them. They are to follow him from Galilee to Jordan, into the liquid grave, in christian baptism, and thence (if need be) into the wilderness, to fast, and to be tempted concerning their sonship and heirship, as he was, by the devil. They are to follow him in his holy walk, in his blameless deportment, in rendering to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that belong to God; in connecting with our fellow-members of his mystical body, in bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling his law; in being kindly affectionate one towards another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven them. They are to follow him in discountenancing every religious practice for which he has left no precept or example in the New Testament, as an innovation upon the order of his kingdom; in contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and in going unto him without the camp and bearing his reproach. Christians should always remember that it is as wide a departure from the path of the just to do (religiously) what Christ has not required of them, as to leave undone what he has commanded; in either case we disown Jesus as our only King and divine Legislator. When national Israel had no king, they did every man that which was good in his own eyes; but the loyal subject of a king must obey his commands.

But we are to consider the comparison used in our text in regard to the path of the just. It is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. There is a two-fold sense in which this figure will hold good; first, in regard to the justified family of God in the several dispensations under which they have performed their pilgrimage; and secondly, in regard to the individual travel of every christian under the gospel dispensation, until he shall reach the unclouded regions of eternal glory.

First. We have, as we conceive, shown that the justification which is by and through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, applies to the elect of God in all ages of the world, including, of course, all the Old Testament saints, from Abel to the advent of Christ, as well as those of the present dispensation. Truly the beaten path of the old patriarchs and prophets was as a shining light, and as a light shining in a dark place; for their path was pointed out by the immediate revelation of God. When by the offense of man sin entered the world, the heavens gathered blackness, and the prospects of happiness and divine favor were concealed from human scrutiny; death, hell and hopeless misery spread like a misty cloud over all the sons of Adam; but the path of the just, or the manner in which God designed to justify the ungodly, began to shine, in strong contrast with the sable shades of surrounding darkness, in the intimation of a covering for God's people, signified by the clothing of skins provided, the typical character of Adam as the figurative image of him that was to come, even Christ, by the tree of life, in the east of Eden, by the offering of Abel, the translation of Enoch, the election unto salvation from the deluge of Noah and his family, the covenant made with him, and its sign in the clouds, &c. These figures, comparatively dim at first, gathered lustre as they commingled with other figures—the calling of Abraham, the covenant made with him, confirmed in Isaac and Jacob, the blessing of the tribes, the national organization of Israel as a peculiar people of God, the law with all its types, the prophets with all their predictions of good things to come, the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices, the temple and its ordinances, all combined their rays, shining more and more until the refulgent light of life and immortality broke forth in the resurrection of our Lord Jesus from the dead, ushering in the light and meridian brightness of the gospel dispensation. Then did the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings, in all the brightness of his Father's glory, and as the express image of his person.—Mal. iv. 3; Heb. i. 3. Then did the people who sat in darkness behold a great light, when they beheld the Mediatorial glory of Christ, the glory as of the only begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth. In him was light, and the light was the life of men. This was, in the application of the figure in our text, the consummation of the perfect day. In this perfect light the church was seen in her heavenly state, clothed with the Sun, and having the moon under her feet; and "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness," shined in the heart of his spiritual kingdom, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Then was the great trumpet blown in Zion, and the heart-cheering, long-looked-for proclamation was made, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord," even the brightness of the Father's glory, was risen upon the church of God, and the way opened in which the Gentiles should come to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising. Well might the inspired prophet sing, "This is the day which the Lord has made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." "This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes." Every heaven-born soul is translated out of darkness into God's marvelous light. They are all children of the light; and they are commanded to let their light so shine that others, seeing their good works, may glorify their Father in heaven.

Secondly. In applying the figure to the individual experience of the children of God every saint may be his own commentator. The christian traveler has only to review his own experience to discover that what was applicable in this figure to the Israel of God collectively is equally applicable to him individually. The Lord found Israel in a waste howling wilderness, and he led him about, and instructed him, and kept him as the apple of his eye, &c.—Deut. xxxii. 10. Each member of Christ has wandered far from God; but the Lord has found every one of them in the desert land of sin, under condemnation, dead in trespasses and sins, and translated them into his marvelous light. The very life which in the eternal counsel was hid for them with Christ in God before the world began is light; for in him was light, and the light was the life of men.—John i. 4. The quickening of this dead sinner is an instantaneous work of God; for there can be no space of time when the subject of this work is neither dead nor alive, although much time may elapse from the moment of his being quickened before he is enabled to rejoice in God as his Savior. When the life which God gave him in Christ before the world began is communicated by regeneration to an heir of glory, he is made to feel something of his lost and sinful state and condition before the just and holy God. The new conceptions which he has of God, the justice, purity and holiness of his character and of his law, are such as he never had before; and they are such as prove that he is just commencing his spiritual pilgrimage in the path of the just. We admit he feels himself as being upon the verge of eternal darkness; all is dark as midnight to his understanding. But this very feeling is an evidence that God has entered him upon the path that is as a shining light; for that which maketh manifest is light, and God is manifested to him, and the law, so that he has a view of the divine perfections, which dazzle and confound him, and the light which reveals to him the majesty of God makes him afraid. He feels as Manoah and as Isaiah did when they saw the indescribable glory of the Lord, and in their language he cries out, "We shall surely die, because we have seen God." "Woe is me!

for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."—Judges xiii. 22; Isaiah vi. 5. That shining light which reveals to us the holiness of God also discovers to us the pollution of our nature, and the result is that we discover such infinite disparity between God and ourselves that we confess we are not fit to live, and as yet we can see no way in which God's purity can be maintained only by consigning us to death and hell; but this shining light is to shine more and more, and in its shining the glorious Savior is to be revealed as our Savior in all his suitableness and loveliness. In this light the regenerated are made to see how God can be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Christ; and in this light such manifestations are made of Christ as cannot be resisted. When Christ is revealed, light in greater radiance breaks in upon the mind, and the revelation of the glory of God in the salvation of poor, lost and helpless sinners enraptures the delivered captive. But should this light no longer shine, after the redeemed are brought once to rejoice in Christ, how gloomy would be the pathway of the children of God! But they find that it shineth more and more. In this first manifestation of peace and salvation through Christ all is bright and clear (or it is in many instances so), and we conclude that the corruptions of our nature are all subdued, and that they will never rise again; we shall never sin any more; for we have no relish for sin; all is light and joy and peace. But presently, alas! the corruptions of our nature begin again to be seen and felt; and these disclosures we miscall darkness, but in reality is the same light, and shining more and more, disclosing what our former experience had not convinced us of. We are however greatly alarmed, and begin to question the reality of our passage from death unto life, and fear that what we had taken for light will no more shine. But it shines more and more, showing us that these trials are common to all the family of God: new manifestations are made, our doubts for the moment are subdued, and again we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. In the beginning of our christian experience this light shines on us as babes in Christ; presently it shines on us more, as little children, admonishing us to keep ourselves from idols; as young men, it shines on us, pointing out our course in following the Lamb; and as old men, elders and fathers in the family, it shines, and enables us to discover the many wrong impressions we have entertained, manifesting one tradition after another, and one error after another, which we have held as truth. Among these disclosures made by the shining light on aged saints, perhaps none is more common than that by which they are convinced of their mistake when young, in supposing that when old they should be more circumspect, more spiritual, more Christ-like, more understanding and clear in the knowledge of divine things; but the light now convinces them that they have nothing cheering to expect from the flesh, and that they shall not, cannot, be completely satisfied until they shall awake with the likeness of Christ.

From the moment of their heavenly birth until they shall be presented in the fullness of immortal glory, they shall be the recipients of the new discoveries of the boundless glory of God, the indescribable beauties of Christ, the amazing riches of the grace of God in their salvation, and new lessons also of the depravity of their old, Adamic nature, the deceitfulness of the heart, and the constant necessity of being sustained by the everlasting arm of him who rideth upon the heavens in the help of Israel, and in his excellency on the sky. But when all the trials and conflicts of this pilgrimage are over, that which is only in part with them shall be passed away; then shall they see even as they are seen, and know even as they are known. They shall then have arrived at the fountainhead and fullness of that immortal light in which the "Only and blessed Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," dwells; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; whom no man can approach unto; to whom be glory and honor for evermore.

In closing, permit us to say this path is a way of pleasantness, and a path of peace; for "Great peace have they who love thy law [the law of Christ's kingdom], and nothing shall offend them."

All other ways, in a religious sense, are ways of darkness, and they who walk in them know not at what they stumble; for stumble they shall; but they know not at what.

Finally let all who fear the Lord stand in the way and diligently inquire for the old paths, and walk in them. Be not deceived or misled into any cross tracks or nearer cuts, smoother roads or more popular passages; they are darkness and their end is death.

LARGE TYPE SMALL BIBLES.

WE would especially call attention to the advertisement on last page, of small, light Bibles, printed in large full-faced type. While these Bibles weigh only from two to three pounds they are printed in large full-faced type that can be easily read by those whose sight is failing.

The extended covers lap over and protect the edges of the leaves.

ERRATA.

ON page 31 of current volume, in the letter of brother John Moulds, Sr., instead of saying, "I am now in my eighty-fourth year," it should read "eighty-eighth year."

CORRESPONDENCE.

lieve that your glorious Lord is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, has not your cry been, "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom?" You could not have uttered that cry without faith. When that faith was given you, and you received an answer to that cry, that fervent supplication, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," then you were like him of whom the apostle speaks, saying, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth); such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth); how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter."—2 Cor. xii. 2-4. This was the condition of that poor, suffering malefactor; and this was your condition, dear saint. God had manifested to him the free pardon of his many sins, as he did to you when he placed your feet upon a rock, established your goings, and put a new song in your mouth. But O what joy pervaded the heart of that suffering thief when those precious words came to him, assuring him of the free pardon of all his sins; and what unspeakable rejoicing was yours when your dear Redeemer appeared to you and said in sweetest accents, "Thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven." Then neither you nor he could tell whether you were in the body or out of the body. Then he and you heard words which were not lawful for a man to utter. The law of our language is too feeble to utter or give expression to the joys of the redeemed when God is manifested to them as their Redeemer and their sins are forgiven. Then in holy delight they cry out, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." Then redeeming love permeates their spiritual mind and heart, and they are made to lie down in green pastures beside still waters. To them the precious truth of the gospel is a green pasture, and the sweet waters of God's redeeming grace sustain and strengthen them all the remaining days of their earthly pilgrimage, till they are called to lay their armor by and dwell with Christ at home. But perhaps some one will say, I do not like to be placed in the same list, in the same company, with the poor thief who was condemned for some great crime under Roman law. Let the apostle James answer that objector, who says, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James ii. 10. The apostle Paul placed himself in the class of the chief of sinners; and the prophet Isaiah said, "Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." Then let none conclude that they are little sinners. All have offended and come short of the glory of God. But let all rejoice in these great and glorious truths, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. The same grace that saved the poor, suffering thief saves all the glorified millions around the eternal throne, and their sweet and ever precious song is, and ever will be, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." That sweet and precious song which is begun by saints on earth will never cease throughout eternity, for it gives to God all the glory. It is your chief delight while clad with mortality to give unto God the glory due to his name; but the corruptions of earth often mar your best efforts and chill your warmest desires; yet you are hastening to that blessed abode of the sainted millions where

"No chilling winds or poisonous breath
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

But when pain, affliction and sorrow are your companions, you in mournful numbers sing,

"When shall I reach that happy place
And be forever blest?
When shall I see my Father's face
And in his bosom rest?"

You will please dispose of these poor thoughts as you may deem best, and believe me affectionately yours, with a fervent desire that when the day dawns for my departure I may be able from the depths of my heart to sing,

"Farewell, vain world, I'm going home;
My Savior smiles and bids me come;
Bright angels beckon me away,
To sing God's praise in endless day."

H. COX.

GOOD HOPE, D. C., Dec. 17, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Not having had the privilege of attending the meetings in Washington for some time, I have felt a desire to write to you; yet I wonder where such desires and impressions come from, or why should I desire and feel impressed to write to one like yourself, so favored of the Lord, a servant of the most high God; whom he has called and qualified to teach and to comfort his people. It does seem like presumption for me to attempt to write to you; still I desire to write, while I seem to sink into nothingness, and to esteem all my brethren better than myself. I have been sick most of the time for the past six weeks, and while confined to the house have been reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have read all of them for this year, and some numbers of last year. I am delighted with the paper. It has many able contributors. I have much enjoyed the editorials, especially those headed "Six questions answered," "An appeal," "Sunday Schools," and many others. I trust they may all have their influence for good in these dark and trying times. While reading I felt to thank and praise the Lord for such manifestations of the gifts which he has bestowed upon you. Truly your responsibility as an editor and a minister of the gospel is great, and I am glad you so fully realize it. O that the Lord would send more laborers into his vineyard. It seems "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Many humble believers are being captivated by worldly religionists who never heard a gospel sermon. One I have in mind now, whom I have not seen for years, but who writes me some most touching letters, in which she speaks of her soul's distress and dissatisfaction, and longs to hear, as she says, just one gospel sermon, although she has been a member of a certain denomination for years. She told me I was the only Old Baptist she had ever met, although when I talked with her I was not a member. It came about in this way: for a short time she and I lived in the same town, and were near neighbors (but now are about two hundred miles apart), and soon we became very intimate. I loved her, and she seemed to love me, and we talked a great deal on religion. She said she knew I was dissatisfied with the denomination I had been trying to go with, and had them to drop my name (for she was in the same church), and so she ventured to tell me of her dissatisfaction and distress. She said her husband told her he would leave his church and go with her if she could be better satisfied in any other church. "But," she continued, "I have been to all of them, and they all seem the same; but I feel impressed that there is a church that I have never heard of where I could find a home." I then began and named all denominations, except the Old Baptists. She said she knew something of them all, but could not feel at home with any of them. I then asked her if she knew anything of the Primitive Baptist Church. She said she knew of the Missionary Baptists, but did not like them any better than her own church. Then she added, "I have heard of a denomination called the Old, Hardshell Baptists, but have always heard they are a very bad people; but I don't know anything of them." I told her they were the people I was speaking of; that that name was given them through persecution; that they were the regular Baptist Church. I told her of the doctrine and practices of the church, and of my love for them, though I was not a member. When I had finished telling her she exclaimed with tearful eyes, "Mrs. Alderton, that's the church! that's the church! I have had it on my mind, but never before heard of it, nor knew there was such a church; and now I know just enough to want to know more. O that I could hear just one Baptist sermon!" But she has never yet had that privilege. How I do sympathize with her! I have written all this, believing that you could so clearly see the hand of the Lord in the case of this dear one, and rejoice as I have. It seems she was directed to the church of God, while she never had heard of it. But why must some of the Lord's dear little ones be left for a time in the hands of, and at the mercy of, it seems, the enemies of truth? I must believe it is for some good and wise purpose; for "all things work together for good to them that love God," and he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." If only we could at all times lay hold of these precious promises, how restful it would be to our weary and tried spirits. If when passing through the fiery trials of persecution we could at all times fully realize that we suffer for Jesus' sake, bitter trials would be easy to bear. But if we lose sight of this precious assurance for one moment, it seems, we are almost overcome and crushed as a moth. O! it sometimes seems hard for a poor, weak, timid and sensitive one to live in this world. Dear brother, I hope you will not misunderstand me. I do not mean to complain. I know I deserve to suffer. But sometimes I seem to be raised above the trifling things of this world, and to so fully realize that all I suffer is for Jesus' sake, and can claim every precious promise. Then I can say with the poet,

"Trials make the promise sweet;
Trials give new life to prayer;
Trials bring me to his feet,
Lay me low and keep me there."

Again I seem to get somewhat in darkness, and grieve and worry over things of this world. O! could one be human and not grieve to see loved ones brought under wrong and bad influences? Yet we know the Lord "can work and none can hinder." He can "make rough places smooth, and crooked things straight." The ungodly "have more than heart can wish. Their eyes stand out with fatness." Within the last few weeks I have seen this saying verified. Near my home there have been continued meetings night after night for over two months. They say "about one hundred have been converted," and at the beginning of the meeting they "only asked for fifty." But we must not stop to worry over the works of darkness. Jesus bids us "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

But I must soon close; for this letter is getting too lengthy. I cannot describe my disappointment in not getting out to the meeting last fourth Sunday. I was sick at that time and could not be out so late in the evening. I was away from Washington at the time of the October meeting, so the time seems long to me since I have been permitted to meet with you all there. I do hope to be able to get out next Sunday. When we are permitted to attend and enjoy meetings it seems so plain that it is of the Lord; but when we are deprived of such privileges is it not also of the Lord, though we may not see it so easy? While on my way to visit my parents in West Virginia I was permitted to stop off and attend a union meeting held with my home church in Pennsylvania, this being the first time I had met with them for over a year. It was a great comfort and satisfaction to meet once more with that dear people who so kindly and lovingly received me into their fellowship and gave me a home with them over five years ago, though I do feel very unworthy of such manifestations of love and esteem from my Father's children. While at the home of my parents I was permitted to attend a meeting at the church of my childhood. I feel that I have much more such enjoyment than I deserve.

I did not answer your last good, kind letter, because I did not think it right to bother you with my poor letters. Please excuse me this time, and if you can find time to write me a few lines I am sure it would help me in this dark and trying hour, though I feel like it is asking too much of you. Your letters are always a comfort to me. I have written this hurriedly. Please excuse mistakes. With christian regard to you and your wife, your sister, as I trust,

ARAH ALDERTON.

EDITORIAL REMARKS.—We take the liberty of publishing the above good letter, feeling sure that it will awaken a responsive chord in the hearts of many. It is good to receive words of encouragement from those whom we believe are the children of God. We feel grateful for them.

It is surely good to receive such firm expressions of humble faith in God, and such firm testimony to the doctrine of the divine sovereignty as is contained in the above letter. We confess our faith to be one with that of the writer, "that all things work together for good to them that love God." O that we might daily and hourly live by the truth!

With regard to the case to which reference is made so fully in the above letter, we can only say that we doubt not there are many such cases, and that the Lord has them in his keeping, and that he is causing all to work together for good to them, though it may be in ways that to our finite view seem very mysterious. It is for the benefit of just such ones that our God has ordained the preaching of the gospel. Does it not then behoove us who stand as watchmen upon the walls of Zion to faithfully proclaim his word in all places where in his providence he may open the door? Such inquirers as the one described in the above letter have always called out our earnest sympathy. Our comfort for them is that they are the Lord's, and he knoweth them that are his.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

God, who rules the times and seasons, doubtless for the best of reasons, has seen fit in his wisdom and mercy to remove from us another of the members of the Fort Houston Church, our beloved and esteemed brother, Stephen Carroll.

He was born in Sampson Co., N. C., June 27th, 1816, and died Dec. 30th, 1895. On Dec. 24th he was out riding, looking after his hogs, and while out was affected with something like paralysis of the throat. He went to his home, the doctor was brought soon, and all was done for him that wife, children and friends could do; but the Master had called, and he must go. When he was about twenty years of age he with his father moved to the state of Georgia. He served in the Indian war of 1836. On May 8th, 1839, he was married to Parizade Declé. He and his wife united with the Primitive Baptists in Georgia, in which state all his children were born. By that church in Georgia he was set apart to the office of Deacon, which office he filled faithfully amongst us. In 1871 with his family he moved to Texas, lived two years in McLennan County, and then moved to this (Anderson) county. Here he bought a small farm, eleven miles southeast of Palestine. In May, 1874, he presented his letter from Georgia to the Fort Houston Church, and he and his wife were received. At that time Elder Ben. Parker was pastor. His wife died in 1884, and on Feb. 7th, 1888, by the writer, he was married the second time, to Mrs. A. J. McCook, daughter of G. G. More, of Georgia. The writer of this notice has lived with brother Carroll in the Fort Houston Church twelve years, and never found a more faithful and humble brother in all these years. I never heard him say anything of a brother to hurt or offend. He proved to me by his walk and talk to be meek and humble. He loved peace in the church, and sought for it. He also was an old subscriber for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and loved the doctrine it set forth from first to last. During his last illness he could talk but little to be understood, but enough to let us know that he was ready at God's time to go, and that his faith was unshaken. He was a dear brother in the church; yea, more, if possible—a father in Israel, a kind and affectionate husband, a loving father, a good citizen. The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord. True, we mourn, but not without hope; for we believe that his body, which suffered here, is now easy, and that the spirit returned to God; and we believe that when the trumpet sounds, and the dead are raised, his body will be changed from natural to spiritual, and in that spiritual body he will see Jesus as he is, and be like him.

On Dec. 31st, at the grave, this weak one tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing ones; after which the lifeless form was buried by the side of his wife. We can only say that we hope God may teach the sorrowing ones to trust in him for life and salvation.

U. J. BELL.

PALESTINE, Texas, Jan. 29, 1896.

It becomes our sad duty to chronicle the death of our dear brother in Christ, Aquilla C. Ensor, son of the late Wm. C. and Elizabeth Ensor, and grandson of the late John B. Ensor, who was so well and widely known among Baptists who had ever visited the Black Rock Church. Our brother passed away in the full triumphs of faith Dec. 16th, 1895, aged 51 years, 5 months and 3 days.

He was united in marriage to Celia N. Crommer on Sept. 26th, 1876, who with two children survive him. In company with his companion and two others he was baptized in the fellowship of the Black Rock Church on July 7th, 1889, and remained one of our most earnest and faithful members to the last. He had never been a strong man, and was subject to seasons of weakness; but last August he became seriously ill, and for a few days at that time his life was despaired of. But he rallied to some extent, and was able to be out a part of the time, and was at our meeting a few times; but his strength was failing through a complication of lung and heart troubles, and late in the fall he was confined to the house, though not to his bed until a day before he passed away.

Our brother would not have desired in life that his name should be exalted, and so we will not say of him here all that might be said. Those of us who knew him can bear glad witness to the grace of God manifested in him from his earliest life. It is no more than right and true to say of him that a good neighbor and citizen, a kind husband and father, and a humble and sincere christian, has departed. One marked trait in all his life was his honesty in all things, and his humble opinion of himself; but he would often bewail his failures, and again and again he would bear testimony to the grace of God as his hope of salvation. He was a constant source of comfort and pleasure to us all at Black Rock. It was our privilege to visit him several times during his illness, and it seemed good to listen to his expressions of perfect trust in God, and of submission to his will. As the outward man perished, the inward man was renewed day by day. The last time we saw him living he said that all was right and all was well. The terror of death and the grave was swallowed up, and he rested in the presence of the Savior. His companion and children have the heartfelt sympathy of many friends; but God is their support and shield.

He was buried at Black Rock, in the presence of a large and sorrowing congregation; sorrowing not for him, but for themselves, that they should see his face no more on earth.—Ed.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

THE SAINTS' PILGRIMAGE.

WHEN Jesus' love dwells in our hearts,
Pure as the crystal rills,
Which leaping come and dancing down
From everlasting hills;

We tread the earth beneath our feet,
And, soaring up on high,
From Zion's lofty mountain-top
The promised land we spy.

But on this side a river dark
Flows downward at our feet,
Through whose cold waters we must pass
Ere our joy is complete.

O Lord of love, still bear us up
Till we this stream cross o'er,
And with the saints of God unite
Triumphant on the shore.

CONFESSION AND SUPPLICATION.

FATHER of all mercies and God of all grace,

We're sinners, yet long for the smiles of thy face;

As beams of the morning dispel shades
of night,

So a sense of thy presence turns darkness to light.

When wearied with turmoil, with sorrow and pain,

When the tempter returns to the conflict
again,

We fear, like the psalmist, we one day shall fall

By the hand of our merciless enemy,
Saul.

Our hearts are deceitful and desperately vile,

All sinful and weak, and unworthy thy smile;

We cover the face in confusion and shame,

Our lips too unholy to utter thy name.

Prostrate in the dust we would fall at thy feet,

And thy smile and thy favor would humbly entreat;

For no merit of ours, nothing good we have done,

But we plead in the name of thy crucified
one.

Forgive our transgressions, our weakness and sin,

Heal all our backslidings, O cleanse us within;

Keep, Lord, O keep us from going astray,
Lead our wandering feet in the straight,
narrow way.

Our faults have been many, our sins have been more;

We need thy forgiveness each day and each hour.

Shouldst thou mark our iniquities, who could be spared?

But with thee is forgiveness, that thou mayest be feared.

We're fearful and doubting; O give to us strength!

May we know of thy fullness, its height,
depth and length.

Then songs of rejoicing and gladness
we'll raise

To thee in ascriptions of glory and praise.

ABBIE G. CLARK.

SANFORD, Maine.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SHULAMITE.

MY DEAR SISTER IN THE COVE-NANT ORDERED IN ALL THINGS AND SURE:—May the Lord Jehovah bless and comfort your heart with sweet musings upon his gracious and glorious acts, that by precious faith your mind may be stayed upon him who is our everlasting strength.—Isaiah xxvi. 3, 4.

I have perused your precious letter again and again, and felt my heart, if it could be possible, the more drawn forth in love and fellowship for you in Jesus Christ our Lord. I feel that I know what those ties are which bind the household of God together;
yes, they are endearing and imperishable bonds that unite believers in the Lamb of God. This union results from our oneness with Christ Jesus, from whom by joints and bands we have nourishment ministered, and are knit together, and increase with the increase of the
Eph. iv. 15, 16; Col. ii. 19.

"How precious that truth to my soul,
That Christ and his people are one!
He the life-giving Head to the whole,
They members, e'en bone of his bone!

"A union so firm and so sure
Nor Satan and sin can undo;
In Jesus the whole is secure,
And since he lives they shall live too.

"This union brings with it all bliss,
Secured as it is by Christ's powers;
We take part in all that is his,
And Jesus is all that is ours.

"Hence I, a poor creature so mean,
And in myself nothing but sin,
In Christ become perfectly clean,
And holy and righteous in him."

To be in life oneness with the Son of God is a wonder of wonders, a miracle of Jehovah's love and grace and power. A mystery, incomprehensible to natural reason; and it remains a divinely gracious and unspeakable mystery to those who are born of the Spirit, and are called unto the fellowship of the incarnate Word. Blessed mystery! "Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you the hope of glory."—Col. i. 26, 27. Now, my beloved sister, notwithstanding all the deviltry and sinfulness that is in me (that is, in my flesh), notwithstanding all my unbelieving, my fears and quakings, my heavy-heartedness, my wanderings from God, my tossings to and fro, and the cruel temptations of Satan; notwithstanding all, in the face of all that would stand in array against me, my soul has a hope most precious that I am in union with the Lamb of God. This sweet mystery

I cannot explain, but I will tell you about it, and I am persuaded that you will acknowledge in your heart the self-same divine mystery. This confidence that I feel in my heart for you seems to be more abundant than that which I feel for myself, and I cannot for one moment think it is a vain confidence. I have been for a little while in the delightful, comforting and edifying employment of spiritual reckoning (Rom. vi. 11);
and while I have been thus reckoning, a sweet confidence in the Lord has been mine. Our God is the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them who are afar off upon the sea. I trust, my dear sister, that it is not presumptuous for my soul to exclaim, with the apostle Paul,
"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ lives in me."—Gal. ii. 20. I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Gal.
ii. 20. As I re-read your letter a little while before I began writing these lines, the words came into my mind, "What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies." Though I do not know of any that can write any better upon this subject than yourself, yet
I feel like attempting (from my own soul's experience) to pen you some of my thoughts upon this Scripture;
and if I shall be able to pen to you my musings, I trust I shall be able to set forth that sweet confidence of hope which the Holy Spirit has given us in Christ Jesus.

Let us look at this text. "Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies."— Solomon's Song vi. 13. Who is this Shulamite? She is the bride of king Solomon. Her name her royal husband gave her, and is significant of her marriage union with Solomon.
Shulamite is the feminine of Solomon.
In all this we are speaking of the antitypical Solomon, of Christ and the church. Jesus is the Prince of Peace.—Isa. ix. 6. His church may then well bear the name of Shula-mite. Such is the oneness of Christ and his people that they are not twain, but one. "This," saith the apostle Paul, "is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church."—Eph. v. 32. "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." How gracious is the speech of our Beloved! He calls his church, the Shulamite, by the endearing names of "My sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled." "My dove, my undefiled, is but one; she is the only one of her mother [the new covenant—Gal. iv. 26]; she is the choice one of her that bare her."

O Shulamite! Happy is thy lot in everlasting wedlock with the Prince-of Peace.

When he made his advent into the world, and was made flesh, and dwelt among us, his coming was heralded by the glad song of the heavenly host, praising God and saying,
"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." He made peace for his church by the blood of his cross. He is our peace.—Eph. ii. 13, 14. Believing in him, we are filled with joy and peace.
The peace of God which passeth understanding keeps our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. When our enemies, sins and temptations have invaded our land, and have trodden in our palaces, our Beloved's voice and gracious presence have given us peace. Our dear Redeemer shows us his wounded hands and side, and tenderly speaks to our tried hearts, saying, "Peace be unto you."
—John xx. 19, 20; Micah v. 5. It is in union with our spiritual Solomon that our name is the Shulamite, the peaceful one. When his presence is felt what shall disturb us? Who or what shall mar that peace which he gives, and that flows from his bleeding side? His righteousness and atoning blood bar out all intruders, hush the tumult and din of war,
silence all accusations, and give us sweet rest and quietness throughout all our borders. Hear the quieting and charming accents of our heavenly Solomon, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."—John xiv. 27. The Bridegroom is with us; then how can we be sad? "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." O precious moments when by faith we can say,
"My Beloved is mine, and I am his."
He is our Solomon, our Prince of Peace, and we are his Shulamite, his peaceful one. Dear sister, let us believe what Ralph Erskine has written,
"Whate'er thou found'st him at thy best,
He's at thy worst the same,
And in his love will ever rest:
Thy Husband holds his claim."

D. L. Blackwell June 96

"Then dream not he is changed in love,
When thou art changed in frame;
Thou may'st by turns unnumbered move,
Thy Husband's eye the same.

"Thou hast indeed the better part,
The part will fail thee never;
Thy Husband's hand, thy Husband's heart,
Thy Husband's all forever."

"Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee." This is the voice of our heavenly Solomon, whose loving accents constrain and bring back the wandering footsteps of his Shulamite. Whither has she wandered? Why has she strayed away? Did he cast her off? Never. "For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away." O what alluring, constraining power hath one word from the lips of the King. Straightway our wandering and backslidings are healed, our hard-heartedness is dissolved, and we fly to the bosom of our God, and there pour forth the secrets of our life.

"Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return." Yes, we stray away. It is a shameful story that we should ever wander from the dear Savior.—Ezekiel xvi. 63. We confess there is none so glorious and lovely, so kind and compassionate as he. He is fairer than the children of men: grace is poured into his lips. His mouth is most sweet. He is the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. This is our Beloved, and this is our Friend. How then is it that we can ever forget and be drawn aside from our Redeemer God?

But for the present I will cease writing; but I hope to pen you a few more thoughts upon the Shulamite in my next. May the Sun of righteousness rise with healing in his wings upon you.

I am your brother in the fellowship of Christ's gospel,

FRED. W. KEENE.

DEAR SISTER IN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST:—Your letter is dated December 1st, 1895. I know it is time that I should pen you a few lines. It is not because I have not wanted to, but because I have been feeling much leanness of soul, which I thought unfitted me to write as I could desire to. I am not conscious of being spiritually minded even now, but I will confess that I desire to communicate to you a few more thoughts about the Shulamite. Your letter has been sweet and comforting to my soul each time that I have read it, and I feel you are one that can have sympathy and fellowship for me.

At the close of my last I was speaking to you of the Shulamite being away from the presence of the King. An unbelieving heart is a terrible plague to the Shulamite. If Jesus has ever smiled upon us, why then should we doubt his love? How dare we think that he loved us in times past, but now he loves us not? What mean, contemptible thoughts to have of the dear Savior! He from everlasting delighted in his church, and in his great love gave himself for her, an offering and a sacrifice of a sweet-smelling savor unto God, to redeem her from the curse of the law, from deceit and violence, from iniquity, out of the hand of the terrible, from death, from all enemies, from destruction, and to God. Dare we imagine that having loved us and died for us, and having assured our hearts of his redeeming love, that he has repented of his acts, that his love has been chilled, and that he has become weary of us, poor sinners, and has turned away from us forever? Our Lord Jesus Christ is gloriously and graciously the same! He abideth faithful. He cannot deny himself. He hath graven Zion upon the palms of his hands, and her walls are continually before him.

"Jesus loved, and loves forever;
Sion on his heart does dwell;
He will never, never, never,
Leave his church a prey to hell.
All is settled,
And my soul approves it well."

But in our forgetfulness of Jesus' immutability the night seasons of our soul set in, and we are enticed by and become the prey of the insinuations of Satan, and the vain imaginations of our flesh. These imaginations exalt themselves against the knowledge of Christ, and thus we wander in regions of distrust, and find all the way a dreary wilderness.

"O my distrustful heart,
How small thy faith appears!
But greater, Lord, thou art
Than all my doubts and fears.
Did Jesus once upon me shine?
Then Jesus is forever mine."

As we look upon the Shulamite we may be able to discover some of the causes why she is so far off at times from the felt presence of and that sweet communion with the King. "Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee." To view the church of Christ as she stands revealed to our faith in the character of the Shulamite is an attractive and heart-stirring sight. O for divine contemplation, to muse upon the wondrous mystery of Christ and the church. What will ye see in the Shulamite? Not what the world thinks to see in the church, the bride of Christ. Not what the fleshly mind of the dear saints of God suggests should be seen in the Shulamite, the peaceful one. "What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies." Mahanaim.—Gen. xxxii. 2. How apparently contradictory to the name Shulamite is this that we behold, the company of two armies in the peaceful one. Let us now look upon the Shulamite. What are the two armies that we behold in her? There are moments of sweet exaltation by faith in the merits of Jesus, when we cannot see, and we forget that the two armies exist in us. Beneath the smiles of our King, and feasted with his sweet mercy to us, poor sinners, we sit together in heavenly places; and thus reigning with our heavenly Solomon the word of the Lord is spiritually fulfilled, "I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days."—1 Chron. xxii. 9. When the believer by faith receives the abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness, he feelingly reigns in life by one, Jesus Christ. These moments of divine exaltation in Christ Jesus, our glorious and living Head, are the earnest and foretaste of our eternal happiness at the right hand of God.

"Then shall the church, the Lamb's own bride,
Both crowned and seated by his side,
Outshine the sun's meridian ray;
While Jesus, smiling at the sight,
Shall then, with a supreme delight,
The travail of his soul survey."

When Jesus, the Prince of Peace, speaks, saying, "Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee," her soul's affections are all awakened, and she exclaims, "It is the voice of my Beloved." Her wandering steps are stopped, her captivity is turned, and she turns unto the dear Redeemer, whose gracious voice has healed her backslidings. As she approaches to the King, behold in her the company of two armies. How often have we in our approaches unto the Lord in prayer felt that in us there was the company of two armies. Such conflicting emotions! The two armies seen in the Shulamite are described in the Scriptures as the flesh and the Spirit.—Gal. v. 17. The old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.—Eph. iv. 22-24. The law of sin and death in my members, and the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus in my mind.—Romans vii. 23; viii. 2. The conflicting hosts in the child of God arise from the two natures of which he is the subject. The carnal nature, or mind, is enmity against God; but the divine nature, or mind of Christ, which we are partakers of in the new birth, is love and life and peace, and with this mind we worship our gracious and holy God. "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." The one army is corrupt, and the other is pure. The heart of the one is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked (Jer. xvii. 9); while the heart of the other is a pure heart, a new heart.—Matt. v. 8; 2 Tim. ii. 22. The affections of the one are vile (Rom. i. 26; Gal. v. 24); but the affections of the new heart are set upon God, upon his truth and his people. The wisdom of the one army is earthly, sensual, devilish; but the wisdom of the other host descendeth from above, and is "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."—James iii. 15-17. But, dear sister, it is only in our experience that we learn the truth of these Scriptures which describe the composition of the two armies in the Shulamite. It is in the warfare that we learn the natures and powers of these contending hosts. After the inward man we delight in God, and in his law, and strive against sin (Rom. vii. 22; Heb. xii. 4); and then we find another law in our members, warring against the law of our mind, bringing us into captivity to the law of sin which is in our members. Oftentimes amidst her sore conflicts the Shulamite will be found crying out, "The good that I would I do not, but the evil which I would not that I do;" and the bitter cry escapes her bruised heart, as she is held in sin's captivity, "O wretched one that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

"Vex the Midianites, and smite them: for they vex you with their wives."—Numbers xxv. 17, 18. The Shulamite after the inward man mortifies the lusts of the flesh. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." How ensnaring are the lusts of our flesh! Many a distressing conflict we are brought into, or ever we are aware. The hardest foes that the child of God has to contend with are such as appear in the field in such array that for a time it is hard to know whether they are friends or enemies—whether they are carnal or spiritual. So disguised are they that sometimes we entertain and feast them; nor can they be unmasked before they have secretly stabbed and wounded us. Before to-day I have had thoughts and frames and feelings that I thought were right and of God; when afterward I have seen they were all of the flesh, and have loathed them, and loathed myself for entertaining them. I have been so slain, so beaten down in shame before the Lord by the deceitfulness of my vile heart, that I have felt I should never be able to lift up my countenance again in his sight. Once the disciples James and John said, "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias did?" But he turned and rebuked them, and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." That religious zeal which is of the flesh is arrogant; bitter feelings are mixed with it. Our pride, and not the glory of God, is its aim. But heavenly zeal for the Lord and for his truth will always cause us, though as bold as a lion, to have the meekness and gentleness of Christ in our behavior. "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men." We are not to lord it over God's heritage. Faith is in the pure heart of the Shulamite, but in her flesh there will be found an evil heart of unbelief. Many are the conflicts found within. When unbelief lifts up its head it wars against the soul, casting upon us all manner of evil surmisings. It begets within us questionings regarding the promises and faithfulness of God. It insinuates that we are not the beloved of the Lord; that we are not the characters embraced in the promises of God. It cites before us our sinfulness, our unworthiness, our unlikeness to the seed of Christ, and tells us that it is vain, that it is presumptuous, for us to entertain the claim that we are the Shulamite. If you were a child of God would you be in such a state? Would you be so unspiritually minded? Would your life be so barren, and your heart so hard and sinful? "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Precious faith clings to the Savior. In all the struggle with unbelief (that is inherent to the flesh) it looks to the atoning sacrifice of the dear Lamb of God. By faith we rely upon his merits, his righteousness and blood. Out of weakness we become strong in our Redeemer and in the power of his might. The Lord gives us the neck of our enemies, and then in triumph we can sing, "O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength." "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

As the warfare endures, the soul of the Shulamite through many changes goes. At times she may complain with Job, saying, "Changes and war are against me." Now she smiles and lifts up her head; then again, when her enemies are lively (Psalm xxxviii. 19) and press her sorely, when temptations prevail, her sky is overcast, and her head and her heart droop. Such conflicting emotions, pure thoughts, and thoughts impure, heavenly aspirations, and vain earthly desires, such contradictions make up the life of the Shulamite in her onward struggling pilgrimage. O, my sister, how priceless are the moments when with brokenness of heart, with sighs and cries, with tear-stained countenance, we appeal unto our God, who knoweth all things, who knows all our strife, all our backslidings, all our miseries, to compassionate our case and come to our relief.

"My conflicts are oft so severe
I cannot tell where they will end,
Till Jesus, my Captain, draws near,
To act the kind part of a friend.

"He shows me that all shall end well,
His blood is my prevalent plea;
And this to his glory I tell,
He saved a sinner like me."

The war in the Shulamite is between holiness and sin. That these two armies are in her causes her much perplexity. What can all this struggling mean? If I am the blessed one of the Lord, if I am born again, if I am a child of God, why am I thus? Rebekah went to inquire of the Lord (Gen. xxv. 22), and so does the Shulamite; and like Israel of old, when temptations and her sinfulness like a flood overwhelm her, she is constrained to cry unto the Lord in the battle.—1 Chron. v. 20. Sin is so hateful, so unbearable, so painful to the heart of the Shulamite, that she cannot be satisfied to have a single sinful thought to have an existence within her; and in her striving against sin how weak she feels, and is often wearied and faint in her mind.—Heb. xii. 3. But fresh succor from the Lord she receives, the Holy Spirit leads her to consider what Jesus endured, how with strong crying and tears he strove against our sins; yea, he resisted even unto the shedding of his own precious blood, and gloriously triumphed over our foes. When we can view by precious faith that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, then we can see the way, and taste the blessedness of the liberty that we have through the sacrifice of Christ from the service of sin; and by faith we can then sing, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." The war is of God (1 Chron. v. 22), and we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us.

Having presented you a few glimpses of the Shulamite as she is portrayed in the Scriptures, I trust that we are found one with her. While here below the war will continue; the company of two armies will be seen in her. Now the new man cannot put off the whole armor of God; he cannot lay aside his weapons. But when the time of our earthly sojourn is ended, in death sin shall be ended with the Shulamite, because Jesus died for our sins; and when in glory we appear there will no more be seen the company of two armies in the Shulamite, but in everlasting blessedness and peace we shall reign with Jesus Christ our King.

"No more shall the wicked our comforts annoy,
Nor conscience from guilt feel a wound;
No tree of temptation, our peace to destroy,
Shall in the blest region be found.

"No passions unholy our bosoms shall move,
To taint the fair mansions with strife;
Our Shepherd shall feed us on pastures of love,
And lead us to fountains of life."

DELMAR, Del., Feb. 6, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Inclosed you will find a letter written by our beloved brother, Wm. L. Beebe, which I have read with comfort. I feel that it contains substantial food to the poor and tried pilgrims in this world of sorrow, temptations and affliction; therefore give it a place in the SIGNS, that it may add to the lines of comfort to those who know the joyful sound.

As ever your brother,

WARWICK, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1896.

MR. H. CLAUDE KER—MY DEAR YOUNG BROTHER:—Your esteemed favor of the 8th instant was duly received, and should have been acknowledged sooner but for the many interruptions which have consumed my time. Please pardon the delay, and favor me again with any communication you may feel inclined to write, and I hope to be more prompt in responding.

The never-ceasing warfare between the carnal mind and the love of righteousness is peculiar to those who are born of the Spirit of God. No others can feel the working of these two opposing principles in their own hearts. You will not question the existence of the enmity of the carnal mind against holiness, for you are constantly compelled to mourn the power of that enmity in your own breast. But that very mourning is conclusive demonstration of the existence in yourself of that principle of divine love which abhors sin, and by which you hunger and thirst after the perfect righteousness of God. Certainly we never crave anything of which we feel no need. So our Lord has given this peculiar mark as identifying those who are already blessed. The poor in spirit are not merely to be blessed when they are comforted; their very poverty is in itself the richest blessing which they are capable of receiving from the infinite bounty of that God who has chosen them in Christ Jesus to the end that they shall be holy and without blame before him in love. By this distinguishing trait it has pleased God to identify his blessed ones whom he keeps by his own omnipotence. Not only is it impossible for any created being to counteract this heavenly sealing of the Spirit of truth, but it is equally impossible that any sinner should endeavor to imitate it, or desire to receive it.

The boundary of the kingdom of our Lord is definitely limited to such as love him. Not one more can be added to his chosen people; nor can the combined powers of darkness defeat the will of God by which every one who bears this seal of the Spirit is secured unto that salvation which is complete in the glorified Redeemer. Thus the temptations and assaults of the adversary, by which the saints are constantly made to realize their own sinfulness, are by the grace of our Lord made to bear testimony to the genuineness of their hope in the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. The enmity of the carnal mind cannot wish for the holiness after which the suffering saints hunger and thirst. And while the child of God can never find in himself the righteousness which he desires, it is provided by eternal love that "Surely shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength; even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory."—Isaiah xlv. 24, 25.

The faith of the saint receives this testimony of the Spirit by the revelation which is hidden from the wisdom of this world; therefore it is impossible that it should be seen by the reason of the natural mind of those who are taught of God. While it is readily conceded that those who have not the Spirit of Christ cannot see the things of this kingdom, the saints are often bewildered by the suggestion of the adversary that they might show the evidence of their hope so that their own natural understanding might comprehend it. Failing in this effort, they are tempted to doubt their own most assured evidences, and hence they are often so overcome with temptation that their hope is almost perished from the Lord. In this experience the tried followers of Jesus have a common heritage. They are not allowed to rejoice in hope for a very long season, until it is their portion to be tried with the suggestion of those cruel doubts and fears by which they are given to know the fellowship of the sufferings of their Lord. In this they are qualified as witnesses of his constant and almighty care and preserving grace.

To such as are called to bear the burden of comfort and consolation to the afflicted and poor people of our Lord it is given in a peculiar experience to drink deeply of the cup of trial, temptation and suffering. No one can minister consolation to one who is in trouble which he himself has never known. You may be very sorry for a sufferer, but you can only sympathize in that sorrow of which you have yourself been made partaker. Hence, it is needful that they whom the Lord will make useful to the comfort of his afflicted and poor people must themselves be brought through all the depths of tribulation in which they shall be qualified to comfort and strengthen their brethren. Since the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering, it is not strange that his disciples must in their measure be made partakers of those sufferings. Surely in following him they must go where he went. Indeed, this is the highest privilege which they can receive.

Whenever you feel inclined to write me rest assured that I shall be pleased to hear from you. Surely, there is no stronger tie than the bond which unites the pilgrims and strangers who have the same heritage of affliction in this transitory world. Let us therefore be found speaking often one to another. With love to all the saints in your section, and especially to yourself and wife, as ever, your brother,

WM. L. BEEBE.

ISAIAH XLV. 22.

"LOOK unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else."

This Scripture is often called to mind in connection with our experience, and is perverted by those who teach for doctrine the commandments of men. The substance of the glorious gospel of the Son of God is herein revealed, as setting forth the doctrine of God our Savior. God only

WHY WE CANNOT ACCEPT THE EXPRESSION, "THE SOUL IS BORN AGAIN."

WE have been asked why we cannot accept this expression, and it seems to us right that we should give our reasons. In doing so we desire to say first that we have no criticism to make nor war to wage upon those brethren who do use this expression, for we have very little doubt that if we could all understand each other's thoughts, and just what each one means by the language he uses, we should not find ourselves very far apart after all upon this matter. We should never think of taking a brother to task who should casually use the expression, "The regeneration of the soul;" in fact, we have before now used the expression ourselves. But we did not attach to the expression in our mind any signification that would limit the new birth to the soul. It is this limitation of the new birth that we have not been able to accept. It has seemed to us that if only the soul of man is the subject of the new birth, the Master would have said to Nicodemus, Except the soul be born again it cannot see nor enter the kingdom of heaven. This has been our first and great reason for not being able to accept the expression referred to. It has seemed to us that there is in the Scriptures as good proof that the body is born again as that the soul is thus born. If Mary said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior," David could also say, "My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." The general trend of all that the Scriptures say about the new birth, with its exercises of mind, and its resultant change in the manner of one's life, is that the man experiences all this as a whole. Not a part of the man, as the soul, the spirit, or the body—not the new man or the old man, but the man, is chosen in Christ, redeemed, born again, saved. The man hopes, fears, loves, doubts, fights, wrestles, obeys or disobeys.

If there be any special reference to the soul in any of the Scriptures with reference to these things, it has seemed to us to be so solely because the soul is the superior and controlling part of the man; and we all know that it is a common figure of speech to speak of the chief or most prominent or controlling part of anything as the thing itself. For instance, we would say that Napoleon won many victories, when we mean that the armies under him were victorious. In the Scriptures Peter speaks of eight souls being saved by water, meaning eight persons. In like manner, when Mary said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord," she meant, "I do magnify the Lord;" and in fact the members of her body were engaged in this work as well as the soul, for her tongue was speaking what her heart felt.

The warfare which each christian feels does not seem to us to be between the soul and the body. The soul itself has a fleshly principle in it which previous to the new birth ruled it absolutely. In the new birth it has never been our view that this fleshly principle had been cast out of the soul, and now was lodged in the body; but we have believed that this fleshly principle still abided in the whole man, soul as well as body, and that the warfare was as much in the soul as in the body. It is not a warfare between indwelling sin and the grace of God, striving for the control of the whole man. We can no more feel and think the things we desire than we can do them. It is not that the feelings and thoughts are all for holiness, and the deeds unholy; but we all realize to our shame that we are in every part unclean. Our thoughts and feelings go astray as well as our deeds; and we are compelled to lament and strive against the one as much as against the other. Are not thoughts and feelings qualities of the soul? Does the body think or purpose things?

We have seen the expression in some places, "In the new birth the same thing is done for the soul that in the resurrection is done for the body." Now, we of course do not know and do not mean to judge just what the writer's meaning in this expression might be, but we judge the language itself, and to our mind the language expresses an untruth. We suppose that our brethren generally believe that when the body shall be raised it shall be perfectly free from all that is sinful, and be absolutely holy. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Then the body will not only not be the instrument of evil, but will be incapable of so being. That which is truly spiritual cannot sin. This we doubt not all our brethren believe. Now, our thought is this: if, as is claimed, the same thing is done for the soul in the new birth that is done for the body in the resurrection, it has become already perfectly holy, and nothing evil or unclean can possibly arise out of it. This we have not been able to accept for the two following reasons.

First. We know for ourself (and we hear the very brethren who make use of the above expression say the same) that we still have evil thoughts, desires, fancies and imaginations to contend against. These things do not belong to the body, but to the soul. If the soul is now perfectly holy, how can such evil things be in it and arise out of it? If these things belong to the body alone, will the body, when the soul has departed from it, continue to exhale these evil, sinful thoughts, feelings, desires, fancies and imaginations? But if these things belong solely to the body, and not to the soul, why will they not be still active after the soul has departed? The fact seems to us to be that the same thing is not done for the soul in the new birth that shall be done for the body in the resurrection, and therefore we continue to be plagued, soul as well as body, by all these evil things.

Second. It seems to us that if the soul were made perfectly holy in the new birth, then neither could the body ever commit sin again. How could it? The members of the body are always controlled and directed either for good or evil by the soul. If the tongue speaks either good or evil, it does the soul's bidding. If the ear or the eye seeks after the one or the other, the soul directs them. If the hand does evil or good, and the foot walks in either way, they do the bidding of the soul. The body is dead, incapable of good or evil, when the soul departs. If, then, the soul is made perfectly holy, there can be no sin in either soul or body in either purpose or action. If sin dwells in the body of the believer only, will the body keep on sinning when the soul has departed?

It does not appear to us that the coming into the man of the new law, the new man, the new life, or whatever name it may bear, drives the old law, the old man, the old life or nature, out of the soul, any more than it is driven out of the body. It is all in the man; and the man is hindered from either thinking or doing right by it. But when at the end of this mortal life the weary warfare shall have ended, the soul in departing passes out from the warfare, from all that is evil, and enters into its longed-for rest. Then it will be holy, and fit to dwell in the presence of God; but until we reach the end of this mortal life the warfare will go on.

We are persuaded that the brethren who have used the above expression feel this warfare as well as we; and that they also complain that they can neither think nor do as they would, we know to be a fact. Because of this we feel to fall back upon the Bible expression, and say that "ye," "a man," must be born again. We have not designed any controversy, nor any attack upon any brother, but simply to set the matter forth as it appears to us. Again, in conclusion, we would say that our faith is simply, "Ye must be born again;" and that "ye" means not the soul, nor body, nor any part of the man by itself, nor the new man, nor the old man, nor the spirit, but just simply the man.

THE SIN NOT UNTO DEATH.

"If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it."—1 John v. 16.

We feel some hesitancy in offering our views on the above named text, not only because brethren whom we esteem wiser and better qualified to expound the Scriptures have declined to give their views upon it, but more especially from a conviction of our inability to do justice to the subject. In submitting, however, what we shall write upon the subject to the consideration of the person who has asked for our views, and to the better judgment of our brethren, we feel inclined to hope that some light may be afforded that will be profitable and edifying to the saints.

John was an apostle, and by divine appointment sits on one of the twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of the spiritual Israel of God. These thrones are in the kingdom of Christ; and wherever Christ is found presiding on the throne of his glory, there will his apostles be recognized as sitting on the thrones of judgment, to judge, define and settle every question and establish every order and ordinance in doctrine and practice for the church of God, until the kingdom in all its fullness and glory shall be delivered up to the Father, and the Son himself shall be subject unto him that put all things under him.—1 Cor. xv. 24, 28. From these considerations we regard the passage under investigation, however obscure its meaning to our minds, as of vital importance, and its true and proper sense should be prayerfully sought after by the subjects of the kingdom of Immanuel. But to the text.

"If any man see his brother." The relationship and fraternity of brethren in Christ Jesus is not only recognized, settled and confirmed officially by this apostle, but is also defined by him in this epistle as predicated on a common parentage and heavenly birth. None can stand vitally and manifestly in this relationship and fraternity with the church of God but those of whom he testifies, who are begotten and born of God. Although this is most certainly the case, yet there have been, and it is feared there still are, many who have a name to live, and are dead—who have a name and standing, nominally at least, with the saints, who have no saving knowledge of God.

We would notice what seems implied in the text of relative duties, mutual watchcare and reciprocal faithfulness—If any man see his brother sin. Christians are bound to watch over each other, and to admonish, exhort, instruct, and be helpers of each other. No church can thrive where the members become indifferent to the conduct of each other. As to their soundness, one is to speak at a time, and the rest of the brotherhood to judge of what he advances, whether it be according to the Scriptures and the experience of the saints. In practice, christians should not only watch over their own individual walk, but they are also to watch over each other in love, and not suffer sin to rest upon a brother, without laboring with him according to the rule laid down in the New Testament. In the discharge of his fraternal duty the christian will not only see his short coming and lament it, but he will discover enough in the frailty of his fellow-members to convince him that they, like himself, are men of like passions with himself, and that there has no temptation happened him that is not common to all saints. But if in the faithful discharge of this christian duty he sees his brother sin a sin that is not unto death, he shall ask, &c.

Here are two points presented for consideration, viz:

First. The sin that is not unto death.

Second. The limitation of prayers.

Sin, in the common acceptation of the word, is in the Scriptures defined to mean a transgression of the law (See chap. iii. 4), and the nature and penalty of the sin is to be determined by the nature and provisions of the law that has been transgressed. Every law has specially to do with them that are under it. The laws of the United States have no control over the subjects of other nations. The time has been when a man convicted of stealing, in England, would be subjected to the penalty of death, by the laws of that government; but the same crime punished by the law of our states would involve a milder punishment. As the creatures of God we were created in Adam, under a law to our Creator, which connects sin and death together. "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 17. This law in its nature and in its penalties was more fully set forth in the precepts given from Mount Sinai, still retaining all its severity. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." There being no commutation of the penalty, every transgression, however small it might appear, was a capital offense, and subjected the offender to death. Hence this law is by the apostle denominated "the law of sin and death."—Rom. viii. Not that there is sin or death in the law; for the law in itself is holy, just and good; but because the law connects sin with its penalty. Indeed that law has no power to separate the one from the other. When sin, by imputation, was found on the spotless Lamb of God, it was impossible for the cup or penalty to be passed by or remitted. Now, whatsoever the law says, it says to them that are under the law. It says that all men have sinned; it stops every mouth, and presents the whole world guilty before God. Death hath passed upon all men, because all have sinned; and as that law makes no provision for mercy, by the deeds (or by obedience to its precepts) no flesh shall be justified. By it is the knowledge of sin, the wages of which is death. The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; for where there is no law, there is no transgression; and as we have shown, sin is a transgression of the law. Hence the conclusion is unavoidable, that every soul of Adam's race that is not redeemed from under that law has sinned the sin that is unto death; and all the sins committed by them that are under that law unto death, for which there is no remission, either in this world or that which is to come. As many as are of the works of that law are under its course, and there is no obligation imposed by the apostle on christians to pray for such as are under the law. But, glory to God in the highest, the same infallible testimony assures us that there is a sin not unto death. But the law of sin and death, or the law under which the human family was created in Adam, knows of no such sin. The Sinai law knows of no sin which is not unto death. That law never released a sinner; it never will; it never can. Even the elect of God, who fell under the condemnation of that law, could not be released until its utmost penalty was endured by their legal representative and surety, Jesus Christ, who drank the cup, suffered the extreme penalty, and exhausted the vials of its wrath, on their account. He was delivered up for their offences, and raised again for their justification.—Rom. iv. 25. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh [in which they are born as the children of Adam, and subject to the death penalty] but after the Spirit," in which they are born of God; for "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1-4.

Here let us notice the emphatic declaration of John, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."—1 John iii. 9. "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life. Little children, keep yourselves from idols."—1 John v. 18-21.

Now seeing, as we have proved, that all the sins committed under the law which is called the ministration of condemnation and death, are unto death, and not to be prayed for, and that it is impossible for those who are begotten and born of God to transgress that law which consigns the offender to death, it remains for us to show how or in what sense a christian can or does sin a sin that is not unto death. The reason is simply this, because they are not under that law that administers death as a penalty. They were under it in their Adamic nature, as we have shown; fell under its penalty; but the penalty of that law has been executed on them in the person of their Surety, and he has redeemed them from under the law; from under the dominion as well as the curse; and hence they are not under the law, but under grace, as the Scriptures affirm. For a clear illustration of this, read the testimony of Paul. "Know ye not, brethren (for I speak to them that know the law), how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman that hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband as long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if while her husband liveth she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that ye should bring forth fruit unto God." Rom. vii. 1-4. And in this connection he goes on, in the language before quoted, to declare that there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus—that they are made free from the law of sin and death, &c. The entire epistle to the Galatians is devoted to this subject, demonstrating most unquestionably the complete emancipation of all the children of God from the dominion of the law by the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

But we have found it written that sin is the transgression of law, and also that where there is no law there is no transgression, &c. Although the members of Christ are not under the law that consigns to death, yet they are not without law. They are delivered truly from the law of sin and death, but they are held under the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. This law is found in the new covenant, and is written not on tables of stone, but on the fleshly tables of their hearts. God has written it in their hearts and in their inward parts, and the hand-writing of it can never be obliterated. But how different its nature and penalties from that under which they were formerly held. "He that transgressed Moses' law died without mercy." But under the new covenant law, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more." In the one, death and dominion is the mildest penalty; in the other, the most severe is written in these words, "If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments, if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments, then will I visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes; nevertheless, my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." &c.—Psalm lxxxix. 30-36. The saints are therefore under law to Christ, and from painful experience they know that they do sometimes transgress his law, and sin the sin which is not unto death. For they shall never perish, because he has given them eternal life; and our apostle says this life is in his Son; that is, in Christ. It is hid with Christ in God; and when he who is their life shall appear, then shall they appear with him in glory. It is a gracious provision of the new covenant that the sins and transgressions of God's people, in their gospel relationship to Christ as their King, are not unto death, and that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate them from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus.

This view of the subject matter of our text seems to obviate many apparent difficulties in the epistle of this servant of God. At one time we find him saying that "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous." And again, "Whosoever is born of God, sinneth not." And again, "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." And, "Whosoever is born of God, sinneth not." It is certainly true that christians, being redeemed from under the law, dead to the law, and married to Christ, can no more be convicted of sin by that law as a standard; because they are no more under that law than the woman whose first husband is dead, when she is married to another, is bound by the authority of her dead husband. To such God does not impute sin, in a legal sense of the word; they cannot violate the law under which they do not exist. They are married unto him who is raised from the dead. Christ came under the law which held his children in lawful captivity, and was made of a woman, and under the law, to redeem them; and in effecting their redemption, he suffered the penalty of all their sins in his own body on the tree. Under the law, he as their Surety suffered and died; but he arose as the first begotten from the dead, and was recognized by the Father in his resurrection, in all the glory of his Sonship. "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Hence, "blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that cannot fade away." Although in his incarnation and death, Christ learned obedience, obeyed the law, honored and fulfilled all its jots and tittles, yet in his resurrection the law had no dominion over him. And now the church, having buried her old husband, is by marriage become one flesh with him that is risen from the dead, and in her knowledge of him and the power of his resurrection is made to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made her free.

But before we dismiss this subject let us dwell upon the subject of our allegiance to our new, risen and exalted Husband, and remember that we are under law to him; that we are bound to obey his precepts, follow his footsteps, imitate his examples, and glorify him in our body and in our spirit, which are his. For if under the old law they escaped not who refused him, that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven. As the penalty of that law was death, so they that transgressed died without mercy. And as the new covenant provides a rod and stripes, every transgression and disobedience of the saints under the gospel shall be visited with such chastisement as the new covenant has provided.

There is still another view which we wish to present of the text. The ceremonial law, which was the shadow of good things to come, made a wide difference between the transgressions which were committed by the Israelites under it; for some offenses, slight reparations were exacted, but for other offenses nothing short of the death of the offender would satisfy the law. Now, as Israel was a figure of the gospel church, that law may in many respects typify the discipline of the gospel church, and in this sense there is a difference to be observed between the common infirmities of God's children and some other things which are especially marked by the laws of the kingdom of Christ as requiring the immediate action of the church. As for the crimes of murder, Sabbath-breaking, adultery, &c., no offering was to be made, but the offenders were to be put to death, and the punishment to be inflicted by all the children of Israel, so there are some offences which may occur among those who stand connected as members of the gospel church which demand the prompt action of the church in exercising the discipline thereof without delay. For instance, in case of heresy, idolatry, drunkenness, adultery, and some other things mentioned in the word, so far as the action of the church is concerned they are like those sins in the type which are unto death, to be regarded by the church as calling for the immediate application of the rule which requires that they shall be put away. No apology can be in order. If a man be an heretic, reject him from the fellowship of the church, after the first and second admonition. If he deny the resurrection, or affirm that it is past already, deliver him over to Satan. If he be convicted of murder, adultery, fornication or drunkenness, put him away, and have no company with him, not even to eat with him, as the apostle directs in the name of the Lord Jesus.

But "If a man see a brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." It is not only the duty of the saints to watch over one another, but also to pray for one another; and especially when they discover any departure from the rule of the gospel, they shall ask of God, who only has the gift of life to bestow, and he (God) will reclaim the erring brother from the error of his way, and preserve his standing and usefulness in the house of God.

We submit what we have written to the consideration of the inquirer, and to our brethren, and to our readers in general, as the best exposition of the subject we are able to give them; it is their privilege to try it by the word, and if it be not in harmony therewith reject it.

LARGE TYPE SMALL BIBLES.

WE would especially call attention to the advertisement on last page, of small, light Bibles, printed in large full-faced type. While these Bibles weigh only from two to three pounds they are printed in large full-faced type that can be easily read by those whose sight is failing.

The extended covers lap over and protect the edges of the leaves.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

is good, and only as the goodness of God leads one to repentance has that one ever felt a goodly sorrow for sin, or beheld the bride, the Lamb's wife. One may have thought much about man and his characteristics, as the noblest of all the works of God, still the inquiry is, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Every thing with him is but a failure, so far as his ability is concerned to do for himself or elevate his posterity. He fills the very place the Lord designed he should, working his own destruction, and many times that of others. The word of the Lord endures forever, while all flesh is but grass before God. God has proved man in various ways, to show that there is no soundness in him, but that the imagination of his heart is only evil, and that continually; that his heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, so that only God knows it truly. All things are possible with the Lord, the Spirit, who is light. As God he shines in (not into) the heart of a depraved and lost sinner, shows his own beauty and glory, his power to save, his way of saving, his object in saving, and what he saves from; so that every true witness, Jonah-like, declares, "Salvation is of the Lord." What a wonderful experience! Led about, and instructed, like Jacob, the knowledge is imparted. "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." How reasonable then does it appear; not to carnal sight, but to the faith of the one thus led about. How strange and unexpected! "The voice of one crying in the wilderness." The "ends of the earth" are able to know and appreciate the comfort and assurance received. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them." "I know my sheep and am known of mine." The voice is one of comfort, assurance, and fullness of love. He hath loved us with an everlasting love, and therefore with loving-kindness hath drawn us; and being drawn, we run after him, whom our souls love. We feel that we are the farthest off from God of all his creatures. To the brutes we give preference, so ignorant and foolish are we before God with whom we have to do. Our times are in his hand. It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. The preparation of the heart and the answer of the tongue are from the Lord. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Our cry has been, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." "Lord, save, I perish." "What shall I do?" "Where shall I go to find relief?" All is darkness with the poor soul: yet the sound goes forth. The voice is heard, and it is the voice of peace. "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you. Not as the world giveth give I unto you." "In the world ye shall have tribulation." It has now been realized. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." We know that power belongeth unto God. "In me ye have peace." Who can describe it? It is unspeakable and full of glory. Brethren and sisters, who have Christ in you the hope of glory, has there been anything like the love of God to us? Did not the love of God bid us hope all things, believe all things, and feel willing to leave all things pertaining to our salvation in his divine hand? Have the eyes of our understanding been enlightened to see what the hope of the calling of Christ Jesus was or is to us? Is there any thing too hard for the Lord? Heaven and earth will pass away, but not one thing pertaining to the will of our God, who keeps covenant and remembers mercy, will fail of accomplishment, for the benefit of his spiritual Israel. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Though Israel be scattered among all nations, and shall be sifted as wheat, yet not the least grain shall be lost. They shall all, sooner or later, hear the voice calling them, as the ends of the earth, to look to God and be saved. He calls them with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world was. The purpose and grace of our God was that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. It is said for their comfort when called out, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," &c. Could the religious world in their anxiety to work for God, as they suppose, see their blind condition, they would stop at once. But though having eyes, they see not. I know where they are, although I never took a part with them. I had all the stock and tools to work with, and my self-righteousness and tendency to idolatry. I hope it is by grace I am saved, through faith, and not of myself. Trouble arises in my breast because I find the Canaanite is still in the land—the flesh. That which is born of the flesh is still flesh, and surely with me the flesh profiteth nothing spiritually. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. That which is born of the Spirit is spirit. The Lord worketh in his people mightily by his Spirit, both to will and to do. They are called upon by love in their heart and the Spirit's teaching to work out or manifest their interest in Jesus, by obeying his commands; and any school-boy knows that what he does will not give him life. How much more does the child of God know that following Jesus in his commandments does not make him the subject of saving grace, but shows his love to him who has done such great things for him. Thus in waiting upon the Lord and.

finding our strength renewed (not given), we have cause for joy. How many blessed examples we have in the Scriptures, the "brightest and best" of which is Jesus Christ. To wait upon one is to serve that one in their pleasure in all things wherein they desire or require service. Dear old Able, Noah, Job, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Samuel, David, Solomon, with the evangelists and disciples, waited upon or faithfully served the Lord, and unquestionably renewed the strength they had, it being already in the Lord and of the Lord. Every act of true devotion was praise to his name, as well as peace on earth. How different from Cain. The sacrifices of the wicked are an abomination in the sight of the Lord. When the Lord causes his servants to come near him, he will show who are his, and whom he hath chosen to wait upon or serve before him. Surely Dathan and Abiram, Phineas and Hophni, or king Saul, could not, with any or all in ancient or modern times, claim they were waiting or rendering God service, according to the example. Following Jesus is to learn of him and pattern after him; and he is always the same meek and lowly Jesus, a man of sorrows. When the dear Lord shows us we are the ends of the earth, and we are enabled by living faith to look to him for salvation, then will we be enabled to wait upon him. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up on wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

Your brother in hope, and in patient waiting before him with whom we have to do.

VARNA, ILL., Oct. 13, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have long had a desire to write a few lines for our dear family paper, but am a poor scribe, and so barren of any thing good. Sometimes I think if I could put my thoughts into words I would like to do so. I read the experiences of brethren and sisters, and O how I join with them in their travels and praises to our blessed Redeemer. O how I do praise his holy name for what he has done for me, and what he is doing for me every day. I can sweetly sing with the poet,

"Jesus all the day long
Is my joy and my song."

Sometimes I wonder how or why it is that such a poor, unworthy creature as I am should be blessed with his love and mercy. The precious thought comes to me over and over,

"Not one drop of real joy Without thy presence, Lord."

Dear brethren and sisters, we are strangers in the flesh, but I feel that we are of the same family.

Dear brethren, I leave this scribble to your better judgment; if it is too weak and simple put it in the waste-basket and all will be well. Remember me at the throne of grace. Your unworthy sister in a precious hope,

CAROLINE GLENN.

HOW CAN WE KNOW?

THERE are hundreds of subscribers on our list whose subscriptions are in arrears from two or three months to two years and over, and it is impossible for us to discern who among them wish their paper continued, and intend to pay for it, and who through negligence and indifference are allowing it to come to them and do not intend to pay for it. Now, we can better afford to continue a paper and wait for the pay than to lose the subscriber altogether; but what we wish to avoid is sending the paper for two or three years after the time is out, and then receiving notice from the subscribers that they never ordered it continued after their time was out, and therefore will not pay for it. If any are now getting the paper who do not want it they will please inform us, that we may discontinue it to them. It costs us just as much to send the paper to those who do not care enough about it to even notify us that they do not want it, as it does to send to those who take the deepest interest in reading it.

Although the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is passing through the "hardest times" financially that it has ever known since our day, we can better afford to continue a paying subscriber on credit than lose his patronage altogether. Yet if those of our brethren and friends whose subscription has expired can make us a remittance without too much inconvenience to themselves, we assure them it will come very acceptable at present, and be thankfully received.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Saturday morning, Jan. 25th, 1896, of pneumonia fever, after an illness of four days, Elizabeth Bowles, aged 74 years, 3 months and 1 day.

Her maiden name was Elizabeth Rush. She was born in Blount Co., Tenn., Oct. 24th, 1821, and at the age of seventeen years removed with her parents to Madison Co., Ill., where she was married to Lewis Bowles, Dec. 28th, 1839. From there she moved with her husband to Montgomery County, in 1848, where they remained until the spring of 1865, when they came to Iowa, locating on a farm in Jefferson County, and residing there until their death. Her husband died the 27th of last May. Eight children blessed their union, five of whom are living: James, Benjamin and John Bowles, now residing in Dakota, Mary Dennis, of Wayne County, and Nannie Rhodes, on the adjoining farm; all of whom were at the funeral. Three children, George, Berthena and an unnamed infant, preceded her in eternity.

Having experienced an abiding hope in the atonement and redemption through the blood of our Savior, which can only be made manifest through regeneration of the Spirit, herself and husband united with the Primitive Baptists near Eldon, Iowa, in 1880. She seemed to live that beautiful life of christian humility, resignation and faithful devotion to the life offered up by him for the sins of his people, becoming to an heir and child of God, as near as one can, cumbered with this body of sin and death. She breathed that life so long devoted to family, friends and truth calmly and peacefully away in sweet resignation to God's holy will.

The funeral services were held with the church of her choice, where we tried to offer words of comfort from John xi. 25, 26. A large concourse of friends and neighbors were in attendance to sympathize with the sorrowing relatives until her remains were laid to rest beside the husband who preceded her.

"A mother from her home is gone,

A voice we loved is stilled,

A place is vacant in our home

Which never can be filled.

"God in his wisdom has recalled

The boon his love had given;

And though the body molds here,

The soul is safe in heaven."

I. T. FLINT.

OUR dear aged brother, Matthew Lee, departed this life Jan. 24th, 1896, at his home in Loudoun Co., Va., at the ripe age of 92 years, 4 months and 10 days.

The words of the apostle Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. iv. 6-8), "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," &c., seem peculiarly applicable to him. In early life he experienced the power of saving grace, and became identified with the visible church before the division, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Little River Church by Elder Ogelvie. He was among the few who could not and would not endure the innovations in the doctrine and order of the church in those troubled times, and who separated themselves from what had become a house of bondage to them, and organized what has been since known as the Mount Zion Church, near this place, in Loudoun County. From that time until his death brother Lee has been one of the shining lights in the church, faithfully contending for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and exemplifying his love for it both in the church and in the world. A long and upright life, a kindly heart and a gentle disposition won for him the esteem and confidence of this entire community, and no man stood higher in its respect. Grace sanctified and illumined his gentle character, and made him a shining example to all his brethren. These words would sound strange to him, for humility, that humility which only can come from a knowledge of the deep depravity of the heart, was one of his principal characteristics. He felt the burden of sin, and his only hope was in the blood and righteousness of his Redeemer.

He leaves a son and daughter to mourn their loss, who in his old age and for many years have cared for him as only faithful hearts and willing hands could do. The consciousness of this fact must be of comfort to them now. The church sustains a great loss. As Deacon brother Lee had served it many years, and we miss him sadly from our assemblies. Instead of the fathers, may the Lord raise up the children, if it be his holy will.

Affectionately your brother,

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., Feb. 12, 1896.

SISTER Elizabeth G. Messick died at the home of her son, brother Harrison Messick, in Sussex Co., Del., Jan. 20th, 1896, aged 87 years, 9 months and 2 days.

Sister Messick was a daughter of Elder John Rogers, and when about eighteen years of age was received into the Broad Creek Baptist Church, and baptized by Elder James Rounds. For seventy years she had walked before the Lord in all the ordinances of his house blamelessly; and in all the vicissitudes of the church, in prosperity or adversity, she faithfully filled her place at the appointments, and as a mother in Israel she was an ensample to the flock. Of her family there remain one brother, two sisters, one son, one daughter, twenty-eight grandchildren, seventeen great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren.

A large congregation of relatives and friends attended the funeral at the Broad Creek meeting-house, where the writer was led to speak from the words, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." From the meeting-house she was borne to her burial in the family burying-ground, a place deserving notice. Far away from the busy scenes of life, remote from the public highway, in the midst of the woods, surrounded by stately pines, the earth carpeted with pine shatters, in a secluded plot inclosed with a galvanized iron railing, there with loving hands we gently laid our dear old sister down to rest beside her husband, who preceded her to the grave some twenty years ago. Thus we resigned the exemplary christian, the faithful wife, the loving mother, the affectionate sister and true friend to the faithful care and keeping of the Lord, who gave, and who hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

W. W. MEREDITH.

Elizabeth W. Burroughs died of heart failure at the residence of her daughter, Eliza J. Witt, near Body Camp, Bedford Co., Va., on the morning of Dec. 21st, 1895, aged 93 years, 7 months and 5 days.

She was in good health up to one week before her death, when she was stricken down with pneumonia and neuralgia. She bore her severe affliction patiently, with that christian fortitude which had characterized her life for seventy-two years. During that time she had been a consistent member of the Primitive Baptist Church, letting her light shine down to her fourth generation. She was a daughter of Nicholas Robertson, and was married to James Burroughs in 1818. From this union sprang fourteen children, fifty-two grandchildren and sixty great-grandchildren. Her surviving children are Nicholas, Thomas and Newton Burroughs, Sarah Johnson, Mat. Noell, Ann Ferguson, Eliza Witt and Laura Holland. She had six sons in the war of the Rebellion. Two of them lost their lives in that struggle, and two others were badly wounded. Her husband served a term in the war of 1812, for which she drew a pension monthly, and signed her name to one of the checks just a week before she died. She was active and industrious to that time, having knit fifteen counterpanes after she was eighty years old. The evening before her death Elder J. P. Luck visited her, read a chapter, sang a hymn, and prayed with her. She enjoyed the service, and said she was waiting for the Lord to call her home. She selected these words for her burial services, "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand."

DIED—At his home in Howell's, Orange Co., N. Y., on Thursday morning, Jan. 23d, 1896, of general debility, Mr. Samuel C. Howell, in the 89th year of his age.

He was born in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., N. Y., May 21st, 1807. In 1834 he was married to Miss Sallie Jane Beakes, daughter of Joseph and Anna Whittier Beakes, who survives him, with five sons and two daughters.

Mr. Howell had never made a public profession of religion, but was a lover of God's truth, and a warm friend of the Old School Baptists. He received a hope in the mercy of God in his youth, which ever afterward proved an anchor of his soul, both sure and steadfast. His end was peace.

The funeral services were held at his late residence on Saturday, Jan. 25th, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends. The interment was in the family plot in the Howell's cemetery.—Ed.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—At the request of my brother and sisters I send you for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the obituary notice of our dear mother, Mrs. Flora Black, whose death occurred Jan. 27th, 1896.

The departed was born in Argyleshire, Scotland, in 1809, and emigrated with the family to Canada in 1818. At the age of eighteen years she was baptized by Elder Dugald Campbell, joining the church of Covenanted Baptists in Aldborough, Ontario, and to the end of her days lived an exemplary christian life. In 1832 she and our father, John Black, of Edgeware Road, Yarmouth, Ontario, were married, and from that home which she entered as a bride sixty-three years ago last April her remains were taken and laid beside those of our father on the 29th of January, while her spirit took its flight to her eternal home, whither she had so often of late years desired to go. One son and four daughters survive to cherish her blessed memory, our father, three sons and one daughter having preceded her to the spirit land. Six of her grandsons officiated as bearers at her funeral, where a large concourse of people gathered to pay the last tribute of respect. Elder Wm. Pollard preached a comforting discourse from 1 Corinthians xv. 41-44. Paraphrases 24 and 42, favorites of the deceased, were sung.

To know our precious mother was to love her. Being possessed of a mild and gentle disposition, and a retiring nature, she endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact. The hungry were never turned away empty from her door, and they were often clothed as well as fed. Her physical health had always been remarkably good with the exception of two serious illnesses. Two years ago, when a violent attack of pneumonia nearly extinguished the vital spark, upon being told that the attending physician noted a decided change for the better, she replied to my eldest sister, "If you believe me, I am sorry to hear it. I thought the Lord was going to take me." Upon being asked if she were not willing to wait, she replied, "O yes, but I had hoped this was his time; for," she added, "I feel him so near, and I am so happy, that I think no more of the change than stepping into the next room." On Christmas day, as I visited with her, she told me that she thought her time must be near at hand; and although her mind was not as comfortable as it had been many times, she still had a hope that her Savior would bring her safely home. The evening prior to her decease, after retiring, she repeated a verse of a Gaelic hymn, one line of which is that her Savior would bring her safely through Jordan's flood. She then lisped a prayer and fell asleep, to awake at four o'clock a. m. slightly indisposed. For many years she had been praying, if it were the Lord's will, that he would take her without a long illness, as she did not want to be a trouble to any one; and her prayer was fulfilled, for after a few hours' indisposition she passed away as sweetly as a child goes to sleep on its mother's bosom. As the spirit took its flight a smile overcast her features, which she carried to the tomb. We mourn not as those who have no hope, for we firmly believe that our dear mother is safe in the arms of Jesus.

Our mother was a reader of the dear old SIGNS for about forty-five years, which, with her Bible, she prized very highly, and they were her constant companions.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

POETRY.

THE FLEETING YEARS.

THE busy, fleeting years
Go swiftly by,
Many cares bringing
To you and I.
Let us calmly lean
On Jesus' breast,
Knowing that, 'midst toil,
He giveth rest.
The busy, fleeting years
Deep sorrow bring;
Oft, instead of song,
A dirge we sing.
O let us calmly trust
His changeless word,
Knowing that each pain
His heart hath stirred.
With the fleeting years
Disappointments come;
Oft we sadly long
For our bright home.
O let us calmly wait:
For the dear hand
That leads us forth
Guides to that land.
With the swift fleeting years
Dear friends have gone,
And we, desolate,
Have sat alone;
And yet not all alone;
He's with us still,
And meekly may we bow
To his dear will.
The fleeting years have brought
Many a thorn;
We oft have thought our life
Of all joy shorn.
But yet the one who knows
The human heart
Doth his most wondrous grace
To us impart.
So the swift fleeting years
Have brought us joy,
Which all the dross of earth
Cannot alloy.
O may we faithful be Unto the end;
In all this life's conflicts
He will defend.

PRaise.

O BLISSFUL thought! the Lord loves me!
Emmanuel suffered on the tree
To ransom me from hell.
I would forever love thy name,
Thy praises evermore proclaim,
Thine excellencies tell.
But how can stammering lips like mine
Speak of thy glories so divine?
'Twill take eternal days.
O for "the harps of God" to sing,
To make the heaven of heavens ring
With thine immortal praise!
O! when with all the loved, blood-bought,
To everlasting bliss we're brought,
Worthy the Lamb we'll sing;
Before his throne we shall adore,
And love and worship evermore
Our Savior, God and King.
Till then, while here on earth I roam,
Oft sighing for the saints' sweet home,
His praise I'll lisp each day.
Then with the immaculate throng,
Who sing the sweetest, noblest song,
I'll sing as loud as they.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

"THE preaching never gives life; but John was a man sent from God, who came to bear witness of him, that all through him might believe. Not would or should, but might."

"When christians to-day know of cities and countries given to idolatry, as Paul at Athens, never having heard of Jesus, does not the command to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, reach to them? And is it not the duty of ministers of the present day to go and preach to them Jesus, and tell them, as Paul did, to turn from these vanities to the living God? If false teachers sometimes creep in, should the true ministers therefore drop out by the way? There is much in the present day said and done in the name of religion which is truly revolting and painful to any serious, thoughtful person, but that makes the christian religion none the less real."

Answer 1st. John was sent of God, and went where God told him to go, and said what the Lord bid him say. It has been the same with every servant of God from the beginning of the world to the present time, and will be even to the end of the world; and though any one of them tries to run away from God's command, and spends three days in the belly of hell, as Jonah did, yet will he reach the place to which God sent him at God's appointed time, and preach the preaching God has bidden him; and God's purpose concerning him will not have been affected a hair's breadth by any disobedient step of his, but perfectly fulfilled instead.

2d. It is the duty of the Lord's ministers to go where the Lord sends them, and preach what he bids them; and he who perfectly controls the lightnings and the winds, and turns the king's heart whithersoever he will, as he does the rivers of water, will never have to regret any lack of power to control his servants. God has never given a general command to preach the gospel: his commands are all personal, and each one reaches the heart of the one to whom it is sent, and cannot be disobeyed in an absolute sense, though the disobedient spirit of the carnal mind may be left to fully manifest itself.

3d. The command to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature was given to the same individuals after the resurrection of Christ to whom he had said while he was yet in the flesh and under the law of Moses, "Go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not." The one simply stands contrasted with the other, and its meaning is thus explained. Each of the apostles fulfilled it whenever he preached. "It was preached to every creature which is under heaven" in the apostolic days, in the full sense of the command.—Col i. 23. For one of the apostles to have gone to the most distant country would have been fulfilling that command no more than for him to have staid in Jerusalem. Each went where God sent him. It was preached to Gentiles as well as Jews, for "the middle wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile was broken down by the death of Jesus. The apostles fulfilled the ministry which was thus given to them when they had fully established the gospel church in the doctrine and order of Jesus, the King ruling in righteousness. While there is a sense in which gospel ministers "go into all the world" whenever they preach the gospel, in the fact that their ministry does not recognize any nation as the peculiar people of God, as the Jews were until Jesus died, yet that command was given distinctively to the apostles, and was fulfilled by them in their apostolic work of setting in order and teaching the observance of all things which Jesus commanded them. This gospel of the kingdom was preached to every creature which is under heaven in Paul's day. The gifts are to, and within, the gospel church, "for the work of the ministry, for the perfecting of the saints, for the edifying of the body of Christ." They are to minister nourishment to the body as "joints and bands."

4th. If any one's spirit is stirred at any time, as Paul's was at Athens, I will not say he ought to speak, but he will speak; he must speak. If it were possible for one whose spirit the Lord has stirred, to hold his peace, "the stones would immediately cry out."

5th. It must always be kept in mind that this work of salvation, and of calling the Lord's people to a knowledge of that salvation, and of ministering the word unto them, has never been left to men to do, no part of it; it has never been made in any manner or degree dependent upon men or angels. It is God's work. If we remember that, the questions are answered at once. He calls his people, and they come. He gives life; "the flesh profiteth nothing." He comforts his people. "I, even I, am he that comforteth my people." He calls his servants, whom he will, to preach. He does not leave them to go if they will, and where they will, but sends them, and they go. They cannot preach except they be sent. No man or body of men, no church or council, can do one atom of this work of sending them, or of telling them where to go. They cannot choose for themselves their field of labor. Each one is called separately and alone, and given his command, and the church is the judge as to whether this, in the case of any one, is a call by the Lord.

6th. The false teacher is the one who claims to have power to go or not to go, to choose his field, to give himself or any one else any preparation for the work. He is the false teacher who claims any power to help in the salvation of the Lord's people, or to be the means of saving those who otherwise would not have been saved. Dr. Judson published abroad and boasted that he had been the means of saving thirty thousand from the heathen lands, and that when he went to heaven he would lead that train of thirty thousand up to Jesus. "But," I heard Elder Gilbert Beebe say, when I first heard him preach in 1850, "there will be no room there for that train, for the Lord's train filled the temple."

He is the false teacher who claims any value spiritually for any works, or societies, or schools, or institutions of men, not commanded especially by the Lord, and of which there is not a pattern in the Scriptures. The Lord so calls his servants, and so tries them, and so works in them, and so salts them with fire (Mark ix. 49), that they cannot remain under the power of such delusions as these. They are made to walk around the dry bones in the valley, and look at them long enough to be sure that they are too dry to be brought to life by any power of men. At God's command they can and will say to any congregation of people, as Ezekiel did to the dry bones, "Hear the word of the Lord;" and they can and will go on and tell them what the Lord has said he will do to and for his people. And the minister by faith knows that the dry bones in the congregation, and only they, will hear that word, and be moved by its power; for the dry bones in the valley represent those to whom the commandment has come, and who know their death in sin. These dry bones are spiritually alive to know their own death in sin, for they talk about it, and say, "Our hope is lost; our bones are dried, we are cut off for our parts." They are sensible of their condemned state. At Athens there were a few of them, and more at Antioch, and a great many at Berea. The news that God will save them is good news to them. This good news and the salvation come to them at the same time.

The preacher is not left to his own will whether he will speak the word. God puts the word in his heart, and it will burn there till he does speak. Jonah tried to run away from the command; but he only ran far enough to learn more perfectly that "salvation is of the Lord." Jeremiah declared positively that he would not speak in the Lord's name any more; but he only learned by that vain effort at independence, more clearly than he had realized before, that God was greater than he, and would certainly prevail over the fears and weakness and opposition of the flesh, and that his sweet and powerful and burning word within the hearts of his servants will soon make them weary of refraining, and glad to go and speak at his command.

"And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."—Acts xvii. 30.

"Is not that preaching to every one in general to repent? And would God command any one to repent if he had not given him power to do so?"

No, the Lord does not give any commands in this gospel dispensation without giving power to obey them. The same is true of all the commands under the old dispensation in a spiritual light; for in the volume of the book of the law it was written of Christ, that they should be obeyed by him, and their righteousness fulfilled in his people.—Psalm xl. 7; Rom. viii.

Under the gospel the commands of Christ are written in the heart. They are not general, but are all special and personal. Paul never heard the commandment which manifests sin, and which is unto death, until it came personally to him. Before that time he knew the letter of it, but now he felt the power of it.—Rom. vii. 9. And after the law of the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus has made us free from the law of sin and death, we are from that time under law to Christ, and his commands are written in the heart, and are felt to be privileges and blessings. They are our chief desire. The preaching of the gospel finds out such characters, whose hearts the Lord opens, in whom he "works that which is well pleasing in his sight." It is to such that the gospel is preached, though the preacher does not know them from the rest of the people before him until the word manifests them.

The preaching of the gospel is not to every one in general. There is no gospel proclamation, law or command which is general, but all are particular and personal. The preacher is addressing thousands of men and women, it may be, but he knows that only living souls will hear the joyful sound. He preaches a personal Savior, a personal experience, a personal salvation, as though he were speaking to only one. The hunger, the pain, the cry, are personal, and the poor sinner stands alone before God in his longing and helplessness. The answer comes as though he were the only one in the world who needed it; and when that dear Savior and his salvation is preached these solitary ones are gathered by the sound.

The preaching of the gospel includes the teaching of all its holy commands and requirements, which the grace of God has taught to all of the Lord's people in their experience, "that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." The preaching does not cause the spiritual feeling nor create the holy desire, any more than the falling of good seed upon a piece of ground causes it to become good ground. But to those who have been made good ground by the great Husbandman, whose hearts have been broken and made tender and soft, it gives comfort, encouragement and necessary instruction, and they will bring forth the fruits of righteousness in an obedient walk, to the honor and glory of God.

We must remember that the gospel is a "joyful sound" to those to whom it is sent. Its requirements are not tedious and burdensome to them. Gospel preachers are not sent to urge people to do what they have no heart to do, and to force commands upon them which would be as a heavy yoke to them. Those to whom it is sent may be known by their receiving it gladly, and by their joy when they are made to believe that its precious and sweet commands have been given to such vile sinners as they. To them the Savior's yoke is easy and his burden light; so light that they who are privileged to bear that yoke and burden do mount up with wings as eagles, they run and are not weary, they walk and are not faint.

Jesus was exalted to give repentance unto Israel, his spiritual Israel. The command to repent reaches no farther than the gift of repentance. The commands are all written in the hearts of his people, under the new covenant, and no minister sent of God is authorized to extend them beyond the limits he has fixed and established.

But until the resurrection of Christ only one nation in one part of the earth was before the Lord in the sense of being under his law. Now that he has risen and ascended on high, and is on the throne of his glory, all nations are before him, and he separates them, "as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."—Matt. xxv. 31. His commands and promises are not to all nations, but to the sheep, who were just as clearly distinct from the goats, in his view, before the separation as after.

John the Baptist preached to Israel after the flesh to repent; so did those sent out by the Savior, who were commanded not to go to the Gentiles nor even into a city of the Samaritans; and even on the day of Pentecost Peter preached repentance to Israel, and did not know that God had granted it to the Gentiles till the Lord sent him to the house of Cornelius. Then the Savior gave him to understand the fullness of the command given after he was raised from the dead.

Paul was especially an apostle to the Gentiles, and he taught from the first of his ministry that "all are not Israel who are of Israel;" but in Isaac the seed was called; that "the children of the flesh are not the children of God, but the children of promise;" the true Israel are gathered from every nation and kindred and tribe and tongue under heaven, and include "all men everywhere;" that is all classes, grades, conditions and nationalities of men in all parts of the world, instead of one nation of men in one country. He preached always to the Jews first, where there were any, for so Jesus had commanded, for a witness against them. Then he turned to the Gentiles.

The times of ignorance of the true God among other nations, while the Jews alone were under his teaching, God winked at (literally, overlooked), not inflicting punishment upon them for idolatry as he did upon Israel; "but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." I do not understand this to be a command to the nations and men of the world, but the command of the gospel to the Lord's people everywhere, to the sheep that are separated from the goats among all nations. It seems difficult for our natural thinking powers to let go the idea that the expression, "all men," must mean every one of all the race of Adam, although it seldom or never really does include so much. I now remember but one instance. Yet one use of this expression will show how it is always limited in its meaning. On the day of Pentecost the goods of the disciples were "parted among all men as every man had need;" yet only those men who were believers at that time and place are meant. So in this place the apostle uses an expression which is clear and comprehensive to present the truth that God's commands to his people find them not in one nation only, and in one part of the world, but among all nations, and everywhere. But it does not intimate that his commands are to the dead; they are only to the living.

To the dead the preaching of the gospel "is a savor of death unto death." The enemies of the truth are manifested when it is preached, by their opposition to it. To those on the right hand there is a "come" in the voice of Jesus, but to those on the left there is a "depart" in the same gospel. The one is drawn by the word of truth, the other repelled. The sunshine that softens the wax hardens the clay. The command to repent and turn away from idols comes as an unexpected blessing to the poor sinner among the Gentiles, who has been made to "feel after God," but is ignorant concerning him, and who, being "an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger from the covenants of promise," is "without God and without hope in the world." God has granted repentance also to the Gentiles, to all men everywhere, to all living men in all parts of the world. What a joy is this to them: it is indeed to them "glad tidings of great joy." Again, remember that the word "repent" does not mean sorrow, but the effect of sorrow. The literal reading of the original word is "to think differently," to reconsider. An authority quoted by Webster says, "Sorrow, fear and anxiety are properly not parts but adjuncts of repentance."

Wherever there appears to you any ground for believing that salvation depends in any degree upon any act of man, look again; go again and again back and forth over the ground; search the Scriptures and recall your own experience; and like the three on the mount of transfiguration, you will see no man in this glorious work, but Jesus only.

Never receive any doctrine which presents the Lord as trying in vain to accomplish the salvation of all the fallen race of Adam; as having to acknowledge himself defeated and disappointed in what his soul most earnestly desired to do; as having issued a command to all the race of Adam to repent and be saved, and as having given power with the command sufficient for its fulfillment, and as then being obliged to see a large proportion of men refuse to obey, and consequently go away into everlasting punishment, instead of entering into life eternal, as he wished them to. Never receive a doctrine that would place the name of our God far down in the list of names of men who have suffered terrible and mortifying defeat. The true doctrine exalts that holy name above every name that is named in this world or in the world to come. It says, "Our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "He is in one mind and who can turn him? and whatsoever his soul desireth, even that he doeth."

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Feb. 13, 1896.

LOS GATOS, Cal., Jan. 24, 1896.

DEAR ELDER CHICK:—I feel impressed to inclose a letter and ask its publication in the SIGNS, if it meets your approval. As will be seen this letter was written nearly twenty years ago by my beloved uncle, the late Elder John Stipp, a pioneer of Oregon, whom many of the present readers of the SIGNS will remember as being a regular correspondent for nearly or quite fifty years. This letter is more especially precious to me for the reason that at the time it was written I fondly hope my spiritual eyes were opened and turned, if haply they ever have been, to the unsealed tomb of the risen and triumphant Savior, whom the sainted Mary greeted with the joyful exclamation, "My Lord and my God!" As you will observe, the subject treated is "My two witnesses." Several communications have lately appeared in the SIGNS on that wonderfully sublime mystery, as well as an interesting editorial from your able pen, which I have read with interest and, I trust, profit. If you can see your way clear to publish my uncle's letter, and it affords as much comfort to the dear readers of the SIGNS as it has to me, it will amply reward them for its perusal.

Yours in the bonds of love and affliction,

HENRY S. STIPP.

SCIO, Ore., Dec. 5, 1876.

MR. AND MRS HENRY S. STIPP—DEAR NEPHEW, NIECE AND CHILDREN:—After a long and shameful delay, I have at last found an opportunity to write you a few lines in answer to yours, and the printed matter you sent me in relation to the "Two witnesses," the time and manner of their being slain, &c. You stated in your letter to me that you had sent me three papers containing the author's views on the Two Witnesses; but I received only two of them. Now, this much I have to say on that subject: If the author is correct in every thing else pertaining to the two witnesses, he certainly is incorrect in reference to the time when they were slain, in placing it to the time of the revolution in France, as the author himself admits that all the European nations except France continued to acknowledge the authenticity and inspiration of the Scriptures. Now, according to the author's idea that the Old and New Testaments are the two witnesses, and that the revolution in France, rejecting and burning the Bibles, and denying the Christian religion, were the slaying of the two witnesses, then I say the same argument would prove that they were never alive. China, one of the most powerful nations on the globe, never did acknowledge the Bible. I may say that nearly if not quite half the nations of the earth never did acknowledge the Bible. No, it must be universal. One lone nation can never kill the witnesses. While they remain alive in one nation they are not dead. "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the God of the earth," &c. The two olive trees represent Christ and the Holy Spirit as the two witnesses, and the candlesticks, or lampstands, the church; thus showing the union and relationship existing between Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and the church. The two olive trees being connected to or with the two lampstands by two golden pipes, are emblematical of the gospel, through which the grace of God, comparable to golden oil, is communicated from Christ and the Holy Spirit to the church; Christ and the Holy Spirit being the source and fountain-head from whence the grace of God is communicated to poor, helpless sinners, through the gospel; just in like manner as the olive trees are the source and fountain-head from whence oil is communicated through the golden pipes into the lamps, causing them to shed abroad their light. So also the grace of God, or the influences of the Holy Spirit flowing into the church through the gospel, causes it to be the light of the world, a city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid; and to let her light so shine, that others seeing her good works may glorify God. But for this oil or grace she would be like the five foolish virgins' lamps, they would go out, or cease to give light, and herein is set forth the law and the gospel; the five foolish virgins representing the law, or rather the scribes, priests and lawyers; and the five wise virgins representing the gospel ministry. The old covenant or law had a borrowed light, a pale moonlight, and, as Paul says, "For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which was done away [which was the foolish virgins, the scribes, priests and lawyers, with their law lamps] was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious" (2 Cor. iii. 9-12); which are the five wise virgins with their gospel lamps, and oil in their vessels with their lamps. Now, this is the sum total. Under the law dispensation light shone dimly through the priesthood. All those types were mere shadows of good things to come, and emitted a feeble light through the law, as merely borrowed from Christ, the Sun of righteousness, shining through the law; just as the moon in the darkness of night, or in the absence of the bright shining rays of the sun, sheds a feeble light upon our earth, the sun shining through the moon; but when the sun arises the light of the moon disappears, or goes out, like the foolish virgins' lamps, or the law covenant, which was merely temporal, and not spiritual; and Paul calls it a "carnal commandment," which embraced a national, temporal, carnal people, and not a spiritual people; but when the Sun of righteousness arose with healing in his wings, then the light which shone dimly through the ministry of the Levitical priesthood expired, i. e., went out, because they had no oil, no grace; had not Christ and the Holy Ghost as their witnesses. "But Christ having come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us."—Heb. ix. 11, 12. Now, these ministers under the Levitical priesthood were children of the law kingdom, or kingdom of the first heaven. Hence we read, "And I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. viii. 11, 12. Their lamps were gone out, and they were in outer darkness. You remember that it is said of those virgins that "While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out" (or going out—Margin). So you see that the wise virgins, which represent the gospel ministry, having their lamps trimmed, and by reason of oil, or the grace of God, their lights burning, "went in with the bridegroom to the marriage: and the door was shut." Afterward came also the the other virgins, saying, "Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." So you see that these graceless ministers of the old covenant could not enter into the new or gospel kingdom. John in the Revelation, speaking of the two witnesses, says, "These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth;" doubtless having reference to Zech. iv.; but Zechariah speaks of only one candlestick, thus, "And the angel which talked with me came again, and waked me as one is wakened out of his sleep, and said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps which are upon the top thereof [the seven lamps no doubt answer to the seven churches to whom John directed his Revelation]; and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl and the other upon the left side thereof."—Zech. iv. 1-3. And again, verses 12-14, "And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive branches, which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves? And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my Lord. Then said he, These are the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." Now, I cannot see where ever the Old and New Testament Scriptures are said to be anointed; but we read in many places that Jesus was anointed Prophet, Priest and King. "Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."—Heb. i. 9. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek," &c.—Isa. lxi. 1. "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed."—Acts. iv. 27. "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost."—Acts x. 38. Also, as witnesses, "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people."—Isa. lv. 4. "Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth."—John xviii. 37. "And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth."—Rev. i. 5. "I am one that bear witness of myself; and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me."—John viii. 18. "And unto the angel of the church in Laodicea write, These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God."—Rev. iii. 14. Secondly, the Holy Ghost is a witness. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghost is also a witness to us."—Heb. x. 14, 15. "And now behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me."—Acts xx. 22, 23. "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John xv. 26. "And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth."—1 John vi. 6. "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him."—Acts v. 32. Thus we have the two witnesses, Christ and the Holy Ghost, from Scripture authority. The Old and New Testaments speak of the two witnesses, but of themselves they are not the witnesses; for without the Spirit they are dead, and are no witnesses at all. Unless the Spirit applies the Scriptures with

REWARDS OF GRACE.

OUR friend, J. W. Benson, of Grifton, Maryland, who is a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and has been for some years, desires us to answer some questions which he has proposed. He refers to the use of the word "reward" in the Scriptures, and asks the following questions in relation to it. We desire to be brief in our replies, and to present the matter not in the light of human reasonings, but in the light of scriptural teaching. We trust that our friend feels as we do, that the Scriptures must be accepted at the sacrifice of all our reasonings, and even when opposed to the testimony of our own senses. Our reason and our senses may deceive us, but the Scriptures are the word of him that cannot lie.

1st. "Is there a difference between free will and free choice? Can one be true without the other?" In reply to the last question we should say positively, No; there can be no free choice without free will, and vice versa. In regard to the first question we should say, if there be any difference, it is but the difference between the fountain and the stream, between cause and effect. If there were anywhere in the universe besides Jehovah any being with a free will, then that will could make a free choice; and if any being besides Jehovah has ever made a free choice, then that being has had a free will. The two cannot be disjoined, any more than cause and effect can be disjoined.

2d. "Is free choice opposed to free grace?" We suppose that the real meaning of our friend's question might be expressed in this way: Is our free choice opposed to God's free choice? That is, if our salvation is by the grace or free choice of God, can we have any free choice in the matter? We think this is a fair statement of the question as it is meant. Even were the Scriptures silent upon this question, it would, we think, require but a brief consideration to show that in the matter of a sinner's salvation God's free choice could not live by the side of free choice in the one saved; because if our choice were free, we might choose not to be saved, and in that case either our choice or the choice of God must prevail. Both could not prevail, it is clear. If salvation be by the free choice of God, or, what is the same, his grace, then it cannot be by our free choice; and if we come to choose this salvation, it must be that our choice is controlled and molded into agreement with God's choice, which is to say that our choice is not free. But aside from this, the testimony of the Scriptures is clear. "We love him, because he first loved us." "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you." These Scriptures set forth the priority of the choice of God, and that we love and choose him because he loved and chose us. Besides, thoughtful men in all ages, upon both sides of this controversy, have clearly seen and freely admitted that God's free grace and man's free will were at an enmity that was irreconcilable. Jehovah only is free. He alone can choose freely. We never do choose without something without to decide our choice.

3d. "The Scriptures declare that there is a crown of life laid up for the faithful. Does the word 'faithful' signify passiveness?" We reply that the word "faithful," on the contrary, implies activity. But whence does all life and action come? Is it not true that every power, even of this natural life, comes from God? If a man be faithful to his calling in this natural life, is not his faithfulness the result of qualities given him of his Maker? Much more is this true when we speak of the faithfulness of a child of God. But the text to which our friend refers, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," refers to the obedience of the church, which already had been redeemed, and been made alive unto God; and the living believer is the subject of exhortation. Spiritual obligations are enjoined upon those that are spiritual; but the work by which men become spiritual is wholly of God, and they are as passive in it as is clay in the hand of the potter. There is no such thing as faithfulness spoken of except in connection with those who are already believers in God. The distinction between that work of grace by which men are made alive unto God, and the obedience which the living in Jerusalem are called upon to render, should always be kept clearly in view. The people of God are wholly passive in receiving this grace; but now this grace makes them active in obedience. Being full of faith, they are faithful.

4th. "Are not men said to be rewarded, to receive the things done in the body? Now, if the will is not free, or at least partially so, to exercise the power of choice, how can there be a reward?" It is true that rewards are spoken of many times in the Scriptures, either for the evil or the good that men do. The legal covenant, or, as we commonly say, the old covenant, which is sometimes called in the Scriptures the first covenant, was altogether conditional upon the obedience or disobedience of Israel, who were under that covenant. They received wages for obedience and for disobedience. But let it be most carefully remembered that that covenant in none of its conditions took hold upon eternal life. Its obedience secured temporal rewards; its disobedience entailed temporal punishments.

But we are not now dealing with the things of that covenant; we are speaking of the new and better covenant. Not the covenant of conditions, but of promises; not of works, but of grace; not of the law, but of the gospel. Under the law the reward was not of grace, but of debt; but under the gospel Paul clearly shows that the reward is of grace. Sin, Paul teaches, has its wages, but grace has its gift. If we consider the words "grace" and "reward," and judge them by their strict ordinary use, we should say that they could never blend together; but Paul does blend them, and declares that there is a reward of grace under the gospel; and the reward of grace is to him who worketh not. If the receiver works for his reward it is no more of grace. According to Paul (Romans xi. 6), the addition of the slightest work to the scheme of salvation drives all the grace out of it; while the bringing in of the least grace banishes all creature work forever. It seems to us that our friend's fourth question is fully answered by the language of Paul in Romans iv. 4, 5, in which he shows that there is such a thing as a reward of grace; and as regards free will or free choice, either in whole or in part, we need not repeat what we have said in response to the first three questions. God's free choice, and not ours, is in harmony with the reward of grace. If our choice is free, then the reward is not of grace.

5th. "How can a purely passive being be rewarded?" We have shown that the chosen vessel of mercy is passive in receiving grace, but that when grace is communicated it produces active obedience. Then its recipient becomes the subject of exhortations, warnings, instructions, commandments and counsels. But we are not now considering the obedience or disobedience of those already saved, but how men come to be saved; and as before said, the reward of salvation is not reckoned of works, but of grace. Therefore in this sense, according to Paul, a purely passive being can be rewarded.

6th. "Salvation is by grace; but are the 'crown of life' and 'salvation' identical?" The expression "crown of life" occurs twice in the New Testament, James i. 12 and Revelation ii. 10. It is our understanding that the word "salvation" covers all the riches of grace that believers receive in this life, and all the fullness of glory that shall be theirs beyond; and all is of grace. It is the testimony of every believing heart, as well as of inspiration, that the present as well as the final salvation is all of grace; and while they that sow to the flesh shall reap what they sow in corruption, yet sowing to the Spirit is by the grace of God. We have no hesitancy, therefore, in saying that whatever the expression "the crown of life" may mean, it is included in the word "salvation," though it may not be as broad in meaning.

7th. "No man can come except the Father draw him. Does this mean pull, drag, &c., against the will?" The text referred to means that man has neither will nor inclination to come to the Savior of himself. When the Father draws a man to the Savior it is by molding the likeness of Jesus in that man; and as such a one is thus made to possess this oneness of life and feeling with Jesus, he now desires to come to Jesus, and does come. This is the drawing spoken of by Jesus in the Scripture referred to. Instead of this drawing being against the man's will, his will now is to come; and to come to Jesus does not mean a journey over hills and valleys, over land and sea, but it means coming to rest and trust in him, and to love the things he loves, and to hate the things he hates. In short, it means being made like him through seeing him as he is; and none of this can be without a will to come. To come to Jesus means to come where he is; not in point of place or space, but in becoming meek, lowly, humble, obedient, as he was. No man was ever willing of himself to be with and like Jesus. He must be drawn by the Father. The psalmist knew all about this experience, for he said, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Those of whom it could once be said, "Ye will not come," now have such a wonderful work wrought in them that with deepest desire they now will come. No, no; not dragged against the will, but the will is made willing.

8th. "If made willing, are we passive in coming?" We would reply that we were wholly passive as regards the exercise of the wonderful working power that made us willing. Then comes the earnest desire, the prayer, the stretching forth of the hands to God, the striving and the crying for grace that we may come, that we may be with and like Jesus. We should not say that we were passive in coming in the sense of being indifferent and careless; but yet we realize that if we have in any way been brought nigh it is a being brought. Not by the exercise of our strength, but his, have we come. His will and his work work within us both the will to do and the doing of his will. Paul declares that he works within both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Would we say that the child surrounded by danger, and longing and reaching out his hands for help, was passive? Then we are not passive; and yet as the child must be saved, and cannot save himself from the danger, so we must be saved, and cannot aid in our own salvation.

9th. "How can a purely passive being be rewarded?" is the question especially. We trust that we have already responded to this question, especially in our response to the fourth question, and we would not go over this ground again. It is purely upon principles of grace, as Paul has shown.

10th. "Am I responsible for any inherited depravity? Does not justice demand I should be released from that?" In what we may say in reply we will not separate these questions, because if we are held responsible for our inherited depravity it is according to the justice of God, and if justice holds us we are responsible. It has for many years seemed to us a very unsafe thing to measure the justice of God by any human standard. We have at times felt worried and pained to hear men talk of the justice of God according to the partial view which we take of what is just. We are fallen creatures, and our minds and hearts are so blinded by sin that we are not and never shall be capable, while in this world, of measuring the justice of God. All that we can know of the divine justice is what the word says about it; and what he does is just, though it may seem to our perverted minds unjust.

In direct reply to the question above we will say that it is sure that nothing sinful or unclean can ever enter into the presence of God or abide there. Whether we speak of inherited sin or any other kind of sin, this is equally true. The Scriptures declare the native depravity of man since the fall. The head, hands, feet, the mouth, the tongue, the whole body, is said to be defiled. The mind, the will, the heart, the thoughts, feelings and imaginations, are all declared to be evil, and that continually; and into the city of God nothing evil can ever enter. Sin shuts us out from God, and will forever do so wherever it is found. This the word declares; this is just. It is just, though we may fail to understand it. If our inherited sin ought not in justice to shut us out from God forever, then the God of justice could never have demanded a sacrifice for it, and inherited sin would not be included in the atonement that was provided for all the sin of his people. If Jesus died to redeem us from all iniquity, inherited depravity included, then we were most certainly responsible for it. Our Surety paid no greater debt than we owed, we may be sure; and to owe is to be justly responsible. Sin is sin wherever found; and the man where it is found is a sinner, no matter how he came to be possessed of it.

11th. "If we are rewarded, can we not do that which is worthy of reward?" Not if the reward be reckoned of grace, and not of debt; for to do what is worthy of reward would destroy all the grace there is in it. Then the crown would belong to us, not to Jesus.

12th. "Why is the word 'reward' "

in the Bible at all instead of 'gift'?" The word is used in the Old and New Testaments many times; and frequently it is used in its ordinary sense, more particularly in the Old Testament. Yet in many instances the word is used in the sense of the natural result either of right or of wrong doing; but in the few instances where the everlasting hope of believers is set forth it is used in the sense of a free gift. We know of no reason why this should be so, unless in this way the merit of Jesus is thereby more forcibly contrasted with human merit. The work and merit of Jesus is rewarded in his people. To them it is all a gift. To Jesus it is a true reward that his people are saved and blessed with all spiritual blessings, including present grace and future glory.

We hope that we have not darkened counsel by words without knowledge, and that these replies may afford some satisfaction to Mr. Benson and to others who may read.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

JOHN IV. 23.

BROTHER BEEBE:—Do you believe that the believer in Jesus can, or does, worship the Father, at all times, in spirit and in truth?

C. M.

REPLY.

OUR Lord said to the woman of Samaria, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

A line is here drawn between the ceremonial and gospel worshipers, and between the worship of the former, which was mechanically performed, both at Jerusalem and on the mountain of Samaria, by the use of rites and ceremonies embraced in the law of carnal commandments, adapted to the carnal or fleshly character of the children of Israel, to whom that law was given, and those worshipers under the gospel dispensation who being born of the Spirit are divinely qualified to worship the Father, not in carnal ordinances, such as going up to Jerusalem or to Samaria with offerings, &c., but in obedience to the law of the new covenant which God has written in their hearts. The worship of the Israelites under the old covenant was only figurative of the true worship in the gospel kingdom, of which the former was typical; hence the latter, being the antitypical and real, is called true, in distinction from that which was ceremonial and figurative. As the law and prophets were until John, and the sceptre and lawgiver were with Judah until Shiloh came, by their own limitation they expired when Christ came; and the hour had come, and was to be still more clearly demonstrated after the resurrection of Christ from the dead, in which the true worshipers, namely, regenerated persons, should worship the Father in spirit and in truth.

The Jewish worship and that of the Samaritans was fleshly and not spiritual; for it required no being born again to qualify the Jew or Samaritan to perform it; but, at the abrogation of all ceremonial rites the church of God, who are entered with Christ within the veil, now approach unto the Father in their worship "By a new and living way, consecrated through the veil; that is to say, his flesh." Hence it is the privilege of all gospel saints to come boldly unto the throne, to ask for mercy and obtain grace to help in time of need.

But in the sense in which we presume our brother designs to be understood, we can only say that the preparations of the heart and the answer of the tongue are both of the Lord; and all christians have found in their experience that they cannot sing the songs of Zion when in a strange land; that the sweet and heavenly unctions of the Holy Spirit are not at our command; when enjoyed, they fall on the saints as the dew of Hermon descended and fell upon the mountains of Zion. The Lord of life and glory pours out upon his true worshipers the spirit of grace and of supplication, and his Spirit helps their infirmities. In the absence of this they may ask and receive not, for they know not how to pray as they ought. It is a solemn truth, God is a Spirit, and seeketh such to worship him as worship in spirit and in truth; not in the oldness of the letter, but in the newness of the spirit. But alas! how much of the professed worship of the present age is as destitute of spirit as it is of truth—vainly worshipping, by teaching for doctrine the commandments of men; pretending to worship the Father with fiddles, flutes, organs, and by solemn sounds from graceless hearts and thoughtless tongues; by reading prayers and sermons, and offering strange fire upon the altar which they have professed to consecrate unto the Most High God; and even in perverting his truth, profaning his ordinances, and reproaching his true worshipers. How much of the professed worship of the age is as destitute of spiritual vitality as the abrogated rites of Judaism or the foolish mummeries of paganism.

power to the spiritual mind of man, they are a dead letter. But I must draw this imperfect scribble to a close. I have been very scattering, but perhaps you can pick up some of the crumbs that are scattered by the way.

This is from your affectionate uncle,

JOHN STIPP.

STATE ROAD, Del., Feb. 5, 1896.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have been requested to write for the consideration of brethren something of my own reflections and experience on what is commonly spoken of as the subject of the new birth. I have of course had many occasions, both in private and in public, to speak more or less on this particular topic. I have no new or additional light on this particular point of truth, and I am not aware that my views during the last forty years have undergone any change. I once heard a preacher say, speaking of the inspiration of the Scriptures, that the inspiration was of the doctrine or sentiment, and that in that respect all inspired writers would be in accord; but the language was the writer's own. So like gospel preachers, while in perfect accord in sentiment, their language and figures and methods of illustration would materially differ.

The evangelist John uses the term "born" repeatedly, as though to him it was the most appropriate and expressive term he could use; yet while he was confessedly one of the most interesting and instructive of all the inspired writers, yet numbers of them never use the word at all. Paul, while dwelling on christian experience more than any other, never once uses the word "born." Peter uses it once, and but once; and the psalmist uses it in the eighty-seventh Psalm. Are we then to understand that none but these of all the inspired writers taught the doctrine of the new birth? Or are we rather to conclude that they all taught it, and that all felt its importance, and ever and continuously maintained it, though using somewhat different terms in setting it forth? If this is so, we do well to compare them, and see if different figures and illustrations do not throw additional light upon what might otherwise perplex some honest inquirer. Neither Matthew, Mark nor Luke ever once use the word "born" in this sense; yet I understand each of them to set forth the doctrine in as explicit and positive terms as did John. In Matthew we find this, "And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." Mark's version is this way,

"Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Luke gives it in nearly the same words, "Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall in no wise enter therein." Besides these concurring testimonies we have others all through the Scriptures, as in Galatians: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." These declarations all appear to me to declare the very same truth, not only in perfect concurrence with each other, but also in accord with all the rest of divine teaching. The little child is spoken of as receiving the kingdom, and also of entering into it. Both terms imply a helpless, passive condition. As the infant enters into this world, and the natural earthly life, and receives comforts appertaining to this life, so the sons and daughters of men, quickened by the Spirit of God, receive that Spirit, or are born of it, and from henceforth live a life of which they had before been destitute. Hence the apostle says to his brethren, "Ye have not received the spirit which is of the world, but the Spirit which is of God;" and, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." As we cannot command or control our natural life, it would be presumptuous in us to claim that we could control the Spirit of God. Until we shall control the winds that blow upon us, and the rain and the snow that come down from heaven, we shall not control the movements of the Spirit of the Lord, nor know whence it cometh or whither it goeth. All this is in perfect accord with the declaration that "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." If it is the Spirit that quickeneth, and the flesh profiteth nothing, how else could it be but "Except a man be born of the Spirit he cannot see the kingdom of God?" Jesus says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." The terms election, predestination, and such like—what difference is implied in them from all these other declarations? "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." What will a man do spiritually until he is in possession of spiritual life? Will any man even desire that life, or the enjoyments of it, while destitute of it? Will some of the zealous workers of our day show to natural men those things which are spiritually discerned?

There has been much mystifying and befogging of what appears to me to be plain enough to all to whom the things of the Spirit are revealed by some writers that have been held in high esteem. I am not writing to debate the subject with anybody, but will simply say that I know of no other seed or generation or order of beings that ever needed a Savior, or for whom a provision of gospel grace has been made, only the posterity of that first man, that was natural, and of the earth. I believe in the sentiment of the poet,

"Second life we now receive,
And in our heavenly Adam live."

There is nothing before life; and as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and as the Father raiseth the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live."

In the face of all those testimonies that exalt the Redeemer as the life of all that live, and as the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last in salvation, how weak and vain do all those theories that men have devised appear! A general and indefinite provision, for instance, that hinges entirely upon the volition of the sinner, and amounts to nothing unless the sinner moves first in the matter and performs conditions. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Whether we call it born of the Spirit, quickened by the Spirit, called to be saints, passed from death unto life, made alive from the dead, or a new heart given us, and a new spirit put within us, and the law of God written in our hearts, it is only so many different ways of declaring and setting forth that salvation that Christ is unto his people, and by which they are called unto his eternal glory.

I will submit these reflections to the consideration of brethren.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

FARMINGTON, Ill., Feb. 16, 1896.

BROTHER BEEBE:—Having read the last number of the SIGNS, and seeing your appeal headed, "How can we know?" it seems to me the way for you to know is for each one to let you know, and send you your just dues. I have been a subscriber nearly forty years, and never have I let mine run long after it was due. I have not yet felt like giving up the SIGNS, as it was the first paper that was started in the perilous times, when your dear father stood as a champion, and fearlessly faced the enemies that rose up and defied the armies of the living God. His weapons were not carnal, but mighty to the pulling down of strongholds, when spiritual wickedness made its inroads among the Baptists.

I have just read the first book of "Editorials." I had not read it for several years. I feel to say to all who love the truth it sets forth, that I believe it will pay each one that never has read it to send and get the book. I have both volumes. I believe there never has been among our people a more faithful and valiant servant of the Lord Jesus Christ than your father; and though now dead, yet he speaks. I feel glad that those books of "Editorials" were put out to be handed down to those who shall live when we are gone.

I read a proclamation from the capital at Washington, D. C., by the great world-preacher, Mr. Talmage, his text being, "Beginning at Jerusalem." How the man of sin is being revealed, "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God," "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."—2 Thess. ii. How true to his cause when Satan declared to mother Eve in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Their god, through their mighty help, is going to take Washington, and amend it and the whole world. "At what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up."—Daniel iii. I am fearful that the time is not far distant when the daughters of Mystery, Babylon, will get the law power. Then those who will not bow down to their gods will have to suffer. But God is able to deliver us, as he did Daniel, and we need not fear them who are only able to take this life. These poor, despised Nazarenes, who are everywhere spoken against, who will not join house to house, they think are very uncharitable. While we look on them as good neighbors and citizens, and they look on us the same, why is it, they think, as we both profess religion, that we will not unite with them? They say we are all aiming for the same place. They say they are doing a great work for the Lord, helping him to save sinners. I feel that my arm is too short. I cannot save myself. I feel to be a poor sinner. I am a man of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, high and lifted up, while I am a poor beggar lying at the gate, not able to help myself. My hope is alone in God. I feel that I have no claim upon the blessed Master that he should save me. He hath made me to know and love the truth, and to love those who love the truth.

I inclose my subscription for the year 1896. May the Lord be with you. Farewell.

HAMPTON, Iowa, Nov. 17, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—It is a long time since I have written any thing for the SIGNS. I esteem it highly, for it advocates the doctrine I believe, although there are some communications I do not indorse; but I realize so sensibly my inability, and am such an ignorant creature spiritually, I feel that I should not attempt to write even privately to the household of faith, much less for publication. I read every piece carefully when I receive the paper, and find so many able writers who are endowed with more spiritual wisdom than myself, I often fear I am a poor, deceived mortal and know nothing about experimental religion. I have just read sister Sarah A. Runkle's piece, which was a feast to me. I feel and experience what she has written. Write on, sister; and not only you, but also all who write regularly for the SIGNS. I have read the paper off and on for over forty years. Very few are now living who wrote for it forty years ago. Such able writers as Purington, Leachman, Trott, Johnson and Vanmeter, and many more I could name, are called home to receive their reward. Elders Durand and Chick and brother H. Cox are yet spared to us, and are about all who are left of the old corps of able writers. A few more years and they will also be called home. But blessed be God, brother Benton, you will have assistants as long as you publish the SIGNS. I thought when our old father in Israel, Elder G. Beebe, was called home, what will brother Benton do? But God furnished him an able assistant in brother W. L. Beebe. I still firmly believe the old SIGNS will be published, as long as there are such able editors as it has had in the past and has at the present time; and when they are called home God will furnish it with more. I see this is volume sixty-three. Brethren, I believe God has blessed you and kept you all by his loving grace since the first number was published in the year 1832. All the fiery darts of the enemy have never hurt you. In all your trials in publishing the SIGNS God has ever been with you. We are few, compared with worldly religionists of the day; only a little flock, surrounded by all the isms of the day. The church of the living God is built upon the rock, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. He is the head over the body, the church, which will stand forever. When the last one has been called by grace, then this world will vanish and time will be no more. O, brethren and sisters, may we live humbly here, despised by the world as we are. Our God has declared the end from the beginning, his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure, and all for the good of his people. All his promises are to them alone. They are an afflicted and poor people, who shall trust in the name of the Lord. I believe the Old School Baptist Church is the only true church of Christ on earth, or that ever will be. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Eph. iv. 5, 6. They are the only people on earth who do trust in the name of the Lord. May our covenant-keeping God keep us by his grace from the allurements of the world, cause us to walk in his footsteps, and not be entangled with unbelievers, but looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. May God bless the brethren editors, and give them light and wisdom to conduct the SIGNS in the future as in the past, and bless also the contributors for the paper, that love and union may dwell with the household of faith, is the humble prayer of the writer, who is badly afflicted in body.

Yours to serve in the afflictions of the gospel of God our Savior,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been instructed and edified by the editorial article of brother Chick in the SIGNS of Nov. 20th, on the words of our Prophet, Priest and King, Jesus of Nazareth, spoken on two occasions; first to the woman who was taken in the act of adultery, John viii. 11, "Go, and sin no more," and again to the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, John v. 14, "Sin no more." The words called to my mind the words of the apostle John, "Whoever is born of God overcometh the world."—John v. 4. "Whoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."—1 John iv. 9. Again, he says, "Whoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him." "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil." Now, Jesus says, speaking the words which the Father gave him to speak, in making manifest the will of God, "Go, sin no more." "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee." These two classes of Scripture must be in harmony one with another. If we consider this woman and this man as being born again, born of the Spirit, which must be admitted, then there must be some sense in which they could have sinned, or Jesus would be represented as speaking idle words, which is preposterous. What shall we then say to these things? Shall we hold the testimony of Jesus as being in conflict with the word of God as spoken by the apostle John, who was inspired by the Holy Ghost? Nay. Shall we consider the words of Father, Son and Holy Ghost as being in conflict and involving a positive contradiction of terms? This would be to overthrow the veracity of the whole Bible. Then how shall we rightly divide the word of truth? This must be done, or Satan gains a victory, our hope is overthrown, and our faith made void. I think Paul comes in here with the key of knowledge and unlocks the mystery; first, with these words, "The children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." I only hint at this as the opening point to the scriptural and proper solution of this whole mysterious subject. In relating his own christian experience in the seventh chapter of Romans this view is fully sustained. The new man in Christ cannot sin, but the old man of flesh can and does sin. The new man is after God created in righteousness and true holiness; but the man of flesh is of the earth, earthy; and of this man the apostle James has said, "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain; The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" Of this man of the flesh the apostle Peter, to whom Jesus had been revealed by the Father as the Son of the living God, said on one occasion, "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man." Was he born of God? "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." And, "Whoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." James says that in many things we all offend. Paul says, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) there dwells no good thing;" and we also hear him saying, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin." He says also, in the same connection, and on the same subject, and in the present tense, "If then I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." The old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, lusteth to envy. Paul himself said, "For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." Now I will quote John, with Paul's definition, "It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." "Whoever is born of God sinneth not." Also the words of Jesus, "Go, and sin no more," with Paul's definition, "But with the flesh the law of sin." Now I think we have the true digest of this wonderfully dark subject to carnal reason. But shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid; for how shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." Let us now sum up the matter thus: the new creature in Christ does not, cannot sin, for he is under grace; but the old, Adamic nature in the saints can and often does sin, because of the law of sin in their members; but when the adoption shall come, for which we wait by faith, then will the change come.

In addition to what I have written I will say that during the delay in mailing the foregoing I have received another issue of the SIGNS, in which are the letters of Elders H. J. Redd and A. H. Hagans, on the subject of the first and second resurrections, which are very edifying to me, as well as that important editorial of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe. How consoling are the words of those who know the Lord is risen indeed and has appeared to them in their experience.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE:—Inclosed I send you two dollars on my subscription to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I am very sorry that I could not send my dues before this, but it seems like times are harder with me now than they have been for years. I will never forget your kindness in bearing with me. The SIGNS is the same old sound, true and God-honoring paper that it was when I began to take it, twenty years ago. God bless you. As ever, yours,

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At her residence in Middletown, N. Y., Saturday, Feb. 15th, 1896, of heart and liver disease, Mrs. Fanny Harding, widow of Stephen Harding, and daughter of John and Anna Racine, in the 78th year of her age.

Sister Harding was born in Bloomingburgh, N. Y., but spent almost all her life on a farm at Millsburgh, removing to Middletown about seven years ago, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Charles D. Johnson. She is survived by two children, G. Coleman Harding, of Otisville, N. Y., and Mrs. Johnson; also six grandchildren and two nephews.

Sister Harding was married in early life to brother Stephen Harding, a son of Elder Amos Harding, who died April 25th, 1874. Both were highly esteemed members of the Middletown & Walkkill Old School Baptist Church, having been baptized by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe.

The funeral services of sister Harding were held on Tuesday, the 18th, and were conducted by her pastor; after which her mortal remains were laid away in the cemetery at New Vernon by the side of her husband. The text used on the occasion was, by request, 2 Timothy iv. 7, 8: "I have fought a good fight," &c.

BENTON JENKINS.

Wilson Thompson Clark departed this life Feb. 7th, 1896, near Woodhull, Ill.

He was born March 20th, 1821, in Warren Co., Ohio, and was married to Deborah C. Butler on April 17th, 1842. He was not a member of any visible church, but he has left sure and lasting evidence that he has joined that heavenly church whose members are all of one mind and one body. This has been manifested to those ministering to his needs during his long and terrible sufferings, by his daily expressions of faith in Jesus, being not only ready, but praying that he might go and meet him. His last words were, "Lord, my God." His only hope was in a crucified and risen Savior. He felt that his sins were forgiven for Christ's sake, and that he had been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. He would often say, "When will I reach that blessed land? The time seems so long. When will my sufferings be over, and I be at rest?" Nothing but the truth as it is in Jesus would satisfy him; and he wanted God to have all the glory, for to him it belongs. It was all of grace, free grace, with him.

He leaves to mourn his death his life companion, who through all his long sickness has shown her loving devotion by her ever-ready desire to do for his needs and wishes, no matter how trivial they were, nor how bad she might feel herself. She has that sweet comfort to bear her up. Besides her are three daughters, fifteen grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren, two sisters, and other relatives and friends. It was his desire to have his daughters with him as much as they could be. The youngest two daughters live in North Dakota, and to grant him this wish they left their homes and families much of the time during the past year, and helped minister to his wants and comfort. It was my happy privilege to be with him the past year during his sickness, and I often felt it was a sacred duty to help wait on him. He had taken the SIGNS OF THE TIMES since 1869. His heart was ever open to the needy and afflicted, and many of the readers of the SIGNS will remember him when they see this.

The funeral took place at the residence on Feb. 12th. Elder S. Ketchum, of Champaign City, and Elder S. H. Humphrey, of Galesburg, Ill., were present. Elder Humphrey read two hymns which dear uncle had selected (881 and 1252 of Beebe's Collection), and spoke in prayer. Elder Ketchum read the twenty-third Psalm, and preached a very comforting discourse. Elder Humphrey then read the 1257th hymn. His remains were laid to rest in the Ontario cemetery.

His niece,

MATTIE S. BOWEN.

DIED—On Monday p. m., Feb 10th, 1896, Maggie L. Collard, daughter of Hyman S. and Fannie Harding Collard, in her 13th year, and Mabel Winter, daughter of Wright W. and Flora Harding Winter, in the 14th year of her age, both of Winterton, Sullivan Co., N. Y.

They were returning from school, and ventured upon the ice of a lake which had been formed by recent freshets. Arriving in the centre of the lake, the thin ice suddenly broke beneath their weight, and they were soon drowned. Their lifeless bodies were recovered about an hour later, and taken to the homes of the grief-stricken parents, which but a few hours before they had left in the glee of childhood.

On Thursday p. m. following funeral services were held at the homes of the parents, and later the two processions joined and proceeded to the Old School Baptist meeting-house at New Vernon, where brief services were held, in the presence of about four hundred sympathizing relatives and friends of the bereaved parents. The bodies of the two children reposed in white caskets, and in garments of white, while their young faces appeared more beautiful in the sleep of death than the profusion of lovely flowers around them. Their forms seemed too beautiful to bury out of sight, and we sorrowfully committed "earth to earth and dust to dust" in the cemetery, "the house appointed for all living."

God alone can give reconciliation and comfort in these bereavements. May the dear parents and all the sorrowing ones find in him that peace which the world cannot give nor take away.

BENTON JENKINS.

DIED—Near Weston, Umatilla County, Oregon, Peter Smith Walden, aged 73 years.

The last illness was dropsy of the heart, although he had suffered excruciatingly from inflammatory rheumatism for several years, so that the right shoulder had been thrown out of its socket. The deceased was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, in the year 1822, and died June 1st, 1895. He often related to us his vivid memories of friends and relatives who used to meet at Lebanon, Ohio, to worship the true and living God. In the year 1833 his parents removed to Crawfordsville, Ind., where he grew into a remarkably exemplary young man. In the year 1844 he was married to Miss Martha Jane Edgman, orphaned niece of Elder Easley. There were but two children in his father's family, and Benjamin, being older, had gone to Oregon in the year 1845. Their father could not longer bear the separation, and in 1852 the two families made the ever-perilous journey across the plains to Oregon. The dear old father and mother Walden were thus permitted to see their family reunited, and for twelve years they all often met at the Siloam and other churches in Oregon, where the only joy they coveted could be realized, which was to hear Elder Stipp and other dear servants of God so clearly set forth the gospel of grace and truth. Then the father was taken to his long-coveted rest, in the year 1864. The two sons and their aged mother are lying side by side in the beautiful cemetery near Weston, where since 1872 they had resided. The aged wife still survives, and together with their six children mourns the loss of one from whom no unkind word or deed ever emanated. His last days were full of pain, and for several months he prayed almost unceasingly for release. His last hours were painless, and he died as dies the natural flower. Dear uncle could never get consent of his mind to unite with the church, always waiting for his mind to be more deeply wrought upon; but the sovereign, reigning grace of God was his choicest theme, and he loved the brethren.

A HYMN.

O THOU majestic Lord!
To thee, by all adored,
My burdened soul has come at length.
Show me thy sovereign power,
Be thou my firm set tower,
My place of everlasting strength.
How gracious is thy name!
Eternal is thy fame!
My heart leaps upward at the thought.
O help me trust in thee,
Thy mercy may I see,
Thy love and grace, by me unsought.
To me, O Lord, with grace
Thou hast unveiled thy face,
Thy glorious majesty shines forth.
Fain would I speak thy praise,
And notes of pleasure raise;
How great and matchless is thy worth!
O Lord, thou wilt receive
The sacrifice I give,
I bring the Lamb for sinners slain.
His name is all my plea,
Through him I come to thee,
Through him I'm clean and have no stain.
And while I raise my song
Let every voice prolong
The chorus loud in glad acclaim,
Till all thy name who love,
In earth or heaven above,
Shout forth thy honor, power and fame.

UGHT I?

SHOULD I follow in the fancies
Of the vain and vulgar crowd,
Even though my native nature
Were as evil and as proud?
What if mine were only evil,
Were it just to give them rein,
Liberate them to the riot
Of the bold and vicious train?
Would I be a vile deceiver
If I hide my evil thought
'Neath the cover of a censure
That their sins (and mine) have wrought?
Were I hypocritically
Hiding all my native shame
If I openly and fully Hold their sins (and mine) in blame?
Lord, decide the mooted question,
Give thy judgment just and true:
If in view of others' evils
I may wanton thoughts pursue.
God forbid it—e'en confession,
Though a duty, is a cross;
And I know that open folly
Proves to me a greater loss.
Thus I know we may not fully Give our sins a public place,
Just to gratify our folly
In the argument of grace.
What if it were all predestined,
I was also doomed to grieve
Over secret faults and open,
Nor does grief my faults relieve.
O! I find such constant folly,
Evil thoughts, no words can tell,
"Worse than all the sins of Satan"—
I, not he, am saved from hell.

If then I'm a son of mercy,
Gratitude should constant move
All my energies to service
In the works of holy love.

Humble and contrite in spirit,
Every thought is due to thee;
And each act should be indited
By thy Spirit full and free.

In contrition I will bow me
Lowly down beneath thy feet,
While I own thy judgment mercies
Blend the bitter with the sweet.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HORACE, TEXAS.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—The holy Scriptures abound with good and comforting things for the tempted and tried people of God while they journey on through this vale of sorrow. Every account of God's dealings with his children, in harmony with everything our eyes behold, declares to us the truth of which the Lord assures us by the mouth of his prophet, "I am God, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." What comfort to the poor, weary sinner when he is enabled by faith to realize the truth of this declaration and feel the promise his. If he has felt the love of God in his heart at one time, then he may rest assured that he was loved of his heavenly Father before time was. He is loved now, and ever will be. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." Though his sins be many and great, and very grievous to him, and his foes may be many and powerful, so that his life may be a continual scene of vexation and trial, yet he may be assured with the apostle, who says, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." In the abundance of his provision for his poor and afflicted people, their God has graciously surrounded them with a "cloud of witnesses," both as to the perfection of his attributes and his faithfulness to accomplish all that he has promised. " whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." There is, perhaps, much in any subject we are led to contemplate that we are unable to see; yet just a little that we are enabled to see at times makes our hearts to rejoice. I have thought that it will take all the members of Christ's body, from the first one of the children of men that ever "tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come," to the last one that shall ever so taste, to comprehend all that God is pleased to reveal to his children; so we now only "see in part, and know in part;" "we see through a glass darkly." Even the things revealed in the "body of Christ" from first to last, the wisest of the children know comparatively little, while that which is known by the most ignorant of those "little children" is very great; so great that even the very wisest of men cannot comprehend it.

I had it on my mind in commencing this letter to offer some thoughts on the dealings of the Lord with national Israel, as they have occurred at different times to my mind, and have been very comforting to me at times. There are some very important lessons taught in the history of this people, upon which we will all perhaps agree, while when we go into detail there are many things, perhaps, we will not see exactly alike. In all his dealings with this people the Lord has shown his power to carry out his purposes and bring to pass his covenant promises to Abraham. His sovereign right to choose a people, and to reject other peoples, is particularly set forth. The principle of election is illustrated by the act of the Lord himself. The long-suffering and forbearance of the Lord is also plainly shown. All these things teach us to-day of the perfections, of the attributes, of our God. All his dealings with Israel were based upon covenant principles. "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river of Euphrates."—Gen. xv. 18. Before this it is written, "And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him. And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge; and afterward shall they come out with great substance. And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age. But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again; for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full."—Gen. xv. 12-16. Thus the Lord revealed to Abram the wonderful works to be performed in that mighty nation which was to spring from him, and gave to his people a beautiful figure of that "covenant ordered in all things and sure," wherein he made choice of all the heirs of promise in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world. Isaac, the promised son, was born after a miraculous manner; and it is written, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." So Jesus was a child of promise, and born after a wonderfully miraculous manner. In him all the heirs of promise are called. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4. Paul says again, "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise."—Gal. iv. 28.

Every event, no matter how insignificant it may appear, was necessary, and a connecting link in the great chain of events transpiring, from the time the Lord appeared to Abram until the children of Israel came into possession of the land of promise. Ishmael was born a child of the effort system, a child of the bond woman, and God said he should not be heir with the son of the free woman, a child of promise. Paul says of these things, "Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."—Gal. iv. 24-26.

We will now briefly notice some of the most prominent events in the history of this typical people, until the word of God to Abraham was fulfilled in their coming into a "strange land" to sojourn. In all this we have the doctrine of predestination, election, and the overruling providence of God in working all things after the counsel of his own will, prominently set forth. In the process of time Jacob and Esau were born into the world; Jacob beloved, and Esau hated, even before they were born, they "having done neither good nor evil; that the purpose of God according to election might stand," &c. Jacob had twelve sons, who were the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel. There was one he seemed to have a special love for, Joseph, a son of his beloved Rachel. As a token of his love he gave him a coat of many colors. This Joseph was destined to be envied, hated and persecuted by his own brethren, and, as was the case with Jesus our Savior, without a cause. The envy and malice actuating the brethren of Joseph in their persecution of him, was just as much a link in that chain of circumstances necessary to bring to pass God's promise to Abraham, as was the love of Joseph's father. It was needful that Joseph go before his brethren down into Egypt to prepare food for them during the famine which was to come. Nothing, however, did his brethren know of God's purpose in Joseph, and their wickedness was no less wickedness because it was God's purpose by it to send Joseph down into Egypt to "save much people alive." They "meant [purposed] it for evil, but God meant [purposed] it for good." Neither have we any reason to conclude for a moment that God's purpose in this matter was known to Joseph or to Jacob. The anguish, the sorrow of heart they must have suffered in this trying ordeal, the sale of Joseph, the belief of Jacob that he was destroyed by a wild beast of the forest, were all necessary links in the chain to fulfill the promise of the Lord to Abraham. What do we see in all this? The mighty power of God in the works of his providence, fulfilling his purpose or promise that he had made beforehand. Every link in this grand chain of events and circumstances, and even the composition of every link, was as perfectly known to Israel's God before the promise was made to Abraham, as after the fulfillment of his purpose. Yea, I believe that Jacob's love for Joseph, Joseph's dreams, and his brethren's envy and malice, being elements in the composition of this grand chain, were all perfectly known, and together with all things connected, were purposed of God before the promise was made to Abraham. I am well aware that this involves what some in these latter days (even some bearing the name of Primitive Baptists) are pleased to denounce as heresy; but I thank God that it is only men that have so said, and not God nor his word.

In the course of time, and just at the right time, too, Joseph was landed in Egypt. He was brought to king Pharaoh's attention just in time to interpret those dreams by which God signified to Pharaoh that there should be seven years of plenty in the land, followed by seven years of famine; and Joseph was blessed with wisdom and understanding to give direction in laying up food during those seven years of plenty, for the seven years of famine that were to follow. All this time he was laying up provision in Egypt for his father's household, and they entirely ignorant of it. Israel must sojourn "in a strange land." This was as much embraced in the word of God to Abraham as it was that they should inherit the land of Canaan. There must be an Israel; there must be a Joseph; there must be an Egypt; there must be a Canaan; and much more we might name; and which can we conclude was unnecessary in the fulfillment of the promise of God and the carrying out of his purpose? Certainly there was nothing in all this record but what was needed, and acted precisely in its proper place, its appointed place, and exactly fulfilled the design for which it was intended.

I believe it is generally held by all Old School Baptists that we have presented in this national Israel a figure or type of the church or people of God in the gospel day. This has been my view of it ever since (if ever) I could understand anything of spiritual things. I think we have also presented in a figure our Savior, at least of his coming into this world of sin and sorrow and laying up in store all the provisions necessary for his people, in the person of Joseph. I have further thought that in this Egypt land, and the children of Israel in bondage in it, is a figure of those given by the Father to the Son before the world was, in that state of bondage or death in trespasses and sins in which they were involved by reason of their transgression in their federal head, Adam. In the land of Canaan I think we have a figure of the church of God in the gospel dispensation. I cannot conclude with some of our poets that Canaan prefigures the heaven of immortal glory, because in literal Canaan they had wars, and many times went into idolatry, were rebellious, &c., which I cannot think ever was or ever will be the case in the final resting place of the saints. I cannot conclude for a moment that the ideas of Milton in his "Paradise lost" is in harmony with the Scriptures or with a proper idea of the perfections of God. I see from the writings of some in our day that they are inclined to the idea that Satan was once an angel of light in the mansions of glory, and that he rebelled against God, made war, and was cast out of heaven, and became a devil. If I should conclude that such was the case, and God and heaven had trouble and war, I could as easily conclude that such may be the case again; and if one of the angels could create such a disturbance, why not a dozen more, or a hundred more, at as many different times, do the same things? and if such were the case, where is the security of the people of God, and how can they feel sure that the rest to which they tend is eternal and undisturbed peace? I refer, in these remarks, not to heaven as it applies in many places in the Scriptures, but to the final resting place of all the ransomed of the Lord.

According to God's purpose and his word to Abraham, Israel must be "evil entreated" in a strange land. For this purpose a Pharaoh was raised up; for "The Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show forth my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout the earth." A Moses also must be raised up for their deliverance.

It occurs to my mind that as we have figuratively set forth in this Egyptian bondage the condition of the chosen people of God while under the curse of the law, "dead in trespasses and sins," "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," &c., we also have in Pharaoh a figure of "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2), who is Satan, "that old serpent, the devil," &c. Pharaoh and the Egyptians used all the means in their power to destroy the children of Israel, and as long as it was in their power sorely oppressed them; but they never could go farther than to accomplish the original purpose of God. If there was any surplus work, anything that did not contribute to the accomplishment of the expressed purpose of God, in all that they did, I have not been able to find it. The same channel through which was wrought the salvation of Israel under the leadership of Moses, was that in which was wrought the destruction of the Egyptians under the leadership of Pharaoh. In all this how plainly we have illustrated the words of the psalmist, "The wrath of man shall praise thee; and the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." Pharaoh must go as far as God purposed; as far as would rebound to the honor and glory of God; and although it was his purpose, and he desired to, he could go no farther. Of the antitype of this Pharaoh I do not wish to say more than is revealed. He is the tempter, oppressor and persecutor of the people of God. Whether he is this contrary to or according to the purpose of God let the reader judge. It is written in Col. i. 16, 17, "For by him [Jesus] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Then, if this character called Satan, or the devil, is neither visible nor invisible, is not a principality nor power, is neither in heaven nor in earth, we may well conclude that it is not revealed where he came from, and we can tell nothing of his origin. But if we can conceive that he is either in heaven or in earth, either visible or invisible, then we need not be afraid to say that the Lord was before him, and by the Lord he consists. I cannot understand from the Scriptures that he is the creator of anything, or the ruler over anything, only as Pilate had power against Jesus; and Jesus said to him, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above."—John xix. 11. Satan, as all things else, is a creature subject to God's control. In this sense he is a chained adversary, and he cannot go beyond the limits of his chain. In this view of the matter well may the christian sing,

"Let Satan vent his sharpest spite,
And all his legions roar;
Almighty mercy guards my life,
And bounds his raging power."

Moses said to Israel (Gen. xviii. 15), "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me: unto him ye shall hearken." "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth."—Num. xii. 3. The testimony of Jesus is, "I am meek and lowly in heart." Moses typified Jesus, in that he was the deliverer and leader of Israel. "The law was given by Moses; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

For want of time and space I must necessarily pass by many things which might be profitable to consider, as the various plagues brought upon Pharaoh, and the preparations of the children of Israel for their departure from the land of Egypt. One or two things, however, I want to call attention to especially. In every detail in both these things Moses went according to God's command, and the result in both cases was just as the Lord had informed Moses beforehand. Let us keep continually in mind that the Lord has said of Pharaoh, "For this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew forth my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth." Here I want to digress a little, to say that when the Arminian has come at me with his charge of injustice against God, saying, "If the doctrine of election be true," I feel sure that I do not want to charge God with any injustice; and when I read the account of God's choice and dealings with Israel, and in this his rejection of all other nations, I find that he practically illustrates his sovereign right to do as it pleaseth him, in this very choice and rejection, and does the very thing that the Arminian says it would be unjust for him to do. He loved Jacob and hated Esau before the children were born, they having done neither good nor evil; and the only reason that he gives us for it is "that the purpose of God according to election might stand." In the advocacy of the doctrine of God's universal predestination of all things, about the most prominent objection I have met is that it makes God the author of sin; and the question is asked, "Where is the justice of God in purposing the wickedness of men, and then punishing them for it?" Such charges and questionings have no doubt made some of us study the subject more closely than otherwise we would have done, while we have seriously doubted the right of any man to question what the Lord does. I do not want to hold to any sentiment that imputes injustice to the Lord, for I believe he is perfectly holy, just and righteous; but I do not believe that the finite mind of mortals will do for a standard by which to try the Lord, or that he should be arraigned before such a bar for trial. One writer has said in substance, "How are we to judge these things, if not by a finite mind, as we have nothing but a finite mind?" In 1 Cor. ii. 16, Paul says, "But we have the mind of Christ." I am forced to the conclusion that if the advocacy of the doctrine that all things (sin included) transpire in strict harmony with the eternal purpose of God involves the idea that God is the author of sin, or is unjust, then the belief that he purposed one sin or wicked act would equally involve that idea; and if we believe the Scriptures, we believe that he purposed some wicked actions, and that he raised up at least one wicked man, hardened his heart, held him accountable, and punished him for his wickedness. The Lord told Moses at least three times, "I will harden his [Pharaoh's] heart." As many as seven times it is said, "The Lord hardened his heart." Then the Lord punished him, and finally overthrew him, and all his host, and destroyed them in the Red Sea, on which occasion the children of Israel rejoiced and sang praises to God. They never stopped to parley among themselves as to the justice of God in raising up Pharaoh, using him as he saw fit, and destroying him in the Red Sea at last. Paul says of this Pharaoh, and of the sovereign right of God to do as he will, "For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thou wilt then say unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?"—Rom. ix. 15-20. Thus the works of the Lord are based not upon the notions of men, or the will of men, but upon his own sovereign will. He has called upon no man to be his counselor or instructor. Who has any right to say, Jehovah, what dost thou? He works all things after the counsel of his own will. Upon this principle his children are predestinated to an eternal inheritance. Reader, if you do not believe this doctrine, how can you consistently sing that beautiful and inspiring hymn of Watt?

 "Keep silence, all created things,
 And wait your Maker's nod;
 My soul stands trembling while she sings
 The honors of her God.
 "Life, death and hell, and worlds unknown,
 Hang on his firm decree;
 He sits on no precarious throne,
 Nor borrows leave to be.
 "Chained to his throne a volume lies,
 With all the fates of men;
 With every angel's form and size,
 Drawn by the eternal pen.
 "His providence unfolds the book,
 And makes his counsels shine;
 Each opening leaf, and every stroke,
 Fulfills some deep design.
 "Here he exalts neglected worms
 To sceptres and a crown;
 And there the following page he turns,
 And treads the monarch down.
 "Not Gabriel asks the reason why,
 Nor God the reason gives;
 Nor dares the favorite angel pry
 Between the folded leaves.
 "My God, I would not long to see
 My fate with curious eyes,
 What gloomy lines are writ for me,
 Or what bright scenes may rise.
 "In thy fair book of life and grace
 O may I find my name,
 Recorded in some humble place,
 Beneath my Lord the Lamb."
 As Moses led the children of Israel out of Egyptian bondage, so all the heirs of promise are led out of that bondage wherein they are held captive by the devil; that bondage in sin and death. As the blood of the lamb was sprinkled on the door-posts, so that the destroying angel which was to destroy all the first-born of Egypt passed over the houses of the children of Israel, so all the heirs of promise are sealed by the blood of the everlasting covenant. "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."
 —Zech. ix. 11.
 The children of Israel were led out of Egypt, and safely through the Red Sea. The Egyptians assaying to follow, were all drowned in the same sea. In Col. i. 13, 14, Paul says, "Who [the Father] hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Jesus was sent into the world as the Savior of his people, their deliverer from their sins, that cruel bondage wherein they were held, though in the purpose of God already delivered, yet not manifestly so until the appointed time of their heavenly Father. But it was also included in the purpose of his Father that through death he should destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Then the everlasting salvation of the "election of grace" is no more certain than that the devil with his works (so far as his power to touch the life or eternal inheritance of one of the heirs of promise is concerned) is destroyed. In the purpose of God the salvation of "the bride, the Lamb's wife," was as complete as it will be when time will be no more. Their names are all written in the book of life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world.—Rev. xiii. 8. They had life, with all the blessings of life, given them in Jesus Christ before the world was. At the appointed time Jesus came into the world and died to pay the debt they had contracted, and that debt was canceled. They are not aware of all this until "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in their hearts;" and when they are led out of this Egyptian darkness to see "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ," they each experience for themselves in a figure what the Israelites experienced when they were delivered from Pharaoh and Egyptian bondage.

 Brethren editors, I submit the above to you to do with as you think best. I have been several weeks, as opportunity afforded, writing it, and have had my mind made up a time or two to commit it to the flames; not that I am ashamed of the doctrine set forth, but of the scattering way in which it is written. I have decided to submit it to your better judgment, believing that you would not publish it if you did not think it would be of some interest or profit. I intended to continue the subject until the entering of the land of Canaan by the children of Israel, and I may yet do so if light and opportunity are afforded; but I fear that I have already written too lengthily for this time.
 With love to all the household of faith, I remain your unworthy brother in hope of a better world,
 H. B. JONES.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.
 THE word "resurrection," like many other words, may be applied to different meanings, apart from its general meaning; and each particular meaning is determined by its connection with the rest of the subject. In Revelation xx. 5, 6, is the only place in the Scriptures, that I remember, where the "first resurrection" is spoken of, and in this the apostle is speaking of a different subject from that of any other place where the word "resurrection" is used. He is not speaking of the resurrection of Christ, nor of the general resurrection; but the time alluded to seems to be after the dragon is chained, and cotemporary with other great events, as the downfall and destruction of Babylon, the killing of the two witnesses, great earthquakes, &c. It seems that John tells us what the first resurrection is in the fourth verse. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." "This is the first resurrection."—Last clause of fifth verse. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Then the conclusion must be that what John saw, as recorded in the fifth verse, is the first resurrection; and if we could determine the time and meaning of it we would know something of the first resurrection. Bearing testimony to the same point I will quote Revelation vi. 9-11: "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." This represents a time of suffering and waiting; and I believe the time of the fulfillment of this prophecy is the time that the two witnesses are killed. "And when they shall have finished their testimony [the two witnesses], the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." The greatest act of wickedness that ever was done in this world was the crucifixion of Christ, attended with great physical demonstrations in nature; and the next greatest act of wickedness in the world will be the killing of his two witnesses; and after the rejoicing is over, and the sending of gifts one to the other, "after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet." Here, to my mind, is the first resurrection, and is a type of the general resurrection of the saints at the last day. The life of Christ from his resurrection until his ascension is a type of the church from this first resurrection, during the thousand years' reign of Christ on earth (not in person, but by his Spirit), until their final resurrection and ascension. Then this reign of Christ by his Spirit will be a blessed time, and will be attended with great spirituality, as John says, "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them." "And I saw the souls of them that were be-

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

WE can but say, in the first place, that we find much to admire in the communication of J. A. Welborn, which we publish in this number of the SIGNS. Chiefly we are pleased that he desires to cling closely to the plain testimony of the Scriptures, and is disposed to demand a "Thus saith the Lord" for all that presents itself for his acceptance. In this age, in which men have become wise above what is written, and have substituted their own reasonings and conclusions for the plain word of God, we are glad to find any one who insists that the word of God must rule in all that pertains to the faith and order of the church.

The questions which Mr. Welborn presents are certainly of importance to be considered. If we are following a certain rule of practice, as is certainly the case with us as Primitive or Old School Baptists, we should be sure that it is scriptural. We have known some among ourselves, and some not of our order, whom yet we do not doubt are the children of God, who have desired to consider the same questions, not feeling quite satisfied in their own minds regarding them; and for these reasons we feel all the more ready to respond as best we may to the request of Mr. Welborn. We have but little desire to converse religiously with any one who regards the Scriptures as being superannuated, or behind the times, and who is not willing to receive and rest upon their plain testimony; but if any man will rest upon the Bible and its teachings only as his authority we are glad to converse with him at all times, although we may think him mistaken altogether in his understanding of them.

We do not purpose taking up Mr. Welborn's letter sentence by sentence; in fact, there is no call for our doing so. With the most of the sentiments expressed we are in hearty accord, and we rejoice in all the Scriptures to which reference is made in his letter to us.

It is true, as he has said, (1) that the Lord builds his church upon a rock; (2) that he adds to the church daily such as shall be saved; (3) that it is called the church of God; (4) that it is the body of Christ; (5) that there is only one body; (6) that Jesus is the door; (7) that no man can open or shut this door; (8) that all are baptized into one body by one Spirit; (9) that the builder and maker is God; (10) that Christ is the head of the body; (11) that the record is in heaven, and that God knows his own; (12) that the government is on his shoulders; (13) that we are commanded to hear him only; (14) that we are to be judged by the word; (15) that his servants are to show the difference between the clean and unclean; (16) that the word of God is the standard; (17) that the law of his house is holy; (18) that the church is the house of God, and his people are in his church; (19) that he requires them to be holy; (20) that truth is found in the Bible. With all this we are in hearty agreement, because it is all revealed in the Scriptures.

There are three things, however, which Mr. Welborn seems to think are out of harmony with these truths which are maintained by our people; and these three things it may be well for us to briefly consider. They are, as we understand him, first, that we have no right to the use of any other name than "the church of God," or some express Bible name like saints, disciples, &c.; second, that the Scriptures point out no special or express church organization at all; and third, that Old School or Primitive Baptists are not in their order in harmony with the Scriptures any more than are any other of the denominations which he has named; and he presents the Scriptures referred to in his letter to prove these three things. Before considering these three things we desire to most emphatically repeat that we as a people do accept those Scriptures, as we do all the rest of the Scriptures, and rejoice in the work of God toward his church so plainly set forth in them; but these Scriptures do not seem to us as a people to be inconsistent with our bearing the name by which we are now known, with the idea of special church organizations in various localities, nor with the special order which we as Old School Baptists maintain.

First, as regards the name by which we are commonly known, we would call attention to a few things. The followers of Christ were first known as disciples, which means "one trained or taught." They are called so in the New Testament more than two hundred times. But even this word would need a qualification, because other men had disciples as well as Jesus. If, therefore, a man should say, "I am a disciple," in the presence of a stranger, that stranger would naturally ask, "A disciple of whom?" The answer would call out the qualifying word, "A disciple of Christ." Thus the necessity of identification would compel qualifying and distinguishing words.

A few years later we find (Acts xi. 26) that the disciples at Antioch began to be called "Christians." Whether this name was first given them by their enemies or their friends we are not informed; but it is sure that in a short time the name "disciple" almost universally gave place to that of "Christian." In Acts xxvi. 28 Agrippa is recorded as saying, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian;" and the apostle Peter (1 Peter iv. 16) adopts and sanctions the name.

But even this name could not cover all the ground necessary, for straight-way dissensions and schisms began to arise among the people called christians; and yet the bodies of people who went off still claimed to be christians. Now, if a man should say, in the presence of a stranger, "I am a christian," that stranger would not know by his testimony where he stood; and so another qualifying word would be necessary in order that the stranger might know his real faith. Therefore, as all claimed to be christians, the words which distinguished one from the other would come directly into common use. This would be unavoidable; and so in the early ages we find various bodies, all being professed christians, called by various names, as Paulicians, Peterines, Donatists, Athanasians, Arians, &c., &c. This could not be avoided without endless confusion in the use of terms.

In like manner the term "the church of God," although it means the redeemed people of God only, would be and was claimed by every separate body of schismatics that arose; and thus the term by itself conveyed no information as to what body of professed christians was meant. It is the same to-day. Every denomination in our land claims to be the church of God. If Mr. Welborn, for instance, should inform the readers of the SIGNS that he belonged to the "church of God," we should be none the wiser as to his faith or as to his church standing. When the opponents of the faith of the gospel claim and use the name of "disciples," "christians," or "the church of God," then true followers of Jesus are compelled to distinguish themselves by some peculiar name, lest they seem to have fellowship with those who fellowship the works of darkness.

The name "Baptist," as applied to the church of God to distinguish it from false churches which still claimed to be churches of Christ, although they had adopted the sprinkling or pouring of unbelievers in the place of believers' baptism, came into common use at about the time of the Reformation. It was applied to those christians by their enemies. But in this case their enemies "builded wiser than they knew;" for by giving them the name of Baptists in reproach they thereby admitted that dipping, and not sprinkling or pouring, was true baptism. Baptists were not displeased to bear this name as a distinguishing mark. The name pointed them out from the great mass of false churches, which yet all claimed to be the church of God. We have sometimes wondered that Romanists, Episcopalians, Methodists and others, who do not baptize, but sprinkle, or rantize, have been content to let us monopolize the name "Baptist." But although Baptists have been content to bear this name of reproach, yet they do not forget that they are disciples of Christ, christians, and the church of God.

But the time came when the name of "Baptist" was not sufficient. Worldliness crept in. Pride and vainglory reared their heads. The ordinance of baptism was still maintained, but almost all other sorts of spiritual wickedness crept in. The time came when it was not right to bear it any longer. The true church of God must withdraw from the evil thing, and from those who upheld it; but still all claimed alike to be disciples, christians, the church of God, Baptists. If now a man shall say, "I am a Baptist," a stranger does not know any the more where he stands. By some other word must he be described in order that this may be known; and a name was given us first by our adversaries as a term of reproach. "Old School" (meaning something to be despised) was the term applied to those who desired to stand upon the old ground. The name did not displease us. We claimed then, and do claim still, to be of the old school of Christ and his apostles. We still are disciples, christians, Baptists, the church of God, but for the time being known as Old School or Primitive Baptists. We do not doubt that some day this name will pass away, as many other names have already done, but the faith and order to which we hold will abide; and wherever these things shall abide there will be the church of God, the true disciples, the real christians, no matter by what name they may be known among men. The name is nothing; the faith and the practice are all. If God in his word has given various names, such as saints, disciples, christians, the church of God, to his people, he has also by his providence given them a variety of names by which they have been known to the world. The one has been by the overruling wisdom of God as much as the other. Among ourselves, in our writing and conversation and preaching, we generally use the terms brethren, disciples, saints, christians, children of God, the church of God; but we are satisfied to be known in the world by any name that they choose to call us, be it Old School, Primitive, Hardshell, Ironsides, or any other name. We are not concerned about the name; but we are greatly concerned to believe and practice all that in the word is enjoined upon us.

The second and third questions which seem to have been in the mind of our correspondent we may well consider together. They are, "Do the Scriptures point out any special church organization? and if so, are Old School or Primitive Baptists maintaining that order?" In replying to the third question, if it be found that we are maintaining scriptural order, of course the second question would also be answered in the affirmative. We shall say nothing here about the doctrine to which we hold, as that is not in question. Mr. Welborn maintains simply that we have no justification in the Scriptures, so far as he can find, for our order. His objections are as follows: First, that in our order man adds members to the church, and not the Lord, as in apostolic days; second, that members join the church with us, and are not added to it by the Lord; third, that we and all other sects are man-made arrangements, and not the body of Christ; fourth, that we open the doors of the church, which Peter, Paul and John did not; fifth, that our opinions settle things, instead of God's word; and sixth, that we are built up by man, and not God. Now, all these are serious charges, and if true would certainly go very far to prove that our claim to be the church of God is false; but we think our correspondent lies under a misapprehension in all these particulars. We know that he does, so far as the Baptists that we know are concerned. We desire to say, with all solemnity of feeling, that if we in our personal ministry have preached or practiced any of the things named above we do not know it; and the great body of our brethren, those whom we do not personally know, as well as those that we do, we are persuaded have desired above all things to be clear in this matter. First. We do not add members to the church, but we rejoice when the Lord does, and are glad to administer to them all the ordinances of the gospel, and to proclaim its comforts to them. Cannot all see a vast distinction between these two things? Second. Our members do not join the church, but are added and joined to it first in their experience and affections by almighty power and grace, and then in outward fellowship and membership by the ordinance of baptism, as the Lord showed us and commanded us. Third. We expressly disclaim having made ourselves. Other sects may boast of their powers in this direction by the use of multiplied means at their command, but by taking thought we have not been able to add one cubit to our stature. But we shall answer this objection more fully when we come to consider whether the New Testament churches were patterns of our churches now. Fourth. We plead innocent to opening the doors of the church. We are especially careful to say only this, "The door of the church is open." It would be a plain denial of the testimony of the word, which declares that "the Lord opens, and none can shut, and shuts, and none can open," to say this, or to claim this power. We suppose our correspondent here refers to the reception of members at our stated meetings. We can neither open the doors of our fellowship, nor can we open the doors of membership. If the Lord has opened them we cannot close them. We can only declare his work. Fifth. We confess that we are fallible, and that we may and do at times mistake our opinions for the guidance of the word of God; but yet we plead innocent to this general charge. It is no more true of the church of God today than it was in the days of the apostles. The people of God daily feel their need of wisdom, and are driven to look to him for guidance. This is as true now as it ever has been. We believe that it is the constant desire of our people to go to the word of God for all instruction.

The sixth objection is the same in substance as the first, and therefore we will not repeat our reply.

There remains now the consideration of the order of Old School Baptists, as to whether it is the order laid down in the New Testament or not; but as we already have occupied sufficient space for one editorial we will postpone this to the next number, when we hope to show that we as a people are maintaining scriptural order.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

PSALM LIX. 14, 15.

"AND at evening let them return, and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city; let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied."

The psalm from which our text is taken was written by David when under trying circumstances; at a time, it is supposed, when the messengers of Saul were watching for opportunity to slay him. We doubt not that David in all the important events of his life was a type of Christ; and his trying circumstances on this occasion may prefigure what Christ personally endured in the days of his incarnation, and also what he still endures in the members of his mystical body, the church. The few remarks which we design now to offer will be principally in reference to this last application of the figure.

Dogs are used figuratively to represent the enemies of Christ and his people. God's Darling prays to be saved from the dogs; and dogs are frequently mentioned in the Old and New Testaments in this figurative sense. David often calls his enemies, and those of the Lord and his church, dogs. Paul warns his brethren and the christian churches to "Beware of dogs," and he speaks of them in connection with the concision, evil workers, &c. Christ charged his disciples to give not that which is holy, or the children's bread, unto dogs; and God by the prophet Isaiah compares ungodly watchmen or hypocritical ministers to dogs: "Dumb dogs, that cannot bark, sleepy dogs, lying down, loving slumber;" and he says, "Yea, they are all greedy dogs, that can never have enough." Peter compares certain apostates to dogs, whose filthy habit is to return to their own vomit. We must be dull indeed if from all these Scriptures we cannot derive some useful instruction and wholesome admonition. But in order that we may be profited by the scriptural use of the figure, it may be proper to consider some of the more prominent propensities and peculiar traits of the animal. Of all the various species in the animal creation we know of none more diversified in form, size, disposition and general appearance than the dog; yet they all have some traits of character alike. They are all unclean animals, all enemies to sheep, and all fond of blood, especially of sheep's blood. Foxes and wolves are classified by some naturalists as belonging to the dog family; and all are used in the Scriptures as enemies to the church of God.

Without spending time or occupying more space in examining the figure, we will look for its adaptation to represent false prophets under the old, and antichristian preachers under the new dispensation. There were false prophets among the people, Israel, even as there shall be, and are, false teachers among you, the churches of Christ under the gospel dispensation; and these are as diversified in appearance, talents and doctrine as the animal to which they are likened. Some appear very docile and loving, ready to make the acquaintance of anybody and everybody, and, like the dog, it is hard to kick them out of the corner. They will hang round the church, profess great devotedness to the cause, and peculiar love to all the members; but they who lie down with them will be apt to rise up with fleas. Some antichristian teachers are of a morose, irritable character, and, like the dog, ready to pick a quarrel with anybody or anything; you must not come near their parish bounds, or look at a bone they may have, or you will encounter their rage. Some false teachers, like dogs, are very noisy, and disturb the quietude of the neighborhood with their incessant barking and howling, so that the people never know when to prepare for battle, as their watch barks as fiercely at the moon as when the enemy is in reality approaching.

The friendship of almost any false teacher can be bought up for flattery or filthy lucre, just as the partiality of a dog may be secured by petting or feeding him. Dogs, though exceedingly jealous of other dogs, will often congregate together, and go in company secretly by night into a flock of sheep, and kill and mangle the whole flock, and then clean the blood off from them, and return to their respective homes before daylight, and appear as innocent as though they had done no mischief at all. Many such convocations, crusades and massacres have been perpetrated on the flock of Christ by the ministers of Satan. But time would fail to carry out the similitude in all its bearings.

All dogs are remarkable for keen appetites, and the prophet of the Lord says, "they can never have enough;" and it would be a curiosity worthy of Barnum's Museum to find a minister of Satan satisfied with his unrighteous gains, or who did not covet his neighbor's property. Like the two daughters of the horse leech, they cease not to cry, Give! Give!

"And at evening let them return." The inspired writer represents these dogs as making their periodical visits to the environs of the city. When exposed to the broad glare of day they retire; but at evening, in the twilight, in the dark and black night, they return. When the unsuspecting victims which they have marked are reposing in slumber, and when not easily seen at a distance, they return. Dogs frequently pay their nightly visits to cities and public places, for a variety of objects; sometimes to bite and devour, sometimes to pilfer, and sometimes to carry off nuisances which perhaps they would be ashamed or afraid to carry off in open daylight. All this may denote the sly, insidious, covert workings of ungodly ministers.

"And let them make a noise like a dog." The psalmist had described his enemies by the same figure in the sixth verse of this psalm, and in the eleventh verse he says, "Slay them not, lest my people forget: scatter them by thy power; and bring them down, O Lord our Shield." Annoying as the messengers of Satan are to the children of God, the annoyance is overruled for their good. They need this, and every affliction to which they are exposed, to remind them of their constant dependence on God for protection, and for all things they need. David also speaks in the context of the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, their pride, their cursing, and their lying which they speak. Nevertheless, for the benefit the saints shall derive by it, he would have them return at evening, and make a noise like a dog. No dog can imitate the bleating of sheep, and it is a mercy that ungodly ministers cannot very accurately counterfeit the experience of christians. Yet we have known some simple-hearted christians appear to exult when they have heard antichristian preachers advance some things which were true. But David preferred to have them preach their own doctrine; he did not wish them to make a noise like a sheep, lest they might thereby beguile, decoy and betray the flock. The noise which a dog makes always puts the sheep on their guard—their heads are together at the sound, and they are watchful; hence, "Let them go round about the city," or the church, which is called a city; but do not let them in; "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."—Rev. xxii. 15. Without is their place, and let them go round about the city; let them wander up and down for meat. As they have no guide, professing to be free agents, they wander; they have no certain course; they may pursue the creed of Papists or Protestants, embracing old theories or new, and sometimes they may wander up, and sometimes down; yet in all their wanderings they are in pursuit of meat—something to consume upon their greedy carnal appetites; for their god is their belly, and they believe that gain is godliness—their objects are invariably selfish, and they can never have enough. “And grudge if they be not satisfied.” To grudge is to envy and to feel bad to see others possessing what they do not possess. This rankling, envious, bitter spirit is so obviously characteristic of the false teachers, anti-christian preachers and hypocritical professors that the most unpracticed eye of God’s children can hardly fail to discover it.

In compliance with the request of our correspondent we have written the above illustration of the text proposed for consideration; and although our view does not place the emissaries of Satan in any flattering light, we have no apology to offer; for we believe the picture drawn, as far as it goes, is true to life.

HOW CAN WE KNOW?

THERE are hundreds of subscribers on our list whose subscriptions are in arrears from two or three months to two years and over, and it is impossible for us to discern who among them wish their paper continued, and intend to pay for it, and who through negligence and indifference are allowing it to come to them and do not intend to pay for it. Now, we can better afford to continue a paper and wait for the pay than to lose the subscriber altogether; but what we wish to avoid is sending the paper for two or three years after the time is out, and then receiving notice from the subscribers that they never ordered it continued after their time was out, and therefore will not pay for it. If any are now getting the paper who do not want it they will please inform us, that we may discontinue it to them. It costs us just as much to send the paper to those who do not care enough about it to even notify us that they do not want it, as it does to send to those who take the deepest interest in reading it.

Although the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is passing through the “hardest times” financially that it has ever known since our day, we can better afford to continue a paying subscriber on credit than lose his patronage altogether. Yet if those of our brethren and friends whose subscription has expired can make us a remittance without too much inconvenience to themselves, we assure them it will come very acceptable at present, and be thankfully received.

CORRESPONDENCE.

headed for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God.” That is, a revival of the spirit of the martyrs, as John saw the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, under the altar, saying, “How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?” “And it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season.” It seems that John points to this time when he says (Rev. xi. 16), “And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshiped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth.” Then the stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall smite the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and break them in pieces. “But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.” “And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.” As the first resurrection will be a type of the final resurrection and triumph of the saints collectively, so the resurrection or revival of “the rest of the dead,” the enemies of Christ, the antichristian world, and their destruction, will be a type of their final and everlasting banishment from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

JOHN DOWNEY.

WENONA, ILL.

WACO, S. C., Jan. 18, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Your paper has been coming to this office since I have been post-master, and I have been reading it some. I find it represents the Old School or Primitive Baptists, which it calls the true church of Christ, if I understand its teachings. I have been reading the Bible for some time, and I do not find the church you represent in the Bible, and am at a loss to know why you call it the true church of God. I find in Matt. xvi. 18 that Jesus said he would build it; also in Acts ii. 47 that he, the Lord, added to the church; and man did not do it, as I find in your human arrangement. I find, according to the teaching of your paper, that they join it; quite a difference in joining and being added by the Lord.—See 1 Cor. xii. 18.

There are a few of your faith here who claim to be in the true church; also a great many Missionary Baptists, who claim to be in the true church. I have offered them the New Testament to show me these churches in the Bible; but they fail to take the Bible and attempt to do it. Now, I want to know the whole truth, and if you can show me where anything but the church of God is in the Bible, I would be glad for you to show me it. We find by reading the Bible that it is named church of God.—1 Cor. i. 2; Acts xx. 28; Eph. i. 22, 23; Col. i. 24; also in other places; that the body of Christ is the church, meaning the saved people as a body, or the body of Christ. In 1 Cor. xii. 18 it is said he sets all the members in the body; and in the twelfth verse that there is only one body. He did not say it was Old School Baptist, or Missionary Baptist, or Methodist, or Presbyterian, or Campbellite, or Catholic, or any other ites or sects. It seems you claim you are the church; and other sects that take their members in the same way you do are sects. I cannot see any difference, as they all join a man-made arrangement. We do not find Peter, Paul or John opening the door; but Jesus says he is the door.—John x. 9. Also, Rev. iii. 7, that no man can open or shut. In 1 Cor. xii. 13 it is said we are all baptized into one body by one spirit. I cannot see by studying the Bible how any man has ever joined the church of God, or ever can. We find in Cor. xii. 26, “Ye are the body of Christ;” that is, ye christians, saints, not sinners.—See Eph. ii. 19–22. We find in Eph. iii. 15, “Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.” We find in Heb. xi. 10 that the builder and maker is God. He is the head.—Eph. i. 22; iv. 12; v. 23; Col. ii. 18, 19; i. 18. He is the head of the body, and he can be the head of but one body.—John x. 16; Rom. xii. 4, 5; Col. iii. 15. In one body. Not a Baptist head, hard or soft shell, nor any other kind of a shell; but only one body; and it is also visible.—1 Cor. xii. 27; 1 Cor. vi. 15. “Your bodies;” that is, the bodies of Christians.—Matt. v. 14. We also find the record is kept in heaven, and God knows his own.—Mal. iii. 16; Luke x. 20; Phil. iv. 3; Rev. xiii. 8; Heb. xiii. 23; Rev. xx. 12. The government is on his own shoulders.—Isa. ix. 6, 7. We are commanded in Matt. xvii. 5 to hear him; and if we are to hear him, it seems to me that his word ought to settle all things, and not our opinions, but the pure, straight word of God; for he says in John xii. 48, we are all to be judged by the word in the last day. If we do not measure up to it in the world, how can we expect to stand before him and come clear in the judgement? He says for his watchmen to show the difference between the clean and the unclean; and we find the word of God is the standard for his people here in this world, for that is pure.—Jer. xv. 19, 20; Ezek. xxii. 26–28; xlv. 23, 24. We also find the law of the house is holy.—Ezek. xliii. 12. We find in 1 Tim. ii. 14, 15, the church is the house of God, and his people are in the church.—Eph. v. 27, 30. He required under the law to be holy; also under grace to be holy.—1 John iii. 3; 1 John ii. 14.

I have been searching for truth about eight or ten years. I think I find it, or I know I find it, in the Bible, and pen you some thoughts as they come to my mind, with the Scriptures also that suggest themselves to my mind. I know that God has not made any mistake in his Bible. If he has not, then no sect on earth built by man is his church. Read the Scripture given, and see if you can see the church that Jesus built on the rock, which is himself, as you will find in 1 Corinthians. I do not think of the chapter and verse now; but they all drank of that rock, which was Christ.

I am after truth, and if you can give more light on the church I would be glad to receive it; or perhaps if you would publish this it would lead out some of your best talent and would be a means of getting the whole truth.

Yours in the one body,

J. A. WELBORN.

(Editorial reply on page 76.)

LEESBURG, Va., Feb. 11, 1896.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—I inclose you a letter from Elder Benton Jenkins, and wish you to publish it. I am persuaded it would be a comfort to many, as it has been to me. I even dare to hope that in expressing his own feelings, he has expressed mine; and much more than this, he has shown it to be the experience of those whom God has acknowledged his. Though with fear and trembling, yet we must confess the witness within. It seems too much for one so unworthy, still the joy is the greater. No confidence in self, but a confidence in others, especially those who were moved by the Holy Ghost, and finding the word which they were moved to speak by the Spirit abiding in us, is surely some reason to hope; it may not be to the full satisfaction, but hungry men relish a little more, perhaps, than a full supply. This letter has given me peculiar joy. Publish it, leaving out, if you like, that which is personal.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1896.

MY DEAR BROTHER WHITE:—I have yours of the 22d, ult. I believe I have always felt glad to receive even a few lines from you, especially when they assure me that I may expect a visit from you. I confess I was sorry when I read that you could not visit us before our association. I am so good natured, and so confident that you really want to visit me, that I was not at all hurt when I learned that you and sister Maggie were to spend the first Sunday in this month at Hopewell, and return home without visiting us. I can say with Paul, "I long to see you," and to hear you preach, that you may impart unto me some spiritual gift; that is, that I might be comforted by you. You ask how I am getting along. Well, I am still sojourning in Mesoch, and dwelling in the tents of Kedar. I love peace, and have so longed for it; but my soul is compelled to dwell with him that hateth peace. I am daily dying; death worketh in me; am almost constantly crying, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" I am often beset with "hypocritical mockers;" physicians of no value are offering to prescribe for me in my sickness and distress, but who seem not to understand my disease; and sometimes I become so weary of the din and strife that I find myself saying, "I would not live alway; let me alone, for my days are vanity." Occasionally the scene changes, and in the midst of the gloom a voice sweeter than the sound of the dulcimer is heard through the shadows of death, saying, "Arise, and come away." My glad soul then mounts higher, in a chariot of fire, and the world is put under my feet. I am thus "tossed up and down like the locust." At times my knees are so weak through fasting that I cannot walk, and my flesh faileth of fatness. Indeed I am confident that "unless the Lord had been my help my soul had almost dwelt in silence." I have remembered the sweet assurance, "He shall stand at the right hand of the poor, to save him from those that condemn his soul." You ask how my wife is. I have inquired of her, and she assures me that her path is much like mine as I have described it. She says, "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever." I feel like saying Amen to that. "Come, tell me, is it thus with you?"

With assurance of continued love and fellowship for you and your companion, in which my companion joins me, I am, I hope, your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

BENTON JENKINS.

HILLSDALE, N. J., Nov. 14, 1895.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—HIGHLY ESTEEMED BROTHER:—The inclosed amount is for the renewal of my subscription to the SIGNS. I have been edified this morning in reading the SIGNS of Nov. 13th. The paper comes to me richly laden with the precious truth of the gospel. It is a great comfort to the little ones of our Father's kingdom, especially those who are not permitted to meet in the assembly of the saints. I am made at times to cry out,

"Might I enjoy the meanest place Within thy house, O God of grace, Not tents of ease nor thrones of power Should tempt my feet to leave the door."

My desire is to be reconciled to the will of God in all things, and to have grace given me to humbly kiss the hand that smites. Nothing but the sovereign power of God can make us say "thy will be done." May he give us grace to suffer all his righteous will here below, and through his blood and righteousness enter in through the gates into the city, to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

One year ago last Sunday I was permitted to hear you preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, at the Ebenezer Church in New York City. I was at the meeting the second Sunday in September, but did not see you. The disappointment was great; still I had a good meeting, and was edified, I trust, in listening to brother McConnell. I think him a talented brother, and one, I trust, to whom a dispensation of the gospel is committed. Our God has promised to place faithful laborers on the walls of Zion, and his promises are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. We have nothing to fear, though the earth be removed out of its place and carried into the midst of the sea. Zion, the city of our God, shall stand firm; for God is a wall of fire round about her, and the glory in her midst.

"Count ye her towers, how high they rise; Her golden spires, they pierce the skies."

It is the happy lot of the servants of God to walk around her walls, to count her towers, to mark well her bulwarks, and make a fair report

I read your reply to my request for your views on Isa. xxx. 27, 28. It was opened to my understanding with much sweetness. I would be glad to hear from you once again.

Yours unworthily,

SARAH FARRAND.

SCHOHARIE, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1896.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—I send to-day the names with subscriptions to the amount of $14.40. There are more to send later.

I earnestly hope that all who can will send on to the editors of our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, their subscriptions for this year at least, even if they are not prepared to pay all their arrearage. In view of hard times do not let the paper be the first item of retrenchment. Let us each share in financial embarrassments, and pay for the paper though we have to borrow the money to do it, and pay it in the future. There are some who could pay for the paper by a little extra effort and self-denial.

I remain yours in hope,

PETER S. KINNEY.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In the city of Middletown, N. Y., Feb. 19th, 1896, Mrs. Rebecca Ann Smith, in the 80th year of her age.

Mrs. Smith was born in the town of Mount Hope, near Otisville, Orange Co., N. Y., Nov. 12th, 1816, and was a daughter of Benjamin Montanye Ustick and Keturah Ann Reeves. She was united in marriage to Wm. H. Smith on April 27th, 1839. She is survived by her husband, one daughter, Marietta, wife of Charles R. Smith, and one sister, Mrs. J. C. Hornbeck, of Port Jervis, N. Y.

Mrs. Smith had never made a public profession of her faith, although she had entertained a good hope through grace for many years, and attended the meetings of the Old School Baptist Church as long as she was able to go about. She had been an invalid for many years.

The funeral services were held on Saturday, the 22d, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins; after which her mortal remains were interred in the New Vernon cemetery, near those of her kindred who had preceded her to "the house appointed for all living."

Alexander M. Townsend died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. D. Shearer, in Newberg, Yamhill Co., Oregon, on Sunday, Feb. 12th, 1896, in the 83d year of his age.

For about sixty years he was a consistent Old School Baptist, which faith he persistently held until the time of his death. He was married to Miss Mary A. Craighead on May 6th, 1838, who died Nov. 29th, 1845. To them were born five children. He was married to Mrs. M. E. Reynolds on March 7th, 1847, and to them were born three children. His second wife died Jan. 18th, 1876. Brother Townsend had been blind for nearly thirty years, and had been helpless since September, 1893. Five of his children are living: Mrs. Trappe, in Kansas, Mrs. T. L. Butler, Dallas, Oregon, Mrs. James Shearer, Forest Grove, Oregon, Mrs. Sarah Foster, in California, and Mrs. John Shearer, in Newberg, Oregon. Also twenty-eight grandchildren and twenty great-grandchildren survive. He was the last of his father's family, his only brother having passed away a few weeks ago. I remember him only as an exemplary and kind-hearted christian. We feel that the Lord, who brought him along the journey of life, has conducted him to his heavenly home.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JOHN B. MARTIN.

DILLEY, Oregon.

DIED—At her home near Bowling Green, Wood Co., Ohio, Feb. 3d, 1896, sister Mary English, wife of brother Wm. English. The funeral services were held Feb. 5th, 1896.

Sister English was born to Adam and Modest Bader, in Fairfield Co., Ohio, Oct. 18th, 1831, and was married to Wm. English on April 5th, 1855. She with her husband united with the Free Will Baptists in the year 1853, two years before their marriage. They afterward became dissatisfied with that people, and in the year 1878, upon relation of their hope in Christ, were received into the fellowship of the Old School or Primitive Baptist Church at Honey Creek, Seneca Co., Ohio, and were baptized by Elder Sherwood. They afterward moved their membership to Van Buren, Hancock Co., Ohio, she remaining in fellowship with the church until her death. She leaves a husband, six sons, brothers, sisters and a host of friends to mourn. She was a devoted wife, a kind and affectionate mother, and a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, her good life bearing evidence of a work of grace in her heart; so that while we stood by her lifeless body, with her broken-hearted husband and sons, we could realize as we looked at that face, upon which now there could be seen no trace of pain or suffering, the sweetness of these words, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord," and, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." The writer tried to speak comforting words from 1 Corinthians xv. 49, to a large congregation of sympathizing friends.

A. F. DOVE.

VAN BUREN, Ohio.

DIED—At her home in Otego, N. Y., Feb. 5th, 1896, Mrs. Lavancia Smith, in the 71st year of her age.

Mrs. Smith had been in a bad state of health for several years, but a short time before her death pneumonia set in, which quickly ended the mortal strife. She never made a public profession of her hope, but more than eighteen years ago the writer was fully satisfied that she was a justified sinner, saved by divine grace. In telling she spoke to me of the great beauty she saw in baptism, and greatly longed for the time when she could see herself fit for that solemn ordinance. Again, a few weeks before her end, she said she was more firm and confident in her hope, and that these words were spoken within with power, "Thy sins are all forgiven thee; go in peace." As her end drew near she expressed herself as having no fear of death. A faith's view of her Redeemer was manifested, and she exclaimed, "O that wounded side! that wounded side! and that it was pierced for me!" and then passed away like going into a sweet sleep.

She has left a dear husband, two children, two brothers, two sisters, and a host of other kindred and friends, to mourn their loss; and we would say,

"O may such grace on us be shed,

And make our end like thine."

Her funeral was largely attended on the 7th inst., when the writer tried to speak of the glorious triumph of reigning grace over abounding sin from 1 Cor. xv. 49: "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." May the Lord comfort the bereaved family and friends by the same grace that sustained and cheered the dear one upon her dying pillow, for his name's sake.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1896.

DIED—January 27th, 1896, Mr. Charles Hostrander, of Cammal, Pa., aged 29 years, 8 months and 12 days.

He was the son of Mr. George Hostrander, of Cammal, Pa. The disease that took him away was consumption, from which he suffered for about two years much of the time, but endured his suffering with christian patience. He was not a professor of religion, but was settled and grounded in the truth. I had the pleasure of visiting him in the latter part of his sickness, and found him trusting alone in the finished work of Jesus. He said, "What can I, a poor, weak, helpless sinner, do toward my eternal salvation? I cannot even keep my natural life." I was very much comforted in his precious testimony. He said many things to his wife, father, mother, brothers, sisters and friends which gave them strong evidence that he was born of God. Many portions of Scripture came to him from time to time with much sweetness and power. The eighth chapter of Romans was especially applied to his soul with great comfort, and he said it was precious doctrine to him, especially so as he felt that he was nearing the end. Several days before he died he expressed a desire to follow his Savior in baptism, proving that the command of Jesus was already wrought in his heart, or in other words fulfilled.

He leaves a dear young wife, daughter of brother Lorenzo Campbell, a little child, father, mother, brothers, sisters and friends to mourn the loss of one who was dearly loved by all; but we feel sure that he is with Jesus and is satisfied. May the dear Lord comfort the mourning friends with his all-sufficient grace, is my desire.

A very large congregation assembled at the Old School Baptist meeting-house to pay the last tribute of respect by way of funeral services on January 29th, proving the high esteem in which he was held by the people in the village; while the writer preached unto them Jesus with the ability that God gave from several verses of the latter part of the eighth chapter of Romans.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

D. M. VAIL.

BROTHER Martin Goss was born May 19th, 1824, and died Dec. 14th, 1895, aged 71 years, 6 months and 25 days.

He was united in marriage to Nancy Notestone on Oct. 29th, 1846. To this union one son was born, who was present at his funeral. He united with the Primitive Baptist Church of Laurel, in Hocking Co., Ohio, and was baptized by Elder G. N. Tusing, thirty-nine years prior to his death. He was one of the Lord's faithful servants, serving the church as its Deacon and Clerk many years, and his seat was always occupied throughout his long life. O how we miss brother Goss. He died as he lived, at peace with God and all mankind, giving forth utterances in the hours of affliction and great suffering. "My faith is brighter and brighter; my hope is stronger and stronger." When suffering intensely he said to those at his bedside, "Though the Lord slay me, yet will I trust him." He requested that Elder Tusing preach his funeral, but he being sick at the time it was postponed until the third Sunday in February.

He leaves to sorrow an aged and afflicted companion, one son, and many friends and kindred; but all feel assured that there is rest for him where death is unknown, and where tears are never shed.

ALSO,

DIED—At her home near Johnstown, Licking Co., Ohio, Feb. 17th, 1896, sister Permelia Green.

She was a daughter of the late Elder Eli Ashbrook, and was born July 11th, 1818. She was united in marriage to Reason Green on Oct. 17th, 1839. To this union were born four children, one having preceded her to the grave, and three being present at her funeral. Her age was 82 years, 7 months and 6 days. Her husband preceded her thirteen years. She united with the Primitive Baptist Church sixty-five years prior to her death, and lived a most worthy and christian life until she was called up higher. In her last hours she was anxiously waiting her Master's will, expressing her desire to be free from earth, and to be with Christ. She died as she lived, reconciled to God and man.

Her funeral was largely attended on the 19th at the Methodist meeting-house in Johnstown, and the writer tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing friends and neighbors; after which the remains were interred in the beautiful cemetery at Johnstown to await the resurrection of the mortal body to immortality and eternal life.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. ## CORRESPONDENCE.

FRAGMENTS.

LOVE that is true and pure looks to the good of the one loved, and not to self. Such was the love of Christ. For that love which he felt toward those who were his enemies, and most unlovely, he died—and such a death! How he suffered! We cannot measure the suffering, nor understand the manner of that love, only so far as we are given a little taste of the one, a little of the felt power of the other. The natural mind might think his suffering under the terrors of death could not be so great because he knew that death would only keep him there three days under its power. But that could have had no mitigating effect upon the awful sufferings he endured. His human nature, that which suffered, could no more see through death than ours. It was only the faith of the Son of God in him, as in us, that saw the end of that terrible night of death, and beheld the joy that was set before him; and as his human nature was pure and sinless, while we are vile, so must his sorrow and anguish under the load of his people's sins, and under the death of the cross on account of them, have been infinitely greater than any mortal could experience or endure.

His love in our hearts is of the same nature as in him when in the flesh; and, in measure, it manifests in us the same unselfish, devoted character. It causes us to look to the good and comfort of those we love in the truth, and not to look every man on his own things. "Charity seeketh not her own."

THE relation existing between Christ and his people before the world began appears to me to be properly spoken of as a life or vital relation, rather than merely a covenant relation, although there was an eternal covenant connected with it. The apostle speaks of eternal life, which he, as a living soul, was then in hope of (Titus i. 2), as having been promised before the world began; and he says of those to whom it was promised, that they were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, and that all spiritual blessings have been given them in heavenly places in Christ according to that eternal choice.—Eph. i. 3, 4. Thus the relation is established between the gift and the one receiving it as in eternal life.

Suppose a child, now of age, receives an inheritance which was given by will or by law before the birth of the child, or even of its parents. At what point of time does the law regard that gift or inheritance as having first belonged to that child? At the time when the will was made, or the inheritance fixed. The title is as old as the legally established promise, and could never have been diverted from that child. In the case of earthly inheritances there exists always an uncertainty with reference to the birth of a child designated before. But there can be no uncertainty with reference to the heirs of eternal life. Every one named in the will, or eternal purpose, of God, will at God's appointed time be born of the flesh, and be manifest as the heir of the spiritual blessings. So certain is this that they are all said to have been written in God's book, while as yet there were none of them.—Psalm cxxxix.

Also of Jesus, as their wisdom, it is said before God had made the earth, or the fields, or the highest part of the dust of the world, he rejoiced in the habitable part of God's earth, and his delights were with the sons of men.—Prov. viii. 22-31.

As the natural life of all of Adam's posterity was in him when he was created, so the spiritual life of all of God's people was in Christ, the second Adam, before the world began.

"A MAN'S gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men."—Prov. xviii. 16. A man may try to make room for his gift; and some have tried to make room for the gift of others; and such efforts may succeed in making room for one as a preacher in the sight of men. But it still remains true that a man's gift, and that alone, will ever make room for him spiritually in the church of God, and bring him "in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ," before those men whom God's gentleness hath made great, through the riches of grace.—Psalm xviii. 35.

Whatever efforts are ever necessary, or seem to be, in order that one shall occupy the room which we think his gift ought to make for him, are not to obtain recognition of his gift from the people, but to urge and encourage him to enter upon that work which the people have already seen as having been given him to do, but from which the true servant always shrinks, as too great a work for one so weak and unworthy as he.

tion, are not necessary in order to manifest a gift to preach the word. Wherever he is whom the Lord has called to this work, he will be preaching, though he may not know that he is preaching. The word that God has put in his heart is spirit and life, and it lives there, and moves him with its power, and he must speak; he must talk about what is uppermost in his mind. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The church wants to hear what he wants to speak, and they recognize this fact before he knows it. It is often the case that the brethren hear many a sweet, comforting word of pure gospel preaching from him in their homes, in the fields, along the way, in the conference meetings, before he thinks of ever having to stand before them as a preacher of the gospel.

GRANTED that, as some say, the Lord did not predestinate the existence of sin and the wicked acts of men, but only permitted them, yet, if he foreknew them, and decreed to permit them, then it must have been his will that they should be. We cannot suppose their existence to have been forced upon him by some other and greater power. All acknowledge that he might have so arranged that evil and sin might not have been. He must then have had some wise object in view in decreeing to permit them to be. If he foreknew them, and was able to have prevented them, but determined not to prevent but to permit them, it must certainly have been his purpose that they should be. Can thought take any other road, and arrive at any other conclusion? Will some one who does not admit the doctrine of absolute predestination tell where in this reasoning is erroneous?

The good pleasure of God which he hath purposed in himself, to make known the mystery of his will to his saints in the revelation of Christ (Eph. i. 9), the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord (Eph. iii. 11), the provisions of grace and mercy and salvation which were fully and definitely made, and were given to the saints in Christ before the world began (2 Tim. i. 9), all these show that the fall of man and the full manifestation of the sinfulness of his fallen nature in the world were absolutely embraced in the "mystery of God's will," and were all purposed "for the lifting of Jesus on high," to the praise of the glory of his most holy and blessed name.

I CANNOT always think along the regular, orthodox lines of thought. I find my thoughts often going "across-lots;" and some wonderfully rare and beautiful scenes are found in that way.

"MAKE me a little cake first, and bring it to me; and after that make for thee and thy son." It is at the last handful of meal that true, unselfish thought and care for others begins. While there is a little store of meal on hand how carefully it is watched and husbanded, and what hopes are entertained that it may be increased, and what care taken that, at least, it shall last as long as possible. But now the last handful is reached, and prospect of relief as far off as ever. Beyond that last handful is starvation—death. But the fatal hour must not be hastened by any act or neglect of ours. The instinct of truth and honest duty is in that soul when the last handful is reached as never before. While a morsel remains that will prolong life it must be used. A little more work—two sticks will make fire enough to dress the handful of meal—then weakness, patient waiting, death. But there is a hungry man asking for this last cake. Such a request could not have had such an effect upon this poor, hungry soul while there was more. But now a new feeling seems to be born in that heart, brought forth by the wonderful request, or more wonderful command, of this strange and wonderful man. Yes, he must have that cake. Freely it is given; more than freely; for there goes out to him a strong desire for his welfare and comfort. Never was a trifle taken from an abundant store and given more freely by the wealthiest of benevolent men, than this last handful of meal is taken from the bottom of this now empty barrel and given by this poor widow to this stranger. With gladness she sees him begin to eat. But he says to her, "Go back to the barrel and the cruse and make for thee and thy son." With strange and wondering expectancy she turns to the barrel, and there her astonished eyes see the handful of meal; and I warrant it never looked so pure and white and precious to her hungry soul before. That is grace. There the knowledge of God's salvation begins. It begins with a feeling for others. There is the true charity that "seeketh not her own." There is the beginning of true benevolence. It is God's love in the heart. Love seeks the good of the one beloved, and in return a revenue of comfort unsought and unthought of in the sweet expressions of love, flows into the soul. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." This is the kind of reward which could never be received if it had been in any measure or degree before the mind as a hoped for reward when the loving work was done. Love's sacrifices and gifts and works are expressions of its own nature, and are the comfort, the delight, the necessity, of the loving soul, as breathing is of the body. Let there be any other motive for them, any other object in view, any other reward thought of than the satisfying of love's desire by them, and to that extent their character is changed and their beauty gone.

The handful of meal will remain, and the little oil to go with it, as long as we shall need to eat. It will never increase, as we have learned to our disappointment many a time. How much I have hoped that I might be able to increase it; but my efforts have failed to add even one more handful. But I have not always been left to brood and complain and be disheartened on this account. There are times when I can think only of the wonder that it does not so <sup>soon</sup> disappear, and only have room in my poor, sinful heart for joy and thankfulness that the handful remains. It has been so very dark at times, the drought has been so very great, the fields have been so dried up, and my soul has felt so very hungry, that I have feared there was nothing more for me; and so anxiously and persistently have I been looking around and abroad for a supply that I have really forgotten about the barrel and cruse in that little back room of the heart, and about the promise. But at last hunger would bring it to my mind, and I would turn and try to reach it again, feeling almost sure that nothing remains for me. But then the promise has sounded out so sweetly, "For thus saith the Lord, The barrel of meal shall not waste, nor the cruse of oil fail, till the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth;" and there I have found the handful of meal and the little oil left, according to the word of the Lord which he spake by Elijah. "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." "As thy day, so thy strength shall be." "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been asked by my pastor, Elder Lines, to write my experience. From my earliest recollection I had a great dread of death. My mother was a christian woman and a member of the Old School Baptist Church. She often took me to her room and prayed with me. I have never forgotten it. As I grew older she always took me to meeting, and I had many serious impressions. I was a great sinner and very fond of worldly pleasures. At the age of twenty-one years I was married, and my husband believed as I did. Time went on until the year 1870, when I was taken sick for a month, and my friends thought I could not live. I saw myself a great sinner, and felt there was no hope for me. I saw myself before a just God. At the end of the month, at the dawn of the day, the Master appeared to me on the cross, and these words came to me, "Though your sins be like scarlet, they are as white as snow." What sweet rest and comfort I had for a time! But soon the tempter came to annoy me again. Elder Durand came to our home, and I told him what great things God had done for a poor sinner like me. He told me to go to the church, but I plead my unworthiness. I often wished I could tell the church, I felt so dissatisfied with myself. Sin was mixed with everything I did. Elder Pollard was pastor, and I enjoyed his preaching. Sometime after this my little daughter passed away and I was in great grief. It was early in the morning, and I went out in the yard, when God appeared to me in my sadness, and these words came to me, "Not my will, but thine be done." In two years we had six deaths in our family. Cross after cross, and trial after trial, came, but the still, small voice would say, "Be still, and know that I am God." I was made to cry out, "God's ways are not my ways," and still I was an unfaithful child. In 1885 we came to this city, and for nine years I tried to find God's people here. In this city there are twenty-two churches, but not a crumb could I get. I would weep and say, "Where will I find the people of God? I pray that my heavenly Father may direct me somewhere." In 1893 a great darkness came over me. It seemed that the earth was bars, and the heavens brass, and there was the just God before me. I knew not where to go. I was stripped of every earthly thing; I had nothing to lean on. But my Master appeared to me, and these words came to me, "You know that you have passed from death unto life, because you love the brethren." What a change! I was made willing to go anywhere that God would direct me. I had faith that God would send me to my people. In the SIGNS of February, 1894, was a letter written by sister Kate Swartout, of Michigan. I wrote to her, and she answered the letter, asking me to come to their meeting, one hundred miles from my home. I went, and was met at the station and taken to her home. She was in very feeble health, but was very kind to me. As I went to the meeting in the evening Elder Lines was there and they were singing a hymn. Such a feeling came over me that I knew I had found my people, and felt that God was there. The next day we had meeting and I had a great feast. Elder Lines came to me after the meeting, and I asked if I could tell the church what great things the Lord had done for me. Every one were strangers to me in the flesh, but by the faith which was given me I knew they were my people. Those good brethren and sisters received me, and the next day I was baptized by Elder Lines. Dear sister Kate, feeble as she was, went to the water. A brother went before me, and as Elder Lines led me into the water such happiness came over me that I knew my Redeemer lived. O the goodness of God to his children! "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." The church is a sweet home for me.

When I returned home and told my husband that I had found the people we had looked for so long he rejoiced, and could hardly wait till the time he went to the church. I have had more comfort since then than in all my life before. May I be faithful to my brethren and sisters.

The SIGNS comes richly laden with good news every week. Your sister in hope, MRS. D. D. MCALPINE.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR FRIENDS:—Away back, while young, the fear of death and the dread of my sins caused me a great deal of anxiety, which led me to search my Bible to see what there was for me. As I read it the more condemned I found myself on nearly every page of that holy book. But at last I found a ray of light, as I thought, from the fifth chapter of Matthew: "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." My cry was, day and night, "Lord, deliver me." I thought, O if I could just know that the twenty-third Psalm was intended for poor me. I thought I must attend Sunday Schools and revival meetings to see if I could get rest to my troubled mind. By this time I had great respect for the people that belonged to the church, and I read that by grace ye are saved, if saved at all. It was made plain to me that my good works would not save poor me. Thus I went on until I attended a meeting at Alborough, Ontario, some thirteenth years ago, when Elder Purington preached from Deut. xxxii. 1-12, "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth." When he got to the tenth verse, "He found him in a desert land, in the waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye," just at that time my burden rolled away. I could have sung aloud if I had been alone. I did sing praises in my soul, and all around me seemed beautiful and praising God. When the Elder came to the eleventh and twelfth verses, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him," then I found my whole mind giving thanks to the Lord and Master for his wonderful works done in me, so vile, so sinful. My joy was so great that sleep left me all that night, while praising his most holy name. I kept it all to myself as best I could; but while talking over what had taken place at the church, with many old brethren and sisters that were there, I made the remark that it was a delightful sermon to me. One of them said to me, "God bless you." O how many times I did not open my mouth to tell just how I felt, and how I humbly hoped the Lord had led me all those years, with my ups and downs, while outside the fold of the church, wishing many times it were God's will to give me grace and strength to be among them, who claimed to be saved by grace alone. I can find a home only among the Old School Baptists. For ten years I did not hear a gospel sermon, only what I got from reading my Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and the little book, "Lessons by the Way," written by Mrs. Swartout, which gave me great pleasure while reading. While my wife was among the Lord's people in October last, I was called away to Canada to attend the funeral of one dear to me. I was impressed very much with the thought, How will it be with me when death comes to me? Will it be, "Depart," or, "Come, thou blessed, enter into the kingdom of heaven?" On calling on my Master came these words with great sweetness to my mind, "Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all my days." As I pondered over God's goodness to me, and talked with my brother of the wonderful plan of redemption, I saw as it were a beautiful stream of a golden color, wide and deep. I wept bitterly, and these words came to me with great sweetness, "As the apple tree among trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons." This came to me while or about the same time my wife was at Woodstock, Michigan, and was baptized.

The above is the substance of what I told the Columbia Church, at Woodstock, Mich, on May 4th, 1895. I was received, and on May 5th was baptized by Elder W. L. Lines. O what joy has thrilled my poor soul ever since, to think I was given grace and strength to do the Lord's will and follow in his footsteps, as I hope to through all my days on earth. Bless his most holy name who caused me to sing,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;

I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
BELOVED IN CHRIST:—Obedient to the heavenly vision, preaching the gospel to the poor in spirit, comforting others with that comfort where-with you yourselves have been comforted of God. Although I have done so little toward comforting others, I would call you brethren, and would tell you what great things the Lord has done for me. He reconciled me unto himself, forgiving my sins; for I felt indeed, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." Jesus said, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." He gave me the will to come, and O what joy to feel that I was not cast out. I was weary and heavy laden, and he gave me rest. "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters; he restoreth my soul." I have surely felt the power of these words, and their truth. The first knowledge I had of this great power and glory of our God was on the fourth of October, 1890, about four o'clock in the morning. I hardly know how I became so afflicted in mind, it came upon me so gradual. The load was laid upon me like the proverbial camel's load, until it seemed "the last straw" had surely been added. I went about at my work day after day with a sense of weight upon me, which amounted physically to a constant aching in my breast, until I was always sorry when the night was over and morning was come, only to dawn upon a gloomy world to me. I could see no beauty in all the pleasant things the Lord has put here for our comfort. I now look back to that time and wonder how it could be; for I have now the same house and friends and surroundings, to a great extent. Now it seems like the whole world is full of God's glory; but still there are times when I am blind to them partially. Upon that, to me, memorable morning, at about the hour I spoke of, I awoke. As soon as I awoke came the aching load, with the conviction that I had sinned against God and had taken his holy name in vain. I arose and sank upon my knees for the first time in my life for the purpose of prayer to God to forgive my sins. Then before my closed eyes seemed the boundlessness of space, without an object in it. All my load was gone, and I thought I would get up and ask every one in the house to forgive me all I had ever done wrong against them. But I thought they would think strange of it, and so I did not. I fell asleep and dreamed that I had done so, and that they made sport of me for so doing. I slept by a window facing the south, and when morning dawned

it was upon a "new heaven and a new earth;" for old things had passed away. Such a glorious sunrise, and more beautiful trees never grew, I thought, than those little trees on the brow of the bluffs of the river opposite my window; and through all the following days the glory of God seemed around me. The whole of the winter following it seemed that God was with us. Thus my faith was fixed; I had found a friend. I thought I would "tell no man" of this, but would keep it secret. I felt sure his mercies would endure forever, and that if I asked of him I should receive. But I never thought of calling this religion until my dear husband was taken sick and we thought he would die. One night I told him that I had faith in prayer, and was unable to change my faith in that particular. He asked me when this happened, and I told him all I knew about it. He was much rejoiced, and grew better rapidly, and recovered his health. I was much surprised when he took such an interest in my talk. I thought his mind would change before morning, and asked him if it was. He said it was not. Then I was afraid I had deceived him, and was deceived myself. I longed and prayed for a confirmation, and it was presented to my mind in this way: "How much do you deserve? You have peace and rest and faith; what more can you ask?" I surely felt that I was ungrateful indeed to ask more, and have been contented ever since to have received at the Lord's hand double for all my sins. I was baptized in the fellowship of Linn Creek Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists in northern Iowa, by Elder A. J. Norton, of Hampton, Iowa, on July 4th, 1891, in the thirty-second year of my age. We went a hundred miles to attend meeting and join that church, as there was not, and is not, a church of Old School Baptists in Minnesota; but we hope to organize one here next June. We have a preacher here, and a meeting-house, and three members near, and several brethren in the state. We all meet here twice a year and have good meetings. We believe we love this people, and can say with the prophet of old, "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places."—Deut. xxxiii. 29.

Now, dear brethren, if this poor composition is unfit for your valuable columns, or you cannot find room for it, please do us the favor of telling the brethren that we are praying for a goodly number of Old School Baptists to move here and join with us in keeping the order of the house of our God and giving all praise and honor and glory to him that sitteth upon the throne. O may this prayer be in accordance with his will. Tell them they need not have any fears of starving here in this country; for there has not been a failure of crops here for twenty-five years. This last season farmers have raised as high as one hundred bushels of oats to the acre, wheat thirty bushels, corn twenty to fifty bushels, and ten to twenty bushels of flax seed. All crops ripened well without frost. Good wood is plenty at two dollars and fifty cents per cord. We do not freeze here in the winter. We had only about two weeks of sleighing this winter. We only burn three tons of hard coal in our heater, running day and night, in one winter.

My letter is already too long, and I must ask you to correct it if you publish it, as it is my first correspondence for a paper.

Yours in hope,

ELIZABETH A. MURPHY.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES—MY DEAR BRETHREN:—The subject of humility has been on my mind somewhat of late, and I have a desire to try and pen a few thoughts on the same. But I feel to know that unless I have been with and learned of him who was meek and lowly, and am guided by his Spirit, I shall be utterly unable to say anything that will be comforting or encouraging or profitable to any of God's believing children. Trusting that if it is his will I may be so directed, and believing as I do that he can cause even the weakest of his flock to lisp his praise, I make the attempt.

If we really are what we profess to be, we are commanded to follow Jesus, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, and who prayed for his enemies when they put him to death, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." This example he has left for us, and commanded that we should pray for those who despitefully use and persecute us. But we know that when left to ourselves it is impossible for us to do these things, for it is contrary to the flesh. But when guided, like Stephen of old, we like him may be enabled to pray that this sin may not be laid to their charge.

O! what a sweet resting and safe place it is for us when brought low at the feet of Jesus. We then may not have any fears what man may do to us. They may torture or kill the body, or speak evil of us; but if they speak falsely, and we suffer these things for Jesus' sake, are we not blessed indeed? Yes, if we are possessed with that Spirit, that forbids us to return evil for evil, truly blessed is our condition; and none have this, only as God has been pleased to bless them with it. There is no difference naturally between God's people and the rest of Adam's ruined race. They are all by nature the children of wrath, even as others. It is God who maketh them to differ; and this is a truth, brethren, that we should never lose sight of. If we could have this in view continually, it appears to me that it would have a tendency to keep us humble, and keep us from boasting over our fellows. God in his infinite goodness and mercy has been pleased to grant unto us a knowledge of the truth; for this is the only way any sinner can come in possession of the truth: God must reveal it to him. This is the way the apostle Paul received it. He was a learned man, so far as the wisdom of this world is concerned, having been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, an "L. L. D.," which thoroughly qualified him, with the wonderful amount of religious zeal that he was possessed of, to be one of the foremost persecutors of the religion of Jesus Christ. But blasphemer and persecutor as he was, he being a chosen vessel, in the fullness of time, at the set time, the time that God had appointed, God by his almighty power was pleased to stop him in his mad career, and to reveal his Son in him, and give him that knowledge that it is possible for God alone to give. This caused Paul to pour contempt upon all his former attainments, counting all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord, for whom he suffered the loss of all things, and did count them but dung, that he might win Christ, and be found in him, not having his own righteousness, which was of the law. We see then that it was God that made the difference in Paul; and when we go back to our own experience we can testify to the same things ourselves, and that if left to ourselves we today would have been where the entire Arminian world is, that is, trusting in our own strength and righteousness, believing that by dint of study we could come to a knowledge of the truth, that we could teach others to know the Lord, and that by reforming our ways, by a moral course of living, we might gain the favor of God, or by doing good God would save us. But thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift! He has, as we trust, delivered us from this delusion of Satan. Then, if he has done great things for us, whereof we are glad, should we exult over those who have been less favored? No; God forbid; for we have nothing to boast of. We have nothing, only that we have received of a just and merciful God. Then, if all our blessings are from him, and if he has been abundantly merciful to all our unrighteousness, and delivered us from the snare of the wicked one, should we not desire to be found walking humbly and uprightly all the remaining days of our pilgrimage? Yes, brethren, I believe this is the desire of every renewed mind. This being the desire of the heart or mind, and being in harmony with the many admonitions left on record, and also the example of Christ and his immediate followers while on earth, may we not be encouraged to hope that we

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

IN opposition to the elaborate and centralized organizations which prevail among most religious denominations, and have prevailed for centuries past, from the various systems of paganism down through the Mohammedans, the Greek Church, Romanists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and other sects less widely known, which have nearly all aimed to combine secular with religious power, and to compel the many to submit to the dictation of the few, thus destroying all true, free christian fellowship and christian service, there has very naturally arisen an opposite element, which has gone to the extreme of denying that any form of church order whatever has been enjoined upon believers.

It is this that we wish to briefly consider in the light of the New Testament Scriptures; and if we can find that order laid down there which we as Baptists maintain, we shall have done some small service perhaps to some inquiring minds.

First, we will say that unless the divine rule shall authorize any system which may obtain among men, that system is unscriptural, and ought to be condemned and discarded. We are among those that believe in a strict interpretation of the Scriptures, and in a strict adherence to their letter as well as to their spirit. As to the question whether the rule laid down in the New Testament authorizes the elaborate forms of government found among the denominations named above, we deem it sufficient to say that their very advocates do not claim for them direct authority in the Scriptures, but simply claim that no rule at all is given there, but that these things are left to the judgment of the church; and moreover, they say that in various countries and times various forms of government are not only allowable, but necessary to suit changing circumstances. Inasmuch, therefore, as they do not themselves claim that there is any direct scriptural authority for their organizations, and so far as we know have never presented the chapter or verse where Jesus or his apostles have said that this matter is left to the judgment of the churches, and to the circumstances and times, we do not purpose dwelling upon this. Baptists all believe that the order of the church, as well as the faith, must have scriptural authority or else be abandoned. When any Scriptures in the New Testament shall be presented in favor of a centralized church government it will be time enough to consider them. Until then we must refuse to acknowledge such systems as being scriptural, and continue to call for proof.

But because the Scriptures do not justify the centralized government, the rule of one man or of a few men in the church of God, it does not follow that there is no organization at all provided there; and we believe that we have abundant proof of church organization. Some of these proofs we will now name. First. The fact that churches are named as existing in various places is proof of some sort of an organization. Thus we read of the church at Rome, of the churches of Galatia, &c.; and it seems to us that unless in each place there was some kind of an organization which distinguished the christians in that place organically from the similar bodies of christians in other places, the word "church" or "churches" would not have been used in addressing them, but simply individual words, as saints, brethren, &c. Second. The appointment of Elders, Bishops and Deacons in the churches, to teach, guide, oversee and minister the temporal affairs of the church, is absolute proof of organization. Third. The discipline enjoined in caring for the poor and the widows, in dealing with the unruly, in receiving believers to their fellowship, in excluding the finally disobedient, and in restoring them again when they had given evidence of sincere sorrow and repentance, all proves that there must have been a definite organization through which all this order could be maintained. Things in the early churches were not to be done tumultuously, with noisy clamor, but "decently and in order." Every direction relating to public worship, and to the administration of the ordinances of the house of God, implies an orderly arrangement. In short, the Spirit of God in each church was the author of order, and not of confusion.

These organizations were purely local. The church at Rome was a perfect church, as far as relates to her rights and her duties, and so was the church at Corinth or at Ephesus. In baptizing, administering the supper, choosing Bishops and Deacons, caring for the poor among them, excluding the unruly, each church acted within herself under apostolic direction. We have not the slightest intimation of any organic bond of union between even the churches of the same province, as in Galatia; still less do we find the churches acting in subordination to a central superior power at Rome, at Jerusalem, or anywhere else. So far as the New Testament is concerned, it knows nothing of any bond of union between the churches named there other than the bond of a common experience, a common faith and a common fellowship.

We pause in our argument right here to suggest what has long seemed to us a most important consideration. The church of God can be persecuted, but can never persecute. We consider this too well settled a principle to need any argument. Now, the Baptist Church has never persecuted; not because as men her members are any better than other men, but because from the manner of her organization she never can persecute. Persecution requires the use of the arm of secular authority. This our God has, by means of her God-given organization itself, shut her out from ever wielding. Romanists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, by their organization as one body, with power and authority centralized in one man or a few men, may gain and use the secular arm, and so have power to persecute. But Baptists never can; not because they are better than other men, but because our God has forever shut them out from it through their lack of organic union. Let us thank God that it is so.

Where shall we expect to find the order which God has established in his churches here on earth if we do not find it in the record of the first church ever organized by the apostles, the church at Jerusalem, as recorded in the second chapter of the Acts? Without quoting the chapter, or any considerable part of it, we will briefly state the order there laid down. First, the preaching of the word. Second, the repentance and confession of guilt on the part of those who had been pricked in the heart. Third, they were baptized. Fourth, they continued in the apostles' fellowship. Fifth, in their doctrine. Sixth, in the administration of the supper. Seventh, in prayers, or in public worship. This was the order then laid down. Is it possible to suppose that the will of God was not clearly shown in this, the organization of the first gospel church? We claim that we have a right to believe that the Holy Ghost was thus particular in defining the various steps here taken because this was the first church organization, and was intended to be a pattern for all churches in all places which should afterward be set up.

Now, we ask all who may read this to pause and answer for themselves this question: Does not the Primitive or Old School Baptist Church bear all these marks? Is not the record of the organization of this, the first gospel church at Jerusalem, the substantial history of the organization of all our churches in the land to-day? Notice, again, the order, preaching, repentance, confession, believing, baptism, continuing in the doctrine and fellowship of the apostles, the supper, and public worship. Is not this our order to-day? How plain and simple everything was then! How plain and simple our order is now! No elaborate forms; no centralized power; no lording over the flock; no inequality in rights and privileges.

Still farther, all the New Testament churches, so far as their organization is named at all, were established upon the same principles. In all the epistles each church was addressed as an independent body. There is not the slightest trace of any inferiority on the part of the one church, nor superiority upon the part of another; and always the Bishops, Elders and Deacons are the servants of the churches. The apostles alone were judges, whose decisions were infallible, and not to be questioned. Each church, according to apostolic rule, was to be the sole administrator of the affairs of the kingdom of Christ in its own special locality. There is no organic dependence suggested, either upon Rome or upon the first church at Jerusalem. Are not Baptists following the same beaten track to-day?

We come to consider another thing. If there be no organization whatever, there must of necessity be no way of an orderly and decent administration of the affairs of the churches. Unless, when the church is met together, there be some one to preside, and some prearranged way by which the mind of the church may be made known, how is confusion to be avoided? How are members to be received or excluded, pastors or other officers to be chosen, funds raised and disposed of, the times and places of public worship to be decided, the supper administered, and in short all business that may come up to be attended to, unless provision has been made for an orderly conduct of business? Hence arises the necessity for organization; and our God has laid down for us all that is needful, as we have shown, in the New Testament. This is not man-made, but God-made. Man did not originate this order, with its wonderful simplicity and effectiveness, but God.

That God has provided pastors for his people we suppose none will deny. We will barely refer to a few places in the New Testament in which pastors and their work are pointed out. Our special reason for doing so is that in this also we have proof of an organization in the churches, and that some men filled places in the church that others were not called to fill. God has set all these gifts in the church as it pleased him. No man could take these gifts and callings to himself, and no man could confer them upon another. God called men as he did Aaron, and the church could only recognize his work. The word "pastor" is used in Ephesians iv. 11, meaning a shepherd, a feeder; and Paul here speaks of them as the gift of God, and among other gifts given for the good of the people of God. Some seventeen times the word "shepherd" is used in the New Testament translated from the same

Greek word as "pastor" in Ephesians iv. 11. Jesus is called the great Shepherd, to distinguish his work, and show his pre-eminence over all the under-shepherds. The word "Bishop" is also used some six times, and is applied to certain members of the churches to distinguish them and their peculiar work from the rest. As the name signifies, they had the oversight of the churches, and so were truly pastors. The word "Elder" is used in the New Testament as the name of an office in the church some fifteen times, and in such a way often as to show that they too were regarded as having the oversight of the church, and as those who were to feed the flock of God. Now we ask, and we fear not the answer, Are not we as Old School or Primitive Baptists following the New Testament rule in all this? The word "Bishop" is not used among us, but the word "pastor" is; and, as has been said, they mean precisely the same thing. We suppose that the chief reason why the word "Bishop" has ceased to be used among us is that among certain churches it is used to distinguish a higher order of clergy, of which there is no trace in the New Testament; besides, the word "pastor," which we do use, is from the same Greek word in the New Testament.

In conclusion, we would briefly consider another question which we have heard proposed, and which seems to us germane to this subject. The question is this: Is there any Bible authority for limiting the administration of the ordinances to those who bear the name of Elders or of pastors among the churches? First we will say that after as careful an examination as we have been able to make, we have not found in the New Testament any evidence whatever that baptism was ever performed by those who bore the name of christians promiscuously. There is no instance, that we have been able to find, where it is testified that any baptized except such particular persons as were set apart for that purpose by the church. There is proof that particular men baptized, but none that every church-member considered himself at liberty to administer the ordinance. Indeed, to do all things decently and in order would seem to forbid this. We repeat, there is no proof that believers generally had any right to baptize other believers. John the Baptist was sent to preach and baptize. Jesus gave to his disciples, that is, the twelve, the right to baptize. On the day of Pentecost we read of none but the disciples baptizing; and the same was the case with Lydia and the jailer, and the eunuch and Paul. If any save those specially set apart to the work perform the ordinance, they do it without authority from the word, so far as we have been able to discover.

The same is true of the supper. In fact, the narrative of the original institution of the ordinance shuts us up to the fact that one must bless and break for the rest; and there is no instance recorded, so far as we have found, which proves that any save the apostles and pastors of the churches ever performed this office. It is true, there is but very little said bearing upon this question in the New Testament, and nothing at all showing that every member had a right to officiate in the breaking of the bread. The same, we may say, is true of preaching, or performing other pastoral work. Why, we may ask, were Elders, pastors and Deacons appointed at all, if it were the right of any and every member to perform the labors assigned to these offices? They must have special qualifications; which proves, if it proves anything, that their work was special.

We leave these reflections for the perusal of Mr. Welborn and all who may be interested. Perhaps we ought to have condensed more. If any think so, our excuse must be the many questions that seemed to belong to the subject. No subject can be of greater importance, we are sure.

A GREAT WONDER IN HEAVEN.

"AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars."—Rev. xii. 1.

In attempting to comply with the wishes of a brother, we have honestly to confess our inability to comprehend to our own satisfaction many things which we find written in the book of Revelation. Many however of the sublime and beautiful figures present to our mind delightful illustrations of divine realities which are taught in other portions of the Scriptures which are to us more clear and plain. We have found it difficult to fix with any degree of certainty upon the precise dates in the history of the church of God to which the various figures refer, and to keep in our mind an unbroken connection of the figures, with circumstances and events corresponding.

The text proposed for our consideration presents to our mind a pleasing revelation of the church of God in her gospel standing and elevation. The heaven in which this, with a succession of wonders, appeared, cannot refer to the heaven of ultimate glory of the saints, for there will be no sorrow or sighing, pain or travelling, tumults nor wars, in that divine abode. The term is here used in a figurative sense, in which the natural heaven or firmament, embracing sun, moon and stars, is used to set forth spiritual things. Whether this figure was intended to apply to the close of the Jewish and opening of the gospel dispensation, or related to some other period and events, we shall not attempt to determine; but in supposing its adaptation to that time, we will consider the sun, as in nature provided to rule the day, and the moon to rule the night, and the stars for signs and wonders, times and seasons, &c. By their simultaneous appearance we will infer the time when, according to predictions going before, the ploughman overtook the reapers, or the early dawning of the gospel dispensation, including the lapse of time from the announcement of the conception of John the Baptist to the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and extending perhaps to the day of Pentecost, and throughout the apostolic age.

The prophecy of Zacharias at the circumcision of John announced that the Day spring from on high had come to give light to them that sat in darkness, &c. Thus, as the gospel day was breaking, the morning star had arisen; the harbinger of Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, had come. Light was now breaking in; and as the light increased with the progress of the morning, objects which the darkness of the legal dispensation had long concealed from the eyes of kings and prophets, which had desired to see them, were now made visible to the people whose eyes God had blessed with light; for whatsoever maketh manifest is light. The first and most glorious object made visible by the growing light was a woman clothed with the sun. The psalmist says, "The Lord God is a Sun and shield," and Malachi testified, "Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings." Isaiah has said, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels." The apostle assures us that Christ is of God made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. From these, with a multitude of other passage of Scripture, it is evident the woman clothed with the sun represents the church of God in her vital union with Jesus Christ her Mediatorial Head and spiritual life, and now by the light of the gospel revealed as she had before existed, the righteousness of God in him. The law had no power to thus distinguish the church of God, but the gospel brings her to light, "looking forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." Thus the church is truly clothed with the Sun, with Christ, and her life is hid with him in God; and he has been her dwelling-place in all generations, even from everlasting to everlasting. She dwells in the secret place of the Most High, which secret place we understand to be Christ; and she abides under the shadow of the Almighty. Christ is her hiding-place from the wind, and covert from the high storm. He is her refuge, her high tower and her defense. Thus was she chosen in him before the foundation of the world; but the great wonder of her existence, election, calling and salvation in him, was hidden from ages past, but now made manifest by the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light.

Let us briefly consider her elevation. In her fallen, depraved, human nature she was seen under the law a captive sold under sin, children of wrath, even as others, strangers and foreigners, ignorant of God, enemies by wicked works, and living without hope and without God in the world. But now is she redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, washed and cleansed by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. When One died for all (that is, all his members), then were they all dead; the law was executed on them all in the person of their legal representative; and in his resurrection together with his dead body did they all arise; and being risen with him, they seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth. Thus God, "for the great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us, through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved." In the ages or generations which were to succeed the raising up from the dead the body of our Lord Jesus, and in that body the life of all the heirs of immortality, unnumbered millions of his redeemed should be born of the flesh, and born again by his Spirit, quickened with that life which God in the exceeding riches of his grace gave and secured to them in Christ Jesus before the world began. "In the ages to come," all that were redeemed from under the law and raised up in the resurrection of Christ shall be regenerated and raised up experimentally, and made to rejoice in the liberty of the sons of God.

If we are at liberty to consider the embodiment of all the ceremonies, types and figures through which Christ was preached to the children of God under the old dispensation as their medium through which they were favored with borrowed rays from the Sun which was to rise, as represented by the moon, we then see clearly how she is raised above the moon, and the moon is under her feet; for her feet stand upon Mount Zion, and she is that "Jerusalem which is above, which is free, and which is the mother of us all."

The crown is not placed upon the body, only as the body is connected with the Head. If in time or eternity it were possible to destroy this union of life with Christ, then could the bands which unite us to God be broken asunder; but no such catastrophe can ever befall the church of Christ is one with the Father. God has given him to be the "Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." The church is complete in him. Hence the royal diadem is placed on the Head of the church, and he is proclaimed God's anointed King, and seated on his holy hill Sion. Sion as his throne and Sion, is pronounced a throne which is for ever and ever, an everlasting kingdom, and a dominion that shall never end.

The crown of Christ's spiritual dominion as the King of saints, who should reign in righteousness, is be-studded with twelve stars, by which we understand the gospel as preached and established in all its doctrine, ordinances, provisions and excellences, under the authority and command of Jesus Christ, by the apostles who sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. All this goes to place the crown on Jesus as the divine Mediator and exalted Head of the church of God.

So far as all who read may find these views sustained by the word and Spirit of our God, we pray they may be blessed to their edification and the declarative glory of God, for Jesus Christ's sake.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

BACK NUMBERS DISCONTINUED.

ALTHOUGH we have several copies of each number of this volume on hand, we have discontinued sending back numbers to new subscribers unless especially requested to do so.

are children of the new covenant? God declared he would write his law in their hearts, and put it in their inward parts. If so, we shall never be forsaken; for he has declared that he will be our God, and we shall be his people. But I will close by quoting a part of what the apostle Paul instructs Titus to put the saints in mind of: "To speak evil of no man, to be no brawler, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men. For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another."—Titus iii. 2, 3.

Now, brethren, I have not written altogether as I intended, and it is seldom that I do. The very thing that I desire to avoid, that I do; that is, ramble. I am reminded of a little child in a large field, being attracted here and there by a flower. The field may be full, but my vision is such that I cannot gather in a straight line as I desire.

Your brother in humble hope,
MARTIN D. FISHER.

CLIO, Mich., May 30, 1895.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—We received your very welcome letter. I have very often thought about you, and of how much I would like to receive a letter from you and sister Jenkins; yet I know you have very much to occupy your time. Many times I have thought I would ask you to write on some portion of Scripture, but have not done so, thinking you are so busy; but almost always some one would write about the Scripture I had in my mind. I always love to read your writings, and when I was with the church in Middletown I loved to hear you talk in the meetings, and I thought you would yet preach, and that perhaps you were raised up to take Elder Beebe's place. I believe that the Lord will sustain you. It is now twenty-one years since I saw you last, and I can hardly realize that you have grown old, and that there have been so many changes in the church membership. We have grown old and old looking, even older than you are. A few more years and where will we be? Will we meet the church where parting will be no more? The Lord knoweth, and I am glad of it. It is a comfort to believe that he knoweth all things. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." You said it seemed strange to you that we should leave the privileges of the church. Well, right here I would love to talk to you, as I cannot write what I would say. I have often asked myself the question, and my husband and me have often talked about it, but I cannot feel sure how it is. The morning I started from Middletown I took up the hymn-book (Beebe's Collection) and opened to the 757th hymn,

"Great Fountain of grace,
Which none can explore,
Thou Ancient of days,
Whom seraphs adore;
In Jesus behold us,
To thee we draw nigh;
"In him," thou hast told us,
"Thy wants I'll supply," &c.

I think I have experienced it all through. Please read the 515th hymn.

"Begone, unbelief, my Savior is near," &c.

I sometimes feel sad, and think I have no right to even a name with the people of the living God, and of late I have thought that perhaps I went away from you because I was not of you; but a few days ago the thought came into my mind with much comfort, "Do not believe it;" and my mind was led back to the time when I was made to see myself a sinner in the sight of God, and I wondered, How will I be saved? I had come to the end of my good works. I felt that I could do nothing, and felt, How shall I be saved? But I had not felt that way long until one day, when I was alone, the thought came into my mind to pray the Lord to be merciful to me, a sinner. Well, that seemed a great privilege for poor me; and then these words, "Jesus' blood cleanseth from all sin," came into my mind so sweetly. Right there I saw how I could be saved. I opened my Testament, and the first words I saw were, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." I read on and came to the words, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." All this seemed very beautiful to me. I had read the same many times before, but never with the light and understanding and enjoyment which I then did; and from that day these things have seemed very precious to me, and I hope will continue so while I live. I believe they will be enough in the hour of death. I have no desire to cast aside the enjoyment of these blessings and follow after the teaching that is all around us, which are things whereof I am now ashamed. I now feel to praise the Lord for his goodness to me. I hope I believe from the heart the doctrine as preached by you and Elders Chick, Durand, Beebe, and all sound Old School Baptists. It will do to mention these names to you, and say that these express my feelings and explain things to my understanding. Perhaps you know how it is. Sometimes I feel like telling them how much I enjoy their writings. I would like to write to the church, but you see I am such a poor one to write my feelings. I have been afraid to tell the church that I love them, for fear they could not believe it, because I came away. I feel that I am the very least of all, and the most unworthy; but I hope we are in love and fellowship with you as a church. I cannot tell you how much we would love to see you all and talk with you face to face, and how we would love to attend the association. My husband joins me in sending christian love and fellowship to the church. I hope we both are established in the truth. I hope you will find time to write soon.

Your sister, I hope,
MARY E. HOFFMAN.

EAST PITTSBURGH, Maine, Dec. 15, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—While about my work this morning I wrote you quite a long letter; but I know you will not receive it, so I will try, the Lord helping me, to put a few lines on paper. I want to realize every moment that without him I can do nothing; but it is no easy thing, for self wants to have a hand in it. The dear Lord has at last, in his own good time, brought me to his banqueting-house. I have, after so many years, got home. Sister Ella said you sent your warm fellowship, but I am so unworthy to receive the fellowship of God's dear children; and yet if I could not meet and mingle with them I would be all alone; yet not alone, for the Savior never leaves nor forsakes. As far as the religious sects of the world are concerned I would be alone indeed. It was through deep distress and questioning I went forward. I did not want to do wrong in the matter, but was it right for me to go to the church? I was indeed tempest-tossed. At one time it seemed as if I was in the deep water; but I could not sink, for there was the Savior. I have not pictured these things as they came to me in my distressed frame of mind. Now I will go back a little. You know that for years these things have been on my mind more or less. When I would hear preaching, and the ministers would tell of the feelings and desires of a burdened soul, I would ask myself if I felt that way. I attended the association last fall. When I got there, and learned you were not going to be there, I felt disappointed; but I must confess that I almost forgot you, the preaching was so good. Although I had never seen Elder Beebe before, he came right into my heart, and I loved him just as well as though I had listened to him all my life. He talked to me lovingly, trying to show me my duty; and Elder Keene was no less kind than he. But "I could not yet go home." While there on Saturday such darkness swept over me that I thought of the sufferings of the Savior, and I feared the reproach of men. I wept bitterly. If I could have gone out and had mother with me to comfort me I would have done so; but I did not care to attract special attention, and so had to bear it. Of the people there I felt there was none with me. After a time I felt better. After the association closed I went home and to my school, but was not at rest. I would think and think. One night while answering a letter from Elder Keene I seemed filled to overflowing. I could run and not be weary, could walk and not be faint. After retiring I had a view of the Savior, and I loved him so much that I wanted to put my arms around him and lay my head upon his breast. After the last thought I felt perhaps it was a natural impulse; but I know it was not all natural. Never before did I see him so and love him so much. Time passed on, and one evening here at home I told my feelings to my mother, aunt Louise and James. Aunt Louise said she would be willing to receive me into the church. On the ninth of October Elder Keene came to us. During his stay, before baptism, I had the feelings of which I have spoken in the first part of this letter. Dear Elder Keene is so thoughtful of the weary ones, speaking words of encouragement and kindness, like our dear brother Chick, we think. I find I am of the earth, earthy, and this rebellious heart of mine is something awful; but

"Through Christ I shall conquer, Though often cast down."

The foundation stands sure, and always will, and I rejoice in it. I know the joyful sound, even if I cannot declare his wonderful works like some. He will come to me ever and anon, and I shall have moments of gladness the world knows nothing of.

I will now bring this scribble to a close. I know you will be glad to receive this, for you have taken an interest in the Lord's dealings with me for a long time. If I have said anything amiss, throw over it the mantle of charity, and remember I am only a poor, weak creature; one, as I have great assurance to hope, the Lord has been gracious to. If you have ample time, I shall be glad to receive a letter from you.

ROXBURY, N. Y., Dec. 26. 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—You will find inclosed the amount for the renewal of my subscription. I highly prize the reading matter contained in our family paper. The sentiments therein expressed and earnestly contended for I believe to be the truth. I very much enjoy the friendly letters. They seem to speak from the heart and reach the heart. I enjoyed Elder Vail's letter to Elder Durand, which was published in the SIGNS some time ago, although he was feeling so much discouraged with himself. He spoke of some exercises he had after uniting with the church, of being sorry he had done so, fearing he was deceived and had deceived the church. It touched a chord in my heart. In the SIGNS of Dec. 11th brother H. Cox tells us of his trials, the fear of being deceived. I think I know something about those trials, and have never found language to fully express myself on the subject. It seemed to me I could not live so, and concluded to frankly tell the brethren and sisters that I had deceived them, and ask them to drop me from their fellowship and their thoughts; yet all this time they looked like the excellent ones of the earth. I felt I had committed a horrible sin in deceiving them. I went to the covenant meeting with the full resolution to confess to them what I had done; but while the brethren were speaking, one who had been a member for a number of years told how his mind was exercised when he first united with the church, in regard to being deceived. I was both astonished and comforted. Still I have that fear, although a professed follower of the Savior over forty years. The older I grow the more sin and imperfection I see in myself.

"O that the Lord would guide my ways
To keep his statutes still;
O that the Lord would grant me grace
To know and do his will."

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has removed from among us our dearly beloved pastor, Elder S. Bolender; and whereas the long and intimate relation he has sustained among us as a church makes it befitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore be it

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the support of Waterford Church, by his services and counsel, will be held in grateful remembrance by us; that the removal of such a life from among us leaves a vacancy that will be deeply realized by all of us, and will prove a serious loss to this church and community.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In the city of Middletown, N. Y., at the residence of her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ira L. Harding, on Sunday morning, Jan. 26th, 1896, Miss F. Ida Vail, aged about 50 years.

Miss Ida had for about ten years suffered with lung disease, although able to be about the house until near the end. She was one of seven daughters of George F. S. and Harriet Newel Vail, of whom two survive, Mrs. Joanna Wilkison and Mrs. Ira L. Harding, both members of the church in this city.

Miss Ida had never made a public profession of religion, but attended the meetings of the Old School Baptists, and a few days before her death remarked to the writer that her only hope of life and salvation was in the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. She had frequently spoken of a dread of death and the grave, but as the end approached she said she felt quite relieved of that feeling. Her end was peaceful.

At her request the writer conducted her funeral services on Tuesday, 28th, in the presence of a number of sorrowing relatives and friends; after which her mortal body was deposited in the cemetery of the New Vernon Church, where many of her relatives had preceded her.

BENTON JENKINS.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—Our esteemed brother, the senior Deacon of the church at Cow Marsh, has been called to his final home. After suffering much from rheumatism and general debility for several months, he calmly fell asleep on Tuesday, Feb. 25th, 1896, in the 81st year of his age. His wife, who was a member with him, was called away some years ago.

Brother Gooden was baptized on May 19th, 1861. All these years he has resided at the same place, and while his companion lived it was one of the prominent places of entertainment. Soon after his reception into the church he was appointed Deacon, which office he continued to hold, although unable to serve of late years. He was also a principal one of the building committee that erected our commodious place of worship. He filled a large place in the church, in the neighborhood, and in the community around him. Honored and respected by all who knew him as a man of sterling integrity, he yet showed through his life and deportment the sincerity of his faith.

I was summoned to attend with the bereaved family and the surviving members of the church, as also with a sympathizing community, on Friday, the 28th, when devout men carried him to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. His connection with the church had been nearly thirty-five years.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

STATE ROAD, Del., March 4, 1896.

DIED—At his home near Logan, N. Y., Feb. 9th, 1896, Jeremiah E. Mathews.

Our father was born Dec. 27th, 1827, on the farm where he died. He was married Sept. 5th, 1849, to Miss Betsy Robinson. Four children blessed their union, Loren, Aletta, Mary and Libbie. Loren and Mary preceded him to the happy land. He leaves a sorrowing widow and two daughters, Mrs. Aletta Dewey and Mrs. Libbie Erway. He joined the Baptist Church at Burdett about the year 1878. He died in hope of a glorious immortality beyond the grave. He seemed to bear his sickness with a humble submission to the will of his heavenly Father. He was a kind husband and father; and though we miss him very much, we cannot wish him back to a world so full of sin and strife.

The funeral services were held at his late residence on Feb. 13th, Elder Charles Bogardus officiating, who spoke very comfortingly from John xi. 25, 26.

"How blest the righteous when he dies,
When sinks a weary soul to rest;
How mildly beam the closing eyes,
How gently heaves the expiring breast."

"Life's labor done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load, the spirit flies,
While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies."

LIBBIE ERWAY.

By request of the bereaved husband, I send for publication in the SIGNS, a notice of the death of sister Catharine A. O'Meara, wife of brother Albert O'Meara, of 722 L St. N. E., Washington, D. C., on the 27th of February, 1896, in the 47th year of her age.

Her disease was pneumonia. Though she has been an invalid for about seven years, her last illness was of about a week's duration, causing her intense suffering.

By grace she was fully prepared to go, and was made willing in the day of God's power. A favorite hymn with her was the 807th of Beebe's Collection, beginning, "O land of rest, for thee I sigh," &c.

At the time of her decease she was a member of the Alexandria Old School Baptist Church. She was baptized something like twelve years ago by Elder Smoot, at Oak Grove, Prince William Co., Va. But when that church departed from the faith, and left the Corresponding Meeting, in 1889, sister O'Meara and her husband continued steadfast in the faith, and united by experience with the church in Alexandria, Va., September 3rd, 1893, and continued in the fellowship of that church to the time of her decease. Although physically a weakly woman, and of a very mild disposition, she was firm and unyielding in the doctrine of God our Savior.

She leaves her husband and six children, with her aged father and mother, our esteemed brother and sister Kerns, of the Bethlehem Church, brothers and sisters, and other relatives and friends, with the church, to mourn, but not as those who have no hope. May the Lord sanctify this dispensation of his providence to the comfort of the bereaved ones, and to the glory of his great name.

Your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va.

DIED—At her residence in Otisville, Orange Co., N. Y., Feb. 26th, 1896, Mrs. Roxanna Reed, widow of Jonah H. Reed, aged 84 years.

She is survived by two children: John Reed, of Meadville, Pa., and Harry Reed, of Otisville, N. Y. An only daughter, Mrs. Harriet J. Hill, who had lived with her, died last spring. She is also survived by three brothers and two sisters: G. C. Wheat, of Wellsburg, N. Y., Robert A. Wheat, of Warwick, N. Y., Charles Wheat, of Otisville, N. Y., Maria Hill, of Topeka, Kansas, and Mrs. Lewis Oakley, of Port Jervis, N. Y. Mr. J. W. Hill, of Otisville, and Mr. Ora G. O'Neil, of Middletown, are nephews.

Mrs. Reed was a lover of God's truth, having received a good hope through grace many years ago, although she never united with the church. The Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES were her constant companions. As the end of her pilgrimage drew near she was asked how she felt. Her reply was,

"Jesus all the day long
Is my joy and my song."

Funeral services were held at her late residence on the 28th, and were conducted by the writer; after which her mortal remains were deposited in "The Plains" cemetery near those of her kindred who had preceded her to the tomb.

BENTON JENKINS.

Aaron Winans was born in Albany Co., N. Y., June 24th, 1799, and died Feb. 20th, 1896, being in his 97th year.

When a young man he united with the Old School Baptists, and lived a firm believer in that faith until the time of his death. He was the son of John Winans, who was one of the earliest preachers in that part of the country. Father Winans' early life was passed doing severe labor, with privations and hardships such as the early settlers upon the Van Rensselaer Patent were of necessity exposed to. The country was then a wilderness, the soil filled with stones and rocks; yet here he began farming, and by painstaking learned the trade of laying stone walls, which were so skillfully constructed that many farms at this day have stone fences still standing in good condition that father Winans built more than sixty years ago. He sold his farm and made several removals in the course of his long life, each time somewhat bettering his condition. He lived, forty years ago, five miles south of Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y., until about twenty-six years ago he removed to Richland Centre, Wisconsin, where he lived at the time of his death. He was always a good neighbor, and as a consequence always had good neighbors. Warm friends were always glad to hear from him, or to send friendly greetings to him. He had a wonderful memory of the events from the first years of this century, and many stories and anecdotes of the past had a lodging-place in his memory. The only religious paper that he ever felt interested in was the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and that he read with interest next to his Bible. When during the last few years he could no longer see to read his favorite paper, he arranged his affairs, and said he was "just waiting to go home"—meaning his eternal home. At last he has fallen asleep, having lived to this extreme old age. His last days were passed with his oldest daughter, Mrs. Emily Hyndman. Another daughter, Mrs. Kate Gunsul, lives in Pontiac, Ill. The oldest son, Orlando Winans, lives in Owego, N. Y., and the youngest son is John C. Winans, of Rockford, Ill. At a family gathering two years ago four generations met, all gathered to greet father Winans. Now he has gone to the better land, and left a precious memory, which his descendants love to honor.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Jan. 8, 1896.

TO A. C. MCALPINE—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I have not replied to your last because of the unsettled state of my mind. For the past four years you have all been very much in my thoughts, and it has often been in my mind to come and visit you. I know from experience that the people of God are one people, find them where you may. While I lived in New York I felt the people dear to me; and I can assure you that the subjects of God's grace among whom my lot is cast in this state are dear to my heart. I am glad to learn of the spiritual intercourse that you have with your cousin. It remains as a pleasing remembrance, the times that I had conversations with her about the things of our Savior Jesus Christ, and of our exercises of soul in regard to our hope in his salvation. I have sent her my photograph in your care, which you will give her, and tell her that I have affectionate remembrance of her in the Lord, and wish she would write to me, that I may know how she is faring in spiritual things, and I shall very gladly write to her in return.

Do you know that we have not any photographs of the members of "Beulah"? Now in my mind's eye I have a sort of an outline of how you all look, but I should like to have your likenesses. But let me turn to the picture of other things. Spiritual pictures are the more pleasing and comforting. Sometimes the Holy Spirit holds before my sight pictures of divine things, and as I feast the eyes of my faith upon them my mind is absorbed, my heart is all aglow, and there are moments when my eyes glisten with tears of sacred blessedness. A few days ago I had considerable pleasure in contemplating Luke xxii. 61, 62, "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly." This is one of those pictures that faith can look upon, and ever be finding new and touching beauties. If you will with me take a glance at scenes preceding this, we may be able to see better the excellencies of the grace of God so strikingly exhibited. Look at the multitude coming with swords and staves to apprehend Jesus in the garden of Gethsemane. Who is he that springs to the front, and with his sword cuts off the ear of Malchus, the servant of the high priest? It is Peter—John xviii. 10. Bold as a lion, he felt he could slay the whole multitude that should dare lay a finger upon the Christ of God. Look again. There sits a man warming himself by the fire. A certain maid peers into his face, and says, "This man was also with him; and he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not." Another recognizes him, and confidently affirmed, saying, "Of a truth this fellow was with him; for he is a Galilean." Again he denies. See, there comes in that man whose ear Peter cut off, and saith to him, "Did not I see thee in the garden with him?" Perhaps the ear of Malchus tingled somewhat. Perhaps he wanted to pick a quarrel with that man that sits warming himself by the fire. Ah, that man is not shivering with cold now; he is heated in every way that is evil, and now with cursing and swearing says, "I know not the man." Who is this fellow cursing and swearing, and denying Jesus? It is Peter. What, the very Peter that cut the man's ear off in the garden? Hark! there is the sound of the cock crowing! "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter; and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly." A few moments ago we beheld a man lying and cursing and swearing, and now in floods of tears he weeps as though his heart were breaking. Let us take a few glimpses at our picture. "The Lord turned and looked upon Peter." Amidst all his humiliation the Son of God is mindful of that sinner who is lying and cursing and swearing and denying him. In our carnal thoughts we would say, The Son of God will have nothing more to do with such a man; he will utterly turn from him; and never more will that worthless wretch get the least glimpse of regard from the injured, meek and lowly Lamb of God. The Lord saith, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." The Savior of sinners knows all that is passing around that fire, and he knows Peter better than Peter knows himself. Had he not told him a few hours before this scene, "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren?" "The Lord turned and looked upon Peter." David tells us, "He inclined unto me, and heard my cry." Ah, when the moment comes that the Lord turns unto us, then we are turned unto him. He visits us with the almighty and transforming power of his grace, and our hearts are turned and flow unto him as rivers of water. Look at this astonishing language of Jehovah towards backsliding Ephraim, "Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him: I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord."—Jer. xxxi. 20. How often has my sinful heart turned from the Lord.

"Prone to wander, Lord, I feel it, Prone to leave the God I love."

We read, "They have turned their back unto me, and not their face."—Jer. ii. 27. Does the Lord then turn his back upon us and cast us off forever? O no! The new covenant relationship subsists between Christ and the church, between Christ and Peter. Once, twice, thrice, thou hast denied Jesus, O Peter! This is the foretold, the decreed limit. Enough; no farther shalt thou go; thine iniquity shall be checked; the flood of thy sinfulness restrained. Thou hast been in Satan's sieve long enough. All thy bravery in the garden has vanished. At the voice of a maiden thy courage has left thee. Thou art a poor, weak, sinful man. Thou hast a heart deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and thou shalt know it. "The Lord turned, and looked upon Peter." Not a word he spoke, but O what language is in that look! What was in that look? Can you, dear brother, tell? I have tried. I have longed to read all the language that was in that look. But there is no end to it; volumes of speech could not tell it all. Can you tell how Peter looked? Can you describe the emotions that agitated the breast of Peter the moment their eyes met? The loving, compassionate, grieved, forgiving eyes of the Lord, the man of sorrows, and the eyes of that poor wretch, poor, weak, backsliding Peter. It passeth telling! Indescribable! What was in that look of the Lord? Was it a look of loathing, of anger, of vengeance, to drive the poor sinner from his presence into the blackness of despair forever? Did it say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire?" Long time ago at the Red Sea, "In the morning watch the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians." It was another look than this; it was a piercing look; it searched Peter through and through; his heart was naked before the gaze of the Holy One. All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."—Heb. iv. 13; Prov. xv. 11.

"One glance of thine, eternal God,
Pierces all nature through;
Nor heaven nor earth nor hell afford
A shelter from thy view."

That piercing look of Jesus penetrated down into the lowest hell where Satan had Peter in his sieve. It pierced through all opposition, all the malice of Satan, all the dense sinfulness of Peter. Hell could not hide him; sin could not shut out that look; what could obstruct that look of the Redeemer? O, my dear brother, I have been in some low down, dark places, and in my infirmity I have said, "I am cast out of thy sight." I have feared the Lord would never look upon me again. But better than all my fears the Lord has been to me. Once Jerusalem was in a low and perishing state. None eye pitied thee, O Jerusalem. But when God appeared he looked upon her in his love and pity, and redeemed her. In the record the Lord says, "When I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, live. I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare. Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness; yea, I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine."—Ezek. xvi. 6-8.

That look of Jesus was the look of tenderness, of eternal, unquenchable love, so powerful, subduing, conquering and heart-melting. One look of thine, dear Savior, can heal in a moment our backslidings; one glance of thine can curb and quell our headstrong, vile passions. Our murmurings are hushed, our hearts are brought low and melted before our God.

"Thy mercy is more than a match for my heart,
Which wonders to feel its own hardness depart;
Dissolved by thy goodness, I fall to the ground,
And weep to the praise of the mercy I've found."

That look of eternal love from Jesus said, "I love thee still." It was a look of such surpassing compassion, of such tender pity, it revived such memories that Peter might exclaim in the language of the heavenly Solomon, "Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me." Jesus' eyes were as a flame of fire.—Rev. i. 14. With flames of unutterable love he looked upon Peter. John Newton tells us a sacred story, saying,

"In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame or fear,
Till a new object struck my sight,
And stopped my mad career.

I saw one hanging on a tree,
In agonies, in blood;
He fixed his languid eyes on me,
As near the cross I stood.

Sure never till my latest breath
Can I forget that look;
He seemed to charge me with his death,
Though not a word he spoke.

A second look he gave, and said,
I freely all forgive;
This blood is for thy ransom paid;
I die that thou mayest live."

Let us look at our picture again. "And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out and wept bitterly." Peter now thinks upon what Jesus had told him that very night. When it was told him he could not believe it possible that he should act so base a part. Then he was all on fire with love and loyalty to the Christ, and willing to devote himself even unto death in behalf of his Lord and Master. "He spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all." He meant every word he said, but his own frailties he did not fully know. I have in times past thought I never would or could do such things, but in some measure I have learned that I am so vile and so weak I know that unless kept by omnipotent grace there is no wickedness under the sun but I might fall into. As the depravity of my heart has been discovered to me, how I have trembled; and in my fears, and out of the anguish of my heart, I have cried unto the Lord to have mercy upon me. Lead me not into temptation, but deliver me from evil. Jabez cried unto the Lord, "O that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me."—1 Chron. iv. 10. "Peter remembered the word of the Lord." Jonah says, "When my soul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord;" and in the Psalms it is written, "I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed." "Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old." O! that look of the Savior has stirred up such remembrances. Beneath that look his hard heart is dissolved and broken. Peter went out; that look was more than he could bear. Could he forget that look? Away from the fire outside the palace of the high priest, out in the darkness of the chilly night, behold a man with streaming eyes, sobbing forth his bitter grief. O! sin is a bitter thing to those who are born again. "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it."—Jer. xxx. 7. We might for a long while look upon the sight of weeping Peter. He wept over his base conduct; he grieved over his sins; he was in bitterness over the dear suffering Savior. O how he mourned! Do we not love him? Can we not take to our bosom this heart-stricken, contrite, weeping man? O yes!

Well, dear brother, I must close my letter. These are only glimpses that we have had of Luke xxii. 61, 62. You may look, and look, and look again; and the more you look and ponder, the more your heart will wonder over the most surprising grace that shines forth in Jesus' face.

I am yours affectionately in Christ Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

CAMPBELLSBURG, Ky., Jan. 9, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—With the author's consent I inclose the within letter for your judgment and disposal.

C. FOREE.

MRS. CORDELIA FOREE—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your very interesting and highly appreciated letter come to hand several days since, bearing date Nov. 25th, 1895. The important contents of your ably written letter certainly demanded a reply much sooner; but I have been so very busy is one reason of my delay, and another reason is, I have felt, and do now, such weakness and unworthiness to write to you, my sister, whom I deem so much more spiritual minded than myself; yet such views as I have I cannot conscientiously withhold from you. I am sure you can bear with my weakness, knowing me as you do.

The text you have suggested to me to say something about is one that I do not feel to have much light upon, but I will, however, give such ideas as I have upon the text, and they shall be subject to your criticism and correction. The text is recorded in the prophecy of Jeremiah, seventh chapter and eighteenth verse, and reads as follows: "The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings to other gods, that they may provoke me to anger." The text under consideration has direct reference to the Jews or national Israel in their idolatrous worship. By reading the history of this people Israel as given of them in the Bible, we are at no loss whatever to understand that they were a stubborn, stiff-necked and rebellious people, from the time they were delivered out of Egyptian bondage, till they entered into the land of Canaan; and not only till then, but throughout their generations they continued to be disobedient, stubborn, gainsaying and wayward; and doubtless, to my mind, they were typical people, and all their rebellion, disobedience and idolatrous worship were typical too. They themselves were a type of spiritual Israel in the gospel day, and all their idolatry, stubbornness and disobedience were typical of Israel's disobedience now. This text shows plainly that their worship was an idolatrous worship, and a very complicated worship at that, made of different ingredients, and all engaged in the great work. Men, women and children, all can and must do something. The good work must go on. The cry of the modern Arminians of to-day is, The great maneuverings must go on. The fathers, mothers and children must engage in the good work. The children can bring their penny for the penny-box, and the women can knead dough and bake cakes for the religious picknicks, suppers and festivals; and the fathers, when assembled, and all is ready, will kindle a fire, or get up a great excitement, even causing fire (excitement) to come down from heaven in the sight of men. Deluded men! Another text says, they are "a people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick; which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments; which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels."—Isa. lxv. 3, 4. The phrase, "broth of abominable things is in their vessels," contains a very important lesson; it is very significant. Broth is very thin, and is a liquor in which flesh is boiled; and this broth was made of abominable things. Things mean more than one. It was a complicated mess sure enough; and these different ingredients of which it was made were abominable, hateful and unclean. These literal vessels here, which they had filled with broth of abominable things, represent to my mind Arminian preachers, who are full of spurious doctrine, made up of so many unclean ingredients, which they cast out like a flood, foam out their own shame, their own righteousness and ability. No wonder they call the truth of God hard doctrine. They are so tender-mouthed they must be fed on broth, and it must be of different ingredients before their stomachs can digest it. Again, "But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt."—Isa. lvii. 20. Now we know a sea is a large body of water, and I think it is used here to represent a large body of religious people who are wicked and idolatrous in their manner of worship; and their waters or waves represent their ministers, who cast up or eulogize mire and dirt; that is, they preach sullied doctrine, the mirky, miry, filthy efforts and merits of the creature. They do not cast up and exalt Jesus, but they cast up and exalt the creature, "mire and dirt." In a literal sense this teaches us how the Jews or ancient Israel worshiped idols, even fathers, mothers and children. In the prophecy of Isaiah, v. 24, as the result of Israel's idolatry, injustice, impiety, &c., it is said, "Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust; because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the holy One of Israel." That is, they shall be utterly destroyed, both root and branch, or both parents and children, old and young. As these fathers, mothers and children were literal, and all engaged in the literal idolatry in the temple worship, they represent fathers, mothers and children professionally, including all the leaders and those who are taught by and lead of them.

The Jews and national Israel called the sun, moon and stars the queen of heaven. This you will see by referring to Jer. xlv. 17, 25, and by the whole chapter. Also, the antichrist church is called the queen.—Rev. xviii. 7. The Lord told the prophet to not pray for this idolatrous people who were worshipping the queen of heaven, and said, "neither lift cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me; for I will not hear." "Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem?"—Verses 16, 17. Then comes in the text, "The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the woman knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven," &c. "Therefore, thus saith the Lord God, Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place," &c. "Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them;" that is, to escape these literal judgments, sore afflictions and righteous retributions; "for I will not hear thee." "But I will pour my fury upon them, for they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the work of his hands." "Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst."—Isa. v. 13. Sore distresses, dire afflictions, death and destruction, in some way or other, is the inevitable result of idolatry. Read 2 Kings xxiii., especially the fifth verse. "And he [the king] put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the host of heaven." The same principle of idolatrous worship is now going on among the religious world, and we are told to let them alone. They be blind leaders; and if the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch—the ditch of error and idolatry. The apostle Peter says, "But there were false prophets among the people [Israel], even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."—2 Peter ii. 1, 2. So when we see religious people speaking evil of the way of truth, and even of the truth itself, it is prima-facie evidence that they are following the pernicious ways of these false teachers, and destruction is the inevitable result, even "swift destruction."

May the Lord enable us all to heed the solemn injunction, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." "Touch not, taste, not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using;" that is, the doctrines and commandments of men. All, all, are to perish with the using; not perish by-and-by, and after awhile, but "perish with the using." "Swift destruction." All of God's little ones who are using the doctrines, commandments and ordinances of men, are in a perishing state while using them. Wherefore come out from among them, little children, and keep yourselves from idols; keep yourselves from perishing, from being withered branches; "and men gather them and cast them into the fire," (confusion).

Dear sister, I have hurriedly written these few lines. I hope you will cast the mantle of charity over my manifest weakness.

W. J. MAY.

HORACE, Texas, Jan. 21, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have been a reader of the SIGNS, and a greater portion of the time a subscriber, for the last eighteen years, and occasionally I feel like bearing testimony to the satisfaction derived from it. Often has it come to me in those eighteen years when I was in a disconsolate state of mind (sometimes assailed by foes within, and sometimes when troubled at the thought of Zion's afflictions), with words of comfort and encouragement, often finding the eternal principles of truth set forth, so that it seemed no one could find cause to oppose. Still opposition has been on the increase, or has developed to a greater extent, especially in the ranks of professed Primitive Baptists.

I was especially encouraged by the reading of the Virginia Corresponding Meeting's letter which appeared in the SIGNS some time ago. The views set forth in that letter, especially on the spiritual birth, can never be upset by Scripture testimony; also the editorial of Elder Chick on the same subject, and on divine sovereignty. These are things, brethren, for which a few of us in this part of the country feel that we have suffered and are still suffering. I have thought that we did not know how dear principles were to us until we suffered persecution on their account.

Elder Curry's article on Adam able to stand and liable to fall was both good and timely. I am glad that he wrote it, and wrote just as he did. May the Lord sanctify it to the good of some whose minds may be confused by reason of Arminian teaching to the contrary.

Many others I might speak of who have written very comfortingly and instructively of late. In fact I think all the letters appearing in the SIGNS are too good to throw away. How could we do without the good old SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

I see of late a platform of principles laid down, upon which it is proposed by the writer that factions of Primitive Baptists which differ upon certain principles come together. While there is much truth expressed in different items of this platform, it seems to my mind there are some things too indefinite. The sixth item contains this language, "We believe that the regenerating work of the Spirit of God is in the soul, or spirit, or heart, or mind, of man, and changes the prevailing feelings, tastes, dispositions and habits of the soul," &c. It is not my purpose to enter into a lengthy criticism of this statement; but I have been thinking, If I could say positively, or say that I believed the regenerating work of the Spirit is in the soul, or spirit, or heart, or mind, of man, I could say which one of those parts was the subject of regeneration; and if I should say that this work was in the soul, and another should say it was in the spirit, and another should say it was in the mind, we all would differ about as much as we would from the man who denied that the benefits of the atonement are special to any one of these component parts of man, but who believes that the sinner (all of him) is the subject of saving grace.

Again, it seems to my mind that if I should conclude it was heresy for me to deny that the spirit of man is born of the Spirit of God, he, believing that the soul of man was the subject of the spiritual birth, would have the same right to denounce me as a heretic for denying that the soul is born of God.

If any brother can point me to a Scripture which teaches that the soul or the spirit of man is born of God, separate and distinct from the balance of the man, he will show me something that I have not yet discovered, or that has not yet been revealed to me; and surely I will have no right to blame that brother, but will have cause to be thankful.

Now, mind you, I have not denied that the soul is born of God; but if you will search your Bibles closely you will find that the term soul is in several places put for the sinner, man, woman or child, as in Gen. ii. 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Again, Gen. xlv. 27, "All the souls of the house of Jacob which came into Egypt were three score and ten." Many other places might be cited to show that the child of the earthly Adam (in his entirety) is the soul. Saying this, I wish it distinctly understood, is not saying that in the Scriptures man is not referred to as being composed of soul, spirit and body; for I think all will admit that the Scriptures sometimes speak of the soul and spirit and body as separate or different parts; but nowhere do the Scriptures teach, to my mind, that the soul or spirit or heart or mind of man are (separately) the subject of the "regenerating work of the Spirit of God." Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." That is to say, If a man is born again he can see the kingdom of God. Now, since Jesus does not say, nor does any inspired writer say, Except a man's soul or spirit or heart or mind be born of God he cannot see the kingdom of God, why should it be set up by any professed follower of Jesus as a test of church fellowship, in any abstract of principles? I venture the suggestion that any man or body of men who do so, do so without any Scripture authority, either in precept or example.

I have seen and heard some things in the way of doctrine since I have been among the Primitive Baptists that I could not indorse, and some that proved a source of contention and division; but it occurs to my mind that nothing has caused so much trouble as the dictatorial, inquisitorial spirit manifest in some places. Would we not all do well to learn to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ? "Go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy; and not sacrifice." When God's people are led by the true spirit of charity it is not hard for them to come together. When one is reduced to his proper size in his own estimation, then his brother is proportionately raised. When one is prompted by ambitious motives, in other words, as long as flesh is uppermost, he is not likely to agree, as long as he has in any way to sacrifice self.

Dear brethren, this imperfect scribble has been written in haste, but I submit it to you; do with it as you think best. With love to all the household of faith, I am your unworthy brother, I trust, in hope of a better world,

H. B. JONES.

RUSHMORE, Ohio, Feb. 28, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I had thought that I would never trouble you with my scribbling again. It is useless for me to attempt a description of my sensible weakness and unworthiness. If this is likely to crowd out better matter, burn it up. As brother E. D. Varnes says, having noticed your appeal headed "How can we know?" I began to feel a desire to address a few lines to the brethren whom this may concern. I heartily indorse brother Varnes' sentiments.

Dear brethren, I have been a constant reader of the SIGNS for many years. I think I would not do without it for twice its cost. I am aware that all the brethren are not situated as I am (not boasting of what little I have); but it does seem to me that I would have to be very short of this world's goods if I could not contrive some way to pay for the SIGNS. If I could not, I would order it stopped.

Not having read the "Editorials" for a long time, I thought I would read them through this winter, and I read both volumes. I do think that in all probability there could not have been another man found in the United States that would have undertaken such a task at the time that the late Elder G. Beebe did; and the ability with which he defended the everlasting truth against such wonderful opposition is remarkable. It could not be but the Lord was his strength and his shield. I am glad, dear editors, that you are now republishing his late editorials through the SIGNS. Some say that the SIGNS has departed from the old landmarks. I confess that I am too blind to see it.

It is said, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. i. 21. Is there any place in the Scriptures that the new man, spoken of by the apostle Paul, is called his (Christ's) people, the people of God, the saints of God, the children of God, church of God, &c.? I understand that every manifested heir of eternal happiness has the new man within him; being born again, born from above, born of God, born of an incorruptible seed, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. Previous to the time of God sending forth the Spirit of his Son into the heart of his people there is no warfare; they are at ease; they are at peace; they are not troubled as other men; they feel that they can turn and come to God whenever they please. They have been told that they were sinners, and

"A PRAYER OF MOSES THE MAN OF GOD."

THIS is the heading of the ninetyeth Psalm. It is in our mind to present a few reflections concerning the opening verses of this Psalm. "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." Many things in this Psalm have for a long time seemed very rich and precious to us, but none more so than the things contained in these first two verses. Moses in the whole Psalm sets forth the power and eternity of Jehovah, and his constant and abiding care over his Israel, whom he had chosen. But while Moses wrote, as he was moved to do, concerning Israel that then was, and concerning God's wonderful care over them in all their generations (or "in generation and generation," as the margin reads), there is, we believe, a prophetic looking forward in his words to the care that God should have over his spiritual people, who should be called out from the Egypt of this world to be followers of Christ, and to dwell in the secret place of the Most High, and to abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

We are not told at what particular time in his life Moses wrote this Psalm. Some things said in it sound as though it might have been written near the close of his life, when he was given to recount in his mind the past, with all its changes and vicissitudes, and to remember how the Lord had sheltered Israel, and led them safely along in their pilgrimage. There is a recounting of past mercies in this Psalm, coupled with a view of human weakness and vanity, and with a view also of the power and majesty and grandeur of that God in whose shadow they had found such a safe dwelling-place in all their generations. How sublime is the thought expressed in the words, "A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night." Who can comprehend such a thought? What mortal mind can comprehend that mind where time has no place, to which there are no days nor years, and no succession of moments or events? What a conception was that which was given to the prophet when he spoke of Jehovah as inhabiting eternity! Surely this must be revelation from God; for how could an inhabitant of time arise to such a view as that of a God who inhabits eternity? This thought in this Psalm is set over against the words, "The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away." How brief this mortal state! How everlasting is God! How good that we poor worms have such a safe abiding place!

But to return to the opening verses. Moses wrote of the things which he knew. By inspiration he had been given to see and write the perfect record of the dealings of God with the chosen people, over which he had been made a leader. In the vision accorded him he saw Israel from the days of Abraham, safely kept and guarded and preserved from harm. He saw them in the midst of their own rebellion and idolatry, and in the midst of the assaults of open enemies, yet kept safe and unharmed; and as he contemplated these things, and wondered why Israel had not been swallowed up quick, the answer was given to his understanding that God had been their place of defense, their refuge and dwelling-place. The word burned within him, and straightway he longs to speak; and the testimony is true, "Lord, thou hast been our refuge, our dwelling or abiding place, in all our generations."

The word "generations" fixes and limits the meaning of the "man of God" here. The word is a common one in the Scriptures, and it always has a definite meaning. It signifies generally, "People of one age or time." Hence we read of people of the third or fourth or tenth generation. If the fathers be counted the first generation, then the children are the second generation, and the grandchildren are the third. So one generation passes away, and another takes its place; and we read in the Scriptures of "generations," "a thousand generations," "the generation to come," "this generation," and similar expressions. The word relates always to time and this present life. When it is used, as it sometimes is, to designate "them that fear God," or who are "the children of God," it presents them in their experience while here in this world. In the New Testament the word is once used (1 Peter ii. 9) in the sense of a race of people: "Ye are a chosen generation" (race). Once (Matthew i. 1) it is used in the sense of birth, origin: "The book of the generation [birth, origin] of Jesus Christ." Of course this relates to the man Christ, and, as what follows shows, presents his earthly origin or ancestry. But most generally it signifies (and always when used in the plural) the people of one or more ages or times.

The word relates to time and things in time, and never to eternity.

There can be no generations in eternity. Generations imply a succession—a passing away of one and the coming in of another. In eternity there can be no passing away and no ushering in. Such things belong to time. Change belongs to time, but not to eternity. The fact that the word "generations" is used in the text fixes the application of this text, therefore, to the people of God here and now. There can be no such thing as eternal generations. The very meaning of the word forbids the idea of eternity being connected with it, for the reason, as stated above, that the plural form of the word implies the succession of one after another; and there can be no succession of things in eternity. Whatsoever inhabits eternity must itself be eternal; and Jehovah only is eternal. As the plural form of the word implies a succession of one after another, so also the singular form of it implies a beginning; and that which inhabits eternity has no beginning. "Eternal generation" would be a contradiction of terms.

And so, as said before, Moses here declares that from the beginning of the history of Israel as a nation they had always had a safe abiding-place. As the Lord had dealt with the fathers, so had he also dealt with the children, and with each successive generation. He had been faithful to every promise, and had been to them what he had not been to any other people. At times they had seemed, to all human appearance, to be ready to perish; but yet they had not perished. Many times they had sinned, and had forgotten and departed from the right way; but yet their God had not forsaken them. What wondrous forbearance and mercy had God shown toward them! What wonder and praise and gratitude and love must have filled the heart of Moses as he penned these words! How in thought he must have contrasted the power and pity and faithfulness of God with their wretched weakness and rebellion and unfaithfulness! Moses farther down in the Psalm talks about the iniquities and secret sins of the people; and he declares that they were all known to God. He also declares that experience of the anger of God against sin, by which we are consumed and troubled. He sets forth the power of the anger of God against sin, and declares that its measure is to be found only in the fear which he puts into the hearts of his people; and yet he is our dwelling-place all the time. Yea, it is because he is our dwelling-place that we come to experience his fear and his wrath. As we dwell in him, and because we dwell in him, he is to us a consuming fire. This experience of his fear and anger, this setting of our secret sins in the light of his holy countenance, wherein they are made to appear exceeding sinful, is all the result of abiding in him; and by these experiences the soul comes to realize this abiding. These experiences are the evidences of this dwelling in God; therefore Jeremiah could say, "I remember the wormwood and the gall; my soul hath them still in remembrance; therefore have I hope." The things most full of comfort and joy and hope to the believer now, are his former experiences of the wrath of God against sin; and as the believer journeys on it comes to pass at last that he prizes his present experiences of these things as being the most precious of all. There comes into the heart a great fear at times lest sin should cease to be the terrible thing to him that he has sometimes felt it to be. "O that I might see my sins, and realize thine anger against sin, and thy power to consume sin more and more," is the cry of his heart; and so he prays with the psalmist again, "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." This is the experience of the everlasting way. These are the evidences that the Lord is our dwelling-place—that we are abiding under the shadow of the Almighty.

What Moses here testified concerning Israel had a signification deeper than the care and mercy which God had extended to them providentially and nationally. This was all very true, considered in the merely temporal sense of the word; and we doubt not that this meaning was included primarily in these words. But Moses was not only a literal Israelite: he was also a spiritual man; and so he knew of a sense in which God had been his dwelling-place, and the dwelling-place of all who were spiritual, which was beyond and above his temporal care of the people. When we come to speak of the true Israelite, God is and has been not only his dwelling-place in a providential sense, but also in the sense of real intimate soul-communion. If Moses could say, "Israel has not been consumed, because God has always cared for them and sheltered them," much more can the believer say, "I still live, and my faith, hope and love still abound, because I have obtained help of God." In a sense beyond all power of language to express the believer feels and knows that in God he lives, moves, and has his being. Truly in all ages God has been the dwelling-place of all who from generation to generation have been brought to know and love him. How true to each one's personal experience is the language, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Since such an experience as this is given to the humble child, he is at times able to say, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; for thou art with me." In harmony with all this, in Ezekiel xi. 16 God says, "Yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." Only the words of God can express all that this communion with God means. Who that believes is not ready to say at times, with Paul, "I have heard and seen unspeakable things?"

Now, in the second verse of this Psalm Moses speaks in high exalted strains of the unchangeability and eternity of this God, who is the dwelling-place of his people. Moses upon another occasion said to Israel, "The eternal God is thy refuge." Malachi, the last of the prophets, afterward declared that because God is unchangeable, therefore Israel is not consumed. The eternity and immutability of Jehovah is in the Scriptures presented as the ground of the security of his redeemed people. Because he changes not, they are not consumed. Because he is eternal, he is ever the same. Even the stubbornness and rebellion of his people, the ingratitude, the fickle-mindedness of their hearts, with the constant changes that are seen in them, do not change him. Because the eternal God changes not, he loves his people still. Even their waywardness cannot turn away his love. Nothing whatever, as Paul testifies, shall separate them from his love, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

It seems to us that the thought of Moses, expressed in the second verse of this Psalm, is that as Jehovah had been Abraham's God, so had he continued to be their God in all generations since Abraham. What he was to Abraham, just that was he to Isaac and Jacob and Joseph; and just that had he continued to be in every generation afterward. Abraham's God was the God of Moses. As he had revealed his goodness, his power and glory to the one, so was he revealed to the other. The testimony of Abraham would be the testimony of Moses. He was still God. Each intervening generation had found him the same; and just as he had revealed himself in the past daily travel of Israel, that had he been before the mountains were brought forth, or ever he had formed the earth and the world.

The word "art" in the last clause, "Thou art God," is supplied by the translators; yet if left out the same meaning is expressed, only the more emphatically. We are informed that the idiom of the Hebrew language requires that in the translation into English the verb "art" shall be supplied. Any one acquainted with the Hebrew tongue, as we are with the English language, would in reading this verse in Hebrew at once understand it as we do with the word "art" supplied; so that the translators have not done violence to the meaning. Not being acquainted with the Hebrew tongue, we do not know this for ourself, but do not doubt its correctness. At all events the general meaning is clear, that God is eternal and always the same, and that this God is the dwelling-place of his chosen and redeemed people in all their pilgrimage.

Out of this grows up the glorious truth of the perfect and final safety of the people of God; and since here is the safety and confidence of believers, how can any child of God be indifferent to these truths? During the past few years it has seemed to us most important to know the character and attributes of him whom we serve. What is worship but ascribing to God that which is true of him? How can we worship God if we do not know him? Moses here worshiped God in ascribing to him eternity and unchangeability. We worship God when we ascribe to him power, honor and glory, and say, "Salvation is of the Lord." O how important that we do not fail to worship him in this way! What a terrible thing it is to limit the Holy One of Israel in any way! The being to whom we can set metes and bounds is not God. Unlimited power, knowledge, purpose, sovereignty, omniscience and omnipresence are his. Let us not limit him in any of these things. In all these things is our help. Because they are true, our dwelling-place is safe. Here believers have rested in all generations. Here may we rest.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

1 TIMOTHY II. 3, 4.

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth."

A sister has desired us to give our views on this passage of Scripture, and we have also on hand many other applications for our views on numerous other portions of the divine record. If the expression of our views on what God has communicated in the Bible can be of any use in enlightning, comforting, admonishing or instructing any of the Lord's little ones, it will give us great pleasure to serve them to the utmost of our limited ability; but we must beg the indulgence of our brethren, sisters and friends who have asked our views on other passages, with whose requests we have not yet been able to comply. Some applications have been deferred from a consciousness of our want of light on the subjects proposed, and others for want of time and space; but to the subject now in hand.

The declaration of our text is in form of a reason for the exhortation which precedes it, which is, that "first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks be made for all men;" and lest any should misunderstand the sense in which he used the terms "all men," both in the exhortation and in our text, he defines his meaning to be "for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior," &c. In praying for kings and for all that were in authority at that day, the christian church was called to abandon the long cherished opinion that the Jews exclusively were the people of the living God; for at the time Paul wrote this, the Jews had no king of their own tribes; the sceptre had departed from Judah, and the lawgiver from between his feet, and Shilch had come, had lived in the flesh, died on the cross, risen from the dead, ascended into heaven, and the nation of the Jews were at the time ruled by Gentile governors under Cesar, the Roman Emperor. According to the tradition under which they had been brought up, they would have thought it wrong to pray for any king then holding power; but this restraint is removed by the apostolic declaration that prayers, &c., for them were good and acceptable in the sight of God, though it may have been quite the reverse in the sight of men. The object in praying for Gentile kings and others in authority, to be kept in view, was that God, who is above all human governments, might so overrule their administrations as to secure quietude and peace to his children, both Jews and Gentiles, who lived under the secular dominion of the kings and other dignitaries for whom they were to pray. This is good, otherise God by his apostle would not have directed it, and acceptable in the sight of God, because it was according to his word. The connection of the words, "In the sight of God our Savior," go to establish three very important points of the christian doctrine, viz

1. That it is the work of God to save sinners.
2. That God is emphatically their (the church's) Savior.
3. That Jesus Christ the Savior is truly, essentially and eternally God, as well as man and mediator; and his children being accountable to him for their conduct, have occasion only to know that what Paul exhorted them to do was acceptable in his sight. This was all the guarantee they needed. But to be still more clear upon this point, the apostle adds, "Who will have all men, [Gentiles under the government of Gentile kings, as well as a remnant of Israel according to the election of grace] to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." As confirmation of the position that all men, or all sorts of men, Gentiles as well as Jews, were ordained to salvation, he says, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time; whereunto I am ordained a preacher and an apostle (I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not), a teacher of the Gentiles, in faith and verity." Now, if God had not ordained the salvation of any of the Gentiles, why was Paul ordained an apostle and teacher of them in faith and verity? The whole tenor of this chapter goes to show the sense in which Paul used the words "all men." Not all the children of Adam; for many of them were at that time suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; but all that should be testified in due time, by the Spirit's work in quickening and regenerating them, washing and sanctifying them with the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, according to the declaration made on the day of Pentecost, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and unto all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts ii. 39.

We are aware of the cavils of wicked men upon this text, who construe the words to mean that it is the will of God to save as many of the human family as he can, or even all of them, if they will allow him to do so; that his will is ineffectual with the majority, and they are damned because they will not allow the Lord to save them; and those who escape eternal wrath are not saved because God willed that they should be, but because they consented, or because they willed to be saved. But how silly the quibble. If God willed the salvation of every son and daughter of Adam, and a large portion of them were able to resist and prevent the accomplishment of his will, what is to become of them? If the immutable God should change his purpose and conclude to damn them, is it certain that they would allow him to do so? If he is unable to accomplish his will to save them, will it be easier for him to do what is in opposition to his will, in sending them to hell? Shocking absurdity! They who contend for the doctrine know not God; they cannot be savingly acquainted with him, or they would know that he doeth his pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and he will have compassion on whom he will have compassion, and whom he will he hardeneth. Christ has all power in heaven and on earth, power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him. And all that the Father giveth him shall come unto him, and shall in no wise be cast out. But no man can come unto him except the Father which sent him draw him, and he will raise him up at the last day; for this is the will of the Father, that of all he hath given to Christ he shall lose nothing, but that he shall raise them up at the last day.

CORRESPONDENCE.

they thought they believed it; but all at once, without any forethought or premeditation, the poor soul finds that he is a justly condemned sinner before a just and holy God. He begins to inquire now, What shall I do? My sins have gone over my head, and are too heavy for me to bear. He goes to work now to try to justify himself by the deeds of the law; but the more he strives, the deeper he sinks under the awful weight of guilt and sin that is resting upon him. Now the poor soul begins to cry, "Lord, save, I perish." All hope seems to vanish. But all at once a voice is heard, saying, "Peace; be still;" and God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shines in the heart, and gives the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Now the poor soul is enabled to sing the new song,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me.
I once was lost, but now am found;
Was blind, but now I see."

He feels now that all his trials and troubles are gone, and that he will never sin any more; but before he is aware of it he finds that this old body is as full of sin and corruption as it ever was. The warfare begins. He finds the flesh lusting against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh.—Gal. v. 17. He begins to doubt his hope, and feels that he has been deceived. He has not yet learned that these are the feelings of all the children of grace. He goes mourning day and night, and crying for mercy. Eventually Jesus presents himself to the poor sinner as the Savior of sinners, and hope springs up. Surely I am a sinner; and if saved I am saved by grace, and grace alone.

Dear brethren, I have extended this entirely too long, and the easiest way to dispose of it will be to burn it. May the grace of God rest with you and all the household of God, is the sincere prayer of your unworthy brother, if one at all.

J. G. FORD.

HOLLAND, Texas, Feb. 1, 1896.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—As I must shortly join the great silent majority that have gone to the tomb, I somehow want to offer a few thoughts for the readers of the SIGNS, or rather make a kind of confession. About the age of twenty-three years I entered the Confederate service, and was in General Lee's army. Just after the seven days' fight in the city of Richmond was where and when I received my little hope, if I have any. When the war was over I was set apart as one of the deacons by the church at Holly Springs, Newton Co., Ga. Elder J. L. Purington was our pastor. I was then in the vigor of manhood, and had a much better opinion of myself than I now have. I had a considerable amount of Arminianism in my vile nature that had to be burned out, and the process by which it was done well nigh drove me to despair. I wanted to be a model christian, but somehow when I resolved to do better I did worse. "We are the circumcision which worship God in the Spirit, and have no confidence in the flesh." As yet I had confidence in the flesh, and vainly thought I could be so circum-spect in my walk and conversation that I would lead a quiet, peaceful life, and so argued with some of the members. In order to help me along I got two books; one was "Saints' Rest;" the other was Abbott's "Young Christian." I read them, and tried to follow their teaching; but right along here I got a terrible fall, brought reproach on the church, and awful sorrow and distress on myself. Brother Purington (bless his memory) and the members came to my relief. Here old self shrunk a great deal. I had learned a lesson, but somehow I was dull, and it required a great many falls to sweep away the refuge of lies wherein I was trusting; and I do not know that I am cured yet. The carnal mind is enmity against God, and I have that mind, with no hope of getting rid of it until this body dies. If the Spirit of the Lord does not keep it in subjection it is sure to manifest itself. I feel that the outer man is perishing, but cannot feel that the inner man is much renewed. Most of the time I am shut up in darkness and gloom. When I try to call on the Lord it seems as if my cries fall to the earth unheard. I know if I am saved it will be a trophy that grace has snatched from the very dregs of sin and woe; for I feel that I am the vilest wretch that ever claimed the name of the Lord. It is not what I used to be that so distresses me and poisons all my joys, but what I am now. I moved here twelve years ago, and have associated with many of the Lord's dear children, though there are some differences in sentiments among the brethren on the doctrine of predestination. Some believe the absolute predestination of all things, while some call it permissive decrees. Permissive decrees of Jehovah are just as certain of fulfillment as any others; hence every event in time is certain. I cannot see enough difference to stir up a fuss in the family. I believe the fall, with all its sad results, as we view it from a human standpoint, was all arranged in the wisdom and purpose of God ere time began, and was provided for; else how could the dear Savior stand as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world? No fall, no sinners; and the covenant of grace, made before the dust of the highest hills was formed (which all Primitive Baptists believe), would have been null and void, and heaven left uninhabited, because there would have been no sinners to be saved.

Before I drew my infant breath,
From nature's prison free,

Crosses in number, measure, weight,
Were written, Lord, for me.

Before I close I would like to say to Elders Wm. L. Beebe and J. G. Eubanks that they are held in fond remembrance by myself and wife. Both were pastors of our church for several years. My wife is still a member of the dear old church in Georgia.

To the dear readers of the SIGNS I will say, When it goes well with you remember me, a poor old sinner.

A. J. PHILLIPS.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Jan. 3, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN:—In the providence of our Lord we have entered upon another year, and I among the rest would like to give my little testimony of the goodness of the Lord to me. How thankful I ought to be for the many blessings both temporal and spiritual which I receive, coming as they all do from our covenant-keeping God. Of all people on earth we, the Old School Baptists, ought to be the most thankful; for when we are in our right mind, and the love of Jesus fills our hearts, we are enabled to give unto the Lord all the praise for time and eternity.

Dear brethren, how thankful I am for the dear old SIGNS, to see it come so regularly, filled with good news, giving God all the praise in the conversion of poor and puny man; for Jesus says, "Without me ye can do nothing." "Not of works, lest any man should boast." All is of grace from first to last, to know these things and have a hope of them.

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break."

Dear brethren, how much we ought to love each other, and forgive one another in love. Surely we ought, when we hope that Jesus has done such wonderful things for us, in giving us a hope of the forgiveness of all our sins.

I am much pleased and delighted with Elder Chick's communications, they are so clear and to the point, opposing work-mongers. All can see that he is the right man in the right place. One or two editorials last fall were worth all we pay for one year; particularly so was the one regarding Sunday Schools. We as Old School Baptists should keep away from all their system of works, and from all their meetings; for they are works of the flesh, and have a tendency to draw us away from following our dear Lord and Master. I hope the Lord will be with him in future as in past time, and that he may be sustained in his work of love. When we consider the number of God's people who are isolated or unable to meet with their brethren at stated times, the SIGNS to them is peculiarly precious. They see and read able communications from dear brethren in different parts of the country, telling what God has done for them, and bringing to view so many of their trials, doubts and fears, so that they too are encouraged to press forward, forgetting the things that are behind, and by faith looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. There are so many able writers for the dear old paper that I will name none. I hope they may continue to write to the children of God. I think I love them all in the Lord. How any one taking the paper for years, as I have done, can do without it, is something that passes my comprehension.

With love to all the household of faith, and wishing you a happy and prosperous new year, and that all will make an extra effort to pay up past indebtedness, and continue to subscribe for the paper, I remain, I hope, your affectionate brother in Christ,

A. J. BLACK.

P. S.—The last SIGNS came to hand just before mailing my letter, and, dear brethren, I felt so pleased and delighted with dear old Elder Beebe's article that I thought I would add a little more to my letter. He brought many useful lessons to the surface for the consideration of God's people, applicable to us now as when they were spoken. O that we all might take warning not to deny our Lord. After reading Elder Durand's article on the works of grace, so beautifully traced, I felt to thank our God for raising up and qualifying such dear ones as I have named, with many more, to comfort and instruct God's little ones like myself, who, if one at all, is the least of all.

A. J. B.

DURHAM, N. C., March 2, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you permit me to say through the SIGNS to the brethren, sisters and friends with whom I met on my recent visit, that I reached home last evening, and found my family enjoying the blessings of health and peace? I feel to thank God that he has remembered me in all the trials of life, and has ordered my footsteps so that Satan has not overcome me up to this time. I felt several times when I was with you to proclaim with the psalmist, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," &c. I was truly glad to see the unity of sentiment which prevailed so generally among the Lord's children with whom I was blessed to meet. It appeared to me to be more so than usual. I did not hear an idea which embraced any doctrinal point but such as met a hearty welcome in my own heart, and was in agreement with my own experience. This is what I call true fellowship. When two come together, and as one expresses what God has taught him, the other feels the same truth springing up in his heart, these two are thus united in one, and fellowship goes out from heart to heart, and there is love and joy such as the world knows not of. How blessed to be able to feel to be among the solitary ones, whom the Lord hath set in families, and given the pure language of Canaan, so that each is able to say of the other, "He is my brother; she is my sister," because of the sweetness there is in their conversation. When this is the case it is pleasant to be in the house of the Lord. It reminds us of that sweet unity which does and ever has existed between our Lord and his people, because of which they are saved in him. To-day it is true that we are dead, and our life is hid with Christ in God. There has never been any change in him, and therefore all that is in him to-day was in him in eternity. This does most certainly embrace our life which we now live in him, and shall ever live. Outside of this I can find no life for any of the Lord's poor and needy children. God has ordained this life for them and to them in Jesus Christ his Son, and in his purpose all things work together to the good of his people, and to the glorifying of the name of God, and we also are glorified in him. Who are we, that the spotless and pure name of Jesus should be named on us, so that we are all swallowed up in him? Thus as the outward man perisheth, the inward man is renewed day by day, so that as seeing ourselves we grow until we truly feel to be the chief of sinners and the least of all saints. Strange way to grow in grace, and yet so it is. What need we to fear, just so Jesus is ours, and we have the evidence in our hearts that we are his? If we possess him, his righteousness is ours. Surely if his righteousness appears, all our righteousness becomes filthy rags, and so fades away that we hunger for his fullness. He has said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." This is enough. He has said that it shall be, and he works and none can hinder. Where is the christian who could trust his salvation in any other Savior? In him alone we trust.

There were many dear brethren and sisters with whom I should have been pleased to meet, but they have my love. May the Lord lead us all in the way of peace.

In hope and love,
L. H. HARDY.

SCIPIO SIDING, Ohio, Feb. 15, 1896.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I see in the SIGNS of Feb. 12th a short article from Elder Chick on Predestination, to which I desire to reply, for the benefit of the brethren generally. Elder Chick cautiously states that he speaks only for the brethren in the east, and not for those throughout the United States. I wish to say to him, and to all the brethren everywhere, that I am extensively acquainted with the Baptists in the west, in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, and I have never met a brother or sister to whom the statements in the article referred to would apply. They do not believe that God is the author of the sin committed in the crucifixion of Christ because he determined it before to be done; but there are some who say that if the doctrine of God's determinate counsel be true, it makes him the author of sin. But that idea is not held or believed by those who believe the doctrine.

In reference to the other statements, they are among the firmest advocates of discipline and order in the churches, and in their living and walking before the Lord and before men they are among those who live and walk the most blameless, and in tribulation the most patient, cross-bearing and enduring, believing that all things work together for good, and that the hand of the Lord is in all their sufferings. Like Job they say, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

I have had the happy privilege of meeting many of the brethren in the east, Elders Durand, Vail, Bundy, Bogardus and Hubbell, visiting the churches of the Chemung and Roxbury Associations, and also the Baptists in Canada, where I met Elders Wm. L. Beebe, Wm. Pollard and F. W. Keene. I have found them a unit with the brethren of every place I have gone, on the doctrine of God's determinate counsel respecting all events, all holding the same view and speaking the same things. I have ever found them, as a general rule, humble, fervent and sincere in the house of the Lord; worshipping God in the Spirit, rejoicing in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh; confessing their sins and shortcomings, and adoring the everlasting kindness of the Lord for so great salvation; adhering only to the standard of truth in preaching, praying, admonishing, and in singing psalms and spiritual songs, making melody in their hearts to the Lord. May grace abound to the Israel of God.

H. E. PURRIS.

LINDALE, Texas, Jan. 18, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—In sending my remittance for the SIGNS I want to give an expression of my hearty appreciation of the paper; that is, the doctrinal sentiments advocated by its many correspondents, very few of whom I have met in person; but I feel like I am acquainted with most of them, and look forward to the coming of their letters in the paper with eagerness. I read them with much comfort and enjoyment. If I mention brother Curry's article in a late number of the SIGNS I hope others will not feel slighted, nor that Elder Curry will feel puffed up in his fleshly mind; for I know he is of the earth, nothing supernatural or immortal of him, save and except the life and Spirit of Christ that dwells in him. I know, too, that all he or any one else knows of the truth of the gospel of Christ is a gift from God. The article referred to is on the subject of Adam being able to stand and liable to fall. I want to say to brother Curry, that article was a source of comfort to me, a feast of fat things, in perfect harmony with the fundamental principles of the doctrine of salvation by grace. The fall of Adam was the first link in the chain of circumstances, for the perfecting of the salvation of God's chosen people from their sins.

I want to say to the brethren abroad that there is a little church of Primitive Baptists in the town of Lindale, Smith Co., Texas, of which I am an unworthy member. Any brethren who anticipate moving to Texas, if they will write to me I will give them any information I can of the church, the town and the surrounding country.

FRANK LODEN.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—As I was writing a letter on business I decided also to write a few words, if I could. Indeed, I have been in such darkness and so low down that I felt as though I could never write again. I feel indeed to be the poorest of the poor, the lowest of the low, and the least of all. Gall and wormwood seem to be my meat, and only one Scripture has seemed to come to me to bring me any relief: "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared."—Hebrews v. 7. Again in Hebrews, "Consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds." If this experience will fit me to comfort any one, how gladly would I be willing to suffer. It is for a purpose, I know, and a good purpose; for the very things which seem to work our destruction are for our salvation. This is all needful, and our God works all things after the counsel of his own will. But O how rebellious we often feel under his chastening rod! How unreconciled we feel when he brings these things to bear, and makes us feel our poverty and meanness and nothingness before him; when we are like a smoked bottle, like water spilled on the ground, like curdled milk, like a pelican in the wilderness, an owl in the desert; when the billows are rolling over us. Out of the depths we call, and there seems to be no answer. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" My only hope is in God. For all this I must still cry and call upon him.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

EVERGREEN, Ala., Oct. 21, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—I have been a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for a number of years, and with my whole heart indorse the doctrine it sets forth, and have derived great comfort from it, especially since I have been such a sufferer from rheumatism for nearly three years, and most of the time bedridden. I am now very much crippled, and denied the blessed privilege of attending church meetings. I hasten to renew my subscription, which expires November 1st. I have in times past been delinquent for several months at a time, but hope with God's help never to be so again. I am surrounded by the "do and live" kind of people, and but for the dear old SIGNS, and an occasional visit from brother Lively, who is my pastor, I have but little communion with the saints of God.

Yours in hope,

MARRIAGES.

FEB. 5th, 1896, by Elder J. Cline, at the residence of the bride's parents, Elder F. M. and Mary Jordan, in Douglas Township, Madison Co., Iowa, Miss Lillie D. Jordan and Mr. D. V. Crawford.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life Feb. 21st, 1896, near Berlin, Worcester Co., Md., Mr. Kendle Timmons, in his 80th year.

Brother Timmons was baptized in fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church at Indiantown, by the writer, in September, 1891. He was not a man of many words, but lived an exemplary christian life, bearing stronger testimony by his upright, steady walk than he possibly could with his lips only. I do not know what his family consisted of, except one son with whom he made his home. We as a church feel it to be our loss and his gain.

ALSO,

DIED—At his home near Berlin, Worcester Co., Md., brother Littleton B. Beathards, on Jan. 28th, 1896, about 42 years old.

He was baptized in fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church at Indiantown, Wicomico Co., Md., by the writer, Sept. 5th, 1880. Thus death is making its inroads in the church at the above-named place, the Lord taking whom he will. It did seem to our finite understanding that such a man could not be spared from his family, the neighborhood and the church. He seemed capacitated to fill a large place in every branch of life. His superiors are very rare. The truth he professed shone brightly in his entire life. The Lord alone can build up the waste places of Zion, cheer the broken-hearted companion, be a father to the three children, and comfort the dear old father, now eighty-six years of age, who says his best friend is gone. We all would like to be reconciled, but O how hard it is to say in truth, Thy will be done. We mourn with his family, and mourn for ourselves. He seemed to know nothing but firmness. The Lord has taken him from the evil to come. We deeply sympathize with his lonely companion, who is a member also. We pray that God's choice blessings may rest upon the heart-stricken family, which consists of wife, one daughter, two sons, one brother, two sisters and father. We believe that he rests in Jesus, to be awakened at the last trump, when he shall come forth.

T. M. POULSON.

MASSEY, Va., March, 1896.

DIED—Dec. 1st, 1895, our dear brother, William Vannatta, in the 79th year of his age. The subject of this notice was born Dec. 25th, 1816, in (I think) Fauquier Co., Va., his parents moving to Shelby Co., Ky., when he was but a year old. He was married March 21st, 1843.

He leaves a devoted companion in tribulation, six children, seven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren to mourn the absence of a devoted husband, parent and grandparent. But amidst the sorrow and gloom, there is a comforting thought in that he died in the full triumph of a living faith in Jesus.

Brother Vannatta joined the church at Bethel, in Shelby Co., Ky., by letter, in 1844, where he lived a faithful member, seldom absent from his church meeting. He was a man of but few words, yet always an attentive listener to preaching and spiritual conversation. It was my privilege to be at his bedside for several hours before his death. I never witnessed a more calm and serene frame of mind, a quiet resting and waiting for the full consummation of that blessed hope in Jesus, his countenance aglow with the heavenly knowledge that just beyond mortality should be swallowed up of life. I could but feel what a blessed boon it was to die, if so be that we have hope in Christ. There was but one regret, that of leaving his wife, our dear sister, and a widowed daughter, Mrs. Ida Duvall, so lonely and sad; but he said he desired to commit them to the faithful care of our Father in heaven. Faithful and loving hands ministered until the end, when he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

His funeral was largely attended at the family residence on December 3d, when the writer tried to speak words of comfort to the mourning ones; after which he was buried in the cemetery at Shelbyville.

Sister Vannatta requests the following lines added:

"A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

"God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given;
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

P. W. SAWIN.

NEW CASTLE, Ky.

DIED—In the city of Middletown, N. Y., on March 5th, 1896, sister Mary Carey, widow of brother Wm. P. Carey, who died April 8th, 1887, and daughter of the late Deacon Noah Kirby, aged 73 years, 11 months and 12 days.

An adopted son, Melvin H. Carey, four brothers and two sisters survive her, as follows: Garret V. N., William, Gilbert, Charles, Mrs. Catherine E. Osborn and Mrs. James M. Price, the latter a member of the Brookfield Church, but residing in Middletown.

At the time of her death sister Carey was a member of the Brookfield Old School Baptist Church. She received a good hope through grace many years ago, and was a meek and humble follower of her Redeemer, adorning the profession she had made. Her seat was seldom vacant in the assembly of the saints. For the past two years she had been in feeble health, and her mind so impaired by disease that she seldom left her home.

The funeral services were held at the Old School Baptist meeting-house in Middletown, on Sunday, 8th, and were conducted by the writer in the presence of a large congregation. The text used on the occasion was Luke x. 42. The interment was in Hillside Cemetery, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WAVERLY, ILL., Feb. 4, 1896.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—Having to write to you on business, to renew and pay up my subscription for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I concluded that I would give you a sketch of my life and my travel from nature to grace; that is, if I am one of that number. I have been requested several times by my friends and brethren to write something of the kind, and have written once or twice; but after I had written I concluded it was not worthy of publication.

I was born in Morgan County, Ill., about sixteen miles from where I now live, on October 13th, 1835, where I was raised to manhood, and strictly taught by precept and example that honesty and morality were both necessary qualifications for a respectable citizen. I was not raised in a Baptist neighborhood, and therefore know but little about the Regular or Predestinarian Baptists until I was about grown. My parents were never members of any church, and I never knew what their faith was religiously until after I met with a change, and told them my feelings. But from what I know of their mind and thoughts, drawn from them by the sweet conversation I had with them after I was grown, and especially with my mother, I am made to hope they had a foretaste of that heavenly love which exceeds all earthly blessings. My mother died April 16th, 1882, in the 74th year of her age. My father died May 18th, 1888, in the 90th year of his age.

I had serious reflections about death and eternity almost as far back as I can recollect, but naturally thought I could reform and become religious when I became older and had seen enough of the pleasures of this world. I was naturally of a lively disposition, and enjoyed the society of young, gay company; but I was arrested in my wild career, very unexpectedly to me. When I was eighteen or nineteen years old there was a protracted meeting going on in my neighborhood, and great excitement apparently among nearly all classes of people; but it seemed to have no effect on me until they talked of closing the meeting. Then the thought came to me one evening as I went to meeting, Why is it that I am not affected in my feelings as others? Am I worse or harder in heart than any one else; or is it because I have been a quiet, moral boy, and been guilty of no great out-breaking wickedness? I went on to the meeting, still pondering these thoughts in my mind until meeting opened by singing and prayer, and the preacher arose and read his text, "Awake, thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Eph. v. 14. Then it appeared that all my sins at once arose like mountains before me and were staring me in the face. I recollect but little about the sermon, or what was said by the preacher, but the text seemed to be directed pointedly at me, and had just awakened me to see my sinful nature. Thus in anguish of soul I was made to mourn. They called for mourners, and trusting in their honesty of purpose, and feeling the need of the prayers of all God's people, I went forward, kneeling down, begging at the throne of grace for mercy. They in their way tried to encourage me by telling me to believe on Jesus, trust in the Lord, &c. One old father in Israel (as I always thought he was) would say to me, "O! John, just believe—believe that Jesus is able and willing just now to save you." I tried with all the power of mind that I had, but then I would say to myself, How can I believe without more evidence? My sins would arise before me, and I would feel that I was not worthy of God's mercy. I went on in this way two or three days in agony of soul, when one night it appeared that all hope had vanished, and there was no hope or mercy for me. I had done everything apparently that I could do, and all to no purpose. I cried, "Lord, save, or I perish. Here, Lord, I give myself away; it is all that I can do." As I felt myself sinking in misery, with no hope of mercy, just then a great calm came over me, and the thought came, Jesus died for sinners; he did for them what they could not do for themselves; and may I not be one of that number?" With this thought came a sweet peace of mind, a love for Jesus and his people, unsurpassed by anything I had ever felt. Everything appeared bright and lovely, and I thought I would never have any more doubts. But in this I have been sadly disappointed, for I am continually doubting; but there is an all-wise God overruling all things, and he will never utterly forsake his people; yet the trouble with me is, do I constitute one of that happy number? Then the recollection of such passages of Scripture gives me some peace of mind, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

I firmly believe that the ever guiding and overruling hand of the omnipotent God has had something to do in the guidance of my footsteps religiously, as well as naturally; for I know that I did not follow the inclinations of my natural mind. My young associates and old friends of the Methodist church where I was raised, when they thought I had obtained a hope, began to urge me to join their church; but when they would talk to me about certain passages of Scripture, and I would give them my ideas, they would accuse me of believing the Old Baptist doctrine; but I would deny it, being prejudiced, and not knowing the real doctrine of the Primitive Baptists. I thought I had my mind fully made up where I would unite, and with what church; it was what was then called the United but now called Missionary Baptists. More than once I went to their meetings with that intention, but for some cause I did not. At one time I was so fully settled in my mind that I told my father and mother, and asked their advice. They answered that if that was my choice to follow the inclination of my mind and try to live right. When the meeting time came they both went along with me, expecting at the close of the services to hear me relate to the church the dealings of the Lord with me; but at that meeting there was no gospel food for my poor soul, or I was in no condition to receive it, and I went home cast down, and feeling as though I had been deceived myself, and had deceived my parents and others, and I did not want to deceive the church. My mother asked me as I went home why I did not offer myself to the church. I told her I did not know, but I had about come to the conclusion that I was not fit. So time rolled on with me in this way for about two years, making resolutions and breaking them, until the first of September, 1857, while I was living at home with my parents. I went with my brother-in-law, Allen Conlee, to the Concord Association of Old, Regular Baptists, held with Union Church, Green Co., Ill. This was about my first acquaintance with the Old, Primitive Baptists' regulations and doctrine. Although my father and mother had often attended their meetings and associations, they had generally left their children at home. I had become a little acquainted with a few of their members and some of their preachers, one in particular, Elder John Record, who lived at that time in Winchester, Scott Co., Ill. He had stopped at my father's house several times while on his way to Apple Creek Church, near Waverly, Morgan Co., Ill. He was one appointed by the association to preach on Sunday. His whole discourse seemed directed to me and to suit my case. During the discourse he quoted several times the passage of Scripture that first appeared to arouse me from my dull, lethargical state of mind, and to give me a knowledge of my sinful nature, "Awake, thou that sleepest," &c. But it appeared to me at this time in a different light to what I had ever viewed it before. He presented it as being given or directed to the child of God in his low, dull state of feeling, not knowing what to do or where to go. In his discourse he traced the travel of my mind through all my changes, resolutions and failures, from the beginning of my trouble down to the then present time, apparently better than I could have told it myself. I felt that it was manna to my poor, hungry soul. I felt then, and I feel yet, that it was the first gospel sermon I had ever heard, and just suited my case. It appeared to me that these people, and he among them, were the most lovely people I ever looked upon, and I felt to say with one of old, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee," &c. In his closing remarks we were admonished to go home to our friends and tell them what great things the Lord had done for us. I felt a great desire to tell him, but it appeared that I never had the privilege. On Monday morning he came where I was standing, spoke to me, appeared to know the state of my mind, and asked me to relate to him my experience. I felt as though I wished to do so, but before I commenced some one came up and called his attention to some other subject, and before they got through my feelings to talk on the subject of religion left me, and I walked off and left them standing there. This was the last time I ever saw Elder Record, for the next news we had of him he had died very suddenly. I have always regretted not telling him my feelings at that time. I went home from that meeting pondering those things in my mind, and wondering if those were the people I had heard so much talk about as being so old-fashioned and selfish. This sounded different from what I had always understood their doctrine. I tried to drive the thought from my mind, as I had heard so much, and said so much myself, when I would be accused of believing their doctrine. But not being able to dismiss the impression from my mind that had been produced at this meeting, on the fourth Sunday in September of that same year (1857) I went to one of their church meetings at the church called South Fork Marovaisterre, and there I heard in substance the same discourse that Elder Record had preached at the association in Green County. My whole mind was drawn to that people, and I did not want to leave them until I had talked with them. I did not think so much about joining the church as I did about telling them my feelings. When the opportunity to relate the travel of mind was given, I went forward and told them some of the things I have here written. I was received as a candidate for baptism, and the time set for the ordinance was one week from that day. At the appointed time I was on hand, and was led down into the water by Elder E. T. Morris and hurried beneath the yielding wave, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, to rise to walk in newness of life, as I trust. I will say right here to all who feel that they love the people of God, and feel their own unworthiness, and have never complied with duty in this act, You are depriving yourselves of the enjoyment of that peace of mind you never can realize until you submit. I now thought, Surely my troubles are over, and all will be peace. But in this I was again mistaken, for the tempter approached me in a way that I was not looking for him, saying, What have you done? Left all your young, kind and fashionable associates, and united with this old, despised people, with whom you can never enjoy yourself. These were sore temptations at that time, for one so young in life, and surrounded by all the gaities of the world, to break off and leave the young company with whom I had always associated, and attach myself to those who had always been ridiculed by the world; and not only that, but the very ones I had once despised myself. But there was a drawing here, and an attachment that led me to this people, that I cannot account for, unless it is the omnipotent hand of God, "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." My mind was led there, and it was only with them that I could hear the word preached to suit my experience. I was told that these old people would soon all be dead, and then there would be no more of them. At times when I would be in company with the gay and fashionable society I would become so enamored with their company that I would not want them to know it was with the old, despised Baptists that my name was cast. But again, when I would go to my own meeting and hear the gospel preached, as I believe, in its purity, I would then be drawn by the sweet cords of love, and would think, I will never be ashamed of them again. But, thank God, I have got entirely over these trials and temptations. The older I get the more firm the road appears to me in the walks of salvation by grace, independent any man-saving power. I do not care who knows what people my name is connected with religiously, but rather feel proud of it; and when any one asks if I am a Baptist, I answer in the affirmative, and want them to particularly understand what kind of a Baptist; not that I believe there is so much in the name, but in the doctrine and practice; for I have no use for those human inventions that are gotten up by men to christianize and evangelize the world.

I was married June 9th, 1859, to Miss Sarah A. Weller, daughter of Thomas and Eliza Weller, of Macoupin County, Illinois. She was not a member of the church militant here below when we were married, but was drawn by the sweet cords of love and made to enter the fold at the church called Head of Apple Creek, of Regular Predestinarian Baptists, in Morgan County, Illinois, on the 30th day of April, 1870; and with that church we still remain, and expect to, if there be no preventing providence, as long as the Lord permits us to live and enjoy this earthly pilgrimage. To us have been born four children; our oldest, Thomas J., born April 18th, 1860, died in the fourteenth year of his age. Our three daughters are grown and married.

I have now passed by three score years of life, and my dear companion is only about two years behind me. We know that we are now numbered with those who are called old people. We have passed the meridian of life, and have but a few more days of trouble, trials or rejoicing, as the case may be, in these low grounds of sin and sorrow.

Now may the love of God ever be with you and yours; may he be your strength and support through the remainder of your earthly pilgrimage; and the Lord grant that we may all be submissive to his holy will, ever "looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

Yours in humility,

J. R. SPIRES.

GHEAT, Ky., Feb. 20, 1896.

DEAR BROTHERS EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I am in receipt of a letter from brother and sister Jesse and Amanda Jones, of Standard, Oklahoma, in which they say, "Please give your views through the SIGNS on the 12th chapter of Matthew, from the 46th verse to the close of the chapter." They further say, "We have no preaching here, only through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES." Perhaps it would have been more wise on the part of those dear inquirers after truth, who are strangers to me in the flesh, to have called into service some who are more capable of expounding to them the deep and mysterious truth declared by our Lord in that text; but if they should only get one crumb from what I may write I shall be amply paid for the poor service I have performed.

The text on which I am requested to write is as follows: "While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him. Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee. But he answered and said unto him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother."

Evidently our Lord was not speaking of earthly relationships, but of that heavenly relationship which binds in one inseparable union all the redeemed of our God. He says, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Earthly relationships are constantly being severed by the grim visaged monarch of the tomb; but the dear saints rejoice to know that our glorious Lord hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.—2 Tim. i. 10. He knew the time was near at hand when he would pass through the agonies of the cross, be laid in the tomb, and rise a mighty conqueror over the shadows of death. In his triumphant resurrection, life and immortality was brought to light, and all earthly relationships were severed. Our Lord said to the Sadducees, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."—Matt. xxii. 29, 30. Our Lord was not disowning his mother naturally when he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples and said, "Behold my mother and my brethren. For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." He was then talking to them about heavenly things, things which pertain to his spiritual kingdom, in which all are born of the Spirit. The Jews claimed that Abraham was their father, because they had descended from him naturally; but John the Baptist called them a generation of vipers, and said to them, "Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." This presents to us the two relationships; the one earthly, the other heavenly. As there dwells no good thing in our flesh, which we possess by reason of our earthly relationship, there must be a higher and more holy relationship than anything earthly before any can entertain a well grounded hope that they are children of God and heirs to the glories of the celestial world. The fact that the descendants of Abraham were a "generation of vipers" is conclusive that we derive nothing from our earthly relationship that is spiritual. Our Lord said, "My kingdom is not of this world." He also said, "I am from above." All who are born from above are born of God, and are created in Christ Jesus unto good works; for they do the will of the Father because it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. The apostle says, "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." They are children of God and joint-heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. They are prepared to claim that great and glorious inheritance because they were chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, and are born a spiritual birth; born of God. An inheritance does not pass to the inheritor because of his good works, but because of his relationship to his ancestor.

It is thus the glorious inheritance of the saints is secured to them, because they are one with the glorious Son of God. In that unity with him they have secured to them all things needful to prepare them for the enjoyment of their glorious inheritance, one of which is that eternal life which is secured to all the redeemed. He says, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Another one of those things is their preparation for the enjoyment of that eternal life. The apostle says, "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption."—1 Cor. i. 30. It is in that glorious oneness, that heavenly unity, that all those great and heavenly blessings are bestowed on all of God's chosen and redeemed people. Those bestowments were all made to fit the dear saints for the eternal enjoyment of their heavenly inheritance. They were not bestowed because of earthly relationships, but because of God's eternal and unchanging love freely bestowed upon his chosen people. Well might the apostle break forth in heavenly rapture and say, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God."

As sons of God, and in no other way, do any of the dear saints do the will of our Father which is in heaven; and they do his will because their glorious Redeemer is made unto them wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. Then let him that glorieth glory in the Lord; not because they have descended from some great earthly ancestry, but because God in his infinite love and mercy hath created in them a clean heart, and renewed within them a right spirit. Those sweet and precious gifts are bestowed on the saints in the new and spiritual birth. The apostle says to you, "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." That anointing is bestowed on all the saints when they are born of God, who is righteousness. The same apostle says, "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him."

Now, dear brother and sister, I have in my feeble way attempted to draw the contrast between earthly and heavenly relationships, which, it occurs to me, was plainly brought to view when our Lord said, "Who-soever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, my sister, and my mother." But let us remember that in our earthly relationship we attain to nothing but imperfections; but we cannot sever that tie that binds us to earth and earthly things till we are disrobed of mortality. Paul said to the saints at Corinth, "Let no man glory in men; for all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." God has bestowed innumerable earthly blessings upon his people while they are here below, not one of which is unnecessary. All are given in love and mercy, and are needful to them while in their earthly pilgrimage. They have Paul, Apollos and Cephas to preach the gospel to them. They have the world with all its treasures on which to live while they are traveling toward the tomb. They have the life which now is, with that ever glorious hope of the life which is to come, with its eternal freedom from care, pain and sorrow. Into that life they will enter by reason of death having been given them. Then death is one of the blessings bestowed upon them. Then let them sweetly sing, "I would not live alway—no, welcome the tomb;

Since Jesus hath laid there I dread not its gloom."

If death had not been given to God's dear people there could have been no resurrection from the dead; our ever to be adored Redeemer would not have laid down his life for his people. But glory to his exalted name, infinite wisdom was his. "Wisdom hath builded her house; she hath hewn out her seven pillars." All things needful for the salvation and final glorification of his people were fixed in the eternal mind, and all power was his, and was made manifest in the redemption of all that were given him in the eternal covenant of redemption, ordered in all things, and sure. In carrying out that covenant Jesus appears as the great High Priest to make one great offering. Under the law there were many offerings made on Jewish altars; but this great High Priest, who appeared at the end of that dispensation, was a Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, who in his priestly office was "without father or mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually."—Heb. vii. 3. Under the legal dispensation the priesthood all descended from the tribe of Levi; and hence all had fathers and mothers, beginning of days and end of life; but our great High Priest did not descend from that tribe, and as the great High Priest had neither father nor mother, beginning of days nor end of life. The work of the high priest under the law was to make offerings and sacrifices; but the great antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ, made one great sacrifice, by which he purged our sins, and sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. In that priestly office he has done the will of his Father in heaven; but in that office he had neither father nor mother, had no earthly relationships, but was a Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. But Peter addressing the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, &c., calls them elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, and says unto them, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." He calls them a royal priesthood, and declares the offering they should make, which was to show forth the praise of him who had called them out of darkness into his marvelous light. Then evidently they did the will of their Father in heaven, not because he had called them out of the darkness of that relationship into the marvelous light that shone in effulgent beauty and glory in and around that royal priesthood, that exalted place to which they had been called, not because of earthly relationships, but because they were a chosen generation, chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, to whose great and holy name be all the glory.

If this is published, brother and sister Jones, and all others who may read these feeble thoughts, and who earnestly desire to walk in the old paths, will please accept what I offer to them as a feeble token of my love for them. The afflictions with which I was suffering in January have measurably subsided.

Please dispose of these thoughts as you may deem best, and believe me affectionately yours in the fond hope of a blessed immortality where mortality will be swallowed up in glorious victory.

ADAM'S FALL AND REDEMPTION.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."—Gen. i. 27.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."—Gen. ii. 7.

Paul says, "But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands. [Not only so.] Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him." How is that? If all things are put under him why not see it yet? He says, "But we see Jesus [who shall put all things under his feet], who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor, that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Man is now a captive of Satan. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." "And again, Behold I and the children which God hath given me. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Heb. ii. 5-15. This is he who shall put all things under our feet, in destroying him who has the power of death, and deliver the captive slave. I will again take a look at the man as made. He was created "in the image of God;" and "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Thus he was "made a little lower than the angels." All things were put under his feet. God gave him a law, and told him, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Man is now under law. He thus stood in his own moral rectitude, and his disobedience brought death, both physical and moral. He died a moral death in the day he ate of the tree, and nine hundred and thirty years afterward he died physically. We inherit both forms of death. The law was a proper test of his disobedience. Peter's love was put to the test, and he fell; but he had an advocate. "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." It was answered by the Spirit convincing Peter of his weakness and sin, and restoring him. Adam was promised, in that self same day, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head; for sin is of the devil. Yes, the Captain of our salvation was there with the promise that he would destroy the works of the devil. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature," or a new creation; not a reformation of character, but a renewal of the image of God in the man which has been effaced. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Thus they are not born of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of will of man, but of God. The righteousness of God is man's only hope of salvation. The obedience of Jesus magnified the law. He was chosen of God and anointed for this end. It follows that it is impossible to entertain too exalted an idea of the regard God has for his holy law in condemning sin. He provided a Days-man who should bear our iniquities. See how heinous the fall, yes, how great. We see the price paid, the sufferings endured, in our stead. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. See him in the garden sweating drops of blood and crying, if it were possible, that the cup might pass. See him mocked, crowned with thorns in derision, and hear him cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" This was for the fallen man. There is no inference in the Scriptures that this condemnation was not just. If so, then man must have been a proper subject to be put under law. Do we not feel in our experience that we are justly condemned, and have to say,

"And if my soul were sent to hell,
Thy righteous law approves it well?"
Was it not our first experience, and is it not our daily experience, that our crimes are great, and cause our chariot wheels to drag heavily? "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." He was made sin, in that he was born of a woman who was under the law. He was made under the law, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. His righteousness differs from any other righteousness; it not only differs in its author, but it differs also in its nature, its extent, duration and influence from all other righteousness, of men or angels. In its nature this is twofold fulfilled, both the precepts of the law and its penalty. The ful-

EATING AND DRINKING UNWORTHILY.

(1 Corinthians xi.)

WE recall that in our earlier experience, when the privilege and obligation of confessing the Lord in baptism was presented to our mind, among the temptations by which we were assailed, and by which Satan sought to hinder us, was this of eating and drinking unworthily, as presented by Paul in the above-named chapter. Hoping that our own exercises of mind, together with some general reflections upon this subject, may be of encouragement to some, we feel like briefly presenting them to our readers.

As this subject was presented to our mind as a temptation, it was misconstrued and perverted, as Satan always does when he quotes Scripture to the people of God. Knowing that if he came in his own proper person he could not distress the people of God, since they know that he is branded as a liar, and the father of lies, he adopts the appearance of an angel of light, and professes great reverence for the Scriptures, and great anxiety for the welfare of the people of God, lest they should do that which they have no scriptural authority for doing, and claim blessings that are not meant for them. In all this he speaks in perfect harmony with their own feelings; for certainly if there be one thing most apparent in any man where God has begun his good work, it is a holy, humble regard for the word of God, and an earnest desire to be guided in all things by it; and so one of the most common avenues by which Satan tempts and distresses and hinders believers is by quoting the Scriptures themselves, and then perverting their meaning.

About the time when, as we have said, the subject of coming to the church and asking admission there came up, we read this Scripture, and the reflections suggested to our mind were about as follows: You know that all who become members of the church are expected to be present when the supper is administered. If you come, and are received and baptized, this will also be your duty. But Paul says, "For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." Now, you know that you are unworthy. How then can you dare to eat and drink? This seemed for a long time an insuperable obstacle in our way. The text appeared to our mind to mean, Whoso eateth and drinketh, being unworthy, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself; and we surely felt unworthy. As we looked upon the members of the churches whom we knew, we believed them to be worthy, so that for a long time the question did not occur to us, How then can they venture to eat and drink? There was no trouble about any one else, but how could we dare to eat and drink ourself?

But after awhile we heard these same children of God complaining of their own unworthiness. They all seemed to feel that way. As we found this out, after a time the question occurred to us, How then do they venture to eat the bread and drink the wine? If the unworthy eat and drink damnation to themselves, how can these, who all say that they are unworthy, come to the table? Yet they did come. Surely, we thought, the text cannot mean what it has seemed to us to mean. This set us to more carefully reading it and its connection; and after a time it most blessedly and comfortingly dawned upon us that the text did not say nor mean, "Whoso eateth and drinketh, being unworthy," but that the word was "unworthily," an adverb of manner. The word did not describe the character of those partaking, but the unbecoming manner of their eating and drinking. We can never express the relief which was afforded to our mind as the Holy Spirit illuminated this Scripture, and we saw its true meaning. We were still unworthy, but the unworthy were not by this Scripture forbidden to come. So far as this text was concerned our way was no longer obstructed.

Now, then, we wish to turn to the text and the chapter, and suggest a few things that seem to us to belong to it. In verses eighteen and nineteen of this chapter Paul declares that he has heard, and partly credits it, that there were divisions and heresies among them. They were not of one mind in the gospel, and consequently there were rents or divisions. This must be so, he says, that they who are approved (tested and tried and steadfast, for so the word means) should be made manifest. But while this is so, and must be so, yet while this condition remains Paul says (verse 20) that when they come together they "cannot eat" the Lord's supper, for so is the literal meaning of this verse. Paul means, it seems to us, that while the church was in this condition of division and diversity of opinions there could not be a proper frame of mind and heart to eat the supper as it was given by the Lord. All who did this were to do it in remembrance of Jesus, the common Savior of them all; but while in such a state of divided opinions and schisms this could not be. They might indeed come together in one place, but they were not in one heart and mind. They could eat the bread and wine, and satisfy the natural appetite, but they could not really eat the Lord's supper. They could not enter into its real meaning, nor nourish their souls by the body and blood of Christ.

In verses twenty-one and twenty-two Paul declares that growing out of this divided and alienated state, each one would take before another his own supper, and one would be gluttonous and another drunken. There was no consideration nor care nor waiting for their brethren. In eating and drinking they had come to such a condition through their divisions that they neither exhibited any reverence for Christ nor any love for each other. These two things are very sure to go together. If Christ be not held in reverence, neither will the love of the brethren abound. Through their carnality they had come to think that the supper, ordained to be observed in remembrance of Christ in the churches, was but little if any different from the heathenish feasts to which they had been accustomed all their lives. The supper of the Lord was not intended as a place of feasting. Let men eat and drink in their own houses at home. Even those who had no house of their own would be shamed by such conduct as this. Considering their motive and their conduct as it was, Paul says that he could not praise nor commend them in this ordinance. Far better not to observe it at all than to observe it in this carnal way.

In verses twenty-four and twenty-five Paul proceeds to state the true design of eating the bread and drinking the wine, as in verse twenty-three he declares that he had received it of the Lord. It was not for any fleshly gratification whatever, but in remembrance of the Lord. We have in these two verses the true design of the Lord's supper. It is a memorial feast. It is to remind us of Jesus. It means nothing more nor less. Every Romanist, then, be he priest or layman, is an idolater; and every priest, professing as he does to turn the bread and wine into real flesh and blood, the real flesh and blood of Jesus, is but a necromancer or a sorcerer. The Lord himself uses the word "remembrance," meaning literally "a remembering again;" and therefore every Romanist renders idolatrous service when the "host" is elevated, and the people bow down before it as to the real Christ. We have a right to call every Romanist, therefore, an idolater. It may be said that no Romanist will admit this. We reply, Neither will any man admit that he worships only an idol. The denial of the Romanist, then, goes for nothing. When men worship bread and wine, calling it their Lord and Savior, what is it but the grossest form of idolatry?

In verse twenty-six Paul declares that the true meaning of eating the bread and drinking the cup is to show the Lord's death till he come. It is not to crucify him afresh, but to declare that he has died once. "This is my body that is broken; this is my blood that is shed." The language in this twenty-sixth verse has the force, not of a declaration, so much as that of admonition. It is "show ye," rather than "ye do show." The admonition was needful. This church had lost sight of what the ordinance signified; and in verse twenty-seven Paul follows up this subject by saying that those who did eat and drink as they had been doing were guilty of the body and blood of the Lord; that is, they showed as little real reverence for the Savior as did those who had put him to death. They were trampling Jesus Christ under foot, and accounting the blood of the covenant as an unholy thing. The apostle could be severe even to his brethren when the honor of his Lord was at stake, and their good demanded it. How needful, therefore (verse 28), that a man should examine himself, to see if possible with what spirit he comes to the table of the Lord! Is he coming to gratify the flesh in any way (and it may be gratified in a thousand ways)? Is he coming to proclaim his own goodness? Is he coming with no confession of his need of a Savior? Then let him forbear. But is he coming to show forth the death of the Lord, in which alone he hopes? Then let him come, and eat and drink.

Now (verse 29) Paul teaches that he that eats and drinks thus unworthily, eats and drinks to his own condemnation or judgment, for so the word "damnation" means. This is a simple statement of the truth, written upon almost every page of the Bible, that God judges and chastises his people for every evil act, for every idle word, for every foolish thought. Paul here teaches that all who have so failed to understand the true meaning of this ordinance, and who have so perverted it as to turn it into an occasion of gluttony and drunkenness, shall reap the reward of their folly. It is not because they are unworthy, but because their manner of doing this is so wrong that they are judged. God judges his people, and the chastisement of wrong doing is sure; and it is "to themselves" that they eat and drink condemnation. The condemnation is right with them, right in their manner of eating. The chastisement was not something to be inflicted after a time. The judgment was not at some future tribunal. The judgment and the chastisement were annexed to the wrong itself. In eating and drinking the bread and wine unworthily they also ate and drank damnation or judgment. They could not do the one and escape the other; and so Paul says (verse 30), "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." While we are not wiser than other men, and would not dare to claim any superiority of understanding in the Scriptures above others, yet we must say that the view of some concerning this verse seems to us exceedingly foolish. It is that Paul meant that many of the brethren at Corinth were afflicted with physical infirmities as the result of their perversion of the Lord's supper. It will be apparent at once that if the weakness and sickness were physical, so also must have been the sleeping. Paul says they were in a state of sleep. It is absurd to suppose that Paul meant here that the brethren at Corinth were any of them fallen into a sleep lasting over days or weeks. There can be no question that he means here by "sleep" just what he does in Ephesians v. 14, when he says, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light," and in other places where the word is used figuratively to express the state of heaviness and sloth and dullness into which the people of God sometimes fall. Now, if the word "sleep" in this thirtieth verse be used figuratively, so must also the words "weak and sickly." They were spiritually in a state of weakness, sickness and sleepiness. Just as wrong doing and abuse of any natural blessing will result in physical disease and heaviness, so had their folly in spiritual things resulted with them spiritually.

Therefore Paul would have them (verses 31 and 32) judge not others, but their own selves, and (verse 33) be thoughtful for each other; and by tarrying one for another, show that they were possessed of the humble, helpful spirit of the Master, and (verse 34) to eat for the satisfaction of their hunger at home, so that they should not come to the Lord's supper to their own condemnation.

Thus Paul clearly presents the object of the supper, and the necessity of rightly understanding that object, and of a decent and orderly administration of it; but chiefly he shows the necessity of discerning the body of Christ in it, and of eating and drinking in remembrance of him.

There are one or two reflections with which we will close this subject. First, we are not left in the dark as to the design of the supper. Jesus said, "As oft as ye do this, do it in remembrance of me." Again, it is said, "Ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come." How merciful and pitiful was the Lord to our weakness and forgetfulness! The one object of this ordinance is to remind us of him, to keep his death for sin in our minds.

Second. What a token of the enduring and undying love of Jesus is the supper; for it is said, "Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end."—John xiii. 1. Then occurs the account of the supper and the feet-washing. Just as our loving Lord entered into the very shadow of the garden and the cross, with all its conflict and agony of both body and spirit, he yet remembered and gave a last token of love to his troubled disciples and to us.

Third. A deep sense of unworthiness, so far from keeping us away from the supper, is the very best preparation that we can have to enable us to eat and drink discerning the Lord's body, and so to eat and drink worthily. The very best preparation for the supper is to feel our own sinfulness; for it is only by realizing the exceeding sinfulness of sin that we can discern the body of Jesus, the Savior of sinners.

Fourth. When Paul says, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup," he does not mean that he is to discover in himself any sort of goodness or righteousness by which he may boldly eat and drink; but let him examine himself to see whether by reason of an experience of his own sin he has come to hope only in Jesus, and whether it be his desire to gratify his natural appetites in any way, or to exalt the salvation of God. The poor, humble, sinful sinner cannot eat and drink unworthily, or to his own condemnation.

Fifth. All that is said of the supper in the New Testament restricts it to the churches of the saints. It is emphatically a restricted or close communion.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER
GILBERT BEEBE.

ISAIAH LIX. 20, 21.

"AND the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord: My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

It may be considered somewhat hazardous, while differences of opinion exist between some of our more enlightened brethren on many portions of divine revelation, and especially on those passages which involve the subject of seeds, seminal union, &c., for us to hold up our little taper to those who have failed to see plainly in the radiance of their flaming torches. But we have read the certain dilemma of all the servants of the Lord who seek to save their own lives; and we know by experience that to withhold more than is meet tends to poverty. We do not feel satisfied that we have any right to withhold from our readers such light as we have, be that light ever so small, when it is called for by them, so far as we are favored with opportunity, either from the pulpit or from the press.

In the text proposed for our consideration and comment we have the positive prediction of the advent of the Redeemer to his church, made with unerring certainty, more than seven hundred years before he was born of the virgin Mary. Notwithstanding the awful degeneracy of national Israel, as testified in the preceding part of this chapter, the purpose, promise and decree of God was unshaken. Unto Zion the Redeemer came in the fullness of time, and unto all the Israelites who turned from transgression in Jacob; for there were of Jacob a remnant according to the election of grace, embraced in the redemption of this Redeemer, whose work was to turn away ungodliness from Jacob. To all such the Redeemer was to come, for so the Lord said.

"As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord." The covenant here mentioned is the Lord's covenant; and it is with them, namely, with Zion, and those that turn away from transgression in Jacob. Not a covenant to be made, but a covenant in the possession of God. This is my covenant with them. We do not understand, by the term covenant, a bargain or article of agreement between parties, as when covenants are made between man and man; for in such cases both parties share alike in making it; and they are always yea and nay covenants, involving stipulations and conditions. But the several covenants which God has made with men are his covenants with, or made to embrace them. This particular covenant with Zion and her citizens is definite and particular in regard not only to the people with whom it was made, but also as to its provisions, strength, &c. This covenant recognizes Zion and the reformed members of Jacob as of heavenly anointing. God's Spirit was upon them, and his words he had put in their mouth, and there to remain through out all succeeding generations forever. Here let us observe the sealing of the heirs of immortality, by which they are to be identified in all ages. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon them, and his word is in their mouth; therefore none can be included in the provisions of this covenant who are destitute of the word and Spirit of the living God. Those who are born of God are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is an earnest of their inheritance; and as God's Spirit and his word are in harmony, they go together, and all who are made partakers of the Spirit also taste of the good word of life, and also of the power of the world to come. On the other hand, God puts his words into the mouth of none who are not quickened by his Spirit. We are of God, said the apostle: they that are of God hear us; they that are not of God hear not us: hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error. Boasting is excluded from all those who have the word of God in their mouth; for God himself claims that he has put it there. By the Spirit of God upon, and the words of the Lord in, the church and all her members, we understand that they are all born of his Spirit; and they are also all taught of God, and all governed by the Spirit which is upon them, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him. His word is in their mouth, not only as the food on which they subsist, the fat things full of marrow on which they feast, the new song which they sing, but his words are in their mouths as the theme and subject of their testimony. His words to them are like apples of gold in pictures of silver; the saints eat them, and find them sweeter than honey or the honey comb. His words are in their mouth as their countersign or Shibboleth; for "if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." But this covenant provides that the Spirit of the Lord "which is upon thee [Zion and the redeemed ones of Jacob], shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed," forever.

We now approach that part of the text on which our brother desires us to dwell more particularly, "Thy seed," and "thy seed's seed," &c. If we are correct, and we think we cannot be mistaken, in understanding the Zion or church of God and her members to be spoken of in the third person, "them," then is the Lord's covenant with his church and people, and the seed to whom the Spirit and word of God is secured is the church's seed, &c. Who then is the seed of the church? Our pedobaptist neighbors solemnly aver that it is the natural progeny, after the flesh, of the church members; but our Bible tells us that they who are the children of the flesh are not the children of God. And as flesh and blood cannot inherit or constitute the kingdom of Christ, Jerusalem which is above is not the mother of the flesh. For ourself we have no difficulty in understanding that Christ is the seed of the woman, which was to bruise the serpent's head. The church is evidently represented in Rev. xii. 1-5, "And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God and his throne." The prophet Isaiah in the connection of our subject identifies Christ as the recipient of the very provisions of this covenant, saying, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me," &c.—Isaiah lxi. 1.

Having, as we trust, shown that the promise of the covenant in our text was made to the church, and that her seed was Christ (unto her he was a "child born," and a "son given," whose name is Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, and the Everlasting Father, and the government is on his shoulder—the Redeemer who came out of Zion, to turn away ungodliness from Jacob), we have next to speak of her seed's seed. And truly it was ordained that her seed should be the Everlasting Father of a seed, as it is written, "A seed shall serve him, it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. He shall see his seed, and prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." The children of God are fully recognized as his seed or children. "In bringing many sons unto glory." "Behold I, and the children which God hath given me. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same," &c. Now, in this view of the text we regard the covenant to secure to the church of God the pledge that the Spirit of God which was upon his people from of old, from everlasting, and the words of God which began to be spoken by holy men of old who spake as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost, and which have been subsequently spoken unto us by his Son personally and in incarnation, shall never depart from the Head or body or members of the church of God forever. The same Spirit that inspired the prophets of the Most High God was without measure upon Christ in his Mediatorial Headship of the church; and that same Spirit confirmed the same words and clothed them with omnipotent power to execute the designs of their author; and that same Spirit is upon all the members of that mystical body of which the Anointed One is the Head; and the covenant of God assures us that neither the Spirit nor the words shall ever depart.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

LARGE TYPE SMALL BIBLES.

WE would especially call attention to the advertisement on last page, of small, light Bibles, printed in large full-faced type. While these Bibles weigh only from two to three pounds they are printed in large full-faced type that can be easily read by those whose sight is failing.

They are a most convenient size for holding in the hands to read, or to carry when traveling.

The extended covers lap over and protect the edges of the leaves.

CORRESPONDENCE.

fillment of the law in its precepts is all that could be required of man in his sinless condition, and also of angels. The second man, even our Brother, the Lord from heaven, was different. He was made under the law, but it was a broken law. Thus he was made under its curse. This is implied; for he was made of a woman who was a transgressor, and thus he was made a curse for us.—Gal. iii. 13. Justice required that he should fulfill not only the precept but also the penalty of a broken law; all its threatenings as well as its demands. The law is not abolished even now if the love of God is in the heart; for his law is now written there, fulfilled for us and in us, the righteousness of God, the most important of all Scripture, and least understood. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because therein the righteousness of God is revealed. It is not a method of salvation, nor divine clemency, nor does it consist in man's conformity to the divine will; but it is God's righteousness itself given to man by faith, or by the Spirit, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. It is ours by gift, by promise, by an assurance of faith. His righteousness is imputed and imparted unto us. "By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." "By his own blood he entered in once, having obtained eternal redemption." This reaches back to the fall and to eternity. "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." Adam's paradise was an earthly one; it was corrupted and defiled, and faded away; but God's people are begotten unto "an inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled, and fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." All our enemies must be subdued. "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."—1;Cor. xv. 25. "For this cause was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil," and thus deliver the captive. The Redeemer has a feeling knowledge of man's slavery to sin and Satan. The work of the Redeemer is to turn man from the power of Satan unto God. "But now hath he reconciled us by the death of his Son." Thus the judgment of God hath found its completion in the death of his Son, and through him are we reconciled unto God, with his blood. In addition to this, he hath made us kings and priests unto God. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners." These are the only objects of salvation. The promise was made to the woman, and her children were predestinated to have a vital covenant union, when as yet here were none of them. All spiritual blessings were given us in him before the foundation of the world. The life of the Son of God is one of them, and given unto us in time. To redeem means to take back that held by one who is not the proper owner, and that there was something due that is now paid, or one in bondage is delivered. Jesus is our kinsman to redeem, having the right as a brother and by gift. "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me." Jesus said, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him." The Father draws his rebellious children to the Redeemer, to be brought back to God. Christ hath obtained eternal redemption for us. The redeemed must be brought back, and away out of bondage. For the dominion of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the dominion of the law of sin and death, from even the law of sin that is in me through the fall. Christ is a quickening Spirit, giving life from the dead. Yes, "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Jesus has made me free from the dominion of sin. The Spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. This restoration to communion with God is revealed to have sprung from God, who promised it to the first aggressors, and it has been the beacon light to man under the patriarchal and the legal and prophetic dispensations, and especially under the lost inheritance ordained by a near kinsman, who was therefore entitled the redeemer of the family, to whom the inheritance belonged. Thus the heirship of a patrimony was to be recovered and preserved entire in the family; not by an alien, but by next of kin, or brother. Nor was this all: if his brother's or kinsman's blood was shed, he became the avenger of that blood. Thus our Brother hath avenged our death. He came into the world to destroy the works of the devil, who had alienated our inheritance. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Eph. iv. 8-13. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people."—Luke i. 68. The language of heaven is, that Jesus has redeemed his saints unto God by his blood.—Rev. v. 9. "Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting."—Isa. lxviii. 16. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." I make the point, "who were dead." Can a thing be dead that had not lived? Have we not felt both the death and the life? Jesus said, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." We cannot live even then alone; but Jesus said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Our life is not in our keeping, but is hid with Christ in God. So it is not what we are in and of ourselves, as was Adam, but what he is to us. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Thus, being joined to the Lord, we are one spirit with him; and with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Lord the Spirit. "They shall be my people, and I will be their God." Paul said, "The life I now live in the flesh, I lived by the faith of the Son of God," or as led by the Spirit, and kept by the power of God through faith, and taught by the Spirit. The fallen man is now redeemed from Satan and endowed with the Spirit of Christ. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." Some say, "Exercise faith; take God at his written word. A simple faith in a simple fact is all that is necessary." But we want the witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. That witness is sure and steadfast. What unspeakable hope and praise are in those who believe in Jesus! How good to find God's word to man in all ages agreeing in the same truth, confirming the same, and giving knowledge of salvation.

"Grace fits the new-born soul for heaven,
But truth informs him how."

He learns from experience and the Scriptures that he still has his fallen nature; that he cannot do the things he would; that sin is to be abhorred; that the power of the serpent is still felt. But sin does not reign. Grace reigns. "For the law [or dominion] of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." That is, that which has been hitherto the actuating principle within us (sin and death) is now to be met and mastered by another principle, the law of life, of which the holy Spirit of God is the author and sustainer. As by natural life we are connected with the first Adam, and made partakers of his fallen nature, so by the Holy Spirit we are now united with the second Adam, and made partakers of his glorified nature. Then is redemption complete for time. The flesh is not made spirit, and hence the warfare. We have to feel the plague of the fall while here. Jesus said, "The spirit is indeed willing, but the flesh is weak." That is our experience. "But God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." This is putting all things under our feet by the Captain of our salvation, who shall bring the redeemed off more than conquerors, having now the mind of Christ. He shall change these vile bodies, and then will redemption be complete for eternity. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, who came into the world to destroy the works of the devil.

JOHN THORNE.

709 CALVERT ST., BALTIMORE, Md.

BRUNSWICK, Maine, Dec. 29, 1895.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—MY DEAR BROTHER:—I was glad at the coming of your letter, and prized it very highly, for I know your cares must be many. You would have received two more letters from me before this time if I had not been so busy, for I have wished many times that I could have a talk with you concerning the things which are so precious to me. The Lord is good to me; for with my daily work and cares he leads my mind into the truth, and gives me the joy of his salvation, so that I often forget I am working while I have a feast of fat things. Sometimes a passage of Scripture is unfolded to me, and the work of redemption shines so beautifully that my heart is filled with a song of praise to God. I cannot always use my voice to sing on account of a throat trouble caused by diphtheria, and at such times I am made to realize more fully that the sweet song of praise in my heart is the Lord's work. It rises up like incense, and no earthly music can be found which is so satisfying as the "new song." At other times one after another of those whom I esteem highly in the truth comes into my mind, and I have an association, for it is pleasant to feel that gladness spring up in my heart which is felt when I am permitted to meet the saints face to face. When you and others whom I have heard declare the unsearchable riches of Christ come into my mind, even if I cannot remember the words you used to express what the Lord gave you, yet that truth is so written in my heart that not one particle of the sermon is lost—the preaching is still there. If the kingdom of God has been set up in my heart it can never be overthrown. There have been many times when I have felt the sweet assurance that the "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," were the kingdom of God within my heart.

"A kingdom which can ne'er decay,
While time sweeps earthly thrones away;
The state which power and truth sustain Unmoved forever must remain.

"There shall your eyes with rapture view
The glorious Friend that died for you;
That died to ransom, died to raise,
To crowns of joy and songs of praise."

When by faith we have a view of the kingdom of God, we see the meek and lowly Lamb of God bearing the sins of his people in his own body on the tree, going down into the tomb, and finally rising from the dead, bringing all his chosen ones with him, so that death could have no more power over them. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

I thought when I began this that I would try to make a suitable reply to your welcome letter; but my pen has followed my mind, and I am afraid now that you will never receive just such a letter as I would like to write. I am glad you are willing that I should write to you when I have the desire and opportunity, and I will try not to impose upon you. I am also glad that you still have fellowship after meeting me. It is a comfort to me to be assured by my brethren that they have gained the evidence that I have been taught of the Lord, have walked and talked with Jesus, and learned of him. I have been made to realize that no good thing can ever be found dwelling in my flesh, and that my heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, full of enmity against God; and I cannot express the loneliness and desolation I feel when the sweet spiritual comforts are not in exercise. It has been the will of God that these night seasons should not be very long with me; but he leads me in a way to have no confidence in the flesh, and causes me to know that when "joy cometh in the morning" it is a rejoicing in Christ Jesus. He is the one I desire to praise and exalt, for he is my all and in all. There was one sentence in your letter which remained with me many days, and I wished I could write you all my thoughts. It was in regard to your preaching. "I hand out to them such as I hope the Lord gives me." I have felt so many times while listening to preaching that the Lord filled the earthen vessel, and the ministers could not break the bread. It must be broken by Jesus, and given to them; and you all do hand out just what the Lord gives you, and not a crumb of the glorious gospel is lost. He feeds every child of grace, and nothing can hurt which comes from him. I used to think that ministers did not know much about darkness, were not troubled with evil thoughts, and were always ready to preach; but I soon found they were the very ones who knew the plague of their own heart, were made to realize their dependence upon God for words to speak, and were led so that they could comfort the people of God with the comfort wherewith they had been comforted. The Lord calls and prepares his ministers to preach Christ and him crucified, and they cannot hand out any works of man to merit salvation. The work of redemption is all in Jesus.

I am shut in for the winter, but the days are passing swiftly away. Many blessings are bestowed upon me every moment, and when I have an opportunity to write I wish to be found speaking of the goodness and power of the Lord. In being kept from meeting the saints I think sometimes makes me prize their company more highly than if I met them every Sunday. Then again I feel sure that if the love of God were not kept in exercise in my heart I should not desire to meet with them as I do, and if it were in exercise I should enjoy seeing them every day. I am made to realize that I am dependent upon God for everything. How good it is that there is a throne of grace to which we can go, and where we find a God who knows all that we need before we ask him; who gives us the spirit of prayer, and enables us to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done." He gives us reconciliation to his will, and we can desire no more.

When I learned that Elder Beebe had sent another of my letters for you to publish, my first thought was, What will Elder Jenkins do with him? The next thought made me smile, because it cleared Elder Beebe from all blame, as I was the one you would have to settle with. I do feel that you will not allow a sentence in one of my letters to be published which does not declare the truth. I was pleased when Elder Keene told me that you wrote him you liked to have correspondents who did not wait for you to answer their letters, for I like to write to those who are busy, and do not want them to feel that I am waiting for an answer. I should expect a letter by return mail if I wrote not the truth. I am truly glad to receive letters; but if the brethren answered every one I should not dare to write so many as I do. I hope that next year you will be able to attend both meetings in Maine, and sister Jenkins come with you. May our God draw near unto us, and make us realize that he will guide and direct us.

Your sister in hope,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

ANSLEY, Neb., Feb. 25, 1896.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—On Sunday morning, Feb. 23d, the writer took the morning train at this place for a visit with the brethren at York, Neb., it being the regular meeting day of the church at that place. I had intended to go the day before, but was hindered by sickness in my family. Arriving at York at 11:10 a. m., I hastened to the house of Elder Waggoner, who is the only one of the York brethren I had ever met, and learned that the forenoon service was to be held at the house of brother B. R. Simmons. I reached the appointed place in time to hear all the service, which, on account of the Elder's extreme weakness, occasioned by an attack of the Grippe, was very brief. There was quite a company of lovers of the truth present, and all seemed to enjoy the meeting. The Elder thought best not to try to talk in the evening, but he continued to preach to us whenever we were not engaged in singing, all the time we were with him. His voice was very weak, but his well chosen sentences were powerful to the expounding of the deep and mysterious truths of the Scriptures, and exposing the errors and deceptions of the popular religions of the day.

His mind seemed to grasp nothing else, and I thought within me how true are the words of Christ when he said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." I have often wondered why a faithful servant of God is incapable of maintaining himself and family in the ordinary business of life, and think I can see the complete solution of the problem in the case of Elder Waggoner. He loves the brethren, and no duty seems impressed upon his mind but simply ministering unto them.

After a very refreshing season with these precious brethren I started for home at 12:36 on yesterday, fully determined, if the Lord wills, to attend the next regular meeting of the church, which will be the fourth Sunday in March and the Saturday before.

Elder Cooper, who is the pastor of the York Church, had been called back to David City by a message announcing the death of a relative; hence I did not enjoy the privilege of meeting him.

Your unworthy brother in a precious hope,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Near Monongahela, Pa., Feb. 23d, 1896, sister Louisa Shanton, wife of brother John Shanton, aged 76 years.

She was baptized by Elder Winnet on June 1st, 1872, in the fellowship of the Maple Creek Primitive Baptist Church, of which she continued a faithful member while she lived. Previous to her death she had been a sufferer from dropsy, which, together with paralysis, caused her death. In her last suffering she expressed a desire to die, and she did not fear death. She also said that she believed she was one of those for whom Christ died. Her husband and friends have the comfortable evidence to believe that she has gone to rest, there to dwell with God, with Christ and his redeemed forever.

The writer was called from his home by telegraphic message to attend the funeral, and preached from Revelation xiv. 13, to a large and attentive congregation, though it was a mixed multitude, composed of members of several denominations; after which the body of our dear sister was conveyed to the Frey cemetery, there to await the resurrection day, when this mortal shall put on immortality, this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and our vile bodies shall be changed, and fashioned like the glorious body of the dear Redeemer.

Sister Shanton left no children to mourn the loss of a mother, and brother Shanton seems to be left alone in his declining years. May the Lord bless and comfort him with the blessed consolations of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

J. N. BARTLETT.

ASTOR, W. Va., March 8, 1896.

Lucretia Gipson departed this life Feb. 28th, 1896, at the home of her daughter, sister and Mr. J. B. Rish, near Adell, Parker Co., Texas.

Sister Gipson was born in Monroe Co., Ky., March 23d, 1819, and was a daughter of John and Lavira Ray. She moved with her parents to Morgan Co., Ill., and afterward she moved to Caddo Parish, La., where in 1843 she was married to Leray L. Gipson. To them were born four sons and four daughters. Two sons and two daughters preceded her to the grave. She professed a hope in the dear Redeemer and was baptized about the year 1855 in the fellowship of Mt. Gilead Church, Upshur Co., Texas, by Elder Alfred Heifner. Her husband died June 4th, 1865. She was a widow indeed. She had been a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES more than thirty years. She had the first volume of the book of "Editorials," which with her Bible she prized above all things. She had the satisfaction in her old age of seeing one of her sons, Elder S. Gipson, of Rice, Texas, ordained to the work of the ministry, and of hearing him preach the faith once delivered to the saints. She was indeed a mother in Israel, always ready to encourage her brethren and sisters in the discharge of duty. Her seat was never vacant in the meetings of the church when it was possible for her to be there. Her membership was in the Poolville Church. Her sufferings were great from a complication of diseases, and of a dropsical nature. I visited her several times, and spent one day and night with her a few days before she died. In the midst of her dreadful sufferings she would extol the Lord for his mercies, and said, "The will of God be done." She often told me that she was ready to go, and prayed for a speedy release. It is impossible to speak of all she said and did.

At the family residence, on the 29th, by request of the relatives, I tried in much weakness to speak words of comfort to them from Hebrews ii. 6; after which her body was followed to the family burial-ground by a large concourse of relatives and friends, and there laid at rest, to await the resurrection morn.

I will say to her children, We are satisfied that our loss is her eternal gain. Though dead, she yet speaketh. Try to emulate her example, deny yourselves, take up your cross daily, and follow Jesus through all reports. May God bless you all, and give you to say, The Lord doeth it all well.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

PSALM CXXII. 1.

WITHIN the temple thou hast built Dwells, Lord, perpetual praise;
Ten thousand souls redeemed from guilt
Their happy voices raise.

Within these gates the holy tribes
With willing feet have trod,
And each, exulting, glad ascribes
Salvation to the Lord.

But chief among the glories there
Is the all-glorious one!
Let each beholding saint prepare
A new and nobler song.

The God of glory deigns to dwell
With men of sinful race;
Within his temple sinners tell
The triumphs of his grace.

Abiding here, with gladdened eyes
They see the God of peace;
Their souls are filled with sweet surprise,
And all their conflicts cease.

O Lord, my chief desire is this,
That I may enter here, Dwell with thy saints, and share their bliss,
And banish all my fear.

FAINT, YET PURSUING.

(Judges viii. 4.)

BEAUTIFUL children of Jesus, who stray, Faint, yet pursuing, o'er life's stormy
way;

Blossoms of peace in this desert of sin,
Homely without, but how glorious within!

Not with the beauty which springs from below,
But the oil of the Spirit in rich overflow.

Beautiful children of Jesus! their song,
Swollen to river, flows ceaselessly on;
Sweeter than cooing of dove to its mate, Tenser than passion, and stronger than fate.

One is its substance, and one its refrain,
Unto him that hath bought us and washed from sin's stain.

Beautiful children of Jesus! their tears, Bottled away, like hid crystals, through years;

Crushed from wrung hearts that were full with a woe
Which the son of the alien feels not, nor can know.

They mourn, as did Mary, that ravishing sight,

Which, just as they caught it, swift vanished in light.

Beautiful children of Jesus! that throne
Where they silently gather, apart and alone,

Is central to each, as the sun in the sky,
Whence the voice of the Shepherd drops tender and nigh,

"It is, O my loved one, my fair, chosen bride,

In the cleft of the rock I have bidden thee hide."

Beautiful children of Jesus! they sup
Of the wine he hath poured in their life's trembling cup;

And now it is bitter with sorrow for sin,

And now with thanksgiving flows over the brim.

Mysterious puzzle, so old, yet so true:
Rich saint and poor sinner, he's one, and yet two.

Courage, fair children of Jesus, who stray,

Faint, yet pursuing, o'er God's purposed
way;

Softer than stars of the twilight ye shine
In the blue heaven's firmament, each in his time;

Held in his hand, as the wheat in the ear,
Till, like century flowers, fully blown ye appear.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GENESIS III. 8.

"AND they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden."

By the request of W. A. Burns, Hope, Indian Territory, I will write some of the thoughts which I hope the Lord has given me on the above subject. I trust I do feel the solemnity of such an undertaking, with the certain knowledge that unless the Spirit of the same Lord whose voice Adam and his wife heard walking in the garden dictates the thoughts and guides the pen it will be of no use to brother Burns or any of the Lord's dear people. The church of God never has, nor ever can, feed upon husks. When the natural ear alone is tickled and the natural senses awakened by natural seed falling into the ground (even if it is good ground and prepared of the Lord), it will not take root, neither bear fruit, because there is no life in that kind of seed. But the Lord God of Israel, if it so pleaseth him, can make even my pen write things to the praise of the glory of his grace, and to the comfort and satisfying of his waiting, hungry poor. Our God never does aught in vain. If he prepares food for his flock, he also prepares the flock to receive it. He causes them to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and for righteousness' sake they are filled.

"And they heard." Although the Old Testament Scriptures abound in figurative language, in types and in shadows of momentous events yet to come to pass, still the same inspiration that guided the pen of the early writers does in this gospel day lift the veil of the mystery of the invisible things of God to the eye of faith. Therefore we must conclude that the experience of grace in the hearts of our first parents was the same experience of grace that possesses the hearts of the children of God now. The same things that Adam and Eve "heard" while in the garden, are also heard by every one that is born of God. The secret things of God are invisible, yet we see them with the eye of faith. They are also out of reach of the hearing of the natural ear, but they are distinctly heard by the ear of faith.

The work of grace in the heart of man does not change with the natural changes produced by time. God does not change, neither is there any variableness in him; therefore he saith, "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." But in the onward course of time changes in nature are constantly occurring. The environments of our first parents were not the same as is the surroundings of the church at this date; and when we read that which Moses was inspired to write, we are apt to be led away from the path of light by the natural theory that Adam and Eve heard with their natural ears the supernatural things that were spoken to them, they being the selfsame things which are brought to our hearing through the faith of the Son God.

"The voice of the Lord God."
This is the voice Adam and Eve heard. They had sinned, they had died, as God told them they would "surely" do. They were now realizing the terrors of conviction under a broken and violated law. Before eating of the forbidden fruit they rolled sin as a sweet morsel under their tongue, yet unconscious of the terror of the result. They were tempted by the serpent, and the temptation was pleasant and seduc-tive. The serpent lied to them, and said, "Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." As Jesus said of him, "He is a liar, and the father of it." But now the act of disobedience has been accomplished, their eyes are opened, they know that they are naked. As the rich man who died and was buried, "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," so these two in the torment of conviction for sin, hear the voice that brings terror to their souls. The thunders of Sinai were not greater than the terrible voice of an offended God. It is not the voice that is audible to the natural ear.

The rich man was dead and buried, yet he saw Lazarus in Abraham's bosom. Adam and Eve were dead, and buried in an abyss of sin, and they heard. Who of the Lord's people will not say, Why, this is just my experience when I became a conscious sinner, when I found myself justly condemned, dead and buried, yet alive to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and to see the church of the living God separated from me by a great chasm, and alive to hear the voice of condemnation driving me out of the garden of pleasant fruits I once occupied. Of course it is your experience; and that voice was no clearer or louder to the two in the garden than it was to you; yet you can say of a truth,
My natural ear heard no voice.

Of him whose voice they heard, I would say a few words. "The Lord God." The deep signification of this double title given to our heavenly Father is made manifest clearly, in our experience alone. The awful sublimity of the character of the Creator of all worlds and of all people enters into our soul only when our eyes are opened to the deformity of our depraved and carnal nature.
"God!" The infinite, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, author and finisher of all things, upon whom no man could look and live. "Lord!"
The sovereign ruler of all events, reigning and ruling in providence and in grace, with holiness, justice, judgment and goodness. When the eyes of Adam and Eve, and of every child of Jehovah, are opened, and they know they are naked, they become cognizant also to a very small extent of this divine character whose voice they heard "Walking in the garden." Just as the Scripture reads, so is it. They verily heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden. But we must keep in mind all the time that they heard not with their natural ears, but under the exercise of faith. The thief who has stolen his neighbor's goods, thereby violating the law of his commonwealth, has his natural ear strained for every footstep, every sound, his mind is continually upon his pursuers. The sighing of the wind, the babbling of the brook, and every noise, causes him to stop, and tremble, and listen, then slink away to some hiding-place. So the sinner under the conviction for sin. He realizes his just condemnation, and he shrinks from it. He dreads the coming of his Lord. The cry of his whole being is, I have sinned. His blackened soul listens for that dread coming. And now the voice comes. It is as though the whole garden is full of footsteps, and all coming to him filled with accusations. Everything that he sees and hears condemns him. Even the beasts of the field that he has just named say unto him, Thou hast sinned. The trees that were so pleasant yesterday to look upon, seem now to frown upon him and droop their heads in very shame. Walking in the garden? Yes, all created things take on the voice of the Lord God, and come towards him, filling him with the terror of the guilty.

"In the cool of the day." Brother Burns requested that I write especially on this clause of the subject, and I will gladly do so if I am given thought upon it. The things of time are used by the inspired writers to present to our finite minds things spiritual. At best we all see but as in a glass darkly while in the flesh. We see in part, and know in part. Our understanding is so limited that we must have contrasts and comparisons in order to portray the view of heavenly things arrayed before us. The "cool of the day" suggests to us the evening tide, when the sun with its warmth and vitalizing rays has hidden behind the western hills. A time of solitude and quietness. The dew is falling upon the parched ground and withered grass. All nature seems to be hushed as though awaiting the approach of darkness. The heat of the day is past, and tired nature seeks a resting-place. Cool zephyrs spring up from the mountain side and pearly brook. The excitement of the day is over, and we can now sit down with pleasant meditation of duties performed, and God's mercies shown; or mayhap painful regrets of disobedience in sinful lusts fill our soul. Surely the latter was the case with the two in the garden. The sun had set upon their abiding place among the pleasant fruits. No more could they enjoy the things that were before so delightful to them. You have sinned, is the echo that comes from every quarter of the garden. The "cool of the day" then in nature is when everything that has been alive through the day is swallowed up in the fast coming darkness. And the "cool of the day" in the christian experience is when everything that was bright and pleasant in the world is being enveloped in the darkness of death because of sin. "Where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound." The strong man is bound at the coming of the stronger. And now, as it was with the apostle, as it was with Adam and Eve, so also it is with you and me, "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment which was ordained to life I found to be unto death." When the convicted first parents realized the enormity of their act of disobedience, and heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden, they manifested that experience which is presented in the "cool of the day." Everything was for the time swallowed up in the blackness of the darkness of sin, so great that it could be felt, their sorrow for it, and their anguish and fear because of it.

"And Adam and his wife hid themselves." The depravity of their hearts was made known to them. Their vile nature lay naked and open before him with whom they had to do; and for very shame and fear and dread they hid themselves. It was at such a time as this in the trials of Job, when he said, "Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, There is a man child conceived. Let that day be darkness; let not God regard it from above, neither let the light shine upon it. Let darkness and the shadow of death stain it; let a cloud dwell upon it. Let the blackness of the day terrify it." And was it not also a time with you and I that we wished we had never been born, or that we had been a beast of the field, instead of a conscious, heavily burdened sinner, so laden with guilt that we could hide ourselves from everything that reminded us of a just and holy God?

"From the presence of the Lord God." Through all our pilgrimage journey in an experience of grace the only glimpse of heaven we obtain is the "presence of the Lord God;" and this is heaven. When Jacob in his night vision in the wilderness saw the ladder reaching from heaven to earth, and on it the angels ascending and descending (The ladder, Jesus, the Mediator of the New Testament between God and fallen man), he said, "How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." The poet said, "'Tis a heaven below my Redeemer to know." But Adam and Eve had not yet come to know the heaven of joy in redeeming grace. They were not in the felt presence of the Lord God. His voice they heard, and by the thunder of that voice they dreaded his presence. They were crushed under the law thunders of Sinai. But Jesus was not yet revealed as "the end of the law for righteousness." Is it any wonder, then, that they fled from the awful presence of the Lord God, and hid themselves?

"Amongst the trees of the garden." What was the first thing you did when you first became a conscious, sensible sinner? Did you not go right to work trying to save yourself? Did you not flee from the presence of the Lord God, and do your very best to obtain favor in his sight by your own works? Did you not think by bringing many sacrifices of "wood, hay and stubble" that you would palliate the anger of a holy God? And in doing all that, did you not hide "amongst the trees of the garden?" or, in other words, did you not shun to ask counsel of God, depending upon creature efforts and a fleshly arm to obtain your salvation? The trees of the garden are clearly typical of the works of the flesh, which works are antagonistic to the fruit of the Spirit. The Spirit's work in the children of disobedience is life and light, showing them a heart "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," a tongue unruly and difficult to curb, feet prone to wander into forbidden paths, a mind which is enmity to God; indeed the whole body a charnel house of dead and evil things. Adam and Eve, writhing under a guilty conscience, recognized in their knowledge of good and evil the warfare going on within them. Hiding amongst the trees of the garden, hiding in the lusts of our sinful flesh, we find not to be a secure hiding-place from the all-seeing eye of the Lord God. He knoweth even the secret intents and thoughts of every heart. He searcheth our reins, and comprehendeth every evil thing in us. We would often flee from his presence, but he is everywhere present. The psalmist concluded this when he said, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me." We cannot at all times realize his gracious presence, though he be always with us. And when we feel that our way is hard and difficult to travel, that the mercies of the Lord God are clean gone forever, our trials almost more than we can bear, we see no rift in the cloud. But after the storm-cloud has passed over we can look back, realizing that the Lord has directed every step of our journey in infinite wisdom and love. "Whom he loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth;" yet "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them which are exercised thereby." All that the inspired writer tells us in these first chapters of Genesis of Adam and Eve, sets forth in figure, both typical and conclusive, the wisdom of God in the way and plan of salvation, which way and plan includes the condition of man before the fall, the temptation, the fall, and every subsequent necessity, from the city of destruction to the cross of Christ, to the celestial city. First, the condition of man; not made able to stand, neither liable to fall, but according to the unalterable decree which proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord God. "For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Second, the temptation. This presents God's absolute sovereignty over all things. The weakness of man and inability to withstand the temptation was given him of God according to his sovereign pleasure.

The serpent had power only (also given him of God) to present the temptation; beyond that the serpent's power could not go; but the divine decree was above and beyond all. Third, the fall, or rather that which is called the fall. Man did not fall. From whence could he fall? He merely manifested in the transgression that which was already inherent in his creation, and all that followed is but the manifestation of the things which were all completed in the mind and purpose of God before the worlds were made.

DEAR BROTHERS EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I am in receipt of an interesting letter from sister Margaret A. Jacobs, of Lancaster, Iowa, in which she speaks of her being an old, lonely widow, and says, "I would like for you to give your views on the sixth vial of God's wrath poured out upon the earth."

Now, dear sister, you have imposed upon me a task which I fully realize I am incapable of filling, and would not attempt to do so if it were not for your earnest desire to know more of the teaching of the Spirit, and your lonely condition, as expressed in your letter, in which you say we are strangers in the flesh, but, you hope, not in the Spirit. If we are not strangers in the Spirit, evidently we are members of the great family of our God, and children of his spiritual kingdom. Surely the members of the same family should not hesitate to talk to each other upon the great, wonderful and to us seemingly mysterious truths given to them in love and mercy by their heavenly Father. He says to them, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."—Rev. ii. 7.

John addressed the seven churches which were in Asia, and said, "Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from the seven spirits which are before his throne."—Rev. i. 4. In the Scriptures seven is a perfect number; and the seven churches in Asia, and what was said to each of them, applies to all the true churches in all ages, lands and climes, from the period in which John received and wrote on that lone isle those great, wonderful and (to the natural man) mysterious prophetic revelations, and gave them to us in symbols. Then verily the children of the kingdom should not hesitate to talk to each other upon those heavenly truths, although what they may say or write may be feeble and far from affording them comfort, as I fear what I may now offer to that dear old sister may be. But our glorious Lord set up his kingdom, his church, in the world where sin and iniquity abound. In the long lapse of time, from the giving of those revelations to John up to the present, persecutions of the most revolting character have been extended to God's dear people by bloodthirsty, wicked men, because those dear people were not of this world, and would not worship the gods of this world. But the apostle says, "It is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."—Rom. xii. 19. God from the dawn of time has taken vengeance upon the wicked. Cain was wicked, and in his wickedness slew his brother. But the Lord said to him, "And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand. When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee its full strength. A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth."—Gen. iv 11, 12.

The prophet says, "Art thou not from everlasting, O my God, mine Holy One?" "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity."—Hab. i. 12. The prophet Isaiah says, "Woe unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him; for the reward of his hands shall be given him."—Isaiah iii. 11.

But John says, "And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth."—Rev. xvi. 1. He says in the twelfth verse, "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." It may be that this is prophecy given to us in symbol, and should not be regarded in its literal import. Surely at no period in the history of the world has the great river Euphrates, which Moses saw from the heights of Pisgah, been dried up. Then it behooves us to inquire as to what is symbolized by that language. God in his infinite wisdom has in all ages provided for the punishment of the wicked who have oppressed his people, as he did in the case of Pharaoh, who would not let the people go, but was drowned with his host in the Red Sea for his iniquity and rebellion against God. So it was with Catholic Rome, which extended to God's redeemed people the most cruel oppressions and punishments; but, like Pharaoh, he must let the people go. I believe that the commencement of the pouring out of the sixth vial of God's wrath was the beginning of the decline of Rome. God had raised up Luther, Calvin, Zwingle and others, who boldly protested against the corruptions of the old Mother of Harlots who rode upon the scarlet colored beast. As soon as those protests were made known, true Christians began to rejoice and take courage, for the dawning of the day of their delivery from the power of that Roman oligarchy had then begun. But it required time, as it did in the delivery of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. In the eighteenth century it, to a great extent, culminated by the great wars in Europe; but the pope was not entirely shorn of his power till in the nineteenth century; yet all Europe was effected more or less by the spirit of Catholicism. They brought many of the relics out of that most corrupt organization, and attempted to store them away into what they called Protestant churches; for that they were justly called the daughters of the old Mother of Harlots. Henry VIII., king of England, established or founded the Episcopal church. It was called a Protestant church, and he was made head of that church. The true church has but one Head, and he is King of kings and Lord of lords. But the church of England was established by the laws of that realm, and sustained by taxes levied upon the people in a form similar to laws and taxes enacted by Rome and levied by that government to sustain the Catholic church. Hence both of those so-called churches were of this world. But our Lord said, "My kingdom is not of this world." Our Lord has said, "And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily."—Luke xviii. 7, 8. The time had come in the eighteenth century when he would avenge his elect. Then the waters of the Euphrates were dried up; or in other words, all hindrances to the removal of the great enemies of Europe were removed, and they were brought together in deadly combat.

Of the opening of the sixth seal, which was synchronous with the pouring out of the sixth vial of God's wrath, John says, "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." No natural phenomena produces greater commotion among the people than a great earthquake. Dread, fear and alarm seize all classes where it prevails; and this was the condition of the people throughout Europe in that century while those great wars were going on. Gunpowder had been invented and was freely used as a motive power in battle. Thus to the soldiers, while in those deadly conflicts, the smoke obscured the sun, and it became as invisible to them as if it had been a sheet of sackcloth, and at night the smoke caused the moon to appear to them as blood, or red as blood. Then these symbols fitly represent those great conflicts when a wicked and perverse people were suffering from the pouring out of the sixth vial of God's wrath. Then God was avenging his own elect, who had cried unto him day and night. Alas! how awful it is for us poor beings of earth to fall into the hands of the sin-avenging God.

I may have erred in regard to the period of time when the people who had persecuted God's dear people first began to suffer from the pouring out of the sixth vial of God's wrath. Perhaps it may have begun at the downfall of Constantinople in 1453, and continued to the close of the French Revolution in 1815. But be that error or not, it is known to all who have seriously thought on the subject that the suffering of the people of Europe during that period was most intense. One historian says, "The history of the world has no parallel to that long night of darkness and suffering, because it has none to the guilt which preceded it. Tyranny never assumed so hideous a form, because licentiousness never required so severe a punishment. So terrible was the spectacle, so vehement the agitation of the multitude, that numbers compared it to the awful spectacle that awaits us at the day of judgment."—Allison's History of Europe, Vol. 1, page 224. The same historian says, "In the short space of four years there was destroyed of both sexes and of all ages in battle, with the sword, by shooting and with the guillotine, at least two millions of persons in France alone, besides what died of disease and famine. When we remember that all Europe was engaged in that deadly strife, we are made to believe that the number who lost their lives almost baffles calculation." Surely God doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?—Daniel iv. 35. He will avenge his own elect. The pouring out of that vial of God's wrath, though beheld by John centuries before it was accomplished, yet it was done to punish a wicked and corrupt people who had led thousands of God's people to the scaffold and slaughter, because they would not sacrifice to the gods of this world. We rejoice to know that God has ever had a people on earth who are the sheep of his pasture, the remnant according to the election of grace; and he will avenge them, and has avenged them ever since he sent Cain out a poor vagabond on the earth for slaying his brother. The spirit that predominated in Cain is the same that has controlled the unregenerate in their persecutions of God's dear people through all the past ages. The offering made by Abel was in faith, and to it God had respect. Cain was a tiller of the ground, and his offering was the result of his own works; and because his offering was not accepted he was very wroth, and his countenance fell. And so it is, has been, and will ever be, that the natural man, whom Cain fully represents, being ignorant of God's righteousness, goes about to establish his own righteousness, which is a system of works; not knowing that pure water cannot proceed from a corrupt fountain; not knowing that which is pure does not proceed from that which is impure; not knowing that he is under the curse of God's law by reason of sin, and that all his works are like himself, impure and unholy. He does not know that God is holy, and will not accept an unholy offering, an offering which proceeds from that on which the curse of God rests. Therefore his system of works on which he is depending, in whole or in part, is all under the curse of God. The earth was cursed for man's sake, and Cain offered the fruits of the earth on which that curse rested. The natural man has been, in all the ages of the world, offering his own works as the ground of his claim for life and salvation from the curse of that law which declares to him, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Because his offering is not accepted, he has made war on all who trust in the Lord, hoping and trusting that in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. The vials of God's wrath have been poured out on the earth during past ages, and will continue to be so poured, till the seventh vial is empty. Then the end will come, and God will call his redeemed from the cold caverns of the tomb, clothe them with a blessed and glorious immortality, and take them to dwell with him throughout the unending cycles of eternity. There may we meet, dear sister, and join the heavenly host in one eternal chorus of praise to him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb, to go out no more, is the sincere prayer of this old and afflicted one.

It is with some reluctance that I now attempt to write for the press, owing to the greatly deranged condition of my nervous system; but the brethren editors of the SIGNS will please bear with me, as it is evident that my pen will soon cease to either give sorrow or comfort to the blessed children of our heavenly King. Please dispose of what I have now written as you deem best. I know it is feeble and falls far short of reaching the depths of this deep and wonderfully mysterious subject. Were it not for the joy and comfort I derive from the investigation of such subjects my days would be sad and lonely in the extreme. But the heavenly beauties that shine forth from the ever wondrous truth of God's holy word sometimes greatly strengthens my hope and enables me to rejoice in God, who doeth all things well. Yours in that hope,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have concluded to send you a synopsis of a letter that I recently wrote to a very precious brother on what he calls "Fatalism." I do not know that it will be of any benefit or comfort to any of the Lord's people; however, your better judgment will at once determine this matter. I shall withhold his name.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your welcome letter of recent date

EXHORTING TO DUTY.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I want to ask you a few questions, and I want you to answer through the medium of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Is it right for any preacher or member of an Old School Baptist Church to say to any one who has a hope in the dear Savior to stay away from the church if they can? or if they can keep from joining the church that it would be wrong for them to join? Is this the right kind of teaching? Should we not admonish all who believe in and have a hope in God's mercy to obey Christ, and should they not do so? Please answer as soon as possible. I have been an unworthy member of the Old School or Primitive Baptists since November, 1868. I began talking in public in March, 1870. I was ordained in March, 1871. I am now getting old in the ministry, and if I know myself I want to live and teach the truth in the way that God will be honored and his people edified. I have taken the Bible for my guide in preaching, and I believe that I have preached the truth; but I know that I am fallible, and therefore I may have erred in my earnest exhortations to people that I believe ought to be in the church. I have been told by many (some in and some outside the church) that I need not be so anxious about the matter; that God will bring them in at his pleasure. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." That is my condition in this matter. I am anxious for the readers of the SIGNS in this part of the country to hear from you on the subject.

One more question. If a church dies out for want of members, when there is plenty of material (people who have a hope), does it not prove that there is a wrong somewhere?

Yours in hope,

FRANK QUERRY.

REPLY.

IN reply to the above request from brother Querry we desire to say, first of all, that we often feel a great hesitancy in endeavoring to reply to many questions that may be propounded, lest we should say too much or too little, and so fail to clearly express our real meaning, and confuse the minds of those who may read what we write. We however think the matter presented by brother Querry is well worth a careful consideration, in that it refers to an important part of the order of the church; and as we have long held decided views upon this matter, we do not feel at liberty to withhold them.

Brother Querry's first question is this, "Is it right for any preacher or member of an Old School Baptist Church to say to any one who has a hope in the dear Savior to stay away from the church if they can? or if they can keep from joining the church that it would be wrong for them to join?" In reply we will say this first. It seems to us almost inconceivable that any preacher or member of an Old School Baptist Church who has the love of God in his or her heart, which always prompts to obedience, should exhort any other child of God to disobedience, for such teaching would amount to no more nor less than this. If the disobedient are chastised, what shall be the chastisement of those who teach others to disobey? We might pause with this answer, but we feel like going on and presenting some general reflections that occur to our mind. If by grace any one has been united in heartfelt experience with the people of God, by what right does any man forbid water that such a one should be baptized, when in the very heart of such a one the ordinance is written?

The practice of worldly churches should not be our guide in our teaching or practice, and neither should their wrong practice drive us away from the right practice. We believe that this has sometimes been the case. Brethren have been so disgusted with the utter disregard paid by carnal religionists to the character of those whom they urge continually to unite with them, that they have naturally gravitated to the opposite extreme. The fear of urging those who are not fit to come forward for baptism and church membership has sometimes, we think, driven good brethren to the opposite extreme, until they have neglected to exhort the Lord's own children to loving and prompt obedience to the commandments of God. Paul was inspired to exhort his brethren, in whom first God had wrought both to will and to do of his good pleasure, to work out what God had wrought within. He never once said, "Do not obey as long as you can help it;" neither did he use any other such expressions in writing to his brethren. To say the least of it, such expressions as the above, and, "I would rather preach two people out of the church than one in," and, "It is wrong for you to join the church if you can keep out of it," are rash and misleading, and cannot be considered scriptural nor to the honor of God. Because others run wild with the lust for numbers, is no reason why we should put up the bars in the faces of the humble children of God who are coming tremblingly and fearfully, and say to them, "If you can pull them down or climb over them you may come in."

It is sure that obedience is enjoined upon believers again and again. Jesus expressly said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." He did not say, If you feel worthy, if you have had a great experience, if you have great wisdom, if you can overcome great obstacles; but simply, "If ye love me." It is sure that if anything is enjoined in the word upon believers baptism is. It stands at the beginning of the profession of the name of Christ. Without complying with this commandment first of all there can be no acceptable obedience in anything. Jesus, at the beginning of his public ministry, was baptized, and said, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," and received the witness of the Spirit that in so doing God was well pleased with him; and as Jesus began his public work in this way, so is it sure that we can never walk in the narrow way except we enter, as did the Savior, by baptism. It is then a command of God; and if we understand the obligations resting upon ministers and members alike, one of them is to enjoin upon each other obedience to every command of God.

But let it be remembered that the commandments of God under the gospel are all to believers, and to believers only. We have never felt any hesitancy in urging upon those who had obtained a hope in Christ the duty and privilege of confessing his name in his appointed way; but we have desired a clear witness that such ones had passed from death unto life. We have also felt that we must see that there was a heartfelt desire to walk obediently, and that all the backwardness and hesitancy arose out of a sense of the greatness of the way and of personal unworthiness. We have never believed it right or scriptural to urge the ordinance of baptism, or any other gospel command, upon any one who did not already possess a hope in the finished work of Jesus. "If thou believest, thou mayest," is the rule, as it seems to us, in every case; and great care should be exercised to be sure that this rule is not departed from. We have long felt, and do still feel, that the order of the gospel demands of us that we discriminate in this matter. We think that ministers cannot be too careful in judging where to encourage and where not to; but still, when convinced that any one is a child of God, we should be faithful to exhort them to walk in the ordinances of the Lord's house blameless.

We do not read anywhere in the New Testament that delay was enjoined upon any who believed, and who came asking for baptism. If there be any such instance we have never seen it. There was no delay upon the day of Pentecost. We do not read of any delay being suggested in the case of Paul, of the eunuch, of the jailer, or of Lydia. There not only was no delay suggested, but on the contrary obedience to the ordinance was enjoined; and we have never been able to see any Scripture which justifies the putting of any one upon a term of probation. That is an unscriptural Methodist practice, that we feel bound to oppose in whatever form it may present itself. No matter who it may be, nor what manner of a man it may be, whether a persecuting Pharisee, like Saul of Tarsus, or a thief, like the one upon the cross, who has come to believe in Jesus, and who, thus believing, comes to the house of God, there is no authority for suggesting any delay in any case.

Why make a difference, such as we have been treating of, between baptism and any or all other admonitions enjoined upon the children of God? We mean this: would we think ourselves justified in saying to a brother called to the ministry, Now, do not go upon this mission as long as you can help it. Do not attempt to preach at any time until you are compelled to do so. Do not visit the sick as long as you can help it. Do not go to your meetings if you can avoid it. Do not contribute to the poor, to support your pastor, or for any other purpose, until you are compelled to do so. Why then single out the ordinance of baptism and say such things concerning it? If it be not right to say such things with regard to other obligations resting upon believers, it is equally wrong to so teach concerning baptism; and if it be right to say such things concerning this obligation, it is equally right to say them concerning every other obligation. Believers are no more enjoined to the doing of any other good work than they are to be baptized; and if it be meet to stir up the pure minds of the brethren to remember any other command of God, it is certainly most becoming to enjoin this first of all commandments in the gospel upon them. Baptism is no more nor less an obligation resting upon believers than is any other command of the Lord to them. It is simply the first step in the believer's life of obedience. Every commandment of God is sacred. There is nothing in the command to be baptized that gives it any peculiar sacredness above any other commandment of the Lord. We have ever felt like exhorting to obedience to this command, just as we have judged it our duty to do with reference to any other command. We would not dare to say to any child of God, Misbehave yourself in the house of God just as long as you can; neither would we dare enjoin disobedience with regard to baptism.

Our own observation has been that the Lord's humble little ones need encouragement rather than discouragement. Their humility is so great, their sense of unworthiness so keen, their fear of doing wrong, and of being presumptuous in claiming too much, so overwhelming, that they have needed tender words of encouragement and warm greeting, lest they should be utterly cast down. Our own personal experience was the same; and we can never forget the strength, the comfort and the hope which the kind words of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe ministered to us just before we were strengthened to come to the church at North Berwick, Maine, and ask for membership with them. We were oppressed very much at the time by a sense of unfitness, and a fear that we might, if received, one day bring a wound upon the cause that we loved; and Elder Beebe spoke words just suited to our need, which under the blessing of God removed our hesitancy, and strengthened us to go forward.

We have always remembered the words of the late Elder Hartwell, as we learned of them when once he performed the ordinance of baptism at Southampton, Pa. Standing at the water's side, among other things he said, "There may be some standing here who are looking upon this water with desire to follow their Savior in baptism. Some would say to you, 'Do not come as long as you can help it; stay away as long as you can. When the Lord's time comes he will compel you to come in, and then you will know that it is his will.' Now," said Elder Hartwell, "suppose I should visit your homes and sit down among your children, and should say to them, 'Do not obey your parents as long as you can help it. When they get ready for you to obey they will compel you to do so, but do not obey until you are compelled,' &c. Suppose I should teach your children thus; what would you say? I know what you ought to say. You ought to compel me to leave your house, and never enter your doors again. Now, what penalty ought to be visited upon me if I should exhort the children of the heavenly Father to pursue a similar course?" We felt when we heard of them, and we feel still, that these were solemn, weighty words of truth. They need no commendation from us; they carry their own weight.

Brother Query speaks in his letter of a feeling of anxiety with regard to those who have a hope in Christ, that they may be found dwelling among their brethren in the house of God. We do not know how it is possible for a called servant of the Lord, upon whose heart God has himself laid the welfare of the church, to avoid feeling anxious for all such ones. Right or wrong, we confess to sharing this feeling. We are not anxious about the final salvation of any of the Lord's chosen ones, but we have and do still feel anxious to heed the admonition of Paul to Timothy, "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine [teaching]; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." It is a sad thing for a child of God to live away from his Father's house. It is a fearful thing when such a child is ensnared in the meshes of the net of Babylon. What a blessed thing it is to save them that hear us! Was not Paul anxious for his brethren when he said, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you?" Was not John anxious when he could say, "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth?" It seems to us a part of a pastor's duty to care for the flock of God; and he must be a very careless or unfeeling shepherd who has no care for those lambs who are bleating around the fold. Hard as our heart often is, it has never been so hard yet that we could not be touched by the distress and anxiety of those who longed to enter the fold.

Yet we have ever felt the need of wisdom, and of exercising great care lest we should, even by a hair's breadth, anticipate the work of grace in the heart. We are sure that it is not right to exhort any one to follow the Savior until that one has felt the assurance of salvation in Christ spoken to their heart. There could be no joy in baptism, no witness of the Spirit from heaven attending it, unless first the soul possesses a trembling hope in Jesus. "If thou believest, thou mayest." "If ye love me, keep my commandments." To urge one to go forward before this belief and this love are realized, is to urge upon them to testify what they have not yet felt—what is not yet true of them. God forbid that any of us should do this. We have ever felt that the responsibility of a pastor in these matters is very great. "Who is sufficient for these things?" Thank God, our sufficiency is of him.

With regard to our brother's last question we can only say that it would so seem to us; but where the wrong might be perhaps no one could tell. We heard a brother, who is yet living, say once that he knew of just such an instance in the state of Georgia. A church there became extinct when there were at least fifty people in the vicinity who loved the cause enough to send a letter to the association asking that it should appoint its next session to be held with them; and yet they all stood outside the church, and it had become extinct. We feel sure there was something wrong there, but what it was we cannot judge. At all events we know that to the church at Ephesus the Lord said that he would remove her candlestick (her visibility), because she had left her first love. We have tried to write plainly and carefully concerning this matter as it has long seemed to us. We trust that we have said nothing unscriptural or amiss.

JOHN XIV. 27.

BROTHER BEEBE:—When you have leisure, please give your views on the text found John xiv. 27, "Peace I leave with you," &c.

Yours as ever,

DANIEL DURAND.

HERRICK, Pa., March, 1852.

THE peace which our Lord Jesus Christ has left with his people may be considered doctrinally and experimentally. Doctrinally, it has reference to the atonement which he made and by which he has effected a reconciliation of his people to God, removed the middle wall of partition which separated between the Jews and Gentiles, blotted out the handwriting of ordinances which were against and contrary to the latter, and of twain making one new man, and so making peace. This the apostle informs us he has made by the blood of his cross. "By him to reconcile all things unto himself, whether they be things on earth or things in heaven. And you that were some time alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprouched in his sight," &c. —Col. i. 20-22.

This peace, reconciliation or atonement is provided for, left with, and forever entailed upon the heirs of salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a peace established upon honorable and just principles, in which the holy law of God is honored, all its claims satisfied, its thunders hushed, and its dominion canceled. In this peace, "Mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other." All the perfections of God are sustained, sin is put away, Satan vanquished, hell conquered, and death destroyed. This peace is justly claimed by our Lord as his own: "My peace;" for he is the author of it, and the Prince of it, and as such he has left it with his children—given it to them. "Not as the world giveth;" for the peace which the world affords is very transient and fleeting, because the world has no power to give a lasting title to any of its gifts; but Christ, as the Prince of peace, has power to secure it to all his children forever by an everlasting tenure.

Experimentally.—"Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." In the world they are sure of tribulation, but in Christ they shall have peace. He has overcome the world, and given the spoils of victory to his saints. When he had finished transgression and made an end of sin, and in all respects finished the work which his Father gave him to do, he went up with a shout and with the sound of a trumpet; but in his ascension he did not leave his children comfortless. His peace he left with and gave unto them for their comfort and support while encountering the tribulations through which it was ordained they should pass while in the house of their pilgrimage.

This peace cannot be described to the understanding of any who have not actually experienced it. No stranger intermeddles with it. It is associated with grace and mercy in the apostolic benediction; and it came from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and it is on all them that believe.

To know it experimentally we must be born again; for there is no peace unto the unregenerate; and every one that is born of God can witness that it was never found by them in their unregenerated condition. When they were first quickened, and thereby brought to contemplate the purity and holiness of God, and the perfection of his holy law, in contrast with their own vileness, the enmity of their carnal nature becomes so apparent to their view they are perfectly astonished to find that they have been all their lifetime at war with God and with every principle of holiness; and they wonder with amazement that they have not been cut off in their mad career and sent down to hell. Here they deeply feel the enmity of their fallen nature; they perceive that a state of warfare exists, the batteries of heaven are opened upon them in the exhibition of the spirituality of the law. They feel the need of peace, but how to effect a treaty they find not. They are told by their own corrupt nature, by the devil, and by his Arminian allies, to make their peace with God. One of poor old Job's miserable comforters comes to them with exhortation, "Acquaint now thyself with him and be at peace." And this they attempt to do by every means, by every effort, and by all the power they possess. They propose to confess, reform and do better; but while laboring to effect a reformation they have such large views of inbred corruption as to make them believe they are growing worse and worse. Their prayers and tears on which they had depended fail them, and they finally despair of ever being able to make their peace with God, and conclude if God does not provide for them peace they must remain eternally at war. But when Jesus is revealed to them as their Redeemer, who has borne their griefs, carried their sorrows, and on whom the chastisement of their peace was laid, they are made to realize that "with his stripes they are healed." The way of peace which they had not known is now gloriously manifested, and they lose their burden of guilt, fears of wrath, and agony of despair. Christ is indeed their peace, in him they have both righteousness and peace, and they rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

This peace is not only experimentally enjoyed at the time of their first deliverance from bondage and despair, but it is so entailed that the enjoyment of it is to be experienced by them in a greater or less degree from time to time until they shall pass from the earnest to the complete fruition of it, in the uninterrupted enjoyment of it, in the unclouded vision of their God and Savior, without a glass between, where they

"Shall bathe their weary soul
In seas of sacred rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across their peaceful breast."

CORRESPONDENCE.

came to hand some days since, with Minutes inclosed. Please accept thanks. I am truly glad to have a letter from you at any time, for you are more than a precious brother to me. You have a warm reception in my heart, and have had ever since I first saw you. As you have so kindly conceded to me the privilege of writing to you on "Fatalism," I will try to do so, the Lord being my helper, and having all confidence in you, as you have said that you will not get hurt at me, even if we should not see alike on this subject. I am well aware that we almost see eye to eye in most things. I shall simply show you my opinion on the principle of reasoning, and if I am wrong no one is responsible for my wrong but myself. In connection with what you call "Fatalism" I shall suggest a few thoughts about absolute predestination and election, as mentioned in your letter.

First, I will say that my conclusions are that what you and some other good and precious brethren are calling "Fatalism" is nothing more nor less than the result of the fixed purposes and unchangeable decrees of God. You say, "Go to the dictionary, and it will tell you what Fatalism is;" and so it does. It says, "Fatalism is the doctrine of an inevitable necessity overruling all things;" and the word "inevitable" means unavoidable. Then Fatalism is an unavoidable event—something that is sure to take place, and sure to take place just as it does, and when it does, and by whom it does. These unavoidable events Arminians have been calling Fatalism ever since the days of Cain. We will call a few of them in question, and examine them in plain, logical reasoning upon Bible teachings. Could any one have baptized Christ but John the Baptist? No; for Christ said, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." "Us" here means Christ and John. Then this was the result of the predestination of God and his eternal design, and was bound to take place just as it did, when it did, where it did, and by whom it did. This was an unavoidable event. Do you call this Fatalism? Again, could any one have betrayed Christ but Judas? Was he not bound to have betrayed Christ just when he did, and where he did, and as he did? This was an unavoidable event. Do you call this Fatalism? Or was it the result of God's purpose and decrees? Was it not God's eternal purpose for Christ to be betrayed? Yes, of course it was. Well, was it not also his eternal purpose for Judas to betray Christ? Yes, of course it was. Was not one as much bound to take place as the other? Yes, of course it was. Well, if one is Fatalism, is not the other also? Yes, of course it is. Forasmuch then as the crucifixion and betrayal of Christ was an eternal purpose of God, could this purpose have been carried out without wicked men, and without a devil Judas?—See Acts ii. 23. It was as sovereign and as righteous an act of God to raise up a devil Judas to betray Christ, as it was to raise up a John the Baptist to baptize him. Also, it was as sovereign and as righteous an act of God to raise up a wicked Pharaoh, as it was to raise up a meek Moses. The Lord said of Pharaoh, "Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth."—Rom. ix. 17. The word "even" means exactly or precisely; just the same as to say, I have raised thee up to do and act precisely as you have done, to a jot and to a tittle. Pharaoh was bound to do and act just precisely as he did do and act in everything. If he had done otherwise he would have defeated God's purpose; or if he could have done otherwise he could have defeated God's purpose; for the Lord said, "Even for this same [identical] purpose have I raised thee up." Do you call this Fatalism, or is it the result of the decree of an omnipotent God? In the narrative of Pharaoh it is said nine times, I think, that God hardened Pharaoh's heart. God hardening Pharaoh's heart did not make him wicked. Sin made him wicked. God did not harden Pharaoh's heart to make him wicked, for he was already wicked; but he hardened his heart in order to carry out his eternal purpose or design in him, and that was that his name might be declared throughout all the earth. It was impossible for Pharaoh to have given up the Israelites any sooner than he did, and it was also impossible for him to have kept them one moment longer than he did keep them. The Lord did not only harden Pharaoh's heart, but he hardened the hearts of his servants also, as can be seen with reference to Exodus x. 1 and xiv. 17. Now, do you think this is Fatalism? If these things are not Fatalism, what is Fatalism? If these things are Fatalism, what is the difference in Fatalism and God's eternal purposes? My dear brother, it seems to me that when we are fighting what some call Fatalism, we are fighting the principle that we believe, and that the Scriptures teach, God's eternal purposes, and are weakening the Old Baptist cause. I will now consider briefly the word "absolute," together with predestination and election, as you have spoken of them in your letter. "Absolute" means certain, unconditional, &c., and we use it as a qualifying term to make our ideas more clear and our views more forcible. You say, "Predestination and election is enough." Now, my brother, is it enough just to say Baptist, or Baptist Church? Are we not in duty bound to say "Old School" or "Primitive Baptist," &c., using some discriminating term? If we just say Baptist, we cannot be distinguished from other orders of Baptists. The people called John John Baptist; but Jesus called him John the Baptist. Jesus himself used the qualifying term "the," which is very discriminating, very definite. Now, my dear brother, you may ask the worst Arminian on earth if he believes predestination and election, and he will say, "Yes, I believe it as much as any one does, for the Bible teaches it." But if you ask this same man if he believes in the absolute predestination of all things, he will say, "No, I don't." Also, ask him if he believes in eternal and unconditional election, and he will say, "No, I don't." So you can at once see that any Arminian will accept any of these terms unqualified. Hence it seems to me that just to preach predestination and election is not enough; but we must discriminate. I think we have as good a right to use the word "absolute" as we have to use the words Old School, Primitive, &c., to distinguish us from other Baptist denominations. We could not be known alone in the earth as the church of Christ by simply being called Baptists; neither can our doctrinal sentiments be known by simply preaching predestination and election, for the Arminians will accept this. I think we should qualify our position and discriminate in our doctrine. "Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth."—Isa. v. 8. That is, laying down our line of doctrine side by side with theirs, without discriminating. The word "eternal" is not used in direct connection with election, but the Bible teaches plainly that election was before the foundation of the world; therefore we know it is eternal election, and also that it is unconditional. Hence we are scripturally authorized to preach the doctrine of eternal election. Neither is the word "absolute" used in direct connection with predestination, but the principle is in every sense of the word; for the word "absolute" means sure, unconditional, &c., and predestination itself means an absolute certainty. Anything that is sure is absolute; so we are fully authorized to use any qualifying or discriminating word to make our ideas clear, just so we do not change the meaning of the Scriptures. Everything that is predestinated is absolute, for if it is not absolute it is not predestination. One cannot exist without the other. The way some of the Old Baptists come to be fighting something and calling it Fatalism is because they have caught it from the Arminians, who have been telling the people from time immemorial that the Old Baptists preach Fatalism; meaning that they preach predestination, election, and the unchangeable decrees of God. Fatalism among the Old Baptists is a borrowed tool, an old, rusty, Arminian cudgel, without a doubt; and Baptists have taken hold of it and are fighting themselves with it.

I think we ought to return it home to the Arminians, where it belongs. They have been battling God's people with it in every age of the world in some form or other.

The Scripture says that God "set the bounds of the people."—Deut. xxxii. 8. Now, in talking or preaching on this point we frequently say, "God set the immovable bounds of the people," thus using the qualifying term "immovable." The Scripture does not directly say "the immovable bounds;" but we know that they are immovable, for God appointed them, and whatsoever God doeth is forever.—Ecclesiastes iii. 14. Therefore we are fully justified in saying "the immovable bounds;" and on the same principle we say absolute predestination; for just as sure as it is predestination, just that sure it is absolute.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST JESUS:—I feel to write a little of the past of my life. I was born in Pontotoc County, Mississippi, November 25, 1858, my father moving to Parker County, Texas, in July, 1875, where, on Jan. 7th, 1881, as I believe, he fell asleep in Jesus. I, being the youngest of the family, with my mother was left alone. During the summer of 1880 I attended protract-meetings, and was told that all I had to do was to give up my sinful ways, and Jesus would bless me, and that otherwise he would not; so upon every opportunity I gave my hand to be prayed for. Thus I went on until the fall of 1881, reading my Bible most of the time, until it became as much against my will to go to the meetings as at the start it was to stay away. I tried all the time to believe Arminianism, but the reading of the holy Scriptures kept me back. In March of 1883 I went to the state plains in northwest Texas, leaving my mother with one of my married sisters. I was very wild for mischief, and much habituated to swearing; but during all this time occasionally a sensation or feeling would come over me which would make me feel sad, and my heart's desire and prayer to God would be that I might be saved; but I found no comfort in it. In the summer of 1884 I returned home, and in the fall of 1886 my mother and I came to the Indian Territory. On the first day of September, 1887, I was married. In the summer of 1893 it was impressed on my mind that my wife would ask me what the matter was with me. For some time I did not tell her; but finally I told her that my sins were as mountains before me. It seemed as though my heart would burst with trouble. I would read my Bible, but instead of finding any comfort every passage seemed to condemn me; but to ward off these troubles I kept up my bitter habit, although my conscience would at times check me. Thus I went on.

until in August, 1894, when I was so cut asunder that it seemed I must surely sink down and be lost unless relieved. I went out of the house, not knowing what to do. I fell down on my knees and tried to pray; but it seemed as though my thoughts would choke me, and I could not utter a word of prayer. The next thing I knew I was standing on my feet and looking into the heavens, and it seemed to me that even the stars were jumping with joy. O what comfort it gives this poor heart of mine when my heart goes back in reflection of that sacred moment when my burden was taken away; not because of prayer, but because the fullness of time had come that God's will must be done, which he had purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began. It seemed to me that I would never doubt so plain a thing as my peace and calling of the Lord that night. I went on in happiness for awhile. On the third Saturday in September, 1894, I, with my wife, united with the Old Baptists, and we were baptized on Sunday following, which is another blessed moment to be remembered by me. It seemed to me that every one around the water's edge was praising God. But before the setting of that day's sun Satan appeared, and it seemed to me as though a voice said, "You are deceiving God's people." Then I was thrown into a state of despair; but, thanks be to the God of love, there is no more laid upon his people than they can bear; so let us thank and adore his great and holy name that we are not left comfortless; for we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. He always makes a way for our escape. Although sometimes left in the dark valley of sin and sorrow, yet the arm of Salvation is underneath us to bear us up; for he has promised us that he will not utterly forsake us; but he will visit our transgressions with the rod, and our iniquities with stripes; so then, if we are visited with chastisement, we are sons, and not bastards.

As I am fearful that I have already taxed your patience with my poorly composed letter, I will close by saying that I am seventy-five miles from our church, and no other church nearer that I know of that is sound in the faith. My wife and I find great comfort in reading the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Trusting in the finished and complete atonement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, I am your brother in hope of eternal life,

G. W. HELLUMS.

PLYMOUTH, Ill., Nov., 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—According to promise I will try to write a few lines for publication in our dear family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, for the benefit of some of my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, and near kinsmen in the flesh, whom I had the pleasure of meeting while on my tour through the dear old state of Ohio; especially my dear cousin, John T. Neel and his wife. Their house is ever open for the friends of Jesus, and they are willing to do anything for their comfort. I had the pleasure of meeting some of the ministers from different states whom I had never met before. I was glad to find them proclaiming the same good news of Jesus and his love. They came in the fullness of the gospel of Christ. I was glad to see so many of my dear brethren and sisters who were strangers in the flesh, but, I hope, not strangers in the Spirit. All seemed to be of one family. I had the pleasure of attending two associations, and the letters that were read from the several churches expressed that they were in peace and harmony among themselves, and are registered in my heart never to be forgotten, but will stand among those bright spots upon which memory will dwell with delight. When we retrospect our lives very many things are called to mind which cause the heart to heave a sigh, or the eye to send forth a tear in bitter recollection; but here and there are bright spots that we fondly linger around and cherish, and which sweeten the cup of our afflictions, and fill the heart with grateful emotions. In the last few years I have been called upon to pass through some of the most severe trials of my life. Often times I thought the time of my departure was at hand; but amidst the gloom there has been here and there a sunny day that I register in my mind; for the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations. It is truly soothing in the hour of distress and persecution to call to mind the language of our blessed Savior, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Then let us take courage, and be content with the testimony God has given us in his word and revealed to us by his Spirit. May we have no desire to follow after new, strange and vain theories; but let us feel grateful to him who is our Keeper, who is able to keep us from departing from that form of doctrine which was originally delivered to the primitive saints. May the Lord enable us ever to be found hunting for the old paths, and walking therein. We are a poor and afflicted people, hated and persecuted by the world. Instead of augmenting each other's sufferings by adding fuel to the fire, we should be fellow-sufferers together, helping to bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. It is being declared all over the land that the Primitive Baptists are nearly all dead; but could such reporters have been with us at those associations in Ohio, they would have thought differently, for they were the largest associational gatherings I have ever attended. It looked to me that Ohio was alive with Baptists.

Now, dear brethren editors, although I am a stranger to you in person, I humbly hope we are not strangers in the one covenant Head. I am well pleased with the editorials. As my subscription has about expired I feel disposed to forward our mite, that the cause in which we feel so deeply interested may be sustained, and that you may feel encouraged to stand a little longer at the wheel. May the grace of God sustain you in your labors. Though we are scattered about now, may we meet around the throne of God in the world to come, and sing unto our God, Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be all the praise.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—ESTEEMED FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:

—The onward flight of time and the surroundings remind me again of remitting for our old-time paper, which has been a welcome visitor to my home, and has, I trust, made glad many of the dear tried ones of the dear Redeemer's kingdom, and been a sweet solace and soul-comforter to many a dear one that could not have heard the sweet and joyful sound of the pure gospel in any other way. This midwinter morn, being fatigued in body, and more than that, shut up in "Doubting Castle," while all help seemed to be leaving me, low and faint, with scarcely a ray of light in me, I sank into my chair and picked up my dear herald of truth, the last number of the SIGNS. My eyes fell upon the communication of one who signs his name Newton Peters, of Portland Indiana, his subject being, "Is the law against the promises?" Dear ones, I trust, who love the same soul-cheering gospel, it was cheering to one so weak and poor as myself. At the conclusion I said from my very soul, Bless the Lord for putting it into the brother's mind to write those Bible truths, which I trust will stand while time lasts. Yes, I am of the humble opinion that the all-powerful Jehovah was well aware of what it would cost to redeem that man that was formed of the dust of the ground, and into whose nostrils he breathed the breath of life, and he become a living soul. It makes no difference who says it was all chance. It stands as sure as the eternal hills. Who wants to limit his power? He is God, the great and eternal God, and none can limit his power. The end was known to him from the beginning. I am weak in body as well as in mind, but I dare to hope in such a great Sovereign ruler of all worlds and of the destinies of all his creatures. I cannot doubt his bounteous love and immeasurable kindness. To his unerring, gracious will be every thing resigned.

With love to the dear household, I remain the least of all, if one at all,

M. P. LEWIS.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Near Thornville, Ohio, March 8th, 1896, sister Mary Grove, aged 75 years, 3 months and 15 days.

She was born Nov. 23d, 1820, and was united in marriage to Abraham Grove in March, 1839. To this union were born three sons and one daughter, the children all being present at her funeral. She united with the Primitive Baptist Church on the fourth Sunday in June, 1859, and was baptized by Elder Thomas Harper. She was a beloved, faithful and worthy member all her years, manifesting a christian spirit, and died as she lived, in peace with God and man.

Her funeral was largely attended on Tuesday following, Elder G. N. Tusing officiating on the occasion, and speaking words of comfort to the sorrowing friends and neighbors; after which her body was laid away to await that glorious day when she shall come forth, with all the redeemed of God, to die no more, being a child of the resurrection.

G. N. TUSING.

DIED—At her residence near Little Georgetown, Fauquier Co., Va., Dec. 20th, 1895, Mrs. Lettie Cockrill, aged a little more than 69 years.

Brethren and friends who have visited the Upper Broad Run Church in late years will remember the home of this christian woman, it being the only house near the Old School Baptist meeting-house where that despised people were welcome guests. Sister Cockrill was the widow of brother Thomas Cockrill, whose death occurred several years ago. It was my privilege to baptize them both at or near the same time, soon after I came to Virginia, in the fellowship of the Broad Run Church. Sister Cockrill was of a meek and quiet spirit, faithful to her obligations to the church, always filling her place in its assemblies, and unwavering in her faith.

She leaves a numerous family of children and grandchildren, the latter numbering between seventy-five and eighty, to mourn their loss, together with the church.

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., March 25, 1896.

DIED—Nov. 28th, 1895, at the home of her parents, Iona, Ontario, in the tenth year of her age, Bessie Jane Kerr, youngest daughter of John T. and Sarah Kerr, and great-granddaughter of the late Elder McColl.

Her disease was catarrh of the bowels. How very mysterious are the ways of God! He has seen fit to lay his afflicting hand upon this dear family, and take from their fond embrace this lovely little girl, who before her sickness was the picture of health. Little Bessie was much beloved, being of a very affectionate disposition. When attending the yearly meeting of the church in Dunwich, and staying at her father's hospitable home, I have wondered that it gave her so much pleasure to have the Old Baptists there; but since hearing of the wonderful testimony she left behind that she was taught of the Lord, I have ceased to wonder. Her father writes as follows:

"Our darling was taken sick on Sunday evening, but not anticipating any danger we did not call in a doctor until Monday afternoon. He did not think it a serious case; but as he failed to give her relief, and she was growing worse, we called in another on Wednesday, who gave us very little encouragement to hope for her recovery, and indeed by this time we were seriously alarmed for her. On Thursday morning, as I was sitting at her bedside, her mother came in, and hearing her complaining somewhat, said, 'Are you worse to-day, Bessie?' To which she replied, to the great astonishment of all present, and without the least intimation from any one that she was not likely to get better, 'O mamma, you nor papa nor the doctors can do me any good. I am going to my happy home. Do not weep for me.' There were nearly a dozen people in the room at the time. She called each by name, bidding them good-by, saying that she was going to her happy home, and telling them not to weep for her. After talking in this way for awhile she laid quiet for a little; and then, seeming to feel as if she were going, she put one of her little hands over to me and said, 'Is my hand cold, pa?' I said, 'No, Bessie, it is warm yet.' After a little she threw out both arms and said, 'Good-by; I am going home.' After lying still for awhile she looked up at those at her bedside and said, 'I want you all to sing the hymn commencing with the words, "The hour of my departure's come."' In the midst of deep emotion we endeavored to comply, and sang it through as best we could. Little did we think that our little darling had ever paid any attention to the words. Awhile after we had finished singing she turned her face toward me and said, 'You are not my father now. I have a Father above,' raising her right hand. O how wonderful! Words fail when I attempt to describe the scene. Our feelings, while hearing such utterances from the lips of our dying darling, may be more easily imagined than described. They were full of joy, yet full of sorrow. Of joy, because of the blessed assurance that our darling was enabled to leave us that she was going to her Father above. Of sorrow, for the loss of our little flower. We feel to hope that our loss is her great gain, and that we do not mourn as those who have no hope. May we, like Job, be enabled to say, 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.' She was laid to rest on Sunday, Dec. 1st. Elder Pollard preached an unusually able discourse, to a very large concourse of people, taking as a text 1 Corinthians xv. 22, 23."

May the dear Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OWEGO, N. Y., March 9, 1896.

DEAR PRISONERS OF HOPE:—I would like to be able to tell you of some of the strength and rest I have experienced, as the blessed Lord has been pleased to turn me to the stronghold, even to himself, who is filled with mercy and grace, during the past year, while I have been much shut out from the society of those whom to love gives us sweet evidence at times that we have passed from death in sin to life in Christ. Five or six preceding years have been years of great trial and anxiety, with a little strength, and a little gleam of light, as my day demanded; for in all our changes God changes not, and "is not slack concerning his promises, as some men count slackness." I know I ought not to speak of the blessed light and strength, the favors of God, as being little, for the word marvelous would more truly express it, since a taste of spiritual manna and a cooling draught from the fountain of life give complete rest for the time. There have been times when I would be in such darkness and sorrow that life has been a burden, growing heavier as the days passed, until I would be almost in despair, and seemed shut out from every thought or feeling that could raise me from my stumbling, groping condition. I was just able to realize that I was truly wretched and miserable. My thoughts were confused as to God's perfect wisdom, for I felt no joy in it; yet I dared not dispute his justice. I could feel none of the joy and the strength, nor any good resulting from God's rule as a perfect King in Zion. I cannot describe the depths of my woe; but my dear friends will understand, if my trials are such as God's dear children experience. Then, after such a long, dreary season, while in the midst of some undesirable duty, or when I would feel most keenly my desolation, I would be suddenly surprised by a feeling of rest and joy, with a sweet assurance that God would deliver in every trial. Then how perfect his wisdom would appear to me, and in a moment of time the change had come, and I would be abundantly satisfied with the goodness of his house. No questioning or doubting now. Once the words of Scripture, "More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold," so filled my soul that all care was gone. I could ask for nothing more. I could not put away that for which I was starving, and was so glad to run into that strong tower, his blessed name, and be safe. I found delight in reading Psalm xix., for there I read that the law, testimony, statutes, commandments, the fear and judgment of the Lord, are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. "Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward. Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults." The whole Psalm was choice. At another time David's words concerning the mercy of the Lord, "Thy loving-kindness is better than life," came with sweetness and power, and they still comfort me. We go into darkness when we look for joy in the things pertaining to the natural life, and by terrible things in righteousness are brought to know how much better than life is God's loving-kindness. I had oft-recurring thoughts upon the words, "I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart." How precious seemed the words, and do still. I longed that God would mercifully enlarge my heart. I felt that those who were thus favored of God would be thoroughly furnished unto every good work, and that while in that state there could be no envyings and fightings among them; but sweet charity, which is the bond of perfectness, pure and peaceable, and full of good fruits, would dwell richly in them, causing them to think no evil. I feel to crave the guidance of my faithful Deliverer, and beg that he may keep me from presumptuous sins, and let them not have dominion over me. "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."

The subject is so full of sweetness, and the wonder so great to me, that I am thus favored. I am so conscious of the truth of the Scripture by David, as applied to myself, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" that I find it hard to attempt any conversation on the subject; and yet at times I have longed to sing, in an earthly measure, the blessed songs he gives in the night. My thoughts go out as on the bright wings of the morning to my precious kindred in Christ, with love and a longing which only they can know who also have been "built up and pulled down, turned and overturned," with whom is the secret of the Lord, even them that fear him; not as a hard master, but as a gracious, merciful friend, whose sacred life and work so fills us with a sense of its purity and perfectness that we fear the expression of natural pollution in thought or act, so out of harmony with the pure heavenly joys. Such fear cannot be slavish, but to the contrary is fraught with earnest desire to walk worthy of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, that the conversation may be with grace.

Since beginning to write my mind is carried back to the days of my youth, when I was first made to hope in God's name, and a holy solemnity seems to fill my heart as I recall the weary hopelessness of my case, as I viewed it, with all the bitter pain and conflict, without hope and without God in the world; and later, the application of precious words to my sin-sick soul like these, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," and "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," causing a little hope to spring up, so that I rested for a season, and sweetly contemplated the wondrous love. Then the sweet unfolding of the word gave me great peace, and the nourishing gospel in doctrine and experience fell like dew upon the parched ground. Truly this is the valley of hope. How greedily my famished soul partook of the strengthening truth, until I could exclaim, "My soul doth magnify the Lord. I will rejoice in the God of my salvation." So eager was I for the food which satisfieth that I remember many of the subjects of sermons I was permitted to hear during that period, chief among them, perhaps, from the words, "A man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," by brother Durand. Another sweet discourse was from these words, "Therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners," &c., by brother Wm. J. Purinton. Also another I must mention, it being the first that I had an ear to hear, by brother A. St. John, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." They, with many others, were rich and full. The poet made no mistake when he said,

"Tongue cannot express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love."

Indeed, our stammering tongues at best can but poorly express the riches of grace abounding to the chief of sinners. I do not wish what I may write to be brought to the notice of the dear readers of the SIGNS, to the exclusion of that which is more edifying and useful. I only desire to send loving greeting to you all as dear ones who are often brought into trying straits, who are shut up and cannot come forth, with what seem like impregnable walls surrounding you, until he who holds the key of his kingdom mercifully opens unto you his storehouse of treasures, and bids you eat and drink abundantly, giving you rest beside the still waters of his love, until you realize something of the fullness of his meaning when he says, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." "Turn ye to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope." What a meaning is in this effectual call of our God, when we are so filled with darkness and carnal questioning, rebellious, ungrateful and miserable, unable to recognize the hand of God in his dealings with us, and almost ready to despair, with only darkness and blackness everywhere. Can there be any sound more joyful to the ear of faith, more soothing and sweetly melting, than the voice of the Beloved saying, "Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away?" For lo, the winter is past, and the joyous spring voices are heard. To lose sight of carnal self, if only for a brief time, is to be freed from prison; and to rest in the stronghold, in garments of praise, is enough to cause the poet to say,

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this."

Dear living children, saved by hope, may we not count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, since we have an Advocate with the Father, and the trial of the faith worketh patience? We know this to be the case with others; but with myself there seems but little patience, I am such a slow learner. Do we ever come boldly to the throne of grace except as we are turned to the stronghold by divine mercy as liberated prisoners? Then is the time of love, when the freed soul can say in sweet confidence, "My Lord and my God," as did Thomas, who entered into the sufferings of Jesus, and was solemnly but surely convinced and strengthened. There are so many times in our rejoicing, hoping, sorrowing life when we are so oppressed with sin and sorrow, strife and care, bowed down in spirit with a bitter anguish, and fearful even to cry out in prayer; and how glorious the calling to be a "prisoner of hope." While at the Chemung Association at Cammal, in 1894, I thought a great deal upon the subject. Brother Beebe spoke from the words while there very sweetly, and they remain with me as a name most suitable to the child of God.

I am sorry to have written so lengthy a letter, and, as is usual with me, I am not satisfied with it; but I place it in faithful hands, and address it to those who possess that charity which suffereth long and is kind. May it not appear if it contains no comfort for the prisoners of hope.

Affectionately and unworthily yours,

W. A. BEARD.

GAYLORD, Kansas, March 9, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you my dear father's and mother's experiences, with the request that you publish them in the dear old SIGNS, if it is not asking too much. I have been a reader of the SIGNS for several years, and can truly say that I love to read it. I enjoy reading the experiences, for it seems they all tell the same sweet story. The writers are all taught of God, and when telling their experiences they tell my feeling better than I can. I feel encouraged to hope that I also have been taught in the same school. I feel to be the most unworthy of all God's people, if one at all.

ROSA AYDELOTT.

GAYLORD, Kansas, Dec. 29, 1895.

DEAR ROSA:—This evening I will try in my poor weak way to comply with your oft repeated request that I should write a sketch of my travel from darkness to light, or what I sometimes hope is my experience; but when I take a retrospective view of my life it falls so far short of filling my standard of what a Christian's life should be; I am made to ask, Can one who has seen themselves a sinner, and known the mercy, grace and love of God in pardoning their sins, live such a life as I do? but God knows.

My parents belonged to the "New Light" or "Christian Church," and I thought they were about right; yet when I was about eleven years old I attended a revival meeting in Newton, Iowa, they having moved to that town the fall before, or in the fall of 1853. I thought I got religion, and joined the M. E. Church, and began to work my way to heaven. I got along finely until the fall of 1857, when a change came over me. I lost my first religion. I saw then that instead of Christ being unjust if he did not save me for my works' sake, I could not see how he could save such a wicked wretch as I now saw myself to be, and still be just. Then

I went to work in earnest to better my condition, believing that I had the power to work out my own salvation, not remembering the whole of the quotation, "For it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Well, the more I tried to better my condition, the worse did it seem to get, and I was made to feel that I had sinned away my day of grace, and that mine was an outside case; yet I felt that

"If my soul were sent to hell,

God's righteous law approves it well."

There was another revival meeting going on, and I attended it, hoping against hope that I might find the right way; but of all the testimonies of those claiming to be converted, none seemed to have been traveling my way, and I got no rest or comfort. Finally, after trying every way possible to better my condition, and coming out worse and worse every time, I thought my time on earth was about done, and that God would surely cut me off. I went into my room, fully believing that I would never see the light of another day; that the people would find my body cold in death. After I had closed the door I felt to try once more to ask for mercy; but when I knelt my lips were sealed, and no word could I utter; but the desire of my heart was, Lord, have mercy. While in that situation something like this came to my mind; I thought I was hanging over a deep pit, supported by a slim pole that I could span with my hand, and the pit was so large that I could not throw my feet to the wall on either side. I was in a desert place, with no one within reach to lend a helping hand, and I had not strength enough in my arms to draw my body up to get another hold. My strength was failing fast. Finally my grip gave way, and I started down, down, to irretrievable woe. When I realized that the last hope was gone, and I was fast going to my doom, I was made to cry, "Lord, save, I perish." The next thing I knew I was praising God for my deliverance. I felt like I wanted to awake the household and tell them what a dear Savior I had found; but finally I concluded to wait until morning; and again I concluded I would wait until meeting-day and that then I would tell everybody; but before the time came to testify, those who had spoken all testified what great things they had done for the Lord, while poor me had nothing to tell that I had done for the Lord, but that he had done all for me. I thought perhaps it was a dream, and that I had better keep still; so I put it off from time to time. At the close of the series of meetings the preacher told us that if his church was not a home for any of the young converts he wanted them to find a church that would be a home for them; so I concluded to look for a church that would be a home. I went among the different denominations that I knew of, but no one talked as I felt. I discovered this, that each church thought they were a little the better, and they would urge all to come and go with them; yet they all claimed to be members of the same body. In looking around among the churches and seeing the strife for supremacy I was made to believe that there was no reality in religion, and that I was one alone; but in turning to nature I was made to believe that there was at least an overruling power that kept the sun, moon and stars in place, and that caused animal and vegetable life to exist, each after his own kind. Then I was made to rejoice in such a Ruler. O what a difference when I turned to those churches! Well, there was one church that I had not visited; but I had no faith in it being the church I was looking for, as everybody I overheard say anything about them called them the selfish old Hardshells. Well, my mother being dead, I had no home, and in working out my health failed, so that I was not able to do much work. I wanted some place that I could call home, and so I talked with my father about trying to find a home. When we would be together on Sundays we would try to think of some one that would likely give me a home. Finally I thought of "Uncle George Ewing," as he was called by everyone who knew him. When I told my father about him he thought perhaps I could stay with them awhile at least; so the arrangement was made that I should try to live at Uncle George's. On October 14th, 1858, I went there, not knowing whether I could stay. They finally concluded to let me stay with them that winter. On Saturday before the fourth Sunday of the same month he invited me to go to meeting with them, and I went, still having the desire to find a church that would suit me, and yet not knowing what church they belonged to. When we got to the meeting there were only a few old people there, and I thought there would not be much meeting; but after a while others came in, and the services began. I thought the singing was the sweetest I had ever heard.

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me?" &c.

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know," &c.

These were the hymns they sung. When the speaker began to speak I was dumfounded. When the proper time came a motion was made to liberate Aaron Wood to speak in public. He pleaded his unworthiness, and in his remarks related his travels. Imagine if you can my feelings in having found one who talked as I felt. But would they still want him liberated? I thought. Yes, they did, and they liberated him there and then. I thought, Now I have found a people that I believe I could make my home with if they would have me. But I thought, Here I am, a homeless boy, and they will think that in order to get on the good side of these old people, so they will keep me, I am trying to make them think I believe as they do. I lived with them until the fall of 1865, when I married Miss Harriet E. Finefrock, and the next spring we went to keeping house on a place near by. About a year thereafter "Aunt Jemima Ewing" passed away, and we moved back to the home of "Uncle George Ewing," and lived with him that season. In the fall we had all arrangements made to move to another county, calculating to start on Tuesday after the October meeting, when, as I thought, I would not be bothered any more about going to meeting. On Saturday morning "Uncle George" wanted us to go to meeting with him, as it would be the last time. Well, my wife did not go, but finally I concluded to go. Old Elder Isaac Sidwell preached, and when the church took up the regular business I felt that I wished I were out of that place; but as I was occupying about the middle of a long seat, with a long desk in front, I could not get out very well, and so concluded to sit still; but when the invitation was given, and an old friend, John M. Newhouse, arose and started toward the stand, I felt that I could not remain in the house. I arose and worked my way toward the end of the desk near the door, and thought I would soon be outside; but the next thing I knew I was shaking the preacher's hand. Then I thought, What have I done? But I consoled myself with the thought that I had nothing to say that they would receive me on; but I was mistaken, for when the vote was taken I was received for baptism on the next day. Then I thought, What will my wife say? for we had never talked any on the subject of religion. I thought, She knows me so well, she will know I have deceived the church. When I reached home I could not face her, so I stopped outside at the end of the house, and was worrying over what I had done, when she came where I was, too full to utter a word; but her arms were about my neck almost before I knew she was near me. Can you, Rosa, imagine what were my feelings? I thought I had deceived my wife as well as the church. When we met at the water the next day an invitation was extended to any who might wish to talk to the church, when my wife and the wife of brother Newhouse came forward, were received, and we were all baptized. It seemed then that my troubles were forever over, and that we would sing praises to the Most High for his goodness to us. But alas! how soon was I in doubt again lest I had been deceived and had deceived the church. Still we are traveling on. Sometimes I have a little glimmer of light; but O! so much of the time I seem in darkness, and I can but say, If I am saved it is not through worth or merit in me, but alone through the mercy and goodness of God. It is all of grace, and grace alone.

Now I have written a partial sketch of my travels, and I hope you will take this for what it is worth.

As ever, your father,
J. P. AYDELOTT.

GAYLORD, Kansas.

DEAR DAUGHTER AND SISTER:—

As you have requested me to write some of my travels from nature to grace, I have for a long time felt to do so; but I have put it off from time to time, feeling so sensibly my unworthiness. Now, God being my helper, I will try to do so.

I was born in Waynesburg, Stark County, Ohio, in the year 1848. My parents moved to Texas when I was eighteen months old, where they settled and lived until I was six years of age, when my father was taken away, and O how lonely we were. After a little more than a year my mother married again. She belonged with the Methodists, and I attended the Sunday School. The first thing that caused me to study about heaven was this: when my mother would talk about my father she would say that we would meet him in heaven and know him when we died. I thought if we were to meet him, why was it that he had to die and leave us. In the year 1863 my mother was taken away from me; but I could not weep for her, as she had been so badly treated, and I thought there would be a way provided for us children. Her last words to me were, "Harriet, I want you to join some church and be a good girl." I felt I could join whenever I pleased; so the first opportunity that offered, feeling that I wanted to grant her request, I went to a quarterly meeting, and they said if any wanted to join that now was the time. I went forward and gave them my name, but O such feelings as I then had! I felt as though I had done the worst deed of my life. Tongue cannot express how I felt. But as I thought I was in for it, I would try to do like the rest. That night I thought I must try to pray, so I went away from the house to find some lonely spot to pray. When I had gone some distance I stopped, thinking I would kneel in prayer; but I could not say anything more than "O Lord," when my throat filled. I stood there awhile and then went into the house. Then and there my troubles commenced. I had no more use for that church. It seemed to me that no one cared for me, and I had to work out for a living. I felt awful, but did not tell anyone of my troubles. My health began to fail, but I kept on working. After my mother's death in April, I went to stay at Uncle George Ewing's house while the family went to an association. When they came home they wanted me to stay and make my home with them. I thought while I had the chance to get such a good home I would accept it. After I had been there awhile, and still having those lonely feelings, I went up stairs one day to read. Those people took the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I found in a box a number of copies. I thought I would look at them, and read enough in them to become interested; but I read them on the sly, as I did not want the family to know I was reading them. My health grew worse all the time. On October 7th, 1863, I was married. I had a long sick spell. What my troubles were I never can express. One night during that winter I dreamed that I was in a very large mansion, the most beautiful place I had ever beheld. It looked like a rainbow, and all who were in there looked the same. I thought there was a man in the pulpit preaching, and that he looked like Christ. After he had stopped preaching he came down the aisle, and we all followed him out, with the same rainbow appearance all the time. Then he appeared on a horse, and there was a field, and the people were as sheep, and he was herding them. They were all the same size. I seem to see it now. This dream afforded me relief beyond what I can express. Then I felt that I wanted to go to the church. I had gone to the Old Baptist meetings enough to know that there was my home. I found out that my husband felt the same; so I tried to console myself, and concluded not to join until he did so. On Saturday Uncle George (the one I went to live with, for we still lived there, his wife being dead) and my husband went to meeting. It was before the fourth Sunday in October, 1865. When they came home Uncle George came in the house, but my husband remained outside. Uncle George said, "Harriet, you can't guess what Jess has done to-day." I replied "Well, I don't know, unless he joined the church." He replied, "Yes." I asked, "Where is he?" He replied, "He is out there." O the joy I felt! I ran out where he was, but do not know how I did. I now felt that I could go with him if the church would take me. On the next day they met at the river to baptize the candidates. They sang a hymn and said if there were any others that wished to come and go with them to make it known. I went forward and have never regretted it, only on account of my unfitness. I feel my unworthiness more and more. I often have many fears lest I may become a castaway. When I would do good, evil is present with me. That which I do, I would not; and that which I would not, I do.

Yours in hope,
HARRIET AYDELOTT.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I believe this letter of sister Rose Tamsett will be read with comfort by many "of like precious faith," and therefore I send it to you for publication in the SIGNS, if you think best.

Your brother in hope,
SILAS H. DURAND.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1896.

DEAR ELDER DURAND:—I feel

a desire to write to you this evening and tell you of the comfort I received in reading your first letter in your book of "Meditations;" and then, too, I feel to shrink from writing to one that has been so deeply led into these good and glorious things of the Lord; but I will try and tell, in my poor way, hoping to be led by the Spirit, a little of the way I have been comforted by the Lord, and made to sit together with the saints in heavenly places in Christ. I had been for a long time in great soul trouble, and in an unexpected time it pleased the good Lord to reveal his smiling face to me, which was on the first day of December, while I was at meeting. While Elder Bundy was preaching, and came to these words, "Ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principalities and powers," I was made to feel it was I, and O what a rest. I felt "gathered into the fold, with believers enrolled." My deaf ears were unstoppered, my blind eyes opened. I felt that the Lord had lifted me up out of the horrible pit of mire and clay, and set my feet upon the rock Christ Jesus, and put a new song in my mouth, even praise to his most holy name. That day was the first sermon I ever heard to my comfort (though I have heard Old School Baptist preaching with my natural ears ever since I was ten years old), and it was most wonderful. I felt that I could have sat there all day and listened, and was so sorry when Elder Bundy closed the book, instead of being glad as I had been many times before. But I must tell how I went to meeting feeling that day. I felt I would like to stay at home, for I was lost, and never could find any comfort in these things; for I had tried so many times and failed. But I went because I was in the habit of going, though I was not going to listen to hear anything. But the Lord was better to me than all my fears. I was made to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. But you see how far I have gone from what I began to tell you. Tuesday after my deliverance on Sunday, while I was dusting the secretary, I saw your book of "Meditations," and for some cause picked it up, and opened it to the first letter of yours to Elder Beebe, and began to read, and it described my feelings much better than I could tell them. Those words were written by you years before I was born, and for my comfort after all these years. I have enjoyed that sweet comfort ever since. "When the Son shall set you free you shall be free indeed."

FEBRUARY 2, 1896.

YOU will see that I began this letter nearly a month ago. After writing it I looked it over and felt that it so poorly told what I wanted to tell that I laid it aside, thinking I would not send it at all. But to-day I feel the desire again so strong to write you that I will send this to you, feeling that if I should try again to tell you about it I could not do any better. So I will send it to you, hoping you will overlook all imperfections. I do wish I could tell you the joy and comfort I received in reading that letter of yours in your book. To think that such a poor, weak one as I feel myself to be should be made to feel as you told it in that letter. You did tell in words just how I felt, and I could not have put it in words. Also the next letter in the book, from the words, "Ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord." Yes, indeed, "light in the Lord," not in yourself. Oh, it is most wonderful. "Tongue cannot express the sweet comfort and peace of a soul in its earliest love." When I read your letter I had not yet told any one of the change I had felt; but that same day these words came to me with much force, "Let your light so shine that others may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." I then felt it was not for me to keep alone; that I must tell it to the Lord's people. So I went up to Elder Bundy's, and the way was opened for me to tell them a little. I could not tell half. My cup was full and running over. I truly felt the glory of the Lord shone round about me. I had indeed entered into his banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love. How true the words, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Once I did not know what that meant, but now I feel it has been made plain to me by him who "speaks and it is done, commands and it stands fast." I then was made to feel a desire to be baptized, and I felt I could not wait for the next meeting time to come, I did so desire to tell the dear people of God what the Lord had done for my poor soul. But when the day did come, which was January 4th, I felt such a trembling in myself that I had better stay at home; but these words came to me, "This is the way, walk ye in it," and I went to the first covenant meeting I had ever attended, and they did all talk so good. But when it came to me I told so little, but was received by the church, as were also my sister and her husband the same day, and we were buried beneath the yielding wave by dear Elder Bundy, Sunday morning, January 5th, at 10 o'clock. It was a solemn, happy time for me. I felt that "In all the Lord's appointed ways, I'll go at his command." And since then I have had great pleasure in reading and talking of these great and glorious things of the Master's kingdom. The half can never be told. "Glorious things of thee are spoken, Zion, city of our God." Today we have been to meeting and listened to a great sermon by Elder Bundy, from Eccles. vii. 13, 14., "Consider the work of God," &c. It was indeed good to be there. I felt carried away from self. Elder Bundy is truly a great preacher, if I know anything of these things. But I

PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

(Luke viii. 4-18.)

BROTHER Robert Scates, of Highgate, Ontario, has requested our views upon the parable named above, and we feel like trying to respond to his request.

The same parable is also recorded in Mark iv. and in Matthew xiii., with some slight verbal differences. We will not here quote the parable, as it is lengthy, and no doubt familiar to our readers. It would be well for all to carefully read the narrative of the parable and its connection as given by all three of the evangelists. It is not our purpose here to do more than to briefly call attention to a few things which seem to us to be embraced in the parable and in its connection.

This is one of those parables which the Savior himself explained to his disciples; so that all that seems to be becoming to us is to speak of the explanation of the parable given by the Savior, rather than of the parable itself, referring to the parable only as by it we may see more clearly the Savior's meaning in the explanation. It must also be noted that whereas the parable was spoken to the "much people" which had come to him out of every city, the explanation was spoken only to his disciples, who asked his meaning; and to them he assigned as the reason of this difference that to them it was given to know the mysteries of his kingdom, while to the rest it was not given. A parable means a similitude or likeness. All might understand the literal terms of the parable itself. All could comprehend the idea of a sower whose seed fell in different places and on different kinds of ground, and with correspondingly different results. Probably all had seen instances of the very things he was describing. Thus far all could see, as well as his disciples, what he was saying; but the disciples had been given power to understand what the others could not understand. They could not only understand the earthly things of which he spoke, but also the heavenly things which were, along spiritual lines, like these earthly things; and so Jesus said to his disciples (verse 10), "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand." That is, others could hear only the parable, and not the spiritual truth set forth by it. They could see the similitude, but not that of which the parable was the similitude. They could hear the parable, but could not understand what was set forth by it in the kingdom of God. Therefore Jesus does not seek to explain the meaning of the parable to the multitude, but only to the disciples, to whom it had been given to understand. The word "mystery" here literally means "that which is known only to the initiated." The disciples had been initiated into the kingdom of God; the others had not. Jesus teaches here precisely the same lesson that he did when he said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again [from above] he cannot see the kingdom of heaven."

It has long seemed to us that the first question to be settled concerning this parable is, For whose benefit was it spoken? What class of men may be said to be subdivided into these four classes? It has long seemed to us that the words which will help us answer this question are found in the eighteenth verse: "Take heed therefore how ye hear." This was unquestionably spoken to his disciples, and not to all men. In Mark iv. 24 Jesus is recorded as saying, "Take heed what ye hear." This may also be translated, "Take heed whom ye hear." Mark also shows that this was spoken to his disciples alone. We would remark concerning this difference in the two narratives, that it is true that if we would take heed how we hear, we must most certainly take heed whom and what we hear; and it seems evident to us that Jesus would not have addressed such an admonition to his disciples had it not been true that they might hear in the four various ways named in the parable. If there were nothing of warning for disciples of Jesus in this parable, we do not see why Jesus took care to explain it to them, nor why he should tell them, "Take heed how ye hear." If there be no danger in the way, there is no need of carefulness, no need for going softly. Even though the world travel the broad way, yet disciples may also enter and journey there. Though they be not dead, they may sleep, and lie down among the dead. So while it may be true that the hearing of the world is embraced in the wayside, the rock, the thorny ground of the parable, yet unless disciples themselves are in danger also of hearing in that way, there is no use in the admonition to take heed, and no need to take heed, or be careful.

We shall therefore speak of the parable as we understand it to apply to believers themselves, and as it teaches them to beware of being forgetful hearers, but rather to be doers of the work.—See James i. 21-27.

It does not seem to us of chief importance here to consider who the sower is. Jesus does not himself say anything about that; but we may suggest that Jesus himself first preached his own word, and that he by his indwelling still preaches through his servants. This sowing does not relate to that writing of his law upon the heart in experience which can never be in vain, but to the proclamation of the truth in the ears of men, which if a man has ears to hear it is said, "Let him hear." Paul did not speak concerning the word as it is written in the heart, but concerning the preaching or teaching of the word, when he said (1 Cor. xv. 2), "Unless ye have believed in vain;" and the seed, which Jesus said (Luke viii. 11) is "the word of God," is that word as it is proclaimed either by himself or through his servants. The original word here is logos, which is well translated "word," and which shows that the seed sown is a proclamation of Christ, who is the "essential word" of God.

Now, they by the wayside are they that hear, but to whom the devil straightway comes, and takes away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved. Matthew says that these are such as receive the word and understand it; and in fact the expression, "sown in the heart," signifies not only an understanding, but a loving of it. Such ones hear and know and say that it is true and good. They listen well. They are for the time good hearers; but immediately we meet them, and it seems as though they had not heard at all. Their minds, their thoughts, their hearts, seem full of something else. We cannot see that the word abides with them; and it does not abide with them. The devil has caught it away. They are wayside hearers. Many worldly things have trodden by that way. They have lived near to the way where the world goes. The ground of their hearts is hard by reason of the procession of worldly things through it. The plowshare of trouble, soul trouble, has not been driven that way. The ground is not so prepared that the seed can fall into it, but only upon it. So far as the parable tells us, there is no difference in the quality or kind of soil, but only a difference in preparation. We have no doubt that many children of God will for themselves bear witness to just such an experience in hearing. They received the word, they acknowledged its truth, they had a love in their hearts for it, but in a moment it was gone, gone; not from their memory only, but it had had no power and sweetness in it, it had not stirred the heart at all, it had had no effect. The devil, like a fowl bird, had caught it away; and he had caught it away "lest they should believe and be saved." The word may have been a statement of some deep truth pertaining to the redemption which is complete in Christ, upon which the believer must rest if he is to know the joy of salvation. That truth is a good and suitable one. It is just suited to the soul's need; but the soul looks, and it is gone. It may be a word of admonition, which if believed would save that soul from some sin, some false way; but the devil has caught it away, and that child of God goes on still in his folly. The word "believe" here means to adhere to, to trust, to rely on. It means more than simple assent; it means such a belief as leads to its proper results. O how often the soul must complain because his hearing seems to be so unprofitable. The word is caught away, and bears no fruit. How full of joy and wonder the heart is when the soil is all broken up, and he hears no more to at once forget, but when the word so lodges in the heart that it abides, and moves, and grows, and produces fruit. What a change it is for a wayside hearer to be prepared to hear as does the good ground!

"They on the rock are they which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for awhile believe, and in time of temptation fall away." The word "believe" still means to adhere to, to trust, to rely on; and we will say that this is to be understood all through the parable. The thought is not here of seed falling among stones, but upon a stone with but thin earth over it. The language is in Matthew, "Because they had no deepness of earth." In Luke it is said, "It lacked moisture." In Mark it is said, "Immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth." This is all true to nature. We ourself were familiar with this very thing when young. Now, there are some who receive the word with joy. Their hearts at once respond to it. They seem more joyful and eager than many others. Looking at appearances, we should expect great things from them. But after all the soil is not broken up to any depth; and while for this very reason there is a prompt profession, a quick response, yet there is nothing to cause the word to endure or have any lasting effect. The sun of adversity arises, temptation assails them, and at once the blade withers away. It was but a tender thing, as all things of rapid growth must be, and it had no power to resist temptation. The same trouble existed here that existed in the wayside hearers. The ground had not been deeply broken. The difference was this: the ground by the wayside had not been stirred at all, while this had been broken up to no depth. How many times have believers been compelled to confess that the hopes, joys, desires, comforts and purposes stirred up in their hearts through the word which they have heard have soon withered through the power of temptation and reproach and opposition which they have met. We have felt this ourself, and we have seen it in others whom we must regard as the children of God.

"And that which fell among thorns are they which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection." This last expression simply means incompleteness, imperfect. It is not said that these bear no fruit, but that they bring none to completeness. The word is in their hearts, but it is choked. It grows, but grows very weakly. They are children of God, but are under the control of cares and pleasures and riches of this world. These are they of whom an apostle testifies that having coveted riches, they have erred from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. These are they who sell their birthright for a mess of pottage; and we know that Paul exhorts his brethren not to do this, as did Esau. We doubt not that instances will occur to all of those who have received the word, and of whom once much of usefulness was expected, who have surrendered themselves to care, or to acquiring riches, or to pleasure of some sort, and whose usefulness has been dwarfed. They could not be said to be totally without fruit, but the fruit was very imperfect; and to come still closer home to our own selves, which of us can say that we have not felt often that the cares, riches or pleasures of this world have not hindered our growth, our comfort, our usefulness in the house of God?

In view of all this, does not the admonition of the Savior take on a solemn weight of meaning, "Take heed therefore how ye hear?"

Before considering the good ground we would call attention to the gradual way in which the Savior leads up to the good ground hearers. First, the devil takes away the word at once. It has no effect at all. Then the seed does spring up in the thin soil, but as soon as any trial or persecution comes it withers. It has sprung up; it is not like the seed by the wayside, but neither is it like the seed among thorns, which does bear some fruit, though imperfect. Notice, too, the first is by the wayside, where seed cannot take any root at all; the second is on stony ground, where the seed can find root, but not sufficient to nourish it against opposition; and the third is in ground soft and deep and rich enough to bear fruit, but being choked with thorns could bear no fruit to perfection. There are three results belonging to three different situations of the ground. It has seemed to us that the dear Savior has here covered everything that makes the people of God fruitless, or that hinders the full effect of the word which they hear.

"But that on the good ground are they which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Matthew and Mark both add, "Some thirty, some sixty, and some a hundredfold." The word "honest" here is not used in its ordinary sense of that which is the opposite of deceitfulness, but in the sense of "excellent." The meaning seems to be that such a heart is prepared for the sowing of the seed, and is made suitable for its growth, and for the production of perfect fruit. These so understand and love the word that they treasure it as great riches; and as it abides with them and in them, they bring forth the fruit in their hearts and lives with patience; that is, with endurance or continuance, for so the word "patience" signifies. Our experience and our observation is that the humble-hearted children of God are more ready to count themselves with the unprofitable ground than with the good ground; but christians are not their own judges. It seems to us that the general meaning of the Savior is in substance what Paul means when he says, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom," &c. Or what Peter means when he says, "Add to your faith virtue," &c. As we have said before, we repeat, that the force and design of this parable are found in the words, "Take heed therefore how ye hear." We have but glanced at a few things, but will add no more now.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

JOHN XVI. 12.

"I HAVE many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

How deeply interesting was the season and how peculiarly trying the occasion when Jesus addressed these words to his little band of disciples. The last valid celebration of the Passover had been witnessed; Judas had received the sop and left the company of the disciples to be numbered with them no more; the devil had entered and taken possession of him; still Judas and Satan combining in one person all the opposition of earth and hell to the person of Christ and the purpose of God, could only exert their malice so far as to carry out that purpose which they sought to annul; the sacramental supper, by which a remembrance of the awful solemnities of that night should be perpetuated throughout all subsequent ages, had been eaten, an appropriate hymn had been sung; the disciples' feet had been washed by their Lord, and a lasting lesson of christian humility and brotherly kindness had been impressed on the hearts of the disciples; the seclusion of Mt. Olivet afforded a well adapted retreat where Jesus, in accents of love and bowels of the tenderest regard to his little chosen flock, disclosed to them such things as they were able to bear concerning the things which they were soon to witness, mingled with words of encouragement and instruction for them to bear in mind when they should see and converse with him in the flesh no more. Time and space would fail us in this article to dwell on all the important things communicated to the disciples in this discourse which seemed to occupy the whole space of time which intervened from the institution of the Supper to the surrender of our Lord to the infuriated mob which was headed by the perfidious Judas. Our text however implies that in this discourse Jesus disclosed all that the disciples were able to bear, and that further important disclosures were reserved to be made by the Spirit of truth, whom Jesus promised to send to them in his name. But our design was to offer a few remarks on the passage at the head of this article.

1. Notwithstanding all that had been communicated by our Lord to the disciples, not only on this particular occasion, but during all the time he had been personally with them in the flesh, he had yet many things to say to them. They were not even yet in possession of all that knowledge of divine things which God had in store for them to know; and their knowledge of eternal things was to be progressive, and that progression to be as they should be prepared to bear it. "Many things." Well might the inspired psalmist exclaim, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them they are more in number than the sands; when I awake, I am still with thee."—Psalm cxxxix. 17, 18. There is something most awfully grand and sublime in contemplating the infinity of God, especially in regard to his purpose of grace, his thoughts in reference to his people. They are more than the sands in their number, and greater than the highest conceptions of finite beings in their magnitude. How utterly inadequate are we to count the sands which compose the earth on which we have our transitory dwelling, yet less able to count the still larger number of God's thoughts unto his people. The medium through which thoughts are communicated from one to another is called words. God's thoughts in all their inconceivable greatness are communicated to us only through him who is the essential Word, and whose name is called "The Word of God."—Rev. xix. 13. Paul assures us that all the promises of God in the gospel which he preached are in him yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us.—2 Cor. i. 20. And all his purpose and grace was given to us before the world began, and he has blessed his people with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, &c.—2 Tim. i. 9; Eph. i. 3, 4. Much has been communicated of the thoughts, purpose and grace of God to his people; but the fountain and source is unexhausted and inexhaustible. God spake at sundry times and in divers places to the fathers by the prophets; holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; but in the last days he has spoken to us by his Son, who spake as never man spake; who astonished the ancient theological doctors with his doctrine, and spake as one having authority, and not as the scribes. Of his fullness all his saints have received, and grace for grace. But still there are many things remaining to be communicated to the understanding of the children of God.

The Scriptures are, as we understand them, a transcript of the mind of God; but every child of God knows that they can only be understood and comprehended so far as they are opened to our mind by the Holy Spirit; and after all the wonders they have gazed upon, admired and rejoiced in, they are still looking forward for more instruction in righteousness; and never while in this vale of tears are we prepared to say that we have attained to a perfect knowledge of the things of God. We see but in part; we know but in part; and though we may have been favored with as much light and instruction as we are able at present to bear, yet we look forward with ardent anticipation to that day when that which in part shall be done away, when we shall see even as we are seen, and know even as we are known; and then shall we be satisfied, when we awake, with his likeness.

Of the many things which the disciples were not at that time able to bear, some were disclosed to them at Pentecost, when the promised Spirit came upon the disciples like a mighty rushing wind, and they were baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. That Spirit has been in all subsequent ages opening these things to the understanding of the saints, and as we pass onward in our spiritual pilgrimage new manifestations are made to us, as we are prepared by the same Spirit to bear them, but in such a manner as to make us feel the necessity of constantly asking counsel of him who giveth liberally to all, and upbraideth not.

As the children of Israel had daily to gather their manna in the wilderness, so have we to say, "Give us this day our daily bread," and to live by faith upon the Son of God.

2. "But ye cannot bear them now." Happy for us that the Lord knows our infirmities, inabilities and want of qualification to receive and profit by a more full knowledge of the truth; and still more blessed the assurance that he is abundantly able to both qualify us for, and put us in possession of, a knowledge of so much of his mind and purpose as shall be for our good and his glory. We have some striking examples for illustration in the word. Peter at one time seemed scarcely prepared for the announcement of his Lord, and began to rebuke him for what he had said about his approaching sufferings. Philip was impatient to see the Father, Thomas wished to know something more about the way, and Paul found the saints to whom his epistle to the Hebrews was addressed dull of hearing; even when for the time they ought to be teachers, they were in need of one to teach them again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and perhaps in every subsequent age of the church the same difficulties have existed. All this is calculated to convince us of our dependence on God to prepare us for a more thorough knowledge of the truth. Our unfitness to receive instruction consists not only in what we lack, but also in some things that we possess. What we in ourselves lack, and which none but God can bestow, is an ear to hear, and a heart to receive, love and treasure up the communications of the Spirit. "He that hath an ear, let him hear." Blessed are they that know the joyful sound. But we have in our carnal nature that which until subdued or brought into subjection disqualifies us for a profitable understanding of these things. Thus when Paul had been caught up to heaven and witnessed unutterable things, the abundance of the revelation would have thrown him out of his equilibrium had not the Lord in mercy subjected him to the thorn in the flesh; lest he should be exalted beyond measure, the messenger of Satan was allowed to buffet him.

It need not be disputed that an abundant revelation acts on us all as it did on Paul; and we have in our flesh as strong propensities for self-exaltation, from a consciousness that we understand the truth of God, as Paul had; and unless a thorn is inflicted to pin our ambitious, aspiring propensities down, we should be apt to rise above our bearings. The painful thorn may make us fret and beg and plead to have it removed, but the Lord will teach us that we have to rely alone for support on his all-sufficient grace.

The apostle also suggests another impediment to the profitable reception of the word, namely, infancy in the divine life, or want of experience. "For every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."—Heb. v. 13, 14.

The present state of Zion has suggested to our mind that a practical application of our subject may be appropriate at this time.

3. Those who have been peculiarly favored with more extensive light on some particular points of doctrine than what is usual, should not feel impatient because the saints in general seem to close their ears to what they feel desirous to communicate for the benefit of all. The example of our Lord in the text under consideration is in point; he had many things to say, but they were not then able to bear any more than he had communicated; and the apostle also had "many things to say" concerning Christ being called of God, a high priest after the order of Melchisedec, which were hard to utter, seeing his brethren were dull of hearing. Some of us remember when the Baptists of our country, especially those in the Eastern States, were unable to bear the doctrine of a definite and particular atonement, made exclusively for the effect of God; but many have subsequently had their senses exercised so that they now see the importance and truth of that fundamental doctrine of the gospel. Some will recollect when, as a general thing, in some sections of our country the Baptists repudiated the doctrine of the church's complete redemption from the dominion of the law, and denounced the sentiment as "black antinomianism," now in the same sections of country the same churches rejoice in the liberty wherewith Christ has set his people free. Other examples might also be given, but let these suffice for the present. If any of our brethren are a little in advance of the age, let them be patient; the same Spirit who has enlightened them, if their light is really from heaven, will in due time bring all their brethren into the clear understanding of these things; for the promise is that he shall lead them into all truth.

4. May not the application of our subject admonish us who are less enlightened to beware how we reject unqualifiedly all that we do not comprehend, or make an "iron bedstead" of the theory or creed of the church at any particular period since the apostolic age? We should not subscribe to any sentiment, however plausible, which does not according to our understanding stand supported by the word and Spirit of the Lord, neither should we denounce unqualifiedly the views of brethren unless we find them clearly in opposition to the Scriptures of truth. There is a very wide difference between indorsing and absolutely denouncing a sentiment; the first should not be done until the sentiment becomes emphatically our own, nor should the other be done until we are sure that it is wrong. May the Lord lead all his ransomed flock in the path which no fowl knoweth, and as he is pleased to give ability to bear the truth, lead us into it doctrinally, practically and experimentally, for his name's sake.

LARGE TYPE SMALL BIBLES.

WE would especially call attention to the advertisement on last page, of small, light Bibles, printed in large full-faced type. While these Bibles weigh only from two to three pounds they are printed in large full-faced type that can be easily read by those whose sight is failing.

They are a most convenient size for holding in the hands to read, or to carry when traveling.

The extended covers lap over and protect the edges of the leaves.

CORRESPONDENCE.

must bring this to a close, or you will get tired of my poor way of telling, or trying to tell, the mysteries of godliness.

From a sinner saved by grace.

ROSE TAMSETT.

P. S.—Perhaps I might just say that I am the girl that has lived with Susie Guernsey for fifteen years, ever since I was a little girl. You may remember me; I do you; and when you were at the two days meeting, last July, I did so want to shake hands with you, but was afraid to, for I thought you would see the bad in my face; for at that time I felt to be such a hypocrite. I could then believe for others, but not for myself. I feel I have been greatly blessed by the Lord. Praise God from whom all blessings flow. I should be pleased to hear from you if this is worth an answer.

ROMANS VII. 18.

"For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not."

There is nothing, perhaps, more calculated to comfort the poor, tried, tempted, weary pilgrim in his journey through this vale of sorrow than to find evidence that he has a similar experience to that of the inspired servants of God. He then has evidence of that which he is so earnestly desirous to know. He believes that the inspired writers were certainly servants of God, yea, children of God, who have been born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible seed. Then says he, If they be children, and my experience is like theirs, it may be that I am one; but I am afraid to say that I am one; but O how, it strengthens my hope to know that I have an experience like unto the ancient servants of God. The apostle says, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." Ah, how well I know that too. I know it to my sorrow. Why should it grieve me, since if such were not the case I could not have an experience like Paul had? I know not why it troubles me; but this I know, that I greatly desire to be a different man, a better man than what I am. Paul had this desire too; for said he, "To will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." A man, yes, a preacher, told me not many days since that the apostle had reference to the time before his conversion; but I cannot believe that. I am glad that he was so plain in teaching us that this was his present experience. He felt the power of sin within him. He realized his powerless condition to do what he desired; for he said, "For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not that I do." I do not think that Paul felt that he was justifiable in any evil practice or thought because of his powerless condition to do the good that he would. I feel certain that he did not. I, like the apostle, will to do good, desire to do good; but O how miserably short I fall. What wonderful failures and blunders I am continually making. The Arminian tells me that I could be a better man; yea, and some lovely brethren say that we could do better. My own conscience tells me that I ought to do better, but I do not get any better. "When I would do good, evil is present with me." It troubles me so at times that I can find no better language (no, nor half so good) than the apostle uses, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" When I look to this old man, outward man, the flesh, that which is born of the flesh, I find that weakness, corruption, and all manner of sin and filthiness dwell there. Sin is condemned in the flesh. It is not taken out of the flesh. Then we as men of this world, children of the earthly Adam, are powerless to do anything. I know not how to understand the apostle in much that he has written on this line, unless he regards the christian as a complex character, possessing both an earthly and a heavenly nature; the one corrupt and sinful, the other holy and pure. This same character has two minds; the one carnal, the other spiritual. The Scriptures sometimes refer to this man in his relation to his earthly nature, and sometimes in the relation he bears to his heavenly Father. Thus the apostle speaks of his own experience, and also describes the experience of every heaven-born soul. "For the good that I [as the man of God] would I [as the man of the world] do not; but the evil which I [as a man of God] would not that I [as a man of the world] do." Thus using the personal pronoun "I" sometimes with reference to himself as a man of God, and again as a man of the world. He further says, "For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." In 1 Corinthians ii. 16 the apostle says, "But we have the mind of Christ." In the commencement of the next chapter he says, "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal," &c. Again, the same apostle says, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."—Romans viii. 7. Again, he says, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot [notice the word 'cannot'] do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17. I conclude that the elements here called flesh and Spirit are in the make-up of every child of God, and he knows experimentally what the apostle means when he says, "Ye cannot do the things that ye would." There is a continual and unceasing warfare going on in the breast of every subject of grace, the flesh lusting against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh. Then fear not, poor, tempted child of God. Your experience is like that of Paul's, and Peter's too, yea, and of every other heaven-born soul, from Abel unto the present time. The flesh has ever been the same from Adam's transgression; and the Spirit has too, and ever will be. They have always been antagonistic the one to the other. Peter denied the Lord—he could not have done otherwise; yet he went out and wept bitterly when he was reminded of the word of his Lord. Do not we too at times deny our Lord? and when he looks upon us we have to weep. So then the sum of the matter is, our salvation is of grace from first to last. Do we walk more circumspectly than another? It is "by the grace of God I am what I am." "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Jesus saves his people from their sins. He hath saved, is saving, and shall save. They are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done," or can do, but by the mercy of God. Salvation is of the Lord. If this is not the doctrine exemplified in the experience of all the children of God (for their experience is one in substance, from righteous Abel to the last one that shall ever "taste the good word of God, and the power of the world to come"), then I am woefully mistaken in the hope that I have ever been taught of the Lord. I know that I have not only needed a Savior up to the time that I received a hope, but I need a Savior every day of my life, and I am confident that I will need one unto the end of my journey. In the person of Jesus Christ we have all that we could ask, when we are given faith to realize it. He is a perfect Savior. He has been our Savior in the past, and he is our present and our future Savior.

Brethren editors, these few lines have been penned in much haste. Please correct errors and mistakes in spelling and composition, if you publish. Publish or throw aside, as you think best.

H. B. JONES.

HORACE, Texas, Feb. 19, 1896.

CENTERBURG, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The time is at hand for my subscription to be renewed. It is impossible for me to tell how much I prize the SIGNS, and how glad I am to know that the Lord still provides able ministers to fill its columns so richly and feed the little lambs and sheep of his flock. While we are toiling on through the busy cares of this life we can pick up the good old SIGNS and there find just what satisfies our thirsty souls. If we want a good sermon it is there; if experience, that is there; if we need counsel, that is there; if weak, and we need something very nourishing, we find it there. If you have had only milk, and feel that you need a change, and would like a good piece of meat, you will find it in the SIGNS. We will find it all there if we will only take a little pains to study it, and keep our Bible close along by the side of it. I know very well, as brother Purris says, there are very many who profess to be Predestinarian Baptists who scorn the SIGNS, or think some other paper is better or cheaper; and not only so, but some have taken the pains to change their names from Old School Predestinarian Baptist, to Regular Baptist, just like all New School Baptists. I have both to refer to, and have the old Minutes to prove what I am saying, though some of them are very old. What did they do this for? I think, from all I know, it was to get that despised doctrine, the predestination of all things, out of their way. I think I know what I am saying; for some of them have told me I must not talk it, as it has produced a coldness and destroyed churches wherever it was advocated. But I have been blessed to talk right on through all the chill. I believe there is a shaking going on at this very time, and the shaking will not quit until that which can be shaken will be removed. We as a little church feel that we are highly favored when we are blessed to have a minister come who preaches the whole truth, fearless of what men may say or do. I trust we know when the word is handled skillfully. We were favored two years ago with a visit from the gifted Elder H. M. Curry, of Lebanon, Ohio. Of course we felt unworthy of such a blessing, but it was provided by our Father, and we as a church and as individuals felt strengthened and much built up by his coming. We would be glad to have him, or any other minister who believes the Old School Baptist doctrine, to visit us.

I feel that we are in perilous times, and that the time is near at hand when our liberty of conscience will be tried, if not taken away from us. It is a great sorrow to me to know that some of our own people are and have been helping do this. I wish every one could read brother Trolley's appeal on the Sabbath question. It expressed my mind better than I could tell it. I went so far at one time as to keep Saturday, but I hope I learned it was only of the flesh, and no honor to the body of Christ.

With love to all the dear household of faith, I am your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life, SARAH C. BOYD.

WAVERLY, Pa., March, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I inclose a letter from sister Fuggles. When you have space, if you think proper, you may publish it.

D. M. VAIL.

DELPHI, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1896.

ELDER D. M. VAIL:—Although I hardly dare say brother, there is in my heart a feeling of kinship which I feel unworthy to claim. Many are the letters which I have written you in my mind the last few months, but when I thought to put them on paper I felt afraid I knew not what spirit I was of. Pardon me now for trespassing on your time and patience. I cannot write you of great seasons of joy in the Lord, for it seems a dark and cloudy day for the little church here; but I have an abiding confidence that the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and that all things work together for his glory and the good of his chosen people. If I have been taught this truth by him who teaches as never man taught, why this feeling of gloom and unreconciliation to things that come to pass?

"I know what he appoints is best, Yet murmur at it still."

There has been a great man-effort in this place to save souls. John in his vision while on the isle of Patmos saw the church, the Lamb's bride, and heard that song which none could learn but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. Not one can be added to or taken from that number. It is an innumerable company which no man can number. They are all graven upon the palms of the hands of Jehovah, and none shall be able to pluck them out of his hands. Precious truth! My heart rejoices that "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Paul says, "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are a savor of death unto death, and to the other the savor of life unto life: and who is sufficient for these things?" Cannot you preach a little from this text through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, that precious medium of correspondence? How great is the loving-kindness of the Lord, to give such wisdom to his servants, to comfort, admonish and instruct his children. He will visit the transgressions of his children with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes; nevertheless he will not utterly forsake them, nor suffer his faithfulness to fail. How different from the god the world worships!

"His word is yea and amen,
And never was forfeited yet."

Will you ever come to Delphi again? "Charlie" was home in October, and said he would have liked to have you here then. He feels to say, with Paul, "O wretched man that I am!" He wonders if it can be possible that the table is spread for him. He remembers a time when he did not care for these things. How I wish his lot was cast where he could hear the truth. But I know the Lord can feed us without the aid of his ministers. How sweet is the testimony of some of the writers in the SIGNS.

This is hardly worth your time to read, and very faintly expresses my feelings; but if you should feel inclined to answer it, it will be appreciated. With love to you and all the church in your house,

A. M. FUGGLE.

CENTERBURG, Ohio, Dec., 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—As the time of my subscription to the SIGNS has expired, and I wish to renew, I thought I would like to express my love for that precious paper, and the comfort I have had in hearing from the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, who have expressed their views on spiritual things, and told of their trials and tribulations, which the Lord has promised us. If we live godly in this present world we shall suffer persecution, as Jesus said, "Marvel not if the world hate you." "It hated me before it hated you." I feel sure that the all-wise God will continue to provide for his people, and that he will never leave himself without a witness in the earth to testify to his truth. There are many professing to know God, and honor him with their lips, while their hearts are far from him. They speak great swelling words, but it is all as chaff. They say, "We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." I believe we are in the falling away time. The apostle has told us there shall be a falling away first, and the man of sin shall be revealed, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped.

I am well pleased with Elder Chick's editorial work, and with the republishing of the editorials of the late Elder G. Beebe. Every one of them is worth the subscription price. I consider his writings of great value to lovers of the truth. Such preaching is what I love to hear, and it gives me hope that I am born again. I often have doubts and fears lest I have not been born again, but when I hear the brethren and sisters tell of the road they have to travel it affords me relief, light breaks forth, and my heart is made to sing. It is a heaven below my Redeemer to know.

I will close by asking all the dear brethren and sisters who may read this to pray for me. Yours in christian love,

ELIZA DAVIDSON.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Sister E. A. Hill, Nov. 9th, 1895, aged 23 years, 3 months and 5 days.

She was a daughter of brother S. and sister Almada Long, and was born Jan. 14th, 1873. Her mother and six children preceded her to the grave. She was united in marriage to brother S. M. Hill on Dec. 23d, 1888, the writer officiating. Three children were born unto them, who are all living. She and her husband united with Pleasant Hope Church, Cass Co., Texas, on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in February, 1890, and were baptized on the fourth Sunday in March following by the writer. They lived happily together until separated by death. She suffered five weeks with malarial fever and congestion. She left every evidence behind that the change was a happy one. Calling her husband, father and friends to her bedside, she bade them farewell, admonishing them to a faithful discharge of their duty, to live godly in Christ Jesus, and gave instructions how to raise her children. Then she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. She was of a kind disposition, a great singer, and a lover of music.

The following day her body was consigned to the narrow confines of the tomb, after services by the writer, to await the resurrection morn, when, we believe, that which was sown natural will be raised spiritual, and come forth in the perfect likeness of the glorious Son of God, and bask in his eternal sunshine. O glorious hope of perfect love. The beloved family have our deepest sympathy. May the good Lord sanctify this sad bereavement to our every good, and enable all his children to be reconciled to his will.

J. H. McWILLIAMS.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to 1893.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHEENT, Ky., March 29, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—When I opened the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of the 11th instant I was greatly delighted to find an editorial written by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, headed, "A great wonder in heaven." Upon the subject ably treated in that editorial I have had for several months many sweet and pleasant meditations. This morning that subject came up again before me, and the temptation to put on paper some of the feeble thoughts that seemed to be given to me has led me to offer them to you and your readers, if you should deem them of sufficient value to publish them. Not that I differ in the slightest degree with the views offered by that dear departed saint who wrote that editorial. The sweet truths that he gave to the then readers of his paper are as beautiful to my spiritual vision, if I have such a vision, as apples of gold set in pictures of silver.

John said, "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered."—Rev. xii. 1, 2. He who is the Alpha and the Omega said to his servant John, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."—Rev. i. 19. When John received and wrote the great and wonderful things recorded in that great book, the gospel kingdom had been set up, the glorious Son of God had been born of the virgin Mary, who was in the legal heaven; but to John was given the power by the Spirit to witness the birth of that child of which that woman was pained to be delivered. That woman prefigured the church, although that church had not then been set up in its gospel order on the earth; yet it had existed from eternity; for it was one with its heavenly Head, and in that unity it was one with him, as well in the legal dispensation as in the gospel dispensation. Peter says in addressing the scattered saints, "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow."—1 Peter i. 11. Then evidently the Spirit of Christ was in the prophets under the legal dispensation, as it has been and still is in the saints in the gospel dispensation; and Jesus was their righteousness, as he is the righteousness of his people now. It is also evident that John looked back from that lone isle and beheld the dawning of the gospel dispensation, when he saw the woman that was pained to be delivered. When she was under the law dispensation she was pained to be delivered from the heavy burdens then resting upon her. It had not then been said to her, "If the Son make you free, ye shall be free indeed." She could not realize the glory of that freedom when she was compelled to look through a glass darkly; to look through the types and shadows of the law for the things that pertained to the glorious kingdom of our God; and she was pained to be delivered. Her prophets no doubt in gloom and sorrow searched diligently what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and of the glory that should follow. They no doubt longed to see the day when that great wonder would appear in heaven in all her beauty and glory. Through that long and shadowy dispensation she travailed in birth, and pained to be delivered. But the day had dawned, the hour had come, when that woman would appear in the gospel heaven, when the law would no more hold her under its power, and would now come forth clothed with the righteousness of her Head and Husband, and stand out in her heavenly beauty and glory, with her feet upon the moon, the legal dispensation. That glorious day dawned when the angel of the Lord came upon the shepherds that watched their flocks by night, and said unto them, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people: for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke ii. 10, 11. He had then taken the body which was prepared him, in which he met all the demands of the law under which his people had been so long held captives. The prophet had said, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn ye unto the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope. Even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee."—Zech. ix. 11, 12. It was then that the redeemed were called to turn to the strong hold, which was Jesus; to turn from the law, by which was the knowledge of sin, and turn to him who said, "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." The law drew the contrast between righteousness and sin. But now Jesus had come under the law, to fulfill all its jots and tittles. He had come with power to cancel all its demands against his people, and bring unto them everlasting righteousness, and redeem them from its dreadful curse. They through that law and shadowy dispensation had been prisoners, of hope, but were pained to be delivered and sent forth out of the pit of the law wherein no water of salvation flowed, but from which they derived a knowledge of sin. O how little they had to comfort them! Ah, dear saint, how little you had while laboring under the law to comfort you; and so it was with the saints under that shadowy dispensation. They pained to be delivered. But at the appointed time a Deliverer did come, and fulfilled all righteousness. He wrought out a righteousness and clothed his bride, that most beautiful woman, with that robe, and thus brought to her a garment white and clean. John says, "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—Rev. xix. 8. It was that robe of righteousness that he wrought out; and righteousness being one of his great and wondrous attributes, he clothed his bride with that heavenly attribute. In that way that beautiful woman was clothed with the Sun. He was the Sun of righteousness, who arose with healing in his wings. He healed all the wounds that his bride had received in the prison-house of the law. Having no farther use for that law, he rolled it up as a vesture, and said by his apostle, "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. iii. 20. Now we should not wonder that that woman was travailed in birth, and pained to be delivered, through that long dispensation, in which her food was but types and shadows. But with what heavenly delight John must have been filled when the angel talked with him, saying, "Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the heavenly Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal."—Rev. xxi. 9-11. That great and high mountain was the great covenant of redemption, which was surrounded on all its sides and in all its parts with God's eternal and immutable love for his bride, the whole redeemed family. The myriads then around the eternal throne, all who have lived on the earth since that day, and have been called away to their eternal home, all the dear saints who now tread the green plains of earth, as well as all who will live till time will be no more, and enjoy the sweets of redeeming love, all go to make up that holy Jerusalem. They all have come and are coming down out of heaven; for they are born of God, born from above. He has loved them with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness he draws them to himself, and gives them an everlasting inheritance at his right hand, where there are joys for evermore. He is the salvation of his people, and he clothes them with the garments of salvation. The prophet says, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness: as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels."—Isa. lxi. 10. It was thus that beautiful woman appeared to John. She was clothed with the garments of salvation, and covered with the robe of righteousness. The psalmist says, "Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord my God, thou art very great: thou art clothed with honor and majesty: who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens as a curtain."—Psalm civ. 1, 2. He covered himself with light; and John says, the light of that New Jerusalem which he saw descending from God was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. Her Head and Husband was covered with light; and to her was given that light, for she was the bride, the Lamb's wife. She was made a joint-heir with the Lord Jesus Christ. Then well might the apostle say to the church, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." Then how beautiful must that woman have appeared to John when she was in joint possession of all things with the King of kings and Lord of lords, who was and is her Head and Husband; and how indissoluble the union that unites in one the Bridegroom and bride, the Lamb's wife. Earthly courts may sever the connubial tie that binds husband and wife, but no court has or will ever exist, either in heaven above or in the earth beneath, that will be clothed with power to separate the great Bridegroom from his espoused, the bride, the Lamb's wife. To her the apostle says, "All things are yours." One of those things is the crown with which she is adorned, "Upon her head a crown of twelve stars." No star in the natural firmament has ever emitted and sent forth such precious and penetrating rays as each of those stars in that beautiful crown has shed upon all who have eyes to behold their celestial light. They were the twelve apostles of the Lamb, who were called, qualified and sent forth to point the lone wanderer as he journeys onward amidst the darkness of a sin-cursed world, to that great Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the spiritual world. That Light shone in its effulgent glory when Jesus came forth from the darkness of the tomb, and went forth proclaiming to the astonished world, "Mine own arm hath brought salvation unto me." When he came forth from that tomb his bride was redeemed from death and the victory of the grave, for she was one with him. He was both the resurrection and the life; and she being a joint heir with him to all things, has secured to her the resurrection from the tomb, and the spiritual, eternal and immortal life which will be hers throughout eternity. But those stars in that most beautiful crown emitted a reflected light. As we have but one sun in our firmament, so there is but one Sun in the gospel heaven. Around that Sun all those twelve stars revolve, and reflect the light of the glorious Sun of righteousness. That light was reflected when they recorded the four gospels, the Acts of the apostles, and all their epistolary writings, as well as that great book, the Revelation, which was given to John on that lone isle. But none that have been born blind have ever seen the natural sun, nor any of the stars that revolve around it; nor have any who have not been born of the Spirit ever beheld the Sun of righteousness, who illuminates the gospel heaven. The lone wanderer who had given to him a few of the heavenly rays that shine forth from that great luminary is made to cry out, "I would see Jesus." And when the true ministers of the gospel are declaring him in his great and wonderful fullness, that lone wanderer is made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; for then the light of the knowledge of the glory of God is shining in its heavenly power in the face of Jesus Christ, and dispersing the clouds and darkness of a sin-cursed world. Ah, dear follower of Jesus, when that light penetrates your inmost spiritual being, you long to see Jesus with unobscured eyes. But while here below you have your hours of mourning and sorrow. When you turn your spiritual vision away to Calvary's rugged cross, and behold him in his deep humiliation and suffering, you in deep sorrow try to turn away from that cruel and heartrending scene, because you by the Spirit's power have in deep anguish been made to know that your many and cruel sins have driven those rugged nails that held those precious hands and feet to that rugged cross. Ah,

"He dies! the friend of sinners dies!
Lo, Salem's daughters weep around;
A solemn darkness veils the skies,
A sudden trembling shakes the ground.

"Come, saints, and drop a tear or two For him who groaned beneath your load;

He shed a thousand drops for you,
A thousand drops of richer blood."

But, dear saint, when you by faith behold him in his glorious and triumphant resurrection, you turn from that gloomy scene, and rejoice to know that he arose again for your justification. In his resurrection he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. That gospel was preached by the twelve apostles of the Lamb, who are prefigured by the twelve stars that adorned that crown which added beauty and glory to that woman. But they were all gifts to her, gifts to the true church, as well as all the true ministers of the gospel. The apostle says, "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. iv. 12, 13. That woman was the body of Christ; for "He is the head, and ye are the body, and members in particular." The apostle reproves those who worship angels, and says of them, "And not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God."—Col. ii. 19. The body is not one member, but many.—1 Cor. xii. 14. Then all the redeemed, all that chosen generation, all that royal priesthood, is represented by that great wonder in heaven, that beautiful woman which John saw; and they are all clothed with the righteousness of the Son of God. While here below they have many cares, sorrows and afflictions; but true reconciliation should be theirs, knowing that when our glorious Redeemer was on earth he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and to his great and wondrous name be all the glory.

I have written much more than I expected when I began, yet I feel that I have barely prefaced this great and wondrous subject, which to me is of the most profound interest; but you will please do with what I have written as you may deem best, and believe me as ever yours,

H. COX.

GARDNER, Ill., Dec. 24, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—Herewith I send an account of the Lord's dealings with Deacon John Fellingham, to do with as you may think best.

JOHN BRADBEER.

DEAR BROTHER BRADBEER:—
You have often asked me to write some of my experience as you have heard me try to tell it. I will now attempt, by the help of the Lord, to do so, hoping he will guide me all the way through. I cannot state all the particulars, but will do the best I can. I have to pray the Lord to direct and keep me in all my ways and thoughts, for if left to myself I shall go astray. "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."—Jere. x. 23. I think I have learned that to be true in my case, as you may see before I get through; for I know he has led me in paths in which I should not have gone if I had been left to myself. There is much said about getting religion at this time, and I have thought it a good season to tell how I got religion, or rather how it got me, for I think it was the Lord Jesus Christ who began the work in me; and I am sure that if he does not carry it on I am lost. But I am persuaded of better things; for I believe that when he begins a work he will finish it. Therefore, my dear brother, "simply to the cross I cling" for all the hope I have in this life, and for that which is to come.

"O land of rest, for thee I sigh!

When will the moment come

When I shall lay my armor by,

And dwell with Christ at home?"

O blessed home! How I long to be there!

I was born at Redlingfield, Suffolk, England, in the year 1821, and came to America in 1837. I will now begin to tell you something of what I hope the Lord has done for me. I was seventeen years old when, as I think, the Lord began with me. I had lived up to this time in the enjoyment of the pleasures of this world, for it seemed that was all I wanted or was in my mind. Christ said, "Ye must be born again." If we can give no account of this birth, what evidence have we that we have experienced it? I will tell you of the Lord's dealings with me, as I hope, and leave you to judge whether I know anything of the new birth, for I often doubt it myself. I know the Lord put a cry into my mouth, and I want to tell you when that cry commenced, and the cause of it. I was plowing, and became angry with my team, and began to curse and swear at them. While in that fit it seemed that I heard a voice say,

"What will become of you if you die in this condition?" It stopped me right there, and then that cry began; for it seemed to me that all the sins I had ever committed rose up before me, and they were too heavy for me to bear; and when we get into trouble, as you know, is the time we cry for help. At that time I began to pray and to seek for something, but I hardly knew what. I knew that I wanted to be delivered from my sins, but I could not see how, for they were so many. The words, "He that sinneth shall surely die," were continually in my mind; so I thought I must die and go to hell. At that time I had the privilege of going to meeting where the gospel was preached by Elder Thomas Hill, of Utica, N. Y., but I knew it not; yet when Sunday came I was ready to go to meeting with all my sins. On that day his text was, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold," &c. I do not know that I can tell anything that the preacher said, but it seemed as if he were talking all the time to me, and when I looked up he seemed to be looking straight at me. All my desire was to know if I were one of those other sheep, and if Christ would bring me; but I could not see how it could be, for the words ran in my mind all the time, "He that sinneth shall surely die." I still went to hear this great man of God preach, for such I had believed him to be from the first time I heard him. A few months afterward I moved twenty miles away, to live with a Presbyterian family, and they were just the right sort to set me to work for salvation; so at it I went, and right there, I believe, I worked myself to death, for I had felt that I must do something to get rid of my load of sin which lay so heavy upon me. They soon found out that my mind was troubled on the subject of religion, so it was easy for them to set me to work. They tried to help me all they could, by getting me to attend Sunday School, and read and pray in the family. In fact, I began to think I was getting to be quite good; but once in a while I would do something that looked rather bad, and then the words would come to me, "He that sinneth shall surely die." Then I would try to do something good to balance the bad.

Thus I kept on until I reached the second summer here, which brings me to the fall of 1840. As I had not seen my way clear to join their church yet, they got up meetings from house to house, at which some would tell how good they felt; but none of them told my feelings, so I held off, for it seemed to me that I was sinning too much to be a Christian. One night an old man arose and said he had not sinned for three weeks. My God! thought I, is it possible that these people are so good that they live without sinning? If that is the case, I know that I am not one of them; for it then seemed to me that everything I did was sin. But that was quite a time to talk about perfection, so I thought that perhaps he had got to that, he being old; but it so troubled me that I told the man that if that were the case I had sinned away my day of grace, and would stop trying to be good, and go back into the world, and try to enjoy myself there. He thought that would be awful for me to do. I did not know whether it would be awful or not; but this one thing I did know, that I was in trouble, and could not rest day nor night. He tried to reason with me, and got one of the neighbors to come and talk to me. We talked until it was past twelve o'clock; but O! the load that lay upon my breast he could not remove, nor could I. I thought that surely I must die. He left me and I went to bed, but not to sleep; for it seemed to me that if I did sleep I should awake in hell. After the clock struck three I fell asleep. When I awoke the sun was shining on me and on the bed. I thought I had never seen the sun shine so brightly; and these words were in my mind, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins are all forgiven thee." I lay there looking around the room, and it seemed to me that I had never seen things look so bright. Everything seemed to be praising God. I then thought, If everything is praising God, could not I? I went on thanking God that I was still alive. How long I lay there I do not know. It seemed that I could stay in that happy place forever; for truly I did feel happy. My load of sin was all gone. Jesus had taken it away, all away. O happy thought, that Jesus had taken all my sins away; for that had been all my trouble. My sins were too heavy for me to bear, and now Jesus had put them all away. How could I but love him? Yes, I felt that if I had ten thousand tongues they should all praise him. No one can know the joy I felt, except those who have been delivered from a load of sin and guilt. O what a precious Jesus! Who would not praise him, who has said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Well, one of the family came and told me that I must get up, for the breakfast was ready. O how I did wish they would let me alone, that I might be alone with my Jesus. I got up, but not to eat. I was too full to eat. I felt that I wanted to keep on praising Jesus for what he had done for me. I thought I would go over to my brother William's home and tell him how I felt; for he was an Old School Baptist, and I thought that perhaps he could tell me what to do, as I felt that I wanted to find a people who felt as I did. I had been with the Old School Baptists a great deal, but never had heard them tell their experience. When I got there it seemed that I could not commence the subject, and he did not, so I went away, to drift about for three years and a half, seeking a people who felt as I did, for I did not feel at home where I was. Sometimes I was trying to serve my precious Jesus, for he did seem precious to me; but sometimes I was serving the devil, for when I lost sight of Jesus I was sure to serve the devil. I sometimes tried to go with my young companions as I used to do; but when in company with them, and it seemed that all were enjoying themselves, something would say to me, "This is not the place for you," and that would kill all my enjoyment for that night. Then I would go about to hunt for the children of God; but when I got with them I would think I was unfit for their company, for I thought they were all good people. Thus I went from place to place, seeking rest, and finding none. Sometimes I would go to hear the Old School Baptists, but they looked to me to be such good people that I felt I was not fit to be with them. Then I would hunt all the meetings I could find, but no home could I find. Once when I went with my brother William to hear Elder Bicknell preach, I told him it seemed to me that I would give all the world to know which church was right. He said he believed the Lord would some day make it all plain to me; and he did so, but it was not in the way that I had thought; for, as I told you before, "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Thus it has been with me, and I rejoice that it is so; for had it been left for me to direct my steps I should have run down to hell.

Thus things went with me until the winter of 1842, when I got so that I could not enjoy myself anywhere, neither with the people of God nor with the world. It seemed that I was in torment. I got so bad that I determined I would go to work on the Erie Canal, to try to get rid of my trouble; so on the second day of March, 1843, I started with another man for that purpose. As we had to pass the Old School Baptist meeting-house, where my brother William and his wife were members, they rode with us. Some time in the week before my brother's wife said to me, "You will go with us to meeting and tell the church how you feel, will you not?" I replied, "No, I am going with Whitton on the canal." She turned around and looked me in the face, and said three times, "You are not going on the canal." How she knew I cannot tell; but she was right, and I was wrong. I told her she would see when Saturday came. When the day came we started, they for the meeting, and I for the canal to get rid of my trouble, as I thought, as that was the most wicked place I knew of. But the Lord's ways were not my ways. Just as we came in sight of the meeting-house something seemed to say to me, "You must stop here." That kept ringing in my ears all the time until we got there. When my brother and his wife got out of the wagon it seemed to me that I must follow them, and so I did. Whitton said to me, "Are you not going on?" I replied, "No; it seems to me I cannot." So he went on and left me. I did not seem to know what I stopped for. When we had entered the house Elder Bicknell came to me and said, "Well, John, what are you after here?" I could not tell him, for I did not know myself. I thought it was a blessed meeting, and that they wanted no one but members there in that meeting. In that I was mistaken again. I had never attended a Saturday meeting before. The services began, and one after another told their experience. I sat there thinking, Can it be possible that these people have such feelings as I do? for they could tell my feelings better than I could. Then I began to look up at them, and it seemed that I could see Jesus shine in their faces. I thought I had never seen such a happy people in my life. While I sat there thinking these words came to my mind, "Arise, shine, for the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Like all the rest of my ways and thoughts, before I knew what I was doing I was standing up and trying to tell what the Lord had done for me, and how he had brought me there. I have often wondered what I said to them, that they should do as they did. When I sat down Elder Bicknell said, "John, did you get up and tell your experience with a wish to join the church?" I replied that I did not know that I had told any experience, but I knew I was not fit to belong to any church. He then asked me, "Are you willing to be dealt with as the church sees fit?" I told him I was, for I felt sure they would not receive me. There I was again mistaken, for I was received for baptism on the following day. So I went home a baptized member of the Old School Baptist Church, instead of a hired man on the canal.

Thus, dear brother, you can see the way I came to be a Baptist. That occurred fifty-three years ago the third day of March, 1896. You have seen how the Lord led me to the church on earth. I thought when I commenced that I would like to tell you a little of how he has led me on for more than fifty years in the wilderness; but as I have been so lengthy in giving my experience I must be very brief, and only give you a few hints of the way I hope the Lord has led me since. He has said by an apostle that all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. The morning after I was baptized the devil was permitted to come at me with his fiery darts, and told me that I had deceived the church, and myself as well; that I was a pretty one to be a christian; for me to look at the way I had acted. But the Lord soon came for my deliverance again, saying, "He that mourneth shall be comforted." Then I was able to rejoice again in God my Savior for a little while; but it seemed that Satan was soon let loose on me again. Thus, dear brother, it has been with me all my life since. Sometimes I have a little hope, and at other times I am almost in despair, thinking I shall some day fall by the hand of that great enemy; but the Lord has thus far kept and spared me, and my cry still is, Lord, keep me from evil, and guide me in the way thou wilt have me to walk. When the Lord is done with me here may he be with me through the valley of the shadow of death; for it will be all right if Jesus is there. As I draw near the end it seems that the fear of death is taken away. I bless the Lord for it. My cry still is,

"When will the moment come
When I shall lay this body down,
And dwell with Christ at home?"

O that blissful home where Jesus dwells! How I long to be there. As Jesus has taken away my load of sin and guilt, so he has taken away the fear of death. As the poet has expressed it,

"Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

I do not know how it will be with me when he shall call for me, but I do often feel to wish I could go and be with him and be like him. I have nothing in my hands to bring him. Simply to the cross I cling, and cry, "Wash me, Savior, or I die." It is all of grace, sovereign grace alone, that I am saved, if saved at all. Jesus has said, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Then, dear brother, we may come to him and leave all our cares with him. But he has said, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." Well, do not we feel some of these drawings to him, and also to his people? If we do, we may be sure that he will raise us up at the last day. He has said he will do it, and I believe he will do what he has said he will. If I thought he would leave one of his promises unfulfilled I would have no hope.

I must come to a close. You know how it has been with me for the last twenty-nine years. I probably have written more than will be of interest to you or any one else, but I leave it in the hands of him who doeth all things well. May grace and truth be with you all the days of your life, is the prayer of your poor brother,

JOHN FELLINGHAM.

THE WHOLE FAMILY.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—I have been thinking much of late about the whole family spoken of as being in heaven and earth. I have seen times when I had a clearer vision of heavenly things than I have now, and earthly cares and all things earthly troubled me not. My mind was soaring in the fields of light, in the sunshine. Like the eagle, I could almost look upon the unclouded glory of the fountain of light. But clouds began to intervene, a little darker the shadows grew, until as time has gone on I have become thankful for the least ray

CLOSE COMMUNION.

SISTER Annie Hoskins, of Leon, Illinois, desires our views upon the subject of what is called close communion. We suppose that her wish is to know why we refuse to commune with members of other denominations that are all around us. We might sum up the answer in a few words, and say that we find no warrant in the Scriptures for extending the ordinance of the supper beyond the bounds of the church of Christ; and that if Old School Baptist Churches are churches of Christ, then others are not; and if any of the other denominations are churches of Christ, then we are not. We do not here speak of individual believers or children of God (for we doubt not that many who have been born of God are in the ranks of the many sects all around us), but we speak of the organized body of people whom the God of heaven has set apart and recognizes as his temple here on earth.

If anything be plain in the Scriptures, it is plain that all the ordinances of the house or church of God belong to that house and its inmates alone. If Old School Baptists, in their organization, are the church of God, then the supper, as well as every other ordinance, belongs to them alone. Their God has commanded no others to eat and drink at his table but those who dwell in his house. We do not exclude any one from the supper, neither do we admit any one to the supper, upon our own responsibility. It is not our right to invite or reject, only those whom the Lord has bidden to come on the one hand, or forbidden to come upon the other hand.

We would also call attention to the fact that no one can lawfully come to the supper except through the ordinance of baptism. This of course shuts out all who have not been immersed in water, since nothing else is baptism. It also excludes those who have been immersed by any one who was not a minister in good standing in the church of Christ at the time the act was performed, because no others have ever been authorized to administer baptism.

If members of any or all other denominations were to be invited to the supper, we should soon be face to face with an inconsistency. If any one among us, for instance, should believe that baptism was essential to his salvation, we should be compelled, as soon as it was known, and after due labor to convert him, to exclude him from our fellowship, because he would be denying the efficacy of the atonement of Christ, and also salvation by grace alone; but after his exclusion, there being nothing against his moral character, he could go to the followers of Alexander Campbell, and at once be received among them in full fellowship, since he would be in full agreement with them. Now, when the time for the supper to be administered should come again, he with many of his new brethren might be present. If, then, we invite them to come to the supper with us, we also invite him; and so the man for whom we declared non-fellowship a few days since would now be partaking of the highest evidence of our fellowship which we could give him. Can not all see the inconsistency and absurdity of this? The same argument would apply to Methodists, New School Baptists, Presbyterians, &c. Can we ask those to partake of the supper with us whom we could not scripturally hold in our fellowship, and remain consistent?

We have now in our possession records of arguments used by Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, &c., in which they admit that baptism is a prerequisite to coming to the Lord's supper, and say that if they believed, as Baptists do, in baptism by immersion alone, then they also would be compelled to restrict the supper as they do to those who had been properly immersed.

"Close communion" is urged against Baptists as a reproach, and yet there is not a denomination on earth but what practices close communion; that is, they restrict it within some definite limits. Most of them make baptism the prerequisite. In reality, then, we should be reproached, if reproached at all, for close baptism, rather than close communion.

It is not our fault when any one who professes christianity cannot come to the supper with us. The Lord forbids him, not we. It is not our table, but the Lord's. The servants and the guests have no right to invite any one. This is the work of the Master of the feast, not ours. If any man can show from the word that he has been bidden, then we have no right to forbid him; otherwise we have no right to welcome him. But in the word no one is bidden but baptized believers. If a believer refuses to come in by the door, we are sorry for him; but we must not be blamed for insisting that he come in by the door. The Lord ordained the door, not we.

We do not judge men by this, any farther than their outward conformity or non-conformity to the law of Zion. We do not say that there is no work of grace in a man's heart when we cannot admit him to the supper. We only judge his disobedience to the law of Zion. We only say that he has not yet come in by the door of baptism.

We are not selfish in what we do. Are the servants and the guests selfish because the Master of the feast has not opened the doors of his house to every one whom they might desire to be present? Is it becoming for the servants or guests to impugn the wisdom or goodness of the Master because he has not bidden everybody? What right has any one to blame the servants or guests? What right has any one to blame the Master?

If any children of God are without who desire to sit down to the supper with us, we exhort all such to stand out no longer, but to come in by the door. Coming in by the door, all such will be welcome, and will find rest.

We trust these reflections may be satisfactory to our sister and others.

GENESIS VI. 6.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS on the portion of Scripture found in Genesis vi. 6, which reads as follows, "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart."

Many times have I been made to know how void of understanding I am of the true significance of Scripture when quoted by those who go about to establish their own righteousness. I know that a literal interpretation of the text referred to above cannot be true. I think that only when we see in any portion of Scripture the absolute predestination of all things do we give all glory and honor to him who has declared, "I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Again, in Numbers, we read the very comforting declaration, "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" I love the doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things. If that were taken away I should have no hope of a better life to come.

I am yours in search of truth,

MELITA RICKARD.

REPLY.

WE think that our sister in the above brief letter has said in substance all that we can say in response to her request. It is evident that the text to which she refers (Genesis vi. 6) must not be so construed as to contradict those Scriptures which teach the unchangeability of God, or his infinite wisdom or power, or that especial Scripture to which she refers in Numbers.

Still farther, it is evident that we cannot admit that the Scriptures really contradict themselves unless we are prepared to admit that they are not the infallible word of that God who cannot lie. If the Scriptures teach that God does not change or repent, then the Scripture, Genesis vi. 6, must be understood in no contradictory sense. We wish to say right here emphatically that we feel bound to accept all that is written between the first words in Genesis and the last words in Revelation as the revealed word of God to us; and we cannot consent to question the truth or accuracy of any portion of that word. Errors may have occurred in the translation of the Scriptures from their original Hebrew or Greek, but when correctly translated each word is just as the Spirit of God would have it. The meaning of any portion of Scripture may be questioned and investigated without irreverence, and ought to be; but that they are in every word the product of the infallible Spirit of God, must not be questioned. We believe in the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures from beginning to end; therefore there can be no contradiction or error in them. It may seem to us that there are contradictions; but that proves not that it is so, but that we are so ignorant as to be incapable of understanding their harmony. We wish to say emphatically if we could be convinced that one word in the Scriptures is the product of some man's uninspired judgment, then we could no longer rest upon their testimony concerning the great matter of our salvation. That one word might be the one most nearly related to our redemption. When we read the Scriptures we want to be able to do so without a question in our minds that anywhere that we may read, we read the record of the inspiration of Almighty God.

But if this Scripture (Genesis vi. 6) does not mean to imply any change in Jehovah, what does it mean? We reply that in our mind it is associated with all those other Scriptures which speak of his joy, love, anger, hatred, sorrow, or ascribe to him hands, feet, wings, or any other emotions or parts. All these words are used in the Scriptures in accommodation to our weakness of understanding, and to convey to our minds truth which we could comprehend in no other way. These things all relate, not to change in the nature of Jehovah himself, but to changes in his relations to us, who are changeable creatures. These relations change because we are changeable, not because of change in him. Just as this earth has winter and summer, day and night, cold and heat, clear and cloudy weather; not because the sun has changed, but because the conditions of our earth change, so all the things of which we speak are our changes. They do not belong to the God whom we worship. We say the sun rises and sets, and to us it seems to do so; but yet we know that it does no such thing. It is only that our position changes with relation to it.

Now, in harmony with all this, it seems to us, is this text, Genesis vi. 6. It simply means that God ceased to deal with men as he had before, and to them it seemed a change in him, when really the change was in them; and the language of the text presents the results of man's change-ability, and not of any change in God. Perhaps we need to add no more at this time to present our view of this matter.

ACTS II. 21.

"AND it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

In obedience to the request of a correspondent we cheerfully offer the following remarks on the passage proposed for consideration. This text was quoted by Peter and the eleven from Joel ii. 32, in the memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost, and by Paul, Rom. x. 13; and from the repeated use made of the words by inspired prophets and apostles, we may infer the importance of their true import. Whatever inference legalists and Arminians may draw from the text, we understand it to embrace the following important points:

First. The absolute and irrevocable decree of God that certain things clearly defined were ordained of God to come to pass. The mouth of the unchanging God had spoken it by the prophets, and therefore its certain fulfillment was unavoidable. God by the holy prophet does not say, it may happen to be so, or it shall if the people desire it; but absolutely, "it shall come to pass." In this essential particular, as in all others, the true God is distinguished from all the gods of heathen or nominal worshipers. "Declaring the end from the beginning," and saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." There is no half-way or middle-ground to be occupied in regard to the matter: we must either admit the things declared in the text were foreordained of God, and therefore as sure to be accomplished in their time, as it was certain that God had declared them, or else we must take the broad ground of open infidelity and say that we do not believe the plain declaration of God himself. As much as some people seem to be shocked at the idea of predestination, in its absence there never could have been any predictions made by the prophets. No man on earth can possibly disbelieve the doctrine of foreordination, and at the same time regard any of the predictions of the prophets of the Lord as anything more than uncertain conjectures. Upon no other principles can we rely upon the accomplishment of prophecy, than that God has before ordained its accomplishment. Our Lord Jesus Christ has assured us that heaven and earth shall pass away, but not a jot or tittle of his word shall fail until all is accomplished; and also, that all that is written in the law and in the prophets must be fulfilled. If God says anything shall come to pass, is not the saying, being uttered by him, in itself a decreed? If not, what is a decree? we mean, of course, in the common acceptance of the term. We do not contend that it has the form of a precept, but rather of predestination, beyond the possibility of any failure.

Second. The text emphatically declares two things which were before ordained to come to pass, namely, that the name of the Lord should be called upon, and that they who call upon him shall be saved. It is as certain that they should call upon him as that they should be saved; and if we say that either their calling on his name or their salvation was uncertain, we say in substance that God knew not whereof he affirmed when he declared that it should come to pass. God has made provision for the fulfillment of this declaration, and such provision as cannot fail to secure the final result. He has promised to quicken his people, and to pour out his Spirit upon them, and that they shall call upon his name; and in the fulfillment of the gracious promise he has sent forth the Spirit of his Son into the hearts of his children, crying, Abba, Father, and by this witness identified the heirs of promise. And the apostles, full of the Holy Ghost, in the immediate connection of the promise quoted from Joel the prophet, bore testimony, "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The promise of God and the provisions of grace and salvation as fully embraced them before they were called as afterwards; the promise was to as many as he should call, not as many as had received the call. Not those who had drawn near unto him, and by some kind of instrumentality brought themselves within the range or hearing of his call, but all that were afar off; no amount of distance can place them beyond the power of his call. He calls his own sheep by name; and Christ says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give to them eternal life, and they shall never perish." "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." They are they called according to his purpose. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called."—Rom. viii. 29, 30.

Third. In bringing this immutable purpose to pass, those who are embraced in the purpose, who are saved and called, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began, are to call upon his name; and that, too, because God has purposed and promised that it shall be so. The promise of salvation is not to all who may say or read prayers; for "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." He will not hold that carnal hypocrite guiltless who takes his name in vain; and the sovereign Judge has already pronounced upon those worshipers who teach for doctrines the commandments of men, that their worship of God is vain; therefore, so far as they make use of his name, taking it on their lips, they take it in vain, and he will not hold them guiltless. "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" seeing that whatsoever is not of faith is sin; and without faith it is impossible to please God; and the apostle testifies that faith is a fruit of the Spirit, and the gift of God, and is the faith of Jesus Christ, and of the operation of God. "And how can they believe on him of whom they have not heard? And how can they hear without a preacher?" There is but one preacher who is able to make the dead hear his voice; but we rejoice that there is one who can make the dead hear his voice, and give to them eternal life, and that one is sufficient. His people shall hear his voice, and they shall all come unto him, and none of them shall perish. When he has called, quickened and made them alive, his Spirit helps their infirmities, and he pours upon them the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they are divinely qualified to pray with the Spirit, and with the understanding also, and to approach the throne of grace by a new and living way, which their God has consecrated for them through the veil, that is to say, his flesh. Hereunto they come bodily, to ask for mercy and find grace to help in every time of need.

We have hinted that to "call upon the name of the Lord" in the sense of our text is something more than, and essentially different from, forms and ceremonies. Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom. No man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Although they may say, Lord, Lord, and articulate solemn words, and even like the carnal Jews draw nigh to God with their lips, and have a form of godliness, yet unless they know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, they cannot call upon his name. They that come unto God must have faith, and that faith which no unregenerated sinner can have. They must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them who diligently seek him. All this preparation of the heart and language of the tongue must come from God. The heirs of salvation are not only to call on the Lord, but upon the "name of the Lord." They have an interest in his name. "This is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord Our Righteousness;" and as the church is the bride, the Lamb's wife, she has a right in that name; and this also is the name whereby she shall be called, The Lord Our Righteousness. As Eve and all the human family had an interest in the name given to Adam (God called their name Adam), so in Christ Jesus all the family (the spiritual family) in heaven and earth are named in him; and that name is full indemnity to them. It is a responsible name, and insures salvation. We being bankrupted in all our human nature, in our Adamic name we have no credit—can obtain none from law or justice. All hope of acceptance with God is in the name which his Spirit teaches us to plead as our only reliance before the throne of God. To them this name is a strong tower into which they enter and find safety. And although they may walk in darkness and have no light, it is still their happy privilege to trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon their God.

His name is above every name that is named in heaven or in earth; all heaven reveres it. God the Father honors it, and the Holy Ghost reveals it, to the glory of God and the comfort of all the saints. But it is a name which no man knoweth, save him that receiveth it. Relying alone on this, the only name given under heaven among men whereby they must be saved, they call upon it, trust in it, make it their only plea before the throne of heaven; and while thus confiding in it, how joyfully shall every saint in the fullness of their hearts sing with the poet,

"Jesus, my God, I know his name,
His name is all my trust;
Nor will he put my soul to shame,
Nor let my hope be lost."

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to enclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

of light. I have seen times when I only beheld the Father in spiritual vision to that extent that I could say, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." But through the toil and travel of this life I have had my eyes turned to other objects, even to consider the least one of the Father's children, and have learned, "If we love not our brother whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen?" Not that these exercises conflict, and make each other void; but they are different lessons in the same school, each in their order. We may at the first revelation to us or in us of the love and mercy of God be like the one who wished to follow Jesus wherever he should go. He would want always his visible and felt presence. But the Master told him to go home to his friends, &c. He was not to be unmindful of the family, of his place or work there. The apostle had a longing to depart and be with Christ; for he said, "For me to die is gain." Yet he must finish his course, and be mindful of his brethren. How often we say our evidence gets down to only the love of the brethren, bringing forth the words, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." And yet how much there is in it; it embraces so much. They compose the whole family, and it is named of the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. It here may be composed of the weak, the faltering, the erring, the wandering, those who are unpleasant and make jars in the family, and others who are the pride or flower of the family, as some call them; yet do we love them all as we should? do we bear with them? do we as brothers and sisters dear hide their faults? do we lay down our lives for each other, as we are taught to do? I can only answer for myself. I feel the weakest, the most unpleasant one of all. I feel I need the forbearance of all. I feel that inasmuch as we are told to pray for one another, that I most need the prayers of all. It seems that this is about all the use I am to the family, to draw out their pity and their prayers. It is in the book of Ephesians where this family is spoken of; and how much there is in this one book; and how rich it is in heavenly and comforting things. It tells us so much about the one body, the one Spirit, the one building, the unity of the faith, the one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and in all, and through all. And of this family are such as we, according to his choice, which he made in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself; that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him; in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; also according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. I love to think of this eternal purpose; to think that perhaps I am embraced in it; that there were thoughts of mercy for me, even before time began. Although we are here told that we were by nature children of wrath, yet I feel that by grace we were chosen of God, and precious in his sight. I love to think that Christ died for me; that he bore my sins in his own body on the tree; that when he said, "I lay down my life for the sheep," I was one of them, even though I was not born until these ages have passed, neither of the first nor of the second birth; otherwise how can I be saved? I love to consider that the great love, the choice, the ransom, were all in the eternal mind before I had an existence; even before the foundation of the world; and not only I, but this whole family, manifested in the dispensations of the fullness of time; until at last we are told of such a unity or oneness that we are assured that we are flesh of his flesh and bone of his bones: also, that he is the Vine, and we are the branches. This is a living union; a new and living way. If one wishes this mystery explained, I will only say, I find this here in my Bible, and I love it. To feel that God loved me and made this grand provision for me so long before I was born, assures me that he will love me evermore. The words, "Ye are blessed of the Lord, who made heaven and earth," have been very sweet to me. Heaven and earth. We know what earth is, and I hope to know what heaven is. Sometimes the darkness is so great that I cannot see beyond. I only see earth: but heaven seems so far away. Every place where the two are spoken of is sweet to me, as pointing the weak, falling mind to the certainty of the one as well as the other. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Often we grow restless here, and wish for the better country, that is, the heavenly. I love to think of the whole family in heaven and earth; one family in two places. It sometimes makes the border-line grow dim and vanish away when I think we are here, and they are only across the way.

How I miss dear Mary Parker. She was a companion in tribulation to me, although I never saw her. How I miss every one of the family that goes away. Yet I know they are only on the other side; and even if our kindred in the flesh are among this family, I cannot feel that they are to be ignored, for fear of being "after the flesh;" for the spiritual tie is all that remains, as the whole family are all in heaven; and if even this does not remain, why do we sing,

"Love is the golden chain that binds
The happy souls above?"

Or why are we told that charity remaineth, or never faileth? We may love our traditions very dearly sometimes; at least I have; but sometimes we have to give them up. I feebly understand that even the body must be made spiritual before the whole family realize the adoption, and are all gathered as one in heaven. "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more" after the flesh. But we do believe he is glorified in heaven; and if, as some tell us, we shall then have no remembrance that we were ever upon earth, how then could we sing the redemption song? How could it be that there we shall know as we are known, and see as we are seen? How can we understand that now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face? The apostle would not have us ignorant concerning them that are asleep, that we sorrow not as others which have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again from the dead, we also believe that they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; and he adds, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." If these words have not been a comfort to any other one who ever lived, they truly are to me. How happy are we when the family are gathered together here. Can we conceive how happy we shall be when the whole family shall at last be gathered together in heaven?

Yours in the family, I trust,
KATE SWARTOUT.

NORA SPRINGS, Iowa, Feb. 24, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I see that my subscription has expired, and I want to renew it for another year, so you will find inclosed a money order for two dollars. I like the paper for the doctrine it advocates—the doctrine of election, salvation by grace, through faith, and that not of ourselves, but the gift of God. I understand by reading the Scriptures that the first man Adam was of the earth, earthy; natural, not spiritual; and by no power of himself could he attain to anything higher than nature. It seems from the reading of the Scriptures that God gave to man a law, and man violated that holy law, and was sent forth from the garden to till the ground from whence he was taken. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden." "And he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." So man's arm is too weak; for there is that flaming sword, which says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." So the apostle Paul could say,

"As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." We read also that "death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." So we see that Adam's posterity died, and still die, and return to dust. "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." There is no release in that war; for there is no man that has power in the day of his death. His power is taken away. Now, if we know anything spiritual we have to be taught it by a higher power than the natural man. We must be taught it by the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, a Quickening Spirit. He is that King which the prophet speaks of when he says, "A King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." I think that is the highest tribunal that ever sat. Every case has been brought before that tribunal, and in time it is made manifest, by his calling his children with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world. When he calls, his children hear; for the word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. He knows us altogether. When he speaks, it is done; and when he commands, it stands fast. It is that still small voice that speaks to the poor sinner. It pricks them in the heart, and they fall under him, and cry out, What shall I do? Thus it was on the day of Pentecost when the apostle Peter was preaching to them. Peter told them to repent and be baptized, every one of them, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. "For the promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The same cause in every age will produce the same effect. When the Lord shows a poor sinner what he is by nature, he will cry out as did one of old, "I am undone." He will feel the need of a physician; and there is only one Physician that can cure a sin-sick soul, and that one is the Lord Jesus Christ. He can say, Son or daughter, arise; for thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven thee. His work is still being made manifest, by bringing his children from the east and west, the north and south, and causing them to sit down in his kingdom. When one is born of the Spirit he is in the kingdom which the Lord said he would set up, which should break in pieces all other kingdoms. That kingdom was to be an everlasting kingdom, and to the subjects of that kingdom the Lord gives eternal life, and says they shall never perish. "My Father which gave them me is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." O what a permanent foundation! All the power of men and devils cannot destroy that foundation. Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks around Zion, the church. O how secure she is! He will bring her off more than conqueror through him that loved her and gave himself for her. Jesus died, the just for the unjust, and in time he will come to receive his bride to himself. Those who have gone before cannot be perfect without us. So says one of the inspired writers. That is, the building will not be complete till the last heir is brought in; and then farewell to this corruptible earth, when the Lord comes without sin unto salvation. Then this mortal will put on immortality, and this corruptible will put on incorruption. Then will be brought to pass the saying, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." And now Paul says, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." If I were as sure that I had an interest in the glorious Redeemer as I am that the doctrine of election is true, I do not think I would ever have a doubt; but I see so much sin about myself that it makes me cry, "O wretched man that I am! I cannot have my mind on the things that I would, but have so many foolish thoughts; and the thought of foolishness is sin. I know there is no perfection in the flesh. We shall not be perfect till the resurrection; and then we shall see our Savior as he is, and be like him. Then shall we praise him as we desire, world without end.

I will say in conclusion, Cast the mantle of charity over this poor scribble, rectify all mistakes, and oblige a poor sinner, a weak worm of the dust, who, if saved, is saved by grace. May God guide you, dear editors, in publishing your paper, is the prayer of a friend, I hope. My love to all the household of faith.

M. L. JACKSON.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., March 19, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—This snowy, blustering March morning, while sitting before my comfortable fire, thinking over my unprofitable life, my many mistakes and short comings, I opened my Bible to the ninetieth Psalm, commencing, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." Then my heart was lifted from my doubts. I thought of the many mansions or abiding places prepared for those who love Jesus. Where the blessed Master is, the poor soul finds a sweet resting place. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Forty-six years ago, if I am not mistaken, I first felt this rest. My heart is all aglow now when I remember that day of peaceful joy, when that great burden of sin was lifted. Then

"I could not believe that I ever should grieve.

That I ever should suffer again."

But before many hours the thought came, You are mistaken. It is presumption for one so vile to hope. A Christian must be Christlike, and you cannot live one hour without evil thoughts.

For four years before I united with the church I tried to live away from worldly amusements. I would read my Bible and hymn-book, and try to get away from sin. I found my worst enemy was that of my own household, or heart. I would not talk to the Lord's people, the people I loved, for fear I would deceive them. At one time an old brother that I esteemed as the salt of the earth took me by the hand and said, "Sister, why do you not come into the fold?" and added, "Your countenance shows that you belong to this people." Then I was very sad, and said to myself, I must stay away from the good meetings, for my very face acts the hypocrite.

Now this gloomy morning I am cheered by the coming of our dear old messenger of love, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and on its first page I have a feast from the pen of Fred. W. Keene, taking his text from Luke xxii. 61, 62, "And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter," &c. How often I have read that narrative and wept, for my heart told me that I was like Peter. This reminded me of some of my first experience. In those trying days Elder T. P. Dudley and brother visited our church at Crawfordsville, and after preaching four good sermons here my father took them and myself in his spring wagon fifteen miles, to a church called Union. The roads were very bad, making the traveling tedious; but that was a bright spot in my life. O how I did enjoy the spiritual conversation. Both of these strangers, that I had only known for one day, told their experiences, which warmed my heart, so that I told mine. Elder Dudley said, "I offered myself to the church on Saturday, and was received; but that night I was cast into 'Doubting Castle,' and O how sorry I was that I had taken the step, to deceive this dear people. I could not sleep till I promised the Lord to undo what I had done. I was to be baptized the next day. This I resolved not to do. Next morning I still felt the same gloom. When I rode up to the meeting-house a dear brother came to meet me, gave me his hand, and said, 'Good morning, brother Dudley.' I thought, Better say brother devil." This gave me more courage than anything the saints had ever spoken to me, to think a dear man of God, one who could preach such wonderful sermons, and who looked so pure and Christlike, could have such evil thoughts and doubts.

MARCH 20.—Yesterday I was hindered from finishing my letter, and now on looking over what I have written I find I was reading and thinking about the same Psalm (90th) that Elder Chick in his editorial wrote from, and I had not read it until after I wrote that sheet. Well, I must say what you hear from me every year, that the SIGNS is a great comfort to me, a bunch of grapes from Eschol, that comes to my home every week. This is my birthday—born the same year with the SIGNS, which may account for my great love for the paper.

Your one-armed sister,

MARRIAGES.

At his residence, State Road, Del., March 19th, by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Mr. Samuel T. Green, of Middletown, and Mrs. Rose Livingston, of Wilmington, both of Delaware.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Elder William Pine died at his residence in Hartford Township, Adams Co., Ind., March 26th, 1896, aged 76 years, 5 months and 19 days.

He was born in Dunkard, Va., Oct. 7th, 1819, and while yet in childhood his parents moved into Coshocton Co., Ohio, where at the age of nineteen years he married Miss Martha Sales, by whom he had four sons, Amos, Hiram, William and Joseph Henry. The eldest and youngest died years ago. His first wife died Jan. 11th, 1886. He married again, Caroline Crosby, March 26th, 1887, just nine years before his death. He was baptized by Elder Moody in early manhood. He always stood on the Old School Baptist side in the division, and fully sustained the faith of God's elect, maintaining the whole and undivided doctrine of God and the gospel order as far as I knew him, which was about ten or twelve years. In March, 1887, he was ordained, and though aged, he was able to comfort the few who met at his house. He had resided on his present place, except a few years at Bluffton, since 1844; and though surrounded by the alien world, he always bore a faithful testimony to the gospel of his love, and manifested a steadfast faith to the last. I tried to comfort the mourners as God gave me.

A. B. BREES.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio, April 6, 1896.

Mr. David H. Devore departed this life on Wednesday, March 20th, 1895, after an illness of nine days with typhoid fever.

He was born May 7th, 1834, in Franklin, Johnson Co., Ind., and when two years old moved with his parents to Brown Co., Ind., and lived there until he was eighteen years of age. He emigrated to Iowa in 1850. In 1857 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Welch, and to them were born six sons. He leaves to mourn his death his wife and four sons, two having preceded him to the better land. He was not a member of the visible church. He was waiting to be more fully convinced of his being a child of God. He was an Old Baptist in belief, that if ever saved it would be by free grace alone. He loved to meet the brethren, and to sing and talk with them. Singing was one of his chief delights. He said he would not get well, and sung these words while on his sick bed,

"He's the lily of the valley,
The bright and morning star,
The fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

The day before he died I went to his bed to wait on him, and he told me that it would soon be over. I said, "Harry, do you want to go and leave me and the children?" He replied, "It is all right. I have a bright hope of a better world than this. If it were the Lord's will I would like to stay with you and Frank awhile longer; but it is all right as it is." Frank is our youngest son.

On March 22d funeral services were conducted at the residence by Elder Wm. T. Brown, in Ray Co., Mo., after which his remains were conveyed to the old South Point cemetery and buried; but one week later they were taken up by his eldest son and brought to Waverly, Lancaster County, Neb., and buried in the Waverly cemetery, to await the resurrection morn. We are satisfied that our loss is his eternal gain, and mourn not as those who have no hope. We believe that our dear one is at rest.

Yours in affliction,

MARY DEVORE.

DIED—At the residence of her son-in-law, Joseph A. Mathias, near Strickersville, Pa., Jan. 29th, 1896, aged 82 years, sister Ann M. Coulter, widow of Deacon Alexander Coulter, and mother of Dr. B. F. Coulter, of Philadelphia, Pa., who is a well-known correspondent to the readers of the SIGNS.

Our aged sister had been gradually failing in health, both in body and mind, for the past four years, and had become much of a charge to her daughter and others who cared for her. Her daughter, with whom she made her home, preceded her to the grave by two weeks, which made the affliction the more severe to the bereaved family. Sister Coulter was a true mother in Israel, as she always had, when in health, manifested much interest in the welfare of the church. Many hours the writer has spent in her company and that of her husband, which was precious and joyous, and has often appeared to be the most profitable of my life. She was the most amiable and patient person I ever knew, never having heard a complaining word escape her lips. She had experienced many sorrows, and was acquainted with grief, and had many hardships in life. She was a faithful companion, a loving mother, and a devoted sister in the church at Welsh Tract. She professed a hope in Christ when twelve or thirteen years of age, and always remained steadfast in the faith of God's elect, adorning her profession with a godly walk and conversation. She was a true follower of her Savior for seventy years, being the oldest member of the Welsh Tract Church when called to her eternal home. For her to die was gain, as she was as a sheaf fully ripe.

She leaves one son, three grandchildren and other relatives, together with the church, to cherish her memory as a noble woman and Christian.

Yours in hope of life eternal,

P. M. SHERWOOD.

NEWARK, Del.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I send for publication in the SIGNS a tribute of respect to departed ones, for the benefit of those interested, especially those who read the paper, as they might not otherwise hear of their demise. I am reminded of an expression of brother A. S. Cook some years ago, in regard to the perusal of the SIGNS, looking first at the list of obituaries, to see who of our friends had passed away. Such has been my course. I have a present anxiety in regard to the living, in the land of the dying, as well as the land of the living. It seems that the past year has exceeded any for thirty or more years. At least I have attended the burial of twenty-two, being several more in number than in any of the years past. Sickness and death have prevailed to a great extent in our community, and many families are mourning.

The family of James B. Fuller, of Clovesville, Delaware Co., N. Y., consisting of the widow and two children, mourn their loss of husband and father, aged thirty-five years, who died of measles on March 4th, 1896. Mr. Fuller was an honest, hard-working man, a good neighbor, and, I believe, a Baptist in principle, although not a professor. He leaves besides the widow and children, numerous relatives to mourn. The Lord only can give them resignation to his will concerning them.

ALSO,

The home of Mr. Merrick Kelly was sadly distressed by the removal from it of his aged mother, and also a sister, who both died from the effects of measles. The sister died on the 10th and the mother on the 15th of March, 1896, aged 57 years and 87 years.

The sister was not a professor, although we believe she was a possessor of Christ, the hope of glory. The mother was a member of the Old School Baptist Church, being baptized, I believe, when very young. She died in the triumph of a living faith in Jesus Christ. She was a daughter of Elder James Mead, who long since laid his armor by. She was also the widow for many years of Iniffin Kelly, of Red Kill, Delaware Co., N. Y., where she died. The family of Mr. Merrick Kelly, consisting of himself, wife, two daughters and one son, at the time of the funeral of his sister, were indeed in mourning. The aged mother looked on the face of her loving and beloved daughter, now silent in death's embrace, soon to join the silent ranks. Lonesome is the house and vacant the places by the fire-side. I trust the lesson is an impressive one. A large circle of relatives are left to mourn, whom only the Lord can comfort.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"ABLE TO STAND, BUT LIABLE TO FALL."

UNDER the above title an article written by Elder Curry, of Lebanon, Ohio, appeared in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, issue of November 27th, 1895. It is there stated that "this paradox" first came to his ears by the teaching of Methodists and New School Baptists; but he did not quote their reasons for such dogma. Fairness demands that this be done. We are not acquainted with the teachings of the New School Baptist sect, and therefore we do not attempt to quote their reasons for such faith; but we do think that Methodists have a good and sufficient reason for believing such doctrine. The Bible is our authority. It is a righteous doctrine, and meets every requirement of our faith in God, and in his plan of universal government. Although Elder Curry differs with Methodists upon this issue, he yet quite agrees with them upon very many doctrinal matters, to wit:

1. That the attributes of God, love, mercy, majesty, might, justice, righteousness, dominion and power, are immutable, unchangeable, unfathomable and eternal.

2. That man was created sinless.

3. That he was liable to fall from his pure estate.

4. That he was created a living soul.

5. That death came by sin.

6. That he had no eternal life.

7. That the entire human race, coming after his fall (Christ excepted), are sinners by nature and also by practice.

8. That every provision of grace was determined by God before Adam was created.

9. That salvation is by grace, through faith, the gift of God.

10. That we are called by God unto righteousness, by faith, and chosen by him to become kings and priests unto God.

11. That God was in Christ, reconciling us to himself.

12. That we receive the Spirit of adoption through sanctification by the Holy Ghost.

13. That we must continue to exercise, first, love to God; second, love to man; third, love of virtue.

14. That we must continue to glorify him, first, by praise; second, by thanksgiving; and third, by supplication.

It would almost seem superfluous to discuss our differences; but it must be remembered that these also belong to the list of essentials. We should therefore scrutinize them carefully; because one single error often leads us into a very illogical position, not only difficult to defend, but also hard to harmonize with the principles of truth. This dogma presents two general propositions, to wit: First. That not only Adam before the fall, but all regenerate souls, are able to stand. Second. That at all times during the standing they are liable to fall.

The Elder denied the possibility of this dogma as a whole, but admitted the truth of the second general proposition; but since he denied Adam's ability to stand, we must infer that he also did not believe that regenerate souls had the ability to stand. We can only claim space to give a few of the reasons for this difference in our beliefs.

1. We affirm, and he denies, that God endowed Adam with a free will. We can scarcely see how Elder Curry can grant that Adam had a will, and yet deny that he had freedom to use it at his pleasure. It would be much more logical to deny that Adam had a will. But science and experience prove conclusively that man does have a will, and that he exercises it in perfect freedom, even to self-destruction. Can it be proved that Adam had a more limited endowment? God created him rational and accountable. To be rational he must have a will. To be accountable that will must be free. If this be not true, then Adam's life was neither a trial nor a probation. God endowed Adam with holy principles, and not with holy habits. Adam was to acquire the "habit of holiness" by the exercise of this endowment of holy principles. Habit is the result of acts of voluntary choice; but without right principles it is impossible to make a right choice. Therefore Adam did have the endowment necessary to establish and maintain habits of holiness. In Colossians iii. 10 we see that Adam's endowment consisted in "knowledge." In Ephesians iv. 24 we see also that it consisted in "righteousness and true holiness." In each of these endowments he bore the image of his Creator. In each of these he was finitely perfect. No created being can be infinitely perfect. But in each of these endowments he was evidently sufficiently perfect to have retained them by the proper use of his will; and this is precisely the condition in which we find the regenerate soul. But let us examine these endowments a little more in detail, that we may determine Adam's power to stand. First, "knowledge" after the image of him who created Adam, certainly implies that he knew the consequence of an act of rebellion. Second, "righteousness" after the image of his Maker, implies perfect faith. "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness." Indeed, faith is all the righteousness we can bring before God. Third, "true holiness" after the image of his Maker implies perfect love, because "God is love." Here, then, we have perfect knowledge, perfect faith and perfect love as the endowment, with a will sufficient to enforce them. Pray, what more can be needed to enable a man to stand? The vitality of our spiritual life depends, first, upon the holiness of our nature; and second, upon our faith in the application of that nature in the issues of life. We admit that all these endowments emanate from God's free grace; but the act of applying this faith to the issues of life is eminently an act of the soul. To this extent "we are co-workers with God," as stated in the Bible. The issues out of faith are vigilance, supplication, trust, and resistance of evil. The issues out of love are obedience, submission, humility and worship. God created Adam not only righteous and truly holy, like himself, but also endowed him with sufficient knowledge to enable him to be happy, like himself. He was intellectual, devotional and conscientious. In all of these his imperfections consisted in degree, and not in kind, when compared with his Maker. His exposure to temptation was only an incident attending his probation. It was doubtless permitted for wise reasons, just as it was permitted as an incident in Christ's life; but the influence of temptation was not a force. His will was persuaded, but not forced; therefore there was neither necessity nor excuse for his falling. We have shown that God endowed him with power to resist, and also power to choose. The Bible says, "Resist Satan, and he will flee from you." Besides all this, he has repeatedly promised "that his grace is sufficient for our needs," and that "if we trust him, he will keep us from falling." Then why did Adam fall, or any regenerate soul fall? Simply because the will was not used to exercise the power of his endowment. The commandment itself proves three things, i. e., first, God's right to command; second, Adam's duty to obey; third, that this single test was sufficient to meet all the demands of God's wisdom in his eternal government. No one can hide behind the poor excuse that "there is no moral principle involved in this positive command." Who will dare to assert that there is no moral principle involved when the great God of heaven and earth says to his creatures, "Thou shalt not," no matter to what act of life it may apply? There is moral turpitude in every act of resisting God's will. We are not to be the judge as to the extent of such moral turpitude; but it is certain that every positive commandment involves some moral principle.

2. We also differ as to the origin of evil. By inference, Elder Curry asserts that "it originated with God." We as Methodists fail to see any proof in support of this theory. It is certain that no man can prove that God originated the evil that caused Adam to fall. The only account of evil, as to origin, proves conclusively that "it had its root in the conception of a wrong use of a desire belonging to the soul; the desire being abnormally intensified by the sophistry and falsehood of an evil spirit called Satan." Thus far it is sin; but that "this desire must culminate in an act before it was capable of producing death in the soul." We challenge any one to prove any other history of its origin from the Bible. Here is the most positive proof of an exercise of the will in making a choice; because, first, Satan would never solicit if he had power to force; and second, the Bible plainly tells us "that God tempts no man to commit sin." But Elder Curry will ask, "Who created that desire in the soul of man upon which Satan operates to produce evil?" We answer that most assuredly God placed it there, but for wise and holy purposes. But admitting this fact, it is no proof that God intended man to use it for evil in any way, much less for his own destruction. It would be quite as logical to argue that since God has implanted a devotional nature in the soul, he intended him to become an idolater; or that since God created an amative nature in man, he intended him to commit adultery; or that because God has created an acquisitive nature in man, he intended that he should covet. This, however, would not only be illogical, but also out of harmony with God's revealed will to man. The whole tenor of the Bible proves that God created man for his express glory, and that he could only do this by continuing in knowledge, righteousness and true holiness, precisely as God had created him.

3. We differ as to the nature of Adam's life before the fall. This seems very strange to us. He admits that "Adam became a living soul," and yet denies "that it possessed a spiritual life." Now, that Adam had a soul is beyond all dispute. If it had not spiritual life, it could not possess the image of God, because "God is a Spirit." Adam's soul having life, it seems is proof positive that it was spiritual life. Not eternal life, for that in an absolute sense belongs to eternity only; but he had the promise and power of obtaining eternal life, contingent only upon his obedience, precisely as the regenerate soul has at this day. But God had specifically warned him that "The day in which thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This clearly meant both body and soul. Literal death to the body comes whenever the soul is separated from it. This part of the penalty was not at once inflicted on that day, because Adam lived many hundreds of years after that event; but notwithstanding all this display of merciful suspension, the body was doomed from that day henceforward, because the soul died a spiritual death that day. God in the soul is not only its life, but also its source of life; and when God withdrew his sustaining presence from the soul it could not live. The whole tenor of Scripture deals with the death of the soul in a moral or spiritual sense. Therefore Adam's condition before his fall is exactly as our condition after regeneration; that is, God was in his soul, whereby "it had life." Whereas his condition after his fall was exactly as our condition before regeneration, the soul having no life, because "God was not in it." The same cause under the working of the immutable government of God will certainly produce the same effect. When God is out of the soul it has no power to know, to feel or to act. Now this, again, is the condition of the body when the soul is withdrawn from it. Pray, if this in either case is not death, then what is death? How then does the soul come again into life? By the quickening of God's holy Spirit. The Bible plainly says, "He who hath Christ hath life; but he who hath not Christ abideth in death." This is clearly spoken of the soul. So now, whether in speaking of Adam or regenerate souls "born again," as Christ states it to Nicodemus, by "being able to stand" the Methodists mean that the ability is given through faith to retain God in the soul in knowledge, righteousness and true holiness, which is God's endowment by grace to man, giving vitality and life to the soul, whereby "we have communion with God and fellowship with Jesus Christ." If this be not possible, then wherein is our hope? Paul says "that nothing save our own deliberate act of willful disobedience can destroy our union with God."

Adam's fall by transgression proves that we are liable to do likewise. The Bible says, "Our sins separate us from God." Now, who will claim that by the exercise of our will we may not at any moment "willfully transgress the law?" On the other hand, it is clear that if it is possible for us to stand after regeneration by faith, then Adam could also have stood by faith. God no more intended Adam to sin than he intends that his adopted children shall sin. He has plainly said, "As I live, I have no pleasure in the death of any man." That of course includes Adam. The argument that "As Christ was sealed as our Redeemer before the fall, therefore God intended Adam to sin," is certainly very weak. Do we not see God's wise provisions to counteract the evils incident to natural life in a thousand different ways? He stores away an antidote for all sorts of poisons, and then reveals the fact to man. Does this prove that he intended that we should poison ourselves? And so we might multiply such instances by scores and scores. Then why should it seem strange that he should also in advance prepare an antidote for our spiritual evils incident to our life?

Now, before we close, we desire to speak of our difference regarding the practices that cause us to fall. Elder Curry says, "The one essential element in human character upon which all industrial enterprise depends is the love of money." Methodists claim to hear the voice of God saying, "This is the root of all evil." Then he bids us to "shun the very appearance of evil." Did God create an essential element in our character, and then command us to shun its every appearance? He also says, "Thou shalt have no other God but me." Can it be possible that he has set an evil in our nature, that we might worship an idol? He says, "Set not your heart upon worldly things." Then in the face of all these and scores of other like passages, how can we reconcile them with Elder Curry's statement that the love of money is an essential element in our character? Christ taught us to pray, "Deliver us from evil." How can we utter this prayer sincerely if we believe that "God made the love of money an essential element in our character?" Again, Elder Curry says, "All of the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, are essentially necessary in building up a religious society." But we Methodists claim to hear the voice of God saying, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Christ tells us that "If we look upon a woman to lust after her, we have already committed adultery in our hearts." Paul tells us that "We are tempted by the lust of the flesh;" and Christ commands us "to pray the Father to deliver us from temptation." Then we hear the voice of God saying, "A proud heart is an abomination unto the Lord." It bids us "to be ever humble;" "to walk humbly before God." Christ commands us to pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Pray, what use can God have for a soul educated in "pride of life," either on earth or yet in heaven? How are these things to be reconciled and made to harmonize with the statement that "The lust of the eye and the pride of life are essentially necessary in building up a religious society?" Now, we teach that no man can glorify God by the doing of these things. We believe that they do not belong to nor form any part of a holy life, and that they have no rightful or logical place in God's economy in the establishment of his kingdom on earth, and that they deserve to be entirely banished from every religious society.

Again, Elder Curry says, "The universal, unalterable and irrevocable reign of sin and death is fixed." This can only be true as to one class of sinners; that is, those who refuse to heed God's call to repentance and obedience. The Bible clearly teaches that "In Christ we are delivered from the law of sin and death." Paul plainly says, "To whom ye yield yourselves to obey, his servants ye are, whether it be of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." Servants of Christ have victory over sin, death, hell and the grave.

Again, Elder Curry says, "God visits the sins of the parents upon the children." To some extent this is true of natural law, and indirectly it in some cases is true of spiritual law; but it applies only to condition, and never to responsibility. I challenge any one to prove that God has ever declared his purpose to hold any one, whether it be child or otherwise, accountable morally for the sin of another. Indeed, the proof is most positive to the contrary. God says, "Every one shall answer for himself." Christ says, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." How could he say this, where the parents are sinners, if so be that he will hold the children accountable for the sins of the parents?

There are several other points of difference that we would gladly notice, but space forbids. I trust I have said enough to give a fair reason for the hope that is in us, "That we are able to stand, while we are liable to fall."

CENTERBURG, Ohio, Feb. 25, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Inclosed you will find an article written by our beloved brother J. W. Fairchild, which I have read with comfort. I feel that it contains substantial food for the poor and tried pilgrims in this world of sorrow, temptations, persecutions and afflictions, which God's children are tried with; therefore give it a place in the SIGNS, that it may comfort those who know the joyful sound. I think his writings are of great value to lovers of the truth.

As ever, your sister,

ELIZA DAVIDSON.

BRINEGAR, Ky., Jan. 1, 1896.

MRS. ELIZA DAVIDSON—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your comforting letter was received some time since, and I have been waiting for a season of refreshment in which to reply, that my speech might be with grace, seasoned with salt; but I am still shut up, and cannot come forth. Yet, poor and ignorant as I am of the things of our spiritual inheritance, I will attempt to pen a few thoughts upon the text in Acts xx. 30, as you request in your first letter.

Paul, after showing to the Elders of Ephesus his course in the ministry, the good fight that he had fought, in keeping himself free from the blood of all men, by not shunning to declare unto them all the counsel of God, points out their duty in the following words: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Verse 28. He then assigns the reason why they should be so watchful and diligent, both toward themselves and the flock. "For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Paul is here speaking of what should take place after his departure. If asked how Paul knew this, we would say, He was taught it by the Spirit; for "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith." But it is also proved by the history of the church, which is the same in all ages. "That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been, and God requireth that which is past."—Ecc. iii. 15. The Lord did not command concerning Jacob that his adversaries should be round about him just while serving the king of Babylon, and then be removed, but that they should be there continually. Men of corrupt minds disturbed the peace of Zion under the old dispensation. They showed their colors while Christ was here in the flesh. Paul fought with them at Ephesus; and they are continuing to wax worse and worse. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, though I suppose they were Egyptians. Korah and his company became jealous of Moses and Aaron in the wilderness, and accused them of taking too much upon themselves: just as those who rise up among us now, desiring to preach, when God has not called them to that work.

They become jealous of his true ministers, and try to bring accusations against them for their destruction. Elijah was confronted by four hundred and fifty of Baal's prophets. Micaiah came in contact with the same class of evil seducers. Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel. Shemaiah the Nehelamite, poured out his anathemas upon Jeremiah, and caused the people to believe in a lie. John the Baptist denounced the Pharisees, who claimed Abraham for their father, as a generation of vipers; and Christ told the same generation that they were of their father the devil. Paul tells us that Hymenaeus and Philetus had erred concerning the truth, teaching that the resurrection is already past, and overthrew the faith of some. Phygellus and Hermogenes had turned from him. Alexander had made shipwreck concerning the faith, and done him much wrong. Then no wonder he could say that he knew men would arise, speaking perverse things, as they had disturbed the peace of the church, and were drawing away disciples after them, while he was warning the brethren day and night with tears.

It may be well to note that these perverse disputers, concerning whom you ask my views, are of our own selves. They do not belong to the Methodists, nor Missionaries, but claim to be Old School Baptists. Our enemies are they of our own household. One of Paul's great perils was "Among false brethren." These boasters seem very well satisfied if they can only retain the name of God's people. One of their leaders recently used about these words, "O that glorious name Baptist! Brethren, if we have not the doctrine, we have the name. Let us cling to it." "In that day [the day we are now living in] seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach."—Isa. iv. 1. They are satisfied with the doctrine (the food and apparel) of their father the devil, but they do not like his name. They relish the productions of the flesh for food, and feel sufficiently clothed in their self-righteousness; yet they desire our name, thinking it is sufficient to take away their reproach. But the Lord says, "I know the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan."—Rev. ii. 9.

I cannot at present enter into a minute description of these enemies of the cross, but will notice a few of their characteristics which distinguish them from us. Their difference in doctrine and practice will be readily comprehended when we understand the difference between their god and our God. The reason people differ so widely upon religious views is on account of the difference between the gods they serve. All who worship and serve the same God are agreed. "There be gods many, and lords many," differing in certain temperments, yet in the main they are the same. They all agree in being "of this world," the "power of darkness," and dependent upon their professed subjects. But while the many different gods of these evil seducers bear close approximation to each other, they in no sense resemble "the Lord our God." "But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased. Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not," &c.—Psa. cxv. This work of making gods is one of the inventions men have sought out; and it being a fertile one, they have kept it up; and since the first one was invented they have made many improvements upon them. The heathen gods were the work of men's hands, made of silver and gold; but the gods of these high minded traitors are works of their vain imaginations, made of all the filth which satisfies the lusts of the flesh. In olden times, before so many gods were invented, there was generally one god patented by the governments; and the god-inventors of to-day are striving to obtain a patent for their inventions in this country; but so far they have failed, and never shall succeed until it pleases "the Lord our God."

The object of these "lovers of themselves" is worldly gain and applause. This they try to accomplish by drawing away disciples after them. They are ever trying to elevate the church and raise it to a degree of respectability among the institutions set up by the powers of darkness. Hence they are very zealous to gather the sheep (?) into the fold. They cannot endure to be "made the filth of the earth," and be "the off-scouring of all things;" to be "hated of men, and separated from their company;" but they would be "reckoned among the nations." They desire to raise the Baptist Church from her despised state wherein our God has placed her, to the foremost ranks among the organizations of earth, and get the honor for doing so. Truly, as Paul describes them, they are "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unholy, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors [one of them betrayed Christ,] heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away with divers lusts." Their object is here stated again, to draw away or captivate disciples; and the character of their disciples is described, "silly women, laden with sins." Neither these traitors nor their disciples know the truth; for they have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; and their disciples are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Their preaching is "perverse things." "They are not afraid to speak evil of dignities; but these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." As a rule they are very bitter against God's absolute sovereignty; yet some try to be firmer than God's ministers, and try to prove that their wickedness proceedeth from God. But while they oppose or disgrace it, they themselves are fulfilling God's eternal purpose; for they were "made to be taken and destroyed," and "were of old ordained to this condemnation." O what annoyance these "filthy dreamers" give the church. "These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds [false doctrines], trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." "These are murderers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage." They "change the truth of God into a lie, and worship and serve the creature more than the Creator."

But someone may ask, Do you mean there are false teachers of this character among us now? Certainly I do. Do ye not remember "the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts?"—Jude 17, 18. "There were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you." Yes, they are among us now, and are privily bringing in their damnable heresies, denying our Lord Jesus Christ, causing the way of truth to be evil spoken of, and with feigned words making merchandise of the flock. They are no better now than in Paul's day; for he tells us they shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. As Paul fought with beasts at Ephesus, so we have been fighting with some of these heady traitors and filthy dreamers in these parts; and even some of God's children have "followed their pernicious ways," and others still sigh for them. But I have told them often, and now tell them even weeping, "that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." May not God's elect be carried about with their winds of doctrine. Some of the brethren think me too rough, and think I ought to speak smoothly, and not personate anyone. But I speak no plainer than Christ and his apostles spoke. Paul personated Hymenaeus and Philetus, Phygellus and Hermogenes, and others. Had Paul been as some among us to-day, he would have omitted his warning to the church concerning them. Some Baptists are getting almost as nice as ancient Israel when they told the seers to "Speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits."—Isa. xxx. 10. But David describes a man his equal, his guide, his acquaintance, with whom he had taken sweet counsel, and walked unto the house of God in company, that "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart; his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords,"—Psa. lv. 21. And Solomon tells us that "The lips of a strange woman drop as a honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil. But her end is as bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword. Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell."—Prov. v. 35. So these nice, smooth fellows are not so safe at last.

How often, in beholding the deplorable condition of our beloved Zion, the great breach and the grievous blow wherewith she is broken, am I made to lament with the prophet, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." When betrayed by those who have been my companions in the ministry, when wounded by those who were my professed friends, and when those with whom I took counsel hid a snare for my feet, and lay in secret to shoot at me, I have longed for "a lodging place of wayfaring men in the wilderness, that I might leave my people, and go from them; for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men." You may think me a little harsh, but it is true that grievous wolves are in among us, not sparing the flock, and men of our own selves are speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. The faith of some of God's children is being overthrown, and many are following the pernicious ways of those "whited sepulchres." But, glorious consolation, "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." Let these wolves howl, let these evil seducers go round about the city, and make a noise like a dog; let all the powers of darkness be gathered together, yet they cannot shake the foundation of our God; they cannot overthrow one of his purposes, nor bring to naught any of his counsel; they cannot prevent one event from working for good to his chosen race; neither can they perform one act that will not so work. Their departing from the faith, their hypocritical lies, their damnable heresies, their rioting in the daytime, their swelling words of vanity, their fleshly allurements, their promises of liberty, their service to corruption, and even

1 KINGS XXII. 28.

OUR brother, E. D. Varnes, of Farmington, Ill., some time since requested a few thoughts from us upon the text in 1 Kings xxii. 28.

The whole narrative is full of interest to all those who desire to know the manner in which God dealt with Israel as a nation in the old covenant days. We can only call attention briefly to what is there presented. The narrative of the chapter itself is the best commentary upon the text. We will quote the text, and then briefly state the contents of the chapter. "And Micaiah said, If thou return at all in peace, the Lord hath not spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, O people, every one of you." Israel had at this time a wicked king, Ahab, upon the throne, while Jehoshaphat reigned in Judah. It was after the division of the kingdom into Judah and Israel. Ahab had turned away from God, and had surrounded himself with prophets of his own creation, who were intent upon pleasing him; and the king desired to be pleased. He desired not truth from their lips, but smooth things. As these prophets on their side desired his favor, they were careful to conceal the truth from him even when they knew it, and declared smooth and flattering things to him.

Jehoshaphat came to visit Ahab, and Ahab proposed to him that they join forces and wage war against Ramoth-Gilead. Jehoshaphat said, "Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord." Ahab gathered four hundred of the false prophets, (his creatures) together, and they with one voice declared that he should be victorious. But Jehoshaphat seemed to doubt the reliability of these men, and inquired if there were not another besides these, a prophet of the Lord; and Ahab said there was one man, Micaiah, whom he did not like, because he prophesied evil rather than good of him. Now, when Micaiah had come, he declared that he could only declare what the Lord bade him declare; and in the strength of the Lord he withstood not only the displeasure of the king, but the united testimony of the four hundred sycophants of the king. He declared that he had seen Israel scattered upon the hills, as sheep not having a shepherd. He still further declared that the Lord had sent forth a lying spirit to deceive Ahab, that he might go up to this battle and be destroyed; and this lying spirit had entered into these four hundred prophets of Ahab. These were certainly bold and faithful words. One of these false prophets smote him upon the cheek, and the king commanded him to be carried to the governor of the city, and put in prison, and fed with the bread of affliction and the water of affliction, until he the king should return in peace. This was his reward for telling the truth. But his spirit rested in God, and he was not crushed; and so he replies to the vain boast of the king, and the flatteries of the false prophets to which the king had listened, in the words of the text to which our attention is called. He calls upon all the people to listen and bear witness that his prophecy is that Ahab shall not return in peace. He declares that if Ahab does return in peace, the Lord has not spoken by him. All who wish to read the outcome can find it in the rest of this chapter.

Without detailing the incidents of the narrative any further, we will call attention to one or two reflections which suggest themselves. First. The true servants of God then, as now, were in the minority. We need not be surprised that it is so now, since it has always been so. It was so with Elijah and the prophets of Baal and of the grove. But few followed the Savior in the days of his flesh, and many who professed to be his disciples went back when they heard his doctrine. The Scriptures represent the people of God as a remnant, and a very small remnant. We need not be surprised if but one in four hundred preaches the truth.

Second. The truth is never popular. People love to hear smooth things, which flatter their pride and ambition, rather than the truth, which humbles and abases them. Men love to hear their own power and goodness proclaimed. If their sinfulness of conduct be set forth, they will not find much fault, providing at the same time they are flattered with the exaltation of their own power to repent, and reform, and save themselves at any time. But if the truth that men are utterly unable to do good, to believe, to save their souls, be set forth, as well as their sinfulness, this angers them, and they will not heed it. Salvation by grace and works will always gain applause from natural minds; but salvation by grace humbles human pride too much. Natural minds will always hate election, because by it all human choice and human work and human merit are set aside. When men know not God, and love their own ways, they love not the rebukes of the true servants of God. So king Ahab shut the prophet up, and for his bread and water afflicted him.

Third. People love smooth things; that is, things in harmony with their own desires. Grace alone can make men willing to deny themselves, or to hear that which is contrary to their natural inclinations. The apostle speaks of some who have itching ears, who have turned to fables, and turned away from the truth; and even the people of God have need to watch unto prayer, lest they also enter into this temptation.

Fourth. We also learn from the outcome of this narrative that every word of God will be fulfilled, though it be often in hidden ways, which we could not foresee. So Ahab was slain, notwithstanding all his precautions to prevent his being known. With us the bow may be drawn at a venture, but God speeds the arrow.

Fifth. Wicked spirits and wicked men are under the sovereign control of Jehovah. When men are willing to be deceived, and desire not to know the will of God, he can and does commend lying spirits to fill the mouths of liars, that those who will have none of his word may be deceived and hardened in their fleshly course.

How Israel should rejoice that her God is sovereign, and does his will in all places and with all men!

ROMANS VIII. 20.

BROTHER G. W. McNay, of Plantersville, Ark., asks for some reflections from us upon the Scripture found in Romans viii. 20.

As we endeavor to comply with the above request, we are by no means unmindful of the fact that very divergent views are held by the wisest and ablest brethren concerning this text and its immediate connection. We think that the general concensus of opinion has been, and still is, that Paul was here speaking in a figurative sense, and that by a figure of speech called personification he attributed consciousness to the inanimate creation, and represented it as participating in the groaning and travailing of the children of God, who labor and suffer under the dominion of sin, sorrow and suffering, here called vanity by the apostle. It is certainly true that in the Scriptures inanimate things are often represented as having consciousness, and as rejoicing, weeping, leaping, clapping their hands, &c. We might mention instances, but it seems needless, as they will no doubt readily occur to those who are Bible readers. There would therefore be nothing out of harmony with the frequent figures of speech used in the Scriptures in accepting the above named view of the language of Paul embraced in Romans viii. 19-22.

Before suggesting, however, the view that seems to commend itself to our mind, we desire to call attention to two words used by the apostle in this connection: the first is the word "vanity."—Verse 20. The literal force of the original word is uselessness; that is, the creature (whatever Paul may mean by this word here) was, by reason of sin, made useless. It had been made for a certain purpose; God was to be glorified by it; but through sin the creature has been subjected to such a condition that instead of being to the praise of God, it dishonors and blasphemes God in every way. Some have thought that the word "vanity" here meant sorrow and trouble; but the word "vanity" never has that meaning in the Scriptures. The words from which it has been translated, both in the Old and New Testaments, never mean sorrow or trouble, but always emptiness, vacancy, uselessness or unprofitableness. Are not all these words descriptive of what every soul who is enlightened by the Spirit of God confesses to be true in his own case? And is the child of God who feels these things willingly or voluntarily subject to this vanity?

The second word to which we would call attention is "creature," in verses 19-21, and "creation," in verse 22. They are precisely the same word. Indeed, the expression in verse 22, "the whole creation," would, we think, be more correctly rendered by the words, every creature. The original word is the same in all four verses. Many believe that the word "creation" should be understood in each of these verses. It is sure that the original Greek word would admit of such a translation; but it is equally sure that it may just as correctly be translated "creature." At all events the same word should be used in all four of these verses.

The view of the text that commends itself to us is as follows, though we desire to speak with deference to the views of the many brethren who have seen the matter in a different light. It seems to us that Paul is speaking in verses 19-22 of the same character that occupies his attention all through the chapter; and in the beginning of this chapter he speaks to those who are in Christ Jesus (verse 1), of those who walk after the Spirit (verse 4), of men who have the Spirit of Christ (verse 9), of the brethren (verse 12), and of the sons of God, verses 14-16. In short, Paul all along here is speaking solely of the people who have been born of God, and are believers in Jesus, and who have his Spirit. Paul means by all these expressions just what we would mean, and do mean, when we use the same words in our ordinary conversation. Now, why should it be thought that Paul means any other character in verses 19-22? It seems to us that we have Paul's meaning when we substitute for "creature" and "creation" the words, "sons of God" (verse 14), or "children of God" (verse 16), or any other expression by which Paul in this chapter designates the people of God. It seems to us to fully express Paul's meaning if we read these four verses in this way; For the earnest expectation of the believer waits, &c. (verse 18). For the believer was made subject to vanity, &c. (verse 20). Because the believer also shall be delivered, &c. (verse 21). And we know that every believer groaneth, &c. (verse 22). This view of Paul's meaning seems to us to show these verses to be in line with his theme in all the rest of the chapter, and also to be in full harmony with daily christian experience.

And so to speak especially of verse 20, Paul here seems to us to teach that believers realize an emptiness of all that is good and desirable in themselves. They by the very experience into which they are led by the indwelling Spirit of God, come to realize their subjection to folly, or vanity. No one else does realize this. No one else really groans under this burden, and no one else has the promise, nor any hope of final deliverance from this bondage of corruption. The cause of this bondage is sin. It is because the soul feels its sinfulness that it realizes the emptiness and vanity and unprofitableness. Because of sin in the heart and life, God shows the soul its subjection to vanity. The soul longs to be free, but cannot free itself; therefore it groans, being burdened. But this experience contains within itself the very foundation of hope. This is the experience of which Jeremiah speaks when he says, "Remembering the wormwood and the gall, my soul hath them still in remembrance; therefore have I hope." This personal, experimental subjection of the believer to vanity is of God. It is the beginning of that good work in the man which he will perform to the day of Jesus Christ. This work has hope in it. The soul may not, does not, realize it at the time. It is like sowing the seed with weeping. It is the night when all is dark. But yet as the sowing contains promise of the reaping, as the night with its shades prophesies the day, so this tasting of the bitterness and shame of subjection to vanity contains the hope of a full and final deliverance into the glorious liberty of sonship of the children of God.

No soul ever entered into this experience of bitterness willingly or voluntarily. No one ever led another into it. This subjection is always of God. The expression, "by reason of him," really just means, because of him; that is, this work is of God. Herein is the comfort of this work; it is of God. He has begun it; he will finish it. Through this revelation of self the soul is led at last to the knowledge of him who is holy, and in whom is found full deliverance from this bondage of corruption—full salvation.

This subjection is in hope; that is, it contains the assurance of deliverance. What a blessed thing then it is to be thus experimentally subjected to corruption. By this road the soul is led to hope in the mercy of God through Christ. Self-abhorrence must always precede the experience of the salvation which is of God.

We leave these suggestions with all who may read them. We have felt to speak diffidently. We do not feel that we are more wise than our brethren.

"ABLE TO STAND, BUT LIABLE TO FALL."

IN this number we give space to the letter of Mr. J. E. Williams, in reply to the article of brother H. M. Curry under the above heading, published in our issue for November 27th, 1895. Mr. Williams is one of the ablest ministers of the Methodist denomination, and a gentleman of education and culture, able to bring all the force of natural logic against Elder Curry's position upon this subject that the carnal mind can invent. We have not the least fear for brother Curry in the verdict of our readers. Many of the arguments used by Mr. Williams have been advanced by some of the members of our own denomination, only they do not carry their reasoning out to its legitimate result, as does Mr. Williams.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER GILBERT BEEBE.

1 TIMOTHY III. 16.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am so well pleased with your editorials, I beg you to give your views on 1 Tim. iii. 16, "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness," &c. Also on Prov. xxv. 2, "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing," &c.

SINNER SAVED BY GRACE.

Were we to confer with flesh and blood, our reason would dictate to us, in consideration of the excited state of many brethren on the subject matter of the first text proposed for comment, that we should rather be guided by the text in Proverbs, and conceal what light we have, if we have any, at least until the troubled waters of debate and contention shall become more smooth and pacific. But although the proverb teaches that it is the glory of God to conceal a thing, it also teaches that "it is the honor of kings to search out a matter." And as our brother who desires our views is in tribulation, although a "sinner saved by grace," he may be called up out of all his tribulation before the agitation alluded to shall entirely cease.

"And without controversy." We do not understand the apostle to mean that there was no controversy on the subject, for certainly the doctrine embraced in the text was controverted by Jews and pagans at the very time the text was written; and the controversy has continued ever since, and has drenched the earth in blood at sundry times since the apostle finished his course. But from the expression we understand that the doctrine, although a mystery, is so well established in the faith of God's elect, so positively declared in the Scriptures, and so thoroughly inscribed on the experience of all the children of God, that it cannot be successfully controverted by heretics or schismatics. It is possible that in Paul's day there were none professing christianity who pretended to controvert the fact that godliness, in the sense defined in the text, was a mystery; but it would seem that we have many at this day who feel themselves competent to divest the subject of all mystery, and teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord. It is regarded as a matter easily taught to unregenerate children or adults, in Sunday Schools, Bible classes, in tracts and Sunday School books, &c. But those who hold it as a mere science have yet to learn that it is not only the glory of God to conceal a thing, but that he has concealed these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes, because it seemed good in his sight.

"Great is the mystery of godliness." This is not from any want of ability on the part of God to make the subject perfectly plain to whomsoever he pleases; for the fact that these things are revealed to babes, sufficiently demonstrate the power of God to make known the riches of his grace, and to reveal his Son, and to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, who is (as we understand, in his Mediatorial relationship to the Father and to his church) the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person. The apostle, if we rightly understand him, sums up all this great and sublime and uncontrovertable mystery in the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. He says to the Corinthians, "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified."—1 Cor. iii. 2. In the same chapter he adds, "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery; even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of this world knew;" and in the same connection he also says, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit," &c. This Spirit which searches all things, even the deep things of God, abideth in the regenerated heirs of glory; and John says, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things." "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you; and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him."—1 John ii. 20. 27.

"God was manifest in the flesh." Could we detach every other consideration from the subject of godliness, the single truth of the incarnation of the eternal God is a most glorious, sublime and heavenly mystery; but when we consider the infinite disparity between God and men, and especially fallen, sinful men, the mystery is still greater, that the Lord God should dwell with men; that when every mouth was stopped, and all the world was guilty before God, that the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, was made of a woman, made under the law which his people had violated, to redeem them from its dominion and wrath.

On the subject of this astonishing manifestation, John says, "That which was from the beginning, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life. For the life was manifested," &c.—John i. 1, 2. And this inspired witness saw and bore record, both in his gospel and his epistles, that in this manifestation of the Word which was with God, and which was God, was embodied the spiritual life of all the church.

In this great and glorious mystery is presented to our mind the Mediatorial glory of the only begotten Son of God, as the only medium of connection between God and the flesh; not as a metaphysical, undefinable abstraction, as some have regarded it, nor yet as one of our modern expounders has represented the Mediatorial existence of Christ, to be like a third color produced by the uniting of two distinct colors; for in the production of a third color, both the original colors are lost, whereas in Christ, both the real Godhead and real humanity are retained. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him."—John i. 18. "And no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him."—Luke x. 22. And again, "Not that any man hath seen the Father."—John vi. 49. Compare these Scriptures with John xiv. 6-11. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but my Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake."

From these, with many other Scriptures, the conclusion to our mind is unavoidable that the manifestation of God in the flesh is only through the incarnation of the Son of God, as the divine Mediator between God and men; between Deity and humanity; between Creator and created; as a Day's Man, who can lay his hand on both; in whom all the fullness of the Godhead dwells bodily, and in whom also all the church is complete, according to Col.

ii. 9, 10. And as he is one with his people, even as he is one with the Father, whenever the church is manifested Christ is manifested as her Head; and whenever Christ is revealed, the Father is revealed in him, as one with him. For the Head of the church is Christ (Eph. i. 22), and the Head of Christ is God.—1 Cor. xi. 3.

This is the mystery which had been hidden from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to the saints, to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you the hope of glory.—Col. 1. 26, 27. It is not only then a great, but we find it to be truly a glorious manifestation, that "God hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation, to wit, that God was in Christ [and in him manifested when the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us], reconciling the world unto himself; not imputing their trespasses unto them."—2 Cor. v. 16. This manifestation is the disclosure of a truth which was equally true before it was manifest; the "manifest" proves that it was true from everlasting. Though hidden from ages and generations, and even now hidden from the wise and prudent, and not very clearly understood by all who profess to be his saints, it is nevertheless revealed to his saints. Not an Arian or Socinian Christ, that may not be worshiped, nor an Arminian Christ, that cannot be relied upon, nor yet the sort of Christ which some have been proclaiming, that never existed until born of the virgin, only in purpose; but we have a Christ in whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and in whom the church is complete.—Col. ii. 8, 10.

This manifestation is made to the saints in the incarnation of the Son of God, the Head and life of the church, the Mediator, Advocate and Savior of this people. For he was made flesh (or manifested in the flesh), and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.—John i. 14. "For the Life was manifested, and we have seen, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal Life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us."—1 John i. 2. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know we the Spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God; and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world."—1 John iv. 1-3. With these Scriptures in view, with all that the Scriptures testify of the mystery of godliness, "Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worshiping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshy mind; and not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." Col. ii. 18, 19.

"Justified in the spirit." The Holy Ghost descending like a dove when Jesus was baptized, manifestly identified him as the Immanuel, God with us. That Holy Spirit in his divine office work, in taking of the things of Jesus and showing them to us, justified all that was predicted of him, and all that he claimed to be. But, in the immediate sense of the text, the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, which dwells in his saints, and shall also quicken their mortal bodies.—Rom. viii. 11. By which Spirit he went and preached to the spirits in prison.—1 Peter iii. 19. That Spirit, bringing the body of the Lord Jesus from the dead, proved that he had fully answered all demands of law and justice, and that he had put away the sins of his mystical body, and destroyed death, and brought life and immortality to light in his resurrection; for he was delivered for our offenses, and raised again from the dead for our justification. The Spirit of the Lord God that was upon him, justified his claim to the Messiahship; and the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus our Lord, by which the Son quickeneth whom he will, justifies his claim as the Savior of his people; for besides God there is no Savior; and that which proves that Christ is the Savior, proves also that he is God.

"Seen of angels." Those angels which attended on his birth, which ministered to him in his agony in the garden, and who attended at the sepulchre when he arose, and were present when he ascended, saw him. The messengers of the church, or seven stars which are in his right hand, are called angels of the churches; and they also saw and bear record of him, that he is the Son of God.

"Preached unto the Gentiles." According to the prediction that he should be a light to lighten the Gentiles, &c., and that he should be the salvation of God to the ends of the earth, all goes to demonstrate the mystery of godliness.

"Believed on in the world," by and through the faith of Jesus Christ, of which he is both author and finisher, and which is of the operation of God: this faith in his children is manifested by their believing on him in the world. And finally he was "Received up into glory." As a final and conclusive evidence of his complete justification and the Mediatorial Head and Life of his people, he has gone up with a shout, and is exalted a Prince and Savior, to give repentance unto Israel and remission of sins. And he shall also most certainly descend with a shout, when he shall come to raise the dead and judge the world at the last day.

the children of God being led astray by them, are all fulfilling whatsoever the hand and counsel of our God determined before to be done; all are fulfilling his sovereign pleasure; and although his flock be scattered by these grievous wolves and evil seducers, yet he will gather them again from all the nations and from all the places whither they are driven. "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep and seek them out, as a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day he is among his sheep that are scattered: so will I seek out my sheep, and deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day."—Ezek. xxxiv. 11, 12. He will make the shepherds which feed themselves, and not the flock, howl because their glory is spoiled; and he "will feed the flock of slaughter, even you, O poor of the flock." "He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darkness; for by strength shall no man prevail." Glorious consolation!

STATE ROAD, Del., April 8, 1856.

BRETHREN:—I have taken my pen to write on a subject that I have been thinking of, but that I know but little about. Perhaps we all are rather disposed to write most about what we know the least. Others have lately written, and since the subject has been agitated, I think there is room for more to be said. The subject I refer to is the original condition of man as he came from the Creator's hand. What holy men have said as they were moved by the Holy Ghost affords all the light any of us have to guide us in inquiries of this kind. We speak of the "fall." It is among our most frequently occurring expressions, both in speaking and writing, and I presume very few of our most inquisitive minds have ever questioned but what it was scriptural. If any of the inspired writers have ever said that man fell, or even alluded to such an event, it has escaped my notice. If it is a proper expression, we might expect it to occupy a quite prominent place in the sacred writings. I think we may well question any and all phrases that are never once used by inspired men. If it will not do to at once and abruptly dispute the idea that man fell from his created state, we may at least make some inquiries in regard to it. That man sinned is not to be questioned; it is asserted and reiterated on almost every page. If man fell, where did he fall from? and what was his condition before? We are told explicitly that he was natural, and not spiritual, even in his created state. "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural." As until born of the Spirit we are all natural, and come into the world that "natural man" that receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, we have a chance to know what it is to be natural. Again, "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly; and as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." I understand all these expressions to be of man in his created state, and that he was earthy and natural, just in his created state as he is now. From whence then did he fall? He had not transgressed the law before, but he was natural, and liable to be tempted with evil whenever the temptation came. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus was not then written in his heart. In this view of the subject, the question that is raised sometimes, whether man was able to stand, but liable to fall, amounts to nothing. It was no matter how long man continued obedient and did not transgress; he was still, and would remain, natural, and would sin whenever temptation came. He had no knowledge of evil, or of deliverance from evil, until he encountered the evil; and he perhaps did not know his own passions and propensities until he experienced them. It may be a question worth considering whether a man willfully transgressing is at all changed in character; if it is in his heart to wrong his fellow man, or to disobey his Maker, whether acting it out makes any difference in the man. We know what was in him as we did not before, and he encounters penalties and consequences that he did not before. But it has made no difference in the character of the man. If man was ever to become spiritual, and reign in life by one, Jesus Christ, this redemption was needed in his created state. "This mortal must put on immortality." The holy law of God was his law then as much as it is now; but God is a Spirit, and they only can worship him who are spiritual worshippers. No one has ever kept that law until it was written in their hearts under the new covenant. If these things are so, the question that is regarded of so much importance by some of our brethren, whether it was predestinated that man should transgress, falls to the ground. The work of redemption was required as much before the transgression as afterward. The Lord knew what was in man. He is said to be "redeemed from the earth," and "redeemed unto God," and also "redeemed from among men." It is the state man is in that calls for redemption, rather than the fact that he has committed sins. Redemption from the transgressions is embraced in the work, but eternal life is the gift of God. I have not noticed anything in the writings of brethren amounting to what I am here saying, until in the excellent letter of brother Coulter last week. This same idea appears in one sentence in his letter; and seeing that, I felt encouraged to enlarge upon it. There is no account that our first parents resisted a single temptation, nor is there any proof that they continued in innocence for a single day. It probably has been generally regarded that they became depraved, but were not depraved before the transgression. How was it then that they could be tempted with evil? Evil presents no temptation to purity and holiness. As it is said that God cannot be tempted with evil, so it may be said of his Spirit. That God should have provided for man an inheritance among all them that were sanctified, independent of and before the transgression, need not seem strange; for man did not have, and could not have, remaining in that state, that knowledge of God which is eternal life; neither could they know him, or love and adore him as a Savior. It may not be of any great importance to us to know just what was the state and condition of man as he came from the hand of his Creator; but if the revelation of grace and mercy was needful for him, and already provided and in store, only that the knowledge of sin must come first as a needed schooling, we do well, I think, to know and understand it.

I have touched upon some points here that I will submit to the consideration of brethren. The things that have been written for our learning I want ever to be my guide.

In love and fellowship,
E. RITTENHOUSE.

OPELIKA, Ala., March, 21, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—While it is upon my mind I must drop you a few lines and express the peculiar benefits to my own soul that the last issue of the SIGNS was; and I hope I shall do no violence in anything in thus expressing myself; for I did feel moved to write at once, and so picked up this tablet from the table to pencil a few lines, at the home of brother W. T. Rowe, of Camp Hill, before the hour for preaching.

I was wonderfully comforted with brother Keene's picture of Peter. It was graphically drawn. Brother Keene appears to be a spiritual artist. Since seeing his picture of Peter so beautifully brought out, I have hoped he would draw another. I once read a piece which appeared in the "Primitive Pathway," which was a picture of the midnight scenes at Bethlehem. It was grand and inspiring. Elder Mitchell wrote another on the midday scenes between Jerusalem and Damascus. The midnight scene at Bethlehem was the birth of Jesus, and the midday scene was Paul's conversion. We can never tell the full value of such writings. I hope the Lord may impress others to take up the pen of the spiritual artist and touch up other scenes. It strikes me that the scenes on Calvary would solemnize our hearts. May God impress some dear brother to give us such a grand scene as this through the SIGNS

I must also refer to brother Chick's editorial, bringing sweet instruction to the soul. It is a deep and glorious theme, and carried me back to the peculiar feelings which possessed me when I spoke at the Delaware Association, at Cow Marsh Church, last fall, from the text, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets."—Heb. i. 1. It is the field which produces the precious things of the everlasting mountains, of which Joseph partook, and by which he was sustained when he was separated from his brethren. If I should write in connection with what brother Chick wrote, it would require more space than I feel I want to occupy.

I am personally acquainted with brother Loden, and also brother H. B. Jones, of Texas. I fully concur with them in their indorsement of Elder Curry's article on the subject of Adam able to stand, but liable to fall. These are in line with, yea, are the precious fruits of, the everlasting decrees of our God. They are full of fatness and marrow, that which is so essential to our well-being here, to prepare us to pass through the cold winters and dreary nights of darkness which lie in the way of the pilgrim and sojourner, as all our fathers were. I thank God that the cold, dark, dreary winter is past, and a light is in the cloud; yea, the silvery lining has been discovered to me, and now in God's light I can see light, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." I do not feel like I shall doubt again. I feel as though I will ever trust the Lord. When I read sister Robert Jones' letter, and remembered her condition, I felt that truly she was an afflicted saint of God, bearing as she does her intense suffering with such fortitude. In her sufferings she would quiver and shake, and tears would fill her eyes, her sufferings being so intense. Then she would say it was for some wise purpose, and would bear it so patiently. I blessed God for the faith he had given her, and yet hope and pray that grace may be given her to endure to the end. I wish she would write out her experience and send it to the SIGNS. It is beautiful indeed, all the way in which the Lord has led her.

In this I shall not write more, but if the Lord wills I desire to draw a picture of some scene based upon Bible facts, for the consideration of the brethren who read the SIGNS. May the Lord bless the contributors to the SIGNS with matter for the instruction and comfort of his people, is my prayer for Jesus' sake. Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

MANITOU, Col., March, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—With your kind permission I would like to inquire through the medium of the SIGNS if there are any Old School Baptists in this part of the country. We are among strangers, for the benefit of my husband's health. I truly feel to be a stranger in a strange land. If there are any Baptists near us I would like to hear from them. This is a great health resort, and people from all parts of the United States are here; but as yet I have found no one who belongs to our order of Baptists. This is the first time I have ever been separated from the church since I have had a home there, and I find it lonely indeed. We have been twice to hear preaching since we have been here, but we find nothing to satisfy us. I find the language of the children of the bond woman the same here as in Iowa. The children of the free woman never have, never can, dwell with them after weaning time. Their language is not the same. They have nothing in common. One is the child of promise; the other is the work of man, trying to hasten the work of the Lord; not waiting, believing, and relying on the Lord, who is faithful in all things, and will fulfill all his promises, and bring all his purposes to pass, independent of man, means and money, the three requisites, men tell us, to further the kingdom of Christ and convert the world. But, dear brethren, I have not so learned Christ. Nothing but a full, free, complete salvation, wrought out by the spotless Lamb of God, can satisfy the needs of one so thoroughly lost and helpless as me.

Brother Chick, if not asking too much of you, I would like you to give your views on Judges vii. 5, 6; especially the spiritual significance of the lapping of water. This was the man's text to-day. I would be very glad to have a better explanation of it.

Yours in hope of life,
SARAH A. GARRETT.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON:—I make haste to send on my remittance for our family paper, for I am aware that it makes a difference to a publisher whether subscriptions are sent in the first or last of the year. Sometimes I have been a little tardy, and seemed to think it did not matter just when remittances were sent in; but having given the subject more attention, I see that it makes a vast difference. I hope the dear brethren and sisters will give attention to this subject, and forward their subscriptions as early as possible, and so help, encourage and sustain our medium of correspondence. There are so many who love the truth who have no preaching except the SIGNS, that it would be a great misfortune to them, as well as to the rest of us, to have our paper suspended. I hope the editors and the dear brethren and sisters will continue to write for publication as the Lord gives them ability, and not weary in well-doing.

Your sister in the bonds of the gospel,

MRS. J. H. DICKSON.

GIVENS, Cocke Co., Tenn.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The SIGNS continues to come to me regularly, and is laden with the good things of the kingdom. It is a great comfort to me to read its scriptural messages, and to know there are yet some scattered abroad who in this day of darkness and division love the doctrine for which it contends, that God is a sovereign, and that he rules in heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand. Pray for me and my children when it is well with you, that we may be reconciled to his will in all things.

Your sister in Christ, I hope,
PHEBE E. DRISKILL.

BLANCHESTER, Ohio, April 12, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I am quite feeble, worn out with affliction and old age. I will soon be eighty-five years old. I still try to preach occasionally. For several years, at the end of every discourse, I have said to myself, This is my last effort; but the times and seasons are in the keeping of the all-wise God, who does all things well. I am almost alone in these things. My old associates are fast passing to their reward. Pray for me, that I may with patience wait for my discharge.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality,

J. C. BEEMAN.

MARRIAGES.

APRIL 15th, 1896, at the residence of the bride's uncle, Mr. John H. Drake, by Mr. David Evans, rector of the Episcopal Church, Miss Jeannette C. O'Neill and Mr. Gilbert Beebe, grandson of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, founder of this paper, all of Middletown, N. Y.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his residence in Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y., on Tuesday, April 7th, 1896, brother Lewis Corwin, aged 73 years, 4 months and 7 days.

Our acquaintance with brother Corwin was quite limited. We received a message from him, and by his request visited him the day before his death, and found him suffering greatly from bladder disease, but did not suppose the end was so near. We learned from him that about four years ago he removed from Waverly, N. Y., and that his membership was in the church at that place. For the past four years he has occasionally attended the meetings of the church in this city. He is survived by two sons and two daughters. His wife died in Goshen about fifteen years ago.

Funeral services were held at his late residence in Goshen on Friday, 10th, and were conducted by the writer. Interment in "Slate Hill Cemetery," Goshen, where also his companion was buried.

BENTON JENKINS.

SISTER Hannah Hampton was born in England, Nov. 10th, 1828, was married to John Thorogood in England, and came to the United States some forty years ago. She united with the Baptist Church in June, 1860, and was baptized by the writer. After the death of her husband she was married to brother John Hampton, who died some years since. She has been a faithful member of our church since she joined us. She leaves one son and one daughter to mourn with us our loss. She died of pneumonia, April 8th, 1896, aged 67 years, 5 months and 2 days.

The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the friends from 1 Thessalonians iv. 18.

POETRY.

A HYMN.

WHEN I recount thy mercies o'er,
And magnify thy grace,
Fain would my spirit upward soar,
Till it beholds thy face.
Fain would I fill my mouth with praise,
And speak abroad thy love,
Till all who hear their voices raise,
And sing with those above.
In childhood and maturer years,
Through all my wandering life,
Thy faithful care rebuked my fears,
And cheered me in the strife.
While mine has proved a senseless heart,
Unfeeling, hard and blind,
Thou hast fulfilled a father's part,
Most faithful, true and kind.
How bless'd the day when first I heard,
In accents sweet and mild,
That solemn, soul-compelling word,
Confessing me thy child;
And blessed still each day hath been Since first I heard thy voice,
For thou who daily pardonest sin
Hast bidden me rejoice.
And blessed still shall be the years
Until the summons come,
When he who banishes my fears
Shall bid me welcome home.
Then bless'd indeed mine eyes shall see
The holy, happy place
Where saints adore the mystery
Of thy unbounded grace.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PHILIPPI, W. Va., April 1, 1896.

BENTON L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE BLESSED JESUS:—Inclosed you will find the experience of a dear little sister in Christ, who gave the church joy and thanksgiving to God when they heard her relation of the sweet power of God's Holy Spirit in the great work of salvation, in her deliverance from the power of darkness, and of her translation into the kingdom of God's dear Son. We greatly desire to see it published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, for the consolation and encouragement of many more dear souls who have fled for refuge to the hope set before them, in the midst of false churches and false systems, and every worldly inducement to lead the young people astray. Our dear young sister was as firm as a rock in the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. S. CORDER.

PHILIPPI, W. Va., March 26, 1896.

MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST JESUS:—I have been requested to write my experience, and have prayed that the good Lord may lead and guide my mind, that I may not say anything but the truth. I will try to write concerning the things which I hope have been the dealings of the Lord with me. I am now seventeen years of age. I can well remember when my mother used to talk of the crucifixion of Christ, and about his dying to save his people, while I would sit and listen to her. She would tell me of what would become of the good and the bad. I did not then think about my own condition. I thought I was good as anybody, and did not think of what would become of me hereafter. At the age of about thirteen years I began to think that I was a sinner, and had very serious thoughts about death. During the summer of 1892 I was very sick. One evening while I was lying on the bed, and my head aching (I do not know whether I was asleep or awake), it seemed there was a white lamb's head against the wall, with a man's hand upon it. I thought it was the Savior's hand. I told my mother what I had seen, and that I believed it was a token of my getting better. I had read in the Bible where the Savior when upon earth had laid his hand upon the afflicted, and healed them. I thought the lamb's head was my head, and the Savior was going to heal me. From that time I grew better. I did not think much about that dream, as I have thought it was, but I thought I was going to get well. I began to have very serious thoughts about death, and was afraid to stay by myself, for fear I would die; for I felt sure that if I should die I would go down to that awful place of destruction, into the bottomless pit, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth forever. On the fourth Sunday in September, 1892, my cousin, Floyd Cole, joined the Mt. Olive Church of Primitive Baptists. That was the first time I had ever seen any one join the church. I thought he talked so nice when he told his experience. It did me good to hear him, he had such a beautiful experience. On the fourth Sunday in October he was baptized by his grandfather, J. S. Corder. I thought it was the prettiest sight I had ever seen. I came home and asked my mother all about such things. She talked with me a long while, and told me her experience. I thought it was so good; and it did me good to hear any one tell their experience. I did not want any one to know that I was in trouble. I felt like I was worse than any one else. In the winter of 1893, one morning before I awoke from sleep, I dreamed there stood a little girl by the side of my bed. At first I thought it was my little sister, but found I was mistaken, and that it was an angel, clothed in a long, white robe. I thought her eyes were as bright as the sun. She looked bright and beautiful, and smiled at me. I awoke myself by saying, "Bless that little angel, that sweet little angel." I told my mother about it, and she said it was a pretty dream. But it did not satisfy me in my troubles. I became very much troubled about my condition, and thought it my duty to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me, a great sinner. That was about all I could say. I would promise that I would try to do better; but it seemed that the Lord did not hear me, and that I did not know how to pray. It seemed that my words did not go any farther than the end of my tongue. I thought I must read the Bible and see if I could find anything there to help me; but everything seemed to be against me. I would set the time, from one meeting day to another, of the Old School Baptists, to try and see if I could do better. I thought this would help me; but when the time came I was worse than ever. I would go and listen to the preaching, but there seemed to be no relief for me. I thought if there ever were good people, the Old School Baptists were. I thought they were the only church that was right, and often thought that if I could have the privilege to join them, if the Lord would pardon me, I surely would do so, and that I would go without hesitating. I often sat and watched them take of the sacrament, and thought it the prettiest sight I ever saw. O how I wished I could be with them, they looked so good, and seemed to have such a great love for each other. I often thought, when they would open the door for the reception of members, O that I could have the privilege to go and join them! But I felt I was such a great sinner, and was worse than any one else. I loved to go to their meetings. I was in so much trouble that I could not be satisfied at home nor abroad. I would go into young company, and try to be lively like they were, but could not be. I could not enjoy myself much anywhere. I was afraid of thunder storms, and feared the Lord would kill me. I was afraid to go into the dark by myself, for I was afraid Satan would get me, or would appear before me. O what terrible feelings I had! Sometimes I would feel so dark and lonely, I would go up stairs by myself and weep. When my aunt Sally Cole would play the organ, and sing solemn pieces, it would make me feel so sad that I did not want to hear them, and would leave the room. In the month of November, 1894, my dear old grandmother Corder died, whom I thought so much of. My father died when I was small, and my mother went back to her father's house to live with him. My dear grandmother was very good and kind to us all. She seemed very near to me, and I had lived with her so long, she seemed almost as near to me as my mother. I was in so much trouble that I could hardly stand it, and could hardly keep from telling my mother about my trouble. I would look at her and think, O! mother, if you knew my feelings. The Sunday after grandmother died I was very sad and lonely, and would talk to my mother, and tell her of some of my dreams, and then go off and weep awhile, and come back again. I wanted to talk. I went on in this way until Tuesday night, March 26th, 1895. I was then sixteen years old. I dreamed I was going to die, and thought they had my coffin made, and the rough box ready, and that I was in my coffin; but I thought I was not yet dead, but had to fall asleep, and go off in my sleep. I thought that my grandfather and my mother, and several others, were standing by, when my grandfather asked me if I was afraid to die. I thought I was. He said, "What would you do if you should fall asleep and awake in that beautiful home above?" I said, "O! I would rejoice." I thought I did not die then; and afterward I dreamed that there was a pile of white garments lying on a chair near my bed, and that I went and looked in them, and in them was a crown of the color of gold. I thought I took it my hands to look at it, and then turned around, and there the Savior appeared before me, and said it was the crown for me. I can hardly remember, but it seems to me that he was clothed in white. I thought I told my folks I was not afraid to die now. I thought I went to join the Old School Baptist Church, and they opened the door for the reception of members; but I could not join, because I felt I was not fit to be with them. Afterward they took the sacrament, and I thought I went up to commune with them, and I felt I was out of place, and that I had to join the church first; so I got up and came away. They all looked like they were happy, and were having a good time. They were singing very sweetly. I thought I saw my mother sitting and singing with them, and it made me feel bad to think I could not be there with her. The next morning my dream came to me, and I could not keep from smiling. Everything looked bright, the sun shone so brightly as I looked out of the window. I felt very glad, and like singing. My mother was in the kitchen, but I was afraid to go in there, for fear she would see me laughing, and would ask me what the matter was. Grandfather walked through the room, and I turned my face so that he could not see me smiling. I felt like rejoicing, but was almost afraid to. I thought I might be mistaken, and that it was just a dream; but I could not keep it off my mind. On that day I could not keep from singing about all the time, and these were the words that came to my mind,

"He saw me ruined in the fall,
Yet loved me notwithstanding all:
He saved me from my lost estate,
His loving-kindness O how great."

On Sunday before this they sang it at the Mt. Olive Church, and I thought it was so good. While they were singing I thought, O if I could only say that. When those words came to me, I thought, Can I say that now, or can I not? But I could not keep from singing them, and they rang in my ears for about a week. I thought I would not tell any one about my dream, for I thought I might be mistaken, and that it was only a dream; but it seemed to bear very much on my mind. I asked my mother to tell uncle Lonnie Corder to send me the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I thought if he would let me have some of his papers to read I might find something in them to comfort me. I wanted to see if any one else was like me. I read many good experiences, and they did me a great deal of good, but I never could find one like my own. Well, I went on in this way, thinking I would not tell any one of my feelings for awhile longer; but these words would come to my mind, "Hide not your light under a bushel." I went on in this way until the next Sunday, when I could not keep it any longer. After I had gone to bed that night, my mother was sitting in the room and reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I called her attention from the reading, and told her my dream. She came to my bedside, put her arms around me, and said it was a beautiful dream, and was better than gold. I told her not to think anything of that, for it was but a dream. I told her not to say anything about it, for I was afraid I was deceived. She begged me to let her tell grandpa, until at last I let her tell him. He said it was a beautiful dream.

I told my mother she could tell uncle Joshua Corder, if she wished to. I became anxious to see him, and to hear him talk. He came up one day to see me, and I told him all as best I could. He spoke many words of encouragement to me. I then became anxious to join the church. I felt that something was wanting, and that was to go and join the sweet Old School Baptists; but I did not feel worthy of a place with them. I also thought I might be deceived, and might deceive them; yet it seemed like I could not stay away. I had so often wished to be with them, for they were the only people that suited my case, and I had promised that if the Lord would pardon my many sins I would surely go and join them, and that without hesitating. But I felt so dark sometimes, I thought I ought not do so; yet I felt I could not stay away. It seemed to bear so much on my mind that I concluded to join on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May. I then felt it my duty to write to my uncle Dolpha Corder, who had been talking of joining the church, and I wanted him to go with me if he wanted to. I felt that he was more fit to go than I was. I said to him, "Let us go and tell the church, and let them judge. God knows that we mean honestly. We do not want to go to please the people here on earth, but to please the One that we hope has pardoned us. Let us take up the cross and follow him; for he suffered, as no one can tell, on the cross, and died to save his people." I told him of my dream, and of all I had experienced, and that I felt it my duty to write to him and tell him when I expected to join the church. He came at the time appointed, and went with me. I felt before I went, that if the Savior would just take me by the hand and lead me, I could go without any doubt. The church all seemed so near to me, I thought I would go, and not think any more about it. I went, and told them of the things which I hoped had been the dealings of the Lord with me, as best I could. I told them that if they thought I was not fit to be with them, not to take me in. But they took me in so kindly, I shall never forget the day. They all looked very sweet to me, and I loved them more than ever before. I thought, Now I have what I have so many times wished for. On the fourth Sunday in June we were baptized. That was a day I never shall forget. I could hardly wait until the time came to be baptized. My uncle Joshua Corder baptized us in the Valley River, at Philippi. My mother asked me before we went into the water if I was afraid. I told her I surely was not. I felt that I was in the hands of the Lord, and that he would strengthen me. When we came up out of the water my mother met me and threw her arms around me. I felt like I was satisfied. The brethren and sisters met me very kindly, and gave me the right hand of fellowship. I shall never forget it. That was the sweetest season in my life. I thought I never would have any more trouble; but O the dark seasons I have passed through since then! We all have our dark seasons, and also our light ones. I would not give up my little hope for gold. I feel now that I am not so afraid to die as I was before. These words express my feelings,

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

If I am a child of God I am the least of all. The Old School Baptists seem nearer to me every day. I never can believe any other way. I have so many times seen them take the sacrament, and wished to be with them, and now I can have that privilege. On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December was communion day at Mt. Olive, and I was there. That was the first time I had communed with them. I felt very thankful that I had what I had so long wished for. When I am with the brethren I feel that I am with the chosen of the Father, who have been brought up out of great tribulation, to know and rejoice in the truth, and that they can sympathize with each other in afflictions and distress, and share each other's joys, in a way the world knows nothing about.

Dear brethren, I did not think to write so much, as I did not feel competent to write anything to be seen in print.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
IVY A. WOODFORD.

ELGIN, Ore., Feb. 1, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I send you the experience of sister Mayfield for publication, believing it will be of interest to your readers, if it meets with your approval.

In gospel bonds,

G. E. MAYFIELD.

IMBLER, Ore., Jan. 8, 1896.

ELDER G. E. MAYFIELD—DEAR BROTHER:—It has been on my mind to try and write what I hope have been the Lord's dealing with me; but feeling my weakness and inability, I have put it off from time to time, fearing I could not write anything that would be of interest to you; but I will now make the attempt, hoping the Lord will guide my mind, for I know that without him I can do nothing.

I was born Dec. 17, 1857, and came with my parents to Oregon in 1864. They were members of the Missionary Baptists, and tried to bring up their children in the fear of the Lord; but you know you cannot teach the natural man or woman spiritual things, for they are foolishness unto them. My father always had family prayer before retiring at night. I think it was nine years ago this winter that I saw myself a condemned sinner in the sight of God. That was, I believe, the first time I ever tried to pray; but it seemed to me the Lord would not hear the prayers of one so sinful as I felt myself to be. Sometime after this my burden left me gradually, and I felt quiet and happy for some time. I would set up until midnight, and read my Bible and sing. My mind was soon impressed with baptism. It was on my mind all day long, and at night I would dream about it. When I would cross the creek in going to my sister's house the water would look so good to me that I could hardly keep out of it; but I never once thought that I was a fit subject for baptism, for I thought one must experience a great change for that. I did not know that this change had been wrought in me, although I had been made to rejoice. I had not thought I had religion. You may think this strange, but I was just that ignorant. I can now look back, and see how I lived from that time. I was very careful to keep Sunday, and read my Bible, and sing, and never had any fear of punishment after this; but I was all the time thinking, O if I only could be a christian and be baptized! I went on in this way for six long years. I could not enjoy myself in any company. I remember going to a fourth of July celebration. I thought I wanted to go, but when I got there I could not enjoy it, but went out in the shade where the wagon was, and sat there alone for an hour or so, wishing I were at home. I kept all this to myself, and never told any one of my troubles. When you were going over to Mayville in June, 1895, to baptize sister Tillie Walton, and came by and visited us a day or two, and we all sat up until eleven o'clock at night and talked on the Scriptures, and sang, I felt like I could listen to your talk forever. I wanted to tell you that I wanted to be baptized, but felt I was not fit for it, and so I said nothing about it; but O how sorry I felt to see you leave without my telling you of my feelings.

In December, 1892, the Missionary Baptists held a protracted meeting at our school-house, and I thought, Now I will go and get religion. When the preacher got through talking he said, "Now all who want to be saved hold up their right hand." I held up my hand, and others did the same. The next night he asked all who wanted him to pray for them to come and give him their hand while they sang. I gave him my hand, and he prayed for us several times. One night he had a bench prepared, and said, "Now all who are determined, come and kneel down by this bench." I think I was the first one to go; for if ever there was a poor sinner that was determined, I think I was. There were seven who went up, and we were prayed for. But I got up feeling worse than when I went forward. I thought I would not go there any more, but when the time would come I would go up again; but I felt worse every time, and became so troubled that I could neither eat nor sleep. I would try to pray, but could get no relief. The preacher told me that I must be keeping something back, and that I must make a full surrender. I told him I had done everything I could. He said I must think myself worthy of everlasting life. But I could not feel that I was worthy. I would read my Bible to try to find something to comfort me, but could find nothing. I read where Paul and Barnabas were talking to the Jews, and said, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." This made me feel worse, as I thought the Lord had turned away from me. I was so troubled that I could not do any work. I could hardly cook enough for my family to eat. I would go off by myself and try to pray and read my Bible; but nothing gave me any relief. One morning just after breakfast the family were all out, and I started to wash the dishes; but I felt so bad that I thought I would try once more to pray. I went into my room, knelt down by the bed, but do not know what I said. When I got up I was singing. My burden was gone. I walked from one room to another, and sang. Then

"I did not believe that I ever should grieve,
That I ever should suffer again."

But what a sad mistake! I wanted to go and tell someone about it, and could hardly wait till evening came; but when I got ready to go to meeting I began to think I was deceived. When the preacher asked me if I did not feel blessed, I told him I did not. When I got back home I felt better, and went to bed and slept. That was the first sleep to speak of that I had taken for ten days. Next morning everything seemed very bright, and I went about my work singing. But this season of rejoicing did not last long. I soon began to doubt again; but my burden was never so great any more.

On March 5th, 1893, I united with the Missionary Baptists. I would sometimes enjoy their meetings, but spent my most happy seasons at home alone, singing and reading my Bible. I could not feel satisfied with my baptism. I still wanted to be baptized; but I thought I would always remain with that people, because my parents and all my folks were of that faith. But in reading my Bible I could find where it taught election and predestination so strong that it bothered me, so that I almost wished it were not there.

On July 17th, 1893, we started to move to Grande Ronde Valley, where you live. We arrived at your house on Friday, and on Sunday I went to hear you preach. I enjoyed the meeting very much, and had great love and fellowship for you all. The more I went, the more I enjoyed the meetings. But I thought I must not believe the Old Baptist doctrine, for what would my parents think of me? But I soon saw that I not only believed it, but also loved it. On the first Sunday in September I went to meeting, and there were two or three hymns sung in which I united, and enjoyed it very much. But when you began the service you read the hymn beginning,

"'Twas with an everlasting love
That God his own elect embraced,
Before he made the worlds above,
Or earth on its huge columns placed."
You then remarked that you would like for all to sing who believed this truth. I did not sing, but read the hymn over, to see whether I believed it, and I did; yet I tried to hold for Arminianism awhile, but soon saw I was wrong. I read my Bible, and my constant prayer was that the Lord would lead me to the true church. I became convinced that the Primitive Baptist was the church of God, but I was not willing to leave my relatives and go with them. But, thanks be to God, he makes us willing in the day of his power, and I was made willing to forsake all. I loved these Old Baptists so well that I felt I could not stay away from them, although I felt that I was not worthy to go with them. I felt that I could not tell them anything, yet these words were much in my mind, "Go home to thy friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee." When I would open my hymn-book the words,

"Let not conscience make you linger, Nor of fitness fondly dream," &c., would meet my eyes. I was so troubled that I made up my mind to offer myself to the church the first opportunity I had. I wanted very much to attend the meeting on the first Sunday in October, but it stormed so that we could not go. I was troubled all winter. I wanted to tell you that I believed the doctrine of the Old Baptists, but never could say anything about it where you were until one night when you stayed with us. We were talking, and I told you I believed the Old Baptists were right. I felt relieved by saying that much; but the next day I thought, Now I wish I had not told him, for he will think that I am going to join the church, and I know I cannot tell them anything. But it was on my mind all the time. I could not get to Indian Creek any more until the first Sunday in June. For two weeks before that I had no rest. If I would try to sing, I could not do so for crying. I was so restless I felt determined to never leave the church again, when an opportunity offered, without trying to tell you something of the reason of my hope. But when I saw the people coming in I thought, Now I cannot tell anything; yet I knew if I did not try I would have no rest for another month; so while you were singing I went up and tried to say something. I was received, to be baptized at the next monthly meeting. After the meeting we went up to sister Huffman's for dinner. You were all talking about the three days meeting you were going to have, and of the different places to entertain the people. You said, "We have another Baptist down there now to help entertain," and someone asked, "Who?" Sister Huffman said, "Why, sister Mayfield." I thought, Now see how I have deceived them: they are calling me a Baptist and a sister, and I am nothing but a hypocrite. If I could have found any excuse I would have left the table. I tried to be brave, for I did not want you to notice my confusion. When I started home I was cast down. That night I could not sleep, and was troubled till Tuesday afternoon, when all at once a sweet peace came to me, and I felt I had done my duty. But doubts came again. I went on in this way all through the month. Some days I would be singing all day, and thinking of my baptism, and could hardly wait for the time to come. But perhaps the next day I would be weeping, and thinking I was not fit to be baptized. The day before I was baptized I wept all day. When the time came and I went down to the water I cannot describe how I felt. I was anxious to go into the water, but I cannot say I was happy; but after you raised me up out of the water I felt there was a great change in my feelings, and I was happy, although I have since been tempted to believe I was only putting it on. You all looked very happy to me. This was on the first Sunday in July, a day long to be remembered by me. I have had many doubts and fears since then, but I have never doubted that the Primitive Baptist Church is the church of Jesus Christ, and that all for whom Christ died will be saved; but I sometimes doubt whether I am one of them; yet I would not take the world for the little hope I have.

I will now close, for I fear I have written enough to weary you to read it. I remain your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life. Pray for me, a poor sinner.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I inclose a letter. If you deem it worthy a place in the columns of the SIGNS, please publish it when convenient.

LAURA M. BAIRD.

PLEASANT HILL, Kentucky.

MRS. AMY PEDIGO—MY DEAR FRIEND:—Some months have passed since I received your very kind letter. Although I have delayed writing to you my silence has not been caused by forgetfulness. Ono; I shall never forget you while life and reason remain; neither can I cease to love you. I hope you are still making intercession at the throne of grace for poor, vile, wretched me. You have no idea what a great sinner I am, and have been all the days of my life; for if you did, you certainly could not think, as you stated in your last, that the Lord has begun a good work in me, and would perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. O if I could only have that faith which the apostle tells us is the gift of God. To believe it, O how happy I would be; but alas! what a wretched reverse there is, to my mind. O what a vain, deceitful heart I have, deceitful above all things. Often when I feel like pleading for mercy, inward guilt stops me. Something often tells me that I would be mocking God to attempt to pray to him. O how you and all your dear brethren are deceived in me. How can they think that I am worthy of being received into the church of the living God? O how that thought mortifies me. I often wonder what remark I ever made to any one that is misleading their mind in reference to wretched me. Surely I have not designed so to do, if I know anything at all about my heart. You said, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." If I know who I do love, I think they are the Old Baptists. I love to hear them hold forth the glorious gospel, the doctrine of the blessed Jesus. But this does not constitute me a christian, a child of God. You forget that there are four other things in conjunction with the last named. First, faith; for the Bible tells us that Christ dwells in the heart by faith. Second, a good hope of eternal happiness: "Christ in you the hope of glory." Third, being passed from death unto life. "He that hath the Son hath life: and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Fourth, hating sin, and loving righteousness. My friend, you see that love to the brethren alone is not to be considered an evidence of one being a child of grace. Never can I unite with the elect of God unless I am quickened into life by divine grace. If that great happiness is ever felt and enjoyed in my soul, rest assured, my dear friend, I shall not conceal or smother it in my own bosom. Ono! that would be impossible. I would spread the glad news around, and tell what a dear Savior I had found. I know that the dear Redeemer expired upon the dreadful cross to save sinners—to save his own elect; but O how can I believe that such a great sinner as I feel myself to be of that happy number? The Lord alone can loose my bands, and give my soul joy and peace in believing. If I only knew this happy change would ever take place, I often think, my joy would be unspeakable, and that I should count everything else but dross; for what would it profit me to gain the whole world and lose my own soul? I often think, What is life, and what are the pleasures of this life? I am ready to exclaim that there is no true happiness here for any but the children of God. All earth is like a sunbeam, or a mere shadow upon the wall,

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

WILL you please give your views upon Galatians v. 17? "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

Your brother in hope,

JAMES E. MOORE.

REPLY.

THE subject of the christian warfare has perhaps provoked more controversy among us during the past forty years than any other, and yet there is no subject more familiar to any and every child of God than this. The feeblest child of God, the one with the least knowledge of what the Scriptures say about it, knows as much about this warfare as does the man who is mightiest in the Scriptures. It is sure that the experience of this warfare is the same in each believer. It is always a strife of the flesh against the Spirit, and of the Spirit against the flesh, waging such a warfare that we cannot do the things that we would. If there be a common experience of the same things, why then should such controversies arise? How can there be differences when the experience is the same? We answer, There can be, there are, no differences nor controversies when the people of God describe their several experiences of this warfare. We have never yet heard or read a personal description of the strife felt in the heart of any child of God that failed to touch the heart of every other child of God who heard or read it. As one described the travel, the ups and downs, the conflicts of his own soul, all the rest could respond, "That is my experience also;" and in that common experience they saw eye to eye, and fellowship abounded. There was no strife, no schism, no division, no controversy there. In this experience each understood the other, and mutual sorrow flowed from eye to eye, and mutual joy from heart to heart.

Why then has there been debate and strife, and it is to be feared sometimes ill-feeling, concerning this warfare, in which there is such a common experience? Is it not safe to say that the controversies have arisen out of theories concerning this warfare, and not out of the facts of the warfare itself? We ourself recall instances when we have thought ourself compelled to differ from ideas presented by some brother, and the debate would wax warm, and we were getting farther and farther apart in our theorizing, when one or the other of us would be led to speak of some experience of this warfare which we had felt, and at once heart responded to heart, and we knew that we were one in heart and spirit, spite of all the theories upon which we might differ. What is a theory to a fact? The fellowship is in the experience. We grievously err when we allow our theories to break the comfort of this fellowship.

We believe that any child of God who shall read this language of Paul proposed by brother Moore, coming straight from some sore conflict, in which he has felt himself sore pressed by the fleshly principles within him, will find no difficulty in the language, but will be led to exclaim from his heart with joy and wonder, "Why, Paul felt just as I do. He has told my feelings. I know just what he means." There is no difficulty in Paul's language here when we come to its reading fresh from a similar experience. When we forget and forsake the lessons of our experience, and come to read this language critically, from a desire to find a mere theory which shall have a cold, formal consistency with itself, then indeed we may find plenty to dispute about, and yet shall miss all the true, living meaning which Paul here presents, and which experience teaches us. Spite of all the entanglements which our heads may lead us into, but can never lead us out of, our hearts know that every word of this text is true to our daily experience. We all know for ourselves that the flesh lusts against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and that these are so contrary the one to the other that we cannot do the good that we would. These we feel to be facts in our life, and in them is our real fellowship one for another.

We do not find fault with the endeavor to analyze and define the language of the apostle, and to set the doctrine of the warfare in order, and to trace out its nature, origin and effects. In fact, our own mind has been led much in that way. But we do believe that fellowship does not consist in the knowledge of these things; nor should differences concerning them lead to strife and alienation, when after all the personal experience has been the same. If two men have passed through a common sorrow, and each has suffered its pangs alike, they will be, they must be, in sympathy with each other, and each will be drawn to the other by the mystery of their common experience. Through this common sorrow they have come nearer to each other; and afterward they can never be indifferent to each other. How absurd, then, to quarrel about what sorrow is, or how it arises in the heart, or some other question which may arise concerning it. Both know what the meaning of sorrow is. In this they are one. Here is their true oneness. The Father in heaven leads his children in one way. They all feel the same sorrows and the same joys, and are brought to rest in their helplessness upon the same almighty arm. We never feel like asking a candidate who may come to the church desiring baptism, "What can you tell us about the theory of the warfare?" but, "Have you felt the warfare itself?" As they confess that they cannot do the things that they would we recognize our own experience, and at once there is fellowship.

We do not feel, then, like discussing any theories of the warfare, but desire to describe the warfare itself, both in our preaching and writing; and here we desire to say first that the natural man knows nothing of this warfare. All the good that he desires to do he can do. The child of God only cannot do the things which he would. In any warfare there must be two opposing forces. In this warfare the flesh and the Spirit must both be present. The natural man has not the Spirit; therefore no such warfare exists with him. If any man can adopt this language of Paul, and say, "I find such a conflict within me that I cannot do what I would," that man is surely possessed of the flesh; but it is also equally true that he is possessed of the Spirit. Paul testifies that "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his;" and certainly he meant the converse to be also true, viz., that if any man did have the Spirit he surely belonged to Christ. The warfare, then, is a certain proof that its subject is a child of God and belongs to Christ. How comforting to remember that the warfare is a ground of hope, rather than for discouragement.

We desire to refer to some other portions of the word wherein the warfare is also described, all in perfect harmony with the language upon which we are treating. The warfare is a common theme with Paul. All the apostles and holy men of old felt it, but Paul wrote about it more than the rest, both in stating his own experience of it and in a general way. In the different Scriptures to which we desire to call brief attention Paul uses somewhat different terms, which however mean the same thing. In the text to which brother Moore has called attention Paul uses the terms "the flesh" and "the Spirit." In the closing half of Romans vii., and in the beginning of Romans viii., where Paul presents the christian warfare in detail, he uses the terms "the law in the members" and "the law of the mind." The "law in the members" (not the members themselves, but the law in them) is what in Galatians he calls the flesh; while the "law of the mind" (not the mind itself, but the law of it) is what in Galatians he calls the Spirit. In Ephesians iv. and in Colossians iii. Paul calls the flesh, this "law in the members," by the name of the "old man;" while he calls the Spirit, the "law of the mind," by the name of the "new man." In the last texts it is manifest that neither the "old man" nor the "new man" can be ourselves as persons or individuals. We feel safe in saying this, because in Ephesians Paul does not exhort the "new man" to put off the "old man," nor the "old man" to put on the "new man;" but he does exhort his brethren, believers, men and women, to put off the one and to put on the other. The putting off of the one and the putting on of the other is to be in the whole spirit and tone and general conduct of their lives. In short, they are told not to let sin rule in them, but holiness; not to follow the evil that is within them, but the good which God has begotten there. Whether Paul speaks of the flesh, the law in the members, the old man, or of the Spirit, the law of the mind, the new man, he presents facts which every christian experience shows the truth of. All who believe in Jesus know that there is that within them which they desire to put off. They also know that there is that within them which they desire to put on; and they know that these things, call them by what names we will, laws, men, flesh and Spirit, or principles, so contend in them that they cannot do what they would, and must cry out for deliverance. It is not either of these opposing principles that cries out for deliverance, but they themselves would be freed from the one and subjected to the other.

It seems to us worthy of note that Paul does not anywhere intimate that believers cannot do the evil that they would, but it is always the good. In the new birth such a change has taken place that its subject can sincerely and truthfully say, "I abhor sin and self, and I love holiness." He cannot truthfully say, "I love sin," but he knows that sin is abhorrent to him. It is from what he hates that he cannot refrain. It is what he loves and would do that he cannot do. "I abhor myself," is the testimony. Such a one cannot say, "I love and admire myself." There is a wonderful change in the whole spirit of the man's feelings, desires, thoughts, and in the tendency of his life. This is seen in such expressions as these, "We cannot do the things that we would;" "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" "The warfare is against the law of the mind;" "I would do good;" "I abhor myself," and many similar expressions. A believer cannot truthfully say, "I love sin as well as ever I did." If he does, sin could not be a trouble to him; and because he finds sin still in him he abhors himself. If he loved sin he would also love himself; and the more sin he discovered in himself the more he would love himself. But the fact is that the more sin he discovers in himself the more he hates himself. These are facts of daily experience; and yet every child of God grows daily more and more conscious of the fact that he has a sinful nature, and that sin is mixed with all that he does. The Bible in no place says that believers "would sin;" but when they sin it is what they "would not" do. The new man, the Spirit, the law of the mind, dwells in the house and rules in the house; but the strong man, the old man, the flesh, the law in the members, is only bound. He is not yet cast out, and he gives trouble yet.

The question has sometimes been in our mind, Why does Paul use so many different words to describe the two opposing forces in this warfare? Perhaps we may not see all the reasons, but this much at least is true: truth is very large and many-sided, and by using various figures of speech different views of the same truth are presented. It is the same truth held up to view in different lights. For instance, by the use of the term "law," in Romans, the thought of rule, authority, power, dominion, is presented; and we are taught that while sin still is in the land, yet its dominion is broken; and while yet there is rebellion in the land, still righteousness is on the throne in the believer, and shall never be dethroned. By the use of the term "men," in Ephesians and Colossians, the idea of opposing forces striving against each other is presented. Most emphatically Paul does not mean that there are two literal men striving against each other in the bosom of a third man; but as two men may engage in deadly strife over the possession of some coveted object, so these two principles of sin and holiness strive in the believer to control and direct him. By using the term "man" Paul makes the idea of the warfare very vivid and striking; and when, as in the text in Galatians, he uses the terms "flesh" and "Spirit," he emphasizes the fact that it is a conflict between that which is sinful, carnal, earthly, and that which is holy, spiritual and heavenly within us. By the flesh he does not mean the hands, feet, tongue, which we can see and feel; nor by the Spirit does he mean the natural spirit or soul of the man. The conflict is not between the body and the soul, but between that which is sinful and that which is holy in both body and soul. The soul is no less the battle-ground, no less disputed territory, than is the body. Indwelling sin and the indwelling Spirit of Christ are the parties in this warfare; and yet we ourselves sin, and we ourselves also fight against sin. We must in no case forget that we ourselves are interested and involved in this whole matter. The Spirit within cries "Abba, Father;" and yet we ourselves by the Spirit cry "Abba, Father." It is a great mystery, and yet Paul says both things. If any one shall ask how it is that these two principles of sin and holiness under various names are said to fight against each other, and yet we ourselves also are engaged, and are said to strive against sin, we can but answer that this is Paul's testimony, and moreover it is the testimony which we ourselves must bear out of our own experiences. Who can explain all the facts of his own experience?

In conclusion we repeat what we have said before in these reflections, the facts are more important than the theory. To feel this warfare is more important than to be able to explain it. We ourself know there is such a warfare, but there is a vast deal about it that we do not know.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

"AND I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."—Luke xvi. 9.

Worldly riches are called the mammon of unrighteousness because mammon is the name in mythology of the god of riches, and is used in our text to denote the unrighteous perversion of the use of the treasures of this world. The unrighteous children of men, instead of making friends of earthly treasure, unrighteously make a god of it, trusting in it, venerating and sacrificing to it. Thus instead of making friends by using the things of this world as not abusing them, setting a just estimate on them, as being providentially committed to us as unto stewards, by the gracious providence of God, there is a natural propensity in the fallen nature of man to regard them as did the rich fool, who said to his soul, "I have much goods laid up for many years," &c., and would therefore take his ease, relying on his riches, as his mammon or his god, perfectly indifferent to the decrees of any other God, and perfectly unconscious that the God who made him would that night require his soul of him.

Worldly possessions are not the God or mammon of righteousness, nor should they be of the disciples of the Redeemer; but they are the idol of unrighteousness and of those who worship them. The admonition in our text awakens the inquiry, How are the saints to make friends of that which is idolized by the world? What is meant by their failing, and of the everlasting habitations into which they are to aim to be received?

Although in the context we have the parable of the unjust steward, whose wisdom (not his honesty) was commended by his Lord, we do not understand that our divine Lord commended his shrewd and dishonest course as a pattern to be imitated by his disciples, but rather to teach them that their stewardship in charge of the earthly providential blessings of their God is only of a limited duration. It is only for a brief period that their stewardship of any portion of the good things of earth is to continue. We are to die and leave all these treasures behind us shortly; and as the wise, though dishonest steward, while in charge of his master's goods made use of the opportunity to secure for himself when he should be no longer steward, so the disciples should use the treasures of earth committed to their trust, under the full conviction that the trust is limited, and that they are liable at any moment to be turned out of their stewardship in regard to earthly possessions; and while they have them in charge as goods belonging to God, they should make such use of them in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and administering to the necessities of others, that when they should be removed from their stewardship and become poor, those who shall have these good things in charge may in return minister to their necessities.

A practical illustration of this was soon known to the disciples, when the persecution arose against the saints at Jerusalem by which they were driven away from their possessions, and thus thrown out of their stewardship by the confiscation of their property; and soon after the day of pentecost the disciples acted upon the principle laid down in the text. They made friends of the mammon of unrighteousness by disposing of their estates before they were driven from them by persecution, and sold their houses and lands, and laid the proceeds at the feet of the apostles, thus raising a common fund from which all their necessities were supplied, after they had failed. Christians seem sometimes hard to comprehend the idea that they are only stewards of what a kind providence has put them in charge of. The earth with its fullness belongs to the Lord, and we are his stewards of that portion of his property that he has bestowed. He could give us much more, if our good and his glory would be promoted thereby; but he is the wise judge to decide the amount to intrust to our care. If we set our affections on the portion committed, love it, rely upon it, sacrifice our health, our consciences, and even our religious privileges, to it, do we not make it a mammon of unrighteousness to us?

Christians may not be aware of the lurking propensity to idolatry which sometimes exerts a powerful influence over them. It may be well to inquire seriously, Do I not sacrifice to mammon when I leave the path which Christ has marked out for me, rather than lose some opportunity to accumulate wealth, or expend some already accumulated? Do I not on some occasions forsake the assembling of the saints, from fear that the absence from worldly business may lessen my worldly gain? Do I devote that share of my master's goods, which he has intrusted to me, in relieving the sore necessities of some of his children, or of his creatures, in visiting the widow and the fatherless, the sick and the afflicted in their afflictions, to deal out, of the greater abundance committed to us, to make them more comfortable? Are there none of God's children who have moved away from the privileges of the church, and from the society of their brethren, merely for the sake of increasing their store of earthly wealth? If there are any such, have they not sacrificed their better portion at the shrine of mammon? Have they not sold their birthright, the present privilege of it, for a mess of pottage? When the necessary expenses of the church have required some portion of what our Lord has made us the stewards of, for providing a comfortable house to meet in, to sustain those who are devoting their time and labor to the service of the church, to minister to the poor of the church, &c., have none of us forgotten that all that we have and all we are belong to the Lord, and that we are only stewards in charge for the time being?

"That when ye fail." We cannot understand our Lord to mean that Christians are liable to fail of their eternal interest in his love and grace, for he has declared that they shall never perish; but their stewardship shall fail, and the worldly possessions which they hold in trust shall go into the hands of others, if not before, when God shall call us hence. But in the sense of our text we understand the failure spoken of to allude to the change of our circumstances while here in this life. Here again permit us to suggest an inquiry or two, by the way of illustration. Have we never known the chastising hand of our faithful God brought down in sweeping away our idols, by blasting our gourds, and taking away from us those things which we were making idols of? Brethren who, having farms, could not leave them when duty called them to attend the solemn assemblies of the saints, have they not been in mercy deprived of their farms? The cattle, the oxen, the cows, the merchandize and the money of God's children, has sometimes become a snare and a trap, so as to bow down their backs, and prevent their looking up to higher privileges and nobler contemplations. This, which is the mammon of the unrighteous, becomes an enemy, robbing us of heaven-born rights and privileges; and when our covenant God removes them from our stewardship we fail. To make to us friends of these things of earth, is to use them as not abusing them, knowing that their fashion is passing away. Employ them as the Master has instructed us, deal them judiciously to those who are in need, and be ever ready, without grudging, to give them up to him who has bestowed them; and when they are gone, when ye in this respect fail, those who have been in the hours of adversity aided by us will in return carry out the same principle, and in their stewardship receive us into everlasting habitations.

Such are in brief some of our views on the subject of the text. We have not given them as any new light on the subject, nor under the impression that we understand the subject better than our brethren, but rather because as a steward of whatever light we have, we do not feel at liberty to withhold from those who ask of us. Those stewards of the manifold wisdom of God who have greater light than we have will, we hope, feel the importance of dealing out of what their Master has committed to them to supply our lack.

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to enclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE.

WE are now prepared to send the above named book, postage and expressage paid by us, to any address, at publisher's prices. All who are acquainted with the work will doubtless agree that it is well worth the price charged. See notice on last page.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE.

OUR illustrated catalogue of Bibles and other books and publications published and for sale from this office, is now ready, and will be mailed on application to parties wishing to purchase.

CORRESPONDENCE.

which, when we would grasp it, disappears. I have for years been convinced that separate and apart from pure and undefiled religion there is no real enjoyment to be found in this vale of tears; and from the perusal of the Bible and the experience of christians I find that even the saints are to enter the kingdom through much tribulation. But O what heart-cheering promises does the Bible contain for all those who are washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. O that I had such a clear title to lay hold of and claim them, as both of your letters bespeak of you; but I fear that I can never apply them by faith to myself.

I deeply sympathize with you in your affliction, and for your joy and consolation I would refer you to the blessed promises of your Jehovah. They all are for you, but none, I fear, are for guilty me. In your troubles and afflictions you can fly to your Bible, and there read, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." "Who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation." What more blessed promises could you, or any other child of grace, desire? How soul-cheering they must be to all who have the right to claim them. I have no such right. I can only see that I am justly condemned by a righteous God. Many times when I try to read the word my wicked, deceitful heart prevents my so doing; my mind is drawn off on the vanities of this sinful world. I cannot confine my mind to anything that is good. This makes me feel like a castaway. If it were a work of grace begun in my heart would I not always be lamenting my wretched condition, and not be carried away by so many vain and wicked things? Could I not plead for mercy at the throne of grace?

Do write again to me, for I prize your letters dearly. This one request I have to make of you, that you no more apologize. I assure you I can read every word of your letters. My own education is limited, but this does not grieve me. One spark of grace in the soul is of ten thousand times more value than all the education of Rome or of Greece without grace. I long to have the teaching of the Spirit of God, and to say, "By the grace of God I am what I am." I am sure, my friend, that you have been divinely taught. O! shall I speak thus of myself? Alas! I fear not. I often feel like I could exclaim with the poet,

"How often have I thought,
Why should I longer lie?
Surely the mercy I have sought
Is not for such as I."

You know that the Savior on a certain occasion rebuked the Pharisees, and told them they were of their father the devil, and that his works they would do. O! have I not great reasons to think that I also am one of his children? In days that are past and gone did I not live the life of a Pharisee, thinking that the salvation of my soul depended entirely on my walk of life? O wretched fool that I was! Little did I then think that I was not equal to one good thought, without the Lord's help. I imagined myself good, but in reality had never known what a vile, helpless sinner I was; and such I am still. I can never feel grateful enough, to think I am yet a spared monument of mercy, and that my understanding has been so far enlightened that I can see what a great error I was in. Yes, I long to know the worst; anything rather than be a poor deluded hypocrite. Is it not strange to think I felt so certain that I was doing right, or doing what the Lord required? It is no more strange than true. Have I not great reason to fear that I am one of those who were to have strong delusions sent them, that they should believe a lie? I can never forgive myself for what I have done. The last meeting at old Zion was communion meeting, and I was present all the time; but it would be impossible for me to describe my feelings when I saw the death and burial of the dear Redeemer commemorated, and thought of what I had done in past days, how I did eat and drink unworthily; and I thought of the awful condemnation that is to befall those who do as I have done; for although I did so ignorantly, that will not justify me in the sight of the all-wise God.

With reluctance I bid you adieu.

LAURA BAIRD.

WARWICK, N. Y., April 10, 1896.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—I send a letter which I received from sister Tuttle, and my reply, which was returned by the P. M., who indorsed it "Unknown." As she takes the SIGNS, you may be able to find her post-office address. Or, you might publish both letters in the SIGNS.

With brotherly love, as ever,
yours in hope,

WM. L. BEEBE.

ADRIAN, Mich., March 19, 1896.

DEAR ELDER BEEBE:—This morning in memory I went back to the time I first heard you preach in the old Fairfield meeting-house, in the State of Michigan. I wish I could tell you how beautiful it all was; but I cannot. I saw and heard unspeakable things. I believe I saw the King in his beauty, with eyes beaming with love and compassion. I have never been able to fully tell my feelings on that occasion. O the glory and grandeur of that day! It seemed to me the whole house was resplendent with a beautiful light that can emanate from but one source, from the divine Master, from the very Christ of God, that you represented to us that day, in all his glorious attributes, perfections and loveliness, the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. It seemed that God had given you of the things of Jesus, to show them unto us, that we might look and live.

Dear Elder Beebe, do you think that one who knows nothing about these things experimentally will ever be given to see and desire the hope for them above every earthly joy, or everything that is called good or great? Do you think we would inquire of the watchmen if he had seen him whom our souls love, and our eyes fill with tears of joy when we catch a glimpse of him a little beyond the watchman, if in reality we knew nothing of a work of grace in the heart? How can these things be? But what a mystery we are to ourselves: one moment on the wings of his love, and the next moment down in the deep, where there is no standing. But this one thing I know, that salvation is of the Lord, and he knows them that are his; for they are sealed with the King's seal, which no time can mar or erase. How can one so sinful as I, so ignorant and weak and blind, dare hope to be one of that number? Yet sometimes when I look back to that day of which I speak, and in a measure live it over again, it is a comfort to me, and a little ray of light and hope springs up, and for a moment chases away the dark clouds of unbelief. But my wants are many. I want to know I am born of God. I want to love, honor and serve him with my whole heart. I want more of the spirit of forgiveness and of prayer. I want to cease from sin. But I cannot do the things that I would, for in my flesh dwells no good thing. And now I ask myself, Did I ever pray acceptably to the Lord? Did I ever worship him in spirit and in truth? It is a point I long to know; and in the stillness of the midnight hour, when the dark curtain of night is spread over a sleeping world, then this verse is the prayer of my heart,

"Let me love thee more and more,
If I love at all, I pray:
If I have not loved before,
Help me to begin to-day."

I know that all of God's promises to his poor and afflicted ones are sure; and I know it is utterly impossible for them to fail to reach that happy abode where Jesus said he would go and prepare a place for them; but as for myself I stand afar off, and have a wicked heart of unbelief, that sin abhorred of God, the first sin that entered the garden of Eden; and how often the old serpent enters our Eden, and trails in the dust and mire of unbelief our fondest hopes and anticipations.

I must not write much more, but will say that both times you visited the Fairfield Church you staid all night at my father's house, Deacon George Livesay, who has long since gone home to reap a glorious reward. He stood firm as a rock, and had great understanding of the Scriptures. I lived with him at that time, and have had the pleasure of preparing food to sustain your natural life; and indeed it was a great pleasure, and one that I would love to have again.

Dear Elder Beebe, I hope you will not care that I have taken the liberty to write to you; one, I believe, that is highly favored of the Lord. I believe he has called you to stand on the walls of Zion, to feed his sheep, and to speak words of comfort to his dear elect people, which to my mind is the greatest calling that can be bestowed on mortal man. I feel very small to write to one who knows so much spiritually, and I so little of anything at all. But indeed I cannot help it, for it has been on my mind so much of late that I thought I would write, even if I should burn it up, which you may do after you have read it, for it is very imperfect. I dare not ask you to answer it. It is not worthy a reply, though I so much desire it.

Your sister, I hope,
MRS. H. TUTTLE.

WARWICK, N. Y., March 27, 1896.

MRS. H. TUTTLE—MY DEAR SISTER:—Your favor of the 19th instant came duly to hand, and I was much interested to read of the trials and comforts through which you have been led during the years since it was my privilege to meet you at your father's house. Many changes have crossed my path since that time; but I still have in grateful remembrance the very kind welcome I found in your church and in the homes of the saints. I wish to be remembered especially to each of them who still remember me. I know that your dear father has been called to his eternal home, and probably many others whom I met there are gone. Those of us who remain to the present, must soon reach the end of our pilgrimage, and we are sustained by the hope of that immortality which is found only in Christ Jesus. But for this sweet assurance there could be no rest for those who are weary of themselves and of earth.

You ask whether one who knows nothing of divine things could be given to see the grandeur and glory of the gospel of divine grace. No; but I am sure that there is all the difference between love and hatred to divide between those who are born of God, and those who are still in the bondage of sin and death. So far from desiring to see the face of the dear Redeemer, the natural man chooses rather that rocks and mountains should fall on him to cover him from the face of him that sits upon the throne. None love his appearing but those unto whom he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Every one who hungers and thirsts after righteousness is already blessed of the Lord. All such shall be filled with that perfect righteousness which exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. They are justified freely by the grace of our Lord Jesus from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. Therefore they cannot be condemned by the law, because they are risen with Christ above its power. They do not require the terrors of death to urge them to unwilling obedience to a law which is written in tables of stone, because the law of God is in their new heart, and they delight to do the will of their Father which is in heaven. Their constant grief is that they cannot do the good that they desire to do, and that they do the evil which they would not do. To them nothing is more desirable than that perfect righteousness which is revealed alone in Christ Jesus. They could not long for this perfection by the depraved power of that natural mind which cannot be subject to the law of God. Hence, that very desire proves that they are led by the Spirit of God, and that they are the sons of God.—Rom. viii. 14. It is certain that the natural mind cannot love the things of the Spirit of God; therefore, when the principle of love is felt by any one toward those in whom the Spirit is manifested, it is just as sure that the one who loves is born of God as it is that one who is loved is led by the Spirit of God. None can love the truth but those who know that truth; and the Lord says, "If ye know the truth, the truth shall make you free." Consequently, it is just as sure that you are a child of God when you love the truth; either preached or written in the Scriptures, as that the speaker or writer is moved by the Spirit of Christ.

In the hope of life in Christ Jesus, I am, as ever, your brother in the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ,
WM. L. BEEBE.

SANFORD, Maine, March 7, 1896.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I have long had a desire to write to you, but could not get the courage to do it, knowing myself so well. I feel that I am not fit to call you brother; but your editorials strengthen me so that I must tell you they are food for me. I have had a desire to write you some of my experience. I had had a longing to be with the people of God, wherever I could see them together, they seemed so happy, for several years; but I felt that I was not fit to be near them. About a year ago I came under the full conviction of my sins. I felt myself condemned, and justly condemned, too. I felt that God would have nothing to do with such a sinner as I was. But O! I had such a longing to be with the church of Christ; yet still I felt that they would have nothing to do with me. I could not sleep by night, my sins were bearing me down so, and by day I felt deserted by God and man. I seemed to be alone. There seemed to be no one like me. I would try to pray, but could not say a word. There seemed to be no help for me. I went on in this condition for some time. One Saturday I seemed to be more heavily pressed than ever, and went to my bed in such a wretched state that I felt I could not live long in that way. I fell asleep in the night, and when I awoke in the morning what was my surprise to find my burden all gone. The sun was shining in my window, and everything looked bright, and I felt light and happy. I went to the window to look out, to see what made such a change, and it seemed that God's light was shining right into my soul, and that he was telling me that my sins were all washed away.

Brother Chick, if this is the experience of a true child of God, I would be very glad to be numbered with them. I will close now. Forgive me if I have wearied you. My wife came under the conviction of her sins about the same time that I did. We both belong to the Oakwoods Church, at North Berwick. May God be with you in the future as he has been in the past.

Your brother in Christ, I hope,
ANSON QUINT.

[THE above brief narrative of experience, it seems to us, will be of interest to many. How many there are who have a good hope through grace who feel very doubtful because they cannot speak about it at such length as can others. To such this narrative will come as a source of encouragement. It does not take long for the Spirit of God to cut one off from self and self works, and bring them to trust in the finished work of Jesus only, and then bring them to the fold. The hearts of all who have learned that salvation is of the Lord, we doubt not, will go out to the writer of the above.—C.]

OZARK, Ark., April 14, 1896.

TO THE AFFLICTED WITH DROPSY:—I feel it a duty I owe to every one of my fellow-beings to acquaint them with what I consider a miraculous cure of dropsy. I had the disease a long time before my physicians knew what was the matter with me. They said they could only give me temporary relief, and I continued to grow worse, until I had given up all hope of getting well. I was requested by a friend to send for a trial package of Elder C. W. Anderson's dropsy remedy, of Dutton, Ark. I took it, and most surprising results followed. Two weeks' treatment carried off nine gallons and a half of water, and the second package seven gallons and a half. Now I am able to do all my work, and do not feel any symptoms of dropsy at all. All my friends regard it as the most wonderful thing they ever knew. The doctors are astonished at the result. I want the world to know of this remedy, as I feel sure it will cure the worst cases of dropsy. I would not take a thousand dollars for the benefit obtained from this remedy. I will be glad to give any information in my power to any who will address me. For reference that my statement is true I refer to G. W. Barham, County Judge of this (Franklin) county, Ark.

MRS. T. A. GRISHAM.

[BROTHER C. W. Anderson is an able minister of the Old School Baptists, and we are personally acquainted with him, and know him to be a most excellent brother. We know of a number of as remarkable cures as the above.—ED.]

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—April 6th, 1896, little Hellie Baskerville, daughter of Richard and Alice Baskerville, near South Tunnel, Tenn., aged about 8 years.

Her death was a very sad affair. They were at her grandmother's on Sunday evening, when she and her little aunts of about the same age slipped out some fire unknown to their parents. Her clothing took fire, and before they could extinguish the flames she was fatally burned. She lived about twelve hours. Just before she died she folded her little hands and said, "Lord, bless my little soul." She was laid to rest in the family burying-ground on April 7th. The writer tried to speak words of comfort from Luke xviii. 16, 17: "But Jesus called them unto him and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein."

J. F. KINKADE.

DIED—At his home in Fauquier County, Virginia, Feb. 22, 1896, brother George B. Templeman, in the 70th year of his age.

It was my privilege to baptize brother Templeman in the fellowship of the Broad Run Church, in 1877, at a time when numbers were being added to the church. His subsequent walk in the church exemplified the genuineness of his profession, and the reigning grace in his heart. Though living a long distance from the place of meeting, he was seldom absent from the assemblies of his brethren, a fact which I love to record to the memory of the departed christian; for if we "love the brethren" how can we willingly absent ourselves from their assemblies?

After a long and painful illness, running through many months, brother Templeman quietly and apparently resignedly fell asleep in Jesus, we believe, leaving a faithful and devoted wife, a large family of children, with many friends and brethren, to mourn their loss. The Lord will comfort his afflicted people.

Affectionately yours,

J. N. BADGER.

MEMORIALS.

WHEREAS, It has pleased God in his infinite wisdom and power to call home our beloved sister, Mary M. McElroy, one of the members of the Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church called Reelsville; and,

WHEREAS, We believe it our duty to record an expression of our love and appreciation for sister McElroy, and of the great affliction we suffer in her death, may God enable us to realize that our loss is her eternal gain. Therefore be it

Resolved, By the church at Reelsville and the visiting brethren present that we spread upon the Minutes of the church at Reelsville, where her membership was recorded, this testimonial sacred of sister McElroy, who fell asleep in Jesus on March 4th, 1896. Sister McElroy joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Reelsville, Ind., August 2d, 1890. She adorned the experience which she gave the church by an upright walk and a godly conversation, always filling her seat in the church unless providentially hindered. We shall miss her presence in our meetings, but we know that the time will soon come when we shall meet again in the church triumphant. In conclusion, be it

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy and condolence to our beloved brother, W. R. McElroy, in this his great time of need, May God enable him and his children to realize that the Lord gives and the Lord takes away, and blessed be the name of the Lord. Blessed be the tie that binds our hearts in love. O may we share our mutual woes, and our mutual burdens bear; and may that tie of christian love and fellowship grow stronger and stronger, until we meet in that home where sorrow is unknown, where death never comes, and where all is love, joy and peace forever.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, April 15, 1896.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have inclosed with this some letters written by a dear young sister whom it was my privilege to baptize early on Thursday morning following our yearly conference meeting last September. She is the granddaughter of sister Ada A. Chadbourn, whom you well know. Though young in years the Holy Spirit has graciously led her into the truth, and I have no doubt the perusal of her letters would be interesting to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

In hope of life eternal in Christ Jesus, I am, I hope, your brother,
FRED. W. KEENE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Feb. 3, 1895.

ELDER F. W. KEENE—DEAR FRIEND:—You asked me to write to you last summer, but I have not had courage to start a letter until to-day. I intended to go to meeting to-day, but could not. When I cannot, I get the SIGNS, and read your pieces, but do not let any one see me. I like to read your pieces, and wish you would write oftener. I wish I could talk to you when you speak a word to me. You asked me if I liked the books you lent me to read. I guess you thought I could not speak; but I will tell you now that I like them very much. I can write better than I can tell it to you. You ask me if I like the meetings. I enjoy them very much, and cannot hear too much preaching. All the fault I find is that the sermons are too short. I like to go a great deal better than I did a year or two ago. I did not want to go then, and stayed at home most of the time alone, rather than go. I would like to have you write to me sometime when you have a few moments to throw away. If you get this, as soon as you read it throw it into the fire. It is not worth sending. If you write, address in my name,

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

FEBRUARY 19, 1895.

DEAR FRIEND:—I was very glad to receive your kind letter, and thought it was very nice, and read it two or three times a day; but when I received it there was a feeling impressed upon me that I was very far from being worthy of a letter from you. I have laid awake a long time nights after I have gone to bed, thinking about these things, and your letter also. I will try to write a hymn in which some of my feelings are expressed:

"Do not I love thee, O my Lord!
Behold my heart and see;
And turn each cursed rival out
That dares to rival thee.

Do not I love thee from my soul?
Then let me nothing love;
Dead be my heart to every joy
When Jesus cannot move.

-Is not thy name melodious still
To mine attentive ear?
Doth not each pulse with pleasure bound
My Savior's voice to hear?

Hast thou a lamb in all thy flock
I would disdain to feed?
Hast thou a foe before whose face
I fear thy cause to plead?

Thou knowest I love thee, dearest Lord,
But O! I long to soar
Far from the sphere of mortal joys,
And learn to love thee more."

O! I am afraid I had better not send this to you. When you speak to me my mouth seems to be closed so that I cannot speak, and I feel very sorry that I cannot. I guess I have written more than you will have patience to read.

From your most unworthy friend,
ROSIE M. ALLEN.

MARCH 8, 1895.

DEAR FRIEND:—I received your very nice letter Monday, and was very glad to get it; your letters do me so much good. I have read your first one many times a day; now I read both of them. Do not neglect the ones that are worthy of your letters, to write to poor, unworthy me. I was sorry I could not go to meeting on Sunday, but suppose it was all for the best. The sermon was so plain it interested me very much, the last time I went. It is so good it makes my heart ache sometimes. I still lie awake in the night time thinking about spiritual things, and what a poor, unworthy child I am. I wish I could be better in the sight of the Lord. His people seem very dear to me; but I am so sinful, so unworthy, that I feel he will cast me out by the wayside. Sometimes I feel more evil in me than there can be in all others. The first time I wrote to you I laid awake the night before, thinking about such things as I have told you about, and I thought I would like to write to you if I only could write something good; but I felt it would be like myself, and would not be fit for you to read. Please burn these letters that I have sent you, so that no one will see them but yourself. I wish there were more meetings I could go to; a week seems a long time to me now to wait. It was nearly two years ago that I first took any interest in going to hear the gospel preached. I went, but still I did not like to. I was not at all interested then, the sermons seemed dreadful long, but it is so much the other way now. In spiritual things all my comforts now are found. The meetings seem to me better and better every time. It was so good last Sunday. I cannot hear the name of Jesus exalted too highly. After I got home there seemed no comfort in anything for me. Those around me were happy, but the Savior seemed to hide his face from me, and I wished I could hide myself. I had a dream the other night. I thought you were up here, and I was full of trouble that day; and we went out in the pasture and had a long talk together about Jesus and divine things, which I thought was beautiful, and made me feel better. But, dear friend, I get worse and worse every day of my life; but when I cannot have every little thing as I would like to

I think that the Lord's hand is in it, and I am perfectly satisfied. I caught cold going to meeting on Sunday; but I am glad I went, even if I did get cold, it did me so much good. I thought that book of yours you lent me was very interesting. That man was brought into some very hard places. If the Lord had not been with him it would have been distressing indeed for him. It contains the record of many precious providences. Of late I have had some experience in that hymn,
"How tedious and tasteless the hours,
When Jesus no longer I see."

I like this hymn also,

"My hope is built on nothing less Than Jesus' blood and righteousness."

I am thinking so much about these things that if any one speaks to me I do not know it half the time until they speak the second time. Everything I do seems mixed with sin. I feel as though you ought not to write or even think of such an unworthy worm as I; and I fear I ought not to write you another letter, for I feel it is wicked to burden your patience with such letters as mine.

Your unworthy friend,

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

APRIL 6, 1895.

DEAREST FRIEND:—I feel I ought to write now, and try to thank you for the letters I have received from you. I think they are better every time. The last one was so very nice I had to read it over and over again, and then I was not satisfied to put it away. I once did not like to hear people talk about spiritual things, and did not stay in their company when I could help it; but now that is the very place I love and long to be in. Your piece in the last SIGNS interested me very much. I shall have to read it again, it was so nice. I am very sorry I could not talk more with you when you were here last. I laid awake that night, thinking how mean it was that I did not answer your kind inquiries. I am afraid you will not come again. I thought I must have hurt your feelings, and you were offended. My school days will begin soon, and then I shall not have time to write much, and I guess you will be glad. You asked me to go to church meeting sometime, but I am afraid I never can, for I am so very far from being fit to go there, even to step inside the door. I once went, before you came to live here, and then there was nothing that interested me; but those things are very different with me now. Since you have been preaching here it seems plainer to me than before. I like to hear you explain the Scriptures. Until you came here to live I did not enjoy hearing preaching.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

MAY 4, 1895.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I will try and write you a few lines now while I have a chance. My school began the 15th of April, and I am taking music lessons, so I do not get much time to write. I had a very pleasant dream the other night which I will try to relate to you. I thought I was at the water's side alone, and on the other side there were a lot of people gathering to be baptized, and I wanted to go too. There was something that seemed to be urging me to go forward; but if I went I must go across to the other side alone, and mother was afraid I should be drowned; but I went across unharmed; and the one that was to baptize me came to greet me, and led me, and there he baptized me. I thought it was very pleasant and delightful, and I was glad I went; but all the rest that were baptized, I felt, were so much better than I. O! I wish that this dream might come to pass; but I am afraid it never can, I am such a sinner. I have felt myself to be so a year or more. Last summer when there were so many baptized I wished I was good enough to be baptized too. The precious letters I have received from you have been very comforting to me. I do not see how you can have fellowship for such a sinner as I am. I feel that if I am a child of God I am the most unworthy and least of them all. It seems I can do nothing that will be pleasing to God. I am so ignorant and helpless and sinful, I dare not at times to hope he will have mercy upon me. Why, Elder Keene, how can you call me sister? or how can you feel to call me your child, such a wicked and sinful worm as I?

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

DEAR FRIEND AND PASTOR:—I thought I would write you a little note, and tell you how I enjoyed the meeting this afternoon. You said to me awhile ago you wanted me to come down some church meeting day and hear the members talk one to another; but I thought I never could, and I fear now it was no place for me among those saints. I felt as though I was not fit to be there all the afternoon I was there, and I think you and others thought the same; but I enjoyed hearing them talk very much, especially your remarks. You said when you were visiting at our home that you desired that my heart might be exercised about baptism. My thoughts have been exercised about that ordinance of late very much. O! I wish I were good enough to go. I did not intend to go to the conference meeting to-day; but grandmother wanted to go to meeting to-day, and did not want to go alone, so I thought about it all the forenoon, but still I was afraid to go. I got ready and went, and then I felt I could not go into the meeting-house until I asked you to promise not to say anything to me; and then I was afraid you would break your promise. I shall know that I can depend upon what you promise me. Some of the members told me they were glad to see me there, and hoped I should come again, and asked me a few questions. I do not see how they can have such thoughts about me, such a poor, unworthy sinner. The next time I see you, and you say anything to me, I am going to try and see if I cannot talk some with you. I wish I lived where I could go in and hear you preach a little every day.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

JUNE 21, 1895.

MY DEAREST FRIEND AND PASTOR:—My school closed to-night, and I am going to have a vacation on going to school to study, and taking music lessons, and I will try and be more prompt about answering your kind letters. I have wanted to write to you very much, but have not had the time. I am so very unworthy of your fellowship and love, I do not see how you can see anything in me that is like a christian. I think about these things very often, and I wish I could see you often, for I enjoy hearing you talk. I feel so provoked with myself to think I cannot talk with you more, when I desire so much to do so. I felt so bad after you went away yesterday I did not know what to do with myself. I never felt so bad in my life about those things. I do not dread joining the church. I should like to be there, but I am afraid I never shall; but I shall have to tell you that I liked to have united with the church last Sunday, if I had been fit; but the church could not have fellowship for such a poor, unworthy wretch as I. I feel just that way. I think sometimes I should like to go; then again I stop and look at myself, and I see I am such a sinner, I cannot go any way. My thoughts were never occupied so much about being baptized as in the past month. There is nothing that seems so sweet to me as going to meeting and hearing the gospel preached. I do not want to hurt your feelings, so I will not stay in the entry during the time of the conference meeting before the regular services, but think I will stay in the carriage, I feel so out of place when I go in among all those good people.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

JULY 3, 1895.

MY DEAREST FRIEND AND PASTOR:—I feel it is wicked for me not to talk with you more. I should be delighted if I could, but I cannot anyway. I could talk with you if I could with any one. I like to have you talk about Jesus to me. I used to be afraid to see any one baptized, but now I enjoy seeing them follow their dear Savior. I should like to do so, but how can such a miserable, sinful wretch as I? I cannot go; the church would think as I do, that I am not fit to be there among them. I want to stay away until I feel I must go, and I have not been brought to that place yet, I am so sinful. I do not see how you can have patience to write to me; every word is very precious to me. I grow worse and worse every day of my life, and I do not see any prospect of my ever being able to join the church, and I do not see how you can. Please do not say anything to me in conference meetings unless I give you permission. Please do not let anyone see my letters.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

JULY 22, 1895.

MY DEAREST FRIEND AND PASTOR:—I will try and write you a few lines this morning. I enjoyed myself very much hearing the preaching yesterday, and in reading your letter. I was especially interested at the four o'clock meeting at Mount Hope. All your sermons seem beautiful, but none more so to me than yesterday. I guess you will know by this time that when you preach or write, that I shall love it with all my heart. I cannot find words to express the pleasure I have had the past week in thinking about the Savior. O! Elder Keene, how can I go down there to the conference meeting on Saturday? I should like to, but I feel so afraid. I am not afraid to trust you, for I know you would not say anything to me unless I gave you permission; but when I went there before one said to me, "Have not you a word to say?" Another said, "How did you like the meeting?" Another, "I hope you will come again." But I did not like for them to know I was interested; but during the conference they told my feelings exactly. I felt that big word "nothing" must mean me, for I feel I am that, and nothing more. I know that without Jesus I can do nothing good or pleasing in his sight. He is everything to me. I cannot join the church now; but the people have begun to tell that I am going to be, or that I have been baptized, and such a story as that made me feel very bad; yet I wished it was so. O! I am such a miserable wretch that my hope seems almost gone at times. I find that I am all the time doing that which I hate, and that which I love and ought to do is left undone. I am afraid that Jesus has never died to save me. I know that he died to save his people, but it seems to me that I am very far from being one of them. We had a terrible thunder shower here Sunday night, and usually I am frightened; but that night I felt to trust and to lean on Jesus, for I knew that he would do only that which was for the best, and there I rested. You have addressed me as dear sister in your letters, and I do not see how you can feel to do that. If you could only see just what I am, I am afraid you would never feel to call me sister again. I am afraid you are getting deceived, but I am sure I hope you are not; it is not my way to want to deceive any one. O! I cannot see my name written in the Lamb's book of life; but I can see others whose names I think are written there.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

AUGUST 8, 1895.

DEAREST FRIEND AND PASTOR:—I will try and write you a few lines. I have not enjoyed myself very much in divine things the past week. I have been thinking about myself, and what I shall come to in the end if I keep growing worse every day as I have the past year. You quote in your letter the words, "If ye love me keep my commandments." But how can I, my sins are so great? I have a great desire to join the church, but O! I have been made to cry, Lord, what shall I do? many times the past week. Please promise me you will not show my letters to any one; because I will not write any more if you do. I am so sorry the people have found out that I am interested. I thought I was going to hide it. I tried to any way. I do not see how people could ever think there is anything good in me; I am sure there is not, but I wish there was. O dear, how can the Lord have mercy upon me? I am such a miserable, worthless wretch.

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1895.

ELDER F. W. KEENE—DEAREST BROTHER AND PASTOR:—I feel I ought to try and write to you, and thank you in my own poor way for your kindness to me in my time of trouble. You told me you thought it would be a pleasant task for me to write to you my exercises of mind regarding my being baptized, and I feel it is a great pleasure to me to write to you, for you were the only one that I desired to speak to about my first enjoyment in spiritual things. I have wondered how and why I wrote my first letter to you; but I trust that it was designed by the Lord that I should begin my conversation with you about these things in that way. It used to frighten me to see any one baptized, but at the time that sister Ella Ford and sister Orina Butler and others were led to take that step I wished I was good enough to go too; but I thought I should be so afraid to be led into the water; but baptism had not then been upon my mind as it has been for the past two or three months. I was led during that time to feel I should have to go sometime. I never once thought that morning that you and brother Beebe stopped to make us a call (as I was a little sick) that I should have strength in body and mind to take that step so very soon. I hurried home from school the night that the meeting was to be at Mount Hope, and got ready just in time to go back again to the meeting. I walked home too quickly; I almost ran. I think that was the cause of my feeling unwell; but I did not mind being sick so long as I could go and hear the preaching. I did not suppose I could go to the meeting held at Oak Woods the next evening. I did not say anything about it until that afternoon, when I asked grandma if we could not go. She said she thought it would not pay to go so far just to hear what little preaching there would be in the evening; but she said that if I wanted to go I must ask grandpa what he thought about it. Well, I went to the farther side of the field, as weak as I was, to find grandpa and see if he could not go; but to my great disappointment he said he could not get ready time enough to get down there by meeting time; but he said we could go without him if we wanted to, so grandma said she would take me if I wanted to go. It was predestinated that I should go to the church in that way, I trust. As we were journeying there she began talking to me about spiritual things, and I talked with her more than I had ever had strength to before. When you came into the house you said you wanted to talk with me, and told me that your daughter, sister Lydia, was going before the church after the preaching that evening, and you asked me if I could not consent to go also. I did not know what to say; but I thought it best to shake my head, for it seemed a great deal easier for me to do so than to nod my head. When Elder Beebe went to ask sister Lydia to come to the front part of the meeting-house I feared he would come to me; but after she began talking my fears left me. I listened to her telling her experience, and thought she had told my experience. When you spoke to me after she had been received by the church, I answered no again. I know there was a desire in my heart for the Lord to guide me. I burst out crying. I felt ashamed of myself; but such feelings came over me as I never had before. I wanted to join the church, and yet I thought I ought not to. When they sang the closing hymn I could not rise to my feet. I thought the people in front of me would think I was having quite a time crying about nothing; but I could not help it. When the services were over I went round to see sister Lydia, and she said she was sorry I could not go with her. She asked me if I would not come to the church the next morning at the water's side when she was to be baptized. I could not say no, and almost before I thought what I was saying I answered, I will try. I felt I must go. When I went into your house with grandma to stay all night I felt very bad because I had not already been received into the church, but I thought, How could the church receive me any way? After I went to bed I was thinking about these things continually; and as I was lying awake these words kept running through my mind, "It is finished." I only slept about two hours during the night. I was awake in the morning when you drove off after my mother to fetch her down. It was so very foggy that morning, and I felt bad to have you go so far. When you returned with mother, and I heard her coming into the room where I was I burst out crying again, for I thought I ought not change my clothes until after I got down to the water's side, for the church might refuse to take me in among them. When we started to go to the water I was feeling dark in my mind; but when we got in the water there was a great change in my feelings. I thought if I should go before the church at the water's side I should have strength given me to go through with it, and if I should not be received I should have strength given me to bear it; so I thought it would be all right, and I felt to rest there. I thought the water looked most beautiful that morning. After I was received, and you came to lead me into the water, all my fears had left me. I felt very happy; and when I was buried in baptism also. I felt as I was coming out of the water as though there had been a great burden taken from my mind and left in the water. I thought I should have been afraid of all the people assembled there; but I did not even think of them. I did not care in the least. My soul was filled with joy and happiness as I was returning with you and sister Lydia from the water. When I started to go home I began to talk with grandma, and it seemed to me as though my tongue was going all the time. When I got home I made ready and went to school. When I arrived there the children were eating their dinners, and there was a smile went from one to the other all around the school room when I went in. They had heard that I had been baptized, and one would say, "I heard there was a baptism this morning, and that Rosie and Lydia Keene were the ones baptized. Is it so?" I did not answer them. Another one came and asked me to play tag, and I did not, and he said, "O! she cannot play now, she is a church member." And they kept asking me all manner of silly questions similar to these I have mentioned; but I did not tell them whether I was a church member or not. I was enjoying my mind so much I could not study very much. I had to think it all over. It seemed such a surprise and pleasure to think I had taken up my cross and obeyed the commandment of the dear Savior.

I received a good long letter from sister Attie Curtis this week, so I must write to her. The lines of the following hymn have been very precious to me since I was baptized, "Amazing grace! how sweet the sound! That saved a wretch like me." Also the hymn, "How lost was my condition, Till Jesus made me whole." I will close now, hoping to hear from you soon. Your unworthy sister, if one at all,

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

NOVEMBER 1, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER AND PASTOR:—I will now try to answer your kind and precious letter. I have not been quite so much in the dark for a week past as I was two weeks ago. The first three or four weeks after I was baptized my soul was filled with joy and gladness. I have looked back to that day many times since, and thought of the Lord's mercy and goodness, and of the burden that was taken from my mind as you kindly led me into the water and baptized me, and led me forth out of the water again. When I have been at our conference meetings I have felt I was not fit to be there, and have wished I was as good as the others look to me. I have had many doubts and fears about my being a child of God. I think if I were one I should be more spiritually minded. While I am at my school amidst my studies I have some thoughts about these things at times; but not as much as it seems to me I ought to.

I hope and pray that I shall not be a disgrace to the church. The Sunday that you were gone to Whitefield was a long, long day to me. I was just looking into the Bible, and I found the words in Jeremiah xxix. 11-16 very precious to me; for I think I have been in captivity. You read the eighty-sixth Psalm last Sunday morning, and Elder Vail preached from that Psalm the first forenoon of our yearly meeting. I never enjoyed myself any better in my life than I did in hearing that sermon. When he closed it seemed he had only been speaking a few minutes. Then when you read that Psalm it seemed so good, for I have had those desires and feelings many times. I once despised the Bible, and did not understand how any one could like to read it; but I think I have been made to understand why they want to read it. It is the most precious book I have ever seen. I have had much enjoyment in reading it, more than I ever had before.

From your unworthy sister, whose hope is in the blood and righteousness of Jesus,

ROSIE M. ALLEN.

SANFORD, Maine, March 15, 1896.

ELDER F. W. KEENE—MY DEAR BROTHER AND PASTOR:—I felt like writing to you three or four weeks ago. One night after I had retired I had words given me very freely. I wished I could write them then; but when I had an opportunity it seemed impossible for me to recall the words. I have met you several times since, but I have felt destitute of anything to say. I know I have nothing now, but try to write because I enjoy your letters so much. O! how I wish I could write like you; it would then be a pleasure to do so. But I must try to be reconciled. The Lord ordereth all things right, therefore I will try and not murmur. I enjoyed the sermon very much at Mount Hope four weeks ago from the words, "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart." And I was delighted also with that sermon about those two birds.—Lev. xiv. 49-53. One was slain in an earthen vessel over running water, and the other dipped in his blood and let loose.

I have been feeling down hearted and miserable for the past few weeks, and I thought you could not want me to write in such a frame of mind. I feel at times it is wicked for me to belong to the church. I am not fit to be numbered with the dear people of God, and may yet be a disgrace to the church. Perhaps I did wrong in going forward, yet I could not bear the thoughts of living in disobedience at the time. I have looked back to the day I was baptized many times; it was indeed a very happy day to me. I was so happy I felt I could fly away to the Savior. O dear! what will become of me? I feel I am nothing but a hypocrite, and not at all like a christian. Sin and hypocrisy abound in my heart; that is just the way I feel. But I am afraid I have wearied you by this time, and I must close.

Your unworthy sister,
ROSIE M. ALLEN.

JOHN XIV. 27.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—Sister Urmsted, of Wood, Ohio, requests my views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on John xiv. 27: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

To me the talk of Jesus with his disciples, when no one else was by, are the sweetest and most comforting portions of the Bible. They are worth more than all the fine spun theories and logical (?) reasoning of men on the "trinity;" which serve to confuse the minds of the simple, and cause the wise to wrangle.

In these talks of Jesus, his meekness, gentleness and love are clearly seen.

Dear child of God, if you desire to study the character of your Lord and Master, read with care and thought all the words of Jesus when talking to his disciples. When I contemplate the tender forbearance and love of Jesus toward poor, erring mortals, I am moved with emotion and astonishment. He who was the Son of God, yea, who was God incarnate, possessing all wisdom, perfect in all his attributes, both human and divine, righteous in all he thought, did or said; God's fellow, yet man's associate and helper in affliction, disease, sorrow and shame.

The conversation of which our text is a part contains near his last words, and the subject is that of his departure. It was a sad time for them all, and his soul became more sorrowful as the hour approached, for the sins of those for whom he must die pressed him as a cart overloaded with sheaves, so that his countenance was sad and his words pathetic. The disciples could not understand why he should die. His death to them meant disaster; therefore they were sad whenever he spoke of it. That they did not comprehend him is evident from the verses preceding the text. "These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you: but the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." They were troubled, and fear came upon them; but he comforted them by assuring them that the wrath should not be upon them.

"Peace I leave with you." What a blessed thought, that when Jesus ascended to his Father it was not to

THE SPIRIT, THE WATER AND THE BLOOD.

"AND there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."
—1 John v. 8.

By request of our sister, Mrs. L. M. Florence, of Manassas, Virginia, we will present such thoughts as we have concerning the above named subject. The sister desires to understand especially the water and the blood.

There are some portions of the word concerning which the people of God have seen eye to eye in all ages; but there are also some declarations in the Scriptures about which there has been a great diversity of opinion. Concerning the former we feel free to speak boldly and confidently, feeling sure that when the people of God are led by the Holy Spirit to unanimity of understanding concerning any Scripture, that is the proper view of it. Concerning the latter, however, we feel to speak humbly and carefully; and this we do because, when our view of a text differs from that of our brethren, we believe that they are as likely to be right as we are; and because also both may be right, only one sees one portion of the truth, and the other another portion of it. Both may see that which God has revealed; but he has revealed one thing to the one, and another thing to the other. The text quoted above, and referred to by our sister, is one concerning which many apparently divergent views have been held by men who have been the most spiritually minded. In what we may say, therefore, we desire to tread very softly; but still we feel bound to present such views as we have, and our reasons for them. The apostle John was that disciple whom Jesus loved, and who lay nearest his heart at the supper; and in his writings it seems to have been given him to see and to speak more of the inner life of Jesus than was the case with the other disciples; and he sets forth the profoundest mysteries of the gospel. Love sees more clearly and into greater depths than anything else; and love only can understand what love is and what love sees.

The text to which our attention is called is set over against the remarkable language of the verse preceding, that there are three that bear record in heaven, and these three are one. There are three that bear witness in earth, and these three agree in one. They are not one, as the three in heaven are, but they agree in one. We wish to call attention to a few words in the text especially before speaking of it in a more general way. The words "bear record," used here and elsewhere, mean simply to bear testimony, to witness to anything. Elsewhere, when Paul says, "I call God for a record upon my soul," he means that he calls God for his witness. We will also say that the word "agree" in the text literally means to be in or for one; that is, these three unite in one testimony for one person or end. We would also call attention to the fact that in verse seven, when John says, "These three are one," it means more than to agree in one; and also that if any are disposed to cavil, and assert that this seventh verse contains the statement of a contradiction, the Savior himself said, "I and my Father are one."—John x. 30. Here the Savior's whole argument shows that he meant more than being one in spirit and purpose; and the fact that the Jews sought to stone him proves that they so understood him. Still farther, we would call attention to the contrast between the words "in heaven" (verse 7) and "in earth" (verse 8). Without stopping to define at any length the meaning of the words "heaven" and "earth," used so frequently in the Scriptures, we will say this, that the word "heaven" seems here to mean the state of unrevealed and invisible glory in which our God dwells, which no creature mind can grasp or even behold; while the words "in earth" seem to us to mean that which it has pleased God to reveal or make manifest to his people. On the one hand it is said, "No man hath seen God at any time;" and on the other it is said, "The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him."—See John i. 18; also John i. 14. It was by coming in our flesh and into the earth that Jesus declared or revealed God. Only in the face of Jesus Christ is the glory of God revealed. As we behold the "Son of man," we are enabled to also behold the "Son of God." This is a great mystery. No human words can utter it. Yet it seems to us that the expressions "in heaven," "in earth," do have reference, the first to the unrevealed and unseen things, which none can see while in this mortal state, and on the other hand to the things which have been revealed in the person of Jesus Christ. The earth is our present state of experience; the heaven is the state of full and ultimate glory. The earth is where Jesus comes down to men; the heaven is where men shall be brought home to God. In the earth is agreement, in the heaven is oneness; and it is only as the oneness in heaven is manifested in Jesus Christ as he dwells in the hearts of men that there can be any agreement in earth.

We understand, then, that the spirit and the water and the blood, whatever each may signify, are all bearing testimony to the same thing in the earthly travel of the people of God. These three things bore united testimony to the incarnate word of God in the days of his flesh; and this testimony continues, and is heard in all his body while any portion of it continues to dwell on earth. The spirit, the water and the blood, all three, declared Jesus to be the Son of God and the divine Redeemer of men while he was manifest on earth; and the spirit, the water and the blood declare the same things yet, sealing their testimony in personal experience in every heaven-born vessel of mercy.

From these general remarks we will turn to a more special consideration of what these three things are. In the sixth verse John has also spoken of these same three. He says that Jesus is he who came by water and blood—not by water only, but by water and blood; and he declares that it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. Jesus declared (John xv. 29) that it was the work of the Spirit to testify of him; so that it is clear that it is of Jesus only that these three testify. The water and the blood testify of him, as well as the Spirit; and John calls special attention to the fact (verse 6) that Jesus came not by water only, but by blood also. He not only fulfilled all righteousness, or all obedience, but he also died. When baptized he said, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness;" and when he died he said, "It is finished." He not only lives the example, but he dies the sacrifice for his people. The fact that John calls repeated attention to the "blood," shows conclusively that he had in view the necessity of the atonement. Jesus was not only a perfect man, but he was also a sacrifice. How all-important was this truth in the view of the Holy Spirit, by whose inspiration John penned these words.

Jesus came by water, and the water bears witness of him in his Sonship and in his work of redemption. We have but to go back to the record of his baptism to see what the apostle here means. Jesus was baptized as he entered upon his public ministry. Before this he had dwelt in quietude, communing with God in his own spirit, and growing in favor with God and man. Now he is about to show himself, to begin the work for which he came into the world; and as the proper entrance into this work he comes to John for baptism. At his baptism he says one notable thing, viz., "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness;" and one notable event took place, viz., the Spirit in bodily shape like a dove descended and abode upon him, and a voice from heaven testified that he was the Son of God. The whole scene, the water of baptism, the words of Jesus himself, the Holy Spirit, and the word of his Father, all testified to his glory, and witnessed that he was the Son of God. His fulfilling all righteousness proved it as much and as really as the visible descent of the Holy Spirit and the voice from heaven. Jesus in his submission to baptism at the hands of John bore as clear a testimony to himself and to his work as did the Spirit and the voice of God. Does not the water still bear witness to him? What does our baptism mean, if it does not also testify of Jesus and his redemption? Do not believers in their baptism declare his salvation still? No sermon ever could bear clearer testimony to the work of Jesus than do the waters of baptism. In every baptism the Lord's death and resurrection are the chief things set forth. In baptism testimony clear and unmistakable is borne to his finished atonement, in which his people trust. Baptism is no unmeaning sign. It sets forth the profoundest mysteries of our faith. It preaches always a crucified, buried and risen Redeemer. It testifies also to the power of this redemption, as felt in the hearts and lives of his people. Thus also it becomes us to fulfill all righteousness; and for us also the seal of the Spirit's testimony is given, and we have the witness from heaven that God is well-pleased.

But Jesus came by blood as well as water, and the blood also bears witness to him. There can be no question, as it seems to us, that the crucifixion and death of the Savior, the Son of God, is here meant. The shedding of his blood was as clear a testimony to his holiness and truth as was the water. He had before declared the necessity of his own death. It was what had been foretold of him. For this end had he been born. He himself declared that it behooved him to suffer, and that he ought to suffer these things. Only by the shedding of blood could there be any redemption. The flowing blood testified of him that he was the promised Savior, the only one who could redeem his chosen ones from their sins. The blood was the chief witness to his finished work. Instead of being a testimony against him, it was the clearest proof that he was what he claimed. That men, even his disciples, were blind to this testimony, that they supposed it to testify that they had been mistaken in their hopes, does not change the power of the testimony itself. As he, the Redeemer, could not come but by water, so he could not come except by blood. He was to come to Zion as the Redeemer. Redemption means not only the fulfilling of all righteousness, but also a sacrifice, an atonement for sin; and so the blood bears testimony to him. Does he not always come to us experimentally and individually by blood? If faith beholds him at all, does it not behold him as a suffering Savior, as a risen Redeemer? We preach

Christ crucified. We believe and rest in Christ crucified. His blood purges our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. He always comes to us through his obedience and death; and so the water and the blood bear witness to him.

In the tenth verse John says that "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." That is, John means, as the connection shows, that God testifies of his Son in all that experience by which his children are taught to know, love and serve him. At the end of all such teaching they see no man, but Jesus only. The Holy Spirit takes of the water and the blood and shows them unto all who believe, and so they come to rest their souls upon his finished work of obedience and death. They have the witness of the water and the blood in themselves.

The Spirit beareth witness also. This is in perfect agreement with Paul in Romans viii. 16: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Also in Galatians iv. 6: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." See also John xiv. 28; xv. 26; xvi. 13. The Spirit testified of Jesus at his baptism, on the mount of transfiguration; and once, when Jesus prayed, he received another testimony, though the people which stood by thought that it thundered. It is the one work of the Spirit to testify of Jesus.

In this very thing may the people of God know whether they have the indwelling of the Spirit. What is the testimony in our own hearts? For the testimony is within us. Are we looking at the things that belong to us, or the things of Jesus? Are we led to trust in ourself, or in Jesus? If the latter, then we may know that we have the testimony of the Spirit; and if we have the testimony of the Spirit we are born of God. "And these three agree in one."

We leave these remarks, trusting that they may prove of some satisfaction to sister Florence and to others.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

PSALM LXXXIX. 22.

"THE enemy shall not exact upon him; nor the son of wickedness afflict him."

Whether we consider this text in its literal application to David, or in spiritual and prophetic allusion to Christ, there is a peculiar sweetness in the declarations which it contains. The emphatic words are from the mouth of "God who cannot lie," and therefore present a full indemnity for the perfect security of him or them to whom the indemnity belongs. He whose mouth has uttered these words of comfort is alone able to maintain their truth and fulfill the pledge.

David as a man, as a child of God, and as the king of Israel, had many enemies to contend with, and some that he admitted were too strong for him; and sometimes it did really seem to human reason as though his enemies exacted upon him, and that the sons of wickedness afflicted him; but poor, feeble reason often errs when attempting to scan the works and ways of God. When David was pursued by Saul, who sought to slay him, when Absalom rebelled, and when Shimei cursed him, to the finite view of mortals they exacted upon and sorely afflicted him; but in reality it was not so. The God of David even then presided over the storm, and his inscrutable decree had balanced the weight and stricken the measure of all the sufferings of that man of God. The malice of Saul, the wickedness of Absalom, and the disloyalty of Shimei, were all working for the ultimate good of David. Saul pursued, Absalom rebelled, and Shimei cursed, because God had bidden or ordained this affliction for David's good and his own glory; and beyond what God had designed they could not go a step. The wrath of men is made to praise God, and the remainder of wrath is by his power restrained.

But David was clearly a type of the blessed Redeemer, our Lord Jesus Christ, and throughout this psalm most strikingly personates him, and especially in our text. As a shepherd and protector of his father Jesse's flock in his youth, as a mighty and successful warrior confronting and vanquishing the enemies of Israel, as a leader and commander of the people, as the king of Israel, and as the seminal head of a lineage of kings, as well as the legatee of the covenant which was ordered in all things and sure, he most brilliantly prefigured that spiritual David with whom the covenant of grace and salvation stands fast forever, whose throne shall endure as the sun, and whose seed as the days of heaven.

The words of our text may be considered in their application of him, first, personally, and secondly, representatively.

Personally. It looked as though the enemy exacted upon him when in all earth, which belonged to him, there was no room for his birth in any human abode, no place for him to be cradled but in a manger, when all the fullness of the earth rightfully belonged to him. But trace him in his incarnation, from the manger to the cross, the tomb and the cold slumbers of the dead, and at every step we would suppose the enemy exacted upon him, and the son of wickedness afflicted him. Though spotless, innocent and pure, going about and doing good, though meek and lowly, holy, harmless, and separate from sinners, his life was sought, he was persecuted, reviled, insulted, spit upon, his rights were disputed, and even his right to live was denied. Was not this exacting upon him? Neither the law of God nor the constitutional laws of men could claim the life of the innocent, the holy; yet he was innocent and holy, and his life was demanded and yielded up. Was not this exaction? Viewed only with the eyes of reason, it would be regarded as clearly so; but in the sense of our text, neither wicked men nor devils could inflict on him one pang, cast on him one reproach, or offer to him one insult, beyond the great decree which he came to earth to fulfill. No man could take his life from him, or they would have done so long before his death upon the cross. Herod could not kill him in the slaughter of the infants, because his time had not come; and all the hosts of men and devils were restrained in their rage, and only allowed to do whatsoever God's hand and counsel had before determined should be done. The perjury of the false witnesses who testified against him at the bar of Pilate, the enthusiastic shout of the mob who said, "Crucify him," the settled enmity of the high priests, scribes and rulers, the mocking and scourging in the hall of Pilate, the unjust decision and sentence of the court, the awful execution of his sentence on the cross, would all seem to justify the conclusion that the enemy did exact upon him, and that the son of wickedness afflicted him, were we not divinely instructed upon the subject. Was it no exaction when in his humiliation his judgment was taken from him? What right had the Jews or Romans to crucify him when the judgment of the court had been rendered that he was perfectly innocent? No guile was found in him. "No fault in this just man." This was the judgment legally rendered by the court, but it was taken from him, and he was led away to be crucified like a lamb to the slaughter. What right had the soldiers to appropriate to their own use his garments? Did they not exact?

Divine revelation lifts the curtain, and we see that he carried our sorrows, he was bruised for our offenses, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his wounds we are healed; and the risen Jesus himself told his disciples that thus it behooved him to suffer, and then to enter into his glory. So we see that after all the malice and violence of his enemies, they did not exact upon him. The armed band could not take him one moment before his hour, and, assaying to do so, they fell backward to the ground like dead men. The soldiers could not break any of his bones, and they brake the bones of those who were crucified on his right and on his left hand, although they came for that purpose to the cross; for the Scriptures had guaranteed that a bone of him should not be broken, and they could not exact upon him. The great stone at the mouth of the sepulchre, and the Roman guard, could not exact one moment's delay of his resurrection. All the powers of darkness have labored, and do still labor in vain, to exact from him one single soul that he has redeemed with his blood. His seed shall serve him, and shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation.

As the head and representative of his mystical body, the enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him. In this vital relationship to and identify with them, all that is done to them is done to him; for they are his body, his flesh and his bones. "I was hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous say, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee; or thirsty, and gave thee drink?" &c. "And the King shall say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And to those on his left hand he shall say, Inasmuch as ye did not these things unto one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.—See Matt. xxv. 34-45. "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in this love and in his pity he redeemed them, and he carried and bare them all the days of old." He that receiveth his disciples, receiveth him; and they who receive him, receive also him that sent him; while they that reject his disciples, reject him. But in all the suffering and persecutions that he in his body and members has and does endure, there is a limitation, beyond which the enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him. He has himself formed the smith that bloweth the coals, and bringeth forth an instrument for his work, and he has created the waster to destroy; and Zion has his promise for her consolation, that no weapon formed against her shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against her she shall condemn; for this is the heritage of his servants, and their righteousness is of him. His members have received an unction from the Holy One; they are his anointed; he that touches them touches the apple of his eye; for he keeps them as the apple of his eye.

Although his members are hated of all men for his name's sake, and are an afflicted and poor people, bearing the reproach, insult and bitter persecution of the enemies of God and truth, how consoling to know that their God and Savior is Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all; that he presides over the storm; the raging elements are subject to his command. All power in heaven and earth is in his hand; the winds and sea obey him; loud pealing thunder is hushed to silence at his bidding. Devils, though eager to annoy and vex his saints, stand aghast and tremble at his approach. Neither they nor their emissaries shall exact on them, nor go one step beyond the bounds which infinite wisdom and goodness has ordained for their good, God's glory, and the utter confusion of all the powers of darkness.

Truly the enemy may attempt to exact, and the son of wickedness to afflict, beyond the limitation which our God has set; the heathen may rage, and the people may imagine a vain thing against the Lord and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us; but he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision.

In consideration of these things, dear brethren,

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

bear witness against us, but that he by his suffering and death has made peace between us and God. Isaiah said of him, "The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Paul said, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God." "He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." Peace is established by his mediatorial work under the law, and is therefore left with us.

"My peace I give unto you." Jesus did not pay the price of peace and then withhold it from them until they had earned it of him by their own obedience. Jesus did the will of the Father—none others can do it. All others fall short of the glory of God; therefore if we have peace, it must be the peace of Jesus; and the only way by which we can obtain that peace is by gift from him.

"Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The world can only give us perishable things, and can assure us no abiding possession of them; no, not even for a day; but the gifts of Jesus are spiritual, and abide continually.

"Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." These words were spoken as words of encouragement in the light of the fact that his death was not a calamity, or a thing unforeseen. Following the text he said, "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe." The disciples had followed him in love and admiration from the time of their call. They were full of hope and anxiety, but they did not know that the death of Christ lay between them and the blessings that awaited them. They thought that his death would end all. As proof of this read the narrative of events that occurred from the time of the supper at Bethany to the time of his ascension.

Although Peter could say by revelation, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," how little did he know about the real meaning of his own words; for in a little while (recorded in the same chapter), when Jesus speaks of his departure, Peter began to rebuke him, saying, "Far be it from thee, Lord; this shall not be unto thee."

In John xvi. 5-7, Jesus says, "But now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou? But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheless I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." See also John xiv. 1.

I have thought of our text as having an application in the personal experience of the saints. The disciples looked for the blessings of Christ to be manifest in a temporal way, and even discussed who should be greatest in his kingdom. Hence their sorrow and disappointment when he was put to death. They said, "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." They trusted no longer; their hope was gone. To them his resurrection seemed impossible; they did not expect it. But Peter afterward said, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Thus it is with the chosen heirs of God. Their former hope is temporal, embracing only such things as may be acquired in this life, and without suffering or sacrifice. In this they must learn their mistake. When the Spirit reveals to them their true nature, they see so much sin and corruption that their hope ceases. They sink down in shame and despair. They weep and mourn as their hope fades away, not knowing that it is the work of a living Savior, and that it is "expedient" for them. In the moment of despair they are "astonished" at the appearance of a risen Savior. A new and better hope springs up; yea, they are "begotten again to a lively hope," a hope that embraces better things than the former, and is abiding. All the journey of our lives afterward we need the comfort of this text, for on every hand is disappointment and discouragement, sorrow and shame; but the text comes to us with the sweet assurance that we have the abiding love and sympathy of Jesus, and his promise to ever be with us, even to the end of the world.

I submit these thoughts for the consideration of sister Urmsted, and others who may read them, hoping that they may be of some comfort to some of God's little ones.

If this is rejected by the editors, all I ask is that it be returned to me, and all will be right.

Your brother in the fellowship of the gospel,

W. N. THARP.

BYRON, Neb., April 17, 1896.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN IN A PRECIOUS HOPE:—Once more I desire to write a few lines to the dear brethren, sisters and friends who have been so kind and generous to our call for assistance for our people here, which was, I trust, thankfully received by all, and was a great blessing to all, and enabled us all to come through the winter without suffering. We again desire to thank the dear brethren, sisters and friends, and hope they all will receive this as a token of our thanks from all who were benefited. The winter is now past, and the voices of the merry birds are again heard. Spring is opening up in all its glory, and the warm rays of the sun are warming mother earth, causing her to send forth the tender grass and herbs, and the fruit trees of all kinds are clothed with their white robe of bloom, with the promise of a bountiful crop. The Lord has been good and merciful to us, and tempered the bleak winds of winter, which was a great blessing here in this timberless country, where fuel is scarce and hard to get. Our people are greatly encouraged, now that we have had a good rain, on the 11th and 12th of this month, the first that we have had since last June, to wet the ground. All with renewed courage and vigor are laboring hard, sowing grain and preparing ground for corn, trusting that God will give the increase. May we ever bear in mind that the Lord is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind; that what he doeth is for his glory and our good. Yes, he has a wise purpose in all his works, while we are poor, weak, short sighted creatures, not knowing what is for our good. How often do we forget the many blessings that our covenant-keeping God is daily bestowing upon us; and how often are we leaning upon our strength for sustenance, forgetting that the Lord is not slack concerning his promises. O what a lesson is taught in the sixth chapter of Matthew, beginning at the nineteenth verse, a part of Christ's sermon on the mount: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal." After summing it all up he says, "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek: for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Yes, Jesus tells his disciples that where their treasure is, there will their heart be also. He even tells them, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for the body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" Why not take thought for all these things? We are in the world, and have to partake of the fruit of the earth for sustenance, and these bodies of ours have to be clothed. Let Jesus answer: "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek: for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." While it has ever been the duty of man, since the transgression of our father Adam, to earn our bread by the sweat of our brow, it is as well our duty as that of others to labor and provide food and raiment for ourselves and families, and not to turn the wayfaring man away from our door hungry; but if thy enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; if he is naked, clothe him. These are the admonitions given us by high authority. "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price," says the apostle of Jesus. Then, if we are not our own, what we have in our possession is not our own. The cattle upon a thousand hills are the Lord's. All that we have and are is a blessing bestowed upon us from the Lord. Our heavenly Father knoweth that we have need of all these things. Every blessing that we receive is from his hand. All our chastisements are from the Lord, and all are for our good and his glory. May we be found among those who are kept by the power of God, ready to be revealed in the last time. May we be found walking worthy of the vocation wherewith he has called us, ever looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. May he enable us to glorify him in our body and in our spirit, which are his, by an upright walk and godly conversation. May he lead us and guide us in the way of all truth, and reconcile us to all his dealings with us, is the desire of a poor sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

JOSEPH BRUCE.

"ABLE TO STAND, BUT LIABLE TO FALL."

THE article written by me on the above-named subject some time ago has called forth a number of efforts purporting to be replies, written by different persons, representing various denominations, and published in different papers. Of all these which I have seen, the one written by Mr. Williams, a Methodist minister, of Lebanon, Ohio, is the fairest and undoubtedly the ablest; and the one over the signature of "P.," by the editor of the Regular Baptist, a New School paper published at Mexico, Missouri, is the weakest and most unfair. It is nothing more than a blind tirade against the truth, without reference to argument, either logical or otherwise.

I feel perfectly willing to submit the case to all critical readers without further discussion. These replies only show that all Arminians, whether Methodist, New School Baptist or what not, are ready to flock together around their favorite rallying point, and that "Able to stand, but liable to fall," belongs essentially to their system.

May God save us from all hurtful traditions, and preserve us in the faith once delivered to the saints.

H. M. CURRY.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of the bride's parents, by Elder G. N. Tusing, April 23d, 1896, Mr. Charles E. Blue and Miss Maggie Rowls, both of Fairfield Co., Ohio.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ON Monday, March 9th, 1896, God in his infinite wisdom and mercy saw fit to take an esteemed member from the May's Mill Church, our beloved sister, Ann Manby.

Sister Manby was born in Norfolk, England, Feb. 8th, 1826, and was married to brother Thomas Manby on April 9th, 1851. They immediately came to this country, and settled not far from their late residence. One son and three daughters were born to them, brother Manby, the son and one daughter having preceded her to the better land. Two daughters and four grandchildren survive to cherish the memory of a loving and devoted mother.

Sister Manby was baptized and united with the Baptist Church in England. About twenty years ago she united with the Old School Baptist Church at Burdett, N. Y. Later she and her husband helped organize the Baptist Church at May's Mill, N. Y., of which she was a member at the time of her death. She was a faithful member, and indeed a mother in Israel, always ready to sympathize with and encourage her brethren and sisters. Her seat was never vacant at the meetings when it was possible for her to be there. Even at the last of her illness, when apparently unconscious of everything, she rallied a little and said to her children, "This is our meeting time." Her disease was cancer of the cheek-bone, from which she suffered excruciatingly for about a year. The last few months her sufferings were indescribable; but she did not murmur at her lot, and bore her sufferings with christian fortitude.

A short funeral service was conducted by the writer in the presence of a host of sympathizing friends at the family residence; after which the remains were laid beside her husband in the cemetery near Benton Centre, N. Y. May the dear Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

ALSO,

DIED—At his home at May's Mill, N. Y., April 10th, 1896, Deacon Jabez May.

He was born in the town of Coventry, Chenango Co., N. Y., Dec. 16th, 1820, and was married to Mary Jane Thomas on August 15th, 1844, who with two sons, two daughters, one granddaughter and one great-granddaughter are left to mourn the loss of their dear one.

Brother May united with the Old School Baptist Church at Burdett, N. Y., about twenty years ago, and in 1886 helped organize the Baptist Church at May's Mill. He built a large addition to his house, where we have met on the fourth Sunday in each month to worship the true and the living God. How our brother's noble face would glow with joy as we assembled there. His house and bountiful table were free to all who came. He was a good neighbor and citizen, a devoted husband and father, and a humble and sincere follower of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. One marked trait in his life was the honesty of nature, which made him a power for good in his community. It did seem that he could not spare our precious brother. He was like a father to me, and O how we do miss him; but the Lord doeth all things right, and may we be given grace to say, "Thy will be done." Our brother's walk and conversation were in accordance with what he professed, and he has always been held in the strongest fellowship in the church. He was in failing health for about four weeks, gradually growing weaker, and at the last slept his life peacefully away. May the Lord's choicest blessings rest upon our lonely sister, who has been a faithful companion to our departed brother for more than fifty years; and may the God of all comfort support the grief-stricken family and friends in their great bereavement.

The funeral was very largely attended on Sunday, April 12th, and the writer spoke to a sad and solemn congregation from 1 Corinthians ii. 9, which was the last Scripture that our brother was heard to utter. His remains were laid in the cemetery at Penn Yan, N. Y., to await the resurrection morn.

Your brother in hope,

C. BOGARDUS.

WHITE CHURCH, N. Y., April 27, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Please allow space to announce the departure of another of our friends from this world of sorrow and pain to that to us "unknown," from whence no traveler returns.

Mrs. Margaret A. Kidwell departed this life Nov. 22d, 1895. She was the oldest daughter of Harrison and Delila Thompson, who several years ago passed away. Both her parents were members of the Baptist Church called Mt. Pleasant, of which the late Elder Samuel Trott was pastor; but Margaret was not a member of any denomination, but was a warm friend of the dear Old Baptists. She was not a great talker, but was motherly and kind; and from hints time and again that I had from her lips I must confess that she had been with Jesus, and learned of him that meekness which shines so brightly in the deportment of the believer. There is no Old Baptist in this part of the county, and the friends sent for me. To me it was a solemn visit. My mind ran back nearly forty years, to the time of our first acquaintance, when the father and mother, with the ten children, were enjoying life and health. It was indeed a pleasant family; but years have passed, and so have all of them but two brothers and three sisters. The words of the apostle, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory," we feel was the gift bestowed upon our departed friend. While her pathway through life was sorrow and trouble, and not many of her moments were sweetened with comfort, yet now we know that those sorrows and conflicts are gone forever, and God, we believe, gave her the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our dear friend was a sister of sister Mary D. Oliver, of Herndon, Va., whose obituary was published in the SIGNS three years or more ago, and whose letters many of us cherish to this day.

Our friend Margaret was born in this (Fairfax) county August 2d, 1835, making her age 60 years and nearly 4 months. She leaves her husband and three sons, together with the brothers and sisters before mentioned, and all who knew her, to mourn; yet we desire to look to the Lord for submission to his will.

Your brother in sadness and love of the truth,

ELI T. KIDWELL.

MERRIFIELD, Va.

Mrs. Mae S. Benson, of Montgomery Co., Md., departed this life in April, 1896, at her home, after an illness complicated and attended with much suffering, lasting several weeks. We have not been informed of the exact date. She was about twenty-eight years of age. Having known the deceased intimately from her infancy, we could but feel the loss very deeply, as well as the bereaved family. She was left an orphan when about eighteen months of age; but her aunt, sister Sallie Simpson, cared for her, and filled a mother's place to her, with a mother's love and care.

We are informed by her husband and sister that in her last sickness, and for several months previous, her interest in spiritual things had been very great. Some years ago she had united with the people commonly called Campbellites; but of late she had been made to feel that she had made a great mistake, and that this was not her home. She had come to see that she was a poor sinner saved by grace alone, and at last had come to desire baptism and admission into the Old School Baptist Church, regarding it as the church of Christ. Her husband informs us that all through her last sickness, both when her mind was clear and when in delirium, her constant theme was Christ and his salvation for poor, lost sinners, and her faith in him, and her desire to be baptized in his name. In their deep sorrow this is a great comfort to them all. Naturally she was kind and gentle, with kind thoughts toward all; and at the last grace manifested its triumphant reign in her. What mercy the Lord bestows in our times of trouble!

We were absent from home, and though sent for could not attend the funeral. Elder Charles H. Waters was permitted to be present, and we are informed spoke much to the comfort of the bereaved of the precious hope of believers.

Our desire and prayer is that our God would bless the dear sister, husband, aunt and little children in all the years to come. May this sad bereavement be sanctified to the lasting good of all.

BROTHER Hugh Russell died at the home of Mr. Theodore Carlile, near Strickersville, Chester Co., Pa., Dec. 23d, 1895, of heart disease, aged 78 years.

Brother Russell united with the London Tract Church in May, 1893, and was baptized by the writer, and continued a useful and highly esteemed member of that church until death removed him from these earthly scenes. He was very bright and cheerful, and was stopping with Mr. Carlile, and retired, as far as the family knew, as well as usual. The next morning they found him dead. His wife, who was a highly esteemed member of the same church for many years, died about seventeen years ago. He leaves several children and grandchildren to mourn, but not as those without hope. May the Lord comfort them.

ALSO,

By request of the bereaved parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Disharoon, of Philadelphia, Pa., I send notice of the death of two of their little children, Woodbury, aged 5 years, on Feb. 17th, and Georgie, aged 3 years, on Feb. 18th, 1896, of membranous croup.

Thus in the short space of about thirty hours were snatched from the fond embrace of these loving parents two bright, affectionate boys, who had hitherto been strong and healthy. Woodbury was ill about one week, and Georgie but one day. They have the warm, heartfelt sympathy of all their friends in this sad affliction. May he who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," comfort their hearts, and draw them unto himself with the cords of his love, and enable them to say, "Thy will be done."

Your brother affectionately,

A. B. FRANCIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEEDMORE, Pa., Feb. 21, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find a letter written by our much afflicted sister, Lizzie Himes, which has been a comfort to me, and I have no doubt it would be to others. You will please give it a place in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Our dear sister is so located that she very seldom hears preaching, and there are none living in her town who believe as she does. The Lord has declared that he will take one of a city and two of a family, and bring them to Zion. He has also said by the mouth of the prophet that he will turn to the people a pure language. There are none who can understand this language except those who are born of God, and they understand it as soon as they hear it. This begets a fellowship that the world cannot give nor take away. It is the love of God manifest in our hearts. This is why the apostle John could call the attention of the disciples to the manner of his love, that we should be called the sons of God. God manifested his love toward us when we were dead in sins. All natural love must have something to attract that love; and we may love an object to-day with all our heart, and might feel that we could lay down our life to obtain that object, and to-morrow we might hate it with a perfect hatred. Not so with the love of God; for God's love knows no change. When we were sunk under the law of sin and death, and were lawful captives, rolling sin as a sweet morsel under our tongue, his thoughts were thoughts of mercy and love. What wondrous love was this, O my soul, that brought the lovely Savior down from the shining courts of glory, to suffer, bleed and die, to save his people from their sins, and make them kings and priests unto our God, that we might offer up spiritual sacrifices well pleasing in his sight. The blessed Savior has commanded us again and again, "See that ye love one another." May the Lord remove every obstacle that is calculated to mar the peace and happiness of our beloved Zion, and may each follow after the things that make for peace, and not be found contending about words to no profit, that lead to vain jangling and strife. May we, like Paul, be determined to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and him crucified, who is the way, the truth and the life, the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

May the Lord bless you, dear brethren, in the publication of our loved medium of correspondence.

Yours to serve in the gospel,
AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

HOPEWELL, Pa., Feb. 2, 1896.

ELDER AHIMAAZ MELLOTT—DEAR BROTHER IN THE PRECIOUS SAVIOR:—Your dear letter came very unexpectedly just one week ago, but I assure you it was very joyfully received, and brought comfort to my weary mind, as do all letters from my dear kindred. My mind was so full last night that I could hardly refrain from arising from my bed at the hour of midnight to talk to you a while, in one sense of the word. I had many doubts, and also had fear, but in the midst of it all I had joy. Why is it? I have asked myself many times. Why do I enter into so many conversations with friends to no profit? It seems of late that every few days something starts up an argument between us, all to no profit. They, of course, cannot agree with me. God forbid that I should trust to myself, or to anything pertaining to myself, to enter into the joy and comfort of my dear Lord and Master. Last night I had many fears lest I had spoken in a boastful way as to the peace and prosperity of Zion. I will relate a few things that I said, and, my dear brother, tell me if I have erred. God knows my heart, that I do not want to boast of anything that is not true. I said I felt assured that if there was a denomination on the face of the earth that worshiped the true and living God in all his purity, it is the Old School Baptist; and I further said, "I believe and know that my father is a child of God." Then one said, "Hold on, hold on; you do not know that; you only think that; and if you only knew, perhaps you would find he is far from being a child of God." Have I been deceived? Is it possible that God has left his children in darkness, that they are only to think in a natural sense, and not to feel his teachings, and have comfort in being together? Are we to travel here and not have any evidence that our brethren and sisters have received of the Lord, or are we only to think that they have? that after we pass away and go to Jesus, and not until then, will we know that they are children? This was their belief, but it is not my belief. O how miserable and what a wretch undone I would be if I only thought these might be my dear kindred. But thinking can create no heavenly ties. We must receive of the Spirit of God, or we are none of his; nor can we otherwise know them that are his. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The apostle does not say we can think we have passed from death unto life, but we know, because we love the brethren. Have I boasted? Have I done wrong? Would it not be better by far for me to bridle my tongue and sit in silence, rather than err, rather than speak words that are not true? If I have erred, I know of no better thing for you to do than after you have read my letter to return it to me, and then I will know that I am not one of them who trust in the meek and lowly Jesus, and who look and long for that rest that comes to all the children of the heavenly King. Why did the apostles, when they sent their greetings, call them dearly beloved in the Lord? If they were only to think they were such, then they should have greeted them, Dearly beloved, I think, in the Lord. What a crushing thing it would be to me if I could only say, Dear brother, I think; or, I just think you are my brother. "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." You cannot know how distressed I felt after our conversation ended. Then I sought a room that I might be alone, to meditate upon these things that we had been speaking of, and the glorious things concerning Jesus and his kingdom. Have I been deceived again? was one sad thought. I thought, Surely God has only one kingdom, and not many. All churches claim to be right; and if they all be right, then God has many kingdoms, and many changes in them. If he has only one kingdom, then surely the others must be blind; for we can see the difference in the many denominations. Are they alike? Are they not all contrary the one to the other? Yet they say we are all striving for the same place. So do the Catholics; yet the Protestants condemn them to the uttermost. This is the way I feel. If any come to me and tell of the power of the Lord in bringing them from darkness into light, and of God having written his laws in their hearts and mind, then I can fellowship them. I feel that I have tasted of the fountain that knows no ending. When sadness bears me down, I am made to say,

"O my soul, what means this sadness?
Wherefore art thou thus cast down?
Let thy griefs be turned to gladness,
Bid thy restless fears be gone.
Look to Jesus,
And rejoice in his dear name.
What though Satan's strong temptations
Vex and tease thee day by day,
And thy sinful inclinations
Often fill thee with dismay:
Thou shalt conquer
Through the Lamb's redeeming blood.
Though ten thousand ills beset thee
From without and from within:
Jesus saith he'll ne'er forget thee,
But will save from hell and sin.
He is faithful

To perform his gracious word.
Though distresses shall attend thee,
And thou tread'st the thorny road,
His right hand shall still defend thee;
Soon he'll bring thee home to God.
Therefore praise him;
Praise the great Redeemer's name.
O that I could now adore him
Like the heavenly host above,
Who forever bow before him,
And unceasing sing his love.
Happy songsters!
When shall I your chorus join?"

Yes, when shall I, shall you, shall all the redeemed of the Lord, join the chorus above? for none but the redeemed of the Lord enter there. If I am deceived I am none of his, but a fearful judgment rests upon me. If my rejoicing be only in the flesh it will fade and die away, and will go on with my flesh to corruption; but if it be of the Spirit which is of God, then can I know the things which are freely given us of God, and that live and abide forever. There is no fading away of this inheritance, for it is reserved in heaven for us. Then, my dear brother, does not the dear Lord give us evidence? Does he not put in our hearts the evidence that those who bear the marks of the meek and lowly Jesus are his? And can we not truly say that these are our Father's children? They have given evidence that they have received of the Spirit of the Lord; and with Elder Sawin I can say, that if I should hold my peace the stones would cry out. These are my Father's children. Then, my dear brother, must I hold my peace?

May I not say what I feel is the truth, or must I only think, and wait till death to know who is right? I believe just as God tells us, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." How could we rejoice when we hear these precious truths proclaimed, if the Spirit of Jesus dwelt not within us? He has freely given us of his Spirit, and that is why we can see the fruit of the Spirit in our brethren; and that is why we can say, Dearly beloved. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him and through him and to him are all things: to whom be glory forever." How widely different are natural ties and those of the Spirit. How sacred are the bonds of Christ, and how we long to be with those who are of the same mind, and how are we then made to rejoice. O! the joys that are in Jesus know no ending.

"O Lord, how lovely is thy name,
How faithful is thy heart!
To-day and yesterday the same,
And always kind thou art.

No change of mind the Savior knows,
A true and constant friend:
Where once the Lord his love bestows,
He loves unto the end.

He well remembers we are flesh,
At best a bruised reed;
And fainting souls he will refresh,
And well supply their need.

No danger can thy soul await
While resting on this rock;
The winds may blow, the waves may beat,
But he sustains the shock.

Dear Jesus, let me always rest
Within thy arms divine:
Thy daily care to make me blest,
To love and call thee mine."

FEB. 4th.—My dear brother, your comforting letter lays before me. I have read it and re-read it, and it is precious to me. You speak of being dull and stupid, and that you feel like giving over in despair, especially after hearing brethren preach with such power. What good evidence it is that you have been called and set apart to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. If you thought, Now I can preach as good as they, would not there be a fall? and great would be the fall. But as it is, what comfort and joy is given us from our dear Lord through our dear pastor. What a good and comforting sermon you preached here in my earthly home, and how my heart burned within me as I heard fall from your lips a prayer to God on my behalf. Tears then filled my eyes, and as I recall the precious words tears again fill my eyes. Why was the Lord so mindful of me as to put it in your heart to pray for me, so unworthy? You stated also that the Lord blessed me with a feast of fat things. Yes, he surely blessed me, or how could I ever have got there? You say you presume there was no person who enjoyed those meetings better than myself. This I cannot answer; but, my dear brother, words can never tell my joy and comfort; it is unutterable, and is sealed, or "Selah," meaning that the tongue can never utter those heavenly things. Those meetings were a heaven to me, and as I read over my poor letter in the SIGNS, telling of my trip, I felt that I had told nothing in comparison to the real joys that had been given me. Yes, tears flow from my eyes as these joys come to me. Yes, I was made to drink bountifully of the river whose streams make glad the city of our God. How it strengthens us in our weary pilgrimage here below, so that we can press onward and upward till we are received to our eternal home. Then shall we enjoy them free from sin, and shall ever be with the Lord.

I shall be glad to hear from you when you can have time to write. With love to you and your dear wife and children, and to all the household of faith who may ask after me, your sister in christian love,

LIZZIE HIMES.

READING, Mass., Jan. 27, 1879.

MRS. A. A. CHADBOURN—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—If you will allow me to claim relationship to you in Christ. I have delayed writing to you a long time, feeling I had nothing worth writing, and I now hope you are not anticipating much from me. If so, I feel quite sure that you will be disappointed. I started for home the next Monday after our last adieu at Oak Woods. I went as far as Exeter, and stopped there with my sister until Wednesday. I had a very pleasant visit with her, and then a safe arrival home. I did not meet with any Old School Baptists on my way, though it would have gladdened my heart had it been so ordered; for all who can say from the heart that they love and believe that doctrine, are dearer to me than any other people. I have longed to see you and other dear ones in the church since I came home, and I have wished that I could have told you all what I have passed through in my mind within the last five years concerning myself, and my prospects beyond this vale of tears; yet it would be impossible for me to tell all the distress, and the anxious thoughts and desires of my heart for months before my visit to Maine. But I then tried to keep it all to myself as much as possible, though I longed at times to know if there was another one in all the wide world that was ever tried like me. At the time there was a protracted meeting among the New School Baptists in this place, and I attended frequently, hoping I might receive some light and comfort in going there; but I found none there for me. They told me that salvation was free for all, if they would only accept of it and come to Christ; that he was ready and anxiously waiting for us to give our hearts to him, &c. But this did not harmonize with what I had read in my Bible; for there it says all hearts are in his hands, and he turneth them as the rivers of water are turned; and I would have given worlds to have had the assurance that he was mine, and I was one of his. But I felt that all the powers of earth could not secure my eternal salvation, or give me the Spirit of Christ; and if it was to be obtained by works of righteousness performed by me, I was led to see that mine was a hopeless case, for sin was mixed with every thought. One evening they requested all to stop after meeting that wished to be prayed for, and I was then in such a desponding state of mind that I thought I would stop and see if I could not get my troubles removed and be happy like those around me, and I told them that I desired their prayers. But while they were praying I felt worse than before, if possible, and my heart grew cold and hard as stone. I felt that another great sin was now numbered with those committed before, and that night I sprinkled my pillow with tears while thinking of my hopeless condition. I felt from my heart that

"If my soul were sent to hell,
His righteous law approved it well."
Yet I prayed for God to be merciful to me, a sinner, but it seemed as if he would never heed or answer the prayer of a sinful worm like me. Soon after this I was taken sick, and continued so for several weeks. I was then suffering in body and mind, and could hardly tell at times which was the most severe. O how I then wished I could hear some Old School Baptist preaching! for I could then look back and remember things that I had heard them say when a child, and lived in Maine, and that gave me some hope at times that there was a people that could understand my case, and had experienced similar trials. I thought while lying there that I would go to North Berwick as soon as my health would permit, for I knew that I could there hear that which I so much wished to hear. In a few weeks I was able to go, and I was soon once more with my dear grandparents and other relatives there. I went to uncle John Ham's and while there I mentioned some of my griefs to aunt Jennie, and found to my joy that she had experienced the same. They kindly took me to meeting with them the next Sunday, where I heard Elder Quint preach from 2 Cor. v. 17. I then had a feast more sweet and precious to me than anything I had ever heard before. If he had known my feelings previous to that he could not have told them better. After meeting he came and talked with me a few moments, and asked me to go to the next conference meeting. I felt to thank him for the invitation, for I felt so unworthy to mingle with them that I could not have gone unless some of the church had asked me. But after retiring that night my mind was much disturbed with fears that I might be deceived, and had deceived others. But sleep overcame them all at last, and when I awoke these words were the first presented to my mind, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though red like crimson, they shall be as wool." O how sweet and comforting were those words to me. But before this, after my first talk with aunt Jennie Ham, the shadows that had gathered so darkly around me seemed gradually passing away, and at last the sweet assurance came that my sins, though so numerous, were all forgiven, and all through the blood and righteousness of Christ. And now, in view of all this, could I live and go down to my grave with a conscience free and clear without trying to follow and obey the commandments of the Savior? How selfish and ungrateful seemed the thought, while I had hope that he had laid down his life for me, even me. I attended the next conference meeting, but I think I shall never forget my feelings while setting there with the church at that time; yet I had prayed for comfort, confidence and strength to go there, and to follow the Savior down into the water, and relieve my sin-sick soul of a burden that was still clinging to me; for every stream or pool of water reminded me of that duty. But it seemed very crossing at times, while thinking of it, and fears would arise that I was not a fit subject; that my rude, sinful nature would some time bring sorrow and disgrace to the church. But when the time came for me to go forward, and I came out of the water, it seemed the happiest day of my life, and the richness of Christ to me then I can never express. My heart was so full that I could not help speaking of it to you when you met me at the water's edge. But when I thought of the day previous, and how little I could say to the church, I felt dissatisfied, and ashamed of myself, and thought they must all have felt the same. But I shall not soon forget the kind deeds and comforting words from you and other dear ones while attending the duties above mentioned. And now, dear sister, pray for me, that I may ever be kept in the right way, and adorn my profession with a well ordered life and godly conversation. I will now draw this to a close, hoping to hear from you soon.

From your unworthy sister, if one at all,

FANNIE M. HAM.

GAYLORD, Kansas.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I send you a letter written by my niece, and a dear young sister, who was baptized on the first Sunday in June, 1894, in the fellowship of little Zion Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists, of Smith and Osborne Counties, Kansas. As she has stated, she could only say but little when she was received, but was well known by the brethren and sisters, and was loved by all for the truth's sake; therefore we did not hesitate to receive her in full fellowship. I send this by request of brethren and sisters.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
W. S. AYDELOTT.

GAYLORD, Kansas, July, 1894.

TO LITTLE ZION CHURCH OF REGULAR PREDESTINARIAN BAPTISTS—MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—If one so unworthy as I feel myself to be may thus address you. I have been much troubled about not being able to give you a reason of my hope. I feel like I ought to tell my friends of the way I have been led, as near as I can; and as I could not say anything when I offered myself to the church, I thought perhaps you would grant me the privilege of telling you this way; that is, if I shall be enabled to do so. I cannot at all times write on this subject. Sometimes my mind seems to be a blank, as was the case when I joined the church. And even now that I have commenced this, I do not know whether I will be able to write. It seems that I can compare my thoughts to a flock of frightened birds. My mind is often full of thoughts, but when I attempt to speak or write they will flit away.

I have had serious thoughts in regard to religion since my earliest recollection. I can tell of no certain time when I first felt that I was a sinner. As near as I can tell this knowledge came gradually. My first impressions were that I was not as good as others; for they could enjoy themselves, while I hardly ever felt happy. I wanted to be good, but it seemed that I was always doing wrong, and I would feel troubled about it. I would make vows, only to be broken. I kept on trying to live a better life, thinking that I would get rid of my trouble and be happy; but I was mistaken; for when I would do good, evil was ever present with me. I could not keep wicked thoughts from coming into my mind. This was a trouble to me. I went on in this way for several years. I felt too wicked to pray, yet the sincere desire of my heart was to be relieved of my trouble. I felt that I was a sinner, and would try to read the Bible to see if I could find relief; but no relief could I find. I did not think the Bible was addressed to such as I, for it only condemned me; yet I thought the Bible was the book of books. I found some comfort in reading Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. It seemed that the burden that was so troublesome to Christian represented the burden which was weighing so heavily upon me; and when I found that his burden was finally removed, I felt greatly encouraged. About this time my father commenced taking the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I greatly enjoyed the experiences written therein. They told my feelings better than I could, until they came to the happy change. I have never had as bright a change as many others. Sometimes I would read a piece that would exactly suit my case, and I would feel greatly encouraged. I took to reading the New Testament, and finally I understood that Christ was the righteous, and that it was sinners Christ died for, and that they are only righteous as he is their righteousness. He died to save his people from their sins. I could then read the Bible with a different understanding from what I once did; yet I dared not claim that I was one of God's people. I longed for some evidence that I was one of that number for whom Christ had made an atonement. I could see no other way for any sinner to be saved. I often felt that the history of the children of Israel at the Red Sea described my case. One night I dreamed that I was in a large building, and as I was passing a door at my right it was partly open, and I looked in and saw a person dressed in a robe, O so bright. This person was so bright that he seemed like a light. His very features shone, and also his robe. The thought came to me that it was Jesus. Then I thought I would try to have my sins forgiven. I did not go into the room then. The next I remember I was in the same room where the bright person had been, and I was crying. The vision had disappeared. In this condition I awoke. I wondered a great deal about this dream. It seemed to afford me both joy and sorrow. O how I longed for evidence that I might claim a hope in Christ. I have had many dreams that have given me some comfort and caused serious thoughts. The dreams I shall mention are most impressed on my mind. Two years after I had the dream I have just related, in the summer of 1891, I dreamed I was thinking on the Scriptures, and fell asleep, and the thought passed through my mind that Jesus died once to save his people, and could not die again. Then the thought came that I was not one of the number he died for. With this thought came such agony as I never can describe. It seemed that I would be in torment shortly. There was a piercing pain in my heart. At this I commenced to scream. When I screamed I thought I would get relief. The terrible agony was gone, and it seemed that I would be just as happy as I was miserable; but I awoke before I got happy. This dream gave me courage to still hope for relief. A few months after this I dreamed that I had commenced to write a letter, and was thinking I had the evidence now to join the church. It seems that I was trying to write on this subject, but could not think what to write, for I did not know what the evidence was. The next I remember I saw the evidence that would enable me to join the church. I saw some peaches cut in pieces, ready to cook. A piece of peach, distinguished from the rest, was cooked up with the rest of the peaches, and all was a mixture. I could no more distinguish the evidence. It was still there, but not so as to be distinguished. I believe now this dream was to show me that I could not have any certain part of what I had experienced as evidence to base my hope upon for complete evidence. This dream affords me much comfort. As near as I can explain, I could not help but have a little hope, but I craved evidence so that I would know whether I had a right to hope or not; and, too, I wanted something to tell the church. I felt that when one had a hope they ought to obey. I had thought I never would offer myself to the church unless I had given me a brighter evidence. But I always felt troubled; for if I had to give up what evidence I had, I thought I should be miserable indeed. I sometimes fear that I am only a deceiver, and feel greatly troubled; for surely I do not want to deceive. It is the sincere desire of my heart not to deceive any one. Over a year ago I had a dream. I will call it a dream, but I am not sure that it was a dream. I had lain down to rest. We had sickness in the family, and I had to sit up with the sick. I had just been talking to my sister, and it did not seem possible that I could have fallen asleep so quickly. It seemed that a dark object appeared to my view, and the words that God was my enemy came into my mind so forcibly that it almost seemed like they were spoken. This was terrible to me. I could do nothing but scream, when the terrible agony was removed. I wondered what it meant.

I will bring this tedious scribble to a close. I have tried to tell you some of my travels. If I only could have told you of them before I was baptized it would have been a great relief to me. I feared that I had done wrong in coming to the church, when I could not say anything. The sincere desire of my heart was that if I had done wrong I would be hindered from being baptized. But now I feel greatly relieved, and am encouraged to hope that I have done my duty.

Dear brethren and sisters, I have written this to unburden my mind. I know it is very poorly written, and is like the writer, very imperfect; and if I did not believe you would overlook my blunders, and forgive me if I have done wrong in writing this, I could not send it.

Very unworthily,
ROSA AYDELOTT.

PINSONFORK, Ky., April 3, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST JESUS:—I have by me a most precious letter written by Elder P. W. Sawin, of New Castle, Ky., to brother and sister Bolt. After they had read it they gave it to us to read, and we found so much comfort in it that we cannot be satisfied to let it lay here unpublished; therefore we send it to you for publication in the SIGNS. We believe the Lord's people will find much comfort in it.

Yours as ever,
W. J. MAY.

NEW CASTLE, Ky., Feb. 26, 1896.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER IN THE FAITH OF GOD'S ELECT:—Grace, mercy and peace be unto you. Through the abounding mercies of our covenant-keeping God I yet live. Why my poor, unprofitable life is spared I know not; or why God's severest judgments slumber I cannot tell. His eternal covenant changes not. His word declares, "I am God, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." I have thought much of late of God's eternal love, and of the fullness of that grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world was. Can we conceive of anything greater? How little can finite minds comprehend of the glorious fullness. Perhaps the most enlarged understanding that we can gain of it is in the thought that sinners, rebels, worms of the dust, were embraced in it. John certainly had that thought in view when he said, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." No carnal reason can give a reason why such love, such divine favor, should be bestowed upon the ungodly; why enemies to God by wicked works should be made the recipients of rich, reigning grace. No law of any country would compel a millionaire to give or bequeath all his substance to his enemies, or even to his best friends. No law in high heaven outside of the Father's eternal love, can we find or give as a reason why. If we accept the modern view of the matter of salvation, we could then more readily reason out from cause to effect: that foreseeing we would be good, and love the Lord, God's electing love embraced all for whom Christ died. But, my dear brother and sister, every poor, finite worm that knows the plague of their own heart, knows that from that standpoint their case would be a hopeless one. O! where in the depth of our wretched, deceitful hearts could our God behold any good? All that has ever come forth from that corrupt fountain, the earthly head, Adam, is as corrupt as the fountainhead itself, all defiled with sin. Yet love embraced them, God's electing love chose them, heirs of glory, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus, our living Head. As we receive all the earthy in the earthy head, we also receive the higher order of life, the heavenly, the spiritual, the eternal, in Christ, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. In the first, the earthy, we were sunk in death and sin. In the second we are raised up from death and sin, to the heavenly, to walk in newness of life. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image

NO GALLEY WITH OARS, NOR GALLANT SHIP.

A FRIEND in Bingham, Illinois, by the name of F. J. Huggins, asks us to give our views upon the Scripture found in Isaiah xxxiii. 21, which reads as follows: "But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby."

We would say in response, first of all, that we have no doubt that the prophet Isaiah was given to see in prophetic vision, and to infallibly record, the glory, peace and safety of the church of God under the gospel dispensation. We also believe that the closing portion of this chapter especially contains a figurative description of her glory and beauty. While the mind of the prophet might not have reached beyond the Jerusalem that then was, yet the spirit that was in him did testify of the new and spiritual Jerusalem, which now dwells in safety in this gospel dispensation.

It is not our design to call up and dwell upon the many precious things contained in the connection of the text, any farther than may be needful to present the design of the text itself, and this only as various things in the text claim our attention. Time and space would fail us did we undertake to do more than this.

"But there." These opening words of the text demand attention first of all. Where are these glories to be seen? In the preceding verse this question is fully answered. There the city is first called "Zion, the city of our solemnities;" the city of worship, of sacrifice, and of communion with God at the mercy-seat. Literally, the word "solemnities" signifies "appointed times;" and the direct reference is to the times of solemn assemblies at the feast days, and other times appointed for worship. Then the city is called Jerusalem. These two names both have a meaning. Zion signifies "a fortress;" while Jerusalem has the meaning of "vision of peace." Both names are appropriate; for the church of God is like a fortress, which bids defiance to every foe, which can never be overcome, and in her borders peace, everlasting peace, the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, dwells. It is a dwelling-place that shall never be taken down. Her stakes shall never be removed nor her cords broken. The figure is that of a tent, held fast by stakes driven deep into the earth, and by cords stretched over the sides.—See also Isaiah liv. 2. By these figures of speech the safety and endurance of the church of God are set forth in this twentieth verse; and let it be remembered that when the Scriptures testify anything concerning the church, the Zion, the Jerusalem, the city of God, they mean, not some impalpably, unknown thing, but all the elect children of Adam, who have been chosen in Christ unto salvation. If the church of God is secure, that means that each believer is secure. The church is made up of nothing but redeemed sinners, who have been made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Now, it is here, in this safe dwelling-place, the church of God, that the prophet declares that the glorious Lord shall himself be a place of broad rivers and streams unto his people. The text does not say that he will provide such a place, or give such a place, but that he will himself be such a place. He is all and in all to his people. Having him, they have all things. They find all their joy in him. He satisfies every desire. Philip said, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." The full satisfaction of the redeemed is expressed in the sentence, "Thou hast redeemed us unto God." If the people of God love beautiful things, if they love a land abounding in water, a place of broad rivers and streams, as by faith they behold the glorious Lord all these desires are satisfied. In this land the rivers are broad, and the streams abound. The land is abundantly watered. Every plant has nourishment, and the landscape is beautiful. The Lord himself quenches the thirst of every perishing soul. He gives with no stinted measure. Whatever our souls lack, that he is to them. They dwell in God, and he sends forth the streams of blessing, flowing out from the throne of God, until every longing soul is filled and every hungry one is satisfied.

The glorious Lord is the place, and the streams are his rich promises, his mercy, goodness and love. They embrace every joy which the soul feels in communion with him. They roll rich, mingled with the Redeemer's blood; and unlike earthly blessings, they abide forever.

"Beneath the sacred throne of God
I saw a river rise;
The streams were peace and pardoning blood,
Descending from the skies."

"'Tis void of bottom, brim or shore,
And lost in Deity."

These broad rivers and streams are to make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. The people of God bathe in them, and arise refreshed and invigorated. They drink of them, and their thirst is quenched. It would be a pleasant theme to pursue this thought, and trace each one of the thousand thousand streams which flow out to each believing inhabitant of Zion; but this we cannot do. Each individual experience has been full of seasons of dwelling by the still waters. Every token of mercy and love from God is one of these streams. "Of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace." But we can never multiply words sufficiently to tell what all these streams of blessing are. Paul, caught up to the third heavens, and whether in or out of the body he could not tell, had glimpses of this glorious Lord, and of the broad rivers and streams, which he could not utter. The land of Canaan was made attractive in the minds of the Israelites, as they journeyed through the wilderness thitherward, because it was pictured out to them as a land of springs and brooks; but what comparison could there be between this land and the place of broad rivers and streams to which those who believe have come? The Lord said unto Abraham, "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Thus he speaks unto his children always. To them he is always all and in all.

The chief thought of the words "broad rivers and streams" seems to us to be abundance of blessing; and the Lord is himself that place of blessing. But we must never forget that it is God, as revealed in the face of Jesus Christ, who becomes all this to us. Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father?" Through Jesus Christ our Lord all these rivers and streams which make glad the city of God dwell in him, and come to us through him. The light of the knowledge of the glory of God shines forth in Jesus' face; and Jesus said, "If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink." It pleased the Father that in him all fullness should dwell.

Now, one very peculiar thing is said concerning these broad rivers and streams. No galley with oars shall go upon those waters, nor shall any ship with sails pass thereby. Some things in the connection, it seems to us, will show the intent of the Holy Ghost in these words. In verse nineteen Israel is told that they "shall not see a fierce people." In verse twenty-two it is said that the Lord will save us; and here the word "save" simply means "give us safety." In verse twenty-three it is said of the ships that their tacklings were loosed, that the masts could not be strengthened nor the sails spread. The prey of a great spoil should be divided, and the lame should take the prey. The spoil of their enemies should be so abundant that even the lame should take it. Now, from these expressions it seems to us that the galleys with oars and the gallant ships represent all opposing forces brought by enemies against Zion or Jerusalem; and the sentiment of these words is that no foe of any sort should invade the peaceful retreat which the Lord had prepared for his chosen. Nothing shall have power to disturb the blessed abode of saints, nor to mar their joys. No weapon formed against Zion shall prosper. No deadly foe can reach or inflict a wound upon him who dwells in the secret place of the Most High.

Let us not forget that the glorious Lord is our place of retreat. What can harm those whom his love has engaged to defend? Who can come nigh to him? Who has an arm that can reach those who are sheltered near his side? The galleys with oars, propelled by human power, may represent the efforts of men; while the gallant ships may bring to view their pride and vain glory. Be this as it may, nothing that any human power can do can disturb the peace and serenity of the Most High, nor float upon the streams of blessing that issue from the throne of God. These blessings are not for the comfort of human will or human work, but for the humble poor, who have once trod the desert sands, but who now, chastened and humbled, dwell in quiet resting-places.

Whether these galleys and ships come in the guise of friends or foes, there is here no place for them; they cannot enter. This is true, because the Lord is himself our Judge, King and Lawgiver; and he will keep us in safety. If they come in the guise of friendship, professing great love for the Zion of God, they may deceive the simple-minded child of God to his hurt and undoing; but the Lord watches always. He that keeps Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. Here is safety. Because the Lord only makes Israel to dwell in safety, therefore they can lay them down in peace and sleep.

We have thus briefly sketched a little of what has occurred to our mind concerning this delightful theme. We trust that our friend from Illinois, and others also, may be able to trace our meaning, and that it may be found according to truth.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

PROVERBS XXV. 2.

"It is the glory of God to conceal a thing."

Whatever displays the glory of God must be worthy of the most profound attention of all his children. They can be engaged in no higher pursuits, nor aim at anything more lofty, grand or pleasing, than to trace the beams of that unsullied and eternal glory which belongs to God, and which shines forth wherever his works and ways are made known to us his creatures. To be fully satisfied that God is, and that he will be glorified in everything, and that even the wrath of man shall praise him, is pleasant to all who love God, and are the called according to his purpose; but to be instructed by his word and his Spirit how God's glory is to be promoted or displayed in everything, is truly transporting. To secure a revenue of praise and glory to his great name from all beings, things and events must require that he should possess all power and wisdom, and that his government should be absolute and universal; that his pleasure should be done in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. The inquiry of a brother seems to contemplate the question how the glory of God can be involved in concealing a thing, and to this particular point we wish to direct a few remarks by way of reply, hoping that they may be so presented and applied as to lead him, with others, into a train of reflections on the subject which may be profitable and edifying.

There are many exemplifications of the truth of our text to be found in the Scriptures, and also in the experience of all his children; a few only of them we shall be able to notice at this time.

In regard to himself, his infinity, the peculiar mode of his existence, the depth of his infinity, the depth of his wisdom, and the divine harmony of all his attributes, together with the manner and mode of his government in providence and grace, these are all too wonderful for us; and he is glorified in keeping back the face of his throne, and in spreading his cloud upon it.

2. In regard to the hidden glories of his Son, his wonderful and unexampled pedigree, his identity with the Father in the supreme Godhead, and his union of spiritual life with his church, in the mediatorial character which he sustains. God's power is all sufficient to uncover all the mysteries of these things and make them known to all intelligent beings in heaven and earth, if in his wisdom he saw it would promote his glory; but knowing all things, he knows that it is his glory to conceal them. It is true he gives his children some intimation of them by his word and Spirit, and as far as can comport with his glory and their good; but beyond the tendency of a revelation of them to glorify him, he conceals them.

3. The spiritual life of the church is concealed, hid with Christ in God, existing and dwelling in the secret place of the Most High, and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. This secret, Christ, is truly with them that fear him, and he will shew them his covenant; but now they know only in part, so far as it is consistent with the glory of God; but they shall hereafter know even as they are known, and see even as they are seen.

4. The great mystery of redemption. That God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their transgression to them, has been, for the glory of God, concealed and hidden from ages and generations past; and all these things are now hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes, because so it seemed good in the sight of God.

5. The day and the hour of the coming of the Son of man, and of the end of the world, is concealed. No man knoweth it, not even the Son; it is known only to the Father. God's glory is thus protected, and therefore it is that he has concealed the thing.

6. Who are, and who are not, among the sons of men the chosen vessels of his love afore prepared and ordained to glory, is a thing which God for his glory has concealed. The time when, place where, manner and circumstances under which, he has ordained to quicken them and make them manifest in due time, are all perfectly known to God, but concealed from men.

7. All the trials, struggles, temptations, persecutions, losses, crosses and afflictions through which he has ordained each of his children to pass, from the period of their spiritual birth until the consummation of their final glory, is most wisely concealed from them. How little do they know when entering into life, while rejoicing in their first love, of the horrors of darkness, the coldness of affection, the wavering of their faith and confidence in God, that awaits them in their pilgrimage; because the glory of God conceals the thing. If we could know and comprehend all these things in advance, we should not be able to live by faith upon the Son of God; hence for his glory has he ordained that his children shall live and walk by faith, and not by sight.

Abraham went forth at the bidding of God. God had concealed the thing, but we see that all resulted in the glory of God. Elijah thought all the Lord's prophets were slain but himself, because God had concealed from him the reserved multitude. Job was not able to perceive his God, in some of his bitter trials; but James reminds us that we have heard of the patience of Job, and we have seen the end of the Lord. The spouse says of her Beloved, "I sought him, but I could not find him." Thus for his glory in the trial of our faith our eyes are sometimes holden that we cannot see him in his dealings with us. Isaiah says, "Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Savior." No man by searching can find him out; for "This is life eternal, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

"He in the thickest darkness dwells,
Performs his work, the cause conceals;
But, though his methods are unknown,
Judgment and truth support his throne.

In heaven, and earth, and air, and seas,
He executes his firm decrees;
And by his saints it stands confessed,
That what he does is always best."

"Thine essence is a vast abyss,
Which angels cannot sound;
An ocean of infinities,
Where all our thoughts are drown'd.

Reason may grasp the massy hills,
And stretch from pole to pole;
But half thy name our spirits fills,
And overloads the soul."

JOHN XVII. 20.

THE intercession of our adorable Redeemer was not alone for the apostles and primitive saints, but for all that his father had given him. His prayer for them in this chapter was not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they might be preserved from the evil of the world. In the preceding part of the chapter we understand him to be addressing his Father in behalf of the apostles and those disciples which were at that time about to experience most dreadful trial. Not only were they to witness the delivering up into the hands of wicked men their divine Lord, to be insulted, mocked, blasphemed, cruelly scourged and crucified, but they were themselves to be scattered and bitterly persecuted. As he knew the feelings of their infirmities, having been tempted in all points as they are, he was well qualified in that, as in all other respects, to be a merciful and faithful High Priest for them, in things pertaining to God. The great and ultimate desire of our Immanuel was that all his people, including those who had believed and those who had not believed, might all be one, even as he and his Father are one. He in them, and the Father in him, that his people might all be made perfect in one, and that the world might know that the Father had sent him, and that the Father had loved his people as he had loved him. Having, as we have seen, particularly prayed for his disciples unto whom he had given God's word, he says in our text, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me, through their word."

In our understanding of the text the following points are unquestionably established:

1. That the men whom the Father had given him out of the world, mentioned in the sixth verse of this chapter, were perfectly known to him, and those of them who had not yet been made manifest by regeneration were equally with those who had then believed, interested in his intercession and Mediatorial work. He had not to wait the developments of time; for now, when his soul was to be poured out unto death, he saw his seed, prolonged his days, and the pleasure of the Lord prospered in his hand.

2. His certain knowledge that they should all of them ultimately believe on him. Not for them who may, can or will, but "which shall believe on me." In perfect harmony with this sentiment, the inspired apostle says, "But we are bound to give thanks unto God always for you, brethren, beloved of God, because God hath from the beginning chosen you unto salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."

3. The things which he prays for in their behalf are fully expressed in the following adjuncts of the same sentence: "That they may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may know that thou hast sent me." Here we observe that while Christ establishes the unity of the Godhead and of its fullness in unity with him in his Mediatorial oneness with his mystical body, the church, asserting as he has often done, that he and the Father are one, he also uses the plural pronoun "us;" "that they may be one in us;" showing conclusively that he was not only the Word which was with God, but also the Word which was God; and equally clear that he was not only the Word which was God, but also the Word which was with God. That their oneness was and should be in that life which was hid with Christ in God.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to enclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

of the heavenly." O what wondrous love, that would embrace such as we are, by nature children of wrath, the sons and daughters of the earthly head, and manifest them according to the covenant of his grace, as sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty; that through rich and reigning grace we should bear the image of Jesus. O, my dear brother, what evidence have I that I do truly bear the image or likeness of the heavenly? I cannot be satisfied to know that when the sorrows of this life are ended I shall be like my living Head. I want some of the fruits now. My heart's desire is that I may manifest some of the Christ-life while tabernacling here below. I want that clean heart, that right spirit. I want that heavenly knowledge, that living faith, and to exhibit it in my every day walk; that I may honor him who has called me by his grace, and render my body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto him that loved me and gave himself for me; for if Christ hath redeemed me from sin, death and hell, it was not that I was any better by nature than Cain or Judas. "According to his mercy he saved us," as Paul said. If I know anything about the matter it is in that way; yes, grace abounding to the chief of sinners; and because of this I want to glorify God in my body and in my spirit, which are his. But from whence cometh this desire? Cometh it from the earthly? Surely not. There is my trouble. My carnal reasoning powers, the wisdom of the flesh, is as vain as it ever was, and from thence cometh wars and fightings. With the flesh I yet serve the law of sin, but with the mind I myself serve the law of God. Therefore it is only in the Spirit we can serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. "He that hath the Son hath life." Only in that life can we walk uprightly, or our desires be unto that end. O that I could manifest more of the Christ-life. I daily realize such a sense of coming short in everything that is good and commendable, so that I become weary of life, and wonder sometimes what the end will be. Yes, it remains a truth with me yet that "I am a stranger here below,

And what I am 'tis hard to know;
I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

Tell me, is it thus with you? But may I not hope that when the conflict is ended, when the battles of this life in the flesh are over, when hope in fruition is swallowed up, I will not only bear the image, but be wholly like my risen Lord? Yes, see him as he is, and be like him; this mortal put on immortality, and this corruptible put on incorruption; all through God's eternal love, grace and mercy, given as in Christ Jesus before the world was.

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

May grace reign, ever reign in our hearts.

Brother and sister Bolt, I received your letters in due time, and they should have been answered before this. I heartily concur with you in your views of the old and new covenants, and was comforted in reading your excellent letters; comforting and encouraging to a poor pilgrim like me. Please accept this, if you can make anything out of it, as a token of abiding fellowship and love in the Lord. With love to the household of faith which is among you, and with an humble hope in Jesus, I remain yours in gospel bonds,

P. W. SAWIN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 21, 1896.

MY DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—

Even you have to suffer in your turn from some of the diseases to which the flesh is heir. Edna has told us of both you and sister Jenkins' suffering with "La Grippe." There are multitudinous diseases which attack us, and cause us to suffer, in our every day natural existence, and a cause might be ascribed to each one. But whatever the direct cause may be, it is always secondary; and if we trace back to ascertain the primary cause of all disease, we must go all the way back to the garden wherein dwelt our first parents, and by whose disobedience sin entered into the world, and death by sin, which is the primary cause of all disease. Sometimes we ask this foolish question, or wonder in our minds about it, "What would have been the condition of things now, had sin not entered into the world?" I can remember a time in my life (but it was before I had a hope) when I sincerely regretted that Eve did partake of the forbidden fruit. But now I can say that I feel to rejoice that sin made its bow to the world and entered therein; and I also rejoice that I am a sinner; for it was sinners (and none others) that Jesus came to save. Any bodily sickness that overtakes us is a deviation from the normal condition of health, and is caused by a violation of the strict laws of nature; and if we knew how to keep those laws inviolate we need not be sick. We do not want to suffer, but we simply do not know how to do the things that we would. The curse of sin is within us, and round about us, upon every hand, ready (as an arch enemy) to attack us from every point. In the reproduction of the human family, disease germs are handed down from generation to generation. Even the ground, with all animate creation, is under the curse, and thereby subject to death. Every living thing is at the same time a dying thing; and whenever the process of decay overbalances the great natural system of repair, then sickness and all manner of disease sets in. How utterly helpless we are, creatures of circumstance, whether adverse or favorable. Finite in mind, wanting and incapable in body; and could we look no higher than our earthly surroundings we would indeed be as a ship having lost its rudder. In other words, if all our hopes ended with this life, we would be miserable indeed. With all the suffering which we endure in a natural way, from natural sources, the natural man is not conscious of the origin of the pain that afflicts him; therefore he is just as apt to rain down anathemas upon his luck, his fate or his carelessness, as he is to patiently bear it. Whatever conception of sin he may have, he thinks of it only in its outbreking manifestations; and if he has been a moral, inoffensive man, he will say, I have committed no overt act; I have not sinned; I have kept the commandments; I have nothing to fear; I deserve no punishment. But how different when the poor soul becomes conscious of his guilt, every point of the whole law crying out against him, and bringing him under condemnation. He falls into such a bed of soul-sickness that it is indeed unto death, the anguish of which is far beyond any bodily suffering that he is called upon to endure. This also is an experience of time; and it, too, is an outgrowth of that death which has its origin in sin, but is wrought out by an experience of grace in the heart; and as time goes on it finds its fulfillment in the perfect righteousness of Christ; for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness. The finished work on Calvary is the healing medicine of the great Physician; and now the delivered captive experiences another kind of sickness, which is no more painful, but delightful; for he can say, with the bride to her well Beloved, "He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love. Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am sick of love." What a wonderful transition, the coming out of darkness into the marvellous light of God's matchless love. "Sick of love." This is the "perfect love that casteth out fear." While natural sickness is an abnormal deviation from the standard of the perfect work of God in the creature, this delightful "sickness" is the supernatural result of the onward current of "the pure river of life," accomplishing the perfect work of God's salvation, in perfect health to the mind that joyfully serves the law of God; looking to Jesus, the author and finisher of that faith which has its full fruition in love, joy, peace and a clear understanding that the back is turned upon the world, with all the hopes and ambitions and desires centered upon Jesus, our heavenly Lover, the High Priest of our profession, the King of saints and the Captain of our salvation, whose delight is toward the sons of men, and the midst of whose chariot is "paved with love for the daughters of Jerusalem." To-day one may be so busy in his every day affairs of life that the hint at an hour's suspension of business could not be thought of; but to-morrow sickness lays its claim upon him, the unfinished affairs of yesterday are left untouched, and his whole time and his whole being are absorbed in the contemplation of the most important condition of his life—his health. Now, brother Jenkins, I consider these natural phenomena a type of the christian experience, which led the bride to exclaim, "For I am sick of love." She labors ceaselessly all through the long, dark night under the law, never for a moment thinking of rest from the weary and hopeless labors. But when by the morning light she beholds the coming of her Beloved, the burden of every care is lifted, all work is suspended, and now the whole mind and the whole being is absorbed in the one great object of life. There are no eyes, no ears, no heart, for anything save the holy, heavenly Lover, and upon him every affection of the heart is centered. This is being "sick of love." But I must stop at once, for I may need your forbearance some other time.

With love to yourself and sister Jenkins, from us all, I am unworthily yours,

B. F. COULTER.

FAITH.

"AND what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah," &c.—Heb. xi. 32.

The apostle devoted this chapter to the subject of faith, and a wonderful chapter it is, showing the nature and effects and the triumph and glory of the sublime, heaven-born principle of faith, which is the gift of God. The apostle has been presenting the witnesses who were called upon the stage of action to testify and exhibit the power and faithfulness of God in his exceeding precious promises.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." When faith comes, belief follows; for no man can believe without faith; and when faith comes he cannot help but believe; neither has he any inclination not to believe. How wonderful under all circumstances does this faith work by love, purify the heart, and overcome the world. It enables God's people to overcome difficulties, surmount obstacles, and move mountains. It was when Israel was led by faith that the mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs. We have yet to note an instance where living, gospel faith has failed to accomplish the will of the Giver, in Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Moses. These characters were witnesses of God. It was the same in the prophets; and from the fact that this is one faith, it had the same effect upon the apostles and elders, and the saints in the days of the apostles; and may we not contend for the same faith having the same effect? Now, as this faith reed mountains of difficulty, has it the same effect to-day that it always had? By faith the ancients subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, stopped the mouths of the ungodly, waxed valiant in fight; and would fail to enumerate the glorious deeds of this faith. By the power of this faith they were able to deny themselves, take up their cross, and contend for the truth of the gospel, in those dark, corrupt ages in which they lived.

At the beginning of the next chapter the apostle says, "Wherefore, though we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and sin which doth so easily beset us, let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." When we take into consideration all the troubles with which we are surrounded, the clouds and darkness through which we are called to pass, how needful is all this admonition, lest we faint and fall and be discouraged by the way. When we have the power of this faith, and it has been accomplished by it, we will not run and hope to be successful in the race, this warfare in which we are engaged, the temptations to encounter, the fight of afflictions, the armies of the aliens, the fiery furnaces, the dangers against which we are set on every side? For we wrestle against the actual wickedness in high places; the promise of victory is ours. Faith strengthens us to go forth in the great struggle, the fight of faith against unbelief. Jesus said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove." "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you." The Syrophenician woman had such faith, which enabled her to scale the wall of Jewish prejudice, and come to the Savior; and when he said it was not meet to give the children's bread to dogs, she admitted it, but pleaded for the dogs to eat the crumbs which fell from the Master's table. Faith humbles us before God, and enables us to see what we are. It also discovers to us the majesty and goodness of God. Faith enabled the woman with an issue, all thin and pale and weak, to press on into the presence of Jesus, and touch the hem of his garment, and receive the healing virtue which flows from Jesus; and with fear and trembling she honored him who bestowed the favor. The faith in the centurion brought him to Jesus to ask a favor of him; and when Jesus told him to go down to his house, the centurion said, "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority," &c. He saw Jesus above all Roman authority and power, and discovered him in his sublime majesty as King of kings and Lord of lords, and knew that his own authority was nothing compared with that of Jesus. Jesus cursed the fig tree, and his disciples saw it and wondered. He says, "Have faith in God." Like one of old I say, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." "Lord, increase our faith." Truly we may pray and sing,

"O for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe;

That will not murmur nor complain
Beneath the chastening rod,
But in the hour of grief and pain
Will lean upon its God:

A faith that shines more bright and clear
When tempests rage without;
And when in danger feels no fear,
In darkness knows no doubt.

Lord, give us such a faith as this,
And when our time shall come,
We'll taste e'en here the hallowed bliss
Of an eternal home."

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BROTHER BEEBE:—Our old, faithful members are one after another being called home.

Died—At her late residence near Petersburg, Del., on Thursday, April 23d, 1896, Mrs. Letitia Gruwell, in the 82d year of her age.

She was the widow of Deacon John Gruwell, who had gone to his reward several years ago. I have known that place for about forty years as one of the most kind and hospitable places within the bounds of my acquaintance. Very many will remember this Baptist home as a place of spiritual as well as temporal comfort. Sister Gruwell was baptized in September, 1836, by Elder Peter Meredith, and her long and faithful life has been spent in humble and steadfast devotion to the old Cow Marsh Church. The time lacks but a few weeks of sixty years. Her conversation and deportment were of that exemplary kind to adorn her profession and be an honor to the church. For some years she had been quite feeble, and unable to attend our church appointments; but it was very pleasant to visit and converse with her at her home. Two sons and one daughter survive her, who are following steadfastly in the footsteps of their parents. I share fully with them this bereavement.

Your brother,

E. RITTENHOUSE.

STATE ROAD, Del., April 29, 1896.

DIED—At her home near Liberty, Sullivan Co., N. Y., on Sunday, Dec. 22d, 1895, Mrs. Caroline Seely, wife of Mr. W. H. Seely, and daughter of the late James Linkletter, aged 54 years, 2 months and 28 days.

Mrs. Seely had been a great sufferer from sciatica rheumatism, and had been confined to her home for many months. Although she had not made a public profession of her faith, she had confessed to some of her friends that she had long entertained a hope in the mercy of God, and was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, as contended for by the Old School Baptists.

Mrs. Seely is survived by her husband and one son; also by one brother and two sisters, Mr. Charles Linkletter, of Middletown, N. Y., Mrs. James C. Seely, of Paterson, N. J., and Mrs. Decatur Carmichael, of Washingtonville, N. Y. One sister, Mrs. Mary A. Carey, died on March 22d, just nine months before.

The funeral services were held in the Old School Baptist meeting-house in Middletown, N. Y., and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins: after which her mortal remains were laid away in the cemetery of the Brookfield Church, on Tuesday, Dec. 24th.—Ed.

DIED—Feb. 17th, 1896, at her home in Haverhill, Mass., sister Fannie M. Noyes, aged 38 years, 1 month and 16 days.

Our dear sister for a number of years had been a person of delicate health, and was quite a sufferer in her frail house of clay; but the Lord our Redeemer has now released her from the sufferings of this life, to dwell in bliss with the Savior on high.

Our sister united with the church in North Berwick, Maine, and was baptized by Elder Wm. Quint, in October, 1878. A letter written by her in 1879, signed by her maiden name, Fannie M. Ham, containing her testimony of the Lord's work of grace in her heart, I have sent with this for publication. Our sister leaves to mourn their loss her kind husband and little girl, and other relatives. At her funeral the unworthy writer preached from Revelation xxi. 23-27.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HASKELL, Texas, Jan. 23, 1887.

BROTHER S. H. DURAND:—I suppose you will be surprised to hear from so remote a section of the country as this, and especially from one you never heard of before. You wrote in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of January 15th, under the heading, "But ye are come to mount Zion." Now, my brother, there is nothing I ever heard or read that does me more good than to hear of the wonderful workings of God's amazing mercy and love being made manifest to his people. Your views in the article seem to be so in accord with my own views that I feel encouraged to give you a history of what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me. God's people are made to wonder, and to adopt the language of the poet, "Amazing grace!" I have been reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for thirty years. I have often thought I would write to brother Beebe on the same subject, but being no scholar I have hesitated to write for the public gaze. Now, brother Durand, to speak of that amazing grace, and of how it was revealed to me, shall be my chief aim.

In the early part of my life my father lived in Union County, Illinois, and my uncle Francis West had the care of a small church of which my father and mother were members. I often went with them to meeting, although young. I often had serious thoughts about my eternal destiny. At the age of fourteen years I dreamed a dream which has ever been fresh in my memory. For several long years there was an increasing desire to know my eternal doom; but like all natural minded men I thought there was something for me to do, and I thought if I rejected or neglected to do that something that it would result in my eternal condemnation; so I began to make promises to God; but alas! I only made them to be broken, and soon found myself lying to God. This only increased my pain. When my father and mother would go to a neighbor's house to spend the day I would take advantage of their absence and read the Scriptures, always using great care to lay the book back exactly as I found it, for I would not have them know that I read the Scriptures. This, no doubt, was mortifying to their feelings, but such was my nature.

In 1845 my father and family moved to Montgomery County, Arkansas, then a new country. I would often say to my mother, "Now, mother, I want to start early in the morning for hunting," and she never failed to give me all the assistance I wanted to get off early. I would go to bed, but only to lay there and try to pray to God for mercy. O how little did my dear old father and mother think that I was struggling under such a load of guilt. When morning would come I would start for the mountains, not with any expectation of killing deer, for the truth was I was hunting for the most secret place I could find, and such was my nature that I wanted no mortal eye to see me nor ear to hear me. This was in the fall of 1850. There was to be a camp-meeting held some four miles distant, and I determined to attend it, for I found no promise in the Scriptures that I thought I was entitled to. The time came and I went, in the hope that I might learn something for my relief. There was considerable of a revival, and many went to the mourners' bench, and several professed religion. The preacher said, "Make up your mind, come to God, exercise faith, and he will immediately bless you." I had been trying to come for a long time, but it looked to me like I was getting farther off from God all the time; and as for exercising faith, I had been trying to do that; but I know now that faith was not in me to exercise. I am sure that I exercised all the powers that were in me, but all to no avail. One evening after the services I formed a resolution that when darkness came and the fires were kindled that I would steal off from my comrades in the darkness of the night and spend the night in prayer to God for mercy. I thought I could do this, and that nobody would have an idea of the state of my mind. Night came on, and the bright lights were kindled all over the camp ground. The time for me to go had come, and I started. It was now quite dark, and when I got about a quarter of a mile from the camp ground I heard the voices of some young men I knew, and I at once turned out of the road, for I had no desire to talk to the dearest friend on earth. This was a very heavy timbered country, but I made my way through the darkness until I came to a small mound. Instead of falling on my knees here as I had thought I would do, I dropped down with my breast across a small log, to try to pray; but if ever a poor soul was left to himself I surely was. Finally I changed my position, and lay with my arms extended at full length on either side, and looking upward. While in this position I was thinking over my awful condition, when all at once if two words with lightning speed had come in contact with each other it seems to me that the sound could not have been louder, and it seemed to me that the brightest kind of a light shone all around. I was as helpless as a child. I could not move hand or foot. I felt myself lying on the very brink of eternal ruin, and felt that in a few more moments I would sink down into an awful hell where hope and mercy could never reach me. I know I fully believed it; yet I had but one prayer, and that was from the very depths of my soul. I cried, "Lord, have mercy on me, a sinner." It is as great a prayer as I ever made in my life, and it suits me yet. There was a space of time that I was dead to all worldly concerns. I am confident that a hundred men could have walked around me and I would have known nothing about it. All glory to the name of Jesus, my Savior, the first thing I knew, instead of falling into the awful hell as I verily believed I would, I fell into the embrace of the crucified Redeemer. It seemed like I was raised to my feet almost without an exertion. I clapped my hands and thanked my God. I tell you, my brother, I wondered how it was that I was out of hell. I felt as light as a feather. My first thought was to run and tell them all what the Lord had done for my soul. Now the brush was not a bit in my way, and when I struck the big road I nearly flew to the camp-ground. I lost all control of myself, and came near running over the sacramental table. My shame was all gone now, and I felt like I wanted the world to know what the Lord had done for my poor soul. Next morning I was still calm, and a very homely man came up to me and took me by the hand, and really I thought he was the most pleasant looking man I ever saw. I loved everybody. The people, the trees, the earth, the elements, and everything my eyes beheld, seemed to be praising the God of heaven. I had no idea that I ever would see any more trouble on earth. It was now about nine o'clock, and my father had come from home, and I reckon that my mother had told him what had happened. I saw the old gray headed man coming toward me, and my very bosom swelled. He took me by the hand, and in a trembling voice said, "My son, do you think you are bettered by coming here?" I made out to tell him that I thought I was.

I must close.

S. J. PRESTON.

HASKELL, Texas, June 17, 1887.

BROTHER DURAND:—In my letter to you of January 23d my paper gave out and I stopped rather suddenly. Now, in compliance with your request, I will try to tell you something more of my experience since 1850. I believe I had come to where my father came to me and asked me if I thought I was bettered by coming to the camp-meeting, and I told him I thought I was. Every day and every night the preacher called for mourners. Many went forward, and some professed religion, but poor me could never get my consent to go to the mourners' bench. I felt to be one of the worst sinners on earth, and I wanted to be entirely alone, where no mortal could see me. Jesus says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." But in my case, if I ever knew anything about it, it was when I was by myself in the woods, and in the night. When lying prostrate on the ground, more helpless than a child, and the last gleam of hope fading away, then it was that the love of God came teeming into my soul to that degree that I shall never be able to tell it.

My father spoke very kindly to me, and said, "If it be your choice to join these people do not let me be any barrier, for there is no Primitive Baptist Church in this country." My reply to him was that I had read the Scriptures but little, and I believed I would read them more for myself before I joined any church. He then recommended me to do so. Soon after this there was a Primitive Baptist Church constituted in the neighborhood, and I became a regular attendant, and read the Scriptures daily. The church seemed to be doing well for a space of time, but at last they had two preachers, and they differed on what I thought was a small matter. This put everything in confusion for about three years before it was finally settled, so I did not join the church until October, 1861. Since 1861 I have had many pleasant seasons, and have had many heart rending trials. I was once turned out of the church for earnestly contending against the grange in the church. I moved immediately into western Texas, about ten years ago. I have been told by different ones that the grange party rescinded the act of turning me with eight or nine others out of the church. I understand that the church in the main has abandoned the grange party; but he who was our pastor at that time still stands by himself, with a small church he has collected, but they are barred from the fellowship of the association. We have no Primitive Baptist Church in this part of the country, and but one Primitive Baptist man besides myself in the town of Haskell. I wrote to brother Nathan Morris a few years ago, an able minister of Mississippi, and he came two hundred and fifty miles, and remained with us a week. This was certainly a feast to me.

Now, my brother, I have given you some relation of my experience for many years. I have long since found out that if a man has firm and fixed principles he will come in contact with opposition. All this world with its so-called churches seems to be drifting in the same direction. It makes me think of the great leviathan that Job spoke of. They are as scales that cover up the whole body of corruption. I know that this is strong language, but to me it is clear. I know, or at least I believe, that there were as full blooded Jews born in Babylon as were ever born in Jerusalem; and there is just as much of a Babylon now, in a spiritual sense, as there ever was, or else the Lord would not have said, "Come out of her, my people." I honestly believe there are thousands of people misled and wandering in the streets of Babylon; but the Lord knoweth them that are his.

Now, brother Durand, write when you can. All the preaching I get comes through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.

S. J. PRESTON.

BRUSH PRAIRIE, Wash., Nov. 5, 1895.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE:—It has been quite a number of years since I wrote to you. Some ten years ago I wrote to you and tried to tell you something of what I hoped the Lord had done for poor me. Since that time I wrote to you for your book of "Meditations on portions of the Word," and also for Mary Parker's book. I have read both with great delight. I have the book of Editorials written by Elder Gilbert Beebe. This man was raised up at a time when he was most needed, and was a David in his day. At about one throw he settled the biggest giants the Arminians could bring against him. He was gifted in the defense of the truth, and also in explaining the Scriptures. I also have Coffee's history of the Baptists, Hassell's church history, and the biography of Elder Wilson Thompson. From these, with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and my Bible, I believe I get more truth than the whole of the city of Portland does from their dandy clergy or their fine haired preachers, who live sumptuously every day. I sometimes feel very lonely, as there are none but Arminians all around me. I tell them that in the matter of eternal salvation they have nothing to do it in. Then they say, "If I believed as you do I would do just as I please." Now, my brother, they may talk about their free moral agency, their good works, and the virtue of their prayers, but I do not believe that a man or a combination of men and women will ever exert an influence on Almighty God that will cause him to do a thing that he would not have done.

Brother Durand, when I sat down to write I thought I would order Mary Parker's book and quit, but you see where I have gone to. Please excuse me. I am old and afflicted, and the charms of this world are past with me.

S. J. PRESTON.

HAZLETTVILLE, Del.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—The inclosed letter was written to me by my son, at my request, not with any intention for publication, but for my own satisfaction. I take the liberty to submit it to you, without his knowledge. Do as you think best in regard to publishing.

In love to yourself and family, I am, I hope, your brother, though unworthy,

B. C. CUBBAGE.

1922 N. 31st St., PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

MY DEAR FATHER:—You asked me to write to you on the subject of your last letter, namely, Lazarus, Martha and Mary. But am I capable of writing to you on such a subject? I do not feel that I am, for I do not feel to have any special understanding about it. I sometimes feel like writing on certain things, but at such times I have usually some definite idea, which is at least satisfactory enough to me to mention to whomsoever I am writing; but when asked especially to give my views on a certain subject, it seems to put what few ideas I may have in the background.

By looking in the inspired record we find that Martha and Mary are spoken of before Lazarus; also, that Martha comes first.—Luke x. 38-40. "Now it came to pass, as they went, that he entered into a certain village; and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house. And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet and heard his word. But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me," &c. I also believe, as you said, that every word spoken and every step taken by our Savior was for the accomplishment of the will of God, according to his all-wise purpose in Jesus Christ before the foundation of the world. But many of his sayings no one member of his body will understand in this world; but there are many things that we do know and understand, and that, too, in the same manner as it was revealed unto Mary, while she sat at his feet. There is one thing, in that which the Old School Baptists call religion, that is very beautiful; in fact, everything that we by the eye of faith can behold; but what was in my mind was this: we hear each other speak of a certain Scripture, and the question is asked, "Can we not see in this the experience of God's people?" The answer is, "Yes," if we see further than with the natural understanding; for we know by experience that the Bible is worth nothing to us spiritually, if taken naturally, or with the natural understanding. Suppose I should say, Naturally the reading of the Bible is a comfort to me spiritually. You can readily see that this is a misnomer. But to return. When we take some of these certain passages of Scriptures and try to trace out the experience of God's people, if given an understanding of them we are taken back first of all to the time when an interest was awakened in us of these very things, and ere we get far along the road we find ourselves where the sinner is yet entangled in the meshes of the law; and here is where we find Martha. That which I spoke of just preceding is this, that when the question is asked, "Can we see the experience of God's people in this?" and we are thus taken back in our experience, it would seem to an uninterested party that so much repetition of how a poor sinner is quickened into life, and finally freed from the bondage of the law, and delivered into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, would become monotonous. To God's people, who have been quickened into life, and who understand, even though in a very small part, to them it is ever new, to see and understand the experience of God's people depicted in whatever Scripture may be quoted; for it is also the experience of Christ. And if we see Christ and him crucified on every page of the Bible, it is food for the hungry soul. None but a hungry soul ever saw him, and none ever saw him but to behold the Word of God, and feed upon it, and learn at his feet. Martha had received Jesus into her house, but was cumbered about much serving; which expression, to my mind, means the serving of the sinner under the law, prior to the time that they are ready to sit at Jesus' feet and hear his word and learn of him, as Mary did. The word "cumbered" means overburdened, and in one definition, something that is useless. Anything that is a bondage, or a burden, or useless, in connection with the experience of God's people, does not come under the expression of the apostle, "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all," &c. Here is a freedom spoken of in connection with our mother, the church; but that freedom is not ours until we are permitted to be numbered as a member of her. When this is our privilege, we are no more under law to serve dead works, but we are under law to God to serve in newness of Spirit. We are no longer cumbered by much serving. But if we undertake to apply the three characters in the way you spoke of in your letter, shall we not have to stop before entering the church, and consider Mary's position? But before doing so I will say concerning the fortieth verse, that I cannot see anything in it especially, further than that it is a representation of the complete unrest of the sinner in the wilderness, while he is continually striving to fulfill the law's demands. These are the many things that she is troubled about, which Jesus speaks of in verse forty-one. "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things." I feel that the answer is almost the same that it was to Peter when he asked, "And what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." His further answer to Martha was, "But one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Now, what is this good part, which is also spoken of as a choice? Can we not see it as a more advanced stage of the child's experience, when in his dire extremity and utter helplessness he falls prostrate at the feet of Jesus, and cries, "Lord, when thou comest into thy kingdom remember me." The answer is, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." He hears the words of Jesus, and learns of him just as Mary did. He hath chosen that good part, because Christ hath chosen him unto salvation. The love and mercy of God constrains him to bow low at the feet of Jesus, and receive and partake of the water of life freely, which good part shall not be taken away from him. He is now past that condition where he is cumbered by much serving, having received and tasted of the good word of God, by which he is enabled to say, "Salvation is of the Lord." He is enabled to look away from self to Jesus, and there is a lodging place in his heart for the following Scripture, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Mary is the character that this Scripture applies to. Jesus says his burden is light; but a little while ago we found Martha troubled about many things; her burden was not light; but it becomes light when we can designate her as Mary sitting at the feet of Jesus and hearing his word. Well, where does Lazarus come in to fill up a part of this experience? I remember that you put his case at the first part; but if we try to apply the condition or experience of all three of them to one of God's people, it comes to me that it really belongs to that part where we have passed from death unto life, and that the grave clothes are really the fetters of the flesh still holding the individual from the privileges of the church; and the command to loose him and let him go is to receive him into the church; thus taking off the grave clothes, and extending to him the fellowship of the church, with all her privileges; for in the following chapter we read that they made a supper for the Lord, and Martha served; but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him; and Mary anointed his feet, &c. Martha is still serving; Mary is still at his feet; but Lazarus is now sitting at the table with Jesus, which we are not allowed to do until we have experienced all the other, and have been received into the church, with all her privileges granted unto us, one of which is, eating and communing with our Lord and Master. Now, father, this may not be the correct interpretation of this Scripture, but it is the way that it seems to come to me. If you simply confine Lazarus' case alone to the experience of God's people, then I have no objection whatever to the way you applied the grave clothes to the fetters of the law, holding us in the condition of Martha, that is, cumbered by much serving, until such time as it pleases God to speak the words by his Son, "Loose him and let him go." I think there are many passages of Scripture that can correctly be interpreted as teaching more than one stage or condition of the experience of the Lord's people, and I feel satisfied that the subject of this letter is one of them.

Hoping that what I have written may be in accord with the truth, and that you may profit by it, I am, as ever, your son,

MANY CALLED, BUT FEW CHOSEN.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST JESUS:—By your permission I will comply the best I can with the request of our much beloved and esteemed brother Chick, which occurs in the SIGNS for January 26, current volume. I have not the slightest knowledge of what brother Chick wrote on this text in his former articles; but if I have gleaned his views from what he has written in this, I fully concur with him; hence it shall be my aim to write in harmony with the general idea which he has conveyed.

This text, I believe, occurs twice in the sacred writings, and each time in Matthew; first, Matt. xx. 16; second, Matt. xxii. 14. I am of the opinion that each of these texts mean one and the same thing, and that the narratives with which they are connected, with other similar narratives, have direct reference to the end of the law dispensation, the temple worship. By reading Matt. xxii. 1-4, we learn that Matthew calls the gospel fullness a dinner; that is, a wedding dinner, which was made on the occasion of the marriage of the king's son. Luke, in reference to the same thing, calls it a supper—"a great supper."—Luke xiv. 16. John, in the Revelation, calls it a supper, saying, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."—Rev. xix. 9. So, taking all these things into consideration, we must believe that the gospel dispensation with its blessed fullness is here brought to view under the idea of a supper—a great supper; and a great supper indeed it is to poor, hungry, thirsty starving souls; as it is said in the prophecy of Isaiah, "And it shall come to pass in that day [gospel day], that the great trumpet [gospel trumpet] shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria," &c.—Isa. xxvii. 13. This figure or illustration is drawn from the common method of eating, or of the meals of the day. Supper is the third and last meal of the day. After supper people retire to rest until the morning. In the morning they awake and arise to enjoy a new day; therefore these illustrations vividly illustrate the great supper, "a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined."—Isa. xxv. 6. The gospel blessings with its fullness seems to me to be the third and last dispensation, or the end of all things, of all the legal services, or temple worship, which, when ended, those chosen ones were brought into the banqueting-house, to feast upon the rich provisions of gospel grace, and bask in the love of their dear Redeemer; for the banner over them is love. And when supper is ended, this glorious feast ended here in this world of toils and tears, all of the Lord's people will awake in the likeness of Jesus, and see him as he is. We shall not all sleep (that is, not all be buried), but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (who are not buried) shall be changed; that is, we shall be immortalized in a moment. Then no wonder John would say, "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is [now] come, and his wife hath made herself ready." "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—Rev. xix. 7, 8.

Here I will say that I fully agree with brother Chick that these texts with their narratives do not allude to election, that is, to God's eternal choice of his people, before the world was; neither do I believe that this marriage has reference to the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; when Christ was, before the world, according to the covenant of redemption, the Surety and covenant head of the election of grace, or heirs of promise. But, as I have said, it was at the end of the law dispensation, when those few chosen ones who were ready, who had oil in their vessels, were espoused to Christ, the Lamb of God, in gospel ordinances. "For the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," and, being ready, she went in with him; and the door was shut. Hence, "many be called, but few chosen." Doubtless all those virgins were called into the legal services, both the wise and the foolish ones; some at the first, some at the third, some at the sixth, some at the ninth, and some at the eleventh hour; yet there were but few of them ready, with oil in their vessels, and those few were recognized as the bride, the Lamb's wife, who had made herself ready; therefore it was granted unto her that she should be arrayed (clothed) in fine linen, &c. I do not understand by their being equally divided in the parable, five wise, and five foolish, that God's people nationally or in the Jewish church were equally divided in individual numbers, but equal in class numbers, believers and unbelievers; and those who believed on him, even them that believed on his name, were chosen to go in with Christ into this marriage supper, or gospel liberty; they were ready. At the end of the law dispensation "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power [liberty] to become the sons of God. * * * Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—John i. 11-14. These are the ones that were ready; these are the ones that were chosen; and power was given them to become the sons of God, in the glorious gospel liberty, where they were enabled to show forth the praises of him who called them out of darkness into his marvelous light. Then well might John again say, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." The word "called," in the text, is equivalent to the word chosen in the texts under consideration; for it is very discriminating: called "unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." The text is, "Many be called, but few are chosen." The same as to say, Many are called unto legal services under the law, but few are chosen or called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. These had on the wedding garment, or, more properly, were clothed with the wedding garment, fine linen, clean and white; and the same line of thought extends down through this nineteenth chapter of Revelation. At the fourteenth verse it says, "And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean." Those few who were following the Captain of their salvation on white horses, clothed with fine linen, white and clean, are the chosen ones who went into the marriage supper. These were clothed with the righteousness of Christ, purity of doctrine, with a holy conversation and godly conduct. These are they that sung a new song before the throne (the great white throne), and before the four beasts and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women (antichrist), for they are virgins—wise virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb.—Rev. xiv. 3, 4. These followed the Lamb on white horses through the law dispensation, clothed with the righteousness of Christ, the garment of salvation, the wedding garment, singing the song of salvation, the song of deliverance: not only the song of Moses, the servant of God, but the song of the Lamb, saying, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."—Rev. xv. 3. To those foolish virgins, or unbelieving Jews, Christ was a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense. They stumbled at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.—1 Peter ii. 8, 9. God does not call on his people to come out of darkness, but calls them out; neither can his people show forth his praises until he calls them out of darkness; and their showing forth his praises is not in order to, but because of, their deliverance; hence, many be called, but few are chosen. "For I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."—Luke xiv. 24.

MATTHEW XXI. 12-14.

"AND Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, and said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves. And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them."

The same narrative is recorded in Mark xi. 15-17, in Luke xix. 45, 46, and in John ii. 13-17. There are some verbal differences in these narratives, but the substance is the same. Sister Mary I. Longshore, of Condit, Ohio, has asked our views upon the above Scripture, and we feel like endeavoring to respond.

Jesus came not only to preach peace, but also righteousness. He came not only to comfort, heal and encourage, but also to pronounce judgment. Though he moved among his disciples in humble, lowly guise, yet now and then they caught glimpses of his hidden glory; and so also his judgment was hidden in the main from men, but now and then awful words of condemnation proceeded from his lips, and mighty deeds proclaimed his divine power to judge and to execute his judgment. The above record tells us of one of those times in his ministry.

He had just come to Jerusalem for the last time. It was a visit full of contrasts. He entered it amid the hosannas of the multitude, who hailed him as coming in the name of the Lord, and cast palm branches in his way. He went out of it soon to Calvary amid the execrations of the same multitude; but now he came amid their praises, and the multitude said, "This is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth." But their praise was carnal, as well as the cry which shortly arose to release Barabbas and crucify him. They were as ignorant of the true character of Jesus when they praised him as they were when they condemned him. Their praises were of no more value in his view than were their reproaches. The one was no more to his true honor than the other. Carnality is never acceptable to God, and least of all when its language is that of praise. They praised and honored Jesus because they thought he was what he was not, and that he came to do what he was not given to do. When the truth began to appear, then they hated both it and him.

Having come to Jerusalem, he went into the temple. It was the place for worship. God had so ordained. It was, as he said, the house for prayer to all nations. Jesus was born in Israel. As one with Israel in his human life, he also worshiped in the temple. He observed all that God required in the temple service. He had a zeal for God. He loved the courts of the Lord's house. He held the commandments of God in honor; and so he went into the temple.

The temple was a house of prayer. Its one design was for worship; but this design had been perverted. It had been turned into a place of merchandise. Men had brought lambs and doves to sell to those who desired to offer sacrifice within the holy precincts of the temple itself. The tables of those who changed money for a reward were also there. Instead of the voice of prayer and singing, was the voice of barter for money-getting. Instead of the solemn quiet and hush suited to the place, there was the clamor and noise of trade. Instead of the solemn reverence of humble-hearted worshipers, who came to the temple to pay their vows and offer praise, violence of speech and loud irreverence were to be heard all around. It is sure that trade was not permitted within the holy place at all; and if any man could thus encroach there, it was sure that there could be no spirit of prayer in him. They had no thought of worship. Their whole spirit, as well as conduct, was foreign to the design of the place.

Jesus cast them out, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of those who sold doves. One evangelist says that he made a scourge of small cords and drove them out. How was it that one could compel so many? If miraculous power were shown, why did it not attract more wonder on the part of those who saw it? These questions are not answered. We can only know that here was a display of his power. In the eyes of men he was weak, but all power was his in heaven and in earth. He can and does compel the obedience of all his creatures. Was there not here also a sense of guilt upon their part? They knew that they were violating the house of God, and desecrating its courts. We may suppose many reasons why they fled before this one man, and why there seemed to be so little wonder aroused, but we can be sure of no more than the narrative contains.

Jesus said, "It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." The word "thief" here is very strong. It means more than ordinary thieving. It means here robbing, plundering. From this we learn that they had not only turned the house of God into a place of merchandise, but in addition did not follow their merchandising honestly. This was as might have been expected. When men have so little regard for the house of prayer, we may expect that they will have but little regard also for honesty and fair dealing. A man who, under cover of a zeal for the house of God, will yet violate the whole law and spirit of the place, if occasions offer, will also religiously rob his fellow-men, and all under a pretense of zeal for godliness. The occupation of these men was not in itself wrong, but they brought the love of worldly gain to the very portals of the place which was intended to be above and beyond a sordid world; and as they prostituted religion to the love of gain, so also they prostituted common honesty. We know of nothing that so much resembles this in our day as the course of a hireling clergy, and church fairs, festivals, &c., where the principles of common honesty and rectitude are violated commonly in a fashion that, if practiced in worldly business, would very soon land men behind prison-bars. But we purpose to speak of this later on.

"And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them." While Jesus drives out with holy indignation the worldlings, the mere money-getters, from his temple, he receives and welcomes and saves the humble, the poor and the afflicted. Those who sold doves would claim that it was a true zeal for the worship of God that influenced them. "See," they would say, "we are engaged in providing proper offerings for those who desire to offer sacrifice. Is not this a good and holy work? If we have come within the sacred precincts with our traffic, does not this still more clearly show our zeal for God?" The money-changers would say, "We are here for the convenience of the worshipers, and to facilitate their purchase of their offerings. We only change their foreign money for the currency of the realm." These were plausible reasons; and yet their motive was that each might get gain to himself. Not zeal for God, but zeal for self, led them to violate the holy place itself with their traffic and with their robberies. These ought to be driven out; but Jesus received in the temple of God the blind and the lame, and healed them. These came with prayer into the house of prayer. These had need of help; these therefore prayed. He who was greater than the temple declared that the temple was no place for the rich, the strong, the whole, but that every burdened, praying soul had perfect right there. The blind and the lame must desire healing. They came to Jesus in the temple. They did not look to the temple nor to its services for healing, but to him. As they came to him, he judged that their infirmities and imperfections did not defile the temple; rather it glorified the temple. Their coming fulfilled its true design. It was a house of prayer; and who could pray but the needy? And the needy must pray. Thus far we have spoken of the literal temple, and of the work of Jesus in it; but these principles are eternal in their nature. The temple at Jerusalem is destroyed, and not built up again; but there is still a temple of God on earth, and Jesus is now within this temple. He is there to drive out and to receive. He expels the carnal, the worldly religionist, and receives still the poor, the lame and the blind. It is still true that Pharisees have no use for him; but it is also true that the publicans and sinners draw near to him, and he receives them and eats with them. The money-changers would say that the blind and the lame must not come here—their presence desecrates the temple; but the Master of the temple receives and heals such ones.

This temple is the church of God on earth. We know that Jesus once spoke of his own body as a temple, and we also know that the bodies of individual saints are temples where Jesus dwells. But Jesus' true body is the church; and the church is the aggregate of believers, in whose bodies the Holy Ghost dwells. Besides, we have not understood the temple of Jerusalem to signify each individual believer, but the church as a whole—"the church which is his body."

In this temple Jesus forbids all worldly traffic. There is room outside for all legitimate business. Buying and selling doves or money-changing are right in the world, provided they be pursued without extortion or robbery; but in the church of God they are to have no place. It is emphatically intended for "a house of prayer." The word "prayer" here signifies literally "a pouring out." Under this word is included all true worship. All is here to be done unto God, to be poured out unto him. The spirit of barter or merchandising has no place here. If it be allowed to enter, the whole design of the church is perverted.

If money is needed in sustaining the outward forms of worship, it is provided for; not in the way of traffic, but always as a free and loving contribution. It is the cheerful giver that the Lord loves. Such giving is in perfect keeping with the spirit of prayer. It will arise out of a sense of gratitude for favors received. The poor widow, whose two mites were more than all besides had cast into the treasury, came with prayer and with thanksgiving. She esteemed it a favor to herself to be allowed to give her little. So Lydia afterward at Philippi urged the apostles to come and abide at her house; not as a favor to them, but to herself, and as a token of their fellowship for her. This is cheerful giving. These are the cheerful givers whom the Lord loves; and because he loves right down into their hearts freely, they love and give freely in their turn. They give as unto the Lord, and not unto men. This we understand to be the spirit which actuates the church when the love of God reigns. It is not selfish. It does not lead to giving out of a selfish motive. It is such giving as is in perfect harmony with the spirit of humility, devotion and prayer.

What semblance is there in all this to a hireling ministry? It is a shame, but it is true, that when a minister is called to labor elsewhere it has come to be commonly understood that the chief inducement is a higher salary; and things have come to such a pass that the majority of men seem to think that this is perfectly legitimate, and do not think that any law of God is violated by such an act, either in letter or in spirit. But does not this look more like merchandising than prayer? It is perfectly lawful and right for the lawyer, the physician, the teacher, the man of science, the farmer, the mechanic, the laborer, to sell his services to the highest bidder; but the minister of Christ serves but one Master. His services are not up for sale. He must know no Master but God. Where God calls him he must lovingly labor; and his trust must be in God for the things that are needful, and he has no need to fear the result.

What resemblance, again we ask, is there between this house of prayer and all the various religious schemes for money-getting with which the land abounds? To raise money by appealing to the love of vanity and pleasure, as is the case in all church fairs, festivals, or in any of the dozen methods now in common use, destroys the very idea of prayerful giving; and then when such things as raffles, grab-bags and post-office lotteries are appealed to, the house which is called a house of prayer becomes a den of gamblers. When men are wheedled into purchasing what they do not want at more than double its value, it becomes a den of thieves; and when young women (we cannot say ladies), for the good of the cause, sell kisses at ten cents apiece, which as we learn has been done, it becomes a reproach and a by-word in the thoughts of all self-respecting men and women.

Picture a humble, broken-hearted penitent, to whom Jesus has been made precious, and whose heart is filled with love to God, and with a desire for the communion of saints, and who comes to the place where he is told the people of God dwell, and behold, he finds ministers and people all alive with this scheme, and that for making money, and the spirit of devotion and prayer nowhere to be seen: will he not stand aghast, and then go away in bitter disappointment to weep? There can be no communion between his spirit and the spirit of such a place and such a people. The people who pray want to come to a house of prayer. Jesus has rendered it impossible for the tables of the money-changers to dwell in such a heart, and he longs for the true, solemn, quiet worship of the sanctuary. The house of merchandise is no home for such a one as he. Thank God, there is a place where the lame and blind and poor, who have no money to exchange, may come in peace and confidence and find healing.

EDITORIALS OF THE LATE ELDER
GILBERT BEEBE.

JOHN XXVII. 20.

WE now come more particularly to the subject on which a brother desired us to dwell, namely, whether the preaching of the gospel is a means of communicating faith to the hearer. We will not attempt to set forth the views of all who are called, or who call themselves, Old School Baptists, on this point, for we do not know that they all entertain the same view that we do; but so far as we are advised, we presume that he has been rightly informed by those from whom he has understood that they do not believe that the preaching of the gospel is the means of communicating faith to the hearer. We have not been able to find any portion of the Scriptures in which the preaching of the gospel is denominated the means of anything. We have learned that the gospel itself is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; not the means of God, nor the means of man, of salvation, either to believers or infidels. But we would wish our brother to mark the difference between the gospel itself and the preaching of it. The gospel is not the preaching, but the thing preached. The preaching is defective, imperfect and ineffectual, but the gospel is always complete, perfect and effectual; for it is, unto every one that is called, both Jew and Greek, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. There is nothing in the text under consideration, nor indeed in any other text in the Bible, that to our understanding favors the idea of faith being the production of means. Certainly the faith of God's elect is a fruit of the Spirit and a gift of God, and the apostle has informed us that it is of the operation of God. Jesus Christ is the author and finisher of it.

Much confusion has probably arisen from confounding the terms preaching and gospel, and faith and believing. These terms each occupies its distinct, important and appropriate place in the gospel vocabulary. The distinction between preaching and the thing preached we have already noticed, and the distinction between faith and believing is equally marked and clear in the Scriptures. Faith is the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen; but believing is neither the substance nor the evidence of things not seen. When men manifest a belief of the gospel of Christ, so far as it is manifested or seen by the saints, it is an evidence to them that they are born of God, and by virtue of that birth possess the faith of God's elect. All unregenerate men are denominated unbelievers; not because they all dispute the testimony of divine revelation, for that is not the case; many are fully convinced in their natural judgment of the eternal reality of these things, like many who in the days of our Savior's incarnation, seeing the miracles which he performed, believed on him and were fully convinced in their judgment as intelligent beings that he was the Messiah that was to come. Yet when Christ himself preached in their presence the things of his kingdom, the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard; and the result was, on some occasions, they said these were hard sayings, and they could not hear them; and to avoid hearing them, they turned and walked no more with him. On other occasions some of the same kind of carnal believers sought to take his life. The faith of God's elect is a vital principle, it is alive; therefore none can possess it and remain dead. Its life is not derived from nature, but from the Spirit, by which the saints are quickened; hence the apostle informs us that the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith.—Gal. v. 22. Now, wherever this fruit of the Spirit exists, the word preached will readily mix with faith in those who hear it. But if this faith be not communicated by the Spirit that dictates the proclamation or preaching of the gospel, it cannot so mix, for there is no faith there for it to mix with; and therefore they who so hear are not profited. The truth of this position is clearly exemplified when and wherever the gospel is preached to a mingled audience of regenerate and unregenerate persons; it ever has been, as in the apostles' preaching, "some believed and some believed not." Those who believed were they that were born of God, and consequently had "the faith of Jesus Christ," "which is of the operation of God;" and they that believed not, proved that at the time of hearing the word preached they had not that faith in exercise in them.

It may be urged against our view that Paul has said, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. x. 17. There are more senses than one in which the term faith is used in our version of the Scriptures. It is sometimes used to distinguish the gospel from the legal dispensation, and sometimes it is used to signify its effect; and in this sense the apostle evidently uses it in this case. In the context he speaks of the righteousness of faith, and then again of the effects of faith. "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." The heart of the natural man is the centre and seat of vitality; from that central point vitality is diffused to all parts of the body; but destroy the vitality of the heart, and the life of the body cannot survive it. In the absence of the vitality of the heart, the whole body is dead. Even so in the absence of that faith which is the immediate fruit of the Spirit, and which is of the operation of God, &c., all our believing is unto unrighteousness; but with the heart, or vital principle of faith bestowed in regeneration, man believes unto righteousness; without it he cannot; for without faith it is impossible to please God.

This faith, whether understood in regard to the strict meaning of the term, a vital principle, or in regard to its effect, in both cases comes by hearing, but with this difference. The vital principle of faith, as the Spirit of the living God, cometh only when the voice of the Son of God conveys it; then, but not till then, do the dead receive vitality. "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." By this hearing they receive the faith by which they are experimentally prepared to believe unto righteousness, and to confess unto salvation. Hearing comes by the word of God. If they hear the voice of the Son of God, they hear the Word of God; for he is the essential Word of God himself, and he only hath immortality dwelling in the light. In him, as the Word of God, was life, and the life was the light of men. But do not let us infer because hearing comes by the Word of God, that it also comes by the words of men. For this vitality or spiritual life is in the Son of God and nowhere else; he therefore who believeth on the Son hath (not shall have, but hath already) life; and his having life is what qualifies him for believing.

But believing comes also by hearing, after faith is planted in the subject of salvation. Observe the case of Saul. He was quickened at about midday, and the principle of vital faith was as prominently settled in his heart then as at any subsequent period; but still, "Behold, he prayeth," and the risen and exalted Jesus of Nazareth, whom he had persecuted, hears with approbation his prayer; but for what does he pray? "Who art thou, Lord?" &c. The same exalted Prince and Savior answered his prayer, and sent Ananias to tell him what he must do. Although he had faith, how could he believe on him of whom he had not heard? In this case he truly had heard, and no doubt believed on Jesus, but there were many things concerning Jesus and his cause which he could not believe until Ananias came to him as a preacher; but if Ananias had come with the same message to Saul before faith came to him, his message could not have been mixed with faith in Saul; but now that God had given him faith, with what meekness does he listen to the message of the Lord which Ananias brought, and how cordially did he believe every word of it. The Spirit of God sent Philip to the eunuch, not to give him faith, but to preach to him, faith having first been given. Though he had the vital principle of faith, still he needed instruction. Philip preached to him Jesus (that good old-fashioned theme), and having faith he readily listened to the preached word; and when Philip said, "If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest," with his mouth the eunuch made confession of his belief that Jesus was the Son of God, &c. Now, Philip had given him no faith, but the faith which God had given prepared him to believe the preaching of Philip.

To return to our text in John xvii. 20, we understand the words of our Lord, "for them also which shall believe on me through their word," to express that these disciples for whom he had before prayed were divinely inspired to testify of him; that their words, inspired by the Holy Ghost, should be published to all nations; and in every nation, kindred, tongue and people under the whole heaven, "as many as were ordained unto eternal life" should believe. For the promise was unto them, and to their children, and to all them that were afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Through the word of the apostles, the Gentiles should hear the doctrine of salvation by grace; and being made alive by the quickening or life-giving power of God, hearing they should believe.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE.

WE are now prepared to send the above named book, postage and expressage paid by us, to any address, at publisher's prices. All who are acquainted with the work will doubtless agree that it is well worth the price charged. See notice on last page.

CORRESPONDENCE.

It appears to me that he has struck the right string on predestination and God's eternal purpose in all things. Why should I reject the plain truth of the Scripture, and denounce it as "damnable heresy," because some wicked wretch tries to make that truth a foundation for his sins? Why should I reject it because my weak mind fails to comprehend its depths, its heights, its breadths and its lengths, or my carnal reason fails in explanation of it to the satisfaction of every carnal critic? To carnal reason it is indeed a dry morsel, but to my experience it is honey and the honeycomb, wine with milk, aloes with the sweet spices that flow out from the garden of the Lord. The stronger one loves God's predestination the more he hates sin, and the farther he wants to stay away from it. This is the very principle of God, for he hates every evil way, and every one who truly loves God must hate with a perfect hatred everything that is God's enemy. Some one who denies the truth of this doctrine has said that God in the attribute of his foreknowledge has predestinated everything that relates to the salvation of his people. By the attribute of his power he has reprobated the non-elect from him, and by the attribute of his justice he has forever banished the wicked from him; yet he calls the doctrine of predestination "Fatalism." I am not sharp enough to divide God nor the work of his attributes. If God did a thing he did it, and it is just as surely fixed as if he had but one attribute. God is all power, all wisdom, all knowledge, &c. He is perfect in each and in all his attributes, and one of them is as much engaged in the salvation of his people as the others. Every principle of God was in Christ when he was doing the work of salvation, and one part of him was as much honored, justified, magnified and glorified as any other part. He was God, and he was man; God-man. As God he was not a mediator, and as man he could not be but as God-man. He was mediator between God and man; and by him are all the purposes of God fully magnified, and God is magnified in them through the perfect life of Jesus Christ, as it is now manifested by his holy Spirit. One eternal, self-existent, all-powerful God, fully engaged in all this wonderful, mysterious way of salvation. As God thus reveals himself to us we are brought into the perfect liberty of the Son of God, where there is freedom indeed. I love this glorious doctrine, because I am such a sinner that by no other way can I be saved. I am now so wayward that if there was one wheel in time that was not under the immediate control of this same predestinating power, I would surely come in contact with it and be lost. How glorious the thought, "He hath established our goings." I do not believe these things because the Old School Baptists advocate them, but because I feel them in my own breast in such a way that they are to me the breast of consolation from which I daily draw the peace and joy of the eternal salvation of God. Even all our good works are all here, and by his eternal purpose he works in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Thus he hath wrought all our works in us; and as he works in all his purposes, and none can stay his hands, so does he in working in us to the performance of all our duties to him, and makes us feel not only that it is our duty but high privilege to be allowed to live in his cause and to tread the path he has trod.

"Although my house be not so with God, yet hath he made with me an everlasting covenant ordained in all things and sure; for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."

I desire to recommend the remarks of brother W. J. May on "Fatalism."

I desire to be remembered by those who live in this precious hope.

Affectionately,

L. H. HARDY.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—DEAR BRETHREN:—The following is a copy of a letter from sister Croy, widow of Elder John Croy. She is a member of East Station Camp Church, and is visiting in Ohio. The letter was written to Elder S. T. Reddick. She requested him to read it to the church, which was done, and it was the unanimous vote of the church that it be published for the comfort of God's dear children.

R.

GRIMBLE, Ohio, March 26, 1886.

ELDER S. T. REDDICK AND FAMILY:—Through the mercy of God my life is still spared, and although we are so many miles apart my mind is with you all, and the grave of my dearest earthly friend. How I do miss him. I have not been well for quite a while, and how I do miss the dear one who was always so good to do for me. But it was God's will to take him home to himself, where all is love, joy and peace, where sin and sorrow never come, while I am left in this world of affliction and sorrow. But he is a God of wisdom, love and power, and I want to feel more of the spirit of resignation to his holy will. The friends are all very kind to me, but I am very lonesome. I have not seen the face of a Baptist since I have been here, nor heard one gospel sermon. A preacher said the Lord could not stop the saloons, for man would not let him. He said the Lord could not save some men, for they would not stop long enough for him to talk to them. I think Saul of Tarsus was a very self-willed man, but I think he was compelled by some power to stop long enough for the Lord to talk to him. He says his people shall be willing in the day of his power. A lady asked me if I had enjoyed the preaching. I would as soon say that I did not believe the Bible as to say that I enjoyed such stuff, for it was a plain contradiction of the Bible. One lady said she thought the preacher had put it as plain as he could. I do not doubt that; but I do feel sure that if he had been called of God to preach he would have been made willing to give God more power than man. One of them came to my brother-in-law for money to send the gospel to the heathen, and said it took five dollars to save one soul. My brother-in-law told him there were plenty of heathen at home and in his church, and that he had as much as he would be able to do to save them. He told him they had kept members in their church who proved by their daily walk and conversation that they knew no more about grace than the heathen in Burmah. How different from the doctrine of God our Savior. I am a poor, weak, ignorant mortal, but according to my understanding of God's word man's power is left entirely out of God's plan of salvation; and I know that if my salvation depended on my good deeds, I would be lost. I am so glad that Jesus said, "It is finished." Jesus paid it all; and he says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." It does not require such things as silver and gold. Jesus says, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them."

I hope, if not providentially hindered, to go to the home church (Mount Olive) on the fourth Sunday in next month. I feel as though I could hardly wait for the time to come. Well do I remember when first I went there. It was their communion season. I thought I had never seen such a lovely, solemn sight. I thought of that portion of God's word, "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." I told Mr. Croy, "Surely they are the people of God." I told him I would give the world, were it mine to give, to be worthy to have a name with them. But I did not think they would receive me. The more I was with them and heard the preaching, the stronger became the desire to live with them. I finally tried in my weakness to tell them what I hoped the Lord had done for poor, unworthy me, and I was given a home with them.

"What peaceful hours I then enjoyed, How sweet their memory still."

It now is, and ever has been, a wonder to me why one so unworthy, one who is constantly doing or saying something wrong, can be permitted to live with so good a people.

Now, dear brother, lest I weary your patience I will close. If you think this worth reading to the dear brethren and sisters of East Station, read it to them. Not one of them is forgotten by me, and I would love to hear from them. My love and kindest wishes to all. Remember me at the throne of grace.

Your sister in Christ, and the least of all,

SARAH JANE CROY.

THAMESVILLE, Ontario, March 15, 1896.

DEAR AND ESTEEMED EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Inclosed find four dollars, being my dues for the SIGNS till next June. For so neglecting to send my remittance last year, I can but plead, not poverty, put pure carelessness and selfishness. It can be nothing else; and how one can be so unthoughtful of paying what they know should be paid, in order to sustain the paper so much loved, is a mystery. I think sometimes it is because of a feeling that the Lord would not allow such a precious medium of correspondence to fail to be published, even if we did not send in the subscription price; but this does not excuse our fault who fail to do so, and I hope in future not to have to make an apology like this. I cannot close without expressing my feelings towards the brethren who as editors labor to publish the SIGNS, and also all those who fill its columns with their correspondence. Although in many cases all are strangers in the flesh, how near we appear to approach each other in fellowship in the things of the Spirit. If our privilege of assembling with the church is but seldom, here we feel to be assembled together, and often allowed to feed upon the green pastures of God's eternal truth as there expounded by his servants, and manifested in the trials and experience of his people. My first knowledge of the people that I trust I now love for the truth's sake was obtained through the SIGNS some sixteen years ago. I have been a subscriber for about that time, and commenced taking it while a member of the New School Baptists. It is needless to say I did not remain long in that church after finding the people everywhere spoken against, and with whom I now very unworthily have a name. How exceedingly sweet is the memory of those days when I first heard the sound of the gospel from Elders Pollard, W. L. Beebe, Durand and Keene. It was indeed like cold water to a thirsty soul, and good news from a far country. I went to the first meeting in a spirit of judgment, not being yet fully persuaded; but how quickly was I humbled and my mouth stopped when I heard the preaching. Often have I desired to express to those servants of God how precious was their ministry to me. Elder Pollard is still our faithful pastor and teacher, and the longer he is with us the more beloved he is by all. The great wonder is how he is able to get around to all his appointments he has to fill; but our desire and prayer is that the Lord may spare him yet many years to feed the sheep and lambs in his care. We do not see Elders Beebe, Durand and

Keene as in former years; but we do not forget them, or any of the many tried servants who have come to us from time to time from different churches in the United States, and who all preach the same gospel, and manifest the same childlike simplicity, in speaking only of those things that they do know, and testifying of the things they have seen? I think I but voice the heartfelt feelings of the many here who would like them to know that their labor is not in vain in the Lord. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and it seems to me the returns most valued by a true minister of Jesus is to know that his ministry has been a comfort and blessing to the children of God.

But I must close this rambling letter. When I started to write it was to simply send my remittance and ask your pardon for neglect; but ere I was aware I found myself addressing indirectly not only the editors, but all the other loved ones whose names appear in the SIGNS. I do not ask it to appear in print; it is not worthy. But how great is the mystery that one so unworthy should at times be permitted to rejoice in spirit, and claim as near kinsmen those people who he has no fear to describe as the people who know the joyful sound; and while so unfit to be counted as one with them, yet with the poet I can say from the heart, of the church,

"One day within thy sacred gate
Affords more real joy to me
Than thousands in the tents of state:
The meanest place is bliss with thee."
Yours in gospel bonds,
J. R. DUFFUS.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

SILAS H. DURAND.

MARRIAGES.

APRIL 28th, 1896, by Elder G. N. Tusing, at his residence, Mr. Edwin S. Johnson and Miss Emma Leachman, all of Franklin Co., Ohio.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR dear old brother, Newberry James, was born April 4th, 1812, and died April 18th, 1896, aged 84 years and 14 days.

He was born in Lincoln Co., Tenn., and died in Boone Co., Ark. He was married to Catharine Wright on Jan. 19th, 1840, who departed this life Dec. 9th, 1893, on the same day of the week and the same hour of his death—Saturday morning, seven o'clock. He moved to Tippah Co., Miss., in early life, and there all his children were born, five sons and three daughters, all of whom are married. He professed a good hope through grace about thirty-three years ago. He moved to Arkansas in the autumn of 1867, and was baptized in the fellowship of New Hope Church in 1873. It was my happy privilege to form an acquaintance with him, being one of the constituent members of Little Hope Church, which I have tried to serve as pastor since its constitution. He was sound in the faith, as orderly a walking man as I ever knew. It was said of him by many, and by those of other denominations, that he was a worthy pattern. He was always ready to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, but in a meek, lamblike spirit. I was notified of his death on Saturday evening, and on Sunday morning at his late residence I tried to speak words of comfort to the bereaved relatives and a host of friends who had gathered to show respect to his memory; after which his remains were conveyed to a grave-yard about one mile from his home, and there laid to rest by the side of his companion, to await the sound of the trump of God, then to awake in the likeness of the blessed Savior. May God bless his children, and may it be their happy lot to meet where they will never part, is the prayer of the writer.

WM. J. CASEY.

LEAD HILL, Ark., May 7, 1896.

It becomes my painful yet pleasant duty to write the obituary of our much beloved sister, Maggie Gresham, who was born Dec. 27th, 1863, and died Dec. 28th, 1895.

She was married to brother A. J. Gresham on Nov. 16th, 1882. She leaves a husband, five children, an aged mother, three brothers, besides a host of brethren, sisters and friends, to mourn their loss. I had the privilege of baptizing her last June, together with her husband, mother, and eight others; and I must say that I never baptized any one in whom I had more confidence, having known her from childhood. The angelic glow that lit up her countenance while relating her experience has lingered with us ever since. Among other good things she said, "I was once too proud to join the Old Baptists; but I am not now, thank God." O how sad to think that we will meet her no more on earth, and to see her loved ones look and feel so lonely; but God in his mercy has delivered her from the troubles and pains of this life, and has securely anchored her soul in that sweet haven of rest which remains to the people of God. Her body lies quietly in the cemetery at Booneville, awaiting the voice of the Archangel, when it will be raised a spiritual body, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and ever be with the Lord, to chant the song of redemption, with all the blood-washed throng of our God. We would say to her loved ones, Be of as good cheer as you can; and when we shall have to pass the ordeal of death may it, as with our dear sister, have lost its terrors to us.

"Maggie, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer's breeze;
Pleasant as the air of evening
As it floats among the trees.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Calmly in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more our troubles know.

"Maggie, sister, thou hast left us,
Now our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

"Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life has fled,
There in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed."

J. T. BLANCHARD.

BOONEVILLE, Miss.

Mrs. Martha A. Haunts died at her home in the village of Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., on Sunday, March 29th, 1896, of dropsy, aged 73 years, 10 months and 19 days.

Sister Haunts' maiden name was Walker, and her birthplace was Indiana, where she was married to Peter Haunts, June 10th, 1838, coming to Illinois in 1847. She became the mother of eight children, five sons and three daughters. Three sons and one daughter, together with the aged husband, survive her.

She received a hope in Christ in early life, and united with the New Hope Church of Old School Baptists at Greenbush in June, 1863, and was baptized by Elder R. M. Simmons, and continued in full enjoyment of the blessings of fellowship unto the day of her death. Her burial occurred on Monday, March 30th. There being no minister present, the writer preached a discourse at the regular meeting on the third Sunday in April to her memory, and designed for the comfort of her family, brethren and sisters. She lived a quiet and unassuming life, trusting in the finished work of her blessed Lord and Master, and fell asleep with an abiding faith that she would realize the full fruition of her blessed hope.

ALSO,

Miss Susan H. Combs, youngest daughter of John and sister Nancy M. Combs, and granddaughter of the late Eddy Ketchum, and a niece of the writer, died April 8th, 1896, of pulmonary consumption, aged 29 years, 3 months and 22 days.

She had been suffering with the disease about one year, but was up and about the house until about four months before her death. So far as medical attendance and parental care could avail, everything that promised relief was done for her; but all human help failed. She fully realized that death was slowly but surely coming to her relief, and was perfectly resigned, and felt that for her to die was gain. She told them not to grieve, for she was going home. Her only regret was that she could not go to the church at New Hope, and there follow her Lord and Master in the baptismal waters. She ordered her burial robe, had it prepared so that she could see it, gave directions about the kind and color of the casket, the order of services, flowers, &c. Then, when the time for her departure drew near, she bade all an affectionate farewell, saying, "I am going now," closed her eyes, her spirit took its flight, and the broken vessel only remained.

The funeral occurred April 10th, from her late home, where her entire life had been spent, and was very largely attended. She was tenderly laid to rest beside her two brothers, one having preceded her only a little more than a year. She leaves father, mother, two sisters and three brothers, with many other relatives, to mourn; but they feel that our loss is her gain.

CORRESPONDENCE

SANFORD, Maine, Aug. 19, 1893.

DEAR ELDER KEENE:—I have been reading some of your writings this evening. I find myself in my soul's feelings so far removed from you that the bitter tears will flow. Many times have I read the same before, and as many times have I wept over the deep separation between myself and thee. Before I ever saw your face I looked and wished for your letters in the SIGNS. Then there came a feeling that I must write to you. I felt there would be no deceiving you, therefore I could write or talk with you at ease. Before the day came that I had set to write to you, father told me that they (the church) were going to write to Elder Keene to come and visit them. I then felt if I was ever to meet you I could not write. You came among us, and I felt such a desire to talk with you. How I wished you would say just a few words to me; but no, there were none for me. I felt as you left Mount Hope for the last time that you could see through me, and God would not let one of his be deceived. Then came a time of tears. As the fountain ran dry I fell into the old place. It was all right. It was fixed unchangeably!

"If my soul were sent to hell,
Thy righteous law approves it well."

You remember the words you said to me on Sunday morning at the Oak Woods meeting-house. It seemed they came too late. God never designed that I should deceive one of his people. Not long since we met again. What is it? What have I done? What have I said to mislead you? Undeceive yourself. You must not think of me in the way you seem to do. I am not one of the ones. Could you but see how empty, how barren I am, you would know better than to look for fruit on such flinty soil. Should it be my privilege to meet you again, let me feel as I did at first. I could not deceive you even were I to try. Just let me hover near like the moth miller around the light. With best of wishes.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1893.

DEAR ELDER KEENE:—These words, "write to me," still repeat themselves over and over again. As your grieved face comes before me, there comes also a wish that I knew how to be thankful—how to thank you for thus kindly remembering me before God; and it seems to me

I might at least answer your inquiries. I would do so gladly, but am such a mixed multitude of contradictions. It seems I am just a living lie walking about. I never tell anything intelligibly; if I did, others would see it like I do. Keep in mind the fact that I have always lived with Old School Baptists, and have imbibed all their ideas. "As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined." You ask, "Did you never feel that peace?" Many times have I felt that sweet peace the world could neither give nor take, or so it seemed. Once while looking down into the darkness, in the darkness was a light. There in the darkness the light revealed God's hand held out, and in his hand I saw all things; not a thing left out. There among the all things I saw myself nothing but the tiniest speck. I also saw how easily God could crush me, yet he would not. I was safe there in his hand; no one could pluck me out. Do not deceive yourself in thinking I shall ever be baptized. It seems every step I take tells me that it is not for me. When a girl at home, news came one day that one of my schoolmates had been baptized. To me it seemed the day would never end, that I could be by myself. The instant I found myself shut in my room, with clasped hands and streaming eyes I said, "O Lord, why is it these things come to others, and I am left out?" In what seemed to be the remotest corner of the room came a voice, saying, "Arise and be baptized." From then, for something like two years, water in all its forms haunted me; it was in my thoughts by day, and I would dream of it by night. It was continually saying to me, "See, here is water; what doth hinder thee?" It seemed that had I ten thousand worlds like this I would give them all just to feel it was my privilege to walk in that way; but never in all the time could I feel it was for me. These feelings that I had during that time left me in this way: I went to visit an aunt living near one of Millon's "Three ponds." At the close of a lovely day, with my cousins I took a walk to the pond. The moment I saw the water there seemed to be ten thousand voices in every sparkle, calling me in. Words seem meaningless to describe what I saw in that water. I felt I must get near it, and must put my hands in it, or I should suffocate if I did not. I made directly for the water, with one of my cousins, who, seeing my intention, entreated me not to go within ten feet of the water, as I would surely be drowned if I did. I went to the water, and put my hands in the water, and as I toyed with the water this cry went up from my heart, "O Lord, thou knowest this is all the baptism I shall ever know; make it as such unto me." Then and there it seemed I was answered. I see those things for others, but not for myself. It seems I can write another side of my life, and give the lie to all I have written.

DEAR ELDER KEENE:—Your letter received. I have read it many times with feelings of sadness. It seems such a letter should fill me with joy and thanksgiving to be thus owned by one of God's own dear ministering ones; yet it makes me feel less than nothing. I feel to shrink into obscurity. I feel destitute of seeing eyes, hearing ears, understanding heart, all fruits of the Spirit, and everything Godlike, but full of everything grievous and hateful. How can I write to you? How can I answer your letter? If I am one step nearer those things I am not aware of it. It did seem as I read your letter that you had expressed my very thoughts, and that I had no wish to deny it; but I suppose if this ever reaches you, by that time I shall be thinking it untrue. I remember telling you I did desire certain things, but afterward it seemed I only lied to you. I do not remember hearing of trouble in the church at Oak Woods but that it gave me sad thoughts; and yet it seemed I was so truly glad and thankful that the Lord had kept me out, for I should have been the very one to make trouble; and then it seemed how good and kind the dear Lord had been to me, when I knew it not. I cannot live out of the church in peace and quiet. I am always doing or saying something to pain and trouble some one. Can a person feel so truly glad in heart for being denied a thing, and still have any true desire for that thing? Did you not say, the first time I heard you speak at Mount Hope, a person might have such and such thoughts, and yet not have a particle of the grace of God in their heart? I felt I was that one. I remember a time when the word grace came into my thoughts in a way that gave me trouble. After a time there appeared to be a daily and gradual unfolding of that word for a week (not what it was to me, but what there was in the word grace), until it seemed there was enough in that one word, grace, to cover the whole religion of Jesus Christ. One could talk of it forever, and still there would be as much left to talk about; there could be no such thing as it becoming exhausted. Now I might hear you talk of grace, feel interested to listen, and even feel I knew every word you said was true, and still feel that for myself I knew nothing of grace; that grace never touched my heart; and so in like manner have many things been in my thoughts. "If ye love me keep my commandments," have at different times repeated themselves to me, over and over again; but they have always come to me as mockery. As they repeat themselves, each word seems to say, I am for others, but not for you. I do not feel that I can hide from the Savior. I have wished oftentimes every one could see my every thought on sacred things as I felt the Savior saw them. I sometimes get into places where there is no rest for me, until I get where I can feel the Savior knows it all. I cannot deceive him. He knows my every motive, just why I should say and do as I do. It is all right, though I see it not. There I must leave it all. Then there comes a rest I could not find before. Do not be deceived in me. It seems every day takes me farther and farther from your desires for my spiritual welfare. Perhaps your prayers in my behalf have received all the answer they will ever know. Would it give you any satisfaction to know that once while listening to you I did indeed feel that every old thing had been cut off; everything was springing up anew; I was a new creature; I was so light it seemed my feet touched not the ground; I was walking in the air? But I feel as far from that place now as ever. It only seems as a bright spot, as an oasis in the dreary desert. I have always felt interested when listening to you, and I did not want to miss a sermon. Can one think too much of another? Can they not even make them their god, if suffered to do so? It seems I cannot write another word, and if you ever see this you may know it is because I feel I owe you this, and a great deal more, even though it is just like the writer, foolish throughout.

DECEMBER, 1894.

DEAR ELDER KEENE:—This

Monday evening finds me alone with thoughts of thee and thine. The many things you spake to me are flitting through my mind. I seem to be full of tears since you and your family left us. I felt them gathering around me whilst you were here (perhaps you noticed my absent mindedness). I would be different if I could, had I the power to make myself so. I feel there is only One that can do that dear something that I need. I am a strange mixture, a riddle unto myself. While it seems that everything you say to me is just the way things come and go with myself, yet it seems I cannot believe. Once you told me I reminded you of Moses. Moses is not the one that comes to me that I am like. I do not think that I should need a spokesman, had I faith. If you can teach one so dumb, so foolish, I am willing to be taught. I feel there are things you would like to say to me, but fear to do so lest they grieve and give offense. If that is so, say them, pick me to pieces, and put me together anew. Tell me (if possible) everything I lack. It will do me good. I have to be hurt in order to but dimly see in a true light. There are many things I would like to ask you, could I only break through that something that strips me of everything, as one tries to commune with me. You say, "You know that you love Christ and his people." O! it seems to me could I but say, Blessed Jesus, with the feelings that I see others express, I could then feel I did love them; but my words seem only as the croaking of a raven to me; the sound of my voice grates harshly upon my ear, and sometimes my speech fails me altogether as I have tried to tell something. If there is the least spark of divine love in my heart why do I always turn away from his people? I could wish to be with them; there is no other place in all the wide world that has the same attraction to me; and there have been times when it seemed I could not stay away from them. If I attempted to go to the church there appeared the intervening of an overruling power. The last time I thought to take such a step, its after effects left me next door to an infidel; it seemed I should only have to shake hands with one to be a true infidel. I do not wish to deceive you or any one, and yet it appears I do. I told you I went to meeting to deceive people, and so it seems my very presence there is leading them to think too well of me. Many times I have stayed away from meetings because my presence seemed deceitful. I firmly resolved not to go to Oak Woods to hear you preach for at least the first four or five Sundays, for the same reason. But when you came to live here I was there all the same. I felt the Sundays were far apart. It seemed you never said a word the first Sunday but that had been in my thoughts. You repeated the words that had been continually repeating themselves to me the previous week. As you ceased speaking there seemed a big disappointment, your sermon seemed so short. You asked, "Did you ever get a crumb?" I did not know if it was a crumb, a whole feast, or just nothing at all. Had I known I would have said yes or no to you gladly. But few things unfold themselves in a way that I can claim as mine. I seem to understand how they are sent home to other hearts, but I have no right to them. I am only a child of nature. Try hard as I may, I cannot bring myself to feel I know any change of heart. The first thing I can remember is telling my mother a lie; then and there is the first I can call to mind of having thoughts of such a being as God. Through all my childhood days I cannot remember when I did not at times go by myself and weep bitter tears because I was not good like my grandmother and Elder Quint. I could see something in their faces that I did not have, something good, and I longed to be like them. Even now I still see in the faces of some the glorious likeness of the dear Savior, and still mourn its absence in myself. How could I tell all I have seen in your countenance, and all the restless, wakeful hours in consequence? and yet there have been some as peaceful hours as I have ever known. You say, "I believe you have fellowship for me as one of God's people." I have sometimes felt, did the time come when I ceased to think you one, I should be a disbeliever in everything Godlike, heavenly, holy or sacred. I am sorry to give you trouble; I am not worthy the least thought from you. I feel I am in God's hand; he knows just what to do with me. Every trouble, every sorrow, he sends me I hope is for my good, although I do not see it so at the time. I feel to dread his "cloudy chariot," and yet it seems I need it always over me. Somehow as I come out from those dark places I see I was much nearer the Savior while there, and I have felt willing to go through all those dark scenes again could I but feel that same near and dear presence surrounding me.

I see nothing in this but senseless scribbling, and feel it may go in the stove like many others; but I shall try and send it to you. I could wish, as you read this you could be given to see me as I am. I am vain enough to wish the good opinion of all; nevertheless I have no wish to deceive in sacred things, and often have to ask the advice of some dear one if it is right to do thus and so. Please burn this up out of sight, and do not let any one know that I was so foolish as to pen a line to you.

JULY 21, 1894.

DEAR ELDER KEENE:—I have not forgotten that your letter remains unanswered, neither do the things of which you speak go away to stay; yet I feel for me to be silent is the truest way I know to treat you well. I think it is in my heart to treat you with all due reference, but my heart (if indeed I have one) is so deceitful, so full of lies, so selfish, so fickle, so wandering, and filled with so many evils, that it seems I have no right to acknowledge one thing or another. Does it never come to you that I never speak of seeing myself a sinner? It seems if I could only feel for one brief half hour those deep convictions for sin, like what it appears to me every changed heart must know and feel, I could then believe. When a child I always cried more or less because I felt I was not good like others, and still have the same trouble. In later years I have felt I was wicked, I was a sink of sin, as a cage of unclean birds, as a bottomless pit; but do I ever mourn for those sins? Have I been down in those depths? It seems to me I know nothing of the fellowship of the sufferings and death of Christ. There are times when I feel that were the wickedness of my heart opened to my view I should fall dead at the sight.

O! Elder Keene, if you could only know how much I have so longed to possess that broken and contrite heart; yet it does not come; my heart of stone is still stone. It seems that all my life I have seen more or less beauty in the ordinance of baptism. Twice in my dreams have I been led down into the water by dear Elder Quint, and there buried in the water. Ever since it has seemed I know two baptisms in the one time. If there is such a place as hell, I feel I have been there; and if there is such a place as heaven, I feel I have been there. I never read or hear one tell of their joy or sorrow in following the Savior, but that I feel I know it all. Sometimes when you have been telling how all his ways are pleasantness, and his paths peace, I have come near exclaiming, "I know it all is true." In a natural sense the Lord has been good to me all my life, and especially so for the past eight years. I have been in some dark places; thick darkness. I have been more helpless than a child; so helpless that I did not even hope to hope;

"So sick and weary of myself I've been, Of this world and all therein."

I have cried to be dead, to be away from it all, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. And though I knew it not then, I have felt the Lord was with me in all my troubles, making mole hills of mountains, working all for my good, and leading me to feel that while I was afflicted with one hand, I was upheld by the other; and only for his love and goodness to me I should now be in the asylum for the insane. Why should you feel your "life to be a veritable failure?" Who is it that giveth the increase? What about casting bread upon the waters? Are there not plants covered thick with blossoms all around, and younger plants to bloom? Have you found the blossoms withered, worthless, dead? Surely not all! Why mourn for the dead ones? Rejoice that there is one alive, and patiently wait and trust God for the rest.

SEPTEMBER 16, 1894.

ELDER F. W. KEENE—VERY DEAR BROTHER:—This afternoon it seems sweet to thus address you, and a pleasure to try and comply with your request. As I make the attempt tears fill my eyes, and I feel I can never tell what I want to, that any one can understand anything about me. I will go back to the morning of August 5th, when the four were received into the church. I left the house feeling still and peaceful. I was so glad for the others, and I felt the Lord had kept me from deceiving the people. It seemed with my lips I could have spoken like the rest, but my heart was far, far away, and I knew I had no right to go with them. I do not know when the whole of one week has passed and I had felt so light hearted and happy as I did that week. I do not know the times I found myself saying, "I am so glad that that scene of next Sunday is not to be marred by my presence." Thursday of that week, you remember, we met. Not a feather's weight did one thing you said have with me. I felt you knew not my heart. If you did you would not say those things to me. Saturday forenoon while at work this question came to me, "Why did Elder Keene say he should baptize you next Sunday? and why did he say, I know I shall, my dear sister?" Instantly these words repeated themselves, "The word of the Lord is quick and powerful. You are not your own keeper." They had that effect upon me that I left my work and prepared some clothes to wear into the water. When I put those clothes away, I also put the feeling away that I should need them. I felt how foolish I have been. I could not take that step when I know I have no right with them. Elder Keene is deceiving himself, if he thinks to do anything of the kind. Sunday morning so sure did I feel that I could not take that step that the clothes I had previously prepared were all left at home; not one of them did I see any use for. I felt I would not go into the conference meeting; I could not be seen there; I would not lead people to think of me in a false light. Several of the members asked me to go into the conference meeting. You spoke to me also. Soon after you left me I saw sister Ella coming, smiling and happy, expressing the wish for me to come into the house with her. I know not why; I simply followed her. While brother Joshua Staples was speaking I felt every word he said had also been my feeling; yet I thought, I cannot say that to day. When he said.

"Nothing in my hand I bring, Simply to thy cross I cling,"

my thought flew to a time when those words came to me. I felt, Yes, he has been there too, and he is like me: he has no words to tell about it. I was so glad the Lord opened his mouth, and I felt I could not unite with the church unless the Lord opened my mouth and gave me a new song. When the church received him into their fellowship to be baptized, my thoughts went like a flash. When you spoke to me, and of me to the church, it was so unexpected, it was something I had not thought of your doing. After the church had expressed their fellowship for me as a candidate to be baptized, and the conference meeting was over, I said to my brother Lewis, "You might just as well go into the street and bring in the very worst vagabond." He replied, "We are told to go into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in." Many times I had wondered why these poor, helpless ones must be compelled to come in, and the others left to do as they pleased; but with his answer it all seemed opened to me. When I went into the meeting-house they were singing the hymn, "How lost was my condition till Jesus made me whole." I thought, of all the hymns in the world, why do they sing that one today? It carried me back to the time when I was a child, when I had sung it many, many times with father, seemingly with all the feelings therein expressed. That morning I would have put them far away, but they were sent home in a way I could not throw off. Then your sermon from the words, "But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the host of nations? And I said, Thou shalt call me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from me."—Jer. iii. 19, seemed to be tying me down until I felt I was as one caught in the meshes of a net.—Jer. xvi. 16. With every objection in my mind, and feeling that I could not go to the water and be baptized, I was entangled and held fast in that net. As the feelings I had at the water come before me, I stop to weep, and to wonder what spirit possessed me. I saw the others all fitted for that sacred ordinance, bright and happy. I took a few steps to go with them to the water's edge, and retraced them, feeling they could not want me by them. I saw the members (I felt) standing aloof from me. I felt I was something they dare not approach. I tried to make the water look inviting. I tried to feel I did love Christ and his people. I tried to feel the Savior's presence. I tried to feel my feet were upon the rock, Christ Jesus. But not one thought or feeling could I produce or bestow upon myself of what my heart had felt before. I was just nothing, just emptiness, yet I could only move the one way I felt myself drawn in. It seems that I only know of a still, quiet rest and feeling in every limb, that was given me, and I felt, I am not ashamed if all the world knows

I have been laid beneath the water. (Amidst all my tossings, those feelings have never left me). Yet while standing at the water I felt a desire to ask the people of God could they have the least bit of fellowship for me. It seemed more than I could expect of them. But my tongue was tied; I could not speak; still it gave me no trouble then; everything seemed all right as it was, After being baptized, and being home about an hour, one thing after another began to come before me in their various forms and colors, and the morning light of the following day found me in a very wretched state of mind. O! very dear one, do not think I can tell you all my thoughts and feelings since then; that, I feel, is impossible; but as you wish it I will try to pen a few of them.

The beloved pastor stood before me disgraced, the finger of scorn pointing at him from all directions, all from my wicked deceitfulness. I felt I had disgraced every member of the church. O the bitter tears that mended not a thing! but the more times I reviewed all the things concerning me that day the greater seemed my crime. I felt I had no right to be in the church; I felt myself a Judas among them; and then would come the crushing thought, O! I knew it all the time—knew I had no right to be with them. I could think of no punishment that could be put upon me that could in the least atone for all the disgrace that I had brought upon the church in coming in among them. I felt I ought never to smile again, but ought always to go weeping my life away. I do not know how I endured the first few weeks after being baptized. I could not read; I could not look up. Sometimes I became prostrated. I gave up all, and went to bed. Then again it seemed I had a raging fever, yet it seemed I deserved it all, and more too, so unfit was I to be counted a member of the church. All the first week would come the piercing thought, How can I ever go to meeting again? how can I ever look one of them in the face again? Then I would feel, I know just what I ought to do; I do not need any one to tell me; I must go to them, and tell them how mistaken they were in me, how I have deceived them; they must turn me out. At the conference meeting early Sunday morning it would have been easy to have told the church everything, but for one reason that made me feel I could not. I felt I could suffer anything, endure everything, rather than do or say a thing to cast reflections upon you. I felt while you were preaching that morning (August 19th) from the words, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down; yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion," &c.; that I was where and what you were telling of; every string untuned, and powerless to start one of them; and while it did not lift me out of my distresses, it gave me something which made it seem good to listen to you; and many times did some word come to me, helping me to faint not.

When on the way to meeting this morning these words came to me,

"Jesus, the very thought of thee
With sweetness fills my breast;
But sweeter far thy face to see,
And in thy presence rest."

For the first time I found myself singing, and that day I did enjoy your sermon, and while on the way home I found the feeling to write to you this letter. On Monday my brother John came, and was with us until Saturday. In listening to him speaking I forgot myself, and the week passed quickly and pleasantly. In less than an hour after he left I felt the old distresses gathering around me, and tears were again my portion. When I came into the presence of the members on Sunday I felt so far from being like them, I felt my nothingness so great, I could but weep, and your sermon probed my wounds anew. But I did not feel in every way like as at the first from kind words spoken. Bits of hymns that come to me, remembrance of portions of sermons, and in some few readings, there has seemed a silent working, removing my griefs, and easing the smart of my many stings. O! I so long that it may be God's will to so fill me with his love and all needed graces that I may learn obedience in all things; that I may cease to be a trouble to God's dear ones. I do not think this needs any name; it speaks for itself. I am sure you will know who it is that is just nothing at all.

JANUARY 13, 1895.

TO THE BELOVED PASTOR, F. W. KEENE—DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE:—So much is my mind with you at Oak Woods to-day, to pass the time I will try to write a line to you. I did indeed find much comfort in your letter. Many times when reading it have I been lifted from a depressed state, to feel I could patiently wait, hoping all things, trusting all things; yet again, when so cast down, so ill at ease, I knew not what to do with myself, have some words of yours so come into my mind I have turned to your letter, read up the references therein, and ever I was aware I have been lifted above every sorrow or care of this life. These words have repeated themselves with sweetness, "They shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint." Also, "The winter is past, the time of the singing of birds is come." Over and over again would I be singing these words,

"Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God:
He whose word cannot be broken,
Formed thee for his own abode.

"On the Rock of Ages founded,
What can shake thy sweet repose?
With salvation's walls surrounded,
Thou mayest smile at all thy foes."

How sweet have I found this hymn! I soon fall from this high estate; something whispers, It is for the church you are exultant; you have only a name to live, while you are dead. Then do I look for the witness within, and the more I look the dimmer grows every evidence, until all seems gone, and the same dreary waste is all I find. I grieve, I pine, for those glorious attributes I see in God's chosen ones, while I weep over my nothingness. Everything you call yourself in your letter describes my own feelings; also, all you say you would be, seem to be my daily longings; yet notwithstanding all this, I cannot feel I am like you; there is but a very small part of the time I can feel I have any right to be numbered with God's people; there are so many things lacking in me, it seems surely true I am still in nature's garden. It has, I fear sometimes, never been digged with the mattock, or I would not be in this way, and that way, and every way but the right way; yet I do find something about God's people which makes it delightfully sweet to be with them when I can so cease to think of myself as to forget the usurper I am. In some unknown way every face at Oak Woods seems nearer and dearer. Last evening I was looking forward to be with them, and many pleasant thoughts succeeded one another, until they seemed lost in these few words, "The love of Jesus, what it is, none but his loved ones know." Do I know that love? I do know there are times when I long to fly away and be where Jesus is. O that I could praise him as others do! It seems I never know how. I sink into insignificance at the thought, and the praise I would give "sits silent on my tongue."

"If he is mine, then from his love
He every trouble sends;
All things are working for my good,
And bliss his rod attends."

O that he would make me to be truly his own child, that he might ever hold my hand, and never let me from him stray. May it be his holy will to fill my heart with his love, to himself and people, that I can a brother's failing hide, and show a brother's love; so free from envy, scorn, pride, and every sin within, that not my tongue only, but every action, may speak sincerity and truth. O that you and every one in the church could know me as I feel God knows me! then I could not feel I had, or ever could, deceive one of you.

How I have run on. I feel you must be weary long ere this; but you have been patient with me, so kind and indulgent. Much love to you, sister Keene, and your dear ones.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Though we have never met face to face, yet I trust that by the grace of God and the power manifested in our bodies we are fellow travelers to that glorious land beyond this vale of tears.

A SINNER CONVERTED.

OUR views have been requested upon the portion of Scripture recorded in James v. 20, which reads as follows: "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

We have no thought of being able to say anything concerning the Scripture but what has been better said before, but yet feel like saying what is in our own mind with regard to it.

It seems to us that the true key to this text is found in the preceding verse. This verse shows that Jesus is addressing believers in Christ, sinners saved by grace and born of God, for he calls them brethren; and the apostles in their epistles call no man brother but a child of God. Disciples are brethren in Christ, the elder brother, and this relationship is always recognized when the apostles address the churches. This fact cannot be insisted upon too strongly. From a neglect to observe and weigh this fact has arisen most of the misconceptions and misconstructions of the letters written by the apostles. Their precepts, exhortations and promises have been handled as though they were intended for all men, when in reality they apply only to believers in the Lord. The Scripture concerning which we desire to write is one of those whose meaning has been misapplied and abused as much or more than any other. As referred to above, the connection shows that it was meant as an admonition to the brethren in Christ, to strive to help each other and to restore each other from sin and transgression, and not as an exhortation to bring those who know not the Lord to repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The nineteenth verse is clear. It reads as follows: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him." This and the following verse contains precisely the same thought as was expressed by the Savior as recorded in Matt. xviii. 15. There also it is "a brother" of whom Jesus spoke. We will pause upon this nineteenth verse just long enough to emphasize a word or two in it. "If any of you," not unregenerate men, nor men of the world, but you "brethren."

"Do err." This word "err" means here simply "to wander away," "to stray from the truth." This means either in doctrine or practice. The wandering may be either into false doctrine or evil practices. We call special attention to this, for the reason that the language clearly shows that the brother who errs has once been in the true way, or has held the truth. No one can stray from the fold who has not been in the fold. This of itself is clear proof that a child of God, and not a worldling, is meant by him who errs. "And one convert him." The word "convert" means to turn about. The thought is of a man who has strayed from the right way and who cannot find his way back, and is wandering here and there, and who is turned in the right direction by some one who knows the right way and takes pity upon him.

Now the text in verse twenty is meant as an encouragement to the one who sees his brother astray, to endeavor to turn him about and set him right. Such ones need encouragement, because there are many fleshly hindrances to pursuing such a course. At such a time thoughts like these will be suggested to the mind as hindrances, "He has been careless, and has not watched unto prayer;" "perhaps he has willfully done wrong;" it will be a useless effort;" he is not sincere;" "I cannot trust him, he has gone too far;" "he ought to suffer awhile;" "the Lord will bring him back when he gets ready;" "why, then, need I care?" "I very much doubt whether he be a child of God at all or not;" "I can have no influence with him;" "he will not hear me;" "he has professed penitence before, and is as far astray again as ever;" "I have no confidence in him;" "let some one else go to him;" "we had better get rid of him;" "he is a reproach to the cause;" "he will fall again." These and hundreds like them are the things which might discourage us, and hinder us from doing the will of God in this matter.

And so the apostle bids us remember the greatness of the blessings to follow such a work of faith and love. Surely if anything could strengthen the believer to go on, in spite of all the plausible suggestions of Satan, the facts that by such a cause a soul should be saved from death, and a multitude of sins be hidden, would arouse and strengthen him. How great the reward of such a course! He who saves this mortal life counts it worth all pains, and even exposure to danger. How much better is it to lead the wandering feet back to the paths of life and peace! It was said by the Savior that he who offends one of the little ones had better be drowned in the depth of the sea, and here James testifies of the blessedness of saving the little ones from offending.

"Let him know;" that is, "He may be well assured." It is the expression of a fact. There can be no doubt concerning the truth that follows. What a joy there is in such an assurance!

"That he which converteth;" that is, "turns the sinner from the error of his way." This is that very same sinner spoken of in the preceding verse, who is a sinner, and who has erred from the truth. He that turns a child of God from any wrong, either in faith or practice, saves that soul from death and hides a multitude of sins.

The word "convert" demands our attention for a little while. It is a word used quite often in the Scriptures, and always with the meaning of "turning about." It is a word used very commonly in these modern times; but, like nearly all scriptural truth, is misused and misunderstood. When we hear it said that at a modern revival so many souls have been converted, it is intended to be understood that so many souls have been regenerated, or born again. Now, this is never the meaning of the word "convert" in the Scriptures. The new birth is one thing, "conversion" is quite another. A man can be born again but once; he may be converted a thousand times. The new birth is God's work alone; it is from above, while men may convert their fellows. The new birth introduces its subject into the kingdom of heaven; conversion may be from good to evil, as well as from evil to good. It is not the new birth, then, that is meant here, but simply the turning of a believer from a wrong course.

And this is no trifling matter, because Paul has said, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. What a man soweth, that shall he reap. If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption; but if we sow to the Spirit, we shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." We have heard the matter spoken of as though it did not matter much how a believer lived, if heaven or hell did not depend upon it. But are christian peace and joy, and the honor of God, matters of small moment? And every transgression of every believer is to receive a just recompense of reward; and we are sure that the people of God learn sooner or later that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. To convert the erring brother, and save him from this, is certainly a matter of great importance. It is of great importance to him, to his brethren, and to the cause of truth.

"Shall save a soul from death." If we love a brother, shall we want to see him die? If we find ourselves feeling harshly or unkindly toward the wrong doer, so that we feel no disposition to try to save him from his fault, how dwells the love of God in us? No matter how grievous the brother's error may be, though it be such as will wholly destroy him, if continued in, still we have sinned just as grievously in the sight of God if we find no disposition in us to strive to restore and save him. We have no right to say that we have lost confidence in him, no right to hold aloof from him as though we were better than he. His sin cannot be condemned too strongly, but the sinner is a precious vessel of mercy. How blessed is he who turns this vessel of mercy away from his defilement!

The death spoken of in the text is not eternal death, but that death spoken of so frequently in the New Testament, into which believers fall by transgression, and which consists in a departure of peace and joy, and a separation from all that sense of communion with God which is found alone in the path of obedience. He that continues in his transgressions must die to the fellowship and privileges of the church of God, and to his own soul's comfort and rest. Now, he that turns the sinner from his wrong way, James here says, saves that one from all these evil results, and secures to him a continuation of his former blessings in the house of God.

"And shall hide a multitude of sins." In Proverbs x. 12 we read that "love covereth all sins," and in 1 Peter iv. 28 we read that "charity shall cover the multitude of sins." In both of the Scriptures the meaning is clear. It is that where love abounds in the heart toward any one, it conceals to our eyes the faults of that one. When we read in the Scriptures that our iniquity is "covered," the meaning is "hidden," "put out of sight." Through the blood of the atonement our sins are said to be covered or hidden. They are thus represented as being put out of the sight of our Judge, who by the prophet has declared that he will remember our sins and iniquities no more. All this shows that the ordinary meaning of covered or hidden is to put our sins out of sight or out of memory. In the expression above, however, while this idea is retained, yet it seems to us that the chief meaning is "to hinder," "to keep back from," and so to most effectually "hide" the multitude of sins. It is also true that, no matter how far one has gone astray, nor how great a multitude are his sins, when he is converted or restored from his wanderings, all the past is blotted out. Confession of sin and repentance, which simply means "doing so no more," show that there is a godly sorrow in the heart; and where this is the case there can be no more remembrance of sin by those who love God, by the church, or before the bar of conscience.

To convert the sinner from the error of his way means more than outward reformation. It implies a deep, solemn heartwork. God sees the heart, and does not need the fruit to tell him the nature of the tree; but we can only judge the fruit. Where we see the sinner forsaking his sin and confessing it, we must judge that the heart is sorrowful. We have no right to hold any other judgment; it is of the flesh if we do.

The object is, or should be, to convert and save the sinner, not destroy him. He surely has not sinned more than David, who was guilty of adultery, and afterward, in order to conceal it, of treachery and murder. Nor can he have erred more than Peter, who thrice denied the Lord with cursing; and until the sinner is more vile than this, nothing must be said about destroying him; but all effort should be to convert and save him.

We have not thought it needful to discuss the frequent assertion that this death means eternal death. The blood of Jesus Christ alone saves from this death; and none but Arminians hold such a notion of this text. The simple meaning is that, when a brother errs, we should endeavor to turn him from his wrong, since the end will be, if persisted in, to lose the joy of salvation, and to die to his former peace and rest in obedience.

GILBERT BEEBE.

ISAIAH XXIII. 20.

"Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities: thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken."

In the preceding chapter we have a prediction of the reign of our Lord Jesus Christ in righteousness, and of his princes who should rule in judgment, and of the important revolution of things at the time signified, when he should come and set up his kingdom. This righteous Potentate in his incarnation should be known as a hiding place from the wind, a covert from tempest, as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great Rock in a weary land. The eyes of them that see shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear shall hearken; the hearts also of the rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongues of the stammerers shall be ready to speak plainly. This wonderful change should be manifest on the part of the subjects of his kingdom, while carnal and ungodly religionists should be made manifest in their villainy and hypocrisy, uttering error against the Lord, to make empty the soul of the hungry, as the promulgation of error against the Lord and the churlish instruments of religious errorists always have a tendency to do. In connection with the rising government of the Redeemer, the prophetic eye looking down that vista of ages, is fixed upon the two descriptions of character that should be developed when Christ should thoroughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into his garner, and burn the chaff with unquenchable fire; when he should separate the precious from the vile, the sheep from the goats, the saints from hypocrites, and feed his flock like a shepherd, gather his sheep with his arm, and carry them in his bosom.

Zion, and Jerusalem in which Zion was situated, were typical of the spiritual kingdom of Christ, but in the type filled with carnal Israelites, and at the time referred to in the prediction occupied by scribes and Pharisees and hypocrites, serpents and vipers, as they were brought manifestly to light by our Lord when he was personally here in the flesh; when, notwithstanding all their religious pretensions, he told them plainly that they were of their father the devil, and the works of their father they would do. When Jesus came to reign in righteousness, those predictions began to be fulfilled. Sinners in Zion trembled, and fearfulness surprised the hypocrites. They were jealous of his advancement, and sought to evade those fearful predictions by putting him to death.

"Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities." What a spectacle was presented! The Zion of Jerusalem which then was, representing the covenant of works, gendering to bondage, and answering to the figure of Hagar, setting forth the legal covenant as Mount Sinai in Arabia; such was Jerusalem, like Hagar, in bondage with her children. Look upon her. See if there can be found in Zion any who are or can be justified by the deeds of the law, any who have the fear of God before their eyes, any who seek after God, or whose feet do not run swiftly to shed blood. Look upon her when all her rulers conspired against Christ, and when a war of extermination was opened upon all who owned him as their Lord and Master, and followed him as his disciples. Look upon her when her high priests and rulers, her nobles, her learned, her reputedly pious, and her aristocracy in general, were arrayed against the little flock of our divine Lord; and who, from what they could there see, would venture the prediction that the cause of the bleeding, dying Lamb of God should finally triumph over all the powers of darkness?

"The city of our solemnities." There stood the city of our God, in all the magnificence of the type. There stood the temple, consecrated to the service of the God of Jacob; there was the ark, the altar and the priest; there the city of David, the graves of the patriarchs, the tower of David and the consecrated vessels of the sanctuary. Look upon her, walk around her, tell her towers, and consider her palaces, and mark ye well her bulwarks.

"Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation." Not in the type but in the antitype, in the spiritual church of the living God, in the order and peace and quietude of the righteous administration of him whose name is Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Paul in his allegory speaks of "Jerusalem which is above," and which Jerusalem, he says, is the mother of all who, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. We think there can be no doubt that this is the Jerusalem to which the peace and quietude of the Messiah's reign is applied in our text; for the Jerusalem which was in bondage has long been demolished. In that David dwelt, but in this Jesus reigns, and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. Here the work of righteousness is peace, and the effect of righteousness is quietness and assurance forever. In this New Jerusalem is known the peace which Christ has made by the blood of the cross, reconciling all things to himself, of things in heaven and things in the earth, even in him.

"No fiery vengeance now,
No burning wrath comes down;
If justice calls for sinners' blood,
The Savior shows his own."

Here the law is honored, fulfilled, satisfied, and all its claims allowed and canceled. The justice of God not only allows but demands the complete justification of all for whom Jesus died. The habitation is quiet, subject to no invasion. God is himself a wall of fire round about it, and the glory in its midst. The love of God is shed abroad in the hearts of all the inhabitants, and they are constrained to love one another with a pure heart fervently; and the divine benediction is, "Peace be within thy walls."

"A tabernacle that shall not be taken down." This figure is taken from the tabernacle in the wilderness, to which frequent allusion is made in both Testaments, but always having a figurative reference to the gospel church, or spiritual kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Moses was specially charged to make it according to the pattern showed him in the mount. The materials of which it was made, the plan and manner of the workmanship, together with the use for which it was designed, were all minutely specified in the pattern, and under no circumstances was the man of God allowed to digress from the instructions given him. Thus with the church and body of our glorious Redeemer: its composition, members and fashion were established in the mount of God, and in his book all the members were written, when as yet none of them were in manifestation to any but the omniscient eye of God. The tabernacle in the wilderness was a portable building, but it had often to be taken down and set up, for the law could make nothing perfect; but this tabernacle shall never be taken down. There can be no occasion for it. Its maker and builder is God; and what he hath joined together, let no man put asunder. Her location cannot be improved by any removal; she is beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion. She cannot be made to shine in any greater beauty by any change; for Zion is already the perfection of beauty, and perfect beauty cannot be improved. When from her militant state the church or Zion of God shall pass to the full enjoyment of her heavenly inheritance above, she shall not be separated, for she shall never be taken down. She shall be taken up, but never shall she be taken down. Old Babylon, which will-worshipers mistake for Zion, is constantly on the tilt, to keep up with the spirit of the times; but Zion admits of no change; the church of God is precisely what she was when first organized; and any and every community claiming to be the church, which is not what the church was at her organization, is not the Zion of our God.

"Not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed." The stakes of a tabernacle, like those of a tent, mark out the exact boundary or ground occupied by the tabernacle. In order to enlarge or contract the dimension of a tabernacle, the stakes must be removed. But as this church was as large in the election of grace as she shall be in the consummation of her glory, there is no possibility of expansion or contraction. The area being already staked out in the wisdom and immutability of God, these stakes must remain as God has planted them. Men have racked their brains to invent ways or means for removing the stakes of Zion. Some wish to set them a little farther out, and others would have them to include the whole family of mankind, but God has set them to inclose the election of grace. To remove them, Mission societies and a host of kindred institutions have been invented in modern times, as well as thousands of schemes and projects of the ancients; but up to this hour God's word in our text remains true, and not one of her stakes has yet been removed. Were we to understand these stakes to represent election, predestination, sovereign love, redemption by the blood of Christ, sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, &c., these evidently mark out all the ground which the tabernacle of our God can or ever shall occupy; and where is the power that can ever remove any of these stakes which bound the church of God?

"Neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken." The cords of the tabernacle are those which connect the curtains with the stakes, so as to secure them in their place. If these cords could be broken, the tabernacle no longer supported by the stakes would immediately fall; for like the church, which it represents, it cannot stand of itself. The very first wind would blow it down if the cords were broken or the stakes displaced. But, thanks be to God, this cannot be done. By the cords may we not understand our vital union and relationship to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Spirit's work in our regeneration, the faith of God's elect which clings to the stakes of Zion? and amidst the heaviest storms, the loudest tempests and the fiercest trials, the saints are made to triumph over all difficulties, and to stand erect, while all who depend on such stakes as free will and human agency shall sink down with old Babylon, to rise no more forever?

In conclusion, allowing the church to be the tabernacle which God has pitched, and not man, and that her destination is immutably fixed, so that none of her stakes can be removed, nor any of her cords broken, must we not conclude that the church of God is where she was on the day of Pentecost, steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayer? If one of the stakes or any of her cords could be removed or broken, why not all? If apostolic doctrine and gospel ordinances, such as baptism and the breaking of bread, were among the stakes of Zion eighteen hundred years ago, can any order of religionists at this day who reject these ordinances, or this doctrine, be the church of God? Are not the immutable stakes and the unbroken cords the unmistakable evidences of the validity of our claim to be the church of the living God, the ground and pillar of the truth? If these be admitted as our views, let us contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints, and stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled with the yoke of bondage.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE.

WE are now prepared to send the above named book, postage and expressage paid by us, to any address, at publisher's prices. All who are acquainted with the work will doubtless agree that it is well worth the price charged. See notice on last page.

CORRESPONDENCE.

I am not a subscriber to your paper, but my father takes it, and I have the privilege of reading it, and I greatly enjoy it. The Lord guiding my pen, I shall now try to relate the reason of my hope in Christ. It is but small, yet it is more precious than mines of gold, for without it I feel that I could not live.

From my earliest recollection I had very serious thoughts about my future welfare, and when very young I began to try to live a moral life. I thought that if I commenced when young I would grow up in the knowledge of Christ, and in the course of time would become very great in eyes of christian people. I put forth all my efforts in this way, and after a short time had ceased from all my bad habits, as I thought, and would often compare my outward appearance with those who professed to be christian people. After about three years, I believe, I united with the Campbellites, when at the age of thirteen years. I was very sober in my appearance, and would often be approved by the older members. They would often tell me that I was a noble boy, and that I would make a great mark in the world. I never said anything to my parents about my intention of uniting with that people, and when they were told of what I had done they both wept aloud for sorrow of heart. They were both members of the Baptist Church at that time, and tried to talk with me, but I shunned them as regarding their questions, as I would a den of lions. O how I detested the Baptists, and wished them out of existence. But all this brought no change in my mind, except the tears of my parents. I felt sorry that I had not told them of it before I joined the Campbellites. I shall not attempt to relate what transpired during the next two years. After those two years had expired I began to feel an uneasy sensation coming over me. I strove to overcome it, but all to no effect. All my powers proved fruitless and of no effect. This feeling gradually grew heavier and heavier for about a year and a half. O what anguish of heart I underwent, and what a troubled mind. I became so exercised in this way that I could not work, and my hours were spent in sorrow that no language is able to express. It seemed that I could see myself in the very jaws of hell. At times I could only see a dim light shining over the top of the wall that surrounded the awful pit into which I had fallen. Often I would find myself looking up to see if I could catch one ray of light, hoping that it might illuminate my darkened mind and speak peace to my troubled breast. During the period of about one month I was in this troubled state of mind, during which time it seemed that if I ever prayed it was that I might die and be cast from the face of the earth; for all nature seemed to look upon me with a look of scorn and derision. I had given up all my efforts in trying to do good, and deeply realized that every act only drove me deeper in despair. Finally one night I dreamed that three angels came to the door of my bed-room about ten o'clock in the day, and I was so joyful in seeing them that I went to embrace one of them that stood nearest me; but I could not. I then said, "Lord, bless me." The angel then spoke for the first time, and said, "The Lord has blessed you." It seemed as if a light shone around me above the brightness of the sun, and it seemed that I was carried away in ecstasy. When I awoke in the morning my burden still remained, but it had decreased, and gradually left me, as near as I can remember, about six months after I had that dream. I then felt calm and serene for a short time, except a longing to be baptized. This desire increased until I followed those inward promptings. This occurred when I was seventeen years old, the date being the third Sunday in April, 1839. I then felt a joy that no language can express. O how happy I felt. I thought my hardships were all gone, and that I would always be happy. But alas! I am so often gone astray, my feet follow in by and forbidden paths, which causes me to groan. I am so far from duty, and so negligent in my duties, that I suffer severely from it. I hope the good Lord will lead me safely through all dangers, temptations and trials in this life, and give me grace to overcome all things; for I am but a worm of the dust; yet the Lord can make me competent for all my work as he sees fit. O to be reconciled to his will in all things.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all,

FRANCIS M. FURNISH.

JOHN VI. 60.

"THIS is a hard saying: who can hear it?"

The above are the words of some of the nominal disciples of him who came from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, traveling in the greatness of his strength, speaking in righteousness, and mighty to save to the uttermost all that come to the Father by him. All the fullness of the Godhead bodily dwelt in him, and he must have understood the principles of the gospel as well as any man that ever lived upon the earth. He preached the doctrine of discriminating grace to the people. He told them in plain terms, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." This was in substance absolute predestination. Those nominal disciples were uncircumcised in their hearts. If they had lived in this degenerate age of the world they would have exclaimed,

This is Hardshell doctrine. Away with it. Jesus further tells them, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." This was a puzzle to them; and although they had crossed the sea to be with him, and to eat bread and fish, they turned away and left him, and put away the truth he had told them as hard sayings; and the question was propounded, "Who can hear it?" The answer is, None but those who are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. These are they which follow Jesus through evil as well as good report. These are ever found contending that there is nothing too hard for the Lord; not even the predestination of all things. These uncircumcised disciples wondered how Jesus could give them his flesh to eat; but not so with the true disciples, for they had the mind of Christ; and with this mind they could believe on him, and believe all that he said. "To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them which believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." And so it is to-day, that none receive Christ as he is set forth in the gospel but those who are born of God. "This is a hard saying: who can hear it?"

When this Jesus had fulfilled his work of the ministry and his sufferings on earth, he ascended to the Father; but he left chosen witnesses to still proclaim the mighty truths he had promulgated. They were not to turn to the right hand nor to the left, and where the Spirit was to go they went. They were subject to no earthly synod nor missionary board. They fulfilled the functions of their office, and have left upon record a sufficient guide for all that succeed them in this calling. These inspired witnesses agree in all the fundamental doctrine of Christ, and all spoke and wrote of the true doctrine of discriminating grace, and were not reserved in telling us that "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." "What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?" This is a hard saying: who can hear it?"

The flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life, has never been taken away

yet; and the gulf between Abraham and the rich man has not been filled up, so that any can pass over either way; and until this is done, the Arminian system is a farce. They may eat fish and bread, and have a bag full of money, but they cannot save a single soul; and when their big tower falls, I am fearful that they will land where the rich man is, and still want to carry on their long-cherished effort system, as the rich man did. He was the same old missionary after he got into the fire; no change in him; and he wanted to get Abraham into his system; but Abraham was too old and wise to believe his doctrine. This rich man was a Jew. He called Abraham father. He must have belonged to that party who make proselytes, and when they had made one he was two-fold more the child of hell than they themselves were. He had five brethren that he wanted converted; but Abraham knew they were not in the covenant, and would not believe though one rose from the dead. There were five foolish virgins. If they ever became wise we have no account of it. "This is a hard saying: who can hear it?" "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." "And none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?" Our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased."

Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

MENDOTA, Ill., Dec. 13, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As my subscription soon expires, please find inclosed a Post-office Order for two dollars, in payment for the SIGNS another year. It seems as though I cannot do without the family paper, as it contains almost all the preaching we get. I want to take the paper as long as I can see to read it. I think the SIGNS contains and holds forth the blessed gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. O how cheering it is to us to read the communications, and the experiences of brethren all over the land, all being taught by the same Spirit, that salvation is by grace, and grace alone. O glorious theme, free, sovereign grace, unmerited by man. No man has any hand in the work. The salvation of the soul is all of God. Paul says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." O what a blessing it is that it is free, because we could not merit it by our works. All that we have to depend upon is the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ our Lord. Dear brethren, how prone we are to wander into by and forbidden paths. We have to trust alone in the living God.

O how I do wish that all the subscribers to the SIGNS would pay up their back subscriptions. I do not know how an Old School Baptist can fail to do so. May the good Lord put it into their hearts to pay up. Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name. With love to God and all the heirs of immortal glory,

JAMES WOOD.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Lucetta Hardin was born Oct. 1st, 1831, and died April 13th, 1896, aged 64 years, 6 months and 12 days.

She was united in marriage to Wm. E. Hardin on March 28th, 1850. To this union were born eleven children, four having preceded her to the grave. Seven living children, all present at her funeral, thirteen grandchildren, three brothers and two sisters, with a large number of other relatives and friends, are left to mourn her death. She was not a member of the church, but was a firm believer in the saving grace of God through the righteousness of Christ only. She expressed herself in her afflictions to those present, saying, "How blessed it will be to meet to part no more," giving all glory and honor to God in the salvation of helpless sinners. She was a woman highly respected in the community, and beloved by all who knew her.

Her funeral was very largely attended on the 15th, and a sermon was preached on the occasion in the Lutheran meeting-house in Ewing by Elder G. N. Tusing; after which the remains were interred in the Ewing cemetery, to await the coming of him who has declared, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Nancy (Imel) Rugg was born in Perry Co., Ohio, March 2d, 1825, and was married to Samuel Rugg on Sept. 24th, 1842. To them were born seven sons and three daughters, all of whom (except one son, who died in infancy), with her husband, survive her.

She received a hope in Jesus through grace many years ago, and became a member of the Monday Creek Primitive Baptist Church, in Perry Co., Ohio, about the year 1854, and was ever afterward a meek and humble follower of her Redeemer, adorning the profession she had made. Her seat was seldom vacant until within the past few years, when she was unable to attend regularly on account of failing health. She was a kind wife and loving mother, and truly may her children rise up and call her blessed. She departed this life and fell asleep in Jesus on April 26th, 1896, aged 71 years, 1 month and 24 days.

This dear mother in Israel came to the grave in a full age. Her deeds of kindness to the brethren, and her patience and faithfulness to God, were exemplary. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." But words cannot describe the quiet lives in out-of-the-way places of those who are hid with Christ in God.

The funeral services were opened by Elder J. C. Hanover by reading and offering prayer. Words of comfort were spoken to the sorrowing husband and friends by Elder John Prichard from the words, "By grace are ye saved." The remains were tenderly laid to rest in the Alexandria cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

J. A. BLACK.

"Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his days also like the days of a hireling? As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work."—Job vii. 1, 2.

Departed this world, Mr. Alexander Wilson, in the 66th year of his age, leaving a widow, two sons and one daughter.

The deceased made no public profession, but had established as a business man a character of uprightness in the neighborhood where he lived, having gathered a comfortable living by hard labor and economy, and died lamented. His place of meeting was the Welsh Tract Church, while able to attend. He was a man of few words on the subject, yet gave evidence of being a serious thinker. During his last years he was afflicted with paralysis, from the effects of which he gradually failed unto the end, which we believe was calm and peaceful, expressing himself as being patient and undisturbed. He passed away on the 20th of January last, his family being present. Some remarks were made by the writer to a large gathering of friends at the house. His remains were carried to the Welsh Tract cemetery, where he now lies sleeping, until that hour when they that are in their graves shall hear God's voice, and come forth.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

It falls my duty to write the demise of sister Mariah Montgomery, which occurred (of congestion of the lungs, after an illness of only three and one-half days' duration) on March 15th, 1896, at the residence of W. H. Ransdell, near New Castle, Henry Co., Ky.

She was born near Clay Village, Shelby Co., Ky., Nov. 29th, 1807, and the last one of twelve children of Daniel and Hannah Dodd. She was the second wife of brother Wm. Montgomery, he having first married her older sister in the flesh. To her were born two children, Henry Clay and Jephthah Dudley Montgomery, both now dead. The last few years of her life she had made her home with her two grandchildren, Wm. J. Montgomery and Mrs. Mary D. Ransdell, in Henry Co. She joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Bethel, near Clay Village, Shelby Co., about sixty-five years ago, and remained a worthy member until the Lord pleased to call her from our midst to the life where sin nor sorrow shall ever annoy the children of God.

"Grandma," as she was familiarly known, always bore the marks of a true follower of Christ, being of no excitable or envious disposition, always meek and mild, and never murmured whatever the ills of life, believing that all things worked together for good to them that love God. The Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES alone were her reading and the ones of her counsel, from which she did in her last moments quote passage after passage so beautifully of the things of Christ and the blessed beyond, Christ being the only Savior that she ever knew, and saying that she was ready to go. As the life she had lived in meekness drew near to a close, she calmly and sweetly passed into the presence of her blessed Master and the loved ones gone before.

Her funeral was preached at the house by Elder P. W. Sawin (her pastor), from the words, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." Her remains were deposited in the New Castle cemetery, there to rest until bidden to rise, changed and fashioned like Christ's own glorious body. May we, as this dear one, ever be humble followers of the Lamb, ready to go when the summons come from the Father, and enter that beautiful city, to go out no more forever.

Yours in hope of life eternal,

ERNEST F. RANSDALL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME THOUGHTS.

"No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." How was this! There were many then standing near Jesus who had taken great pains to get where he was. Had they not come unto him? No, not in the sense in which he was speaking. They were far away from him as the Son of God and as the Savior of poor sinners. But they did not know this. They had no thought but that they had come to him in every sense in which any could approach him. The natural man knows nothing of any difficulty in the way of coming to Jesus except what lies in his own will. They were ready to offer their services, and regarded themselves as qualified to be of benefit to him. "What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" Naturally we are willing, nay, anxious, to work for God. That would bring him in debt to us, and give us a right to his favor, and to his rewards; for "To him that worketh the reward is not counted of grace, but of debt." But when "the work of God" is wrought in our hearts, and we are made by his mighty power to believe in Jesus (for "this is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent"), then we know that we have no work given us to do for Jesus, but that he came to do a glorious work for us, to save us from our sins; then we know that the justly condemned sinner can do no work of righteousness, but must suffer the righteous judgment of the law; then we learn that the Lord imputeth righteousness without works to that people whom he hath blessed, and for whose sins the dear Savior died.

It is the living man, the man of grace, who sees the great distance between Jesus and the sinner, a distance that no man has power to overcome. The spiritual man, the poor, mourning sinner, whom the Father has already drawn to Jesus, often feels very far away from the dear Savior because of his sins and unworthiness, even after he has blessedly known him, and often wonders and questions whether indeed he has ever been brought near to him at all. While the natural man, in his pride and self-confidence, is as near as he desires to be, and thinks that he is certainly commanding the attention and admiration of the Lord, the poor soul who knows the plague of his own heart shrinks from anything that will draw attention to himself as presuming to claim the notice of so holy and lovely a being, and is filled with wonder and surprise when the dear Lord does show him a token for good.

The disciples are often in such a carnal state that they are really far away from Jesus experimentally, while the shrinking outcasts, the poor, leprous creatures, who feel themselves to be so full of loathsome diseases that they are sure he must despise and abhor them, are very near to him, very close to his loving heart, though they know it not, and will surely receive his healing and saving power. "Who touched me?" What a wonderful scene is that! To the poor, shrinking souls who have long felt the painful disease of sin, and have proved that all the work of earthly physicians only make the malady worse, this will always be a most wonderful scene, and a cause for trembling hope and joy to them. The multitude were all about him, and thronged him, and pressed him; and they were talking, and asking questions, no doubt, and jostling him as they surged around him; and yet he said, "Who touched me?" There was a sense in which, just at that time, only one of all that thronging multitude was touching him, and that was a poor, weak, suffering woman, who had been long sick, and had tried many physicians in vain; and she seems to have been creeping secretly along through the crowd, endeavoring to keep out of sight, only intent upon touching the hem of his garment as soon as she could get near enough to stretch out her trembling arm so that her fingers might reach that far without attracting notice. And she did escape the notice of even the disciples. Even Peter had not seen her movements, or likely he would have rebuked her and tried to send her away, as on former occasions. How good it is for such poor creatures that it is not to men that we are to go with our infirmities and burdens of disease, but to Jesus, the One who knows all our troubles and pains, who has felt all our sins and temptations, and who has infinite pity and compassion, and who never fails to notice the poor, seeking soul, and is never too much engaged about more important things to give all his attention, and all his sympathy, and all his love, to the poorest creature that ever sought his help.

What a wonderful thing is that faith that draws us to Jesus. How little we know what a glorious and sublime principle and power it is while we are led by it, going along our way slowly, hesitatingly, fearfully, but still going on undeviatingly toward Jesus. That faith saved the woman. Jesus gave it to her before she reached the multitude that thronged him and that faith brought her to him.

Only by faith does any one come near to his most blessed Majesty. The multitude were not near him, for they had no faith. The disciples many times had not faith in exercise, and so were not close to him. Peter was nearer to him when he was crying bitterly than when he said, "I will follow thee to prison and to death;" nearer when he began to sink in the waves, and cried, "Lord, save me," than when he said, "Send her back, for she crieth after us."

The most profound doctrine of God our Savior is embraced and comprehended in the experience of the little child of grace, and to such, and to such only, the preaching of that doctrine thus experienced is edifying and comforting. The doctrine is not preached by the servants of God to the little children to whom they are sent as a system of theology, but as food for them. The Lord gives the word, directs as to the time of preaching and the place, gives the liberty of soul and of utterance, and also gives it place and power in the heart, and commends it to the understanding which he has given to those who "are in him that is true," that they "should know him that is true, even his Son Jesus Christ, who is the true God and eternal life."—1 John v. 20.

There is a deep and mysterious sense in which the saints were one with the Son of God from everlasting. Such is my belief, as sweetly expressed in Kent's hymn,

"In union with the Lamb,
From condemnation free,
The saints from everlasting were,
And shall forever be."

I do not intend to speak upon this part of the subject at present, only to mention it, and give it the place that belongs to it, as the first, the fundamental consideration, the primary cause of all that sweet soul union with Jesus that is experienced by the saints in time, and which is the great and crowning joy and comfort of their lives while in this world. Adam when created, before his wife was separately manifested, I understand as "the figure of him that was to come," and as representing the wonderful mystery of the oneness of Christ and his people in their spiritual existence before the foundation of the world.

"The woman is of the man."—1 Cor. xi. 8. She was at the first in him, bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh. When separately manifested she was still one flesh with him, and he knew her as such. She went into transgression, being deceived. Her husband followed her, not because he was deceived, but because of his love for her, they still being one. So Jesus followed his bride in the transgression. He loved her and gave himself for her, not that she might be his bride, but because she was his bride, that he might cleanse and sanctify her, and present her unto himself a glorious church; that his eternal love for her might be manifested, that she might rejoice in the fullness of the joy of the holy marriage relation with him. His love for her could never be increased, for it was perfect, like himself, from all eternity. Because of that love he drew her with loving-kindness.—Jer. xxxi. Because of that love the Father draws each one of his chosen people to Christ, that they may know in their own souls the wonderful love with which he has loved them from everlasting.

It is this drawing of poor souls that I love to talk about and write about to those who have felt it, when I myself feel the power of it. This experience of the great and wonderful mystery of godliness has been the cause of my greatest troubles and afflictions, I believe, for more than fifty years, and the source of my chief joys and comforts, I hope, for more than thirty years, during which time my comfort and my business have chiefly been to tell of what great things the Lord has done for me, for us, and to hear of the same from others of the family of God; and to preach the gospel of God's grace and proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ, as with the ability that God gives me, which has seemed most of the time very small and to little profit, but sometimes very great and wonderful, as the Spirit has taken of the things of Jesus and shown them unto me, and given me liberty to declare them.

The first effect of the Spirit's work in drawing the Lord's people to Christ appears to be always to make the distance between him and them appear to them greater and greater; for they see and feel more and more of their own sinfulness and condemnation, while he is holy and righteous and glorious in their view. Those who warn them of their danger of being lost, and advise and urge them to come to Christ, and to seek salvation, seem not to see their condition nor to understand their case. They feel themselves already condemned, and cannot go to Christ, for he is holy. A man condemned cannot go to righteousness; cannot be holy. He cannot remove his guilt. Those who preach that a sinner can go to Christ do not know him, or they would know that a sinner must be able to change his own condition as a sinner, and become holy before he can go to Christ; and this he cannot do any more than an "Ethiopian can change his skin, or a leopard his spots."

But the Father in drawing this poor soul, making him love holiness, hunger and thirst after righteousness, hate evil, and know the plague of his own heart, and thus is drawing him away from himself. In his own good time and way the dear Lord reveals Christ to this poor, mourning soul as his righteousness and salvation. Then he is at peace. The conscience loses its fearful burden, and is made sweet and clean by the cleansing power of the precious blood of Christ. Then we are made to feel near to Jesus. He was near us all the time, but we were not near him experimentally. He was near when we called upon him; for he says, "I am near to them that call upon me; to them that call upon me in truth." He was near when our hearts were broken because of our sins and villainess, and we saw no way of salvation; for "he is near to them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit. But now he has shown us all his love, and brought us near to him. Joseph was near to his brethren when they thought that they were as far from him as life from death; but when he said, "I am Joseph your brother," then they were near to him.

Now sin is gone, and that alone separated between us and Jesus, and we are feeling near to him. But "when sins and fears prevailing rise," then how far away we seem. When we live after the flesh, how quickly he is gone. We seek him about the city, in the streets, and by night upon our beds, but we cannot find him whom our soul loveth. When he appears again it is to "Sieve our souls with sweet surprise,

And draw with loving bands;
Divine compassion in his eyes,
And pardon in his hands."

When he puts his hand in by the hole of the door, shows us again some of his loving work which he has done for us, then our hearts go out to him, and we cannot rest in any worldly pleasure or business a moment until we find him whom our soul loveth.

Transgressions that bring guilt upon the conscience, wanderings after worldly enjoyments, entanglement in any worldly concerns, and an absorbing interest that takes away the mind from spiritual things, and affords no time for attending to them, all this tends to a separation between us and our Savior, and causes us to become farther and farther away from him in our lives, and to lose the relish and desire for the things of his kingdom. If it were not for his mercy and faithfulness we should be left eternally to our own ways. But in his own time he kills us to worldly things, as he did of old. "When he slew them, then they sought him, and returned and inquired early after God."

When we feel that we must be far away from the Lord, because we are so unworthy, then we are nearest to him. It is then that the conscience is tender in his fear, and we walk softly before him.

Feeling unworthy is very different from acting unworthy. A member of a church who feels to be very unworthy of the ordinances of the church, the fellowship of the saints and the favor of God, is not the one who will be found eating and drinking at the Lord's table unworthily, or walking disorderly.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send you a letter I received from brother Roten Hurst, for insertion in the SIGNS. I have his consent for its publication.

As ever, yours in christian love and fellowship,

JAMES C. WALTON.

PATTONSVILLE, Va., Sept., 1895.

MY VERY DEAR BROTHER:—I have been thinking of writing to you ever since the association. Why I desire to write to one with whom I have had such a slight acquaintance, and to whom I am no kin in the flesh, and am fearful that I am no kin to in the Spirit, I cannot tell; yet the desire has been so strong at times that I almost had to stop my business and write, in order to relieve my mind. Do you ever feel in this way? If you have, you know something about my feelings. I want to tell you how I enjoyed the association. It was a feast of fat things to my hungering and thirsting soul; just such a feast as I have been searching and inquiring for for fifteen long and weary years. The Lord is working all things after the counsel of his own will; and although we may be deprived of enjoying the sweet and soothing sound of the gospel for many years, nevertheless he will, at his own good and appointed time, gather every one of the lambs into the fold. I felt at the close of the first sermon that I had been amply repaid for my long and weary ride over the rough mountains to the association; but the whole thing was a feast to me. I love to hear of salvation by grace, and not of works; for I know that when works come in they cut me off entirely, because I have been trying all my life to do one good act on my part, and have failed every time. Whenever we make salvation conditional we destroy all hope of a single soul ever being saved. God does not work upon conditions. All his promises are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. God never desired to save a single individual but what he saved him. He said by the prophet, "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things which are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." If all the counsel of God (which means his design and purpose) and all his pleasure shall be accomplished, how is it possible for anything to transpire, either in time or eternity, contrary to his eternal will and purpose? If it is God's desire or will to save the world, he will certainly save the world, because he says he will do all his pleasure, and every one of his designs and purposes shall stand. Yet we have men all over this land and country of ours declaring that God desires to save everybody, and that he is wooing and beseeching them to be saved; that he is sending his ministers in every direction, in order to convert souls to Christ; that these ministers are collecting money, establishing Sunday Schools, theological seminaries, and a thousand other means, to advance and carry on the great work of salvation. They say that hundreds and thousands of poor souls are burning in the flames of an eternal hell, simply because man has failed to contribute a portion of his means to carry on this grand work, as they call it. Thus they deny the mediatorial work of our Savior, and making man not only the savior of himself, but also the savior of his friends and neighbors. But God sets his eternal veto on all such false and God-dishonoring doctrine when he says, "I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah," &c. "For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people; and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Yes, brother Walton, I believe that Jesus Christ redeemed every member of his body when he shed his precious blood upon the tree of the cross; that the church stands justified before him to-day; that in the dispensation of the fullness of time this redemption will be manifested to them in the new birth, and then will they be made to know that they are heirs of God and joint-heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. But we might ask the question, How do we know that we belong to that heavenly and redeemed family? How do we know that we have been translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son? How do we know that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life? Yes, dear brother, these are questions that crowd upon our minds, and questions that I have never answered satisfactorily to myself. But there are some things that I do know. I know that the things I once loved I now hate. Paul says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." It does seem to me that I have a love for the children of God that I have for no other people on earth. If it had not been so I would not be writing this letter to-day. There is another thing that I know; I know that I love to hear the gospel preached. There is no other food that feeds my soul and cheers me up along my rugged pathway through life, like the sound of the gospel. There is another thing that I know, and painfully; that is, the very things that I desire to do, I do not; and the things that I would not do, those are the very things I am doing. These are some of the things that I do know; but whether I am a child of God or not I cannot say. Whether I was chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world or not is a serious and doubtful question with me. Paul says, "We are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Then, dear brother, we go stumbling along through this troublesome world, hoping that when this mortal life shall cease we have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Dear brother, it does me good to write upon the things of the Spirit, especially when I think I am writing to one who has been born of the Spirit and can enjoy spiritual things. I am often made to meditate upon the deep things of the Spirit of God. I am often lost in wonder and amazement when I find how little I know of these things. When I read the writings of many who write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I feel that it is folly in me to ever take my pen or pencil to try to express what feeble thoughts I have; but if I can only drop one crumb that will feed one poor, hungry soul, I feel that I will be amply paid for all my trouble; for I know how at times I enjoy even the smallest crumb that falls from my Master's table. Just here seems to come in the blessedness of the gospel, to feed the lambs and sheep of the church of God. The Lord says by the prophet, "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain." Mark the language: the trumpet is to be blown in Zion; not out of Zion. The alarm is to be sounded in the holy mountain; not out of the holy mountain. God's ministers are placed upon the walls of Zion, and are commanded to feed the sheep; not to feed the world, as Arminians say. Paul says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them; because they are spiritually discerned."

My dear brother, do you think what a solemn and weighty responsibility rests upon God's ministers, and what a glorious privilege it is to preach the gospel? How beautiful are the feet of those who preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things. Yes, this gospel must be preached in Zion and to the children of Zion. Did you ever think what a beautiful city that is which you inhabit, and in which you are to proclaim the good news of salvation by grace, and grace alone? What does the prophet say of this city? "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah, We have a strong city, salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks."—Isa. xxvi. 1. David says, "Walk about Zion, and go round about her, tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following. For this God is our God forever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death."—Psa. xlviii. 14. And God by the mouth of the prophet Isaiah declares concerning the inhabitants of that city, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires; and I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."—Isa. lvi. 11-13. Yes, blessed be the name of God, there is not a single child belonging to that kingdom but what shall receive instruction from their spiritual King. A mother may forget her suckling child, "Yet will not I forget thee," saith the Lord. "Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me."—Isa. xlix. 15, 16. For fear I may weary you with my scribble I will close. I have written as my mind directed. If you think this letter will be enjoyed by any of the dear children of God you may send it to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

ROTEN HURST.

Ghent, Ky., Dec. 6, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I am in receipt of a very precious letter from brother J. G. Sawin, of Mattoon, Ill., which I inclose to you, hoping you will give it room in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have read it with intense interest and comfort, for the reason that in describing his travels through this land of gloom, darkness and sorrow he gives a graphic description of the road I have traveled these many years, and especially during the last several months, in which I have fully realized that sin is mixed with all I do; and when I would do good, evil is present with me. If one who from the pulpit can comfort God's dear people by giving them the precious truth of the gospel with such force and power as I have often heard brother Sawin do, is often down in the valley, weeping on account of sin, as I find myself daily to be, might I not take courage and press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus? But I am made to wonder at the following language of brother Sawin in his letter: "I have thought of you often in the past few weeks, and have desired of the Lord that I might be as spiritually minded and given to all and every good work as you are." Ah, dear brother, you greatly misjudge me. Darkness and gloom spiritually are daily my companions; and so few, if any, are the rays of light and joy that penetrate the darkness and sorrow which surround me, that I am often made to inquire, Are there any others like me? Surely those who are expecting to reach the realms of immortal glory by their good works bear no resemblance to me; for I know that if I am saved it is a sinner saved by grace. But I will say no more.

Your brother, I hope,

H. COX.

Mattoon, Ill., Dec. 1, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER COX:—I thought when I received your last letter that I would certainly answer promptly; but in this I have, as is often the case with me, failed to perform my vows. Outside of the riches of God's grace, how deplorable the condition of poor, weak, finite creatures would be! The wonderful depths of his love, wisdom and truth are all that have ever kept me, a poor, miserable and unworthy creature, from being swallowed up in the vortex of unbelief and sin. I have read your letters to me, and many others published in the SIGNS, with interest and comfort, and have wondered at the display of spiritual light and strength, burdened as you are with the weight of fourscore years or more; but then is it not true that as the sight grows dim, and our interest in worldly things becomes less, in the same proportion our interest in heavenly things becomes intensified? It is the flesh, and the delusive things of the world, that give us so much pain and distress. This causes us to see as through a glass darkly. With me, however, there is so much of the time that the dark veil is drawn before my eyes. Thus my spiritual sight becomes very dim. I have been vain enough sometimes to think that I could tear this veil away, and once more stand in the unclouded light of the Sun of righteousness. Nought but disappointment awaited me. The gloom only became the more intense. I sank so low that the waves almost met over my head. There seemed to be no deliverance for me. All my own resources were completely exhausted. Every refuge of lies had failed. The Bible was a sealed book; no consolation for me in all its words of truth. Grief takes possession of my soul. I wept when I remembered Zion; when I thought of the days when with the saints I could look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities, and partake of the solemn feasts spread for the Lord's anointed. It is not now as it was then. But is there no one who can take the book and loose the seals thereof? Cannot he who commanded the light to shine out of darkness do it? Man with all his boasted power and scientific research cannot do it. He has never written one spiritual sentence in the heart; neither has he ever imparted a ray of light to relieve the darkness of the soul. All this I had vainly tried. Helpless, but with sorrow and contrition of soul, I am made to cry out, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance." A voice breaks through the thick darkness of unbelief, and I hear a shout of victory as the heavenly messenger announces the wonderful tidings that the Lion of the tribe of Judah hath prevailed to loose the seals, and to open the book and look thereon. How wonderful and majestic are all his mighty works! He opens, and none can shut; he shuts, and none can open. The Lord's children know this by experience. When the Lord has sealed up their understanding, O how hard they have tried to break the seals that bound them in darkness. How vain their efforts. Nothing short of the voice that comes as the voice of a great trumpet can break the seal which the Lord's hand has affixed.

My dear old brother, I have thought of you often in the past few weeks, and have desired of the Lord that I might be as spiritually minded and given to all and every good work as you are. How glad I should be to see you once more in the flesh. I had hoped that I might meet you some time during the past year at Little Flock, but such was not my privilege. The brethren there informed me in September that they had almost given up seeing you there any more, owing to the long distance and your extreme age. It is sad for us to think that we shall never meet those whom we love any more on earth; but this sadness is turned into joy when we think of the riches of God's grace which reunites us in the world to come. Then mortality shall have put on immortality, and death will have been completely swallowed up of life, and such a thing as sickness, sorrow or the pain of parting shall never be felt. May God grant you, my brother, an unclouded view of the realm of immortal bliss as you stand on the storm-beaten shores of time ready to be offered, the time of your departure being at hand. May I not hope to have a line from you, telling me how you do? My regards to your dear companion.

Your brother in hope,

J. G. SAWIN.

SUNSET, Texas, Dec. 15, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I will send you my remittance, and also forward you a letter written by our beloved brother, G. B. Counts, for publication. Your brother in hope,

J. A. CAMPBELL.

ANDERSON, Oklahoma, Nov. 2, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS OF BETHEL CHURCH:—As I cannot be with you, and enjoy the sweet blessing of God in mingling our voices in singing praises to him who made all things, according as he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord before the world was, therefore I thought if God would illuminate my feeble mind I would try to pen you a few thoughts, desiring the good Lord to bless the same to the comfort and consolation of Bethel Church, and to all who may read or hear this letter.

I want to talk to you about Jesus, who is God our Savior. What is a savior? It is one who saves, and not one who tries to save. The angel said to Joseph, the husband of Mary, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." Did he save them? or did he fail to do what the heavenly messenger declared he would do? We hear Jesus saying, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." He also said to his Father, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." What was that work? To save his people, his bride. He was her head and life; therefore his bride is the world he saved. His work is complete; and it was without our help. He did not need us nor our money to help save his people, for that would dishonor him. God has, without our help, placed us in the building as it has pleased him. When we go to build a house out of logs we first select our timber, and then we have to hew it, and so we hew to the line. But we do not hew one side, and then say to the log, "If you will turn over we will hew the other side," as the Arminians teach; but we hew both sides, and place it in the building to our purpose. So salvation is not according to our works, but according to God's own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ

AN OPEN LETTER.

(Nehemiah vi. 5.)

SISTER Mary Hill, of Hopewell, N. J., has requested some reflections from us upon the above-named portion of Scripture, and in reply we feel like suggesting one or two considerations.

The full time had come in the purpose of God when Israel was to be restored again to their own land, and was to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, which had been overthrown. The decree had gone forth that as many as chose should be allowed to return from the captivity. For a full narrative of this restoration read the books of Ezra and Nehemiah and the prophecy of Zechariah. But though a portion of Israel had now returned, and under their leaders, Joshua, Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zechariah and others, had begun to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, yet their troubles were by no means ended. They had been redeemed from captivity, but by no means had they got beyond their warfare. Israel must encounter a warfare as long as life shall endure; and so in this book of Nehemiah we are told of a threefold opposition to them and their work. Sanballat, Tobiah and Geshem were united in this warfare against them. Sometimes they tried ridicule, pointing out their weakness, saying that the wall they were building would fall if a fox should go up on it. Sometimes they tried threats, and sometimes force of arms, but all to no avail. The people were exhorted to put their confidence in God and be steadfast. These were, in brief, the circumstances of Israel at this time. Now, as recorded in this sixth chapter, their enemies thought to accomplish by deceit and fraud what they had not been able to accomplish by other means. They sent unto Nehemiah, proposing a conference, but their meaning was to do him harm; but this was refused by Nehemiah, who said, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?" From this we learn that the enemies of God can, in order to accomplish their ends, pretend a friendship for his people and cause which they do not feel. We also learn that false professions of friendship are to be watched against as well as open attacks. We may also learn from the reply of Nehemiah that the servants of God have far better employment than to spend their time in conference with the enemies of God and truth. Like Nehemiah, let the servants of God think only of building the walls of Jerusalem.

Sanballat and the rest proposed this conference four times, and the same reply was sent each time. Unmoved, the people kept right on building. They could not take time to confer with their enemies, whose only purpose was to hinder the work. If in this day we are laborers in the vineyard of God, we have better things to do than to dally with those who love not to see Israel in Jerusalem, and who would pull down rather than build its walls.

Now, the fifth time they return to the assault upon a different line. They have tried coaxing and flattery, now they will try threatening; and so Sanballat sent his servant with an open letter (which all may read) unto Nehemiah, saying that it was reported that the Jews thought to rebel, and that Nehemiah proposed to be king, and that therefore they built the wall, and appointed prophets to preach that there was a king in Judah. Now, the open letter says that "this shall be reported to the king." "Come now therefore," the letter concludes, "and let us take counsel together." How much this sounds like the false charges which hundreds of years afterward were brought against the suffering Savior. He also was accused of treason against the king.

This charge was met with a full denial. The people of God in all ages have been subject to the government under which their lot has been cast. Now, against all these attacks Nehemiah had one refuge: he appealed to God in prayer for strength. "Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands."—Verse 9. The people and servants of God have no other refuge in their times of trial and warfare; but this refuge is all-sufficient.

It seems to us from this narrative that we may learn that our foes are also threefold, the world, the flesh, and the devil; that they are artful; that they sometimes flatter and sometimes threaten; that they are persistent, so that we can never expect their friendship; that we are weak, and cannot defend our own selves; and that God is our refuge and defense forever. This warfare goes on unceasingly in our own souls. This every child of God knows for himself. This warfare is also between the powers of the world and the kingdom of Christ on earth. The warfare is not only within us, but we ourselves wrestle against the powers of evil; and this warfare shall not end while life lasts.

By the "open letter" we only understand here that Sanballat and the rest had left off all appearance of friendship, and now came out as the avowed enemies of Israel. They had accomplished nothing by guile, and were now ready to throw off the mask. It was better so. By fair speeches the people of God may be deceived and won to evil; but open danger they need not fear.

What lessons of patience, comfort and rest are found here! The whole narrative teaches that the child of God may well say, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear what man can do unto me."

PSALM CXXXVII. 8.

A CORRESPONDENT from West Point, Illinois, whose name we do not have, asks what is meant in Psalm cxxxvii. 8 by the expression, "O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed."

In reply we would say that by the expression, "daughter of Babylon," we have understood to be meant the people who dwelt there, with all that made them a great and mighty nation; while the destruction means that they were to be spoiled of all their power and glory, and to be broken and scattered as a nation.

The narrative of the Psalm shows that Babylon which then was was the city that was meant. We know that this Babylon was a type of every power of wickedness and confusion in the world, and especially of that vast system of religious wickedness and confusion which to-day is called the Romish Church and her Protestant daughters; but yet the language of the Psalm referred primarily to literal Babylon, where Israel's tribes were captives held.

This is not a Psalm of David, but of some one, perhaps Ezra or Nehemiah, who was with Israel in the seventy years' captivity in Babylon; several hundred years after David; and the Psalm describes in most pathetic language the misery and grief of those who languished in this foreign land. Where could language more expressive of sorrow and longing for deliverance and home be found than this Psalm contains? The captive who toils at the will of a master in a foreign land, far from home and kindred, would strive in vain to express his feelings of homesick longing in better words than are provided for him here. Present sorrow and pain is expressed in the first two verses. There is weeping and inability to rejoice. Their masters require them to sing for their amusement the songs of Zion, but breaking hearts forbid it. Sooner shall the hand forget her cunning, and the tongue cleave to the roof of the mouth, than that they can forget Jerusalem, or prefer any joy beside.

Jerusalem was the city of God, as well as their habitation. Its enemies were his enemies as well as theirs. He who fought against it, or wished ill to it, was contending against God. God was its friend, and he upheld it. Edom was its foe, and Babylon had wasted it. They were the enemies of God; therefore by inspiration the psalmist declares the judgment of God against Edom and against Babylon. This is the doom of all the enemies of God. God will remember them; they shall be destroyed. He would be greatly favored to whom Israel's God should commit the sword of destruction against the enemies of God. How blessed to be the friend of God, and not his enemy! What praise should we render to almighty grace if we be indeed his friends! The people of God are said to be soldiers. They fight under the banner of Immanuel; not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; and so in the last two verses of this short Psalm the servants of God are presented as warring against Edom and Babylon, and are counted happy to have this privilege. Babylon is to be destroyed for her pride and her wickedness. God has decreed it; and happy is he who is found warring against her.

The Babylon of to-day is also to be destroyed. Jerusalem, though captured and desolated by foes, shall not always be wasted. God will arise for her help. She shall be chastised, but not destroyed. But Babylon shall be overwhelmed with destruction. All her captives shall be delivered. Some of the true Israel dwell there yet; but they shall be delivered. Babylon is even yet counted great, and her king, "the prince of the power of the air," is boastful and scornful; but the works of the devil shall be destroyed.

Just as in the parable, the rich man has his good things now, but by-and-by he shall have his evil things; while Lazarus, now oppressed, shall then be exalted and blessed. What a glorious hope is set before the captive people of God! May this be our hope and rest.

GILBERT BEEBE.

REFLECTIONS.

ONWARD speed the wheels of time, and onward with every revolution are we hurried in our march to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. How suitable to our case are the words of the inspired singer of Israel, "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am."—Psalm xxxix. 4. Nothing, perhaps, is more eminently calculated to impress the mind of man with a sense of his inferiority than to know and duly realize the measure of his days, the frailty of the tenement of mortality in which he is for the present wrapped up. God has allotted to each the exact measurement, a span, a hand's breadth; and when we have filled up that short allotment our dust must return to its mother dust, and our spirits to him who gave them being. If blessed, like good old Job, with faith in God, that we shall in our flesh see God, whom we shall see each for himself, and not another, we may look forward with pleasing anticipation to the glory that shall be revealed when our gracious Sovereign shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, and cherish the sure and steadfast hope that we shall then awake in his likeness. The "new man" in all the saints is after God "created in righteousness and true holiness;" but our "old man" is in its present state of the earth, earthy. It is mortal, perishable, decaying, and must soon be put off; and every revolving year should remind us that the time of our departure is at hand. The conflict now experienced by the saints between the flesh and Spirit will soon be over, the corruptions of the flesh shall be put away, and this mortal shall put on immortality, this corruptible body shall come forth in the resurrection in incorruption, and death shall be swallowed up of victory.

In view of that eternal weight of glory which awaits all the children of God, may we who hope that God has given us a place among his sons and daughters say, in the language of the holy apostle, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."—Heb. xii. 1, 2.

How pleasant and profitable for us to bear in mind that Jesus is not only the author and finisher of the faith of his saints, but he has led the way. In regard to his Mediatorial work, there was a joy set before him; and that joy he kept constantly in view in all the sorrow, grief and suffering that he endured when here in the flesh, in the anguish of his holy soul, when sorrowful even unto death, in the dreadful agony in the garden, and the exquisite pain of the cross on Calvary. All this he endured, regardless of the shame and ignominy attached, for the joy that was set before him. The prophets of old had an intimation of this, and they sought diligently to know what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand of his suffering, and of the glory that should follow. Many ages before the divine Mediator came into this world by the assumption of flesh, his Spirit testified of his sufferings, and of his ultimate triumph and glory. Hence we learn that long anterior to his incarnation "the joy" was set before him, and for it he came in the flesh; and it behooved him to suffer all these things, and then to enter into his glory, namely, the glory which he had with the Father before the world began.

As the Redeemer was stimulated (if we may so speak) by a joy which was set before him, are not his children also stimulated by a joy which is set before them? They are admonished to run with patience, looking unto Jesus. If anything can make us patient in tribulations it must be a faith's view of our Lord Jesus Christ, the knowledge that he has triumphed over death, hell and our sins, that he has led captivity captive, and that having finished the salvation of all the heirs of glory, he has sat down on the right hand of the throne of God. We look unto him by that faith and hope which entereth into that within the veil. Christians, there is a joy set before you. It doth not yet appear what you shall be; but this you may rest assured of, that when he who is your life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory; even in that glory into which he has entered ye shall enter, and that joy which was set before him ye shall participate in, when the last wave of sorrow and affliction shall have dashed upon the shores.

This joy is set before you. Look then to Jesus. If you can see him as the embodiment of all that joy, of all that glory, you will say in truth that the sufferings of this present state are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in you when he who is your life shall be revealed at that day. What then if here for the brief period we have to wait our name be cast out as evil, if we be reviled, and drink of the bitter waters of Meribah? What if we dwell in obscurity, as God's hidden ones? What if the world knows us not, and if in this world we have no continuing city? What if we be poor, and like our heavenly Leader have not where to lay our heads? What if we see the birds of the air, and even the mischievous foxes, better provided for in regard to the comforts of this world than we? What if we see the eyes of the wicked stand out with fatness, while they have more than heart can wish? Envy them not. Trifles are theirs; a kingdom is yours. Look unto Jesus; in him is your inheritance. He is the heir of all things, and ye are joint heirs with him. He will not reign in glory and leave you behind. As soon as you are sufficiently tried, like the pure gold, he will bring you forth from the crucible, polished and refined, and sparkling in his glory.

Look to him, and run; tarry not in all the plain; for they that wait upon him shall run and not be weary. Disencumber yourselves from every weight; cut loose from every hindrance. If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out. If thine hand, cut it off. Peter has identified some of the weights which are calculated to impede our heavenward progress. "Wherefore laying aside all malice?" What! can a christian be malicious? Peter writes to none but christians; and although there is neither malice nor guile in the spirit of christianity, yet in the earthly tabernacle in which the christian now abides the fruits or lusts of the flesh are painfully found. But guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, are all dead weights; and not a part, but all of them, are to be laid aside, that we may run with patience the race that is set before us. The Galatians did run well for a time; but what kind of speed can a malicious christian make? What has the christian to do with guile, deception or hypocrisy? They have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty; they are not to walk in craftiness, nor are they to handle the word deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

In view of the little progress that we have made in the divine life, in the knowledge of the truth, in the practice of all that is enjoined on us by authority of our King, in closely observing all things whatsoever he hath commanded us, in avoiding all that he has forbidden us, does it not look as though we were now required to run, to hasten, to redeem the time, knowing as we do that the days are evil?

May the Lord strip us for the race, remove far from us every weight, and enable us to gird up the loins of our mind, to watch and be sober, knowing that our adversary, the devil, goeth about, seeking whom he may devour. "But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more." "See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men." "And that ye study to be quiet," &c. "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it."—1 Thess. iv. 9-11; v. 15-24.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Jesus before the world was. Therefore the apostle Paul could say to the brethren, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." So we see that neither our eternal salvation nor the new creature is by works of righteousness which we have done; but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior. Jesus entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. He is not going to obtain it, as the wisdom of this world teaches, but he has already obtained our eternal redemption. So, my heavenly Father's children, our salvation depends upon what our Jesus has done for us, what he is now doing, and what he will do for us in the morning of the resurrection, when we shall be clothed upon with immortality. Jesus is the way, the truth and the life, and the resurrection from the dead. We hear the prophet Isaiah saying, speaking of Jesus making his advent into this world to redeem his chosen people, which his Father had given him before the foundation of the world, "He shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground." This tender plant and root out of dry ground is Jesus, the Word which was made flesh. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." Yes, our Jesus was made with a body like unto his brethren, that he might bear our sins in his own body. He was and is the head and life of his bride, his body, and could receive the wound which was unto death; therefore he was wounded for our transgressions, was bruised for our iniquities, and with his stripes we are healed. "All we like sheep have gone astray." We were dead in trespasses and sins by Adam's transgression, and the Lord laid on Jesus the iniquity of us all. This "all," my dear brethren, includes every one who has had or ever will have a desire to be saved. But says one, That doctrine will take in everybody, for every person wants to be saved. Nay, verily, I say unto you, there are none who want to be saved but those who have seen themselves lost, and have come to the end of their own strength. All others want to save themselves, or do something to bring God under obligations to bless them; and then they will help the Lord save somebody else, and by so doing God will add stars to their crown. This "all" embraces all that the Father gave to the Savior, his Son Jesus, to redeem. But says one, How many did the Father give to the Son? He gave him all he had; for we hear Jesus saying, "All thine are mine, and mine are thine." "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me."

My brethren, I will try to bring my remarks to a close, for after you read them you may say that I ought to have quit before I did. May God bless you all, is my prayer.

Your weak brother, in hope of eternal life beyond this world, through Jesus Christ,

G. B. COUNTS.

HAZLETTVILLE, Del., April, 1896.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I received the following letter some time ago, as you will see by the date. It explains itself, and I deeply appreciate it, and will therefore send it to you for publication, subject to your judgment. Your sister,

EMILY CUBBAGE.

HEDRICK, Iowa, Jan. 9, 1896.

DEAR SISTER CUBBAGE:—I saw a communication written by you in November, 1895, to Elder Chick, and published in the SIGNS of Jan. 5th, 1896, in which you seem to think you are one alone, if a child of God at all, because you have no dates to refer to, nor any particular period, when you seemed pressed down with a great burden of sin and condemnation, nor any manifestation of a deliverance from that load of guilt, as some others speak of, nor a time when you were made to rejoice with a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory.

Now, dear sister, I do not know whether I can say a word to comfort you, or any of God's little ones; but let me say that you are not alone, for I have seen three such received, and have baptized two of them; and I truly believe and am thoroughly satisfied that they are children of the Most High God, born of the Spirit; for they have been well tested, and you know the tree by the fruit it bears. And now methinks perhaps you are anxious to know how I account for this difference. We, the Old School Predestinarian Baptists of Iowa, believe that the children of Israel were a lively type of the church of Christ, and their bondage in Egypt under Pharaoh typified our bondage in sin; and Moses, their leader and deliverer, typified Christ, our Leader and Deliverer.

One of the prime meanings of the word born, or birth, is deliverance; and we believe that there were little babes just as much under the yoke of Egyptian bondage as were the adults or parents, and were carried over in their arms; and no doubt some even were unborn who were then and there delivered from that bondage, the same as the adult. Now, dear sister, what we find in the type we may expect to find in the antitype; and I believe that yourself, and the three that I spoke of, with many others, are striking examples of this kind, who were born of the Spirit in infancy, and so much is lost to their memory; and fifteen or twenty years afterward, if asked about their bondage or deliverance, it is to them a blank, as it was to the babes in Israel. But ask them whither they are bound, and they will say, To the land of Canaan, with as much joyful anticipation and hope as the fathers and mothers who journey with them. John the Baptist was a striking example of this kind; for it is said that he was full of the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb; yea, he leaped for joy at the name of Jesus before he was born a natural birth.

My natural birth was in April, 1825, and my spiritual birth or deliverance was in May, 1862, being a man with a family, in the prime of manhood, with memory strong and vigorous; while yours was in childhood. All my mourning and groaning, my pleading and praying, with my deliverance and rejoicing, are as fresh in my memory as though it were but yesterday; and I could go back and give day and dates to many things, which period would perhaps take you back to your infancy, and dates and circumstances would be lost to you, while vivid with me. You commenced in youth where I commenced in manhood; but your zeal for the cause, your love for the brethren, and your doubts and fears, are one with mine and all God's children from the time of deliverance; but your deliverance takes you back to a time when you were too young to remember, like the children of Israel; but they were delivered all the same.

I might write volumes on this subject, but I have abridged it all I could to give you my idea of it. If there is any word of comfort in it give God the glory. I believe I have never seen anything on this subject in any of our religious periodicals. If some of our brethren of ability would write on it I think it would be profitable to some of the little ones. This is yours to use at your pleasure.

From a poor old sinner saved by grace, and grace alone, if saved at all,
ROBERT SPEIRS.

[The above letter meets our cordial approval. It is a subject that we have never seen treated in this way before. Brother Speirs wishes that someone else would write, but we do not think anything more satisfactory could be written. His letter appeals to our own experience, for we do not know when or where the work with ourself began, and for many years this was a trouble to us. Such letters, presenting the varied experience of the children of God, are good and profitable.—C]

ROXBURY, N. Y., Jan. 6, 1896.

DEAR BRETHREN:—If I may so address God's dear children. I feel too unworthy and sinful to claim any relationship with any of them; nevertheless they do seem very near to me. I will send you my subscription for the SIGNS for this year. Your paper is a source of great comfort to me, for it contains all the kind of preaching I can enjoy. Then there are so many good letters from the brethren and sisters, telling of their trials and afflictions, doubts and fears, so that I almost have to speak out and say, Yes, I know what it is to be in that place. Sister Lizzie Himes has fears that she has deceived the dear people of God. I know what it is to be thus tried. I never can express it; but I became so sure that I had deceived the church, and that I had no right to their fellowship, that I determined in my mind to tell them how I felt, and ask them to erase my name, and have no more fellowship for me, as I was not worthy of their fellowship. I went to a covenant meeting with the intention of telling them that I was deceived, and had deceived them. During the meeting one who had long been a member, and one that I firmly believed to be a christian, in relating his exercise of mind told so much of the trials I had passed through that I kept still. It was a great comfort for me to hear that there was one who had such trials as I was having. I have learned a great many lessons in my forty years of travel as a professed follower of the dear Savior. I have learned this one thing, that in me (that is, in my flesh) there dwells no good thing. Sometimes I feel that to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. At other times I do not seem to have a will to do good.

"All is dark and vain and wild;
Filled with unbelief and sin,
Can I deem myself a child?"

Sometimes I wish I had always kept a closed mouth in regard to my hope and belief; for then, if I am deceived, I would not have deceived any one else. Then again I feel to say with Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee." I think sometimes that I am the strangest being on earth. Truly

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know."

"So far from God I seem to lie,
It often makes me weep and cry;"

"And when I count up all the cost, Without free grace I know I'm lost."

What a blessing to know that the grace of God is a free gift bestowed upon the poor, undone sinner who has nothing to pay with. If there is anything that will raise my affections from earthly and vain things it is a view of the sovereign power of Almighty God. The wind and waves obey him. He says, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." The devil is subject to his control. With the consent of the Lord the devil could torment and afflict poor old Job, but he could not take his life; no, that was out of his power. Let me be what I am, I do rejoice that there is one who rules and reigns in heaven and on earth. The Lord Jehovah is his name. He must reign till he puts all enemies under his feet, and the last enemy is death. May we all be enabled by grace divine to meet death with a smile, and say, Welcome, death, the end of fear; I am prepared to go.

In closing, I wish you a happy and prosperous new year. May the Lord sustain you in your arduous labors, is the desire of a very unworthy sister, if one at all.

PEACE BALLARD.

PETERSBURG, Del., April 20, 1896.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I have just read the seventh, eighth and ninth chapters of the gospel according to John, and had such a feeling of joy and gladness come over me as I read that I felt like sitting down and telling you or someone of it, for it is very seldom that I have such a feeling. As I read it seemed to me that I could see the line so clearly drawn between the worldly religionists of to-day and the people of the living God. Where Christ is teaching in the temple, he tells them that "He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory." How often we hear the Pharisees of to-day speaking of themselves, and of the good they are doing in the world; very seldom that they ascribe all the glory of God, the great Giver of all good. They seem to want the honor given to themselves. How different it is with God's dear children. They do not want the least bit of praise themselves, for they know there is no goodness in themselves; that they have not the power to even think a good thought, except as it is given them of God.

In those passages of Scripture Jesus teaches the things that, it seems to me, almost any one ought to see, the difference of the pharisaical doctrine and the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ. But of course it is impossible for the blind to see, and poor, sinful man cannot open their eyes for them; but when Jesus anoints their eyes then they can see, and no one can prevent. Then they will see the difference in the doctrines. When he opens, none can shut. How wonderful he is! O that we could honor and praise him as he should be. If anyone feels that they can praise him enough for the goodness and kindness they have received from him, they are far ahead of me. I know I shall never be able to praise and adore him enough for all the kindness shown me, if I live many, many years to come. I feel to-night like quoting the hymn,

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

Also the verse,

"Come, all harmonious tongues,
Your noblest music bring,

'Tis Christ, the everlasting God,
And Christ, the man, we sing."

Well, dear brother, I have written thus far as my mind ran; but I will have to stop now, as everything seems to be gone from me, and my mind is almost a blank, even in regard to what I have written. All that gladness gone so soon. It is only a glimpse I get now and then, sometimes for only a moment or two; but I know that is more than I am worthy of, for I am so unworthy and and so unfit to get even that much.

If you have time to write to me I shall be very glad, for it has been quite a while since I had a letter from you; but if your time is taken up you need not bother with me. Please remember me to your wife and sister Anna. I hope you will not forget to visit us this year.

Your sister in hope,
ANNIE MEREDITH.

[We publish the above brief letter without any doubt that many will rejoice to read it. It presents the frequent experience of the Lord's people. Seasons of gladness are followed by gloom often, and by toil and care. Such hours of joy are to strengthen us for trials. Our sister, though young in years, is not a stranger to sore afflictions, as well as comforts. The above letter tells where her strength is found. True, he that is of God speaks of God, and not of himself. By this we may know the servants of God from those who serve self. All this our sister has well said in the above letter. How blessed it is to know the joyful gospel sound.—C]

APRIL 2, 1896.

DEAR EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—If it is the dear Lord's will I would love to be enabled to speak forth many words of praise to his great name for all his mercies to the children of men. I am made to know "the Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." I wish to say that while listening to the reading of B. F. Coulter's piece in the SIGNS of April 1st, I was given to feast upon the truth therein contained. It was meat to the hungry, and drink to the thirsty. My heart burns within me with a heavenly love, and I feel inspired to try to write a few lines to put in your paper if you will. Indeed and in truth my heart is filled to overflowing with the most excellent glory, and I feel to shout aloud praise, honor, and glory unto the exalted name of our dear Redeemer. Holy and reverend is his name. Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power and the glory and the victory and the majesty; for all that is in heaven and in the earth is thine. Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou are exalted as head above all. I, even I, poor unworthy me, am given to feel a spirit within which makes me to reverently bow and worship at my Lord's feet, and earnestly inquire, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? But, dear friends, how altogether unlike this promised Comforter am I in the flesh, in which dwells no good thing. "But though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." We are fully persuaded that we have a life hid with Christ in God, which nothing can separate us from. Shout, O shout, ye heirs of glory; sound your triumphs as ye go. Soon the warfare will be ended, and God's people will all be gathered home, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. Our God alone will bring them from the north and the south, the east and the west, and from every nation, kindred, tongue and tribe. As long as mortal life shall last I am sure it will be a warfare. That which is of the flesh is flesh, and that which is of the Spirit is spirit; two in one, yet perfectly separate. Once upon a time with heavenly blessedness it was given me to see that Jacob and Esau, Abel and Cain, and others likewise were typical of us, after being born of that incorruptible seed in our experience.

Lest I be tedious and tiresome I will close, with love to all the household of faith.

LIBBIE TURRELL.

St. Louis, Mich., April 2, 1896.

DEAR EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I will send a little scribble to you for publication, if you shall see fit. There are some things in connection with the doctrine of being born again that I would like to write about, if it is the Lord's will to enable me to do so. One thing is that the Savior most emphatically says, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." And those who are born again receive this Spirit—men, women, and children, even to the unborn John; for there is good evidence that John the Baptist was born of the Spirit before he had left his mother's womb. This is what I understand to be the increase of God in the manifestation of his people. The figure of the burning bush is a complete one in the experience of this being born again, if I have an experience, and also to the church as a body on fire, but not consumed. "For our God is a consuming fire." The bush is not consumed; only the frogs, lice and trash of Egypt; the doctrines of devils and the commandments of men; lusts of the flesh and pride of life that may hang to the bush; the moss of traditional error. This the eternal Spirit, which is given to those who are born again, consumes without mercy. The poor burning bush now has two minds, and is afraid it will be consumed. One mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The other, the mind of Christ, which is born of God, is always obedient; for that which is born of God cannot sin. This Holy Spirit is compared to the wind by the blessed Jesus. It was like a rushing mighty wind on the day of Pentecost, when about three thousand were manifested as the increase of God. They were still sinners, subject to a carnal mind, but now added to the church, called to be saints.

With the hope that this may be my lot, I remain yours to serve,
DAVID TITMUS.

BOOK NOTICES.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on this page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.
