Treasurer's Report

Monthly statement of funds received and paid out by the County Treasurer for the month ending February 7, 1941:

Brought forward as per tax levy:
Gen

I've ever violated your confidence. I knew about Grove and his key. I saved him once from the jam he is in now. I knew of his liaison with Ione. See how much of that you can find in the Press, or any other newspaper—up to now."

Allegra gave a little laugh of disbelief. She tossed Duke's squeal on the desk between us and went from the room. I bowed jerkily to Miss Agatha and headed for the door. Her voice checked me.

"Up to now," she repeated. "Do I understand that is a threat?"

I had stood plenty. Her stern eyes could not beat mine down.

"And do I understand," I answered, "that your question is a prelude to bribery?"

"Are you," she inquired, "doing your best to be insulting?"

"I am," I told her, "and I didn't begin it."

She chuckled. The hearty sound never seemed more bizarre. It wrecked melodrama and spoiled my pose. I stared. Miss Agatha grinned.

"Put down your hat and coat," she bade me. "I want to talk to you. Don't stand there gawping. Do as I say. Allegra is troubled with ideals. She'll outgrow them in time. Suppose you tell me, as politely as you can manage, just how you happen to be on the Press."

She smoked one of my cigarettes while I confessed my arrangement with Cochrane, and the difficulties of being pulled two ways by conflicting loyalties. Once or twice, while I spoke, she nodded and when I had ended, gave that preposterous grin of hers.

"You make me feel better," she told me. "I didn't want to believe I'd twice been mistaken in my estimates of character in so short a time."

I found myself defending Grove. "You'll learn when this thing is unscrambled that he's been just a young idiot, nothing more. No one can make me believe that—"

"No one can make me, either," she broke in, quietly. "He's a good boy. He's lacking in common sense, that's all. Well, it's a family failing."

presume the rest was too. No one can prove he was in that flat when the man was stabbed. What?"

I had started to speak. Now I said, "Excuse me," and held my words.

"And until," Miss Agatha went on, "that is proved and it is found how he got out afterward, Lyon Ferriter thinks he is safe. He is proud of his cleverness. That is dangerous—for him."

"Well?" I asked as she paused. She did not seem to hear me. She pursued, her eyes still narrow, her voice daunting in its calm:

"All of which has been none of an old woman's business—up to now. Lyon Ferriter called on me this morning. He said he wanted to help Grove. What he wanted was to admire his own cleverness. If he had come to me fairly, David; if he had said, 'Your nephew and my sister have been having an affair. How can we get them out of trouble most easily?' he would have had me as an ally."

She rubbed the cigarette out on the ash tray with slow violence. I at first and then, as I passed the scuffle in the basement to the duel with Lyon and the rifling of the room, the cigarette burned down unheeded in her fingers. She asked at last:

"And why have you had all this attention?"

"Miss Agatha," I told her with a grin, "I haven't the least idea."

She chuckled again.

"At any rate," she said, "we start even as allies."

"Wait," I bade, and told her of the foreign voice I had heard at Mino's. She looked at me hard when I had finished.

"Are you sure?" she asked.

I shrugged.

"Right now, I'm not very sure of anything. Yet I don't think I'm beginning to hear voices. And it may be important, but it isn't evidence, unless we can persuade Lyon to drop back into it again for the benefit of the police."

"No," she said thoughtfully. "You're right. It's a signpost, nothing more. There is a flaw in Lyon, somewhere. Everybody has one. If we could only find it and work on it—"

"You said he was proud," I reminded her.

"And clever," she added. "And also lucky, at poor Grove's expense. Think a minute."

She gathered her fragile body together and looked hard at the hands clasped in her narrow lap as though they held a seer's crystal ball.

"Think," she went on, "of his luck. Everett knew Lyon had killed Blackbeard. And Everett was frightened. Anyone could see that. He was not of the breed of heroes. You were to be killed by accident while Everett rifled your room. The Ferriters thought you had something that was key to the murder."

"And Everett failed," I offered as she paused, "and that, plus fear destroyed him. So he wrote a farewell note to his family, who were waiting for him to show up at Mino's, and killed himself out of sheer terror."

The surprise in her face had ended me.

"Yes," Miss Agatha said slowly.

Concord Wins State Debate, Second In Boys' Essay

The Concord High School debating teams consisting of Margaret Smith and Norman Williamson, affirmative, and Dris Caldwell and Dinsley Story, negative, were awarded first place in their division at the State Meet at Athens, May 3. They become the official champions for 1940.

In the circle debates the Concord affirmative defeated the Pineview negative and the Concord negative defeated the Mansfield affirmative. The finals between Concord and Nelson were won by Concord. The debaters were accompanied by Miss Helen Stricgland, who had successfully coached them, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Smith, Mrs. H. D. Story and Mr. Walker White.

At the same time, Norman Williamson Jr, was placed second in the Boys' Essay Contest.

These debaters and others who had helped to bring honors to the school in the contests this Spring were given an ovation at the chapel exercises Wednesday. Visitors on this occasion were Rev. W. J. Culpepper and Mr. Gunn, of West Georgia College.

port.

German Air Forces Win.

The German, taking advantage of the mountainous country, used airplane superiority to the utmost. With bases in Norway and Denmark they had a tremendous advantage over their enemies. Consequently, their planes harried the troops that were hurried inland and hampered the landing of reinforcements of men and material at bases that were not only inadequately defended by anti-aircraft guns but poorly equipped to handle the discharge of the cargoes forced into them by the exigencies of warfare.

Considerable criticism of Allied strategy has been directed at those responsible for the dispatch of Allied soldiers, mostly British, into a war zone without adequate supporting equipment. This criticism, it seems to us, does not take into consideration the necessity for prompt Allied reinforcements to encourage the Norwegians, who might have made a separate peace with Germany unless promptly supported.

The Struggle For Trondheim.

The key point in recent fighting has been Trondheim, the important port on the west coast. Germany was anxious to link her land forces there with the main strength at Oslo and the Allies were just as anxious to prevent this by cutting off Trondheim so as to capture it for a future base of operations.

Trondheim is on one of the great fjords that dark the Norwegian

At the B. Y. P. U. service at 7:00 P. M., he will give the declamation—an original declamation which he placed in the County and District Meets. The subject of his declamation is "The Religious Needs of Youth Today."

Every Thursday night, the people of Zebulon and Community gather on the Court House lawn for an evening of fellowship in a Community Sing and Vesper Service. Hymns, old and new, are sung, talks are made and prayers are said. We think this is a fine thing and will mean much toward the building of a stronger community spirit. Wherever you live, if you are within reach of Zebulon, come to this service next Thursday night at 7:30.
