BLANKET LITHOGRAPH FACILITY

Blanket lithography is a process used for printing large quantities of documents, such as forms, labels, and brochures. It involves the use of a blanket to transfer ink from a master plate to the printing surface.

The process begins with the preparation of a master plate, which is a thin sheet of metal or plastic that has been etched with the desired design. This plate is then used to create a blanket, which is a large sheet of material that can be rolled up and used to print multiple copies of the design.

Once the blanket is prepared, it is mounted on a printing press. The press is then used to apply ink to the blanket, which is then transferred to the printing surface. This process is repeated until the desired quantity of documents has been printed.

Blanket lithography is a highly efficient and cost-effective method of printing large quantities of documents. It is particularly well-suited for printing designs that are complex and require a high level of detail.

There are several advantages to using blanket lithography. First, it allows for the production of large quantities of documents in a relatively short period of time. Second, it is a highly accurate method of printing, resulting in documents that are clear and legible.

Finally, blanket lithography is a highly flexible method of printing, allowing for the production of documents in a wide range of colors and finishes. This makes it an ideal choice for a wide variety of printing applications.

Blanket lithography is a proven and reliable method of printing large quantities of documents. It is a process that has been used for many years and continues to be widely used today.

For more information on blanket lithography, please contact your local printing supplier. They will be able to provide you with the details of the process and help you to choose the best printing method for your needs.
