CORRESPONDENCE.

RIPYVILLE, Ky., Dec. 6, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Having been solicited to write for publication a brief sketch of my christain experience, together with some of my reasons for leaving the Missionary Baptists and uniting with the Old School Baptists, I send the following account of my exercises and wanderings by which I hope the Lord designed to teach me the truth.

I was born in September, 1869, and was early taught the existence of a God; that he is ruler over all things, and will surely punish the wicked. This early impression had the effect of restraining me from doing many things that I knew to be wrong.

From my early childhood I have lived among the Missionary Baptists, and my first ideas of religion were obtained from them. At about the age of ten years I began to attend their Sunday Schools, and took an interest in the study of the Scriptures especially the historical part of the Old Testament, as I had a great desire for history at this age and later on. I was always very regular in attendance at church services, gave strict attention to the preaching, and sometimes felt that I loved the Lord and desired to be a christian. I was taught that salvation is conditional, that man has the power to accept or reject, and it is entirely with him whether he has a part in the atonement of Christ or not. With this understanding I was naturally self-righteous, and was in reality a Pharisee, and felt that my good works would count for something in recommending me to the favor of God. My idea of God and the plan of salvation, as understood from the preaching that I was accustomed to hearing, was about as follows, that God has all power to do whatsoever he wills; that when man violated his law he fell under the transgression, and could not come into the favor of God without being redeemed; that Christ came into the world, suffered and died to make a way possible for man's salvation; that the Holy Spirit comes to the heart of every man, wooing him to accept the atonement made by Christ, which, if accepted, will give eternal life; but if rejected, the person is lost; and that God, although having all power and dominion, and being an absolute Sovereign, is now waiting to see what man will do concerning the redemption offered in his Son Jesus Christ, after which the reward or punishment will be meted to every one according to his decision.

At about the age of fifteen years I attended a protracted meeting, in which I became much interested. I really felt that I loved the Lord, and had a desire to join the church; for I was impressed that I must join the church in order to be saved.

I had never heard anything said about experience, and nothing of that kind was required before being received into the church, therefore no thought of this troubled me.

As the Holy Spirit is the messenger to bring the sinner to Christ, it was earnestly argued that one should not resist him; and if he did, his heart would be hardened each time until the Spirit would turn away insulted, to leave him forever, in which case the sinner would be lost eternally. I did not know anything of the eternal purpose of God in the salvation of his people, and was taught to believe what I heard about free agency and the danger of resisting the Spirit, as I may more correctly state it, the persuasion of men in their false understanding of the truth; and not really knowing my natural condition, or the power and purpose of God, I resolved to join the church. I attended meeting every night, and thought the preaching was the best that I had ever heard; yet I understood that I must do something to obtain salvation. It was often said that all that was necessary was to repent, believe, and be baptized. I did not feel that I was much of a sinner, yet I tried to repent as directed, which I now look upon as a mere formal repentance; for I now know that a person cannot be persuaded by the words of man to truly repent; and I thought on the subject of belief until I felt that I believed, and it was then only necessary to be baptized. Night after night I was more impressed that I should accept the offers of salvation as presented and unite with the church, or I would be lost at last. I continued to put it off until the meeting closed; and the last night as I left I felt that I had done wrong, and thought that I would surely not let another opportunity pass; but as I went home the impression gradually left me, and I went to bed determined not to be troubled over the matter any more, and slept soundly until morning. I arose early in the morning and began the preparation for the day's work, not having more than a passing thought occasionally of my past impressions. When I came into breakfast all my past impressions and actions came to mind at once, and the thought of what a great sinner I was, and how I had turned my back on my Savior, and being ashamed to confess him before the world. I could not eat, but soon left the house and started to work. As I walked along my sense of guilt became greater and greater, until I thought there was surely no demons worse than I, and that if my soul was sent to hell God would be justified in my sentence. I felt that I had denied my Lord by my acts, and had sinned against the Holy Ghost. Everything seemed to be witnesses accusing me before God, and I felt that I was condemned forever. While in this state of mind I seemed to forget my condition for a moment, and, as it were, a light shined into my darkened soul, and I saw the face of Jesus look upon me with a sweet, tender look of reproof, and then turn away, when all was darkness again. I remembered how Jesus had looked at Peter when he denied him, and how he wept; but I felt that I had done even worse, for I should have known better from having his example to warn me. But now it was too late, and I felt that I was lost forever, and could restrain my feelings no longer, but burst into weeping, and cried to God, "Why hast thou permitted me to come to this, when thou didst know it all from the beginning?" I had never before heard or known anything of God's foreknowledge, but now it was indelibly impressed upon me that he knows the future as well as the past, and there is nothing hidden from him. I could not keep from thinking on the beauty and loveliness of Jesus as he appeared to me, and how I longed for another view of him; but it seemed that he had turned from me forever; that others could rejoice in his love and peace, but I must now take my portion with the lost. Previous to this I had looked forward to the time when I should rejoice in the privileges of the church and the fellowship of the saints, but now that was gone; but while in this condition, like the rich man, I resolved to warn others, that they go not to the place of torment. As I continued to reflect, the Scripture came to mind that all sin against the Son shall be forgiven, but the sin against the Holy Ghost will never be forgiven in this world, nor in the world to come. Then I thought of Peter and David, how they had been forgiven and restored to the favor of God after having committed great sins; and a small ray of hope seemed left, if I had not sinned against the Holy Ghost. I was so troubled in mind that I could not work that day, and gave as the excuse that I was feeling too badly. I began to search the Scriptures to see whether I had committed the unpardonable sin, which I found I had not; but for a long time afterward I was tempted to blaspheme the Holy Ghost, or curse God. Sometimes the temptation was so strong that I was almost overcome; but I prayed to God continually for strength to resist the temptation, and for the forgiveness of my sins, which were constantly before me. It seemed that my prayers would fall to the ground, and I continued to grope in darkness. For a long time whenever I spoke a word of reproof to any one, or found fault with anything, my own words would accuse me, and my thought would often come, Who art thou that judgest, seeing that you yourself are under condemnation? I kept searching the Scriptures to see whether there was yet any hope for me, and if I could claim any of the promises as to me; but I could not understand. I was trying to find what I must do to obtain salvation; and when I read that I must work out my own salvation, I understood that I must do something to get it, instead of the correct meaning, that one works out their salvation after they have it, and not to get it. Being thus impressed, I kept trying to get better, but instead grew worse. I attended the meetings regularly, but the preaching only convinced me more that it was necessary to do something. I had the impression that I must join the church before I would be saved; for the Scripture was forcibly impressed on my mind, "He that is ashamed to confess me before men, him will I be ashamed to confess before my Father in heaven." I did not know what was christian experience, but I thought I had a hope of salvation, although but a very faint hope, and resolved that if salvation was to be obtained by striving for it I would never cease until I had received the blessing; yet many times I became despondent, and was almost ready to give up in despair, when the Scripture would be presented which says, "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." After about a year and a half I united with the Missionary Baptist Church. I felt I had a hope, and was trusting in Jesus as the only way of life and salvation, although still much troubled, and that I could live better in the church. It was not long, however, until I began to doubt whether I had done right; for I felt that I had deceived the church, and often thought of going to the minister and telling him; but I did not. I kept seeking for peace, and tried to follow the teaching of the Scriptures as near as I understood them, having learned that there was nothing good in me whereby I might claim the favor of God, and that my salvation depended entirely on the atonement of Christ. Finally my doubting grew less, the light dawned, short seasons of peace and joy were given, and I was often made to rejoice in the favor of the same Savior that I had thought was turned away from me forever. Until this time I had heard it preached that man must accept Christ in order to have salvation; and believing this to be true I had been willing, yea, striving, to accept him, and would gladly have accepted him at any time after my first conviction; but I found it was not in my power to accept him when I would; nor did I realize the truth of the matter until he had given me the long desired rest, that it was not a question of my accepting him, but whether he had accepted me. Now when I hear ministers preach that salvation is free to every one if they will only accept it, I wonder if they ever think of the inconsistency of such statements with the truth, and how they would define the sovereignty of God in the accomplishment of his eternal purpose, if man is possessed of the power for the time being to say to God, "I have a hand in the eternal arrangement of things, inasmuch as I have the power invested in me to say whether I shall live throughout eternity as one of thy angels, or as the angel of Satan." And what kind of sovereignty is exercised by the Holy Spirit, if he can be induced by the music of instruments, well trained choirs, and the preaching of ministers polished for their work by the highest art of man, to come into the midst of communities and congregations and convert them to ways of holiness and give them eternal life? If such were true it would appear that man is a very wonderful being indeed, and that his grandeur approaches very near the grandeur of a God.

I was always regular in attendance at our meetings, and was sometimes strengthened or comforted by the preaching; but my idea of works was strong, although I knew there was nothing good in me, or that any one else could do the least to assist me in the divine favor; yet such things were preached, and I did not think but what I could do great things toward saving others. Consequently I accepted a position as teacher in the Sunday School, where I expected to teach the children the Scriptures, in order that they might learn of God, and that at the proper time they would be more certain to accept Christ and be saved. I had never doubted the good of missionary work, or of any of the so-called means of grace. I was soon sent as a messenger to the association, where I heard the mission question thoroughly discussed. I thought it was a grand work, and one which is commanded, and necessary that the heathen be saved. I felt that I was blessed with peace; and as I believed that works is a very important auxiliary to obtaining salvation, and that it is in the hands of man to spread the gospel, I felt that it was my duty, and I should lend my services toward accomplishing this end; consequently I did not hesitate to work in the Sunday School or any place that was intended to benefit others or influence them to come to Christ. I attended the associations and Sunday School conventions, often as a messenger or delegate, and tried to fill the part required of me on committees or in whatever place assigned. I studied the Scriptures a great deal; but, like the Jews of old, I read with my understanding veiled, and understood only literally; and I seemed to forget my own experience, in my zeal to do good, regardless of the propriety of the methods. I was often told by others to talk to certain ones, and turn them from their evil ways to ways of righteousness, and I would think at the time that I could do it; but when the time came to talk it seemed that I was not worthy to instruct others, and that I was often guilty of the same or worse things myself. When I would think of directing others, I felt too weak to direct myself. I never could realize that the beam was out of my own eye sufficiently for me to try to remove the mote from my brother's. Thus I continued to walk blindly along for about four years. In August, 1890, I attended the Missionary Baptist Association held at Salvisa, Ky., as a messenger. I was very much pleased with some of the preaching there, and thought it was the best I had ever heard; but as most of the time was devoted to the discussion of missions, and the best methods of raising money to send the gospel to all parts of the world, I was not greatly edified, except to be more confirmed in the doctrine which I had always heard advocated. I was so well pleased that while there I subscribed for the denominational paper, thinking it would assist me in knowing the truth, and my duty, and such other things which I should know. I told my sisters as we went home that I was every inch a Baptist, and was satisfied that no other denomination was as near right as we were, and that I had subscribed for the paper, and we would have some good Baptist literature at home. In about two weeks the Old School Baptist Association met with the Salt River Church, and I attended on Saturday and Sunday. I had associated with the Old School Baptists enough to know that they were opposed to Sunday School and mission work, but I did not know much about their doctrine, nor their reasons for opposing that. As I had just heard the Missionaries contend so strongly for these things, and give reasons which I thought would be hard to meet, and other points of doctrine were fresh on my mind, I was anxious to hear the other side presented. I was impressed from the beginning with the deep solemnity of the meeting, and the spirit of brotherly love manifested. The singing had a different spirit to that at the other Association, where a choir with an organ made most of the music, and it was more mechanical than melodious; but here the brethren and sisters joined in to sing the songs of Zion, and the melody seemed to come from the heart, which made it music indeed. As the ministers expounded the deep mysteries of God, and the richness of his grace in saving poor fallen man, and spoke of the new life of the regenerated person, and gave some evidences of this new life, and described the christian warfare, it seemed that they were telling my own feelings and experience better than I could have told it, and it was the first real gospel preaching that I had ever heard. They also stated that there was no need for Sunday Schools and modern Missionaries; that there was no scriptural authority for them, and explained many of the passages which are usually given as the authority, showing them to be misinterpreted. It was also said that God sends his ministers now as he sent Paul and Peter; that he prepares the subjects to hear as he did Cornelius and his household; that missions are the invention of man, and the amount of their work depends on the amount of money available, thus making money the incentive to the work, and making the salvation of the heathen to depend on it; for the missionaries will not think of going to preach until they have the assurance of a good fund to draw from. Sunday Schools were shown to be useless, inasmuch as it is impossible to bring the dead to life by teaching them the Scriptures; and that a person cannot hear and understand the things of the Spirit until they are quickened by the Spirit, or born again; and the Spirit, as God, is not influenced by certain means to come to anyone, but works where and when he will; and under the covenant of grace God says, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest." This preaching came with such force, and was so plain and simple, and corresponded so nearly with my past experience, that I was almost persuaded to believe it to the exclusion of all other; but I was not thoroughly satisfied as to the importance of works, and resolved to search the Scriptures to see whether this doctrine was in harmony with the whole, or merely a part, chosen to prove these points. When I began to read I saw foreordination and predestination so clearly taught that I wondered why I had never seen it before. Besides, I found all the quotations used by the ministers to be as quoted, and many others things were made plain that were mysteries before. I could not give up the idea of work entirely, although I began to doubt the necessity of many things practiced, and had several arguments with ministers concerning the means they employed to convert sinners. I was disappointed in the New School paper, as it contained nothing edifying, and was mostly filled with Sunday School and missionary work, demands for more money to support the gospel in foreign fields, the duty of the churches and members to give liberally, and the many plans for raising money. These subjects were treated in every issue to a greater or less extent, and I began to realize that it was truly the work of man. As I understood the Scriptures better, I saw there was no good in the mission theory as practiced, and I quit reading the many demands for aid to carry on the work. During this time I occasionally got a copy of the SIGNS from a neighbor, and always read it with great interest and comfort. The spirit of the contributors of the two papers was very different; those of the SIGNS seemed to manifest a kind of meekness and humility, while those of the other paper seemed proud, and wise in their own estimation, and would often fancy themselves humiliated or mistreated if their writings were not given a place in the paper. The next April our church met to organize a Sunday School. I was chosen superintendent. I really desired that position, yet I had told no one. I thought I could conduct a good Sunday School and get the people interested without much trouble, and expected to do a great deal of good. I did tolerably well for a week, when I began to feel that I was in the wrong place. I aimed to study and prepare the lessons well, but my conscience seemed to accuse me more and more for being the leader of a work intended as a means of salvation, without the least divine authority. My instructions seemed to fall on deaf ears, and when I recalled from my own experience how I had been falsely led by such teaching, and that I had been benefited by the Scriptures only by their being revealed to me in the proper time, I concluded that my ideas concerning the good of this work were wrong. However, I continued to do the best

I could for some time longer, thinking perhaps these were false impressions and would leave me after awhile; but instead, they grew stronger, until I felt that I was striving against the Spirit. After about three months I told the minister one Sunday morning of my feelings, and that I could not engage in the work longer; that my mind was exercised until I felt that I was doing wrong; that if he wished, I would tell the school my reasons for resigning, and they could select some one else in my place. He asked me a few questions, after which I told him that something seemed to draw me toward the Old Baptists, and I thought I would have to unite with them. He told me that it was right to have the courage of my convictions, but to fully consider all things first. He then spoke of a few points of their doctrine, some of which he liked, while others he did not. He then told me they would require me to be baptized again, and asked if my baptism was good. He said he would select another superintendent, and that I need not speak to anyone of our conversation at present. A superintendent was appointed, and I was released, no one else knowing the reason. I felt easy afterward, and was free to act as conscience directed. I sometimes visited our Sunday School and others, and would generally sit in the class and answer questions and give my views of portions of Scripture then under consideration. My mind was not thoroughly convinced against the work, but I gave up my place that I might be free to learn its real spirit and purpose by visiting different churches and hearing the instruction of different teachers, and comparing these with what I believed to be the correct meaning of the Scriptures. Very often while taking part with the classes, in asking and answering questions, my views were called "Hardshellism;" and when I would ask if salvation is entirely of grace, it was generally answered that it is, but that there are certain things a person must do in order to come into possession of it; that he must not quench the Spirit, must accept Christ, and believe in him as his Savior; that after these conditions are complied with, salvation is of grace; but that even then it is necessary to prove our faith by our works, in supporting the many institutions of the church, and by doing the bidding of those who are acting as lords over God's heritage; for faith without works is dead. However I do not understand that such works as these are necessary to prove a living faith. The question was on my mind continually whether salvation is entirely of grace or of works and grace together. I liked the Old School Baptists, and considered them model christians, and as holding to the faith that was once delivered to the saints; and that their dependence and faith is in God alone, and not as others, who do not really know what their faith is in. After I was satisfied with the doctrine, that it is the one true doctrine taught in the Scriptures, and that all others are false, I felt it to be my duty to show my faith by identifying myself with that people. Then the question of again submitting to the ordinance of baptism was brought to mind. For some time I was undecided whether it would be right or not; but finally it occurred to me to consider the faith that I was baptized unto, and whether that was the faith of the apostles. When baptized into the Missionary Baptist Church, I was baptized in good faith in their doctrine, which I understood tolerably well, and under it held that man is a free agent in the matter of his eternal salvation; that it is delegated to man to convert the world by his preaching; that the Sunday School is a stepping-stone to the church, helping to bring the rising generations to Christ; that theological seminaries are important to prepare for the ministry persons called to preach the gospel; and that a salaried pastorate is according to the Scripture rule.

I was now convinced that all these principles are wrong; and why should the baptism that was the entrance to the church advocating them, be still considered good? With these things considered it appeared that my baptism was but a mere form, having nothing to rest on to make it the entrance to the church; and since I could not look upon the advocates of the doctrine as being the true church of Christ, the baptism was no longer looked upon as baptism.

I had now tried nearly all the theories of works, and found nothing in them but confusion, and felt convinced that salvation is of grace, and grace alone; that God is a Sovereign, absolute, eternal and unchangeable; that the Scriptures are made known to man by revelation; that man in his natural state has no power in himself to hear or know the things of God or to come into his love.

I now resolved to join the Old School Baptist Church at some convenient time; but in the meantime attending all their meetings, and being more thoroughly established in the faith, I concluded to wait until I had a manifestation of the Spirit that it was right to take the intended step before I proceeded. I expected to unite with the Salt River Church, but it was the will of the great and eternal Father, as I hope, to give me the evidence of what was my duty while at Little Flock, and I felt that I should join them. This was on Wednesday, the 26th of September last. I went before the church, and in a very stammering way related some of my experience, and was received, and baptized the fifth Sunday in October, by Elder J. G. Sawin. I felt that I had at last found rest among the people of God, and could hardly realize that I was the recipient of such blessings after having wandered so long in search of the truth. Everything seemed to take on a different appearance, and the little affairs of life did not seem to affect me. All was harmony, and I could truly sing,

"When I am happy in him, December is pleasant as May."

Since then I have had many sore trials, but God's grace has been sufficient for me through them all; and I feel that I can say with the apostle, that I am troubled on every side, yet not distressed; I am perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. When I am with the brethren I feel that I am with the chosen of the Father, who have been brought up out of great tribulation, to know and rejoice in the truth, and that they can sympathize with each other in afflictions and distress, and share each other's joy in a way that the world knows nothing about.

Respectfully yours in tribulation,
C. W. BOND.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you two letters, which I believe are worthy of place in the SIGNS. The writers are beloved brethren, not only by me, but by all the household of faith wherever known. I do esteem them so much better than myself. I have not their consent to have their letters published, but I have no fears of cutting off their fellowship with me. If I have done wrong I know they will forgive me the wrong. I do not send their letters to be published simply because of the personal love existing between us, but because of what the letters contain. I do appreciate their kindness, with all those who have felt it in their hearts to remember me with epistles of love. Not that I feel worthy of such manifestations, for I do know that if I am a child of God I am the very least of all. I have nothing but what I have received; therefore I have nothing to boast of. It is all of the goodness and mercy of God. By his grace I am what I am. There was a time when I did not know that the goodness of God was leading me to repentance; but now, as I trust, while living and enjoying these blessings, I realize the necessity of repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Dear brethren, I did not think to write so much, as I do not feel competent to write anything to be seen in print. Do with this as you think best; but I do desire to see the two letters published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, our most welcome family paper.

Affectionately your unworthy brother,

SILAS G. SUPPLEE.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 9, 1893.

MY DEAR BROTHER SUPPLEE:—Your epistle of love found its way into our house at noon to-day. Its contents found their way into our hearts, and we were glad to know of your well-being and the continued exercise of your most holy faith. The subject upon which your mind was exercised to write, to wit, "The knowledge of God's glory," is as profound as it is deep and broad. The dear Lord has been very gracious to you, in giving you an abundant measure of the precious gift of the knowledge and understanding of the mysteries of his grace. When one of old said, "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," he included the earthen vessels of his mercy, which he had before of old ordained to his own glory, that they might show forth his praises in ascribing unto him dominion and power and majesty, in their mortal bodies. Such an one, my brother, do you manifest in your deportment, both in your walk and conversation. The fear of the Lord is the beginning both of wisdom and knowledge. The possession of that knowledge is manifested by the fruits yielded. The very first manifestation of the knowledge of God in man is the knowledge of self in that man; and that knowledge of self leads him to abase the creature and exalt the Creator. It reveals to him that his condemnation under the law is just; that in order to be delivered from its condemnation the law must be satisfied in its every jot and tittle; that mercy cannot step in at the expense of justice. But divine mercy has provided a way by which the demands of the law may all be fulfilled and made satisfactory. With knowledge comes light also, and the light of the knowledge of God's glory reveals the hidden things of God's wisdom. So, as we grow in grace, we also grow in the knowledge of the glory of God. How wonderful and mysterious are all the ways of providence! In the school of Christ we learn in a way that is not taught of men. All our teaching and all our knowledge comes through an experience of grace in our hearts. "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew;" and so comes our knowledge of the things of the Spirit. We cannot see the hand of the Lord as he leadeth us through deep waters; we cannot at the time realize that he really is leading us; but when we come again into the sunlight of his gracious presence we can look back over all the dark way we have trod, and say of a truth, The Lord's hand has directed each step of our hitherto fitful, feverish journey. With knowledge also comes faith; and by faith we know the testimony of Jesus is true, as recorded by holy men of old, because by the exercise of faith we have the witness within ourselves by which we are enabled to testify to the things of Jesus. If so be that we have tasted that the Lord is gracious, it has come by a fellowship of

INTRODUCTORY TO VOLUME LXII.

As the years of our earthly sojourn approach the limit of mortal existence, the frequent recurrence of their changing numbers as a solemn significance to those who have learned that this world, with all it can afford of joy as well as all its weight of sorrows, is but the momentary prelude to our entrance into the unchanging reality of eternal existence. In childhood and youth time appears to move slowly; but the months fly swiftly as they draw near the fulfillment of the span allotted to the children of Adam. Looking backward, it seems but recently that our hearts were buoyant with the bright anticipations of hope, and the future promised their successful accomplishment; but disappointment has rudely dispelled the bright illusions of early ambition, and the severe conflict of actual striving against sin has produced the consciousness that our enemies are too strong for us. Under this heartfelt sense of utter inability to keep ourselves, we can only rest in the unchanging faithfulness of that God in whom alone is the help of those who have destroyed themselves. Although in our own works there is no ground of hope for the favor of the Lord, there is no occasion for despair, since the riches of that grace which is in Christ Jesus give assurance that he is able to save to the uttermost all them that come unto God by him. Thus, in an experimental sense we are taught that "Where sin abounded grace did much more abound." Even in the tribulation promised in the world, the sufficiency of the saints is of God. The Captain of our salvation has overcome the world. He is the present help of every saint, being afflicted himself in all the affliction of his people. By no other power but that which his mercy and grace has afforded has his church been sustained hitherto against all the rage of earth and hell. Only as saved by the angel of his presence have the saints in all ages obtained the victory over death, and triumphed even in sealing with their blood the testimony of Jesus. Sustained by that omnipotent grace, the little flock of believers known as Primitive or Old School Baptists have continued unto this day, "Witnessing to both small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles."—Acts xxvi. 22, 23. In the strength of this revealed truth alone has this little flock been preserved from destruction, even though they have never had power to resist the mighty hosts of adversaries by whom they are surrounded in their weary pilgrimage through this world of vanity and sorrows. It is very manifest that this truth has sustained the feeble efforts of those who have now for more than three score years labored in the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the first periodical ever devoted to the defense of the doctrine of Christ as established by the authority of his inspired apostles. Very few remain of those who were associated with the founder and late editor of this paper in the outset of his apparently hopeless task. Nearly all have been called with him to rest in everlasting victory. But God has raised up others to testify to his unfailing faithfulness. The pens which dropped from the weary hands of those who were worn with the service of a lifetime, have been guided in the same cause by their successors; so that the saints have still been fed with the sincere milk of the word of truth, and the enemies of the gospel of salvation have been defeated in all their assaults upon the impregnable bulwarks of the doctrine of God our Savior. Certainly no credit is due to the frail mortals by whom God has published his truth; for they can but confess that the learning and wealth and power of this world are all found in the ranks of those will-worshippers who reject the testimony of inspiration, and teach for doctrines the commandments of men.

Under the blessing of our ever gracious Lord, the same loving favor of his people has continued with the present editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, by which the work of the founder of the publication was sustained. While desiring to yield no point of divine truth for the sake of avoiding the offense of the cross, it is our sincere wish that no devices of the natural mind may ever be allowed to alienate the feeling of fellowship which should manifest in every subject of grace the one heart and one mind of Christ. Much as the communion of experimental fellowship is developed by godly conversation and correspondence, there is no profit in either verbal or written intercourse unless the love of Christ governs both those who write or speak and those who read or hear. For the abundant manifestation of fraternal love which has attended the correspondence of this paper hitherto, all the praise is due to the riches of that grace which has been bestowed upon the contributors to our columns. May the Lord still display his sovereign favor in guiding by his grace all who may write for the pages of the coming volume! Since love is the fulfilling of the law of the kingdom of Christ, it is manifest that not even the clearest presentation of gospel truth can be profitable to the saints unless it is presented in the love of God. When the Spirit of Christ dwells in his people they will not be seeking to have the pre-eminence among the disciples, nor striving about words to no profit; but each will be found esteeming others better than self, and by love endeavoring to serve one another. Then the rapturous vision of the psalmist will be seen by every one who looks upon the Zion of our God. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Better may the children of divine grace be unable to tell the reason of their hope, so that they are governed by the power of love, than to have the ability to confound every adversity in defense of the truth, and be found trusting in themselves so that they have not the love of the brethren. This holy principle cannot be in lively exercise except as the saints are able to recognize in each other the grace of God as it is revealed in the experience of each one who is led by the Spirit of God. For this cause it is enjoined upon the followers of the apostles, that they should "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."—1 Peter iii. 15. Apostolic example authorizes the expression of this evidence by writing as well as by speaking. This is our warrant for the use of written and printed correspondence for the mutual comfort and encouragement of the afflicted and poor people of God. Within the past years of our publication very many of the tried children of grace have confessed the rich comfort they have derived through the medium of this paper. Thousands have been brought into correspondence who might otherwise have never heard of each other; and much consolation has been brought to the mind of many by the pens of those who could not have known when writing that they were thus ministering to "the poor of the flock." In view of such strong assurance of the favor of God in making our labor subservient to the comfort of his people, we are encouraged to continue our work as the Lord shall favor us with ability. All our infirmity and weakness is known to him, and he must supply every gracious qualification for the great service to which our efforts are directed. Surely there can be no higher nor more delightful calling than that which is blessed to the benefit of those chosen vessels of mercy unto whom it is given to suffer for the sake of their crucified Redeemer! In all that is done unto one of the least of them our Lord himself is ministered unto. Well may the saints unite with Paul in his triumphant shout, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ; therefore, my beloved, brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. xv. 58.

For whatever of usefulness has blessed our efforts in the past the praise is due to the grace of our Lord Jesus in giving the opportunity and the ability to serve those who love his holy name. The same great grace has moved many of his dear saints to contribute their assistance in filling our columns with the rich testimony of Jesus; for which they have our most sincere thanks. A continuance of their highly valued aid is most earnestly requested. While it would be presumptuous to claim that our course has been free from mistakes, it has certainly ever been our desire so to be guided as to present the consolation of the gospel to the afflicted and poor people, who have no refuge but in the infinite grace of our God. To this end we have sought to avoid strife about uninspired words and contention over theories and sentiments which are not clearly taught in the only perfect standard, the holy Scriptures. In maintaining firmly every point of doctrine which bears this seal of divine authority, however it may have disturbed traditional errors, it is certain that the saints have lost nothing which could be of real value to them. Doubtless much that has been accepted as truth without the testimony of the Spirit in the personal experience of the saints, may still be cherished by the children of grace. So long as they are subject to the vanity of mortality it is only as through a glass darkly that any can see the glory of our Redeemer. That glory is clearly shown by the Spirit to every one who is taught of the Lord; but the dark veil of fleshly vision often distorts the view received, so that the traditions of men usurp the place of real revelation in the minds of the saints. It is for their deliverance from this delusion that the word of truth is given in the inspired record. From our first issue this test has been recognized as decisive in determining the doctrine to which our columns are devoted. For the future no other standard can be recognized as our guide but this infallible word. This truth has sustained the church in all ages of the past, and there can never be safety in departing from its clear direction.

The same essential principles of the doctrine of the gospel of Christ must be maintained in the future, to which our paper was pledged in its original prospectus more than sixty years ago. While the votaries of natural religion must change their theories to suit the varying notions of men, there can never be occasion for changing any point of that gospel which God has given. Those who have read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in the past will not need to be told the peculiar characteristics of the doctrine to which it is devoted. For them it is sufficient to know that it will still unwaveringly contend for the same important principles of the doctrine of Christ in the future as in the long years since its first issue. When there is no further need for proclaiming that glorious gospel of the grace of God, then there will be no longer any field of usefulness for this paper. When there is no longer a people who love the joyful sound of salvation alone by the grace of God, then they who preach and write that heavenly truth may abandon the field of warfare in the defense of the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Until that time shall come it is certain that the lovers of God will rejoice together in the privilege of speaking and hearing the testimony of that Jesus in whom is all their hope for time and for eternity. For their service this medium of correspondence will be published the coming year as heretofore.

Trusting in that unfailing grace and mercy of God by which we have been sustained hitherto, and fervently praying for the continued favor of the saints in supporting us with their patronage, we enter upon the sixty-second year of our publication, looking alone to God for sufficiency, and desiring to cast all our care upon him. May his grace still be sufficient for us, and may he still supply all our need.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

For several numbers we have published special terms to subscribers already on our list for procuring new subscribers before January 1st, 1894; but as some have complained that the time was too short, we have decided to extend it, and until March first, 1894, we authorize every subscriber on our list to act as agent for us in procuring new subscribers, and for every new subscriber they send us they may retain one dollar, and send us one dollar. These terms apply only to new subscribers.

For every two new subscribers and three dollars sent us we will enter the two new names on our list for 1894, and credit an old subscriber one year; making three subscriptions for a year for three dollars, and additional new ones may be sent at one dollar each.

We cannot send one new one and credit an old subscriber one year for two dollars.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

his sufferings, by which also we learn obedience. The law was our Schoolmaster unto Christ; but now we have a more sure word of prophecy, even Christ himself, whose law is written in our inward parts, by the light of which we are enabled to walk uprightly before him. His law is perfect; we are imperfect. He is our standard; and by the knowledge of his love, which is by faith, we abide under the shadow of the perfect law of liberty. They who are saved by his grace delight in his law, which is a law of love unto them. Hope also does accompany the other graces of the Spirit as the child of Jehovah is made manifest in them. Hope sustains and strengthens us as we go halting along our weary journey, itself resting upon the sure foundation of faith. The apostle declares, "We are saved by hope," to which we can bear testimony in our own experience. As we are delivered out of death's darkness into the light of divine life, we soon learn with sorrow and dismay that our enemies are still round about us. But he who hath delivered us hath also provided the weapons of our warfare; for the Lord's hosts fight not with carnal weapons, but have their loins girt about with truth, having on the breastplate of righteousness, the feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, the helmet of the Spirit, which is the word of God, "praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." In this spiritual warfare, dear brother, you have fought many years. With all the saints you have fought the fight of faith, and through the Captain of your salvation your enemies have not overcome you.

With much love from us all, I am as ever your unworthy brother,
B. F. COULTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 27, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER SUPPLEE:—Business has required my presence in New York for some time past, and the period of my absence from home has been so entirely occupied with worldly cares that I have had no leisure to devote to much letter writing, and with one exception I have had no communication with any of the brethren since I went away. I have felt like writing to you several times of late, but something has always occurred to prevent the accomplishment of it. We arrived home on Monday, but are obliged to return again to New York to-morrow morning, to be absent for about ten days; after which we shall probably remain here uninterrupted until our final farewell to this city is said, sometime in October. That time will be a sad one to us. Our residence here has been the happiest period of our life. It has been an uninterrupted season of love, kindness, long-suffering and forbearance toward us by the dear brethren and sisters of the Salem Church. Charity has been the substance of all their dealings with me; but alas! I have often requited them by thinking evil, judging them after the manner of this world, and thus establishing my kinship to Cain. Notwithstanding my unworthiness, their love and fellowship is very precious to me, and separation from them will be hard to bear. Sorely as it will pain us, however, the separation is for the best; for God rules in this as in all else, and his wisdom cannot err nor his love be unkind.

During my absence I met with the Ebenezer Church several times, and found them to be a lovable people. If they will have me, I shall doubtless find a home with them. Of all the Elders whom I have met, there are none more acceptable to me than those who serve the New York Church. Elders Beebe, Jenkins, Vail, Bundy and Rittenhouse are, I think, your particular friends too.

Last night I called on brother Walton, and he very kindly allowed me to read the excellent letter you wrote to him. It seems to me that I would gladly sacrifice every pleasure or benefit life can ever afford me, to possess the calm, unwavering faith which dictated that letter. A like gift I earnestly covet, but I have about lost hope of ever possessing it; for my experience manifests a staggering belief that God's promises are appointed to my salvation. That God is faithful, and does accomplish that which he pleases, I am confident of; but that it is his good pleasure to give me the kingdom, I am much of the time in doubt. If I am of that number which are reconciled by him to himself through Jesus Christ, then eternal life is mine; for our High Priest ever maketh intercession for us, and because he lives we shall live also. But I cannot claim much comforting assurance that I am indeed a child of God. There was a time (it seems long ago) when for long seasons I felt no doubt that it was well with me; but now, if there ever is such assurance, it is but for a moment at times, and the intervals of darkness and depression only seem to be longer and aggravated by these occasional glimpses of light, if such they are. Even though I may not be comfortingly resting in an assurance of a good hope through grace, there is some comfort in believing I am not offended in Christ; in feeling that if I am not a partaker of an inheritance with all them which are sanctified, it is just and right in his sight. There is comfort in believing that not one of the dear children of God can ever be lost; that not a hoof of Israel shall be left behind, but that he shall bring with him all that the Father giveth him, that where he is there they may be also.

The carnal mind, which is enmity against God, has suggested many possibilities of a child of God utterly and finally perishing. However artfully clothed these propositions may be, no created intelligence has ever been able to conceive of any such possibility which cannot be reduced to just three suggestions, viz:

1. They might of their own volition return again to sin; and being forsaken of God, perish; or,

2. God might withdraw himself from them, not because of offense on their part, but because it was his will that they should perish; or,

3. Their enemies might be able to wrest them from God, and thus destroy them.

But all these possibilities are distinctly provided against by the Word of God, viz:

1. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "I have never seen the righteous forsaken."

2. "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." "Nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

3. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me is greater than all; and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."

And the Bible is full of just such declarations throughout. God will, therefore, according to the riches of his grace, and the faithfulness of his promises, bring all those whom he hath begotten again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved for them who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation; and, rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory, they shall receive the end of their faith, even the salvation of their souls. The King in Zion hath said, "I give unto them eternal life; they shall never perish." "I will raise him up at the last day." "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." And to mark us as peculiarly his own, he has sealed us with his Holy Spirit unto the day of redemption. "He who hath sealed us is God." It seems to me that there is comfort in understanding that it is not the promises, but it is the believers of the promises, which are said to be sealed. The use of a seal is to preserve or keep safe that which is sealed; and this is the way in which Peter declares us to be sealed, "God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us."—Acts xv. 8. For a long time I thought that this sealing with the Spirit was the effect which the Holy Spirit had upon us; but it is not so. It is not the Holy Spirit which seals us; it is not BY the Spirit we are sealed, but it is WITH the Holy Spirit we are sealed; he is God's seal unto us. If this be true, then the Spirit of truth dwelling in us is surely comforting; for we know that we dwell in God, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. In the gift of his Spirit he has sealed us unto the day of redemption. We are apt to (I know I am) look for the evidence of the Spirit of life in us in an assured sense of salvation; and when we fail to feel that, we are cast down; forgetting that this feeling itself is the Spirit making intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Being children of light, and walking in the light of God's countenance, the Spirit of him who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself will suffer at the revelation of a totally depraved and desperately wicked heart warring against the God we love. As we walk in the light of God's countenance we see the deceitfulness of our heart so plainly that we oft-times fear to embrace the hope that this chastening is an evidence of our sonship, fearing lest the hope is but a suggestion of this not-to-be-trusted heart. With the poet we say,

"Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

None but "The heart of the righteous studieth to answer; and the Lord heareth the prayer of the righteous. The ear that heareth the reproof of life, abideth among the wise. He that heareth reproof getteth understanding. The fear of the Lord is the instruction of wisdom; and before honor is humility."

When I began this letter I had no intention to write such a lengthy one; but I have enjoyed writing to you much more perhaps than you will enjoy reading my wordiness. I did not expect I would have time to write to you to-night, having so much to do in preparation for my absence; but as no more convenient time seems soon probable, I could not resist the impulse to write now. When you feel so impressed, write to me. I will dearly love to hear from you. I am not often favored with letters from the brethren, and sometimes I am much disturbed in mind because of this, fearing that the cause of their silence is because I may have expressed sentiments in my letters not according to truth. I believe I do sincerely desire to know the truth as it is in Christ Jesus; and it is a wonderful comfort to me to have the brethren tell me of their exercises of mind, as it frequently confirms me in a hope that my experiences of like nature are of the gospel.

Wishing you much pleasure and recruited health in your vacation experience, and looking forward with pleasure to meeting you soon, I subscribe myself, your unworthy brother,

JOHN MCCONNELL.

GOLDENDALE, Washington.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send the experience of brother David Baker, Sen., for publication in the SIGNS, if you see fit to publish it. I have enjoyed reading it, and several have desired its publication. The old brother is very feeble, and can scarcely see to read. He lives with his son Daniel.

Yours in christian love,
T. G. FLANARY.

GREENVILLE, Oregon, June 23, 1893.

MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST JESUS:—I have been requested by my brethren and sisters for some time to write my experience; but I have put it off until now. I have prayed that the good Lord may lead and guide my mind that I may not write anything but the truth. I do not remember dates, but I think it was in the winter of 1830 that I saw myself a great sinner. I had always thought I was a sinner, but at that time I felt myself to be a great sinner, and felt sure if I died then I would go down to eternal punishment. I saw no way to escape it. For some time I was afraid to lie on my back when on my bed at night, for fear I would die; and if I did, I felt I would go to hell. For some time I was afraid of hell, but it was not a great while till fears of hell did not trouble me. I tried to pray to God to have mercy on me, a sinner. Many times I would go out at night to some secret place where no human eye would see me, and get down on my knees and pray to the good Lord to be merciful to me, a sinner, saying, "Lord, save me, or I perish." It did seem to me that instead of my prayers going up, they fell to the ground. Sometimes I would go out in the daytime to some secret place and try to pray to the dear Lord to save me. O! I had a heavy burden to carry. I knew no way to get rid of it. I went out one night to pray, and when I got far enough from the house to fall on my knees to pray, something said, "You pray to the devil." I said I would not pray there. I turned round and went back to the house, trying to pray as I went. I had made arrangements to move into a neighborhood of Old, Primitive Baptists. I did not believe all their doctrine, but I thought they were a good people, and if I got in amongst them they might be a means of making my burden lighter; but in this I was very much mistaken, for it was heavier. I was living near a Primitive Baptist preacher, Elder Aaron Harlain. He had an appointment ten miles from where he lived, and I went with him to his meeting. There was another Elder there, and they both preached. I gave all the attention I could to understand what they said, but I did not understand much; but before I could think I said, "They are angels." I did not know that the true ministers of the gospel were called angels in the Scriptures. As Elder Harlain and myself returned home,

I rode the most of the way before him. I felt so troubled that I said, "Uncle Aaron, what shall I do?" He said to me, "David, I don't know." That was all he said. But O! the desperate feelings I had I cannot describe. I felt so miserable I could not keep from shedding tears, which I kept concealed from him as much as I could. At times my burden would not be so heavy on me, and my mind would be more easy for a while, but my trouble would return again to be heavier than before. I would try to pray to God to be merciful to me, a sinner, saying, "Lord, save me." It did not seem to me that my prayers did me any good, yet it did seem to me I must pray. My burden got so heavy I thought I was going to die. Yes, I thought my departure was near by. O what a wretched creature I felt myself to be! I would read the Scriptures to see if I could find anything in them to ease my troubled mind, but I could find nothing in them for me. There was no promise that I could see was for me. I could not understand the Scriptures, and I thought it strange that I could not understand any of it. It came to my mind, "You are too great a sinner to understand it." I then thought I could see my heart, and it was black with sin. This may seem strange to some, but it is no more strange than true. Now, when I was about to give up all hope, I thought, I will get the Bible and look in it once more, and see if I can find something in it that will give ease to my poor soul; but I found nothing for me. This was quite late in the evening. That night when I was in my bed and on my back (it was so dark in the house I do not think I could have seen my hand before me) I saw a being up over me, and in an instant I said, "It is Jesus. Bless the Lord." My wife asked me what was the matter. I told her, "I don't know." I do not know what time of night it was. I asked her to go with me to Uncle Aaron Harlain's. She said they were all in bed asleep, and for me to wait till morning. My feelings I cannot express. All seemed to be joy, peace and happiness. It seemed to me I loved everybody. Yes, I believe I was made to rejoice with that joy that is unspeakable. I did not think I should ever see any more trouble; but it was not very long till I began to fear that I might be deceived, and it was only imaginary. O how I did want my burden back again! I thought if I had it back again I would know more how it went off, if it ever did go off again. I have never had the same burden, but I have had many doubts and fears that I might be deceived.

I was not long in making up my mind what church I should join. The Primitive Baptist Church was right, and I thought baptism by immersion was the only gospel mode. I did not offer myself to the church for a year or more. I was afraid at times that I was deceived, and if I joined I would deceive the church. The subject of joining the church and being baptized bore very heavily on my mind. There was an old brother by the name of Eli Davis, and as I thought he was a good man, I thought I would go and see him. I went, and told him some of my troubles, and spoke about joining the church. He gave me some encouragement, and not a great while after, on the twelfth day of July, 1833, I offered myself to the Mt. Moriathe Church, was received, and at the next church meeting was baptized by Elder Benjamin Lambert. I used to think that when I got to be old I would not be troubled with so many evil thoughts and temptations; but I am in my ninety-first year, and I still have a hard heart, and a wretched, wandering mind. If I am saved it will be by grace, free grace, and free grace alone, not for anything I have done or can do.

DAVID BAKER, SR.

DILLY, Oregon, Oct., 1893.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED BRETHREN BEEBE:—I did not think to again so soon encroach upon your time and space in our precious family paper; but having just received a very comforting letter from a highly esteemed old brother in Colorado, I take this means of informing him of my heartfelt approval of his sentiments, and wish to assure him that what he wrote on the "solemn subject of prayer" does not in the least clash with my views. I wish to humbly acknowledge to my brethren everywhere that I do not feel competent to set forth in a clear manner the subject I have started. But I know there are some (yes, the majority of the children of like faith) who are as much opposed to form as the unworthy writer. Will not someone who is able take up the theme and show it in its true light? Not only do our people err in this thing, but there are many things practiced by them in an unthoughtful manner which ill become children of the most high God. I have frequently heard our brethren, and even Elders, address people of other denominations as brother or sister; and when taken to task for so doing they would say, "They are brothers and sisters in the flesh, and we do not know but they are our spiritual brethren. I have just as warm a feeling for them as for any of our members, and I do not feel like being so particular." Another will say, "I believe them to be the finest kind of people, and I have more confidence in them than I have in myself. I do not believe in extremes." I might record many more excuses that are made by our people for brothering those who have not received Jesus as their Savior. Surely these things ought not to be. I once knew a Baptist minister to invite into the pulpit with him a Campbellite minister, and my horror of such an act I cannot describe; but I will further record, for the relief of those who feel as I do, that the Lord did not permit the matter to go farther. I have known instances where brethren have introduced strangers to one another as brother so and so, which eventually led to considerable embarrassment. I would as soon see them invited to the communion table; and surely we have as much right to do so as to receive them as brethren, who have not shown their faith by their works. Once an Adventist minister addressed me as sister; but I frankly told him he was mistaken; that I was one of those "detestable Predestinarians" (a denomination he had taken pains to single out as a people worthy of derision), and I wished him to go home with me and learn a little more of them, particularly as he had wondered during his discourse why their preachers preached at all, as they do not claim to save souls. You who read this may wonder what I was doing at such a place, while I am so particular on other points in the christian's walk. I acknowledge the wrong, and I felt myself out of place at the time; but I had private reasons for wishing to know just what the Adventists hold forth; and I must say that I paid dearly for my enlightenment. My husband did not accompany me, but preferred to go fishing, having, as he said, all the Arminianism at home that he wanted, and more too, for that matter. I felt awful to sit still and hear our people maligned and our doctrine trampled upon by filthy feet. After a conversation at home, in which my companion took part, this same minister who had rolled the word sister off his tongue so glibly, told us that he did not wish to call anyone brother or sister who believed as we did. I must say it was a comfort to us to hear him say it. We are commanded to come out of Babylon and be not partakers of her iniquity. Some say, "I do not go because I expect to hear anything good, but I like to see my neighbors and exchange greetings with them. If the preacher says anything good I receive it, and what I do not like I let alone." The apostle says, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." It is very easy to fall into the ways of the worldly minded for popularity's sake, and often without being aware of the fact ourselves. The inclinations of the flesh naturally lead us that way, and from home, which is sure to bring a rich harvest of sorrow to the poor, tried soul who languishes for nourishment from the only source from whence it can come.

But I do not wish to say more, and will feel grateful to any brother or sister who will let me know through this or another medium that they indorse what I have tried to set forth in my feeble manner. If I have said aught to offend, I am very sorry for it, as I have meant to say nothing but what divine writ will bear me out in. Although I have not attempted to quote Scripture to prove the truth of what I feel and believe, there is much to substantiate it, as every Bible reader who has been given ears to hear and eyes to see must know. We are commanded to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
MRS. J. K. BOYD.

ORLENA, W. Va., Aug. 15, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—It has been one year since I joined the church, the Regular Old School Baptists. I was received on Saturday, and was baptized on Sunday by Elder S. D. Lewis. It has been twelve years since I first felt the Spirit of God working in me, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Salvation is not of works, lest any man should boast. It is the free gift of God. May the Lord sustain me in my strength and in my weakness.

I had thought that every day would be the last with me. I thought the pangs of hell had hold of me. I got down upon my knees in the woods, and cried unto the Lord to be merciful to me, a sinner. O what joy came to me! I thought I would join the Presbyterians; but when I went there something said to me, "Come out of Babylon; for there is no rest for you there." I went out of the house, knelt down, and cried, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." Something whispered in my ear, "O come away; do not stay here." I started home, and O what a burden of sin and guilt was resting on me. I went on in this way for a long time, and thought I would join the Methodists; but when I got there the same voice was there, whispering, "Come out from among them, for they are not of my sheep." I said, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner."

One night while I was at my father's, and we had been talking on the holy word of God, he said that some would go for months, and some for years, before they would go and tell what the Lord had done for them. The tears rolled down my face and fell on the floor. I started for my home next morning, and when I got there I felt a little better; but when night came O how much worse I felt! I thought that Satan had hold of me. But before morning my sorrow was turned to joy, and I was made to sing a new song, as the psalmist David did. "I waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord."—Psa. xl. 1-3. I saw by the eye of faith our Lord Jesus Christ.

One night I dreamed of seeing my Savior, and I told him what a sinner I was. He said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" I said, "That was the word of the Savior." And he said, "Arise, and be baptized, calling on the name of the Lord." O how unworthy I felt, to think that I had come where there was a place of joy, peace and comfort. There was no peace to me until I went to the Old School Baptist Church, and there I found rest. While I have life in my body I will praise the Lord, for his goodness and mercy endure forever. And when I die, and my body shall be laid in mother earth from whence I came, I hope my spirit will take its flight to the God who gave it, and there rest with our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and reign forever and ever.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, dear brethren, and my love be with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE DO.

It will be of great assistance to us, and save us many dollars, if the brethren and friends who sent on a new subscriber with their own subscription for last year will either see or write the parties, and inform them that their subscription expired at the end of the year 1893, and request them to renew, or if they do not intend to become regular subscribers to have their paper discontinued.

We should be sorry to discontinue from our list the name of a single person who intends to renew their subscription for 1894, but we cannot carry their names long on an uncertainty. They have now had the paper for about a year, and must know by this time whether they like it or not.

INDIGENT FUND.

DURING the past year the brethren and friends have contributed nearly two hundred dollars, to assist us in sending the SIGNS to those who love to read them, but are not able to pay for them. We sent the paper last year to from three to five hundred of these readers; and if our brethren feel willing and able to assist us, we shall try to continue them on our list for the coming year. Judging from the letters of gratitude we receive, there are none who more highly appreciate the paper than those who receive it from this fund. All remittances for this fund will be acknowledged in the SIGNS, and our readers will thereby be enabled to see just what support the fund is receiving.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE permitting, Elder A. B. Francis, of Virginia, will preach for the church at New Vernon, N. Y., on Sunday, Jan. 14th, 1894, at 10:30 a. m., and at Middletown at 8:00 p. m. of the same day.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Andrew Gilchrist was born in Scotland, Oct. 28th, 1832, and died in the village of Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., Dec. 24th, 1893, aged a little more than 61 years.

The deceased came to America in 1852, and in 1860 was united in marriage with Miss Mary Jane Hatfield, in the city of Pekin, Ill., who survives him. Brother Gilchrist was baptized in McLean Co., Ill., in 1880, by Elder James H. Ring, and united with the Primitive Baptists, and remained a faithful and beloved member of the church until death. Soon after his baptism he and his beloved wife, sister Mary J., located in Warren County, and united by letter with the New Hope Church, and have since enjoyed her fellowship.

Our brother was confined but a couple of days, with something like blood-poisoning, when he gently passed away. A large audience attended his burial on the 26th, and were addressed by the writer.

MACOMB, Ill., Dec. 27, 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send for publication a notice of the death of our dear, old, faithful brother, Salathiel Skinner, who will be much missed among the brethren of the Greenville Association, as he seldom failed to be at his post of duty among the brethren for thirty or forty years, though it required him to journey on foot once a month twenty miles through all kinds of weather.

He was born in Perry Co., Ohio, and died in Portland, Jay Co., Ind., Dec. 17th, 1893, aged 64 years and 10 months. The funeral services were conducted by Elder A. B. Brees. He leaves a bereaved wife and children to mourn their loss; also the brethren who have so long enjoyed his shining presence will miss him as a witness both of the suffering and resurrection of Christ. He shunned not to bear the fiery darts of the enemy, but was first at his post to watch his brethren fall in line. He never needed to be rallied to duty by his brethren, but was first in line, waiting for the rear brethren to come up in line.

N. PETERS.

DEPARTED this life Nov. 28th, 1893, Nancy McWilliams, at the home of her son, S. N. McWilliams, in Clinton Co., Mo.

She was born April 24th, 1795, and was therefore aged 98 years, 7 months and 4 days at the time of her decease. She was married to Captain John C. McWilliams at the home of her parents in Madison Co., Ky., August 17th, 1813. Her maiden name was Hockaday. Her husband was a Captain in the army of the United States in the war with Great Britain in 1812. Both she and her husband joined the old Bethel Predestinarian Baptist Church, in Madison Co., Ky., about the year 1840, and were baptized by Elder James Dudley. They moved to Clinton Co., Mo., in 1855, where her husband shortly afterward died. She leaves surviving her seven children, all of whom are either members of the Old School Baptist Church or believers in its doctrine. She remained a true, consistent and devoted follower of all its doctrine to the close. She was a life-long reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and for twenty years that she could not leave her bed of affliction she kept it under her pillow, and read and reread each number until she was familiar with its every word. She rarely failed to preserve some one that especially impressed her. Although I saw her but seldom, each visit was better than a sermon; for no one could converse with her and not feel that benign influence which always attends those who have walked with God. She was always interested in the trials and difficulties of the afflicted, but especially was she concerned about poor Mary Parker; and many a silent, heartfelt prayer went up from her bed of affliction for this afflicted but brave, noble, true soul. She lived a nobly grand, self-sacrificing life. Her uppermost thought was the good of others. Self was completely merged in the purpose to aid some other poor, struggling soul. In religion she asked but one question, "What has Jesus said about it?" When this was shown it was the end of inquiry. In domestic and social life she asked but one question, "What will add to the sum of human happiness?" When this was shown she sought no farther. But it was not so much what she did, but the spirit in which she wrought, which gave constant evidence that Jesus wrought in her "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." She always trusted implicitly in the declaration that "He doeth all things well."

J. M. LOWE.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 13, 1893.

By special request it becomes my painful duty to record the departure of another one of the Lord's anointed from this mortal state to that of immortality.

Brother James A. Turner was born in the state of Virginia, Dec. 21st, 1823, and died Dec. 6th, 1893, lacking 17 days of being 70 years old.

The subject of this notice was married in the state of Virginia to Miss Mary Oyler on Feb. 22d, 1853. By this union there were six children born (all girls), all living except one. He moved from Virginia to Indiana, and from that state to Kansas, of which dates I am not in possession. Brother Turner was baptized by Elder S. P. Ramey in the fellowship of the Gilead Church, in Miami Co., Kansas, on the first Sunday in October, 1883, and in June following was chosen Deacon of said church, which office he filled to the day of his death to the satisfaction of all the little children of that church. His work is done, and he certainly did leave unmistakable evidence of his acceptance by his Lord and Master Jesus Christ.

His disease was rather complicated, heart trouble and dropsy, from which he suffered untold misery, but bore it with that meek and submissive spirit which so plainly tells of the work of grace in a poor sinner of Adam's race. He made all necessary arrangements in regard to his business by counseling with his family, even to the digging of his grave. When the end drew near his faith was unshaken, with almost his last words exclaiming, "Lord Jesus Christ, receive my spirit."

By his own request Elders S. P. Ramey, Wm. L. Hall and the unworthy writer of this notice were sent for to preach his funeral, which we tried to comply with. Elder Hall opened the meeting by singing and making some remarks, when the writer of this followed, using for a text John i. 47, Elder Ramey closing with some very appropriate remarks. After this all that was mortal of brother J. A. Turner was consigned to earth to await the glorious morning of the resurrection, when this mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption. Then will be brought to pass the saying, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

If it be the will of the Lord, may his grace uphold, protect and console the afflicted family, who never tired day nor night in caring for the departed one. May we all be enabled by grace divine to bow our heads in humble submission, and say, Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

R. FLOURNOY.

OLATHE, Kansas.

Miss Minnie Halstead, eldest daughter of our sister, Emma S. Halstead, died of typhoid fever at her home in Unionville, Orange Co., N. Y., on Wednesday evening, Dec. 20th, 1893, in the 25th year of her age.

This is the third time in the last five months that our dear sister has been called to give up a loved one. On the 5th day of July last her husband, Mr. John R. Halstead, died quite suddenly; and on the 9th day of December (eleven days previous to the death of Minnie) the eldest son, Harry S., died of typhoid fever, aged 22 years.

Miss Minnie was highly esteemed by all who knew her, for she was possessed of a sweet disposition, and carried sunshine wherever she went. Although for a number of years she had been in soul-trouble on account of her felt sense of being a sinner before God, yet she had so carefully concealed her feelings that not even her mother had surmised the real state of her mind. Up to the time of her last sickness all was darkness and gloom to her, for she had not received the evidence that her sins had been borne by the Savior of sinners; but in the midst of her severe illness, when death seemed near at hand, it was the good pleasure of the Lord to reveal himself to her as her Savior, and she was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. On several occasions she was thought to be very near the end, and her physician and friends had abandoned all hope of her recovery; yet would she, in her extreme weakness, be heard singing the praises of her God and Savior. She was willing to live or die, being perfectly reconciled to the will of God; yet she expressed a desire to be restored to health, that she might declare in Zion the wonderful works of the Lord with her, and follow her Savior in the ordinance of baptism. After suffering several hemorrhages, the disease at last attacked the brain, and the last few days of her life here on earth were attended with delirium.

In her severe afflictions and bereavements our dear sister Halstead and her remaining family have the heartfelt sympathy of the community and the brotherhood. The Lord alone can heal their bleeding hearts.

The funeral services were held at the house on Friday p. m., 22d, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was laid in the cemetery at Unionville, by the side of the loved ones who had gone before.

"Peace! 'tis the Lord Jehovah's hand
That blasts our joys in death,
Changes the visage once so dear,
And gathers back the breath."

"By thy hand the boon was given—
Thou hast taken but thine own;
Lord of earth and God of heaven,
Evermore 'Thy will be done.'"

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STATE ROAD, Del., Dec., 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I will offer some comments on a sentence that may be found on record, Rev. iv., and a clause of third verse. "And there was a rainbow round about the throne." In the Revelation of Jesus Christ to John on the isle that was called Patmos, he is seen seated upon a throne. In this connection it is said to be set in heaven. In another place it is called a great white throne; but in each case the evangelist sees one seated upon the throne; and in this last case, both the earth and the heaven are said to flee from his face. While the Messiah was yet with the disciples he instructed them with regard to what should take place when he should be seated on the throne of his glory. The prophet speaks of this throne as a glorious high throne from the beginning, and says it is the place of his people's sanctuary. The King upon this throne is he that should reign over the house of Israel forever, and of whose kingdom there should be no end. This throne, then, is evidently the throne of grace; that in which grace should reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. It is encompassed with a rainbow. Not merely a rainbow above it, but round about it.

From the days of Noah until now, and until the end of time, there has been a rainbow round about the earth. In this bow is presented a beautiful and brilliant representation of that promise or covenant of which it was the emblem, and by which we are again and again reminded of the faithfulness of God to his word. As we see it, we see as it were the arms of Omnipotence reaching down from the firmament and encompassing the world in its grasp. In thus encircling the universe it of course takes in every living thing that liveth and moveth upon the earth. This we will remember was the very words of that covenant that it represented. The preservation of the earth is thus pledged; and not only the lives of men, and of the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, but all needful provisions for their subsistence. Seed time and harvest, and all the different seasons in their order, without derangement or interruption while the earth remaineth. This bow in the cloud is not held in its place by either the children of men or the beasts of the field. It was provided for them before they had even asked for it, and is hinged upon no conditions or contingencies whatever. This bow round about the earth embraces only the earth, and the creatures and things of earth. And with all its beauty and splendor, its colors are not heavenly but earthly, and designed to minister unto and be exemplified and fulfilled only in the things of earth. As the throne that the evangelist saw was set in heaven, so the rainbow that was round about it must have been set in heaven also. The covenant which it was designed to represent embraced heavenly things. It embraced that temple that Isaiah saw with all the train that filled it. The covenant embraced a countless multitude that no man could number; but they were all within the compass of this rainbow. It would perpetually shield them from all harm from without and from outside, and beyond this inclosure they could receive no needed good. The earthly bow with all its provision is secondary and subordinate to this heavenly bow. The apostle says, "All things are yours." As they belong to him who is the appointed heir of all things, so being joint-heirs with him, they "inherit all things." The earthly bow was not seen by men, so far as we have any account, until that destruction had come upon the world, from which it brought assurance to all those for whom the covenant was made of redemption and preservation forever after from a destruction. There was a time when the Son of man ascended the throne, and there is a time when his people get sight of him as Isaiah did; but we must not suppose that was the beginning of the throne. It was a glorious high throne from the beginning, and the rainbow was always round about it. It was in the year that king Uzziah died that Isaiah saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne high and lifted up. The death of the earthly king of that nation, and the utter subversion and ending of his throne and of the government under it, was the appropriate time to see the King and the kingdom that were higher and more enduring than any of the kingdoms of earth. After the prophet Daniel had been given to see the rise of four successive universal empires, in the figure of a great image, he saw until their utter overthrow and annihilation came, and then appeared the kingdom which the God of heaven should set up, which should break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, and should stand forever. It must have been peculiarly comforting to the apostle, suffering persecution and banishment as at this time, and deprived of the society of his brethren and of every earthly comfort, to see the rainbow of promise and hope encircling the Redeemer's kingdom. It must have been a blessed and joyful message to send to the seven churches, both on their own account and for his sake. The edicts of a despotic earthly emperor were of very little account. It might be said of him, as of Moses, that he endured as seeing things that were invisible. The bow must have been there or he could not have seen it; and if there, then it must be always there. Still it may be doubted whether he ever saw it before as then. The natural bow is not always visible. There is no need that it should be. When all is fair and sunshine, and no threatening clouds, the bow is not seen. Neither is it seen during the threatening storm and tempest. After the storm-cloud has passed, and the illuminating rays of the sun break upon it, what before was dark and threatening now appears as covenant mercy and love.

It was meet and fit that when the good king of Israel died, after having reigned so long and so well, that Isaiah should see that higher and more glorious throne. It was meet and fit that during the Babylonish captivity, and the utter desolation of the land of Israel, that Ezekiel and Daniel should both see the throne with the bow of an everlasting covenant round about it. These things are embraced in the salvation of every subject of divine grace; and if they have no clear discoveries of the rainbow round about them, they are nevertheless within its compass and are recipients of its gracious new covenant provisions. The covenant represented by this heavenly bow is repeatedly declared in express terms in the Scriptures. It is said in the epistle to the Hebrews to be "A better covenant, established upon better promises;" better than any and all other covenants that had ever been made. Of it David speaks, and declares it to be an "everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure." Of it the Almighty says that once he has sworn by his holiness, that he will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before him. It embraces the provision that a seed shall serve him, and that it shall be counted to the Lord for a generation. The provisions of this covenant may be traced back far beyond all the blessings that are secured unto the church; the Rock of Israel being their defense, the stability of their government, and the abundant ministrations that supply all their need. It embraces before all these things the taking out from among the nations a people for himself. "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." This earth abounds with varied charms and beauties; the rich and gorgeous colors of the flowers of the field; the blending of them in an endless variety of shades; and the combining and contrasting their brilliancy of color, show almost incomparable loveliness; as well as the growing plants, showing promise and hope for the future; and the bloom and blush of the matured and tempting fruits; all, all of their beauty and varied charms were and ever have been in the "bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain." They were there before they were imparted to the growing and blooming verdure, and with undiminished lustre they are there yet. But while we trace to the rainbow, the bow itself is traceable to the sun, from the shining light of which all that it is with its surpassing beauty and loveliness is derived. The kingdom of heaven has also a Sun as well as a rainbow. "The Lord God is a Sun;" and as a Sun,

"His beams are grace,
His course is joy and righteousness."
But whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare the plants that bloom in the paradise of God?

"Nature, to make its glories known,
Must mingle colors not her own."

This rainbow round about the throne imparts its heavenly beauty to the rose and to the lily that bloom in the Lord's garden. The Lord himself comes unto his garden and greatly admires its beauty; but it does not seem to have ever been appreciated by the world. All the plants are modest and diffident, knowing that they have no comeliness but what has been put upon them. But the Lord in the work of his grace is to them "a crown of glory and a diadem of beauty." The beauty of the Lord our God is seen upon them. The best sight that we ever get of that covenant bow that is round about the throne is when its rich and varied hues are seen upon the roses and lilies in the garden of grace. If we cannot see heavenly beauty there, we shall look in vain to see it elsewhere. These are the heavens that declare the glory of God, and the plants that show forth his praise. There is no garden elsewhere comparable to this. "It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice, even with joy and singing." "And it shall be to the Lord for a name, and an everlasting sign, that shall not be cut off."

The above is respectfully submitted.

PARABLE OF THE TEN VIRGINS.

Matt. xxv.

In giving my views upon this notable parable I wish to present them in both a literal and experimental sense; for I understand that the most lively figures in nature were used by Jesus to set forth spiritual things, or things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven, which I understand to be his church as set up by him here on earth. I also understand that the figure of the church on earth is fully set forth in the five wise and the five foolish virgins. The five wise virgins I understand to represent vessels of mercy, who were predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, that they should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. The five foolish virgins I understand to represent the Jewish nation under the law of Moses, and also all religious denominations that look to the works of the law for salvation. The virgins, as a figure, represent a woman that has preserved her chastity, pure and undefiled. Therefore the Jewish nation, as a religious people under the law, represents a virgin, as in the figure of the kingdom of heaven; and to my mind it also represents the five virgins who had no oil in their lamps, and whose light had gone out. Yet as virgins under their old husband, the law of Moses, they were true to their espousals, and are true to him to-day; for they neither marry nor are given in marriage with other people. There may be some exceptions, but as a religious body they are true to their husband; therefore they are virgins, and are included in the figure as presented by Jesus.

This parable of the ten virgins represents experimentally the life and experience of every subject of grace in the church or kingdom of heaven here upon earth; the five foolish virgins representing the natural man, with all the five natural senses of his fleshly nature; and the five wise virgins represent the spiritual man, the mind of Christ, by which he serves the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. For we know by experience that when we would do good, evil is always present; and the good we would, we do not. If we enter into our closet, in the clefts of the Rock, in the deep researches of our souls, there we find the foolish virgins, or the old man, like the strong man armed that keepeth his palace. Until a stronger man comes, and binds him, we find ourselves subject to his will, and are dependent upon the stronger man to give us light to enter into the door to the marriage feast and enjoy the presence of our Lord.

But before coming directly to the parable I wish to notice the sign of the coming of the Son of man, as given in the preceding chapter. "And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things?" (Referring to the temple as a building.) "Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. And as he sat upon the mount of Olives the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth, let him understand)," &c. It would seem from the Scripture testimony that this prophecy of Daniel was literally fulfilled at the coming of Christ; for Daniel says, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." I understand that Jesus did make reconciliation for iniquity, and did bring in everlasting righteousness, and did seal up the vision of prophecy, when he offered himself an acceptable sacrifice on the tree of the cross for the sins of his people; for he cried, "It is finished!" and gave up the ghost. Now, what is the sign of the coming of the Son of man? Jesus says,

"For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." This is also figurative language, and would seem to refer to the subjects of grace in their Adamic nature, dead in trespasses and sins. The eagles I understand to be figurative, and the same as when he says, "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Now, all this prophecy was given by Jesus for the sign of the coming of the Son of man. In Matt. xii. 38 we read, "Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. But Jesus answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas; for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; because they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here." Now, the sign of Jonas is the only sign that is given in this figure, in which the death and resurrection of the body of Jesus is set forth; and the repenting of the men of Nineveh, as in judgment against the generation of the scribes and Pharisees. This sign, I understand, is the sign by which the followers of Jesus are known amongst the inhabitants of the earth to-day, and by which sign they are accepted before the holy and just God. John the Baptist went forth preaching in the wilderness of Judea, saying, "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." Here we have the experimental view of the parable, and the part in which I am most interested. The sign given by Jesus was the sign of Jonas the prophet, and that sign was repentance. John the Baptist preached the same sign, "Repent." And this sign is the only one of admittance into the visible kingdom of heaven to-day. No one can be admitted into the visible church of Jesus Christ unless they bring before that church the sign of repentance. Not all the blood of bulls and goats, and the cattle of a thousand hills, or rivers of oil, or their body to be burned, or all the works of the law, though they be blameless as was Saul of Tarsus, will be sufficient to admit them into the church of the living God, without the sign of repentance. Jesus himself was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He wept at the grave of Lazarus, and over the city of Jerusalem, saying, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Here we see the foolish virgins, who had no oil in their vessels. If they, like the men of Nineveh, had repented at the preaching of Jesus, their city would have been spared. John the Baptist came preaching the same doctrine, saying, "Repent, ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But they conspired against John, and put him in prison, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. Thus we have the testimony of Jesus in regard to the five foolish virgins. I will say that their being foolish, according to the parable, does not disinherit them from the kingdom of God; for the word foolish means void of understanding; weak in intellect; want of judgment. Therefore, lacking these qualities, they were more objects of pity than otherwise. Saul of Tarsus belonged to that people, and took an active part in persecuting the saints, and verily believed he was doing God service.

I will now leave the five foolish virgins, and talk a little about the five wise virgins. I understand the wise virgins to represent the experience of every child of God. In nature they are companions with the foolish virgins, and are looking for salvation by the works of the law; and at midnight in their experience they hear the cry, "The Bridegroom cometh." They find that they are lost and ruined sinners, justly condemned before a just and holy God. Repentance begins its work in the heart of such ones, and they mourn their lost condition. This I understand to be the work of grace. Jesus gives repentance and remission of sins; and this repentance is the oil, according to the figure, that gives light in their lamps. Like the parable of the publican and the Pharisee, who represent the ten virgins, the wise one realizing his true condition meets the Bridegroom, crying, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." The other boasts of his own righteousness, and is rejected, and the door is shut against him.

But I wish to come closer to the kingdom of heaven in our experience; for Scripture testimony is the experience of the saints. As Jesus has used the parable of the wise and foolish virgins as a figure of the church, let us go over our own experience and see if we have the counterpart in our own experience. Did we not in our experience find ourselves numbered with the foolish virgins, having no oil in our vessels? Was there one spark of heavenly light found in all the researches of our soul when we heard the cry, "The Bridegroom cometh?" Before this we slumbered and slept, and all was well with us in that condition. But when the voice, like that which Saul of Tarsus heard, was heard by us, calling us by name, it was truly midnight with us then, and we repented of our lost and ruined condition as a justly condemned sinner before a holy and just God. To us in that condition the door of hope was shut, and like the foolish virgins our cry was, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." And we heard in thunder tones the voice, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not." That was my experience, and from what I have heard others say it is the experience of many who have told the story of the Savior's love. Jesus has declared, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." And again, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." How can a man be born again unless he dies to all hope spiritually, and is raised again from the dead? In the experience of those who have passed through that death to all hope of salvation by the works of the creature, they have found themselves dead in trespasses and sins; and unless they are born again, by the power of God, they must forever remain in that condition, as lost sons and daughters of Adam's race; therefore the necessity of the second birth in order to see the kingdom of God, to enter into that kingdom, to be a partaker of the water of life, and the Spirit of the resurrection from the dead, which is the Spirit of Christ; to bring forth the sign of the coming of the Son of man, which is repentance from dead works, with new hope and new life, which is the oil of joy, for a light to our feet and a lamp to meet the Bridegroom at his coming. Therefore we should heed the admonition of Jesus, "Watch, therefore; for ye neither know the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

In this same chapter we have another parable, the figure of a man traveling in a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his several ability, and straightway took his journey. I wish to notice particularly that these gifts were made according to the several ability; for that is the key to the parable as I understand it. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. If we judge who this first servant was according to ability, we would say he is Jesus, the Son of God. He came as a servant under the law to do his Father's will; and that will was, that of all the Father had given him he should lose nothing, but raise it up at the last day. The promise made unto Abraham was that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, which would include the Jew and Gentile generations of Adam. Thus in Jesus we have the character of the servant unto whom was given the five talents; for he not only made atonement for the Jew, but also for the Gentile; thereby in the salvation of the Gentile nations he gained five other talents, and was worthy to receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee a ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The next servant according to ability would be the bride, the church, the Bridegroom's wife, in which is included all the elect of God, from Abel, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob down to the end of time; for Jesus said, "Before Abraham was, I am," even back to the beginning, when the morning stars sang together. Then this second servant is heir with the first in his Father's glory, and to whom is given the keys of the kingdom of heaven, as apostles and prophets, and what they have bound on earth is bound in heaven, and recorded as the oracles of God, thereby receiving the same blessing and plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." In this second servant I understand all the subjects of grace are included, all the redeemed of the Lord, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, even every one that calls on the name of the Lord; for Jesus says, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." They certainly have gained two other talents; a good hope through grace in this world, and life and immortality in the world to come. The third servant I understand to represent the field of nature, the generations of Adam, the production of Adam and Eve, the knowledge of good and evil, the fruit of disobedience, the lusts of the flesh, and worldly glory. This servant said, "I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine." There are volumes of experience contained in what this servant said. The carnal mind is enmity against God, is not reconciled to his will, neither indeed can be. So says an inspired apostle, and we know it by experience; and we know also by experience that we who have professed to receive the two talents often find ourselves personating the servant with the one talent, which we have hid in the earth, and fear that in the end that talent will be taken away, and that we shall be cast out as unprofitable servants, into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Dear brethren Beebe, this article is already too lengthy to be published in the SIGNS. I have told only in part what I hope I have experimentally seen in the parable; only a glimpse here and there of the kingdom of heaven. The subject has been upon my mind lately, and I thought I would try to write some of my thoughts, that my brethren might see what a foolish virgin I am, if one at all; for the apostle Paul has said, "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise."

Affectionately yours,

JOSEPH BRODERS.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The wise king of Israel said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding."—Prov. ix. 10. There is a people on the earth who do not fear the Lord. Of them the apostle says, "There is no fear of God before their eyes." Mortals do not fear those of whom they are ignorant, nor do they fear any whom they do not know have power to punish: and they do not know that there is a God who is omnipotent, in whose hands is all power in heaven and in earth, and who is of too pure eyes to look upon sin or behold iniquity. They do not know that he searches the hearts and tries the reins of the children of men. Not knowing these things, they do not possess that wisdom of which Solomon speaks. "They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable," is the language of inspiration. God is a Spirit, and none can know him but those who are quickened by the Spirit. To them is revealed the superlative glories that shine forth in his great and wonderful character. That character is declared in his sacred word, and by the power of the Spirit its rich treasures and unfading beauties are opened to the minds and hearts of his saints, which causes them to rejoice in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh. Then they fear the Lord, and wisdom is given them, which enables them to see the deep corruptions of the flesh, which cause them to say, "Woe is me, for I am undone." But that is the beginning of wisdom—that wisdom which enables them to see the deep corruptions and pollutions of sin which permeates their natural hearts and causes them to say with the psalmist, "I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." But a higher and more glorious knowledge awaits them, which is the knowledge of the holy, and which is understanding. Those who have holiness, who by the operation of the Spirit are made holy, see that holiness does not purify the flesh of the saints, in which dwells no good thing, but causes them in sorrow to say, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." From whence did that knowledge in the apostle arise? Did he obtain it at the feet of Gamaliel? Did he get it from that wise Jewish teacher? O no. He says, "As touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless." But when wisdom was given him by which he was enabled to say, "We know that the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin," then he ceased to be a boasting Pharisee, and was prepared to say, "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." Then his Lord had been made unto him wisdom by the power of the Holy Spirit. That Spirit had taken the things of Jesus and shown them unto him. God is a Spirit, and that Spirit had spoken to him near to Damascus, and said, "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." It was then he had given to him the first sips from the great fountain of wisdom, that fountain which alone exists in Jesus, and in his saints when he is made unto them wisdom. He reigns in his own superlative glory in the army of heaven, and his wisdom is given by grace divine to all his redeemed and regenerated sons and daughters. In that wisdom which is alone the gift of God they know him, whom to know is life eternal. To them he says, "I am God, and beside me there is no Savior." Realizing their lost and ruined condition by reason of sin, they glory in the Lord. They rejoice in Christ Jesus. Without that wisdom they would be groveling in the knowledge of this sin-polluted world, and vanity, sin and corruption would be their constant companions. But they are made holy, because God works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. They then have the knowledge of the holy, which is understanding. But in them how great and wonderful is that understanding. To them is revealed some of the wonders that shine in the great and ever glorious name of Jesus, a name given him amidst the superlative glories in the third heaven, and was borne to earth by a celestial messenger, and recorded in the mind and heart of his servant Joseph, and was declarative of his great and most holy mission to earth. "He shall save his people from their sins," was his mission when he came to earth and took on him that body which was prepared him. To Joseph was given that wisdom which enabled him to know the child Jesus. He no more was taught these things by the wisdom of earth than was Saul of Tarsus when he was made to know that it was Jesus of Nazareth whom he persecuted. Then how appropriate is the lan-

ATONEMENT.

"AND not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement."—Rom. v. 11.

In compliance with the wish of an esteemed brother, we submit the following thoughts in connection with the text here quoted, which is the only place in the New Testament where the atonement is spoken of. The primary signification of the word as it occurs in the ceremonial law is the complete covering of transgression, so that there is a thorough change in the condition of the transgressor from just condemnation to full justification. It is manifestly in this sense that the word is used by Paul in this expression. In the preceding verse, which is inseparable from the text, the same original word is twice translated by the English word "reconciled." This shows clearly that the figurative atonement typified the removal of transgressions by the blood of Jesus whose one offering of himself without spot to God is the full satisfaction of all the demands of divine justice against the members of his body, for whose offenses he was subjected to the suffering of death. Since the law demanded the life of the sinner, there could be no remission of sins without the shedding of blood. But the blood of no man could be shed legally while no sin was found resting upon him. Certainly there could be no propitiating offense by the shedding of blood in defiance of the commandment which God gave for the government of man. This was set forth in the fact that there was in the law of Moses no provision for the remission of sins of any others but the nation of Israel; and only by their exact compliance with the directions prescribed in the law could they be typically cleansed from transgressions. As they were born of the natural seed of Abraham they were embraced in the legal covenant even though they were disobedient to its every requirement. Their own will and works had nothing to do with that blessing which they inherited by their natural birth. Even though they were cut off in punishment for their rebellion against the commandments enjoined upon them, they did not cease to be the natural children of Abraham. Those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness did not become Gentiles by their unbelief. So, the disobedience and unbelief of the subjects of electing love cannot sever their relation to the Father of all mercies, even though they may yield their members servants to sin so as to bring upon themselves that state of death in which they can find no assurance that they ever knew the love of God. This is the antitypical significance of this provision for the atonement or reconciliation of the guilty Israelite. It should never be forgotten that those to whom the Sinai covenant was given were chosen of God to the reception of that gift before they were manifest in the flesh. All their weary servitude in Egypt was promised of the Lord before Isaac was born. But they could not claim that they had merited the favor of God by the sufferings which they endured. Neither do the tribulations through which the saints must enter the kingdom of God, in any degree add to the life unity by which they are identified with the Redeemer, in whom alone they have that perfect righteousness in which they stand accepted in the sight of God. As there was in the typical covenant provision for the atonement for the transgressions of none but the children of Israel, and all of them were included in that provision, so in the covenant of grace there is provision for the cleansing of every one whom God chose in Christ before the foundation of the world, and none can be added to that eternal choice by the will or works of men. Only as their life was in Christ could he bear their sins in his own body on the tree of the cross, thereby being made a curse for them. In that glorious suffering he is indeed the atonement by which justice is satisfied on the part of every one of his chosen people; he is also therein of God made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. In all this he is exclusively given to his chosen people. In him they have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.

While it is true that the effectual and satisfactory work of Jesus is the atonement of divine justice for all the sins of those for whom he gave himself a ransom, there is a peculiar sense in which there is forgiveness of sins by his grace, so that he blotteth out all the iniquities of those who come unto God by him. This is the atonement which his people have received as their present experience of the cleansing efficacy of his precious blood. By virtue of this atonement Paul could thank God through Jesus Christ as his deliverer from the body of this death, and exult in the fact that "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." This gracious provision for the satisfaction of the claims of infinite justice does not involve any change in the demands of the law under which the saints are condemned in common with all the children of Adam. This important fact is not seen by the wisdom of men who devise their own systems of salvation. They claim that God is moved by the repentance of the sinner to remit the penalty denounced by his holy law against sin, and to meet the penitent with terms of mercy by which he confesses himself reconciled to the transgressor by reason of his sorrow for the violation of the divine commandment. But neither in the typical law nor in any other portion of the revealed word of truth is there any intimation that God is reconciled to sinners. On the contrary, it is expressly written that under the gospel dispensation old things are passed away, and all things are become new. "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."—2 Cor. v. 19. It should be borne in mind that the same original Greek word which in the text is translated "atonement," is in this quotation translated "reconciliation." This is evidently the true meaning of the word as it is found in the law of Moses, as well as in the text under consideration. And since there can be no change in the immutable God, it is necessarily true that this atonement is the conformity of the guilty sinner to the holiness and complete perfection of God.

In the more particular application of the type to the dealing of God with his spiritual people, this provision for the atonement foreshadows the grace of God in healing their backslidings, and in cleansing them from all their iniquities through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Under that law which was given from Sinai there was no provision for the blotting out of transgression. The Israelite who transgressed in any point was guilty of the whole law, and no penitence could avail for the removal of the curse which passed upon him. Even though there had been offerings brought according to the demand of that law, and in the daily sacrifice there had been a ceremonial cleansing of the guilt of the sinner, yet in the yearly sacrifice there was a remembrance of the sin, thus showing that in all that service under the law there was no possibility of attaining unto perfection. Only by the removal of that heavy yoke of legal bondage, and the bringing in of the new dispensation of divine grace and truth, which came by Jesus Christ, could there be any revelation of the true atonement, by which sinners are reconciled unto God by the cleansing power of the blood of the everlasting covenant. Nothing but the precious blood of Jesus could wash away the sins of his chosen people, and present them holy and blameless before the piercing eye of infinite justice. When that blood was poured out to God the utmost demand of justice was satisfied. This was attested by his resurrection from the dead; for if there had remained one sin of all his members which was not purged by his blood, then death had never acknowledged him as its victorious Conqueror, and his body must have remained in Joseph's new tomb; then hell had triumphed over heaven, and universal despair must have reigned supreme. But by his resurrection from the dead he brought life and immortality to light. The dark dominion of death was abolished, and in immortality Jesus is exalted with the right hand of God (that is, with all the omnipotence of Jehovah), for the express purpose that he should reign as "A Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins."—Acts v. 31. Thus for both the forgiveness of sins and the gift of genuine repentance, the true Israel must ever be dependent upon the grace of their sovereign Redeemer. In that infinite grace is the provision for the effectual atonement by which the subjects of his electing love are reconciled unto the holiness of God, and made free from all sin by his precious blood, which was shed for their redemption from condemnation. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Upon this ground, as an ambassador for Christ, Paul prays the saints to be reconciled to God. Surely there could be no stronger consideration urged in support of the exhortation than that matchless grace of God which is here cited.

It is manifest that such an appeal as this could not consistently be addressed to those who were dead in trespasses and sins. Only those who are conscious of their own utterly lost condition could be exhorted in consideration of their hope of salvation by the blood of Jesus. And they are the only characters who are in need of this exhortation. They find in their members a constantly warring law of rebellion against the law of the mind of Christ, so that they cannot do the things that they would do. Unbelief has full control of the natural mind, and consequently reason is always urging them to cast away their confidence in the love and faithfulness of their Savior. When overcome by the strong opposition of this carnal mind, the saints often find themselves involved in transgression against the commandment and example of their Lord, and there is frequent need of their being brought back to their assurance of faith in the salvation of God as embracing them in its secure provision of love and mercy. For their benefit this complete reconciliation of sinners unto God by the precious blood of Jesus is revealed in the gospel. This is the true atonement by which enemies against God are reconciled to him in the forgiveness of their sins, not only in the first manifestation of his electing love, but all through their weary warfare while they sojourn in this land of perpetual conflicts and temptations. To none but the genuine subjects of divine grace is there need of this precious truth of the ever living intercession of Jesus, "by whom we have now received the atonement." All who claim to have obtained the favor of God by their own works, whether of the law, or of some fancied merit in believing, or in complying with offered terms of grace, are independent of any atonement; for there can be no occasion for their being reconciled to God when they have deserved his favor; and if they have need of more righteousness than they can claim at any time, they have but to secure it by more diligent efforts. Those who are so poor and needy that they can only confess the justice of their condemnation before God, who even after they have hoped in the salvation of God can find no good thing in themselves, certainly have to trust in the intercession of that High Priest who has made for them that acceptable sacrifice by which they are forever reconciled unto all the perfection of infinite holiness. This is the atonement which we have now received by Jesus Christ. It is not merely the hope of an eternal blessing embraced by that faith which is given to the saints now. Already, in the assurance of that witness which abides in them, they have received the atonement by the reception of Jesus Christ as their hope of salvation from sin. So long as they remain subject to vanity in the body of this death they will never be able to attain to that righteousness in themselves after which they hunger and thirst. So John says, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Our Lord Jesus has the exclusive power to forgive sins. This is the glory of that salvation which is revealed in him. He does not unjustly interpose his omnipotence to rescue sinners from the sword of divine vengeance due to their iniquities. He saves them by his own atoning blood from their sins, thus reconciling them to God. Then justice commands in the case of every one for whom he died, "Deliver him from going down to the pit; I have found a ransom." The same great grace by which they are cleansed from all sin, has provided this complete atonement; not that the saints should continue in sin; but as John says in connection with the words above quoted, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours [natural Israelites] only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Thus his atonement is ample for the justification of all that world whose sins he bore in his own body on the tree.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed several hundred extra copies of number one of this volume, and shall continue to run a surplus of each number until further notice, so that all new names sent in, can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume.

UNTIL MARCH.

first, 1894, we authorize every subscriber on our list to act as agent for us in procuring new subscribers, and for every new subscriber they send us they may retain one dollar, and send us one dollar. These terms apply only to new subscribers.

For every two new subscribers and three dollars sent us we will enter the two new names on our list for 1894, and credit an old subscriber one year; making three subscriptions for a year for three dollars, and additional new ones may be sent at one dollar each.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK US TO SEND A NEW ONE AND CREDIT AN OLD SUBSCRIBER ONE YEAR FOR TWO DOLLARS, AS WE CANNOT AFFORD TO DO IT.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

PLEASE DO.

It will be of great assistance to us, and save us many dollars, if the brethren and friends who sent on a new subscriber with their own subscription for last year will either see or write the parties, and inform them that their subscription expired at the end of the year 1893, and request them to renew, or if they do not intend to become regular subscribers to have their paper discontinued.

We should be sorry to discontinue from our list the name of a single person who intends to renew their subscription for 1894, but we cannot carry their names long on an uncertainty. They have now had the paper for about a year, and must know by this time whether they like it or not.

INDIGENT FUND.

DURING the past year the brethren and friends have contributed nearly two hundred dollars, to assist us in sending the SIGNS to those who love to read them, but are not able to pay for them. We sent the paper last year to from three to five hundred of these readers; and if our brethren feel willing and able to assist us, we shall try to continue them on our list for the coming year. Judging from the letters of gratitude we receive, there are none who more highly appreciate the paper than those who receive it from this fund. All remittances for this fund will be acknowledged in the SIGNS, and our readers will thereby be enabled to see just what support the fund is receiving.

guage of inspiration which declares, "The world by wisdom knew not God." "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." Men of the world have gloried in earthly wisdom which has secured to them earthly fame; but although they may have inscribed their names high up in some broad niche in that earthly temple, yet they are as ignorant of true wisdom as the sea fowl is of the depths of the great ocean over which he soars. They behold the beauties and wonders of nature, but the knowledge of those things does not yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God. The companions of earthly wisdom are pride and vanity; while the companions of those who have that wisdom which is of God are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith. The former are of the earth, earthy; and all things that pertain to this earth must fade and pass away. But the things that are holy, heavenly and divine will live throughout eternity; and wisdom is one of those things. That wisdom which is of God is revealed by his Spirit to his saints, and dwells in them while here below, and will attune their sainted voices to sing his praises amongst the glories of the celestial world. Oh, dear little ones, you who are my companions amidst scenes of sorrow, let us meditate upon the glory of that wisdom which is revealed in Jesus, and was made yours when you by the Spirit's power were enabled to know him, whom to know is life eternal. Then you were made wiser than the wisest natural philosopher or sage that ever lived on earth. He then shone in you, and gave you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Then you were made to realize and know that the knowledge of the holy is understanding. But ah, how oft, like this poor little one who writes these thoughts, are you made to mourn over your ignorance and want of understanding. How oft we desire to know more and more of the great and wondrous character of him who rideth upon the heavens in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky. He rode in the legal heavens in the help of Israel, and he rides, dear little ones, in the gospel heaven in your help. But O how often you, when over, shadowed by darkness and gloom—earnestly crave that wisdom which will drive back the thick clouds that seem to overshadowed you, and give you a clearer view of that lovely countenance that was once marred more than the sons of men, that you might be brought from under the curse of a violated law, and made a joint heir with him to all the beauties and glories of his eternal kingdom. Your prayer while traveling through this wilderness land is, Give me, O give me, to know thee, whom to know is life eternal; to know thee in thy power, wisdom, omnipresence, immutability, justice, love and mercy. Those who are blessed with a view of their glorious Lord, in whom dwells all these great, glorious and wonderful attributes, can say from the inmost depths of their being, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding."

But, dear brethren, since the foregoing was written I have read in the SIGNS of the 29th inst. brother Durand's truly able article on "Vital knowledge;" and now I hesitate about mailing these poor thoughts to you, fearing that your readers will not enjoy these feeble thoughts after partaking of the rich spiritual feast spread before them by brother Durand on a similar subject.

My nervous system is so seriously affected that I realize that your compositors will have great difficulty in reading my writing and setting it up for the press. For this reason, together with my inability to write that which will interest others, causes me to conclude that I ought to cease to write for the SIGNS. But when I am meditating upon the sublime beauties and glories of the great plan of life and salvation through the finished work of our dear Redeemer, the temptation to write is almost irresistible. But standing on the verge of eternity, as I am, I know that I ought to be truly grateful to the great Giver of all good for his mercy and loving forbearance towards me, a poor, helpless sinner, who realizes day by day as he journeys towards the tomb, that if he is saved it will be a sinner saved by grace, and not on account of any works of righteousness which he has done. And you, dear brethren and sisters, when you offer your supplications at the throne of grace remember this old and sorrowing one that his few remaining foot prints on earth may be attended with the glorious light of Zion's all-exalted King, to whose name be all the glory.

H. COX.

YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—One of your oldest subscribers, a very spiritual minded sister, at the age of ninety, and blind for some years, desires me to write on this subject, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." These words of the Master are plain and simple. He teaches that God has a kingdom, not of this world; that men are the subjects of his kingdom; but that in order to qualify them to see and enter into it, they must be born again; for there is no other way of entrance into it. The word says, "Not according to our works." "Not by works." "Not of works." "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." This is said of as many as received the Lord Jesus. Men of Israel, who believed that he was the Christ, received him; therefore they were born of God. This much is settled, then, by the testimony. The kingdom of God is divine, spiritual and everlasting; therefore as many as are born again have eternal life, and are made partakers of the divine nature. Thus endowed, they see and enter into the kingdom of God; for they are his children and heirs. The Scriptures teach this of the man as a unit, not of any part of him. They speak of man as one, as a whole being, and testify that he must be born again, or from above, of God who is a Spirit, or he cannot see the kingdom of God, which is from above and spiritual. Jesus and his inspired servants do not teach that a man must be born over, either in whole or in part; neither have they taught us that some part of man is born again, but some other part is not born again. This idea about a part of man being born again is not the Master's teaching. Then let us not go beyond the Scriptures. No man will ever make this truth of God plainer than Jesus has made it. To a man he said, "Ye must be born again." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." So man himself is born again, born of the Spirit, and enters into the kingdom. This is my faith, hope and joy, that it is I myself that is passed from death unto life; for surely I do love the brethren. The primary fact of a birth is the manifestation of a personal life and nature, as the birthright inheritance of the person born. This life and nature are a very part of the one born, and they affect and influence his entire being, and not merely some part of himself. This is a self-evident truth. And this is as true of the second birth as it is of the first. The man born has the life and nature of Adam; the man born again has both the life and nature of Adam and the life and nature of Jesus; and both are a very part of himself, and he is vitally and powerfully affected by both. This is the experience of every one that is born again. No man can truly say, therefore, that being born again vitally and savingly affects only a part of the man, but not the entire man; for it is the man that is born again, and he is a possessor of eternal life and a partaker of the divine nature. He is brought into spiritual life-union with Christ, the holy Son of God, and is himself a son of God in Christ. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." The man is a new creature, because he is in Christ. The life of Jesus is made manifest in his body and mortal flesh.—2 Cor. iv. So then, "the man of God" in Christ, though he is the possessor of a new and holy life and nature, is yet identified with his body of mortal flesh, which is himself, as really as his spiritual life and nature is himself. Therefore he is yet related to Adam, as well as to Jesus, and is both a creature and a Son of God, as born of the flesh and born of the Spirit. Thus the man born again is a complex being; for he is both fleshly and spiritual, sinful and holy, dying and living, mourning and rejoicing; yet he is but one being or person. This man is the saved sinner. His language is, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." To those born again it is written, "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." "According to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?" "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." O let us rejoice in this full salvation of the whole man, as born again, and made the rich possessor of immortality and eternal life in Christ Jesus, our second Adam, our Redeemer, Resurrection and Life. "Of him [God] are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Now then, it is scriptural, true and good to say, that all we are as fleshly, sinful and dying is of Adam, our earthly head; but all we are as spiritual, righteous and living, is of Christ, our heavenly Head; and that, as born of the flesh, we are of Adam, and in him; but as born of the Spirit, we are of Christ, and in him. Yet the man that is born again is not two separate or distinct men or persons, but one person with two natures, received from the heads. Therefore the man is not born over; for all that he receives, when born again, is of Christ, his heavenly, spiritual and living Head; yet it is as verily himself that is born again, as it was himself when born first. But it cannot truly be said that his human spirit or soul or body is of Christ, or born over, because these he received of Adam, his natural head, in his first birth. For the Scriptures plainly teach that when a man is born again he is born from above, born of the Spirit; that all given to us of God in our spiritual birth is therefore new, spiritual, divine and Christly; not the Adamic nature made over, or the natural spirit born over. But the man born again is himself a new creature in Christ, in whom he lives a new life, possesses a new spirit, a new heart, new emotions, and dwells in a new element and kingdom. It is the man himself that is thus made alive spiritually in Christ, and raised up to heavenly things in him; so that he is no more a stranger or servant, but a son of God; and his fellowship is with the Father and the Son. Now, therefore, the personal and experimental salvation of man from sin and death, as realized in himself, is twofold, namely, a spiritual birth, and a spiritual resurrection. The one seals him an heir of God unto his redemption, in which he receives the Spirit of adoption; the other is his full redemption from corruption and death into the glory of God and bliss of heaven, and is the adoption unto the Father in perfect love and holiness. For this we now wait until our immortal change shall come. This will be our personal, final, all-glorious change in which our (now) vile body shall be changed and fashioned like unto the personal and glorified body of the risen Son of God. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." All this is written of us as men, and is true of us, to us, and in us; for it is the word of the Lord to us, and his work in us, and he will perform it. So then, the man born again shall see and enter into the kingdom of God in its fadeless glory, and in his whole spirit and soul and body he shall be perfected in holiness before God in love, to the praise of the glory of his grace.

In this faith and hope and love,
your brother in Jesus,

D. BARTLEY.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Dec. 20, 1893.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Dec. 26, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you inclosed a letter from our aged sister, Mrs. Julia N. Trott, of Texas. It will, I am sure, prove interesting to all of "like precious faith," because of the experimental matter which it contains. Our sister in her old age, with her still more aged husband, has come to the house of the Lord, and has been planted there with joy and rejoicing. Of this the inclosed letter speaks, and such testimonies are always most edifying to believers.

Besides this, for another reason will her letter be welcome to many readers of the SIGNS. The husband of the writer is, as I understand, the oldest son and the only surviving child of Elder Samuel Trott, who nearly twenty-seven years ago departed this life at his home in Virginia. While a new generation has grown up who did not know Elder Trott, yet many of your older readers knew him, and used to hear him preach, and read his especially able articles with interest. His name is still a household word in many Baptist homes in Virginia and Maryland. While I never saw Elder Trott, yet some published letters of his many years ago were a source of great help and comfort to me. I rejoice that in their old age his son and daughter-in-law have become members of the church of Christ, for whose upbuilding their father labored faithfully for so many years.

I remain your brother in hope,

F. A. CHICK.

WALDRIP, Tex., Nov. 17, 1893.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN A PRECIOUS HOPE:—Words fail me when I attempt to tell of the comfort, strength and encouragement your letters afford me. They encourage me to believe that I, even I, ignorant, sinful and full of unbelief, have been led in paths that I knew not, as you speak of just such things as I have experienced (if I am not greatly deceived, which I have often feared was the case); therefore I take comfort in them. I was truly sorry you had been subjected to such anxiety on account of your daughter's illness, and was pleased to know she had recovered. I had about concluded I had written something contrary to sound doctrine, and was afraid you would not write again; therefore I was greatly relieved when I found out the cause of your long silence. I noticed you had directed this last one to Coleman. Still direct to Waldrip, as that is our nearest office; but frequently we have an opportunity to send to others. Was glad you were permitted to attend the Corresponding Meeting, and met sister Williams, who is a dear friend of mine, and seems to understand my language as well as yourself. No doubt you have met sister Simpson, as she had spent every summer in Virginia for many years prior to her death, having her membership at Bethlehem.

I was glad you wrote as you did about "hungering and thirsting after righteousness." It is useless for me to speak of my ignorance concerning such things, as you have discovered it long since; but if I know my own heart, its desires, I can truly say that my chief desire is to be holy, to be conformed to God's holy law; but I find a law warring against it continually.

My dear brother, I was enabled to go to the church on Saturday before the second Sunday in September and ask for a home with them. Although I told them but little, they received me, apparently with joy. On the following Saturday Elders Walker and Grigg (members of that church), with the Clerk, came to our home, being authorized by the church to receive and baptize others, if any offered. That night my husband was received as a candidate for baptism, and on the next day directly after the morning preaching we all repaired to the river, and both of us were baptized in the fellowship of Fellowship Church, in Coleman City. The ordinance was administered here in order that our children and grandchildren living within distance could witness it, and we were favored with having five of our six living children and thirteen of our twenty-five grandchildren present. I assure you, my brother, it was a solemn occasion to me at least, feeling altogether unworthy of such a blessed privilege. Until the following Saturday night I enjoyed a restfulness and consciousness of having done what I could. But the tempter came and hurled such cruel darts that I was made to distrust my every act and motive. I was almost persuaded to believe that I had committed an unpardonable sin, that I had been deceived all these long years, and that I knew nothing of God's pardoning love. O what a miserable state of mind I was in! If you have ever been so tormented you know it far better than I can describe it. Since then I have groped most of the time in darkness, with only a ray of light now and then to relieve it. On Saturday before the second Sunday of the month we were permitted to meet with the church and received the hand of church fellowship, and on Sunday we engaged with them in communion and feet washing. It caused me to fairly tremble, for fear I was not a fit subject for such holy ordinances. It has been over forty years (if at all) since the Lord commenced a work in this vile heart of mine. I was rebellious and obstinate, and fought against it with all the power I possessed; but it was like beating the air. I did not want to believe the Baptist doctrine; but as it was unfolded to me by revelation, a little at a time, just as I could receive it, I began to lose my hatred of it in a measure. The more I understood of it the better I liked it, till I found myself loving it as the only hope for such a miserable, wretched sinner as I found myself to be.

The distance is so great, and we so old, that we will not attempt to meet with the church this winter; so I ask it as a special favor that you will send me a suitable message as often as you can conveniently. I know it is asking a good deal, for your time, no doubt, is more profitably (to you) spent; but if you knew how much such are prized by me, you surely will not altogether refuse. I have to depend nearly altogether for instruction on reading. As I remarked in a former letter, I am very deaf. I look upon the fact of being lead to write to you as providential, as I believe I would still have been outside of the church if it had not been for your letter in July. I was led to think if you who, I had reason to believe, was a servant of the most high God, that the same Holy Spirit had taught me a little of the mysteries of the kingdom, and I was made to rejoice in him as my Savior.

I have allowed my pen to run at a great length, which I hope you will bear with patiently. My husband sends his respects to you. Very unworthily your sister,

JULIA N. TROTT.

MC COYSVILLE, Pa., Oct. 7, 1893.

MR. A. B. FRANCIS—MY DEAR FRIEND:—I have thought so often of writing to you since you were here, but have always thought myself too unworthy to write to any of the dear Old Baptists. But the dear Lord has given us so many precious promises in the book he has given us, that I hope some of the sweet promises are for me. He has said, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." I feel too unworthy to take his dear name on my lips.

I do so long for your promised visit to us. Can you come up to our place this time? We would be pleased if you could. I have a great love for the Old Baptists; I mean that I have the greatest desire to be among them; yet I feel myself so unworthy. But the dear Lord has taught me that salvation is not by works of righteousness which I have done, but of his own mercy he has saved me, if I am saved. Of myself I can do nothing. If I am ever saved it will be through God's mercy. It has seemed that your preaching was just for me. I felt myself to be a great sinner, and lost unless saved by the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ; for he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief," says Paul.

Is to feel our need of him."

You ask me when I first felt a change. The first time I saw myself a sinner was at the time of the Association here, the one next to the last. I saw the great difference between the doctrine then preached, and the doctrine I used to hear preached by other denominations around here, who would tell us we had so much to do before we could be saved; that we must go to Sabbath School, learn to answer many questions, and then join the church. They also have their "Christian Endeavor" society to finish off with. They say we are to work out our own salvation; and I think they are trying to do it; but they do not take a whole verse of Scripture; only what portion suits them.

On my way home I wondered what I could do to be saved, when this verse came to my mind, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Many nights since have I mourned on account of sin.

"I own my guilt, my sins confess;
Can men or devils make them more?
Of crimes already numberless,
Vain the attempt to swell the score."

Were the black list before my sight,
While I remember Jesus died,
'Twould only urge my speedier flight
To seek salvation at his side."

Excuse this long letter, and write if you think me worthy of an answer.

Your friend,

IDA M. HART.

LANCASTER, Ohio, Dec. 26, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I would like to get you more subscribers; and if I had the power to create the love in the hearts of brethren and sisters to read the SIGNS, as I love to read it, you would get more subscribers. How I would like to write a piece for the paper, to let the brethren know that I appreciate their writings; but I am as ignorant as can be. Dear afflicted Mary Parker is made glad and praises the Lord in all her afflictions. It is wonderful indeed. Nothing but the power of God could sustain her. I saw her in August. She can neither lie down nor stand on her feet; always in one position, day and night, with no way to get ease of body; praying and waiting on the Lord to release her. I think, O! the Lord has been so merciful to poor, unworthy me, I ought to be humbled, with my mouth in the dust. I think I have no right to claim a name among the people of God; yet I have no desire to be elsewhere. I will close, wishing you a happy and prosperous new year.

Yours to serve,

SARAH B. PEARCE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Jacob M. Search departed this life at his home in Southampton, Pa., Nov. 9th, 1893.

He was born Dec. 10th, 1810. His wife, with whom he had lived fifty-six years, survives him. Though her health had been for some time so poor that it seemed she could not recover, she was raised up and strengthened to be with her dear husband during his sickness of about three months. He also left four sons and one daughter, Mrs. Roberts. The latter is a member of this church, and had the care of her father through his sickness. Two sisters also survive him, who are members of this church, and one brother living in Maryland. He was always a regular and faithful attendant of the Old Baptist Church, and had her interests at heart. He was regarded by the members as a man of grace, yet he never united with the church. He was a lover of the truth, and in conversation was clear and firm in defense of it; but only in very intimate conversation would he refer to his own personal experience, and that with the utmost care and delicacy. He was very patient during his sickness. He was a quiet man in his life, and quiet in sickness, and quietly passed away, as we believe, to mansions of eternal rest and glory. Almost his last words were, "The Lord ordered it for the best. Bless his holy name."

At his funeral there were services at the house, and also at the Cemetery Chapel at Newtown. Elder Wm. J. Purington was present at the house and took part in the exercises, preaching the gospel to the large company of relatives, friends and neighbors present.

ALSO,

Miss Lydia Miles passed away on Friday, Dec. 29th, in the 99th year of her age.

Her brother, Griffith Miles, with whom she had always lived, survives her, but is very feeble. He was never married. He is in his ninety-fourth year. The funeral was at the house on Monday, Jan. 1st, at which I was present, though only just recovering from sickness, and spoke briefly.

Both of these friends have always attended the meetings of the Old School Baptist Church, and have manifested an interest in the preaching of the truth. I had some talk with Miss Lydia when she was sick two or three years ago, when she spoke of a Psalm that had been of great interest to her, requesting me to read it. I had hope that she had been quickened, and made to feel in some measure her condition as a sinner; but she never made a public confession of a hope.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 3, 1894.

DIED—At his late residence in Seward, Neb., on Dec. 23d, 1893, Simeon W. True, aged 74 years, 3 months and 20 days.

The subject of this notice was baptized by the late Elder Thomas Threlkeld, in the fellowship of the Predestinarian Baptist Church, and his name enrolled as a member of the Little Bethel organization, in the year 1854, as the writer calls to memory. He ever afterward honored the profession he then made by an upright walk and godly conversation.

The writer was telegraphed to on the morning before his death, but the distance being so great did not reach there until the 25th. I found that the friends had had the body embalmed to await my arrival. On the 26th we laid the mortal body in the grave, to be raised immortal. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body."

He leaves a widow, one granddaughter, one brother (the writer), the church and many friends to treasure up in their memories his noble traits of character, and think of the many testimonies he has given that his exchange is a happy one.

JAMES M. TRUE.

KANSAS, Ill., Dec. 30, 1893.

OUR dear old mother, Sarah Neal, was born April 24th, 1815, and passed away Dec. 3d, 1893, aged 78 years, 7 months and 9 days.

She professed a hope in Christ when young, joined the Baptist Church (before the division), and was baptized by Elder Daniel Dosier, in Covington Co., Ala., at about the age of twenty years. She was married to Thomas G. Neal, who died April 10th, 1853, in Holmes Co., Miss. Ten children were born to them (five boys and five girls), one boy and four girls having passed away. She was truly faithful wherever duty led, and especially as a christian. She passed through the heavy trials of the great Baptist division without moving, and lived with the Old Baptists about sixty years without a spot or charge against her, always having the full confidence of all who knew her. I reckon there are but few (since Job) who have suffered as she has for more than forty years, being able to hear but little conversation, while the things pertaining to the kingdom of Christ were her whole theme. Still she was blessed with eyesight sufficient to read, and spent a great deal of her time in reading the Bible, Beebe's hymn book and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which paper she had been reading for more than forty years, and was taking it at the time of her death. A short time before the last she said she believed that she could say in spirit and in truth, "The Lord's will be done." She passed away without a struggle.

Her funeral was largely attended by relatives, neighbors and friends, services being conducted by Elder B. F. Stewart; after which her lovely form was laid away to await the summons to arise and appear in the likeness of her adorable Redeemer.

T. M. NEAL.

LUFKIN, Texas, Dec. 28, 1893.

James Crask was born in Kentucky, June 30th, 1835, and moved with his father to Wayne Co., Ill., when two years old, and there remained until the Lord called him home. He has been afflicted with rheumatism for eighteen years, and has not walked in fourteen years. He professed a hope in Christ about the year 1856, joined the Primitive Baptist Church in 1872, and died Oct. 24th, 1893. He leaves a wife, one son and two daughters, among a host of friends, to mourn their loss, which is his eternal gain. The church has lost one of her best members, one who was good in council, and seldom absent from his meeting as long as he was able to attend. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of the Primitive Baptists, salvation by grace through the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ, which was the theme of his soul and the praise of his heart; but we had to give him up, and bow to the will of God, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. May the Lord bless the sorrowing family, together with the church, who mourn their loss; and while our eyes are filled with tears, and our hearts are sad, we lift our thoughts on high, where we believe he is.

His last days were attended with intense suffering from rheumatism, and from which he had been a great sufferer for the last ten years. He bore his afflictions as only a christian can, feeling resigned to God's will at all times. He fully trusted in God, in whose wisdom, power and love he placed the utmost confidence. Having known brother Crask personally for the past eighteen years, I always looked upon him as a christian, as well as a kind friend to the poor. His house was always thrown open to the Baptists, and warm hospitality extended, especially to those in the ministry. How much comfort there is in the thought that God is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind, and cannot do wrong. With that blessed assurance we are enabled to face the darkest storm.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE SCHOOL OF EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It has been on my mind to write a few thoughts on the subject mentioned at the head of this article for your disposal. It is not natural experience that I wish to talk about, but I want to pen some thoughts about what a subject of grace learns in the school of experience while he or she sojourns in this wilderness of sorrow.

We are told that "the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye."—Deut. xxxii. 9, 10. This finding "in a desert land, in the waste howling wilderness," is true of all his people in every age of the world. "And they shall all be taught of God;" and only as they are thus taught can they know anything of the spirituality of God's kingdom or his word. Nor can they know anything of this desert land, or waste howling wilderness, until they are taught it in their personal experience by the power of God, who leads them about and instructs them. Many a time had I read the words, and heard them quoted, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God;" and many a time had I sung, and heard sung, the words,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;"

but never did I know the power and meaning of the words until I had realized the exceeding sinfulness of sin. The density of that "waste howling wilderness," the dreariness of the "desert land," none can know until their darkened mind has been penetrated by a ray of divine light. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."—2 Cor. iv. 6. We had hitherto looked for the glory of God in the face of the law, or good works. But we are taught in our experience, "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified;" and when we read this on the sacred pages of the inspired book we know (by experience) that it is true. Sometimes when I get down in a deep, dark place I fear that all my experience has been but imagination; that perhaps I have never known what a true christian experience is. Then my mind runs back over my past life, and I consider my ups and downs, and especially when I was so heavily burdened with a feeling sense of just condemnation; and I ask myself the question, Did I bring this troubled feeling upon myself? How gladly would I have laid it all aside, and thought no more about it; but it was impossible either to lay the burden down or to find relief from it in any other way. When relief did come it came at a time and in a way unlooked for; for the time had come when I had ceased to hope that I should ever find relief, although I could not help but beg for mercy. I am made to ask myself the question again, Did I bring about the sweet feeling of relief that I then felt? If I could have done so, surely I would have brought it sooner; and I certainly would have kept it after it came, if it had been in my power. From such meditations I am sometimes given fresh courage, and am made to feel that this certainly was the work of the Lord. I thought when I first was given this sweet peace of mind that I should nevermore see trouble. In my simplicity I thought that the path of God's children was a smooth one and easily traveled. I hardly think one could have then made me believe that a christian could prove to be so sinful and stubborn and rebellious as I have been; and these things sometimes make me to doubt yet that I am one. But if I did not have the experience that I have, how could I have been brought into the fellowship of the inspired writers, and with the children of God in after ages, or with the blessed Savior himself? For while he (Jesus) himself was without sin, yet the iniquities of us all were laid upon him. Our sins caused him to groan and weep, and well may we groan and weep on their account. What child of God does not know by experience (though it be sad experience, it is none the less profitable) something of the meaning of the apostle Paul when he says, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—Rom. vii. 18-24. It is only by the teaching of the Spirit in our experience that we know anything of the christian warfare. We have within us two minds, so to speak; one the mind of Christ (1 Cor. ii. 16), and the other the mind of the flesh, or the fleshly mind. We are told (Gal. v. 17), "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." "What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies."—Song vi. 13. How often is the child of God brought low in this warfare (and none can know anything of this warfare but a child of God); yet it is very necessary that he be thus brought low. How could he ever rejoice in the light if he had not experienced darkness? How could he sing, with the poet,

"Through many dangers, toils and snares
I have already come;
'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home,"

if he had not in his experience realized something of these "dangers, toils and snares?" The inquiry sometimes arises in the mind, If I am a child of God, why am I thus? Why this coldness and indifference, this dense darkness, those sharp conflicts? Yet these are the very evidences of a subject of God's love, and none others have them. Jesus said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Again it is said, "If any man will live godly in Christ Jesus, he shall suffer persecution." Jesus said to the devil, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Then we must have the tribulation, or we would not get all of our inheritance. Paul the apostle said to the Hebrew brethren, "And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all [God's children] are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons."

—Hebrews xii. 5-8. A little farther down in the same chapter the apostle says, "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees," &c. These sore chastisements, these dark seasons, are necessary. They bring us to realize and to acknowledge God's protecting power in every step we make. They bring us down to the feet of our heavenly Master, and to the feet of one another. They enable us to cast the mantle of charity over the imperfections of our brethren. How pleasant is the ray of heavenly light after a season of darkness. I call to mind a few of those seasons with myself, as I write, when I had so long groveled along in darkness that I thought I nevermore should see the light, when from the very depths of my burdened heart I could sing, with the poet,

"Return, O holy Dove, return,
Sweet messenger of rest;
I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
And drove thee from my breast."

I remember on one occasion, when I was thus enshrouded in darkness, that these words came into my mind, and seemed to express my feelings fully:

"Dear Lord, if indeed I am thine,
If thou art my sun and my song,
Say, why do I languish and pine,
And why are my winters so long?"

"O! drive these dark clouds from my sky,
Thy soul-cheering presence restore,
Or take me unto thee on high,
Where winter and clouds are no more."

Seemingly, in answer to the silent prayer of my heart, a flood of light burst in upon me, and I could for the moment "read my title clear to mansions in the skies." But these seasons have been comparatively few and far between, and I am soon overtaken with darkness again, and am almost afraid to claim the blessing just received. In all these things we learn something of the meaning of the words of the prophet, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The Lord is continually teaching us in our experience that our dependence must be upon him, and not upon an arm of flesh. In our experience we are taught the doctrine of total depravity, salvation by grace, election and predestination, and, we might say, every doctrinal principle laid down in holy writ, or so much of it as our heavenly Father sees is for our good and his glory; and when we read the testimony of these things in the Bible it is confirmed to us by the revelations in our personal experience. The sum of the whole matter is, that all we can know about the things of our Master's spiritual kingdom is what he teaches or reveals to us. It is the work of the Lord, who has said, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest."—Hebrews viii. 10, 11.

Dear brethren, if you judge this worth your time and trouble to correct and prepare for the press you are at liberty to publish; if not, lay it aside, and I will deem it a favor.

I remain your brother in a little hope,

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—It does seem to me that surely there are none of God's creatures like me. Often a portion of divine truth in the Scriptures will so fasten itself in my mind that it seems I cannot shake it out until I take up my pen and write such thoughts concerning it as come to my mind. In days past when I was so situated that I could meet with some brother or sister whom I believed knew and loved the truth, I could find relief or peace of mind in talking to them of the beauty and truth which the Scriptures seemed to me to contain; but living in this isolated place, with no one near me who knows or loves the truth, I have to, as I said before, take up my pen and write in order to relieve my mind. Not often though do I write with a view of its being published; but often after I have written out my thoughts no other mortal eye sees them, for they are often committed to the flames; yet, strange as it may seem, a peace of mind is sure to follow, for the time being at least. Is there any one like me?

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."—Matt. vii. 15. This Scripture has rested upon my mind with such weight that I have seated myself to try to find relief in writing.

Where prophets are spoken of in the Old and New Testaments it usually refers to those who foretold coming events. There are but two kinds of prophets spoken of in the Scriptures, so far as I understand; the true prophets of God, and the false prophets of which Jesus told his disciples to beware. There is, to my mind, another sense in which the word prophet is to be understood. The Lord appeared unto Moses while he kept the flock of Jethro, and said unto him, "I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt." Moses, like many of God's servants whom he calls in this present day to stand before him as witnesses, began to make excuses, saying, "Behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken to my voice; for they will say, The Lord hath not appeared unto thee." "O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." And the Lord said unto Moses, "Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet. Thou shalt speak all that I command thee; and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh."—Exodus vii. 1, 2. Here, to my understanding, Aaron the prophet was an interpreter, and explained unto Pharaoh and the children of Israel the truth of God as it was revealed unto Moses. "He that prophesieth speaketh unto man to edification."—1 Cor. xiv. 3. "For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted."—Verse 31. It appears plain to me that the apostle here has reference to teaching and admonishing one another in the things that God has revealed to them by his Spirit, and not to the foretelling of future events. "For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock."—Acts xx. 29. These are the false prophets that Jesus admonished his disciples to beware of, and are the same characters that Jesus alludes to when he says, "Take heed that no man deceive you; for many shall come in my name." "And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many." Peter tells the brethren of like precious faith, "There were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you." "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."—2 Peter ii. 1, 2. He also tells his brethren that these false teachers shall bring upon themselves swift destruction, and says, "If God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; and spared not the old world, but saved Noah, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; and delivered just Lot," &c. These, he says, are an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly. The nearer these false prophets or false teachers can come to understanding the truth, the more easily do they deceive the people of God. Mark you, they "come to you in sheep's clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves." When I say I have experienced the truth of this to my sorrow, I say the truth and lie not. One may come among us in Christ's name, clothed as a minister of Jesus, in preaching the word, and yet be as destitute of the grace of God in his heart as the most ignorant and degraded Hotentot upon the earth. But when the sheep's clothing which he wears becomes a little threadbare, the wolf will begin to show itself; and when the wolfishness of his nature begins to predominate it is sure to follow that it happens unto him according to the true proverb, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire."

I remember a time when I was young in the faith, and not well versed in the doctrine of God our Savior, as recorded in the Scriptures of divine truth, that I was easily imposed upon, and everyone claiming to be an Old School Baptist was held in high esteem by me; but it is not so now. The beloved apostle John in his first letter of love and admonition to the saints has laid down a rule by which we are to try the spirits whether they be of God. He says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." He then gives the reason why we should try them, saying, "Because many false prophets are gone out into the world." I have experienced much, and learned that when one says to me, "I am a preacher of righteousness," I am sure to apply the rule, "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God." And if a man's walk in the world does not correspond with his preaching I conclude that he is of that spirit of antichrist which even now is in the world. "Thou that preacheest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?" Brethren, if one comes among you and preaches that it is wrong or a sin to tell a falsehood, and you find that in the world among his fellow-creatures he regards not his word for truth and veracity, would not your confidence in him be shaken, to say the least? Would he come up to the standard of the rule laid down to try the spirits whether they are of God? I answer, Surely not. We as a people, the Old School or Primitive Baptists, are looked upon by the various professedly religious sects in the world as the offscourings of the earth, and they apply unto us all the vile epithets they are able to invent, such as narrow, contracted, old fogies, hard shells, &c. And notwithstanding we are so unpopular in the world there are many desiring to be called by our name: yet they went to eat their own bread (doctrine), and wear their own apparel (new theories and inventions of their own), only they want to be called by our name to take away their reproach. But these are not so much to be feared as are the false prophets or teachers who come to us in sheep's clothing, professing to believe and even preach the doctrine we believe, for a time. And they shall show great signs and wonders, said Jesus, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. These are they who bring about discord and confusion among the saints, and cause divisions in the church, so that her feasts of love are broken up. Then it is that Zion is made to mourn as the dove. Our peace has been marred and fellowship destroyed because we have not heeded the admonition of our blessed Master given for all his true disciples in all time to come, "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing." When peace dwells within Zion's walls, then prosperity attends her. But when her walls are broken down, which is sure to be the case when her watchmen, the overseers of the flock, do not take heed unto themselves and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers, then it is that these false prophets or false teachers come unto her in sheep's clothing, creep in unawares, and do not spare the flock. Satan is ever ready with his cunning craftiness to destroy the peace and fellowship of the saints in Zion. The world is full of seducing spirits, evil workers, transforming themselves into the ministers of Christ. "And no marvel," says the apostle, "for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers be transformed as the ministers of righteousness." How important it is then, for the good and peace of Zion, that we heed the admonition of the blessed Savior, "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves."

Dear brethren, the foregoing was written just two weeks ago, and laid aside. It is at your disposal; do with it as you think best. If you could but know my life, how many sore trials, afflictions, temptations, doubts and fears have been allotted to me (and for my declining years the most severe of them seem to be reserved), I feel that you would at least pity me rather than censure me for troubling you to read anything from my pen. Denied the privilege of meeting with any of the dear people of God, I become very disconsolate indeed. The SIGNS comes to me regularly, laden with the precious truth as I believe it to be taught in the Scriptures of divine truth.

When it is well with you remember poor, sinful me. Farewell.

J. H. YEOMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 2, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I inclose you two letters, one from Elder Grafton, the other from brother B. F. Hamilton, both of which I feel would be interesting and profitable to the readers of the SIGNS. In my judgment they breathe the spirit of the wisdom of God as displayed by the lowly followers of Jesus.

Your brother in affection,
B. F. COULTER.

FOREST HILL, Md., Dec. 7, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER COULTER:—I cannot quite decide in my mind as to whether I have written you since my visit to Philadelphia. The children think I have not; but whether I have or not, I feel that I would like to say something to you if I could; but it is the hardest thing for me to get anything said in any way, and especially with the pen. I think a great deal in my lonely hours, and feel that there are some I would love to talk to if I could, believing as I do that it is a relief to many to unbosom their feelings to others, especially to those who understand and can give advice and instruction and admonition. But it seems that my case is locked up so that I cannot get at it myself to express to others the deep waters through which I pass, and the fiery trials I am called to endure. In my worst times all seems to hang in doubt with me; yet on the other hand I am obliged to say that goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life, and I feel a burning desire to dwell in the house of the Lord forever. But the fitness to dwell there, the marks by which they are known who inhabit this Rock, I cannot find; nor do I think others could if they knew the case as well as I do. It seems that much of my time is spent in trying to comfort others, when I am miserable myself. It appears that there is nothing in me when summed up. I am only for a time in the hand of the Lord as an instrument to serve others for a time, and then laid aside as nothing worth. If I seem to rise a little above this, and claim an interest in the things I am trying to preach to others, it seems that this is soon called in question, and I fall back in the same old rut. I think much about an expression of Job, "O that my grief were thoroughly weighed and my calamity laid in the balances together! For now it would be heavier than the sand of the sea: therefore my words are swallowed up." Yet while I am tossed to and fro with such fierce temptations, there is one thing that never deserts me, namely, the power of God; that he is able to save, and will save all his people. Neither do I feel entirely without discernment as to who they are from the image they bear and the mark they show. Yet when I come to compare my case with theirs, I seem neither to have seen what they have seen, nor to have felt what they have felt. I hear many others talking of some bright spots in their pathway, and of the Scriptures being opened to them, and they being made to rejoice; and it will be secretly suggested to me, "If you were one of them you would have these things presented to you." I go back to times when it was better with me than now, when the secret of the Lord was about my tabernacle, and by his light I walked through darkness; but now I never seem to get through it. I find it sometimes likened unto a vessel passing through the deep. Soon no trace is left of anything having passed that way. So in like manner my life is spent; nothing in all its track that can be gathered up as having filled any place with profit either to myself or anyone else. I find myself at times turning to the wise man Solomon. He says, "In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider. God also hath set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him." I long greatly for some sign, some token for good. It seems that all these things could be borne with cheerfulness could I believe it is for righteousness' sake. I know that in my flesh there dwells no good thing; and as I grow older and less able to endure, the burden is heavier. I know that God is rich in mercy unto all who trust in him, and are as the mountains about Jerusalem for stability and firmness; and I preach these things to others, and feel encouraged to do it for their sakes, and I feel that they have a right to the comfort of these things; like some instrument of music which in the hand of a skillful player can charm the listener, but out of his hand is of no use. I have not, however, lost that interest in the welfare of the church. I believe the Lord dwells there, and hath chosen it for a dwelling place, and is the Head of the body, and his providence is over all his works; and no doubt many important things are learned in deep waters and dark clouds, bringing out some good things, even the peaceable fruits of righteousness, in them who are exercised thereby.

But I have gone over a good deal of space, and have said nothing worth your reading; neither can I say what I want to say. I enjoyed your letter, and your reference to small things. How forgetful we are. We enjoy all your letters and would love to have more of them to read. We are all well, and join in love to you all.

WILLIAM GRAFTON.

BATAVIA, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1893.

MY DEAR BROTHER COULTER:—Some time ago you requested me to give my views on the third chapter and second verse of Colossians. "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

There was a time, some years ago, when I felt willing to give my views on almost any portion of Scripture; but since I learned, as I believe, that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," &c., I have tried to be very careful in giving my views of any portion of Scripture. I know full well that my views are of little value unless they accord with the teachings of the Spirit. I believe that all spiritual knowledge is revealed to the children of God; and if any portion of Scripture is taught by the Holy Spirit, it then becomes a vital truth, and accomplishes a definite purpose in the spiritual life of the people of God. But in this, my dear brother Coulter, I am fully aware that I am telling you no new thing.

About the year 1858, soon after I trust I enjoyed a sweet assurance of sins forgiven, I discovered to my great sorrow that I was still sinful. I found it to be not so much in the outward acts, but in the evil and corrupt thoughts of my heart. I had learned also that "without holiness no man shall see God." So my trouble was great. I saw that there must be some way to become holy in order to be saved; but how could I be saved with all the sins and corruption I felt? Almost everything seemed to prevent me from securing the righteousness and holiness I so much desired. About this time I met several persons who professed that they had attained "christian perfection," and that they were free from all these evil thoughts and corruption. I almost envied them their happiness, but readily fell in with their advice to secure this "complete sanctification" for myself. They told me I could obtain it if I would pray for it and exercise my faith. And I did try; but the more I tried the worse I became. I saw more and more clearly my depravity. Sometimes I almost thought I was on the point of obtaining it, when some little circumstance would reveal the hidden corruption of my heart, and I became worse than ever. All this time I was with churches where I received no sympathy or encouragement. All through this trouble of mind I had this portion of Scripture to encourage me and give me hope, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." For nearly ten years I struggled along in this dark road, hoping and praying that this promise might be fulfilled in my case; and I trust it was fulfilled, but in a very different manner than I expected. To tell of the gradual dawning of the truth to my mind would be to tell much of my experience. Suffice it to say that I received this righteousness and holiness (if I received it at all) in the only possible way, and that is in Jesus Christ. It was a glorious time of rejoicing for me. It was good news indeed to know that Christ "is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." But still I was not clear in my mind as to the corruption of the flesh. I still felt the motions of sin and corruption, and knew there must be a separation. I learned that there are several kinds of death mentioned in Scripture, and each death was a separation. At one time I seemed to think as the serpent told Eve, "Ye shall not surely die," and in some mysterious manner salvation would be accomplished without this death or separation. But I read in the Scriptures that God told Adam that "In the day thou eateth thereof thou shalt surely die." Surely this was accomplished. Christ said that he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill. So I learned little by little that this death or separation must certainly take place; but how and when? I trust that I then received this spiritual truth as it is written, "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him [Christ], that the body of sin might be destroyed; that henceforth we should not serve sin; for he that is dead is freed from sin." Also your text seems to confirm the same truth, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." "Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe we shall also live with him."

There was a time in my experience that I could not get any farther than the twenty-fourth verse of the seventh chapter of Romans, which reads, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But later, I believe, I was taught the true meaning of the following verse, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." This was Paul's answer, and I believe it was mine. A little farther on in the eighth chapter we read, "So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of God, he is none of his." But if we do have the Spirit of God, the reasoning seems plain, that we are his, and we are not in the flesh. Of course in this I mean the saint, or the child of God. I believe the children of God are in the new Jerusalem, free, and entirely separated from sin and all that contaminates; like the example given by Paul to the Hebrews about Christ's offering. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." In the seventh chapter of Romans we learn that the wife is free from the law that binds her to her husband, after his death. Paul says, "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ," &c. In the sixth verse we read, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held," &c. I understand the word "that" in this verse refers to the "body of Christ." We being in him died with him; and as it is written in the fourth verse, "That ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

Sometimes I get so low in my feelings that I cannot see this glorious separation. Unbelief blinds me. But when I have faith given me, it is the most wonderful sight I think I have ever received. It is truly a wonderful work which Christ has

EGYPT HEALED.

"IN that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord."—Isa. xix. 18, 19.

Although far from claiming ability to expound all the wonderful and sublime mysteries which are concealed under the figurative records of prophetic visions, there are some thoughts in connection with this inspired testimony of Jesus which may be submitted in compliance with the request of our esteemed brother, Elder G. E. Mayfield, of Oregon, as expressed in his note on page 411 of last volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It is certain that no natural ability can attain to the correct interpretation of any portion of the record of eternal truth; therefore it is not by superior qualifications, either of native intellect or of acquired information, that any created mind can grasp the unsearchable mystery of that hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto the glory of his saints. Only as God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit do we ever receive the things which are by inspiration spoken in such words as the Holy Ghost teaches; and when the Spirit of truth takes these things of Jesus and shows them unto us they will always declare the sure testimony of that mighty Savior, to whom all the prophets give witness. Since there is no truth but that which God gives, and he reveals it by his Spirit unto babes, there can be no room for glorying on the part of those in whose hearts that gracious revelation has shined. On the other hand, since every ray of divine light is given to profit with all the saints, it is only the honest discharge of an obligation when the word which has shined in the heart of one of them is freely communicated to the whole household of the faithful in Christ Jesus. All the gifts in the church are from the grace of God. Not even inspired apostles and prophets could glory in anything as originating in themselves. Confessing this obligation, Paul says, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise."—Rom. i. 14. This debt is upon every one in whom God has revealed his truth, since that precious truth is the common property of all the subjects of divine grace. So it is enjoined upon the whole household of God, that they "Be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble."—1 Peter v. 5. In mutual humility the saints may speak freely one to another of their views of the things which pertain to the kingdom of Christ. In the confidence of this charitable forbearance from our brethren, we give the following reflections on the subject embraced in the text and its connection.

In all the prophetic Scriptures, including this book of Isaiah, when the Lord moved his servants to speak of heathen nations, as Egypt, Damascus, Moab, &c., it is to be remembered that they are only used as in a figure representing the sin which was characteristic of those nations, as found in the nation of Israel, by which the true church of Christ is always typified. It is in this sense we understand the reference in this prophecy. As Moab represents the people of God polluted by sin so that the Lord commanded Israel that a Moabite should not enter into the congregation of the Lord unto the tenth generation (Deut. xxiii. 3), so the pride and self-confidence of the natural heart must always forbid the entrance of the saints into the experience of that joy which is known and felt by the humble and contrite ones who have no confidence in the flesh. In Damascus (signifying a sack full of blood) there is a striking type of the dreadful woe which is found by the saints whenever they look to the law for comfort. As the house of hopeless bondage to the children of Israel, "Egypt" well represents the unavailing efforts of saints to find in themselves some merit on which to build their hope of acceptance before the justice of God. The incessant toil of the oppressed children of Israel could never bring relief from their obligation to fulfill impossible tasks; so the saints must ever learn the utter impossibility of rendering to the law such service as shall bring them justification. The only judgment which they can ever receive from that law is, as was the case with the enslaved Israelites, they are charged with idleness, and their tasks are increased. But it must not be forgotten that at the appointed time the hand of the Lord brought deliverance to the suffering Israelites. So the grace of God brings salvation to the spiritual Israel; but it is not by any strength or merit of their own that they obtain the victory over their oppressors. They are brought out of condemnation by the irresistible power of the grace of God; and still they must acknowledge that they have no righteousness in themselves to plead as deserving the favor of that God whose holy commandment they have transgressed.

There can be no doubt that the day specified in our text signifies that glorious day which was revealed in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Throughout the prophetic night, the moon and stars of legal types and ceremonial shadows gave but faint reflections of the light of this great day. Yet all united in bearing witness to Jesus as the end of their testimony. He is the central Sun from whose light everything in the spiritual heavens is made to borrow all the glory in which it shines. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."—Acts x. 43.

By the specification that "Five cities in the land or Egypt" shall in that day "speak the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts," it may be understood that the grace of God shall be revealed in bringing from under legal condemnation "a remnant according to the election of grace." Of the multitudes of Egypt five cities would constitute but a very small remnant. Only by the power of God could they be made to abandon their native language and speak the language of Canaan, by which is evidently signified, not the senseless jargon of the idolatrous nations whom God destroyed before Joshua, but the peculiar expressions of the people whom God established in that goodly land which he gave to the seed of Abraham. In the antitype it is that "pure language," which is spoken only by the nation whose God is the Lord. So by another prophet the Lord declares, "Then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one accord."—Zeph. iii. 9. Only in this divinely taught language can any sinner "swear to the Lord of hosts." No efforts of the will of man can bring an offering to the Lord by which to obtain his favor. His name is hidden from the research of creatures, so that it is impossible that their highest thoughts should even so much as approach unto his glory. Much less is it possible that the enmity of the carnal mind should voluntarily pledge allegiance to the Lord of hosts, to swear to him. The covetousness of the natural mind can rise no higher than itself. Every motive of the carnal heart centers in the exaltation of self; thus, of his own will man can never swear to any other but himself. The power of God is manifestly victorious in every one who is brought to know his entire dependence upon the Lord of hosts; and this knowledge must be in every one who is conscious of his just condemnation, and who trusts alone in the grace of God for salvation from the evil which is in his own heart. The desolate mourning of such lost and helpless sinners is the language of Canaan, and those who speak this peculiar tongue do all of them swear to the Lord of hosts. This oath of allegiance is not pledged in the confidence of selfish presumption, but by the assurance of that faith which compels the trembling one to confess that he has no refuge but in that grace of God which bringeth salvation to the lost.

As the distressed woman of Canaan worshiped Jesus, saying, "Lord, help me!" so every lost sinner swears to the Lord of hosts and speaks the language of Canaan, when he is made to cry unto God for deliverance from just condemnation. In no other way is it possible to ascribe such greatness to our God as is attributed to him in this prayer of extreme necessity.

In the declaration, "One shall be called, The city of destruction," we do not understand that it is implied that there is less propriety in thus designating the other four of those cities than the one which shall be so called. Certainly in the individual experience of the saints, if it were revealed that any one city is more than all others emphatically entitled to be called The city of destruction, that city is the very place wherein the conscious sinner finds his own abode. This is in harmony with the designation of the subjects of electing love as "The ends of the earth." As there is no other name given to the remaining four cities which shall speak the language of Canaan, we conclude that the same name applies to each of them. We know of no better name than this for every one who is made to see himself cut off from all hope of attaining to the favor of divine justice. He then feels himself an inhabitant of The city of destruction. While the prophecy may be primarily applicable to the election of grace among the natural Israelites, as represented by Egypt (the house of toil), there is also a sense in which it is descriptive of the experience of every one who is called by grace out of the bondage of sin, and translated into the liberty of the sons of God. In this application, the one whose home is beyond the reach of mercy is the individual who is brought to see his own condition as without hope and without God in the world.

In the prophecy of the altar to the Lord in the land of Egypt, there is foretold the revelation which should be made in the day of gospel light, by which the glory of the Lord should be manifested in the testimony of Jesus as the life and substance of all that legal house of bondage. As the altar represents the worship of the Lord and his glory is witnessed in the whole of that legal dispensation, called in our text Egypt, so the pillar at the boarder thereof indicates the everlasting memorial by which the completely victorious work of our Redeemer is established in the very limitation of that just and inflexible law which was satisfied by him and forever taken out of the way of the salvation of his people. This memorial pillar shall never be removed from the border of the land of Egypt, so that no power of justice can claim again at the hand of the ransomed sinner that satisfaction which has been rendered by the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth his people from all sin.

The fact that this monumental pillar is at the border of the land of Egypt clearly proclaims the impossibility of any of those demands of legal servitude ever coming from that house of bondage into the land of liberty into which the Lord has brought every one who is taught to speak the language of Canaan and swear to him. The thunders of condemnation may indeed resound throughout the land of Egypt, saying, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them!" But the voice of terror is hushed when it comes to this immovable pillar which is at the border of that land of hopeless slavery. In satisfaction of its every claim the blood of Jesus records the receipt in full as it flows from his crucified body on the tree of Calvary. Sin has no power to pass the border of this land of Egypt while this everlasting memorial of divine grace stands as the witness of God that divine justice has been magnified in its utmost requirement. Now, instead of denouncing curses against those who are represented by the "five cities in the land of Egypt," the voice of truth and holiness is heard in sovereign mercy commanding, "Deliver him from going down to the pit; I have found a ransom." No taskmaster from the house of bondage can pass by this pillar which God has set at the border of the land of Egypt.

Whether Jew or Gentile, all the children of Adam are under the curse which was brought upon the world by the entrance of sin; so that there is no difference in that sense among men. They all are held in the land of Egypt as justly condemned by the holy law of God. All are natives of the one "city of destruction." No power less than the omnipotence of Jehovah could establish this pillar at the border of that land of legal condemnation, and thus deliver the lawful captives in accordance with strict justice. But it is declared in the connection of our text, "And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt; for they shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a savior, and a great one [that is, a defender, or champion], and he shall deliver them. And the Lord shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the Lord, and perform it. And the Lord shall smite Egypt; he shall smite and heal it; and they shall return even to the Lord, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them." In this unfailing promise is revealed the infinite power of that love and mercy of God by which he has ordained salvation for them who are chosen in Christ Jesus, not only among the Gentiles but also the remnant according to the election of grace from among the tribes of Israel. The altar in the land of Egypt is sanctified by the precious blood of Jesus, and not only those who were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, but also the outcasts in the land of Egypt (hopeless sinners under the legal covenant, and Gentiles who knew not God), shall together "worship the Lord in the holy mount at Jerusalem."

In submitting these suggestions for the consideration of our inquiring brother Mayfield, we are conscious that the subject is full of instruction to which we have not referred, and would gladly receive further comments either from him or any of our readers.

UNTIL MARCH

first, 1894, we authorize every subscriber on our list to act as agent for us in procuring new subscribers, and for every new subscriber they send us they may retain one dollar, and send us one dollar. These terms apply only to new subscribers.

For every two new subscribers and three dollars sent us we will enter the two new names on our list for 1894, and credit an old subscriber one year; making three subscriptions for a year for three dollars, and additional new ones may be sent at one dollar each.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK US TO SEND A NEW ONE AND CREDIT AN OLD SUBSCRIBER ONE YEAR FOR TWO DOLLARS, AS WE CANNOT AFFORD TO DO IT.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed several hundred extra copies of number one of this volume, and shall continue to run a surplus of each number until further notice, so that all new names sent in, can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume.

CHURCH HISTORY.

ALL the Church Histories we have left is one best binding at five dollars, and twenty-one of the imitation binding at four dollars. We cannot say whether we will ever have any more of these books or not.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address, accomplished for his people in completely saving them. Christ also "loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." Christ gives unto his people eternal life, and that "life is hid with Christ in God." I believe this life is so hid that no mortal man can ever see it or know it. It is hid in Christ from all the men of this world, and only seen and appreciated by an eye of faith. Spiritual life and spiritual blessings are hid from the wise of this world, but revealed by the Spirit of God to all his elect children.

But, my dear brother Coulter, I think I had better stop, for I may be getting into too deep water for me. "Little barks should keep near shore."

I was much interested in your last letter to me on circumcision; also your letter in the SIGNS on "Baca (valley of weeping)." I have also learned that our little church at Caroline has received a very good and encouraging letter from you. It seems so good of you that I want to thank you personally and for the church, for your kind thoughtfulness. I learn from letters from White Church, where Ella, my daughter, is at present, that she and George Beard have related their experience to the church and been received. I understand they are to be baptized on Saturday of this week. This is a great blessing for us, as you well know, and to all the churches as well. There is a feeling of rejoicing in the hearts of all Christians when they hear such news.

Dear brother, I did not intend to write so much, and what I have written, as you will see by the date, I have withheld, not knowing whether I had better send it or not; but I know how generous you are, and so venture to send it just as it is. I am heartily glad that you can be so fruitful in your writings. Many speak of it. Elder Bradbeer quoted a part of one of your communications to Charlie, to describe his feelings, &c. So I hope you will continue the good work, and bring forth fruit unto God. Love to all. Mrs. H. sends love to sister Coulter and Edna, and so do I.

With much love, your affectionate brother,

B. F. HAMILTON.

DUTTON, Ark., Dec. 14, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—Your last letter came a few days ago. As it is raining until I cannot work on the farm to-day, I will try to write some, though I feel much like you complained of feeling, and as if an effort in that direction would be purely mechanical.

My mind has of late been led to contemplate the moving cause or motor-power of all bodies in action. As all matter is of itself absolutely inert, I conclude that it acts only when and as it is acted upon by a spirit-principle. A body without a spirit is dead.

There are more than 33,000 forms of organic life known to science, but every individual of every kind possesses a body exactly adapted to fulfill the wants of the spirit-principle of that body. As the shape or form, size, &c., of every kind indicates to the experienced eye the disposition or spirit of that species, I conclude that the spirit-principle is the agency by which the original atoms are moulded into shape. Chemistry finds, I believe, only sixty-four original elements. Of these in varying proportions and different shapes all bodies are constituted. Why a fish with its fins and tail here, and a fowl with its wings and feathers there, and a reptile yonder, and everything everywhere with a form exactly adapted to its spirit-principle, if this were not the agency in such formation, and if this were not what quickens, moulds into shape, acts upon and moves these bodies? "As thou knowest not what is the way of the Spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child, even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all."—Eccl. xi. 5. While all things are the work of God, they grow and are formed in accordance with his fixed and irrevocable laws; and it seems to me that the wise man here associates the formation, even of the bones in the womb, with the mysterious influence of spirit upon matter, the modus operandi of which man knows absolutely nothing. While we know not how, and cannot know how, spirit acts upon and quickens material bodies, yet we know that it does, and can plainly see the visible effects of such operation.

Twelve men of the children of Israel, of the same flesh and blood, and so far as material composition is concerned exactly alike, are chosen to spy out the land of Canaan. They pass through it, and view it with the same facilities, and return and make their report. Ten bring up an evil report, and cause Israel to rebel against God the tenth time in the wilderness. These ten die of the plague before God, while the other two, who bring up a good report, are permitted to enter and enjoy the glorious blessings of the land of milk and honey. Why such different and diverging fates as life and health and blessing to a part, and the most horrible death and destruction to the rest, when all are exactly alike in material formation? The answer is plainly given, "Because they had another spirit with them."

When God sends an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem, we soon find them transformed into murderous demons, as it were, gloating over human suffering and woe. When an evil spirit from God comes upon Saul, he is instantly transformed into a fiend in human shape, and quickly tries to murder David. When a spirit of anger rankles in the bosom of your friend, "the form of his visage" is changed, so that the appearance which once was lovely now looks demon-like. While the evil spirit, "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that works in the children of disobedience," has possession of the body of the Gadarene, he dwells wild and naked in the tombs, so fierce that men are afraid to pass by his abode, and efforts to bind him as a common nuisance, with chains, are vain. But when the evil spirit is cast out, and as light fills the place previously occupied by darkness, the Spirit of God takes its place and we find him "sitting clothed and in his right mind." What a wonderful change in a man, and all due to the change of the actuating Spirit.

But two kinds of spirits, or rather two spirits, act upon men. The one is the spirit of the prince of darkness, the spirit that works in all men in disobedience; and the other is the Spirit of the Prince of light and peace; and if any man have not his Spirit, he is none of his. This Spirit quickens the mortal bodies of all the saints, and by it they are predestinated to be conformed to the image of Christ. This, I believe, is and will be accomplished by the ever-prevailing law or mandate of the Great Infinite, that the image of everything must be in accordance with its acting spirit-principle.

The high and lofty One that inhabits eternity is a Spirit; and he dwells not only in the high and holy place, but also with him that is of a humble heart and a contrite spirit. Those who are wise will, to the extent of their ability, make the place of their abode suitable for their occupancy; and when a place becomes unfit, will remove from it. In this way God has a use for things that are by men considered evil, and are, in themselves, and for the time being, evil, but destined ultimately to work good for the Lord's people. Paul gives as the reason why we know that all things work for good, that whom God foreknew, he predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son. Those things which appear to us as the greatest evils that befall us in our pilgrimage, are the things that humble us most, and thus prepare us for the indwelling of the Spirit of the high and lofty One that inhabits eternity; the Spirit that conforms us to the image of Christ. This conformation is the one grand object for which this universe with all that it contains was called into existence. Every atom of matter that moves, or rather is moved, is only performing its allotted portion in the grand consummation of the one purpose of, or for the existence of all things.

I believe, if I am not mistaken, when I was east you charged me with preaching only to poor people. It was the poor in the days of the Master that had the gospel preached unto them, and the poor in spirit inherit the kingdom of heaven; the ruling of the Spirit that conforms them to the image of Christ. Look here for a moment into the cave of Adullam. What characters behold you? "Every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt." Well, here is an exact similitude of the characters our spiritual David has "become a Captain over." Whatever may have been the ills that have befallen them, whoever may have been responsible, they have all but performed their allotted portion in bringing them to this place, and of their coming under the ruling power of the law of the Spirit of life. But one might be possessed of millions, and yet very poor in this sense; while one might be penniless, and yet proud and haughty in spirit, and not at all fit for a companion of the occupants of this cave. God resists the proud. They are actuated by the spirit of Satan, and thus conformed to his image. When prosperity contributes to making us proud, it is a curse; when adversity prevents, it is a blessing. If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwells in us, it will quicken our mortal bodies; and thus being quickened or animated by it, the life of Jesus is made manifest in our mortal flesh, and we move on to the ultimate conformation to his image, our outward or daily perishing, and the inner being daily renewed, until, like the heaven hid in three measures of meal, changes all into heaven. This is the work of the Spirit. But "no man has power over the Spirit to retain the Spirit;" yet the Master teaches us, by the parable of our giving good gifts unto our children, that God shall much more give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him. May he grant unto us the desire that will lead us to seek the guidance and indwelling of that Spirit that quickens and moves us in the way of life eternal.

You ask, "Why don't you write?" Perhaps now you are getting ready to ask why I don't quit. But to answer you seriously, it does seem that I cannot get time to. My life is, and has been for years, one of unusual activity. I am very busy all hours of daylight, and I cannot write of nights now to do any good.

My wife has been in better health of late than for years, but now for several days has been rather feeble. She is better and worse by times.

Hoping the blessing of God may rest upon you and yours, with all the dear ones who love the truth, I remain your brother in tribulation,

C. W. ANDERSON.

BLANCO, Texas, July 24, 1893.

DEAR KINDRED IN CHRIST:—It seems that the time of trouble with us in Texas has come, but not yet in our little church. It is sad indeed to know there is a people claiming to be Primitive Baptists who are too tender and modest to have God's word proclaimed, for fear it will hurt someone, and also make God the author of sin. Poor, weak and benighted as I am, I can bear with them, and not feel hurt because everyone cannot understand the word of truth just as I do. I see too much within myself to expect perfection in another. If I could live in adoration of my adorable Lord all my days, I would be content; but this world's vanities and my sinful thoughts are a burden, and all the good is of God. When we have a glimpse of his holiness we rejoice to know that he changes not, and in his infinite love and mercy he has redeemed us. So in ecstasy of joy we cry, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God." In meditation upon the manner of that great love I am lost in wonder, and enter his courts with an offering of a contrite heart and broken spirit. We then have no mind or care for the perishable things of time, nor do we then care how swiftly time passes with us. We are then reconciled to wait God's wise and glorious will with us. His afflicting hand is heavy upon me, but I know it is right; for he has made me to be calm, and to endure with patience all my suffering. I feel to say, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." I have a feeling of his tender care that I did not have while in health. I cannot understand why it is so. I know there is no good in my flesh. I am in his hand. If I live, it is mercy; if I die, it is mercy. The Lord rules in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand or say unto him, What doest thou? Then everything is just as he willed and determined it to be. He determined the crucifixion of Christ. Can man say that he did evil in thus determining, and is the author of sin? The Lord told Samuel to tell Saul to go and destroy the Amalekites for lying in wait for Israel in the way as they came up out of Egypt. Now we know that all those who were alive when Israel came up out of Egypt were dead when the Lord sent Samuel to Saul to tell him to go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all they had; to spare them not, but slay both men and women, infant and suckling, oxen and sheep, camels and asses. Our natural sympathies would spare more than Saul did. We cannot see any justice, from a human standpoint, in killing a man then, much less the women and infants. And some people to-day will say, Do not preach all that is given by inspiration; our sympathies cannot take it; it is too hard. But did Saul do right in the sight of God in sparing part of the best for sacrifice unto the Lord? God says, No. He said that "rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." If the Scriptures are given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, can God's ministers take a part of them, and spare a part, or keep back absolute predestination? But some say as did Saul, The people cannot take it. Saul told Samuel that the people who were with him had spared the best of the oxen and sheep and fatlings for a sacrifice unto the Lord. But the Lord held Saul responsible. If the Lord's ministers to-day would follow the command to observe all things whatsoever Jesus has commanded, there would not be so much bleating of the sheep and lowing of the oxen as is heard among the Baptists. I think there have been, and are yet, some preachers who are not as wise as serpents, nor harmless as doves. But as I am not very well acquainted with many, and have a very limited knowledge of innocence and wisdom, I cannot say how many, nor who they are; but I would ask, If their God is a Sovereign, how can they prescribe rules by which he must be governed in order that he be right in any or all his acts? We all know it would be wicked in a man, or men, or a nation, to go of their own malicious will and do what the Lord required Saul to do unto Amalek.

If this poor scribble is published in the SIGNS, I hope every one who sees it will read carefully the fifteenth chapter of First Samuel, and see how much there is in it, and how little I have hinted at. Saul said he had done the commandment of the Lord; but Samuel said he had not.

May the Lord strengthen his humble servants to cry aloud and spare not, is the sincere desire of a weak one.

PINE GROVE, Ark., Dec. 26, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Owing to the stringency of the times I find it a hard matter to get new subscribers for the SIGNS. I have been a subscriber about thirty years, I think, and expect to continue to read it as long as I am able to pay for it. My wife and I are each in our seventy-third year, and we prize it more highly than any other religious periodical we have seen. The doctrine advocated is the doctrine we believe, and, it seems to me, is the only firm foundation of the sinner's hope; the only doctrine that renders all the praise, glory and dominion to the Creator of the universe, who "hath made all things for himself, yea, even the wicked for the day of evil."

THOMAS PETERSON.

THOUGHTS PUT DOWN AT VARIOUS TIMES.

ONE who feels that he is necessary to the church is of but little, if any, use to her; while one who feels that the church is necessary to him is always a help and comfort to his brethren, and enjoys also a quietness in his own soul unknown to the other.

WE need not be so anxious as to how our brethren esteem us. The state of our own feelings toward them is of far more importance to us. When we are questioning concerning their love to us we are apt to be jealous and suspicious of their words and movements, and will often see in them a disregard for ourselves, when no such was intended. But when our hearts are full of love to them we are quiet and trustful and happy in their presence, for love thinketh no evil; and the joy and blessedness of love is in feeling it in our own hearts. The happiness is in loving, not in being loved. To know of the love of another for us may be gratifying; but to feel love in our own hearts toward a worthy object is a living joy. There can be no greater bliss known by man than to experience the love of God shed abroad in our hearts; and with that experience of the holy emotion of divine love, casting out fear, there comes the heavenly knowledge of the Lord's first love to us, and the assurance that we have passed from death unto life.

SEEKING for a natural explanation of spiritual things, and rejecting all that is incomprehensible to our natural minds, is like shutting the door against ourselves to all truly rich and glorious knowledge. The most wonderful revelations of spiritual truth have come through the openings of Scriptures which it had seemed to us could not mean what they plainly said; but when we have been made willing to receive the word at God's hand with unquestioning confidence, and wait for him to interpret it to us in his own time and way, we have found that its unfolding was wonderfully blessed to us and most comforting, displaying to us things both new and old, things rich and glorious, which were commended to us as the very truth we had experienced, and as bread and water to our hungry and thirsty souls. It is best never to try to conform the Scriptures of truth to our own reason, but "Hold fast the form of sound words in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." Reason could never foresee the true fulfillment of prophecy, nor understand it when it appears. The darkening of the sun, the turning of the moon to blood, and the signs in heaven and in earth, foretold by the prophet Joel, were not in the natural sight of men, but in the experience of poor sinners.

gation to subscribe for some paper, said in my hearing, "We are making history." What a mistake! The history of the Lord's people is all written in the Scriptures; and it is not, and never can be, written anywhere else. The history of natural events concerning them can be written; but that varies little in different ages, and is of little account compared with the inner history. What a wonderful book is that in which all the history of all the people of God is written. They read that history in the Bible as they go along in the experience of it, and no faster. The nights of weeping and mornings of joy, the wearisome months and the seasons of refreshing, the times of crying for mercy and the times of praise and rejoicing, are all appointed, with "the bounds of our habitation that we cannot pass."

OTHERS have suffered death in even a more terrible and excruciating manner, so far as the natural mind can judge, than that which was inflicted upon the dear Savior; but the awful terror and sting and fearfulness of his death no one else can ever know except in their faint measure of "the fellowship of his sufferings." His death was full of awful and unspeakable horror and bitter anguish on account of the load of his people's sins that was upon him; and he suffered it in order that they should be saved from it. No matter with what lingering horrors the death of any one of them may be accompanied, that death is sweet compared with his, for this terrible sting is not there for them to feel; neither is any one of them left alone, as he was, in the awful hour, for he is with them. "Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

DRUMMOND, in his "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," has reasoned that every order of life is raised by the power of the next higher order to that higher life. Thus the animal eats the vegetable, and so raises the vegetable life to animal life. The man eats the lower animal, and so raises the brute life to the higher order of human life. Then he reasons that so the spiritual life acts with superior power upon the man, to raise him to the order of divine life. The question of power in man to do anything to raise himself, and bring himself into possession of spiritual life, seems clearly settled by this analogy. The power must come always from above, from the next higher order of life. This looks like conclusive reasoning in favor of the truth, and I came near being taken by it, as I think some brethren have been; but as soon as the author finished up this fine piece of logic he at once set men to work, like any other Arminian. He exhorts them to lay hold on the higher life.

I notice one brother writing about the earth being quickened when the growth of vegetable life takes it up, and again quickened when the vegetable is eaten by the animal, and again when the animal is eaten by man.

I want to be moderate and meek, and distrustful of my own judgment, as I have need to be, and to express myself accordingly; yet I have a great inclination to say that all this is pure nonsense. I am ashamed that I hesitated a moment with any inclination to regard such foolishness as truth. A moment's reflection ought to have shown me that there is nothing in it. The life of the vegetable does not go into the animal, for the vegetable is dead before it is eaten. The life of the animal is separated from the body before it becomes food for man. Eating what had life does not cause that life to be joined to the life of the eater. If it did, how would it be when the animal eats the man? If the life of the thing swallowed remains at all, it will remain in all its distinct individuality. The whale did not produce any change upon the life of Jonah.

In what possible way can all this illustrate the wonderful change to be wrought upon the poor sinner, the chosen vessel of mercy, by the glorious power of Jesus? It is vain to seek for analogies in nature by which we may understand the wonderful and mysterious work of God by which our vile body shall be changed, that it may be fashioned like unto the dear Savior's glorious body, and by which we shall be conformed to his image. This shall be done "according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." The mystery of this wonderful work will never be unfolded to us while in this mortal state, and will never be known except in the experience of it. All things in nature are used as figures to represent spiritual things; but nothing exists that can serve to show us how the Lord will work that wonderful change in and upon his people which shall cause them to be like Jesus. There is no analogy in this world to that glorious working of the mighty power of God—nothing that will ever serve to illustrate or explain it to mortal intelligence. It stands forever alone, apart from the things which man can comprehend. It is embraced only by the infinite comprehension of faith.

It ought to be enough for us that we find no such reasoning in the Bible; no attempt to explain the unexplainable; no attempt to tell how the Lord does his strange work.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

HALLVILLE, Texas.

MY mind has been much exercised of late with the subject of faith. I know that we read of faith in many places in the Bible and in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; but still I feel a desire for some correspondent to write on the subject of faith in the SIGNS, and oblige a poor sinner.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

My father, Edward Vermilya, departed this life April 17th, 1893.

The deceased was born in Middletown, Delaware Co., N. Y., Sept. 7th, 1818. He was baptized nearly forty years ago by Elder I. Hewitt, and was a member of that church until the year 1851, when he with the rest of his family moved to Canton, Bradford Co., Pa., where he resided until the time of his death. For a number of years there was but little opportunity to hear the doctrine he loved so well. Finally the Canton & Columbia Old School Baptist Church, under the pastoral care of Elder S. H. Durand, was organized at this place, giving him the blessed privilege of again hearing the truth proclaimed. He was a firm believer in salvation by grace, and grace alone, fully realizing his inability to do anything meritorious in the sight of a just God. His sufferings for the last year of his life were very great, his sickness being Bright's disease of the kidneys. His dying hours were such as would appall the hardest heart. He died in the firm belief that his Redeemer liveth, ever ready to make intercession for lost sinners. We mourn not as those without hope.

GROVER, Pa., Jan. 8, 1894.

James Pembroke Dorsey, while returning from the funeral of a friend and comrade, at whose grave he seemed much affected, was instantly killed near his home, in Clarke Co., Va., on Dec. 19th, 1893, in consequence, as is believed, of his horse taking fright and running away. He was found a short time afterward with the carriage upset, and it is supposed that his skull was crushed by a kick from the horse in his struggle to free himself from the wreck. The following extract from the county paper is the tribute of a familiar friend:

"Here passed away another gentleman of the old school, and about whom it can be truthfully said that he had many friends and no enemies; kind and gentle as a woman in all his feelings, never saying nor doing aught of any man, and ever ready at any sacrifice to perform an act of friendship or kindness. Indeed, noble impulses seemed to be the controlling spirit in his relations to his neighbors, and as a friend ever staunch. How terrible and tragic was the end of this gentle life!

"I feel, Mr. Editor, that I cannot suppress the desire of adding this my humble tribute to my friend and neighbor.

SISTER Elizabeth Clark was born in Lancaster, Pa., April 18th, 1818. In childhood with her parents she moved to Hocking Co., Ohio, where she resided until within the last few years. She was united in marriage to George Clark on Jan. 24th, 1833. To this union were born eleven children. Her companion preceded her to the grave seven years and three days. Seven children survive both parents. Besides the four sons and three daughters, she leaves twenty grandchildren and five great-grandchildren to mourn their loss and her gain.

Sister Clark united with the Scott's Creek Primitive Baptist Church, and was baptized by the pastor, Elder John Parker, twenty-seven years prior to her death. She died at the home of her son, David Clark, in Perry Co., Ohio, Dec.

25th, 1893, aged 75 years, 8 months and 7 days. Her funeral was largely attended on the 27th, and the writer spoke words of comfort to the sorrowing; after which the remains were laid away in the Scott's Creek burying-ground to await the resurrection of the just.

Sister Clark through a long life of christian deportment gave full evidence of her standing in the blessed Son of God, whom she served through life until death. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

G. N. TUSING.

OUR sister, Eliza Jane Hoffman, whose maiden name was Richards, was born in Preble Co., Ohio, Dec. 2d, 1833, and died Dec. 31st, 1893, aged 60 years and 29 days.

She was married to Jacob Edward Hoffman on Dec. 7th, 1851. To them were born three sons and one daughter. Her husband and two sons preceded her in death. She leaves one son, one daughter, six grandchildren, four brothers and two sisters, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn.

She joined the Primitive Baptist Church on July 20th, 1864, and was baptized by Elder Daniel Robison, of which church she remained a true and faithful member until her death. She was stricken with consumption nearly two years ago, and was never heard to murmur or complain. She said she would bear all and wait until the change came; that she was only waiting until it was the Lord's will to call her home. Just four weeks prior to her interment Elder Caudell and I visited her, and she requested Elder Caudell to sing and pray, which he did. She also requested him to preach at her funeral, which he did, from Luke viii. 53, a text of her own choice. She also made choice of the following hymn to be sung at her funeral:

"Why should we start, and fear to die?
What timorous worms we mortals are,"
&c.

She was a kind mother and neighbor, well-liked by all who knew her. She was afflicted for many years, so that she was not permitted to fill her seat at meeting, but entertained and waited upon the brethren and sisters when able, and was delighted when the brethren in the ministry would call upon her.

Sorrow not, bereaved ones; weep not as those who have no hope; for our loss is her eternal gain. May the Lord make us ready, that we also may say when near the end, We are only waiting.

JOHN A. HOWELL.

WEST MANCHESTER, Ohio.

DIED—Near Prattsville, Grant Co., Ark., Dec. 15th, 1893, after a protracted illness, brother Richard C. Henson.

The subject of this notice was born in the state of Alabama, April 21st, 1836, and removed with his parents, Abner and Elvira Henson, when an infant, to the state of Missouri, and thence to Arkansas at the age of twelve or thirteen years. He was married some time prior to the late war to Miss Mary Vanderslice, who with six children and several grandchildren survive him, four children and two grandchildren having preceded him to the grave.

Brother Henson professed a hope in Christ in the year 1868, joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Macedonia, in Dallas Co., and was baptized, together with his wife and two other sisters, by Elder D. R. Leard, on the third Sunday in September, 1871, and lived a consistent christian until death removed him from this vale of tears.

Brother Henson was a man held in very high esteem in his community. Besides being well-versed in the Scriptures, he was well-informed on general topics, and made himself useful to his neighbors in a business way. He was a great nurse for the sick, a loving companion, a kind and indulgent father, and ever a friend to the needy to the extent of his limited ability. This stroke of God's merciful providence falls heavily on the bereaved sister and family, but they mourn not as those who have no hope. We verily believe that he has gone to rest, and that he will shine forth in the resplendent glory of God in the home of the blessed. During the last several weeks of his life his mind seemed entirely devoted to spiritual things. He said, "I have no dread only of the pangs of death."

At the grave the humble writer tried to speak comfortingly to the family and many friends there assembled from the subject of "The finished works of God," chosen by the deceased before his departure. May God bless the bereaved family, both temporally and spiritually.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

SPIRITUAL WORSHIP.

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."—John iv. 24.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Brother Thomas Jones, of the Patapsco Church, Carroll Co., Md., has requested me to write for the SIGNS upon this theme, and to-day I feel like trying to comply with his request. The true worship of God is the highest exercise in which men or angels can engage. Nothing can be more pleasing to God nor more beneficial to men. Therefore it is of the utmost importance that we should understand what true worship is, and how we can be pleasing to God in our service.

The Bible, from which alone we can learn the revealed will of God, does not leave us in the dark with regard to this question. In the text at the head of this article we have from the lips of him who dwelt in the bosom of the Father, and who always was well-pleasing to God, a plain statement of what true worship is. In the chapter in which the text occurs there are several expressions which bear upon the same theme and present the same truth; and if I were asked to select out of the New Testament all that bore upon this matter, and all that would prove this text to be in harmony with the rest, I should have to transcribe nearly every chapter and verse of it, since where the same sentiment is not directly expressed it is necessarily implied. It is certain that Jesus in his teaching, and also the writers of the whole New Testament after him, looked coldly upon outward forms of worship, and thought so little of them that they say nothing about them in most of their writings. In one instance Paul found his brethren showing a tendency to regard days and seasons and forms; and he said to them, "I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." His constant effort had been to wean them from a slavish adherence to forms, to be free men in Christ; and from what he had heard of them he feared that he had labored in vain. Even when the few plain, simple ordinances of the church are treated upon, such as preaching, praying, singing, baptism and the supper, it is always insisted upon that these things have no inherent virtue, but are valuable only as they present the truth that is already felt in the heart.

Amid all the multiplied forms and ceremonies of the Jewish worship we have glimpses of this same great truth. The more spiritual among the people saw that the worship which God would accept was not the mere outward form which the infidel could perform as well as the believer in God—which the immoral man could observe as well as the man of true piety, but that which was real, sincere and heartfelt. So David in the day of his sorrow for his great sin said, "For thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." The prayer of Solomon at the dedication of the temple also breathes the very spirit of true spiritual worship; and the Psalms of David in general are full of the same truth, that God is truly worshiped only in spirit and in truth.

But now in this language of the blessed Master that which was but dimly seen in former ages is now clearly stated and confirmed by repeated teachings. The very best example and illustration of what the Savior signified in this language at the head of this article is found in his own life among men. As a Jew, born of Jewish parents, he did indeed observe the needful requirements of the law, for he came to so live and to so fulfill it as to set forth its deeper, broader and higher meaning, which was that man was not made for the sabbath, but the sabbath for man; and this was also true of every other item of the law as well. He did not come indeed to destroy; he was not an anarchist. He came to so fulfill it that it should be seen that the law of God was not that mean, narrow, formal thing which the Pharisee by his traditions had made it, but holy and just and good and glorious; and not a source of bondage, but of truest freedom to all who should believe on him, and drink of the water which he should give them. But while all this was true, he was continually shocking priests, Levites, lawyers and Pharisees by his entire disregard of the narrow prejudices which filled them and blinded them, and by his continual violation of the set forms and rules which their tradition had imposed upon them. Jesus came not to destroy, but to fulfill the law; but his fulfillment of it was of such a high and spiritual nature that their blinded hearts could not see it, but judged him to be a violator of it instead. Professing to keep the law, they themselves were continually violating its inmost spirit and meaning; while Jesus pierced beyond the shell, and while breaking the shell brought to light and exalted all the true meaning and substance of it. He most clearly and emphatically fulfilled his own words, that "neither in this mountain, nor at Jerusalem, should men worship the Father." He showed that wherever a son of God was, there was a temple of God, and there also were the altar and the priest. Wherever a heart loved and rejoiced in God, and praised his name, there was true worship, whether the song was voiceless or expressed. There no black-robed priest nor white-robed acolyte is needed to intone a prayer or to chant a psalm, for that soul is priest and singer all in one; and he is himself God's temple, wherein is the altar and the incense and the voice of prayer and praise. Thus the whole Bible is an elaboration of the words of the text, and the whole life of Jesus was their illustration.

In uttering these words Jesus did not make light of the past things. He never did. The past things were of God as truly as the new things. They had a glory all their own; but the glory of the old was not the glory of the new. Paul tells us that "even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth;" and he says that it is the ministration of the spirit that excelleth. But while he did not in any degree detract from the glory of the work of God under the former covenant, yet he did emphasize the far more abundant glory revealed now to the sons of men. He said, "The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him." A far better thing has been reserved for us. The first has been taken away, that the second may be established. The things that could be shaken are removed; only the things that could not be shaken remain.

Under the Old Testament forms a man could comply with every requirement there made, and yet hate God and all good things. The high priest, the priests, the Levites, might fill their places and minister in complete conformity to every outward requirement of the law of worship, and yet not savingly know God at all, and be at the same time plotting against his neighbor's peace or life.

Men to-day may do the same thing; but Jesus says that such worship is not true. Its form may be all right, but within it is but a charnel-house of corruption. True worship is lovely in the sight of God, even though its outward temple be a hovel; but the dead men's bones of a formal worship are not made lovely because men have made magnificent temples their mausoleum. Such worship is not true worship; yea more, it is not the worship of God at all. If men worship the Father at all, it must be in spirit and in truth. Formal worship may say, "Praise the Lord," but it means, "Praise self." But when the Spirit of God and the power of his truth fill the heart, then from the heart, and in the thoughts, and by the words of the lips, is God alone exalted. How glad we ought to be that Jesus has spoken such things; and how glad we ought to be that the Lord gave his church so few and so simple forms of worship. We are ever in danger of grasping form for substance—of measuring our piety by our adherence to rituals. Even baptism has been put in place of true religion, in the place of the new birth, in the place of Christ. The Lord's supper has been supposed to do away with the need of feeding upon Christ by faith; and to preaching has there been ascribed a divine power for salvation. Thus the few ordinances which God did give to his church have been perverted, and performed, not to the honor, but rather to the dishonor, of Christ. How glad, then, we ought to be that forms and rituals are not multiplied in the New Testament.

It has ever been true, that as true spiritual worship has declined, love of form and outward religious ceremony has increased. Men have built to themselves vast temples of pleasing form and magnificent adornment, and have filled their hours of worship with all that could please the ear and the eye, or gratify every taste, and then have supposed that what was pleasing to themselves must be pleasing to God. Such worshipers say that they cannot feel a spirit of worship unless it be to the accompaniment of fine music and eloquent language. I have heard men rave about the beauty of what they called their church architecture, and tell of how their souls were soothed into harmony by it, and of fine music and singing, and tell how their souls were attuned to praise by it, until I felt like saying, You have made a god of the art and skill of men, and you have no place for the Spirit of God in all your thoughts. What does he who made the heavens and the earth, and who has attuned all the harmonies of heaven, and who hears the melody of the heart, care for the miserable efforts which are so pleasing to carnal minds, and which so much exalt the pride of men? God must be worshiped in spirit and in truth. It matters not how beautiful and sublime the music may be, if there be no power of truth felt in the heart; and if the words sung be false, such music is abhorrent to God when offered as worship.

To worship God in spirit and in truth, then, does not consist in ornate language, in multiplied forms, nor in outward show; neither does it consist in holding and proclaiming sound doctrine alone. The form of sound words in the mouth, without the power of truth in the heart, is no more pleasing to God, and glorifies him no more, than do forms of any other kind. The letter of sound doctrine kills as well as the letter of the law, or any outward forms whatever. Of some men it has been said, "They are so sound in doctrine," just because they were strong upon election, predestination, &c.; when their whole manner of life showed that these truths were but dead, dry forms to them, and not living realities. Election, predestination, &c., are true, but when held in the head merely produce no good fruit. On the other hand, when in Christ they are made to live in us, as the living bread of heaven, then they arouse praise and adoration to God, and create a desire to honor him, and to put on a walk becoming those who are predestinated and chosen to salvation. If we speak the truth, and by so doing worship God, it must be out of the living fountain of God's word in the heart. The form of sound words is to be held fast, but simply because they are the true vehicles by which the truth makes itself known. O that our whole heart and lives, and all our words, might be an exact pattern of the truth, so that it might be seen by its outward form how beautiful it is!

"God is a Spirit." This is not a statement of a new truth, but it is a new statement of an old truth. It has always been true that God is a Spirit, and it has always been true that he can be really worshiped only in spirit and in truth. "God is a Spirit." This implies that he has no body as we have; that he has no parts, hands, ears, feet, &c. Hence men are forbidden to make any image of him, because any image that men could make must of necessity be a lie, since nothing physical can resemble what is pure Spirit. Outward forms and rituals can please the natural senses, but they cannot ascend to God. The earthly can never of itself attain to the heavenly. This brief sentence contains all and implies all that need be known of God. It destroys every idolatrous conception of him, and takes away all virtue from formal worship. It implies the omniscience, the omnipresence and the omnipotence of Jehovah. It is necessarily bound up in the doctrine of his eternity, and in that of his self-existence. It involves the truth of his unchangeability, and is fraught with the most consoling reflections for the believing heart.

Now, since this is his character and nature, can we not well understand how it must be true that he must be worshiped in spirit and in truth? Certainly this follows, that to thus worship him, his Spirit and his truth must abide in us. Without his holy Spirit, then, we cannot worship him; and unless we know the power of the truth in our hearts we cannot ascribe that which is true to him. The text then implies living men of grace, as much as it declares the spirituality of God. If God is a Spirit, then his worship must be spiritual; and then it follows that only the spiritual can worship him. A holy desire to glorify God, and a desire to abase self, is an evidence of true spirituality; and such desires God sees, and with such sacrifices he is well-pleased.

But now we may ask, in conclusion, What is worship? What is it to worship God? Our word "worship" is from a word which signifies "a state of worth or worthiness." In the original Greek of the New Testament it signifies to pay divine honor or homage; that is, to ascribe all worth or worthiness to God. To ascribe to God that which is not true of him is not rendering true worship or honor to God. To withhold from him that which belongs to him is also a failure to truly worship him. To worship God aright, therefore, we must know him; and we can only know him by his own revelation of himself. Flesh and blood reveal not such knowledge, but our Father in heaven; and if we truly and in spirit worship God we do not do so by repeating what some one else knows and has told us, but by ascribing to God what we ourselves know to be true. From this it follows that no one can teach another to worship God. We may indeed help another to use right and proper words and phrases to express what they have felt and seen, but the spirit of worship itself we cannot impart to another. Jesus taught his disciples a form of prayer, but it was not until they had, out of full hearts, besought him to teach them to pray. I should not dare to teach any child to say a prayer in outward form unless I should hear that child complain that it could not pray, and that it did not know how to pray. Then indeed I should know that a good work had been begun in that child's heart which shall be perfected to the end; and I should rejoice to speak the word of truth to that child concerning prayer, as well as all other principles of truth.

Perhaps many of the Lord's people are engaged in his worship who little suspect it. A soul feels his guilt, and confesses it before God. What is this but confessing the holiness of God and his law? That soul confesses the justice of his condemnation. What is this but confessing the justice of God? That soul feels and says, "God is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. How then can I stand with any acceptance before him?" What is this but rendering reverential worship to him? Now that soul cries out for mercy and forgiveness. Is not this also worship, since it is an acknowledgment that he alone can save, since against him alone have we sinned? After awhile Jesus is revealed to that soul, and like Jonah he cries out, "I will pay my vows. Salvation is of the Lord." Is any act of worship higher than this? Ever afterward, when such an one ascribes his salvation to the grace of God, he is rendering worship to him. If also from our hearts we ascribe to God alone salvation, might, power, dominion, holiness, truth, justice and mercy, we are worshiping him; and when we are moved from our hearts to take up our daily cross and follow him in his ordinances and his statutes because they are his, and he has commanded them, this also is worship, for this is to acknowledge his supremacy and his right to rule. If the heart be in it we worship him when we sing and when we preach, when we pray and when we give thanks. Yea, more than this. If our lips are dumb, and we cannot pray nor give thanks, if our desire is toward him, and we long to worship him, then are we also worshiping him; and if we feel that we are doing nothing to his honor, and are grieved that it is so, then also are we truly worshiping him. If we must stand afar off, and cannot come near by reason of our defilement, if we dare not even look up to God, but can only smite upon our breast, with the cry, "Unclean! unclean!" upon our lips, then also are we rendering truest worship to God; for in every thought we are at such times exalting God. If we are able to be still, "because he has done it," when calamity comes, and our "dearest idols fail," then in that hour of solemn hush and stillness we are by our silent submission worshiping God; for we are confessing that he is just and good and wise, and that he is ruling over all, even our sorrows.

But why should I continue? Worship is not in excellency of speech nor in eloquence of diction. Nothing can add to the Master's own words; worship must be in spirit and in truth.

I leave these partial thoughts for brother Jones and all who may read.

I remain your brother in the precious hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 16, 1893.

MRS. RACHEL A. HOGELAND—MY DEAR SISTER:—Your letter of December 8th was received, and I read it to the church at our meeting on Sunday. It was a comfort to us to hear from you, and receive your expressions of interest and fellowship for the church, your affectionate remembrance of your brethren and sisters, and your desire to be among them if it were possible; and also to hear of your own exercises in regard to spiritual things. It is now three years since you were here, but you have been faithful to be with us by your letters. This, I think, is right. Where members of a church are removed, in the providence of God, too far away to be at the church meetings, it is their duty, a pleasant duty, if the church is dear to them, and their best friends and kindred dwell there, to communicate with them by letter as often as they can. It is very hard for some to write; but a few words expressing their love and care for the church can be written by any one, or by some one for him. I have known some who live within easy reach of the church who show but little if any interest to get to the meetings; but I cannot understand how such a course can be consistent with a profession of the religion of God our Savior. It does not seem to furnish any evidence of divine life. Yet one may easily get into that careless state by a neglect of the privileges of the church, and a carnal walk. It is a sad thing for a child of God to get asleep—to get into a state of carnal security.

We had a very pleasant meeting on Saturday, though we had comparatively few present. The rain prevented some from coming, and sickness kept a number away. Your letter was not in time for that meeting; but both hymns you mentioned, 1007 and 1033, Beebe's Collection, were read, showing that you are of one heart and one mind with your brethren.

You ask me to explain, either privately or through the SIGNS, the words, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" and also, "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" I do not know that I can explain them, but I can write a little of what I have thought about them; and the Lord may be pleased to bless what I say to your comfort and to my own. I desire and pray that this may be so.

The first expression is in Psalm xi. 3. I have reason to remember this Psalm, for when I was thirteen years of age I had reached this Psalm in my third reading of the Bible through by course; and here I stopped, and did not again undertake to read the Bible through until eighteen years after that, after I was baptized. I then read it as a hungry man eats, not by course, but as my mind turned to one book after another; and within six weeks I had read it all. That was a wonderful season, and a wonderful reading of the Scriptures, for me. I wish I could read it that way, and with such a hungry love, now.

How well I remember that third verse of this eleventh Psalm when I stopped at it in my early reading. How often I turned to it again, and wondered what it meant, and where those foundations were, and whether they ever would or could be destroyed, and whether I ever would have any interest in them, or would ever know anything about them, or about anything good.

When the Lord gave me a precious hope in the dear Savior I think I began to feel the firm support of that one foundation of God which can never be destroyed or "moved out of its place." My soul was made to rest in this foundation, which is in the holy mountains.—Psa. lxxxvii. 1. Jesus is the foundation which is laid in Zion; "and he that believeth in him shall not be ashamed or confounded world without end." God's holiness is a mountain far above all the hills and mountains of man's power and righteousness, and in that mountain is the church established forever. Those who were given a view of that foundation by faith, even under the legal dispensation, could say, "In the Lord put I my trust: how say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?" What need to flee to any place of fancied refuge when the Lord, who is our refuge, is with us? But the wicked, the enemies of truth, are shooting their arrows of false doctrine, "even bitter words," at the upright in heart, insisting that it will not do to trust in the Lord; we must do something ourselves for our safety. Flee as a bird to your mountain; not the Lord's mountain, but yours—the mountain of your works and righteousness.

Whoever asks the question, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" it has reference to the foundations of the earth, which "are out of course" (Psalm lxxxii. 5); to the foundations which are furnished by the works of the law. This question may be shot as an arrow at the upright in heart, stirring up his fearful apprehensions as to what the end will be if his works all fail to present any foundation for hope. This might well cause fears to rise in the hearts of those who were under the law, and who trusted in the Lord. They were devout men, like those who cried out on the day of Pentecost, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They were not yet given to know the secret of the Lord. It was hid from those ages and generations, but is now revealed unto the saints. The riches of the glory of this mystery is "Christ in you the hope of glory." This was not known then, and the foundations of the legal works and ceremonies were all they could see. Now if these be destroyed, what can the righteous, those who love righteousness, and desire judgment to be done, what can they do? Peter on the day of Pentecost declared that all these foundations were destroyed. The signs of that utter destruction were seen in the legal heavens and earth, in the laws and ceremonies, and in the hearts of the righteous who had rested upon them, "blood and fire and pillars of smoke." Blood a sign of death, fire a sign of destruction, and pillars of smoke a sign of desolation. But only the righteous saw and felt this, and they cried out, as they do yet, "What shall we do?" These foundations look as good and strong to the wicked, the legal character, as they ever did. He does not believe they are destroyed, but fully trusts in them yet.

But what a glorious revelation of God's gracious purpose of love and mercy in the gospel comes to the poor soul in answer to this sad and desolate and fearful cry: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." What wonder is this! Can we be accepted without having done anything to merit it? Yes, indeed. All your works were only to show you that there could be no acceptance in them, or for them. You have felt their insufficiency ever since you had life; and now the end of that system has come. Those foundations "are out of course." The mystery, the rich and glorious mystery, is not that you may be saved, but that you are saved already with an everlasting salvation; not that you are to perform some work which will bring Christ to you, and secure his favor and love, but that he is already in you the hope of glory; and his presence has caused all this trouble on account of sin, all these breathings after a holy life, these hungerings after righteousness. Your sins are already remitted. They have been atoned for by the dear Savior, and will be remembered against you no more forever; and now, because of the remission of sins, which has been sealed upon your conscience, making it a good conscience, your blessed privilege is to be baptized in the name of Jesus. His name is good; yours is worthless. In his name you are worthy, and can be baptized, as an answer of your good conscience.

"What a blessing is this!
What a heaven of bliss!
How unspeakably favored am I!
Gathered into the fold,
With believers enrolled,
With believers to live and to die."

Now you can see the mystery of the blessed answer in the Psalm, "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men." Here is the glory and blessedness of the gospel church. No more fleeing to any mountain for refuge. The Lord is here; his throne is here. Here is all his glorious power; and all this is for his people. He is their refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. What a blessing when we can believe and feel this, and make our supplications unto him at any time and place where the need is felt, and breathe forth praise and thanksgiving and love to his dear and holy name.

I had no thought of writing at such length; but I enjoy the subject as it opens, and would now feel like writing more if time and space would allow. I will say a few words upon the other subject.—See Matthew xxiii. 37; also Luke xiii. 34.

He addressed "Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children." It was that legal dispensation. He does not say, How often would I have gathered you; he is talking about those children that are in bondage there, in bondage under the law, and which that Jerusalem never allows to go free. She cannot give them freedom, for she is herself in bondage with them; and they must be always kept at work, as you, my dear sister, were kept hard at work while you were in that house of bondage. You had life, or you would never have felt the bondage.

"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." When Jesus came in the gospel he gathered all those children out of that old legal house of bondage, and left it desolate. When the living children are gone out of a house it is left desolate; and that house had to come down. But the children find sweet shelter under the shadow of the Almighty. As a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, so the Lord covers these dear children with his feathers, and under his wings they trust.—Psalm xci. 4. This is sweet gospel rest. The chickens were chickens while they were running about in dangerous places as well as when they were gathered under the wings of the mother, but not so safe or comfortable. The children of God who are yet in the old Jerusalem may not know their bondage and danger; but they do not feel satisfied, and can never rest in their works, but keep working harder on that account; and they never get such food as is good for them except as a crumb now and then is picked up by them and greedily eaten, which their companions despise them for, because the self-righteous soul hates and loathes those gospel crumbs, and the honeycomb of truth. But when the Lord's time comes to gather these half-working and unsatisfied souls out of the work-house, what a wonderful change it is with them. Then they can say, We are "satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple." Here I am "No more a stranger or a guest,

But like a child at home."

Now since I have written so much, if you feel that it will be of any comfort to any of the dear family you may send this to the SIGNS.

Your brother affectionately,
SILAS H. DURAND.

SCIO, Ore., Jan. 1, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—"My heart is inditing a good matter;" but I do not know that I will be enabled to put my thoughts on paper. The subject is found in Isaiah xxxiii. 20-22. "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities. Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby. For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King, he will save us."

Dear brethren and sisters, if I could be enabled to place this subject before you with the beauty that has been presented to my mind for a few days past, I feel like you too would be carried to the very top of Pisgah. This seems to me to be the grandest theme that mortal man has ever been enabled to contemplate. Zion and Jerusalem are terms used to direct our minds to the church of the living God. First, the church was represented by the tabernacle in the wilderness. Moses was commanded to go up into the mount Sinai, and was there forty days, at two different times; and while there the Lord gave him the law, and showed him the pattern of the tabernacle, the ark, and all of its furniture and fixtures; also the priestly garments, and everything that the Lord had appointed Israel as a nation. And God said, "See thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount." And Moses was faithful as a servant, and made everything exactly according to the pattern. And the tabernacle was set up in the wilderness, and when they removed camp it was taken down. It had cords attached to it, and stakes were driven into the ground to hold it up. And if any of the cords should be broken, or any of the stakes be removed, the tabernacle would fall. Now let us examine the description of everything, and see if we can discover any predestination in the arrangement of all these things. I am a mechanic, and have never been grumbled at because I perfected my plans before going to work. And yet some good brethren say we harp too much on predestination. All men are predestinarians. No sane man ever went to work at anything without predestinating. Almighty God is here making known to man, in types and shadows, the plans that he intends to work by in the future, on a grander scale. Here were literal structures that were to represent spiritual things. I believe that the cords of the tabernacle represent the love of God to his chosen people, and the stakes represent the laws as laid down by the great Lawgiver to the

POTATOES AND MISSIONS.

THE following article was published in the New York Christian Inquirer, an organ of New School Baptists, in which the writer tells of converting a deacon to the Mission system by referring him to the necessity of cultivating potatoes.

THE USE OF MEANS NECESSARY.

(A Reminiscence.)

BY THE REV. J. G. TUNISON.

WHEN I entered the ministry in 1845 the subject of missions was the dividing question in that part of the State of Ohio where I lived and wrought. I was appointed by the Mount Vernon Association to travel and survey the field and plant interests of the Missionary Baptists over a district that was occupied by Anti-Mission or (as they called themselves, "Old School Baptists.") The work of Judson in Burmah was just becoming known and understood, and by means of a paper known as the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, edited by Gilbert Beebe, of the state of New York, that mission work was bitterly opposed.

The nature and character of the work needed to meet and overcome the opposition will be made clear by the following to me very interesting reminiscence.

At the close of a day's travel and labor I rode up to the house of a good old deacon of one of those Anti-Mission churches located near the head waters of what is known as Owl Creek. Being somewhat acquainted with the deacon I was invited to alight from my horse and tarry for the night. The offer of hospitality was gladly accepted, and after the supper with the family the evening was passed in earnest talk in regard to the then absorbing topic, missions, and especially the work that our beloved Judson was doing in Burmah, then the question as to the use of means and instrumentalities to advance the work of the Lord, to spread the gospel. All these questions were more or less canvassed, but we differed radically.

The deacon's doctrine was, "If God designs to save men he will save them. If he wants the gospel given to the heathen he will give it to them in his good time. He is Almighty and does not depend on us weak creatures to fulfill his purposes." He was what was known then as an "Anti-Means Baptist."

After the night's rest the deacon took me out to show me his farm. He was a model farmer. The harvest had just been gathered, his barns were filled with grain, the corn was ripening under the early Autumn weather, and all the sights and sounds that fire the poet's imagination when in the midst of rural scenes were there in full measure. In the ramble he led me to his potato field. I could but admire the long straight rows, clean from weeds, and the earth around the plants just bursting with the tubers. I expressed my admiration warmly, and asked, "How do you succeed in raising such fine potatoes? I never saw better." He gave me quite an elaborate description of his methods, all consistent and wisely directed to produce the result. I saw he believed in the use of means, and means adapted to the end to be attained. The thought came, Now is my time. So I started off to climb the fence into a wood pasture. He asked, "Where are you going?" I said, "I am going over here to look after another potato field." "No use to go there," he said "the ground has not been ploughed and no seed ever planted there." "But," I answered, "God is Almighty. He does not depend on us weak creatures to accomplish his purposes. If he has purposed to have a field of potatoes over here among the brier patches I shall find the potatoes."

Then I asked, "Deacon, did you make these potatoes grow?" "O no, I prepared the ground, planted the seed and trusted God to make them grow." "But you would not trust God to make them grow without doing everything necessary, as if all depended upon your work. Thus you use means. Now, Deacon, you will not trust God to give you a hill of potatoes without using means, without your own labor, as if all depended upon your fidelity, yet when you have done all God gives the increase; yet you will not give one dollar, and will put forth no effort to send the gospel abroad, or to build up gospel institutions at home, and you say you are trusting in the Almighty to accomplish his purposes."

The deacon was utterly discomfited. His own potato field rose up to testify against his theology. In the most frank and subdued way he came up and gave me his hand. "I see," he said, "what you mean. This is the last controversy between us." From that time on the deacon was ready to co-operate in every movement for the upbuilding of gospel institutions.

The practical argument from his potato patch carried conviction, took away the gates of prejudice, as Samson carried off the gates of Gaza, while these gates had withstood for years against the preaching of press and pulpit. The result of the work was that in a few years the district was dotted all over with active working churches.

While it is by no means material whether the incident above related ever occurred, it is worthy of special notice that neither the so-called "Rev." writer nor the editors of that publication can discern any difference between the cultivation of the sin-cursed soil of earth for the production of potatoes, and the grace of God that has exclusive power to bring salvation to lost sinners. The writer exults in the wonderful victory which he claims to have achieved, more especially because it resulted in securing the powerful co-operation of the mythical deacon, so that "His potato patch carried conviction, took away the gates of prejudice, as Samson carried off the gates of Gaza, while these gates had withstood for years against the preaching of press and pulpit." This victory was rendered more gloriously brilliant from the fact that the vanquished deacon was one of the "Anti-means Baptists" whose doctrine was that "If God designs to save men he will save them." This dreadful heresy was sustained as this witness avers, by a paper known as the "SIGNS OF THE TIMES." It is strange that such a paper could find patronage for its support in a land where potatoes on every farm bore conclusive testimony in condemnation of the doctrine that God is able to do his will without the aid of mighty man. Surely a few bushels of potatoes ought to be sufficient to destroy the evidence of the inspired Scriptures, and establish the glory of modern missions as vastly superior to all the revelation which God has given! If the magicians of Egypt had been able to show a few potatoes to Pharaoh the miracles of Moses could have had no weight with him. He would have seen that God could do nothing without the aid of man. It would have been conclusively demonstrated that there would be no deliverance of the Israelites unless it was affected by their own labor. A potato patch would have readily secured the opening of the two leaved gates of Babylon, and brought the captive Israelites home to their native land. How sad that there were no potatoes to be found for the release of the afflicted and oppressed prisoners! It may be that if there had been a few potatoes at hand, even the entrance of sin and death into the world might have been averted, and Adam might still have been in the garden of Eden. Still more refugent grows the prospect as imagination grasps the possibilities if there had been some master-hand to block the way with potatoes, so that there had been no publication of that terrible SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The amazing power of potatoes, by which that benighted district in Ohio "was dotted all over with active working churches," as this bombastic hero of unscriptural Missions asserts, might even have exterminated all who trust in the power of God to execute his pleasure. That enemy of divine sovereignty who first preached to our mother Eve, needed only a potato patch, and the present aid of this great discoverer to direct its application, and the success of his undertaking would have been assured. What mind can conceive the result if he had been able to devote his energies since that time to his own devices, instead of laboring these six thousand years in the futile effort to establish the very theory which is proven by the adroit use of potatoes? Let all the great and wise of ancient times, including prophets, patriarchs and apostles, hide their diminished heads in utter insignificance, let Solomon bury his face in confusion before this concentration of all wisdom, who has discovered truth superior to inspiration, wisdom above what is written, and glory outshining the light, and all in a well cultivated potato patch! How sad that there were no potatoes available for the instruction of the inspired writers of the Scriptures! Was it for want of knowledge of the efficacy of potatoes that Dr. Judson proposed to make the cross of Christ glorious by hanging upon it the jewelry of the ladies of America? But that was in the early days of this improvement upon the gospel of the Son of God which has been set up as an object of idolatry among Baptists. The avarice of the carnal mind was at that time more ready to appreciate the value of gold than of potatoes! Doubtless had the great leader of Baptist missions been as shrewd as the writer of this article he could have decorated the cross at much less expense by drawing upon the potato field of some stupid deacon of the "Anti-means Baptists." Then the ladies might still have retained their gold chains and necklaces, while the great essential to the success of missions would have been found in the well tilled fields of potatoes for which these deacons had toiled. Surely this brilliant discovery should entitle its author to a seat near the feet of the glorified Judson himself. Just think of the economy of making "potatoes" do the work for which the gold of the ladies of America was required by the inventor of the system of saving the heathen by the use of humanly devised means! It is no wonder that this great discoverer finds the remembrance of his exceeding shrewdness, as he says it is to him, a "very interesting reminiscence."

The writer tells us that this deacon's doctrine was, "If God designs to save men he will save them. If he wants the gospel given to the heathen he will give it to them in his good time. He is almighty and does not depend on us weak creatures to fulfill his purposes." From this gross error he was redeemed not by the omnipotent word of God, but by the irresistible demonstration afforded by that concentration of all wisdom, a "field of potatoes!" If he had not been visited by this eminent apostle of potatoes, that "good old deacon" might still have been laboring under the delusion that all power is in the hand of that God who created the universe by his word. He might even have still believed that "Our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." And that "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places." Then possibly instead of that district being "dotted all over with active working churches," there might have been some of those despised people whose God is the Lord in some parts of that district. Surely Mission worshipers may well say, "Great is the power of Potatoes!"

If the writer had been favored to hear the literal record which God has given to men, he would have known that it was in consequence of the "active working" of our first parents under the direction of the author of that doctrine which denies the perfection of God, that the Lord God said to Adam, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. iii. 17-19. This is the scriptural warrent for laboring for the cultivation of the products of the soil, by which the Lord has ordained that the natural life of man and beast shall be sustained. There is no such labor commanded for the enjoyment of the blessings secured to the saints in Christ Jesus. The difference between the curse of God denounced against the sinner, and the blessing of God by which he hath reconciled us to himself through the grace which is in Christ, is the distinction between the cultivation of potatoes and the salvation of his elect people. There is no promise given for the production of earthly food without that sweat of the face which is the appointed penalty of sin. In that new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, there is no more curse. There "We which have believed do enter into rest." "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Heb. iv. 3, 9. This must always seem strange to those "active working" characters who expect to build a tower whose top shall reach to heaven, by which to secure for themselves and their fellow-sinners salvation from the curse of God. They have never abandoned the device of building with earthly brick and slime, since it was proposed in the land of Shinar.—Gen. xi. 1-9. Babel is the appropriate name for all forms of that working system, for the strife of tongues must ever turn to confusion all such workers of iniquity. They can never agree among themselves except when they are, like Herod and Pilate, made friends for the day that they may unite in crucifying the Son of God. In opposing the truth of salvation by grace all workmongers can agree; but their concord is broken as soon as they begin to divide the reward of their works. Each demands the highest place in their imaginary heaven; and according to their own statements they would not be satisfied in eternal glory unless they found their own devices crowned with success, and their own will done in heaven as they have labored to have it done on earth. How dreadful would it be for the writer of this "reminiscence," if he should find himself less honored in the world of glory than the miserable thief who was taken from the justly merited cross into the paradise of God! Then, it might be as unavailing for him as for the working son in the parable, to indulge in sullen anger.—Luke xv. 28. There is no record that even the power of potatoes alleviated the rage of that faithful and persistent laborer. Could they reconcile this disciple of modern missionism to dwell in the presence of the God of all grace? Are there enough potatoes in Ohio to soothe the irritated heart of this zealous laborer if he should hear the truth that God saves whom he will? "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Where does this inspired decision leave room for the works of men, as devised by modern will-worshippers? Human inventions (and even potatoes) are as incapable of saving guilty sinners as was the gold and silver which was pronounced unavailing by inspired apostles.—1 Peter i. 18.

For the information of such of our readers as have not seen the appeal of Dr. Judson to the ladies of America, we submit the following extract from that letter. After a pathetic description of the miseries of the poor, while the ladies addressed were indulging in jewelry and ribbons, &c., he says, "How many immortal souls have gone down to hell with a lie in their right hand, having never heard of the true God and only Savior!" "Some, yea, many precious souls might have been redeemed from the quenchless fires of hell, where now they must lie and suffer to all eternity, had you not been afraid of being thought unfashionable, and not 'like other folks,' had you not preferred adorning your person and cherishing the most seductive feelings of vanity and pride! O christian sisters, believers in God, in Christ, in an eternal heaven and an eternal hell! and can you hesitate and ask what you shall do? Bedew these ornaments with the tears of contrition; consecrate them to the cause of charity; HANG THEM ON THE CROSS OF YOUR DYING LORD!" Surely that must have been a very hard-hearted deacon who could resist such a touching and forcible appeal as this, and still repose his trust in the crucified Lord who was nailed to the cross for the redemption of his people from death! But that great father of Baptist missions had not discovered the efficacy of a well cultivated field of potatoes! Doubtlessly he could have obtained a large supply of the very finest variety of potatoes as easily as he could prevail on the ladies to give up their jewelry! And then, just to think of the joy which would have beamed over his declining years as the long line of "Anti-means Baptist" deacons brought in their tribute of very fine potatoes, in which the eminent missionary would have seen the praise of human wisdom as vastly superior to the blood of Jesus Christ. While the Lord Jesus saved only his people from their sins, the end of this nineteenth century has revealed in potatoes the power which converts the most stubborn deacon from the belief that "If God designs to save men, he will save them." Let this wonderful conqueror of the truth of revelation have the honor which is due to his victory! Let him be enthroned in a well tilled field of potatoes, and let his converted deacons ascribe glory and honor to him! To those who trust in the un-failing grace of God it is more appropriate that they should unite with the four and twenty elders in saying, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

Let those who recognize the saving virtue of potatoes, even when applied by the wisdom of this luminary of New School theology, proclaim their victories over nameless opposing deacons, and claim for their devices power which they deny to the God of heaven; there is comfort for the afflicted and destitute whose hope is alone in the sovereign grace of God; for it is written, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." They are in no danger even from the assaults of those who trust in potatoes.

UNTIL MARCH

first, 1894, we authorize every subscriber on our list to act as agent for us in procuring new subscribers, and for every new subscriber they send us they may retain one dollar, and send us one dollar. These terms apply only to new subscribers.

For every two new subscribers and three dollars sent us we will enter the two new names on our list for 1894, and credit an old subscriber one year; making three subscriptions for a year for three dollars, and additional new ones may be sent at one dollar each.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK US TO SEND A NEW ONE AND CREDIT AN OLD SUBSCRIBER ONE YEAR FOR TWO DOLLARS, AS WE CANNOT AFFORD TO DO IT.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

BACK NUMBERS.

We have printed several hundred extra copies of number one of this volume, and shall continue to run a surplus of each number until further notice, so that all new names sent in, can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume.

church. The love of God for Zion can never be broken. Because he has loved them with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness he draws them. It was at the door of the tabernacle that the Lord appeared and talked with Moses and Aaron; and the glory of the Lord overshadowed the tabernacle. The high priest entered into the tabernacle to make an offering for his people; and he had to be clothed with the garments described to Moses on the mount, which had the breastplate that bore the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel, which he wore over his heart, that he might always have them in remembrance before him. And he carried their names on his shoulders also, and entered in through the veil into the holy place made with hands, to offer sacrifices for his own sins, and then for the sins of the people. Now this was typical of the offering of our great High Priest. These things continued thus in the tabernacle until they had taken full possession of the land of Canaan, and had built the temple, which was a more permanent edifice, but was itself only another type. This was built on mount Zion. But what man can construct, man can demolish. "Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy." Zion, that beautiful city, was taken by the enemies and destroyed, time and again. It grew and prospered, and reached the noontide of its glory in Solomon's day. It was said at that time that every man dwelt under his own vine and fig-tree, and none was afraid. But the glory began to fade away from that time; and at the time of the preaching of John the Baptist its sun had set, its glory had departed. But there was another sun about to rise, the Sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings. He came to establish something more permanent. "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He came to set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed, but shall stand forever. It shall not be given to another people; but the saints of the Most High shall possess it. "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." He has now set up his kingdom, and has appointed his princes, the apostles. He has given us his laws (set the stakes), and says, "All power is given into my hands; go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." And now he tells his disciples that he that breaketh one of the least of these his commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be the least in the kingdom of heaven. But he that doeth them, shall be great in the kingdom of heaven. This kingdom was fully organized and set up by the King in Zion, and was dedicated on the day of Pentecost, where there were about a hundred and twenty, the number of priests at the dedication of Solomon's temple. And now the Holy Ghost is sent down as a rushing mighty wind, and fills the whole house where they are sitting. The old temple was filled with smoke, so that they could not minister before the Lord. But this one was filled with light as of fire. And now he has created Jerusalem a joy, and Judah a rejoicing. Now old things have passed away, behold, all things are new. He has now established his new covenant with Israel and Judah, and the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams. "For in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert: the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water." And again, "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God." He causes these waters to flow through the city, that the thirsty inhabitants may drink. "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, how that all our fathers did eat of that spiritual meat, and did all drink of that spiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ." "He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst." This is the "broad river" that he will be unto us. Some of the old prophets saw this river issuing out from Jerusalem. There is where it began to flow. There are a great many streams of these waters, but all flow from the great river. They are made to flow in small streams through the ministry. No galley with oars shall be there; no system of salvation by the works of man shall have any place in this kingdom. Salvation by grace, and grace alone, is one of the beautiful streams, and the inhabitants of Zion can drink of no other waters. I have no greater joy than to be able to minister to the inhabitants of Zion some of the consolations of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. He has given us a perfect pattern. "For see," said he to Moses, "thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount." We must not remove any of the stakes. When Israel was commanded to sacrifice a red heifer, a black one would not do. Our Lawgiver said "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

The priests were not allowed to have their garments made partly out of wool and partly out of linen. So we must not try to mix a work and grace system of salvation. The apostle shows that it must be all of works, or all of grace; and he does not leave us to guess which it is; but he tells us plainly, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast; for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." He tell us again, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." But he says, "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in the sight of God." And he does not leave us to guess at how we are justified. "Being justified freely by his grace." "We have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "Sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." Yes, "called with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." And when he calls, his sheep hear. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hands. My Father which gave them me is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hands." When he calls, they answer; there is no disposition to resist the call. "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." "The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust, arise and sit down, O Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for naught, and ye shall be redeemed without money." "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O Zion, city of God." "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." Some of the old prophets have had views of Zion, but the things of earth are too mean to convey to our minds the real beauties of that glorious city. And the glorious Lord is King over the city; and they have no need of the sun, for the glorious Lord himself is a sun and a shield, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. And the city has twelve gates, three on each side. "I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even every one that is called by my name; for I have created them for my glory; yea, I have made them." "The Lord hath appeared unto me of old, saying, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." And it was this everlasting love that brought his only begotten Son into these low grounds of sin and sorrow, for they had sold themselves for naught, and they must be redeemed without money. The cattle upon a thousand hills, or ten thousand rivers of oil, were not sufficient to make the atonement. Nothing short of the life of the great Head and Husband of the bride would satisfy divine justice; and when that offering was made, there is where the broad river began to flow that the prophet saw, a part of which flowed into the former sea, and a part into the hinder sea. The effect of the atonement that was made on Calvary reached back as far as Abel, and embraced all the old patriarchs, and reaches down to the end of time, and embraces all of God's elect in all time. And in this the Lord is unto us a place of broad rivers and streams. The Lord has promised Zion to set watchmen on her walls, that shall not hold their peace day nor night. There was a place along the river that Ezekiel saw for fishermen to spread their nets. Our Lord said to Peter and John, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." The fishermen are not to make fish, but to catch them; and they should be careful not to catch tadpoles. They should use bait too large for a tadpole to swallow. The doctrine of election, predestination, and the final perseverance of the saints, is not relished by the tadpole. It takes only a very little of what a sheep feeds and thrives on to vomit a dog. When there is nothing in the fold but sheep and lambs, and they can have the love of God predominating, as it should, Jerusalem is truly a quiet habitation. But sometimes there gets in one to spy out our liberty, and pretty soon they begin to make trouble; and it is sometimes the case that an old sheep may get to being a little unruly; and occasionally a pastor gets to feeling his importance a little too much. Our Lawgiver has laid down the law (set the stakes), and we should see that they are not removed. If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee; and if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee.

I have often thought that the cords represent the love of God; for his love is from everlasting to everlasting, and cannot be broken. Our love may sometimes grow cold, and we cannot have the love for our brethren that we ought to have, and that often causes trouble. But if we could always feel the love of God in our hearts, we would esteem our brother better than ourselves; and this we are commanded to do. A good pastor has a great deal more to do than merely to preach the gospel. He should watch over the flock, and see that no root of bitterness springs up among them. A sound ministry and good discipline is one of the greatest blessings that a church ever enjoyed. They are not only to feed the sheep, but they must reprove, rebuke, with all long-suffering and doctrine.

I have already hinted at the galley with oars; we see their antitypes all around us. They were propelled by man-power, and the gallant ship sailed by the wind. Men are trying to work their way to heaven, and are inventing new systems continually. There is a new one lately sprung up here in Portland, Oregon, that teaches that they can do as Moses did, fast forty days, and get into direct communication with God. Three of their number have starved themselves to death, and others have been rescued by the authorities, barely in time to save their lives. These things need no comment. They got very uneasy not long ago about one of their crafts in China. But the inhabitants of Zion are not carried about with "every wind of doctrine;" for our good Shepherd has said, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God; speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." "The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance: he found him in a desert land, and in a waste howling wilderness; he led him about and instructed him, and kept him as the apple of his eye." And I would not forget to mention that "They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty, their souls fainted in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses; and he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation." I would remind them that he has said, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." I would tell them to not forget that it is said, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." If there are any that feel poor, I would tell them, "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." "And unto this man will I look, who is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." And if any are afflicted I would say, "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them, and he bare them and carried them all the days of old." If there are any mourners in Zion, I would tell them, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you;" "for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." And if there are any that have had losses and crosses, I would remind them "that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose; for whom he did foreknow, them he did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." "Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we say then to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." And if there are any that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, I would remind them that they that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But I would caution them to be sure not to suffer as evil doers, or as busybodies in other men's matters. I would tell them to crucify the old man with his evil deeds, and to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. I would tell them to offer their body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is their reasonable service. And let us go forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. "For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." I would tell them that they have not come to mount Sinai, that burned with fire, and unto blackness and darkness; but ye are come to mount Zion, the city of the living God, to the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the First-born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. I would tell them that as we have received a kingdom that cannot be moved, let us press forward towards the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. And now I feel like I had better bring this scribble to a close.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
D. BRIDGES.

ROXBURY, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—If one so sinful may be allowed to call you brethren. I am well aware that my subscription for your valuable paper has expired, and as I do not feel willing to be deprived of it I will inclose the amount for another year. What I read in the SIGNS is all the preaching I have, as my hearing is so bad that I cannot hear preaching, nor hear the brethren and sisters speak in our meetings. This is a great affliction, but I wish to be reconciled to it. Of this one thing I am sure, if I am what I have professed to be it is for my good. We read in holy writ, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." But the trouble with me is, Have I been called of God? Do I love God? These are solemn questions with me. If I really and truly love the dear Savior, why do I not follow him more closely? Why am I so cold, indifferent and inactive in his precious cause? When I would do good, evil is present with me, so that I cannot do as I desire to. Not long since I received a sharp rebuke, and it was justly merited. I was feeling very anxious and unreconciled over something about to take place, so much so that I could not sleep; but when the words of the Lord to Peter were put in my mind my feelings were changed in a moment. When Peter asked the Lord, "What shall this man do?" the Lord said to Peter, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." I then felt that it was my duty to follow the Savior, let others do what they may. O that I might ever follow him through evil as well as good report, ever looking to him, who is the author and finisher of the faith of all his saints. He will bring them all off conquerors, and more than conquerors, who loved them and gave himself for them. O what a gift! O what love!

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

Have I ever sounded forth the praises of the dear Redeemer by word or deed? I fear I have not. I have been a professed follower of the dear Savior thirty-nine years, and have never learned to walk straight. Straight and narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it.

Our church has been called to mourn the loss of three of its members within six months. O how we miss them. But we mourn not as those without hope, for we believe they sleep in Jesus. Elder Keene has left us too. His going away, with the loss of our dear brethren and sisters, has left us very lonely. We miss Elder Keene very much. His absence leaves Elder Hubbell with the care of six churches. But I have to remember that the Lord rules. When I can feel and realize that my Father is at the helm, I can then say, All is well. Not long since I got a letter from a dear, lonely and tried sister in which she says, "Do you believe in the predestination of all things, the bad as well as the good?" Now I know that the doctrine of unlimited predestination is a disputed doctrine, and I do not want to say one word to hurt the feelings of one of the dear children of God. I know well what it is to be tried and perplexed in regard to it. If I have ever been taught anything by the Spirit of God it has been the glorious doctrine of the predestination of all things by him who rules and controls everything, and has a perfect right so to do. It seems to me that the case of Joseph going into Egypt is a clear demonstration of the truth of the predestinating purpose of Almighty God. Joseph told his brethren that God sent him there to preserve their lives. Well, did God send him and yet have no hand in the way and manner that he went? I think it all took place just according to the will and purpose of Jehovah.

I must come to a close. I hope you will throw the mantle of charity over all imperfections; and if I have written anything to hurt the feelings of one of the precious ones, may God forgive me. My heart's desire is that you may long be spared to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

PEACE BALLARD.

FORT BRANCH, Ind., Dec. 25, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As my subscription for the SIGNS has expired, and not feeling like I could very well do without it, I send for it another year; for it certainly contains, if I know anything about the truth, food to the hungry soul and saints of God. I have read it with interest the past year, and hope its able correspondents will continue to fill its columns with the deep things of God. Some of our people seem to think it wrong to write or speak on those things which they say are out of our reach or beyond our comprehension. Yet Paul spoke in a mystery; that is, of things he deemed no doubt absolutely true, yet not knowing just why they were true. Also the prophets, looking through a clouded sky, prophesied of the Savior in a mystery; and the angels desired to know the true manner of all they foreshadowed; and it has all proved to us to be plain as well as true. Again, it is said that the Spirit searcheth the deep things of God. From this and other expressions I conclude that if we possess the Spirit of God we will search after the deep things concerning salvation. Therefore I trust the contributors will write on and publish the truth in the plain old-fashioned way; that they may be able to say, when they have wound up their ball of time, like Paul the aged, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

I hope you will succeed in getting a sufficient number of subscribers to send the SIGNS to the children for one dollar per year; for it contains bread to the children of God, as natural bread is to a hungry man.

Your brother, I hope, in Christ,
N. TOMLINSON.

By the same, on Jan. 10th, 1894, at the house of the bride's parents, near Cley Grange, Md., Mr. James J. Givens and Miss Sallie Tilyman.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Deacon David Richards, of Delphi, N. Y., died on Dec. 9th, 1893, upwards of 80 years old.

He had been a member of the Old School or Primitive Baptist Church since March 2d, 1856, and was a consistent and devoted member all those years, through all their conflicts and trials, as well as their joys, until the last four years, when it pleased the Lord to so impair his mind that he seemed to sense but little of his surroundings; also he had been blind for several years, and hence was a great care to his devoted wife and son, who did all they could to care for the afflicted brother. May our dear aged sister realize the all-sustaining power of God's grace in her loneliness; and may he be a husband to the widow, and a father to the orphan son and daughter, for his name's sake.

Your brother,

D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, Pa.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is with deep sorrow and a sympathizing heart that I seat myself to comply with the request of our bereaved sister, Sadie Carter, in trying to write a notice of the death of her husband, Deacon G. D. Carter, who was born March 30th, 1844, and departed this life Dec. 15th, 1893, making his stay on earth 49 years, 8 months and 15 days.

Among all those of my extensive acquaintance I have known none that lived his profession nearer than brother Carter. As a citizen he was a peace-loving man, and was loved by all who knew him. He united with the church at Shoal Creek, Newton Co., Ga., in 1872, and was baptized by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, of which he remained a faithful, consistent member until his death. He was united in marriage not far from the time that he joined the church to Miss Sadie Dodson. A kinder husband never lived; also a loving father. O that the worthy example may be remembered by all, and may his dear children never act so as to reflect a stain on his almost spotless life, is the prayer of one who wishes them well. I never had a closer bosom friend in all my life, nor one whom I loved more dearly. When the churches in Kentucky called for my services, for two years I was undecided in my mind what to do. When I would meet with brother Grant (as he was familiarly called) it always touched my heart, and I was often overcome in looking at his calm and tearful face as he would inquire if I were going to move to Kentucky. In all troubles in the church he was calm and composed, never rendering railing for railing, but manifested as much of the Spirit of Christ, who when he was reviled, reviled not again; as any man on earth perhaps.

He leaves a wife and five children, together with many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. I was providentially favored to arrive at his house on Wednesday evening before his death, and had some conversation with him. He talked sweetly, calmly and composedly. He gently fell asleep in Jesus, to awake in his likeness in the resurrection. May the dear Redeemer fill his absence by showing our sister, with her children, that he is a father to the fatherless and a judge of the widow, is the prayer of one who wishes them well.

J. G. EUBANKS.

CAMPBELLSBURGH, Ky., Jan. 9, 1894.

Catharine James was born March 1st, 1823, in Graves Co., Ky., and died Dec. 9th, 1893, at her home in Boone Co., Ark.

Her maiden name was Wright. She was left an orphan when quite young, being bereft of both her parents. Being the youngest of her father's family, she moved with her married sister to Holly Springs, Miss., and thence to Tippah Co., Miss. She was married to Newberry James on Jan. 9th, 1840. To this union were born ten children (six sons and four daughters), two of whom (one son and one daughter) preceded her to the grave. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Regular Primitive Baptist Church at New Salem, Tippah Co., Miss., by her pastor, Elder Miles B. Moore, in the year 1853, where she remained a humble member and much enjoyed the company and fellowship of the saints until the autumn of 1866, when she moved with her husband to then Carroll Co., now Boone Co., Ark. In 1869 she united with the New Hope Church, Boone Co., Ark., by letter. In October, 1889, she was one of the constituents of the Little Hope Church of Predestinarian Baptists, where she remained until called home.

She had been afflicted for years. Her last sufferings were intense, but were borne calmly, with sweet resignation to the Master's will. Her aged husband and all her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were around her bedside during her last hours, except one daughter and her family, who lived at too remote a distance to be summoned. Her pastor arrived at the house of mourning on the morning of her interment, and spoke words of comfort to the many sorrowing relatives and friends, reading and singing one of her favorite hymns, found in Beebe's Collection, "Keep silence, all created things," &c., and offering solemn prayer; after which her remains were borne to the old cemetery and laid beside her daughter. Her sorrowing husband and children have the sincere sympathy of the community, and especially the church and the unworthy writer, her pastor.

I have been intimately acquainted with the subject of this notice for ten or twelve years. She was as orderly-walking a woman as I was ever acquainted with. Her seat was never vacant at her church meetings unless sickness prevented her. She was a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and a dear lover of the doctrine advocated in the same. It was often said of her and her aged husband by other orders of people, as well as the Baptists, that they were worthy examples for people to follow. She loved to read the obituaries in the SIGNS, and liked to see them sent by the pastor of the church to which they belonged. May the God of all grace comfort all the bereaved, is the prayer of the unworthy writer.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PINSONFORK, Ky., Dec. 29, 1893.

ELDER ROBERT BLAIR—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Since I saw you at the meeting at the Raccoon Church I have had some thoughts about the text you asked me to write about, and have concluded to suggest a few of them to you for your consideration, hoping the Lord will lead my mind to write something in connection with this deep and profound subject that will be of some comfort to you.

If I remember aright, your request was for me to write to you what I believed the flood was a type of; that is, the flood generally known as Noah's flood. This is a serious undertaking for me, a poor weakling, who am less than the least of all saints; for I have long since learned that oftentimes I have mistaken the meaning of Scripture, and have generally found it easier to tell what a Scripture does not mean than what it does mean. Yet I cannot, I dare not, say but what I believe the Lord has revealed to me some things contained in his written word (the Bible), for the express purpose of comforting some of his little ones through my weakness; and these things sometimes work death (mortification) in us, but life (consolation) in them.

Forasmuch then as you have requested my views of the above named subject I cannot conscientiously withhold them. In giving you an outline of what I believe the flood was a type of I will be necessarily compelled to speak of some other points in connection therewith, for they are so interwoven that I cannot speak of one without the others; especially Noah, the ark, and those who were drowned in the flood.

"And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation."—Gen. vii. 1. The Bible plainly informs us that when men began to multiply on the earth they were very wicked, and the nearer the time drew on for their destruction the more wickedly they acted; and in the same like manner they are doing nowadays, which causes me to believe that the time is not far hence when the now fast-ripening wicked will be reaped down, and the wrath of God cease in their destruction. And among their wickedness, "The sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."—Gen. vi. 2.

And when these daughters of men bare children unto these sons of God, they were mighty men, even giants. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." The phrase, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth," leads our minds to the foreknowledge of God, who in his infinite wisdom and knowledge saw all the wickedness of man from the beginning to the end of the world, with all the baneful influence and direful effects of sin, with the final result of every evil thought or deed. "The end of all flesh is come before me."—Gen. vi. 13. As God devised the construction of the literal ark, with the order, form and end thereof, which invariably answered the end designed, which was the salvation of Noah and all his house (that is the time or common salvation), it saved them from the deluge, the flood of waters; while the many millions were drowned. This gives the idea of the everlasting ark or covenant, ordered in all things and sure, which as completely and effectually saved all the chosen in Christ with an everlasting salvation. As this narrative, as well as all the other Scripture, is upon the principle of absolute predestination, I will cite you to two verses before I pass to consider the subject more directly. "And yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth."—Gen. vii. 4. "And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it [bow or covenant], that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth."—Gen. ix. 16. It is obvious from this last quoted text that an everlasting covenant not only exists between God and his chosen people, but also between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth. No wonder that it is written, that the hairs of your head are all numbered, and not a sparrow can fall to the ground without God, or his predestination.

Noah and his family I shall represent as a type of Christ and his family, and the ark as a type of baptism, which I may comment on in that light before I close. In the figure, Noah, a type of Christ as the head of his family, leads them into the ark; and God shut them in secure from all danger, until the flood destroyed the world of the ungodly; and this type or shadow leads our minds to the substance, the covenant of everlasting love, or ark of eternal security, in which Christ, the head and representative of all his family, the election of grace, leads or represents them in this well ordered covenant, which was signed, sealed and ratified, and in all things ordered well, and engraven with the eternal pen in legible characters; so "he may run that readeth," and say that "all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him [the beast], whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world."—Rev. xiii. 8.

Now, God in separating Noah and his family from the unnumbered millions, and calling them into the ark, gives us the idea of one of the plainest phases of eternal, personal and unconditional election in the Bible. Those who were not chosen were left to be submerged in the flood of waters. There was no ark prepared for them; hence there was no salvation for them, but irretrievable destruction, which is typical of the everlasting destruction of all who were not chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began. This anti-typical flood of divine justice comes upon all the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction. God does not fit (prepare) them to destruction by making them do wickedly, or by making them worse, but by separating the precious from the vile—the elect from the non-elect. Not until God separated and called the elect vessels of mercy (Noah and his family) into the prepared ark of safety, were these non-elect antediluvians fitted or ready for their overthrow or destruction in the mighty waters. "God spared not the old world [the people outside of the ark], but saved Noah, the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness [not works], bringing in the flood upon the world [the people outside of the ark] of the ungodly," or non-elect. In reading the sixteenth chapter of Numbers we see the same process of fitting the wicked for destruction. "Separate yourselves from this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment." Also see the narrative of Lot and his family.—Luke xvii. 29. "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all." Poor, ungodly man does not have to do wickedly in order to be wicked, or to be fitted to destruction. No, for he is already wicked, justly condemned, and the wrath of God abideth on him. Yes, "and their judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." God's judgments are a great deep. Yes, they are commensurate with his being. So it is evident that God does not add badness to the non-elect, or vessels of wrath, to fit them for destruction, but by separating his loved ones from among them, whom he hath afore prepared unto glory, and predestinated them to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made them accepted (received) in the Beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of grace. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" Arminians insist that God chooses individuals because they obey, or because they fear God and work righteousness. "But in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him;" the same as saying, is received of him, or made accepted in the Beloved. He does not fear God and work righteousness in order to be received, but because he is received. This is the reason that Noah feared God and worked righteousness, and was perfect in his generations. He was one of the Lord's chosen ones, one of the election of grace, and his fearing God and working righteousness was an evidence that he was elected or chosen in Christ. Hence God manifested this choice more plainly by drawing the visible lines of eternal election around him and his family, by calling them into the ark, manifestly separating them from the world of the ungodly, or non-elect. Dear brother, the question may arise in your mind, If the ark is a type of the covenant of grace, why did it embrace the beasts and creeping things of every species? I would only say that it was in God's arrangement of things, in which he declared the end from the beginning, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." And before him was the end of all flesh, and the destiny of all worlds, beings and things. I say, this thrice holy and all wise Creator of all things was not unmindful of his children, but absolutely secured everything necessary for them in time and in eternity. His foreknowledge saw it all, and his predestinating hand metes it out to them according to his own good will and pleasure. The ark was three stories high, with its different departments, which may serve to illustrate the provisions in the covenant of everlasting love and assured mercies; or these things may represent God's chosen people in every nation, kindred, tongue and people, as was revealed to the apostle Peter in the "great sheet, knit at the four corners, wherein were all manner of four footed beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air."—Acts x. 12. So you will see that I believe Noah was a type of Christ, the ark a type of the covenant of eternal redemption and salvation through Christ Jesus, and Noah's family a type of the election of grace, chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world; and those who were passed by and left out of the ark, and perished in the flood, were a type of all the non-elect, or vessels of wrath fitted to destruction; and the flood was a type of the billows of divine wrath, which must overwhelm and destroy with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord all who were not chosen in Christ, the ark of eternal security. I am well aware that these things present a striking similarity to our experience now, to the obedience and disobedience of God's people, and the flood to that flood of false doctrine in which the Lord's disobedient children are submerged and drowned in despair. But one fatal objection to this exposition of the subject is, that those who were left out of the ark were not commanded or exhorted to come into the ark, or at least I have not noticed it if they were. This choice and calling were sovereign; there was no consulting creatures as to their choice, whether or no they would come into the ark and be saved, or stay out and be lost.

I will now close, and leave these thoughts with you, my dear brother; and if you find in them a crumb of comfort, and think there is any comfort in them for the Lord's little ones generally, you may send them to brethren Beebe. If you do so, I shall expect them to make all necessary corrections before they give them a place in the old, reliable SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Yours in hope of eternal life through Christ,

W. J. MAY.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send this letter to you for publication, if you shall deem it worthy a place in your paper. If you consign it to the waste-basket it will be all right with me.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I feel blest in being thus permitted to address the dear people of God. I trust it is to the praise of his glory that he has granted me the sweet privilege of being numbered among his poor and afflicted people in this world. It is a great pleasure to me to read the letters in the SIGNS from the beloved brethren and sisters, and for some time I have felt, after reading them, that I would love to write if I could be sure for one moment that anything I might say would afford half the comfort to one person who loves the truth as it is in Jesus that I hope I have received. I know that the spirit of the prince of the power of the air can never prompt a poor sinner saved by grace to try to tell to the people of God how they hope the Lord has led them out of great darkness into his marvelous light. At the request of Elder Curry I feel encouraged to try. It seems to me that in trying to tell how the Lord has dealt with me I ought to begin with my earliest recollections; for it is said in the Scriptures that he loved us while we were yet dead in sins; and as I look backward over the past years I can see how he has showered blessings upon me day after day, giving me the love of earthly parents to smooth the rugged pathway of life, and led me safely through great trials, and dangers seen and unseen, while yet I knew him not. I can scarcely tell when I first began to feel the weight of sin in my heart, nor can I remember a time when I did not have a desire to be good. When revival meetings were held by the church in the little village near my home I would often attend them; and when they would tell of God's love to all the world, and how all might be saved if they would repent and have faith, I would feel that I was very bad, and would weep about it. I had a dear friend who was so anxious about my welfare that she would ask me at some time during each revival if I was not ready to join the church. My answer would always be, "No, I am not good enough." So the years passed without my being much concerned about myself, except at those times, until about eight years ago, while they were holding a meeting. I then felt the burden of my sins as never before. I attended the meetings regularly, but the preaching did me no good. The minister told us to repent, believe, exercise faith and join the church; that anyone could enjoy religion who desired to. How could I, a poor wretch, burdened with a load of sin, accomplish all that? I could not even pray. I would take the Bible after the meetings and read for myself, and tried to understand it, but found no relief, until one evening on returning home distressed, I took the Bible and let it fall open where it would, when these precious words were revealed to me, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he restoreth my soul." O how sweet and precious those words were to me. I felt comforted for a while, but my burden was not removed. Some nights afterward, in a vision which I had for two nights in succession, Jesus appeared to me as nailed to the cross, helpless, bleeding, crucified. I beheld his pierced and bleeding side, and the cruel nails tearing the tender flesh of his sacred hands and feet. He was wounded for my transgressions, and I was made to feel that it was done for me. I awoke weeping, and both times as I awoke the clock was striking twelve. The next evening when I entered the meeting the house seemed filled with a brightness far greater than the light of lamps, and I was drawn to confess what a dear Savior I had found. My burden seemed all gone; but it was not my appointed time.

I united with the New Light Church on the following Sunday. I did not tell what great things the Lord had done for me, and they did not require it. They gave me the Bible as my guide to follow as my conscience might dictate, and received me into their fellowship before I was baptized. They were willing to sprinkle me if I desired it. Along with all this I was to work out my own salvation, tell of my own good works in the meetings, and teach the young people in the Sunday School how to know their Lord. O what a Lord! He could not save anyone unless they were willing. I did not understand all this as I see it now. I was blinded for seven years by the works of the creature; but God our Savior, who is mighty to save all those who are his, has said, "I will bring the blind by a way that they know not." I attended the meeting and Sunday School regularly, taught a class of young ladies for two years, and did my best to help in their work; but I was never able to see any good that I had done. I was not able to get far enough away from the foot of the cross. I think I entertained a hope all the while that I might attain to some degree the goodness which others seemed to possess; but then I would have lost sight of the cross and the Savior's finished work entirely, if I now see by the true light. Some three years ago this winter I heard for the first time since childhood an Old Baptist sermon, and the blessed Jesus who came to me at midnight was brought to view in that sermon in all his beauty, as I never before saw him through preaching; and yet I left the meeting vowing I never would go to an Old Baptist meeting again, because the preacher ridiculed the revivals and other works of all other denominations. I thought he was not charitable. I did not yet understand this beautiful doctrine of salvation by grace, which the Lord will deliver through his apostles to the saints in all the world until the end of time. I hear the voice of my Beloved saying, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

In the summer of 1892 I attended a funeral preached by the same minister I have just spoken of. He read the second chapter of Ephesians, and preached a wonderful sermon, I thought, and from that time my mind was led to dwell upon a portion of that chapter, from the fourth to the eleventh verse. I loved especially to repeat to myself the eighth and ninth verses. Another thought expressed in the sermon impressed me very much, which was this, "It is not so much what a man's life is in this world, but whether he knows God or not." I had never been led to think in that line. It seemed a hard saying, but I kept asking myself over and over again, "Is it the truth? Is it not the truth?" The answer would come, "Yes it is the truth, but will it do to preach that kind of doctrine to some individuals?" "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his."—2 Tim. ii. 19. Since that time I have had a desire to attend Old Baptist meeting. I have attended the church at Lebanon, and also at Clear Creek, where my dear grandfather was a faithful member since my earliest recollection, and until his death, whenever I could. Since early in the summer of 1893 I have been fully convinced that the Old Baptists are the people of God, the true Israel, and that I had confessed my Savior in a so-called church which bore all the marks of Babylon as described in the Bible. But how could I leave it when my husband and daughter were both there? Jesus says, "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me."—Matt. x. 37.

I attended meeting on the second Sunday in July. The fifty-fifth chapter of Isaiah was read for our instruction. The text was the sixth and seventh verses. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found" kept ringing in my ears all the way home. The Lord was not to be found in the church where my name was written, and what must I do? On reaching home I took the Bible and let it open where it would. That is my way of reading it. It opened to the eighteenth chapter of Revelation, where the angel "cried with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen," &c. "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." From that time on I found neither peace nor rest until it was made plain to me that I must obey and come out of Babylon. "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace. The mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands." The church at Clear Creek seemed the right place for me, and I went there on the first Saturday in September to tell that little band how the Lord had led me to love his people, and to ask for a place among them. But the minister was not there, and I went home feeling that it must be because I was unworthy of a place among them. I thought if I died before the next meeting, that would prove it; but thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, I was allowed to be present, and received strength to testify of God's wonderful love to the children of men. I was baptized on the following day, Sunday, October 1st, 1893, by Elder Cornell. How beautiful the place of baptism was, so calm and peaceful. There appeared to me a halo about everything. I thought how sweet it was to obey the commands of Jesus, to go down into the watery grave with him, and to arise in newness of life. I then felt that I could never be cast down again; but O how little we know of the battles before us, who have been numbered among God's humble poor. But blessed be the Lord, "who teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight," says the sweet psalmist of Israel. I have been cast down, as it were, to the mouth of the pit, beset with foes without and within. I am sometimes ready to cry out, "Is his mercy clean gone from me?" "Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, because of mine enemies; make thy way straight before my face." "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."

I am, I hope, your sister in Christ,
EVA R. W. MORRIS.

SNAP FINGER, Ga., Jan. 8, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—By permission of our beloved sister, Attie A. Curtis, I forward you a letter written by her. Will you publish it in the SIGNS? She seems to be firmly established in the truth as it is in Jesus, and in all her letters gives all praise to him who is the Author and Finisher of her faith for what he has done for her. May the God of all comfort ever guide, direct, strengthen, console and comfort her, is my sincere wish.

Please allow me to say to sister Boyd that I fully indorse every word written in her letter which appeared in the SIGNS.

ARMINDA L. DULIN.

BATH, Maine, Dec. 12, 1893.

MY DEAR SISTER DULIN:—I received your letter some time ago, and must assure you it gave me much pleasure to read it. We are having lovely winter weather here, and a nice snow storm is the order of exercise to-day. I am shut in, and yet I take many journies with my pen. When I can write of the fullness treasured up in Jesus I have a delightful time. But when darkness settles upon me there is such a sadness, such a longing for deliverance, I can only cry unto the Lord for help. Sometimes my distress is so great, my strength completely gone, that I do not realize there is a cry in my heart unto the Lord. I feel I have fallen for the last time, and shall certainly be destroyed; that his mercy is clean gone forever. But when it is his will to lift upon me the light of his countenance, I am made to see all this darkness, all this terrible fear, dwells in the flesh. He remains the same unchangable God. It was Jesus who led captivity captive, and overcame every enemy, even death. When faith assures me of these things I mount up with wings as eagles, I run and am not weary, I walk and do not faint. Even if the assurance does last but a few seconds of time, it is so beautiful, so full of comfort, my heart overflows with a song of praise to God which he puts into my mouth. It has been so sweetly felt, so triumphantly sung, since the evidence of sins forgiven and the love of God was shed abroad in my heart, my poor, sinful self is lost sight of for a time. My mind was stayed on God, and I had perfect peace. But it was done in such a way that I knew no praise was mine. It was the work of God. I felt to say with David, "For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands." It is truly, dear sister, "a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High: to shew forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night." I have been blessed all the days of my life. I can have no confidence in the flesh. And when it is the will of God to bring me low, I do desire to wait patiently. But oftentimes I seem like a child whose parents withhold something it wishes for very much; and although it strives and desires to be obedient, yet cannot help crying for it. I cannot find any patience, any submission, in the flesh; and I do feel glad that it is so. You speak about prayer being answered. Twice in my life I have felt prayer answered while upon bended knee. I will call it a direct answer to my heart's desire. At other times, dear sister, prayer has been answered, and I did not seem to see it until afterward. There is this blessed truth, that if we ask anything in the name of Jesus it will be, "Thy will, not mine, be done." The prayer will surely be answered in God's own time and way. There is surely a comfort in the words of David, "My times are in thy hand." As I read of the comfort they had been to you, my mind went back to the meeting at North Berwick this year, and the visit to a dear brother who has since passed away. You have seen his name in the SIGNS—brother Lewis Butler. I knew before I saw him that he could not get well, and I had felt a dread in looking upon his wasted form; but when I entered the room it seemed as if his countenance shone with the same joy that I had felt while Elders Keene and Chick had been preaching of the power, love and goodness of God. I enjoyed listening to the sure testimony he gave of the hope which had been wrought in him by the power of God, and it was triumphing over death. The outward man was fast perishing, and the inward man was renewed. Brother Butler asked Elder Chick to read the Psalm containing these words, "My times are in thy hands;" also, "The Lord is my shepherd." I do not think I can ever forget the spiritual strength which was given me while in that room. The Lord was good to Elder Keene, and gave him many comforting things to say in his prayer. These words have been in my mind many times since, and if I only had the ability to express the beauty I have seen and felt in them you would enjoy reading this letter more than you will. "For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." It is impossible to be carried about by any wind of doctrine when the heart is established with grace. We rejoice because Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. We love to hear the precious name of Jesus exalted above every name which is named. We shall not be disturbed at predestination, election, foreordination, nor any point of doctrine; for there will be an abiding trust in God, who rules and reigns, who controls every event, who does all things after the counsel of his own will, and is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. Jesus did not lay down the work of saving his people until it was all finished, all complete. There never was a time and place left for man to help the Lord; but there was a time and place when man transgressed the law of God, and Jesus was the only one who could redeem them from the curse of the law. I do rejoice at times at the knowledge of being a sinner; at feeling such an assurance that no good thing can be found dwelling in my flesh; at being unable to bring back happy seasons through which I have passed; at not being able to see the beauty again in some portion of Scripture or a favorite hymn; because it teaches me, yes, it establishes my heart with grace. I see all I need treasured up in Jesus, and it is of his fullness we have all received, and "grace for grace;" not grace for works.

I am not answering your letter at all as it should be; but if I throw this aside and try again I know I cannot do any better, so I shall have to send it, hoping your love will cover all faults. How good it is that when the love of God is in exercise in our hearts we can see no failings in our brethren. We may be sure if we find ourselves finding any fault with those we love in the truth, that the works of the flesh are ruling us, and not the fruit of the Spirit. I am glad you enjoyed your association, and hope the Lord will lead your mind into the truth so you will have many sermons all alone. He will comfort and sustain you in every trial and sorrow; and my prayer is that he will establish your heart with grace. Let me hear from you through the SIGNS as well as by private letter. I hope this will not weary you so you will not want to write to me. My parents send love to you and your dear mother. Mine is all through the letter. May God make us realize that we cannot flee from his presence, is the desire of your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life,

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Ever since I returned from the East I have had a desire to write you; but I am such a vile, corrupt sinner, I feel it almost a sin for me to attempt to write a child of grace. Nothing but the fruit of the Spirit is edifying to the person that is born of the Spirit; and all the productions of my mind are fleshy. I live so much (if not all the time) after the flesh; and "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." Death is a separation; and they that live after the flesh are separated from all spiritual knowledge and understanding, and eat not of the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, &c. I certainly experience this separation, for most of my time I walk in darkness, my heart so hard I cannot mourn, my mind set on things beneath, and I have no power to place my affection higher. As the poet says,

"I mourn because I cannot mourn;
I weep because I cannot weep."

I desire to turn unto the Lord and walk in his judgments, but I have no power; for my iniquities like the wind carry me away. To will with me is present, but how to perform that which is good I find not. I long to be still and know that he is God; but my rebellious, wicked mind cannot rest, and is continually seeking out some invention. I have often learned there is no room for confidence in the flesh, but still I find myself trusting in it. Every time we go down to the sea in ships, and the Lord commandeth the stormy wind to lift up the waves thereof, we use every effort to guide our vessel with our own strength. But when our strength all fails, and we reel to and fro, staggering like a drunken man, and are at our wits' end, then we cry unto the Lord, and he delivers us out of our distresses. We never call on him till we reach our wit's end. He is our last resort. And how strange that we never learn to cease trusting in the flesh; or at least I do not. I have thought, after the Lord has delivered me out of my distress, the next time I would cry unto him as soon as the storm arose, and not do all this toiling for naught. For naught? No, it is not for naught. God has a grand purpose in it. It is in this we are taught our weakness. Here we

PERVERTED SCRIPTURES.

FROM time to time inquiries are received from those who have been bewildered by the adversaries of the doctrine of Christ, in which our views are requested on detached portions of the inspired record which are commonly cited as being inconsistent with the unlimited sovereignty of God. While the subjects of divine grace and electing love must know that there can be no conflict in the testimony of divine truth, they are sometimes unable to see the perfect harmony of every word of that record which God has given for their instruction and comfort. Indeed, they are so dependent upon the guidance of the Spirit that they cannot by searching find out the first principle of the gospel of their own salvation. The adversary takes advantage of this conscious weakness of the believer, presenting his deceptive suggestions in the very words of Scripture, but always misconstruing and misapplying the language so as to change its meaning; and thus he annoys and perplexes those whom he cannot destroy. In concealing his cruel devices under the letter of inspired language he readily deceives the natural judgment of the saints; and if they were left to their own strength they would fall before such artful devices. But even when they can see no way in which to refute such assaults upon the very foundation of their hope, they are still kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation even from the strongest delusions and temptations of Satan. In compliance with many requests we will refer to some of the more common instances of texts which are frequently wrested by the enemies of the peace of the saints.

In the announcement of the destruction of the world by water, it is written, "And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." This was the exact time appointed for the flood to come upon the condemned race of Adam; and there was no proposition that the deluge might be averted by the repentance of the ungodly world. There was no authority given to Noah to try to persuade the wicked to reform, or to unite with him in building the ark. Their destruction was not more inevitable when the flood came upon them than when God gave the commandment to Noah. In that destruction was the certain triumph of righteousness, and the manifestation of divine condemnation against the ungodly world. The manner in which it repented the Lord that he had made man, as declared in the following context, is explained in the record of that destruction which he brought upon them. It must be remembered that the changing emotions of men do not apply to the immutable God. When such changes seem to be implied in the letter of the Scriptures it must be taken in connection with the explanation given in the same inspired testimony. Thus the signification of the statement in this chapter is clearly expressed by their utter overthrow in the deluge which swept the guilty sinners from the earth which they had defiled with their abominations. Even if the distorted view of this text were granted, as claimed by the enemies of the sovereignty of God, the only result would be that the testimony of the Scriptures would be made to contradict itself, so that the whole revelation must be rejected as false. With this object the first enemy denied the truth of what God said to our parents in the garden. It is manifest that those who are contending for the same false doctrine are governed by the same principle of enmity against God. If it could be established that any event could have come to pass without the knowledge and power of God, that fact would forever destroy the very foundation on which rests the hope of every saint. If any depth of sin could cause the God of grace to withdraw his love from his chosen people, then every conscious sinner must despair; for each feels himself the chief of sinners. For the comfort of such penitent characters it is written, "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us; much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him."—Rom. v. 8, 9. The strife to which the text quoted refers is evidently that enmity of the carnal man against the righteousness of God, which enmity was the cause of the turning of man to destruction as decreed in the text.

It is very common for the natural world to be called upon to choose this day whether they will serve the Lord or some other power; and the words of Joshua are cited as authority for such appeals. By reference to the last chapter of Joshua it will be seen that he did not present even to Israel any such choice. After positively commanding them to put away their false gods, and to serve the Lord, he says to them, "And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose ye this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." When they said that they would serve the Lord, Joshua said unto his people, "Ye cannot serve the Lord; for he is a holy God; he is a jealous God; he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins." Having rebelled against the Lord, it was not material whom they served. Certainly they were not called upon to choose the service which seemed evil unto them, and which they could not render. Much less can this choice be submitted to the unbelieving world of those who neither have the knowledge nor the love of God.

In the same way the message which the Lord sent to the house of Israel is wrested to make it apply to the world of mankind. Yet it is definitely addressed to those to whom it is exclusively applicable. "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"—Ezek. xxxiii. 11. No argument is required to show that this exhortation is misapplied whenever it is addressed to any others except those to whom it is limited in this very sentence. It should be observed, however, that under the legal covenant obedience to the law as enjoined upon Israel was said to be their life; and disobedience was in the same sense death to them. Neither in this text nor in any other portion of that covenant was either eternal life or eternal death intended when the words "life" and "death" were used. The people to whom the Sinai law was given were already under the condemnation of that law which required their life, before they received the law which was given by the hand of Moses. Every blessing promised the obedient Israelite was temporal and earthly; and every curse upon the disobedient was an earthly calamity. So, in this message by Ezekiel, as in all the messages sent them by other inspired servants of God, they were admonished to obedience in consideration of the rewards and penalties provided in that law which God had given for their guidance. They could not claim that they were moved to violate the commandments of the Lord by the desire to please him, since every transgression was in open defiance of his revealed will; neither was there any excuse for their rebellion in their plea of subjection to the power of their sins, as stated in the verse preceding that quoted. This is the truth contained in all the conclusive demonstration given in the connection of this prophetic argument. Under this limitation to its proper application, there is no discrepancy between this prophecy and all the rest of the inspired testimony of Jesus. The truth of God is one harmonious whole, while all false doctrines are inconsistent with themselves and with the truth.

Much is said of "the invitations of the gospel," which are supposed to be offered to the world of sinners, and upon their acceptance or rejection the salvation of sinners is represented as depending. In this erroneous theory is involved the utter exclusion of divine grace from the system of salvation. If the sinner has merited salvation by compliance with the terms proposed, he has the right to demand the reward due to his action. It is his fairly earned wages. There is no more divine grace in it than in the payment of any just debt. But if he has rejected the offered terms, it follows that he is not condemned as the just penalty of his sins, but that he perishes because of that mistaken judgment by which he failed to appreciate the great advantage of accepting the proffered terms of salvation. Thus by this absurd doctrine justice also, as well as grace, is excluded from the system of salvation. Surely no lover of truth and holiness could find comfort in such desecration of the perfection of God. But aside from the manifest absurdity of this theory, it cannot be sustained by a single expression of the inspired Scriptures. In vain may the whole volume of inspiration be searched to find any intimation of even one offer of salvation for sinners, either conditional or unconditional. As well might our Lord at the grave of Lazarus have proposed to give life to its dead occupant if he would signify his desire for it, as to offer to dead sinners eternal life on the same condition. Only by his own life-giving word does the Son of God quicken whom he will. Until he gives them life, sinners are as incapable of any spiritual emotion as was the dead Lazarus incapable of natural action. Invitations to the dead could be nothing but mockery. Even among men there can be no penalty attached to the rejection of an invitation. Freedom to accept or reject its proposal is necessary to the very nature of an invitation. Thus the will of God is represented as subject to the will of the sinner whom he invites to accept salvation. This is too absurd for argument. No expression of Scripture can authorize such a doctrine as subjects the will of God to the choice of the sinner. Consequently there can be no such thing as an invitation from God to be accepted or rejected by the guilty sinner.

In every expression where the Lord speaks to the children of men, the authority of God gives the weight of an express and positive command to words which might be only entreaty or request when spoken by an inferior to a superior, or by a man to his equal. This fact will readily determine the correct signification of those portions of the language of Jesus which are commonly called offers of salvation. In every case it will be seen that he particularly describes the character to whom he speaks. To the weary and heavy laden he says, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." This commandment brings every one of those designated, as he says again, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." In the same connection he says, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." This includes every one described in the commandment cited. None can fail to come while the power of God is sufficient to maintain his own truth. They are led by the Spirit, and made willing by the power of that God who has chosen them in Christ Jesus that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. Since they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, the failure of one of them to attain that eternal life which Jesus gives would be the overthrow of the omnipotence by which they are kept. This is too blasphemously absurd to deceive any believer in God. Its admission would involve the triumph of sin and death, and the hopeless defeat of the purpose of God in the salvation of any sinner.

Unbelieving sinners are often told to work out their own salvation. The pretended authority for this direction is found in the perversion of a portion of a sentence, which clearly explains itself. Paul says, "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. ii. 12, 13. Surely nothing more than natural common sense is needed to understand that this language does not apply to those who have never known nor obeyed the commandment of our Lord. Since the saints are dependent upon God to work in them the will as well as the doing of his good pleasure, evidently none can be in possession of that will but those who are led by the Spirit of God, and all such are the sons of God. So, in the close of the book of Revelation, in response to the message from the Lord, "Behold, I come quickly!" it is written, "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come! And let him that heareth say, Come! And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely!" The specification of the one who has the will limits this commandment to the same characters in whom God has wrought both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

Many other passages are violently wrested in changing the truth of God into a lie; but no such evil devices will bear the light of comparison with the inspired standard. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. viii. 20.

see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep. The deceitfulness of our heart, our total depravity, is a lesson that must be continually received. We cannot learn it and pass on to a higher study. It is the same lesson over and over. Truly "precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little." Dear brother, is this the experience of God's children, or am I one of those who are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth?" I often fear I have embraced the shadow and missed the substance. Hopes and fears alternately arise in my mind. Sometimes I feel the prison doors have been unlocked and the captive set free, while again all hope seems cut off. I do know that if I am a child of God I am the least of all. Every day I feel more and more my unworthiness; and did my brethren know the corruptness of my heart as I do, they could have no fellowship for me. I know I am unworthy a name among the Baptists, but can they permit me to dwell at their feet, and eat the crumbs that fall from our Master's table, I shall be happy. There is nothing I love so much as the communion of the saints, and from my heart I feel I can say with David, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." O! when we can meet with the dear brethren and sisters, and find them all in love, all of one mind, truly it is a heavenly place. But when I find among them envy, strife, debate, and some so bitterly opposed to the doctrine our hope is predicated upon that they object to it being preached in their meeting-houses (as I have had some to do lately), then I am made to cry, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." But God, who works all things after the counsel of his own will, will make it all work together for good to them that love him, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

My dear brother, if you can have a mind to write to one so unworthy, I will be glad to hear from you. When I first met you my heart went out in love to you, and that love has not in the least decreased. May the Lord enable you to comfort his children, and ever realize it is his hand that is leading you in the night as well as day. Do not forget me at the throne of grace, for if ever one needed your prayers it is poor unworthy me. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" My only hope is God through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. W. FAIRCHILD.

LA GRANDE, Oregon, Jan. 6, 1894.

W. L. BEEBE—VERY DEAR BROTHER:—I have desired to write to you ever since we arrived home. I received your kind message gratefully. I had hoped to meet you and all those I had heard preach so often; but it was not possible. We met three Elders and many precious brethren at the Welsh Tract Yearly Meeting, and we were favored to meet Elder Chick and wife a few minutes in the Baltimore depot.

We met with the dear home church at Rock Springs; heard the gospel proclaimed by its excellent pastor; heard them sing the songs of praise to God's holy name, songs sweeter by far than the earth's most exalted music. What a wonderful people are these Primitive Baptists. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion." The Savior says, "Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee." And the church is one. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." The little few who dwell in this far away land love you because you worship the same God they do. You preach the same finished salvation. A people saved by the Lord, chosen before the foundation of the world, redeemed by Christ, and clothed with his righteousness, there is no spot in them. Not only Jonah, but every child of God knows "Salvation is of the Lord." This doctrine is a joy to me. But am I included in this wonderful throng John saw? Often a heart so hard no language can tell, longing to feel as do the dear tearful ones around me. Often do we travel forty miles by hack to hear one sermon, and I return like a lifeless clod. "I would, but cannot sing." I would rejoice evermore, but much rejoicing comes to but few, and we know there are those "that walketh in darkness and hath no light." But what saith the word to such? "Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." There is no other refuge unto the saint, and he is "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." We are very prone to search our old nature for some evidence that we are born of God. This afternoon I have been thinking of the fruit of the Spirit, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, temperance," and I can find no satisfying evidence that I possess one of these fruits. But I do know that if I love not the church, I love no other people. There are so many hateful things I see in myself, it is no wonder I doubt that I am a child of God.

Dear brother Beebe, I know you will be interested to hear that we have a people on this coast who preach the same doctrine and worship the same God you do. Our church in this valley of the Grand Ronde is small, but dwelling in peace and fellowship. Our members live long distances apart, our beloved sister Martha E. Carter living in Washington. Our pastor, Elder G. E. Mayfield, is strong in doctrine, able in defending the truth, and walks worthy his high calling. We have not had the trouble that has fallen to the lot of some churches here. None of our church are or ever have been connected with secret societies. We esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt. But there are excellent brethren on the coast who are connected with these organizations. We yet hope they will come out from among them.

Sister Staton and others requested me to write for the SIGNS, so they could hear from us; and another sister writes for me to send an acknowledgment to all my Father's family of his tender mercies and loving care of us in our long journey amid death and disaster that befell so many. So if you publish this, sister Staton and all the dear ones will know I remember them in love. I know you have many duties, but if you ever have leisure and are not tired, we will appreciate a letter. We rejoice to read each week loving messages from your pen and others in our dear family paper, the SIGNS.

With much love to yourself and family, I am as ever a most unworthy sister,

EDITH H. ACKLES.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Another year has rolled around and I have another evidence of the continued mercy of our God in the preservation of my useless life and health, and the comforting and strengthening correspondence of the saints through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It seems as though I have lately taken unusual satisfaction in perusing its pages, without specifying particular letters or editorials; for you know a hungry soul relishes its food even though the fare is plain; but when the rich and toothsome dainties are set forth, as they seem to me to have been in abundance during the last few months, we can feast on fat things full of marrow, and be glad and rejoice in his salvation. With all the reasoning powers I possess I am not able to discover a more perfect and complete salvation than that which gives God the glory, and renders man subservient to his will. But I ask myself, Why is it that this mode or scheme of salvation pleases me more than the one devised by man? Is it not because it lifts a burden from my shoulders, relieves me of the constant toil and difficulty of trying to fulfill every jot and tittle of the law, enables me to escape deserved punishment, enjoy freedom from labor and care, and go on my way rejoicing in liberty? All selfish considerations, without one iota of gratitude to my Savior, with no particular love or regard to him, only that I am glad he is so kind to me. O yes, I feel afraid that I bear none of the fruit that should grow on a good tree, and must be hewn down and cast into the fire at last.

For when I would do good, evil thoughts crowd in and possess my mind, so that I cannot do the good that I would; and I go mourning because I shall fail at last of receiving the inheritance. Purely selfish! But then I grasp the hope held out by brother Beebe, that these exercises of mind are an evidence of sonship; and if a son, then an heir, heir of God, and joint heir with Christ. An encouraging thought! But, "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." But do I suffer with him? True I suffer despondency, doubts and fears; but did or does Christ ever doubt? Does he ever fear lest the sacrifice he made for sin was insufficient, that his precious blood failed to cleanse the foul corruptions of my sinful heart from its dark and hidden recesses? It seems to me not; but there is such a stench of sinfulness so constantly issuing forth that I need not wonder if despondency dark and discouraging are still weighing down this weary soul. But Paul tells the Philippians that he is "confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Has he begun that good work in me? If so, where is the evidence? Surely my carnal mind continues to lead me into sin and disobedience, and I am just as barren of good fruit as ever, and even more so; for I seem to grow more and more conscious of my depravity and of my slavery to sin and corruption. If I say, I will now do better, be more as my good neighbors are, full of love and kindness and benevolence, and all good works, I am soon confronted with the idea and accusation that it is only mimicry, a copying after others, and no heart in it; and if I had ever been quickened by the mighty power of the Holy Spirit, if Christ had ever been formed in me the hope of glory, would I continue to grovel in the depths of sin and disobedience? But why follow this line of thought? "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." And if I am one of them, these exercises of mind are no doubt for my good. But I become so mystified sometimes that I feel tempted to abandon the thought of being a subject of divine grace, and consign myself to the state and condition of those who are without hope and without God in the world. Is it possible that the children of God are thus tempted?

But I must stop; I only intended to renew my subscription; and thus have I intruded upon your patience. With a lingering hope and a glimmering of light I close with what may be a christian regard for the saints.

P. WEST.

PORTLAND, Ind., Dec. 20, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—In sending on the remittances for the little club of three, I would most humbly submit a few suggestions on the new birth, which is a subject much talked upon in the Greenville Association. I have recently talked with four ministers in this association, and we believe that many times brethren have not understood how to convey their ideas. We believe that the subject born again is not in any way changed, as the common term implies, but that the change is in the position or possession of the subject. "The woman which hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth." "But if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress though she be married to another man." Now, there is no change in the woman because her husband is dead, even though she be married to another man. She is simply the same woman with another husband. The change is in the husband. Her first husband is her first love, her first trust, her first hope; but when that hope, trust and love dies, she is the same woman with all her fleshly nature; but she is free from her first love. He is dead, that she should be married to another. The law of her first love was the law of sin and death. The law of the second love is the law of faith. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made her free from the law of sin and death. She has been taken from the law of her first husband, or first love, and put under the law of Christ, or second love; but it is the same woman. Some one may say, "Is not her walk and conversation changed?" Well, this same woman followed her first love, or hope, or trust, into earthly things; for he was an earthy husband, and trusted in the flesh, and made flesh his arm. But when her first trust was dead, and she could no more walk with him, because he was dead, she could no more hope or trust in him; and if she be married to another she is the same woman with a new husband. And as she followed her earthy husband into earthly things, she now follows her heavenly husband into heavenly things. There is no change in her body, soul or spirit, but she now has a heavenly husband, a heavenly hope and trust. The law of the Spirit of life in her second husband has made her free from her first husband. Her old man is put off with his deeds, and the new man is put on. She has put off as concerning her former conversation her old man, and has put on the new man. Her feet have been taken out of the miry clay, and put upon a rock. She has been taken from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. The same woman or bride has been taken from one position and put into another; from nature to grace; from darkness to light. It is the same subject with a change in position, but not a change in the nature of the subject. The first husband was of the earth, earthy. The last husband is a quickening Spirit. The change is in the husband, and not in themselves. The sinner that was under the old man, or hope, or trust, is now under a new hope and trust, a new man, an heavenly man. The old man is spoken of as something we put off. It is our first husband, our first strength, which is nothing more than the Arminian hope. The only way we can lawfully get rid of him is to wait until he dies. Not having the power of life and death, the bride of Christ must wait the appointed time of her first husband's death, and then she can lawfully marry her second love, and be no adulteress. But if she seeks to divorce herself from her first husband, and seeks and marries a second husband while her first husband lives, she makes herself an adulteress. But the bride of Christ never leaves her first husband until the appointed time of God for her first husband to die; and if her former love is remembered, she cannot trust him, because he is dead. He stinketh; he is a decayed substance.

Hoping greater lights may broaden on this subject, I remain yours in hope,

NEWTON PETERS.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The article "Ye must be born again," by D. Bartley, of Crawfordsville, Ind., published in the SIGNS of January 10th, has been read by me with great comfort. The subject is dealt with in a most intelligent manner, and I can discover nothing that is not in perfect harmony with the truth as it is in Jesus, and the experience of God's dear children.

The new birth, like all mysteries, cannot be explained; but every subject of God's eternal love is in his own time made to experience it. Every heaven-born soul can testify to the truth of the words of our adorable Savior, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

We have never seen the wind, but we have often witnessed its effects. When one whose face God has turned Zionward comes to the church, asking for a name and place among the people that are everywhere spoken against, and relates a gracious experience, the church do not ask such an one to explain the new birth; but they thank God that in his infinite mercy he has called him or her by his grace, and has enabled the candidate for membership to furnish the church with the clear and positive proof that the new birth has been experienced.

If I have any understanding of this wonderful subject, I realize that such knowledge has not been derived from any source other than a God-wrought experience of it.

To me it is a comfort that the sinner is the subject of this new birth; that the sinner is the object of God's eternal love; that the sinner is the subject of redemption; that the sinner is the subject of the resurrection; and that the sinner saved by grace alone, and made like unto his risen and glorified Savior, is to spend an eternity with his God.

Affectionately,

R. M. STRONG.

NEAR ROCKVILLE, Ind., Jan. 6, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Time, ever on the forward march, reminds us of our duty to you as fellow-mortals, and much more as beloved brethren in the Lord of life, light and glory. I have made some effort for new subscribers, but have failed as yet. I am very feeble in health, not able to travel much. I am now in my eighty-fourth year, and doubtless am near the end of my race. I have been much afflicted for the last eleven years. We are surrounded by people of almost every name in our country; people who like to read almost anything rather than the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and the Bible. I would like to increase your patronage if possible. I have worked for the interest of the paper, have taken and read it for about fifty years; but I do not expect to read it much longer. This, however, is a matter I leave with him in whom I trust.

Your brother, as I hope, most truly and respectfully,

JOHN OVERMAN.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed several hundred extra copies of each number of this volume, and shall continue to run a surplus of each issue until further notice, so that all new names sent in, can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 10th, 1894, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at the residence of the bride's mother, in Hopewell Borough, Mr. Levi Williamson, of Stoutsburgh, and Miss Anna V. Vlerebome, of Hopewell, both of N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Caroline Byers departed this life at her son's residence near Islesborough, Hocking Co., Ohio, Dec. 27th, 1893. She emigrated from Alleghany Co., Va., in 1811, and died as above stated, aged 82 years, 10 months and 24 days.

Sister Byers was one of the Lord's faithful ones, always in her place at the house of worship when not providentially hindered. She was a firm believer in salvation by grace only, and was ever ready and able to defend the same when opposed. She united with the Scott's Creek Primitive Baptist Church many years ago, to which she was an honor, and died as she lived, in the blessed hope of immortality beyond death.

Her funeral took place on the 29th, at the Scott's Creek meeting-house, and a discourse was delivered on the occasion by the writer from the words, "To die is gain;" after which her body was interred in the Scott's Creek cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just to eternal bliss.

G. N. TUSING.

DIED—Jan. 5th, 1894, little Lena Harris, daughter of Herman and Rosa Harris, aged 4 years and 4 months.

She died at her home in Waterville, Lycoming Co., Pa. Her disease was at first measles, and then pneumonia. She was a very bright, intelligent child, having a mind like a child much older than she; was of a happy disposition, singing a great deal of the time. Shortly before she died she told them that she would die, and wanted them to sing. We believe she is now singing as she never could sing while here below. The hearts of the father, mother and many relatives and friends are made sorrowful indeed because of the absence of little Lena, who was a pet with all. May he who holds the winds in his fist, and in whose chambers are held the lightning and thunder, say, "Peace; be still," and cause a calm in the troubled hearts.

"Sovereign Ruler of the skies,
Ever gracious, ever wise,
All my times are in thy hand,
All events at thy command.

"May I always own thy hand,
Still to thee surrendered stand,
Know that thou art God alone,
I and mine are all thine own."

The writer of this notice talked some to a large and attentive company assembled at our meeting-house at Cammal on Monday afternoon, after which the clay was consigned to the earth and buried.

D. M. VAIL.

DIED—At his home in Colesville, Broome Co., N. Y., Jan. 9th, 1894, our dear brother, Deacon Cornelius Reynolds, aged 83 years.

Brother Reynolds was born in Westchester Co., N. Y., and when a child moved with his parents to Delaware Co., N. Y., where he grew to manhood, when he was given to know himself a lost and ruined sinner, and also in the Lord's time was given to feel the power of divine grace in separating his sins from him as far as the east is from the west. He was led by the Spirit to the Old School Baptist Church of Middletown, Delaware Co., N. Y., and was baptized in the fellowship of that church by the late Elder David Mead, where he remained a worthy and beloved member until about fifty-one years ago, when he moved to Broome Co., N. Y., and united by letter with the Colesville Church. After the visibility of that church was lost he became a member of the Otego Church, while Elder Durand was our pastor, and was shortly chosen to the office of Deacon, which office he filled to the satisfaction of all. Being of the circumcision, he had no confidence in the flesh. He was a firm, unwavering advocate of the doctrine of grace, without works; was steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

He leaves a family of sons and daughters, two sisters and one brother, to mourn their loss; also the church deeply feels her loss of the godly man, but hope we can say, "Thy will be done." His funeral was attended at his home on Jan. 12th, when the writer spoke to the afflicted friends.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1894.

AFTER a lingering affliction for a year or more, sister Margaret Silcott departed this life at her home near Bloomfield, Loudoun Co., Va., Jan. 1st, 1894, in the 73d year of her age.

Though a great sufferer at times, she was able to go about some until a short time before her death. A few weeks before she died she moved to her home referred to above; but though comfortably fixed and cared for in her new home, she failed rapidly until released from her intense suffering by death.

Sister Silcott was baptized in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Church, by Elder J. N. Badger, in March, 1878, and was a worthy and esteemed member to the close of her pilgrimage. We shall miss her, but feel that our loss is her gain.

On the occasion of her burial brother Thomas read and commented some on portions of the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, relative to the resurrection of the body, which is the consummation of the christian's hope, and which is the theme of the apostle in that chapter.

Six daughters (two of whom are members at Ebenezer) and three sons survive her, and who miss her, together with a large circle of relatives and friends, who shall see her no more in the flesh. May the Lord comfort all who mourn, and give us resignation to his righteous will.

ALSO,

Mrs. Massie Osborn, after a brief but severe attack of "La Grippe," died Jan. 9th, 1894, at the home of James Nichols, near Snickersville, where she was visiting.

Though frail and almost an invalid for many years, she had nearly reached fourscore years, being the last of several brothers and sisters. Mrs. Osborn was not a member of the church, but manifested much interest in the truth, and doubtlessly experienced many comforting evidences in an "incorruptible inheritance" which is in reserve for all the redeemed. She was a subscriber and diligent reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for many years. Her home, when housekeeping, was a favorite and regular stopping-place for Elder Trott when filling his monthly appointments at Ebenezer. Her life was an eventful and, in some respects, a sad one; but her warfare is now over, and we hope that she has entered that haven where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

E. C. TRUSSELL.

PAXSON, Va., Jan. 22, 1894.

James Baker departed this life at the home of his daughter, in the city of La Grande, Union Co., Oregon, Dec. 24th, 1893.

The subject of this notice was born in eastern Tennessee, Dec. 18th, 1803, making his age 90 years and 6 days. He was married to Miss Elizabeth D., daughter of Elder Micajah Rowland, in Christian Co., Ky. From there he moved to Morgan Co., Ill., from there to Jefferson, and then to Wayne Co., Iowa, where he lived for many years. In the year 1862 he crossed the plains to Oregon and settled in Union County. Some years ago he lost his companion, since which time he has made his home with his children. Mr. Baker was not a member of the church militant; but his love for the truth, and the interest he always manifested in the meetings of the little church here, with his godly walk and conversation, give us good reason to believe that he was a subject of grace. He was for many years a subscriber to and reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and only gave it up when he became so blind that he could not see to read. The last few years of his life he was unable to walk, being confined to his bed and chair. The many times that I visited him in his affliction he seemed cheerful and glad to see me, and the theme of his conversation was upon the Scriptures and salvation by grace. He was well-established in the truth. His own felt unworthiness was the reason he never united with the church. He once told me, when we were talking on this subject, that he could not (as many could) tell when he received a hope. In his last sickness I visited him, and he told me that the grave had no terror, and that he was ready to meet death. We felt that he realized that for him to die was gain.

He left ten children, and grand and great-grandchildren that number more than threescore and ten. To the bereaved children we would say, Weep not. Though your father was not a member of the church visible, as some of you so greatly desired, yet we believe that he is of the church triumphant; for the angel said unto John, "Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." You did all that kind hearts and willing hands could do for his comfort while with you; now may the Lord enable you to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

G. E. MAYFIELD.

ELGIN, Oregon, Jan. 9, 1894.

Elder George Buckston was born near Poast Town, Butler Co., Ohio, August 14th, 1823. He received a fair common school education, and in 1829 removed with his parents to Mercer Co., Ohio. He obtained a hope in Christ at the age of seventeen years, and some time afterward united with the Baptist Church. On Jan. 11th, 1840, he was married to Mary Ballenger, who died Nov. 23d, 1880. He was married to Mrs. Belinda Harris on March 12th, 1884. He removed to Montgomery Co., Ind., in the year 1886, where he resided until his death, Nov. 16th, 1893. His occupation was that of farmer. He united by letter with the Big Shawnee Church, and was ordained to the full functions of the gospel ministry in November, 1890. He preached the introductory discourse at the Sugar Creek Association in August, 1892, and was appointed to write the Circular Letter for the next session; but ill health prevented him from doing so. He was universally loved by his brethren and respected by his neighbors. His chief delight was to read and comment upon the Scriptures of truth. In the language of David, his delight was in the law of the Lord, and in his statutes he did meditate day and night. In his last moments he expressed a desire to be at home, evidently realizing that this world was not his final home. During the last week of his life he suffered intense pain, his disease being dropsy; but he endured it all with patient resignation, and awaited the final summons to that rest which awaits the saints of God.

The funeral took place from the Big Shawnee Church, and was conducted by Elders John L. Miller, J. Van Cleave and J. B. Swank. The sermon was delivered by Elder Miller, from Psalm xvi. 9, which reads, "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope." The latter part of this verse formed the basis of the discourse, which was attentively listened to by a large circle of mourning relatives and friends, many of whom no doubt realized in their hearts the truth of this Scripture, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Elder Buckston believed that there will be within the next four or five years a season of prosperity among the Old School Baptists, and expressed a desire, if it were the will of the Master, to live long enough to see it.

He leaves a wife, one son, two daughters, and many relatives and friends, who mourn his death. Friends, let this be your consolation, Your loss is his gain.

J. L. MILLER.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I now forward for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a notice of the death of Deacon John S. Van Dyke, who departed this life Jan. 8th, 1894, in the 80th year of his age.

Our dear brother suffered much for about eight months, being afflicted with that painful disease "hemorrhoids, or bloody piles," and at times he suffered excruciating agony; but during his long illness and painful agony at times not a murmuring word was he heard to utter, and he would say, "I do not want to groan if I can possibly help it." His patience during his suffering was wonderful to witness, for he could and did say, "It is all right." He had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Hopewell thirty-five years, but how many years he had been one of the Deacons I am not informed; and during the time that he was a member of the church no one could justly say aught against him as a man in all the relations of life. After his death a very prominent man said of him, "He was one of the most peaceable men I ever knew." He took much interest in the welfare of the church; and when speaking of the salvation of sinners he would frequently say, "What do the Scriptures say about the matter?" His childlike simplicity was wonderful, and its very simplicity made it powerful. It afforded him no satisfaction when men in the plenitude of their carnal wisdom began to cavil with any portion of the written word of God, because he felt the force (measurably at least) of what Paul said to Timothy, "But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase to more ungodliness."

Our dear brother has left eleven children (seven sons and four daughters), one brother, a number of sisters, and some fifty or more grandchildren, as well as some great-grandchildren. We as a church shall miss him very much, for he was a devoted and faithful member, always attending to his duties as a member, and rejoicing in the peace and prosperity of the church; but our great loss is his gain, for the apostle said, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

The funeral of our dear brother was on the 11th inst., and was very numerous attended; and in compliance with the request of one of his sons, who is a member of the church, the following declarations of Scripture were used as a text upon the occasion, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

WM. J. PURINGTON.

HOPWELL, N. J., Jan. 22, 1894.

"THE remains of Mrs. Mary G. Ball arrived in Crawfordsville on Christmas Day from her home in Minneapolis, Minn., accompanied by her husband and three sons. She died of consumption on the 23d of Dec., 1893. The funeral services were held at the residence of Robert F. Beck, and were conducted by Elders Bartley and Fuson. A large number of her old associates, the friends, of her youth, were in attendance.

"She was the daughter of the late Chilion Johnson, and a sister of Mrs. Cornelius Blair, of Minneapolis, Dr. W. L. Johnson, of Saratoga, Wyo., Mahlon Johnson, of Denver, Colo., Mrs. R. F. Beck and Mrs. W. P. Britton, of Crawfordsville, Ind.

"When quite young she came from Ohio (in which state she was born) to Crawfordsville, Ind. In 1848 she was married to George M. Naylor, who lived about two years after their marriage. George Naylor, her son, being born after his father's death. In 1854 she was married to Harvey Ball, by whom she had six children, five of whom survive her.

"Mrs. Ball was a faithful member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and her life was most beautiful in all the graces of a christian character."—Crawfordsville Journal.

My precious sister Mary, the gentle companion of my childhood, has gone home to rest, and for the sake of the sorrowing ones left behind I have gathered up a few fragments from her letters to me last year. In June she wrote:

"This morning I am comforted with reading the fourth chapter of Hebrews, where it speaks of those who entered not in through unbelief, and says, 'We that believe do enter into rest.' Jesus says, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest,' 'and ye shall find rest unto your souls.' We cease from our labors, as God did from his, and rest in Jesus and his promises. Let us hold fast our profession, for we have a High Priest that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. I wish I could hear Elder Oliphant preach. I am starved for a gospel sermon, and I long to meet with God's people, to see their faces and clasp their hands."

In another she said, "I went to church this morning, and Satan went also, and buffeted me by the way; so I did not get much comfort out of the sermon. It was our communion day, and I wanted to rise above my many sins that so easily beset me. I find that when I would do good, evil is present with me. I wish I could run with patience the race set before me, looking unto Jesus for strength. Lord, help me."

In another letter she said, "I must write to you and tell you how indifferent I am. I seem void of feeling, and I am discouraged about my ever being born again. Your toleration of me does me no good; but when I read again and again what a man named Teague wrote in the SIGNS, I am lifted up above myself, and rejoice in it, and thank God, and take courage that there is one like me. That is, I do understand this man's language, and wish our preachers would preach as that brother wrote; then we would feel comforted. I like Fred. W. Keene's writings; I can follow him along. I seem to have no present experience; and when I look back over the way that the Lord has led me, and where I set up a pillar, there is no stone in sight. Lord, is there any one like me?"

"As to my religious belief, I think I believe just as you do. I enjoy Old Baptist preaching better than any other. You know that I have tried all. The old hymn that father used to sing so often seems to suit my case:

"He saw me ruined by the fall,
Yet loved me notwithstanding all.
He saved me from my lost estate;
His loving-kindness, O how great!"

In her last letter she wrote advising me as though every word was the last: "For I feel that my stay is short. May I be ready when the summons come." My eldest sister, who stood beside her in her last hours, asked her if she were afraid to die. She shook her head that she was not. I do not doubt but that she sung his loving-kindness in death.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR EARTHLY HOUSE, AND OUR HOUSE WHICH IS FROM HEAVEN.

(2 Corinthians v. 1-8.)

"FOR we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Until very recently I regarded the apostle as referring in this declaration to the resurrection of the dead, which is the hope and comfort of all the saints. I took it for granted that by the expression, "our earthly house of this tabernacle," he meant the body which "is sown a natural body;" and that by "our house which is from heaven" he designated the same body in its risen state, of which he says, "It is raised a spiritual body." It was not because I had ever received any personal revelation as to the apostle's meaning here that I regarded this house from heaven as the spiritual or celestial body, but because this has been the generally accepted interpretation of his language. It is true that I had noticed some incongruities in the language of the apostle in this connection while holding this view of his meaning, some expressions that appeared hardly consistent with his teaching elsewhere concerning the resurrection and the glorified condition of the saints; but these I had passed over lightly, as we are prone to do when considering any Scripture whose meaning we regard as settled beyond any right on our part to question. Tradition forces things upon us in that arbitrary way. Anything in the language which might shake our confidence in the interpretation received by tradition is regarded by us as unimportant, or as not yet rightly understood. But whenever the Spirit brings any portion of the inspired Scriptures to our minds we shall find the language all right, and every word (which was used by the inspired writer, or its equivalent in our own language) to be necessary in the application which the Spirit makes of it to our own souls; and we shall find that the word, as thus brought to us by the Spirit, applies to our own experience, and comforts us by telling us things that we already know, though we may never have heard of them before.

The apostle cannot here, it seems to me, refer to the resurrection of the dead, for in that there are not two bodies, but one and the same body changed. The same body that was sown a natural body is raised a spiritual body. The vile body is changed (not exchanged), that it may be fashioned like unto the glorious body of Christ. But the apostle is here speaking of two houses, or the houses of two tabernacles, one of which is a burden to us, causing us to groan while in it; while the other is seen by faith as already existing, finished, and ours at the present time, although not enjoyed by us as we desire and strive to enjoy it. The houses which the apostle speaks of here are not the same, but are opposite in character to each other, one being earthly and the other from heaven. From the bondage of the one the saint desires to be free, and with the other he desires "to be clothed upon." I do not think that this desire to be free from this burden or bondage of the earthly house of this tabernacle means that he wants to die. I have often been brought into bondage under the impression that if I were a saint, and under true spiritual exercise, I would want to die; whereas I have not been able to say at any time, "I now want to die." Yet it does seem to me that I have felt something of what the apostle is speaking of: "For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." Yes, I have this feeling, without regarding death as the way in which this desire is to be realized. There is that from which I wish to be free now, and that also with which I wish to be clothed upon now. "If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked." Then is it possible that what one looks for to clothe him in the presence of God may be no clothing at all? Yes; if the house we are looking for is anything less than a building of God, anything less than the finished work of Jesus, we shall be found naked when we are clothed with it. The least particle of earth about it, the least proportion of man's work, would make it of no value. It would not cover us from the wrath of God. So Paul expressed elsewhere a desire that he might be found in Christ, not having on his own righteousness, which is of the law, but the righteousness which is of God by faith. This righteousness is the work of God, and in all its manifestation in the gospel is to the people of God "a house not made with hands;" and it is "eternal in the heavens." It is manifested in the legal heavens and in the gospel heavens alike in its eternal character. "My righteousness shall be forever."

The apostle speaks in Hebrews of the building of God in contrast with the earthly building or worldly tabernacle, saying, "But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building."—Heb. ix. 11. John was shown this same building of God, as a holy city, coming down from God out of heaven; and it is called a tabernacle, for the great voice out of heaven said, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men."—Rev. xxi. 2, 3.

But it may be thought that in this view of the subject "our earthly house of this tabernacle" must mean the legal dispensation, and that the apostle could not have meant that, because he is writing to a gospel church, composed of those who have been delivered from the bondage of that dispensation, and called out into the liberty of the gospel. This is true, and yet the experience of this truth is not perfected in the saints yet. They are not so fully delivered from the law experimentally but that they are constantly liable to be entangled again in the yoke of bondage, under "the weak and beggarly elements." This liability to be hindered and spoiled through philosophy, "after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world," to be beguiled of our reward by subjection to worldly ordinances, which all perish with the using, will continue while the saints are in the flesh. Also the experience of the finished work of Christ is never perfect here. We can only see in part and know in part. The heavenly Jerusalem is represented as coming down, always coming, coming. More and more we see of its fullness and glory and perfection, but shall never see it in all its glory and perfection until "that which is perfect is come; then that which is in part shall be done away." We are constantly striving to attain unto that perfection which is in Christ, but shall never fully attain unto it while in the flesh. Even Paul said he did not count himself to have attained, but he tells us what he does do; and in telling that he tells what all the exercised people of God feel in measure: "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Now the apostle is ministering the word of truth, the word of the gospel of God's grace, to the subjects of that grace. In that ministry he is constantly showing them that the glory of that ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, is done away, and that all the ordinances that were against us are taken out of the way, being nailed to the cross of Christ, and that the saints are brought into liberty; and he is constantly exhorting those who have been thus favored to experience the power of the resurrection to walk in that liberty, and to seek those things which are above the legal dispensation, in the gospel, "where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." This ministry must be constant, both the release of the saints from the restraints and bondage of ordinances, and their calling unto liberty; because they are more or less experiencing the bondage and burden of the elements of that worldly covenant which was given to a fleshly people, and are constantly inclined by their fleshly mind to "look at the things which are seen."

How difficult, how impossible it is for us to cease looking at the things which are seen. Of ourselves we cannot prevent this tendency of our minds. It is only as we are taken away experimentally from the body, made to feel the dissolution of our earthly house of this (worldly) tabernacle, made to see that we can have no confidence in the flesh, can find no shelter in any work of ours, that we find ourselves able to look "at the things which are not seen," which are eternal. We learn slowly that we have "the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead." We may feel assured that we have been delivered from trusting in the works of the law, and may be unconsciously boastful of our clear view of gospel truth, when at the same time we are seeking to trust in what we have done and are doing in the gospel. The same fleshly principle may prevail here, as under the law, to lead us into bondage. We have been favored to be baptized. There was a peace and comfort in that act of obedience. How soon we may get to looking upon the act, and to be seeking for comfort in it as an act of ours approved by the Lord, instead of looking at Jesus, who has worked in us "to will and to do of his good pleasure." We are favored to live in the fellowship of the church, and in obedience to the ordinances of Christ, and we find ourselves trusting in that good standing among our brethren. The church is large, her walk is orderly, her gifts are excellent, and the meetings are very pleasant; and how much we are trusting in these things that are seen. Then come afflictions outwardly and inwardly. Satan tempts us to believe that our baptism was indeed our own work, and not directed by the Spirit; the corruptions of our nature appear to come into outward view, like the sore boils on Job's person; our walk appears to us to be vile; we doubt the fellowship of the brethren for us, and know that we have no right to it; the membership of the church becomes small, and dissensions arise even among the few; the gifts we so delighted in are removed, and there seems no pleasure nor comfort in the meetings. Now we begin to see how much of all our trust and comfort were in ourselves. The sentence of death, which we have in ourselves, begins to appear, and we see that we have been trusting in ourselves, trusting in our feelings, in our walk, in our gifts, instead of trusting in God who raiseth the dead, and who gave us all these gifts and blessings.

Here we feel the sentence of death upon everything earthly, and by that we are turned again to the true life, to the unfailing and unfading reality, which gave the true value to all these gifts and blessings, and which was the source of all our real comfort in our obedient walk, and in the fellowship and communion and gifts of the church. Now we see and feel our outward man perishing, and all these sweet privileges of the church being removed—tongues ceasing, prophecies failing, knowledge vanishing away; yet we faint not, for through this very perishing of the outward man we are made to experience most blessedly that "the inward man is renewed day by day."—2 Cor. iv. 16. Here is where our real comfort is, and where it has been all the time; not in the outward man, but in the inward man; not in the act of obedience, but in the Spirit that made us desire to obey; not in the meetings, but in the fellowship and love that made us wish to meet; not in the exercise of the gift, the eloquence, the clearness of expression of truth, the earnestness of appeal, the bright and delightful description of heavenly things, the touching mention of experience, but in the presence and love and favor of the heavenly Giver, which were manifested to us by the gifts; not in the word, but in the power; not in the things which are seen, but in the things which are not seen.

Now this affliction which serves to break up this false trust, however heavy it may be, may well appear to be light and but for a moment, when we are made to see that it works for us "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" by destroying our false and delusive trust in outward things, and bringing clearly to our view the inward experience of the eternal realities. This experience we cannot have while we look at the things which are seen; but now faith, one of the three things which abide, exercises us, and we are enabled to look at the things which are not seen. Then what an exceeding and eternal weight of glory appears to us, worked for us now by that very affliction which we looked at as so destructive of all our hope and joy.—2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. Now hope, another of the three only things that abide, appears in her true character, looking not for earthly blessings, but for those which are heavenly and divine. "True hope looks out for blessings great." We now see that neither the ravages of time nor the corrupting power of moth and rust, nor any kind of thief, has ever been able to take away from us, nor mar in the least degree, any real blessing. Our treasures are all perfectly safe. Faith sees them, hope rejoices in them, and love brings them close into its own sweet embrace in our poor hearts. Yes, love is the greatest of the three, for it will never fail. Faith and hope will go with us to the end of this mortal state; then faith will be lost in sight, and hope will be swallowed up in fruition. But love will go right on, continuing to be, as it has always been, the real source of all our joy. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Now we can see what things are to be dissolved. All the things pertaining to the outward man; all the things which are seen, which are temporal; all the things which pertain to an earthly tabernacle, whether we speak of the works of the law given by Moses, or the outward things of the gospel church. There have always been, and must still be, outward things expressive of inward experience; ordinances of divine service under the gospel as well as under the law; a manner of "working out" the salvation which God works within; but these things are not abiding. They belong to our earthly house of this tabernacle, and set forth in patterns the glorious tabernacle of God, which is "not made with hands," and yet which is with men, "coming down out of heaven from God." This is "the greater and more perfect tabernacle," by which Jesus became a high priest of good things to come. This tabernacle can never be seen by mortal eyes. It cannot be seen even by the natural minds of the saints. The world does not know the church by her outward appearance in the world. They see nothing to distinguish either the sons of God or the ordinances of his church from the people and ordinances of the world; neither can the saints see this distinction except by the power of faith. Their natural minds do not discern the difference, and therefore they are often deceived by a false appearance and by false testimony; though when they are spiritually minded, and looking at the things which are not seen, they cannot be deceived. This also is the reason why the saints often put an undue trust in these outward things, and so are often brought to grief when they are dissolved.

From the day of Pentecost churches have always been upon the earth, and will be to the end of time, as "the pillar and ground of the truth," as witnesses to the truth; but there will be "here no continuing city." All the churches of the past ages are gone. The earthly house of this tabernacle in the case of each church and each saint has been dissolved. Yet the tabernacle of God remains with men, and continues, in the sight and experience of the successive generations of the saints, to be coming down from God out of heaven, to be manifest to them as the workmanship of God, and to be "the perfection of beauty" in their sight; and the one desire of all the saints is that they may attain unto the perfection of this tabernacle, this building of God, this house not made with hands—that they may be clothed upon with it. Though church after church through all the past years and ages has gone, though troubles have rent many while they stood, though many have so far transgressed as to be rebuked, and even to have the candlestick removed, yet this tabernacle of God, this house not made with hands, has never been taken down. Not one of the stakes thereof has ever been removed, neither have any of the cords been broken. In the midst of all the wars and convulsions in the world, and all the wars and fightings among the saints of God, this heavenly Jerusalem has remained "a quiet habitation."—Isa. xxxiii. 20.

Cannot we see the great and prevailing desire we have had at times to be clothed upon with the perfect things of the gospel, with the perfect work of God? How we have striven at times to come at that perfection which is in Christ, that we might be presented perfect in him, as the apostle says, "Be perfect." But it has been by terrible things in righteousness that the Lord has answered us. "It has been in such a way as almost drove us to despair." Yet we have learned that only by the perishing of the outward man can we realize the renewal of the inward man. Only by the dissolving of our earthly house of this tabernacle can we feel the real power and sweet shelter of that heavenly building, that house not made with hands, which we so love to contemplate as it is presented in its eternal glory in the types and shadows of the legal heavens, or in the sweet commands and ordinances of the gospel heavens, or in the unspeakable glory in which it appeared to Paul when he was "caught up to the third heaven, the paradise of God."

"For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened." We are not always thus burdened and groaning, for there are times when we are absent from the body and present with the Lord; when we are given such an experience of the power of faith that we do not feel the burden of our corrupt nature so heavily, but the yoke of Christ, which is easy, and his burden, which is light, are so sweetly laid upon our souls that we mount up with wings as eagles; we run in the way of his commandments and are not weary; we walk in the ordinances of his house and are not faint. We are at such times not simply doing what we feel to be a duty, but we are clothed upon with the blessings of the house of God; obedience and zeal clothe us; salvation has lovely garments for us. We put on, "as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies," gentleness and loving-kindness. From our head to our feet we are furnished with clothing in the gospel house; and every part of that house becomes some part of this sweet, heavenly clothing.

"Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Not that we are anxious to escape from this state of warfare; not that we would have the burden of gospel work taken off from us before the Lord's appointed time; not that we would be unclothed of these duties and privileges of the visible church because they are only for a time, and the time for them will soon be past; nor because we can never be satisfied with even our best work, it is so full of earthiness and carnality; not that we are longing and groaning to be unclothed of mortality—not that we are anxious to die. This is not the nature of the earnest desire and longing which the apostle is here speaking of; but it is that we may experience now the power of these things of the gospel church "which are seen;" that the Lord would establish "the work of our hands upon us" (Psalm xc.); that while we walk in the order and ordinances of the church, and exercise the gifts which "the Spirit divides to us severally as he will," we may be kept looking beyond the ordinance to him who ordained it; beyond the gift to the Giver; beyond the thing which is temporal to that which it presents to our faith, which is eternal. This is the true spiritual desire, that we may experience the power of heavenly things, and walk in that spirit in which we live, being clothed upon with it. The apostle elsewhere expresses the same desire for himself and his brethren. "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death, if that by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." "Seek those things which are above." "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."

express our state "when this mortal shall have put on immortality," and we shall be fully conformed to the image of Jesus in glory. The declaration of that eternal state in glory, and of our final and eternal experience of it, is always in positive terms, as sure and certain to be experienced at the appointed time; but this is stated in the usual form of referring to a desired and longed-for blessing, whose experience depends upon the experience of other things, following as a consequence of them. So whenever we experience in any measure a being clothed upon with the power of spiritual things, with the gospel, which is not in word, but in power, realizing in our souls the divine power of the literal word we speak, and of the literal work we do, then, and in the same measure, we experience that mortality is swallowed up of life. The life of the dear Savior prevails at such times in our experience over the sense of the weakness and foolishness and baseness and sinfulness and corruptions of our mortal nature, which is a field of death, so that we do not go forward timidly, hesitatingly, and doubting whether our work can be acceptable to God because the smell of mortality is so strong upon it; but we now rejoice in the works of our hands because the life of Jesus alone is manifested in them, and we feel that "the beauty of the Lord our God is upon us" and upon our work. How pleasant the condition of the saint at such a time; how desirable the experience of such a blessing, when we see only Jesus, and desire only the honor of his name; when the knowledge of Jesus, which is eternal life, fills us in this earthly state as the waters cover the sea, covering from our sight all the depths of sin and depravity that so terrified us before; when the righteousness and glory of God sweep over our poor souls like the waves of the sea, smoothing away all the marks of sin, and causing peace to rest upon our hearts, and perfect love to cast out fear.

Now this desire is not alone, but is joined with a good ground for expectation, which causes it to become a hope; for "he that hath wrought us for this self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit." This makes us "always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight): we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." No reference here to literal death; for one may, in the sense in which the apostle speaks; be absent from the body and present with the Lord at one time, and afterward be at home in the body and absent from the Lord. When we are sweetly exercised by faith we walk in the Spirit, look upon things that are not seen, and realize but little of the cares, ambitions, burdens, sorrows, disappointments, fears, that belong to our life upon the earth. Our duties and burdens are easily borne, for we are looking beyond mortality to where our treasures and our comforts are, and we feel sweetly sheltered and clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. When we are not thus favored, but are at home in the body, and feel the weight of every care and burden so keenly that we groan under them, and are liable to anxious cares and gloomy forebodings, it is still given us to rejoice that we have such a "house which is from heaven," though the burden and oppression of these temporal things, which make up "our earthly house of this tabernacle," prevent our enjoyment of that heavenly house; and although whenever we feel this at-homeness in the body we can realize so much of our depraved nature in all our work and walk in the church that we are tempted to doubt concerning it; and although we feel at such a time an anxiety about worldly things, a reaching out for worldly treasures and comforts, and a consequent increased trouble in the disappointments and losses that must come; and although the warfare between the flesh and the Spirit seems more evenly balanced, and therefore much more fierce and painful; yet we are given even then to feel the holy and mysterious confidence of faith in the power and promises of our dear Savior, and to know that our heavenward desires are of the Spirit, and will not go out in the darkness of the flesh; and to know that whether we are in the dark or in the light we belong to the dear Savior, who is always in the light; and that he is our house and refuge, and will never fail us; and though we cannot trust in ourselves, we can trust in him; and though it get so dark with us that we are tempted to think that we do not believe, "yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself." Wherefore we go on with what belongs to us as members of the church, however unworthy we may feel of those privileges; and take up the duties which fall to us in our lot, however unfit we may feel to perform them; and bear the burdens that belong to the saints while in their mortal pilgrimage, however they may cause us to groan; and thus "labor, that whether present [with the Lord] or absent [from him], we may be accepted of him."

WOODSTOCK, Mich. Jan., 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been thinking about the two kinds of wisdom spoken of by James. He first tells us of a wisdom which descendeth not from above, and is manifested by bitter envying and strife in the heart, and is earthly, sensual and devilish. To be wise, or skillful, or cunning, is considered of much importance by most people; and so it is if it be in the right way. But we see there are different kinds of wisdom. We read of the wisdom of this world that cometh to naught, and often we consider what the world calls wisdom; first of all that which is called learning, such as is gathered from books or letters, and very much praise is ascribed to it; and this may be as harmless as any kind of worldly wisdom. If one's mind naturally turns that way, and nothing hinders, the time may as well be spent in acquiring this as in any other way, providing it does not tend to puff the mind or lead to an idolatry of this thing. Literature of all kinds occupies so much attention at this time that the mind may be unduly engrossed in it, especially that which is light and trifling. We often think some of it is just what might be called filthy dreams; and to silly, weak brained people we think it positively damaging. Yet writers of this sort of stuff are counted wise or talented by the world. And so we might enumerate many things which the mind can readily see would be accounted as wise and not foolish by most people. In all the walk, ways, vocations, pursuits of this life, more or less wisdom is required in following them. The most wicked may exercise the most cunning craftiness in their line of things. They have signs of their trade whereby they can understand each other so as to more easily carry out their operations, and we consider ourselves happy in knowing some of these things. We remember one who said, "I would have you wise concerning that which is good, and simple concerning that which is evil." Taking into consideration a study or knowledge of the Scriptures we do not feel it to be included in what is called worldly wisdom; for it was said to Timothy, "Which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." Wisdom is spoken of in so many places and in so many ways in the Bible that much might be said about it. But we do not possess ability to do so, only to speak a little about that which is necessary for us. We know that in Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.—Col. ii. 3. We think there is a difference between wisdom and knowledge. One may possess knowledge and yet not have wisdom to use it to profit. Solomon was called a wise man; and we must remember that he prayed the Lord to give him wisdom so that he might rule the people in a right way. He must have this wisdom from above. It must be given him from the Lord. Joseph said that the Lord must give the interpretation of the dreams which were of such importance concerning Israel, or the Lord's people. Daniel said there was nothing in him more than any living. It was the Lord who gave him wisdom from above to read the handwriting on the wall and to tell the king both his dream and the interpretation thereof. So we see there is a wisdom which differs from all others, and is from above. We can only have knowledge of it as it is revealed unto us. And it is first pure. This is the first principle or element of this wisdom. The first revelation of God to us was that he was so pure, so holy, and we so vile, so far from him. When we first experienced the application of the cleansing blood of Christ and the pardon of our sins, how we rejoiced in the hope that we should be pure; and how pure to us was the heavenly atmosphere we then breathed. How this principle makes us long to be cleansed from all pollution. How it makes us abhor evil, to cleave to that which is good. It will give us to discern between that which is holy and unholy, clean and unclean. There is joy in a pure and holy emotion. It makes the heart full of love that is pure; love which is not tainted with sensuality; love which is heaven-born; which is from above. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

"Blest are the men whose hearts are clean"

From the defiling power of sin." The peaceable; how lovely is this principle; how much to be desired; how pleasant to behold. A peaceable one is one much loved. It is not an angry, a furious one. With such we are told not to go. It is not one who loves strife or contention, yet is not to be mistaken for one who is idle or at ease. It is a principle of peace according to the law of the Lord. "As many as walk according to this rule, peace be upon them, and upon the Israel of God." The wisdom from above discerns this. It knows there is peace by the blood of the cross, and in no other way. We are not to be in peace or in league with that which is "earthly, sensual and devilish." That is the contrary wisdom. Following the things that make for peace, and things whereby one may edify another, is following in the footsteps of the Master, who bore the cross; not pleasing, but denying ourselves; keeping close to the side of him who is our peace. In doing this we will not offend, nor cause trouble or strife. It follows that which is pure. Shunning the vile, polluted things of nature will make us peaceable in our lives and in the house of God. When one brought in an unclean element into the camp of Israel there was trouble there; but to the one who slew the offender with a javlin, to him was given the covenant of peace, because he thereby made peace in the camp. A sickly, morbid sensibility of not opposing any evil or wickedness, for the sake of keeping peace, may of itself be questioned as to being peaceable. We know that he who came as the Prince of peace was opposed unto death by the wicked of this world. O may we have the wisdom which is peaceable as the Master was. "As a sheep before her shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." How sweet it is to read, "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God."

CHOOSE LIFE.

"I CALL heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."—Deut. xxx. 19.

In their efforts to distort the inspired words of Scripture so as to make them seem to sustain the doctrines of men, the opposers of the divine sovereignty frequently refer to this expression of Moses, as if he had made an offer of conditions to all sinners whereby they might be able to obtain life; and that their final condemnation would not result from their guilt as sinners against the holy commandment of God, but they would be condemned if they made the fatal mistake of choosing death in this momentous crisis. So flattering to carnal pride is this false theory that even to the reason of the saints it seems to be consistent; and their crafty adversary is ever ready to rob them of their rest in the truth of salvation by grace alone through the suggestion of their failure to make the wise choice of life, as proposed in this text. In no other way can the cruel tempter so effectually disturb the peace of the believer as by the wresting of the words of that record which is given for the comfort and instruction of the strangers and pilgrims whom he constantly seeks to annoy. Since there is nothing therein written but is for their benefit, his devices always prevent the meaning of any words which he cites in his attacks upon their hope in Christ. Examples of this are left in the experience of those patriarchs, prophets and apostles, who shine in the firmament of revelation as stars established for the guidance of believers unto the end of time. No plausible reasoning can be correct when it results in conclusions contrary to the testimony of the gospel by which sinners are brought into the enjoyment of life and liberty through the redemption that is in our precious Redeemer. This is recognized as unquestionable truth by them who hope in Jesus for deliverance from the power of sin; yet in their hours of darkness they are liable to be misled by such misapplications of the words of the inspired standard of truth.

While this is but one of the portions of the divine word which is cited by the tempter, in observing the difference between the distorted perversion of it and its real meaning will be seen in the manner in which other texts are misapplied and made to favor false doctrines. Therefore it is profitable for those who would know the truth to carefully examine this text in the connection in which it is placed by the direction of the Holy Ghost. In this investigation it is important to observe not only what is said in the text, but also by whom it is spoken, and unto whom it is addressed. Certainly there can be no difficulty in understanding the literal meaning of the words quoted. Neither does it require deep study to show that the speaker was that Moses by whom God had led the nation of Israel out of Egypt, and brought them through the weary journey of forty years in the wilderness. In the context it is stated that this was the closing address of Moses to the people whom he had so long led. He briefly sums up the whole embodiment of all the law of their God, and enjoins the observance of his commandments and statutes; in their obedience to this law he tells them is their life, and in disobedience they brought upon themselves that death which was the penalty attached to its violation. By reference to the letter of that law it will be seen that the life which was promised in obedience was only natural life in the land which their God gave them; and also the death which was incurred by their disobedience was only that natural death by which they were cut off from all those earthly blessings. That covenant which God gave to them by the hand of Moses contained neither eternal life nor any other death but that which pertains to earthly enjoyments. Its first commandment with promise enjoined upon children, "Honor thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Ex. xx. 12. There can be no mistaking the fact that in the observance of this precept the Israelite was choosing life. In the failure to render obedience to its requirement he certainly did choose death. Before the Lord announced to Abraham his choice of his seed to be his own peculiar people, death reigned over all the children of Adam as the effect of their sin in him before they were born in nature. Nor can any of his children plead that they were not involved in that sin, since they all manifest the reigning power of sin in their individual action so soon as they are developed in their personal character. There was no need of the transgression of the Sinai law in order to bring the Israelite under the condemnation of sin and its consequent death. Nor could that law of a carnal commandment give to any sinner life on condition of his most exact obedience to its every demand. It never was designed to do more than manifest the exceeding sinfulness of sin by revealing the perfect standard of righteousness. This may be illustrated by the use of the rule by a mechanic. While its application shows the defects of the timber to which it is applied, no wise workman expects the rule to correct those defects. So it is written, "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. iii. 20. Since there was no lifegiving power in the law, and those to whom it was given were already destitute of that righteousness without which they were under the power of death, it is evident that it would have been mockery to offer to them an opportunity to choose life while they were dead in sin. This is true even in reference to those who are naturally dead. Of what benefit would it have been for our Lord Jesus to offer the choice of life or death to the dead Lazarus? He must have life before he could choose anything. Surely it is needless to argue further on this point. Those who confess the authority of the Scriptures must admit that there was no eternal life in the observance of the law of Moses. Yet in the particular sense in which Moses spoke to Israel the assertion of our text was true to them. This is sustained by the words of Moses in conclusion of his charge to Israel, "And he said unto them, Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law; for it is not a vain thing for you; because IT IS YOUR LIFE; and through this thing you shall prolong your days in the land, whither ye go to possess it."—Deut. xxxii. 46, 47. This is the explanation of the choosing of life, to which Moses exhorted them in the text under consideration. In obedience to the covenant which God had given them they should have the protection of the God who had delivered them from bondage, and who had driven out the nations which possessed the land of Canaan, their soil should yield bountiful returns for the seed sown upon it, and they should be protected from their enemies, from diseases and from temporal calamities. In disobedience they should be visited with corresponding sufferings. In the faithful performance of the work to which God had appointed him, it was no vain boasting when he thus appealed to the testimony of heaven and earth in support of his claim that he had given them all the commandments of that legal covenant, in which he had set before them life in obedience, and death in disobedience; blessing in keeping the precepts of that law, and its terrible curse in departing from that rule which had separated them from all the nations of the earth. In the end of his ministration he commanded them to choose life. This was not in order that they might go "to heaven after death," but "that both thou and thy seed may live." There was no chance offered to the heathen among whom the chosen nation was located, proposing that they might obtain the blessing of this natural favor of God by compliance with any terms. Neither were the children of Israel consulted as to whether the covenant which God gave was satisfactory to them. The covenant was ordered by the Lord, and the people to whom it was given had no voice in directing any of its provisions. Obedience was in this legal sense their life; and rebellion was death to them in the same natural sense. As the typical embodiment of the legal covenant it was needful that Moses should utter the language of our text. The law is indeed holy and the commandment holy, just and good. By the perfect demand of that law is sin made manifest. In all its nature the law of Moses was typical of the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus; so that it did testify of Jesus. This is very clearly shown when it is observed that every precept of the law as given by Moses enjoined holiness. So those who are led by the Spirit of God are made to love and hunger and thirst after the perfect righteousness which is revealed in Christ Jesus. But it must not be forgotten that every Israelite was included in all the provisions of that covenant in which God chose the seed of Abraham; and that neither their own personal obedience nor disobedience could change that relationship which was theirs by virtue of their natural birth. Even those rebellious idolaters whose sin was punished with death were not less included in the covenant than other children of Jacob. They did not become Gentiles although they were cut off from the enjoyment of the favors of God provided in that covenant for the obedient subjects of the law, which was the sun of that system. In the condemnation which came upon them they were still Israelites when they were slain in their rebellion. In that covenant which God gave them it was provided that he would visit their iniquities upon them with no less certainty than that his favor should be their protection in keeping his commandments. So David says, "In his favor is life." This favor is found in keeping his commandments.

This feature of the Mosaic law is cited in illustration of the great importance of the saints giving the more earnest heed unto the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" While it is impossible that they who are born sons of Abraham in this spiritual relation shall ever lose that relationship, there is yet a fearful manner in which they are subject to the chastening which is experimentally regarded as death to the saints in their present enjoyment of the consolation of the gospel of peace. As in the type there was no action by which a Gentile could make himself a child of Abraham, so there is no possibility that any sinner should come into the relationship of a child of God but by the new birth, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." In its antitypical significance this solemn exhortation speaks to every subject of electing love, and appeals to him by every consideration of sacred love and gratitude, to "choose life" in yielding his members servants unto righteousness, and walk in newness of life, as humbly following in the way of truth. It is in exact harmony with the apostolic admonition, "Be not ye therefore partakers with them, [the children of disobedience]; for ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light."—Eph. v. 7, 8. In this manner of walk and conversation those who are indeed Christ's, and thus Abraham's seed, do "choose life." In thus following after righteousness they manifest that they are included in the benediction of our Lord, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." This blessing is life to all upon whom it comes. Nothing so important can occupy the attention of the saints in all their pilgrimage through this land of trials and continual conflicts. How often do they find that when they have chosen some alluring vanity in preference to the precepts of Jesus, it has proved a snare and bitter grief to them! This is the death which they have chosen, and it is rendered more painful by the consciousness that it is of their own folly that such death has come upon them. May the grace of our Lord abound unto each of his little ones, bringing them salvation from this error of the wicked, and leading them into perfect peace! Then shall they realize that fullness of joy in the Holy Ghost which is life and peace beyond all that earth can give or the minds of mortals can desire. The whole family of the true Israel of God is included in this heavenly joy, for it is the life of every subject of redeeming grace.

"Blest are the men of peaceful life, Who quench the coals of growing strife." "Gentle and easy to be entreated;" examining ourselves, proving our own selves, whether we be in the faith. Can we see these lovely things in ourselves? Do these principles move and guide us? Are we operated upon by this wisdom which is from above, or are we unkind, obdurate and hard-hearted? Not that we are to be an easy prey to those who would lead us astray, easy to be entreated to do that which is wrong, and follow that wisdom which is from beneath. This is not the teaching here. But are we pitiful and kind? Are we easy to be entreated to do good to those around us, to abstain from wrong, which is a grief to those who truly love us—entreated not to do forbidden things, which bring trouble and distress? How often have we noticed how readily people will follow an evil influence when all entreaties of agonized friends to lead them by a good influence is of no avail. But that is not the wisdom which is from above. "Full of mercy and good fruits." Can we not see how much there is in this wisdom? What a cluster of lovely things follow one after another. Full of mercy; not revengeful; not full of bad works. Here are evidences of instruction from above. "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy."

"Without partiality and without hypocrisy." These are things which do not belong to this heavenly wisdom. They seem coupled together as two evils which follow one another. The Savior in his teaching said, "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known." Even the disciples of the Lord should beware of this, and should be free from this danger. We used to think all the hypocrites were assuredly in Babylon; but we read, "The sinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites." Questioning our own hearts, is there no hypocrisy there? Is there nothing we would wish to conceal from our brethren? We readily acknowledge that the heart is deceitful above all things, and we cannot know it. But we do not wish to be the hypocrite; we do not wish to deceive. Happy indeed are we if we have no fearfulness of being surprised or found out in that which ought not to be. How much better to be an "epistle known and read of all men."

"Without partiality." When we are partial to one are we not apt to look slightly at his faults, and to magnify those of whom we are partial? Then if we are partial, and have our preferences, are we not led to use a little hypocrisy sometimes, in order to advance them and exalt them above others? Just a little duplicity, conniving, trickery or double-dealing may be required; and we may flatter ourselves that we have done wisely in the matter, and brought about things very neatly, which may be true; but we must sadly acknowledge that it is not that wisdom from above. It is that which is from beneath. All the wisdom we need is that which is from above, and here we are told just what it is, and also what it is not. Often have I noticed the infant of a few days old. It is so ignorant of the world into which it has come, and of all objects that most attract its weak vision is the light. Let there be a light in the room, its eyes will instinctively turn to it until it falls asleep. So have I thought, while in this life only let me have this wisdom from above to keep, guide and direct me; and at last, with my eyes turned toward him who is the light of men, so let me fall asleep.

MARY JENKINS—BELOVED SISTER IN CHRIST JESUS:—I wish you all prosperity in the things of the kingdom of Christ Jesus our Lord. I have heard a rumor from the mountains that I have not kept my promise in writing to you. Well, that is like me; not that I willfully neglect to fulfill my obligations, but I am not God, and he only absolutely doeth according to his will. Our God is he who doeth his will in heaven above, and in the earth beneath, and in things under the earth; and none can stay his hand, nor say unto him, "What doest thou?" He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, that we should be to the praise of his glory. With us, poor, frail creatures, all is uncertainty. As we cannot tell what shall be in the future, it becomes us, as those who worship God, to say, "If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that." How good it is to be favored with grace to acknowledge the Lord in all our ways! It is impossible for us to purpose according to the flesh, that with us there should be yea, yea, and nay, nay.—2 Cor. i. 17. At one time the apostle Paul essayed to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered him not.—Acts xvi. 7. He was forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia. Paul again tells us that "We, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered."—1 Thess. ii. 17, 18. Then to the saints that were at Rome he writes, "I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto."—Romans i. 13. What we purpose may from various causes easily be disannulled; but the word of our God standeth forever, and the thoughts of his heart unto all generations. "He hath purposed, and who shall disannull it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?"—Isaiah xiv. 27.

Our yea is often negatived and made nay in things of a temporal nature. But the beloved apostle Paul declares that "As God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay; for the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us."—2 Cor. i. 18-20. The "another gospel, which is not another," and the "another Jesus" (Gal. i. 6, 7; 2 Cor. xi. 4), are yea and nay. All is uncertainty in the doctrine of antichrist. It says, "Yea, God loves sinners, and is merciful, and has sent his dear Son into the world to die for their sins, and that he is their Savior." Then it says, "Nay, if you do not repent, and believe, and perform the conditions of salvation, God's anger will burn toward you, and eternal damnation will be your portion." Their God and Christ is one that loves to-day, but to-morrow if sinners remain stubborn and will not turn in with his overtures of mercy and offered grace, he becomes weary of soliciting their hearts and worship; he becomes offended, and turns away from them and will damn them because they will not be induced to give him their hearts and accept his offered salvation. Now, beloved of God, it is not needful for me to say that "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges."—Deut. xxxii. 31. Balaam, no doubt, thought that the God of Israel was a yea and nay kind of a God; that though he had blessed Israel, he might be coaxed to turn from this and curse them. But our "God is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth even that he doeth."—Job. xxiii. 13. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven."—Psalm cxix. 89. Even Balaam was forced to acknowledge this, and was made to say, "God is not man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? Behold, I have received commandment to bless, and he hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them. God brought them out of Egypt: he hath, as it were, the strength of an unicorn. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel: according to this time it shall be said of Jacob, and of Israel, What hath God wrought! Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up himself as a young lion, and he shall not lie down until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain."—Num. xxiii. 19-24. The God of Israel's yea is yea, and his nay is nay.

He says, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee."—Jer. xxxi. 3. "Yea, he loved the people, all his saints are in thy hand: and they sat down at thy feet, every one shall receive of thy words."—Deut. xxxiii. 3. "This is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest; for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."—Heb. viii. 10-12. "I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God."—Zech. xiii. 9. Our blessed Jesus was not yea and nay. O no! He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

"My soul through many changes goes;
His love no variation knows."

His love, his mercy, his grace, are from eternity toward his chosen people, and not all the powers of hell and sin can ever reverse it.

"The work which his goodness began,
The arm of his strength will complete;
His promise is yea and Amen,
And never was forfeited yet.

Things future, nor things that are now,
Not all things below, nor above,
Can make him his purpose forego,
Or sever my soul from his love."

How precious to our souls is the Lord our God amidst all our changes and grief! O to be blest on him all our burdens to roll, while he graciously gives us relief. What he hath promised he is able also to perform. And how comforting it is that our hope of eternal life in Christ Jesus is what our God who cannot lie promised before the world began.—Titus i. 2. We are not to be robbed or cheated out of our inheritance, for the promise is sure to all the seed. The church therefore by precious faith in her glorious Head can sing, "He hath made with me an everlasting covenant ordered in all things, and sure; for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."—2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Then though I may fail, and my yea may not always be yea, and my nay may not always be nay; yea, though creatures all fail, the word God hath spoken shall surely prevail. His promises to our hearts in seasons of perplexity and grief are faithful and true, because he is faithful that promised. May the God of all grace grant us grace to commit the keeping of our souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Though I am now absent from you, I feel it is not in heart. I have affectionate remembrance of you all, and my desire is still that the Lord will grant you health and prosperity in the things of the kingdom of God.

And may the Lord so bless you, dear sister, that in your old age, and during the remnant of your days while sojourning here, you may truly be among the dear people of God as a mother in Israel. With love and fellowship for you in our precious Redeemer, I am yours in hope of eternal life,

FRED. W. KEENE.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 19, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—By request of certain brethren I again send you a communication. I have been asked to write my views on the time and eternal salvation, as it is called by some. I have heard so many views expressed upon this subject that I acknowledge I have been somewhat confused; but there is this one conclusion I have been able to arrive at, that I am satisfied brethren who have taken certain positions on the subject can heartily concur with the apostle when he said salvation is by grace, through faith, and that not of ourselves. Now, if the apostle meant eternal salvation, and that was all the salvation he had in view, and left out a salvation unmentioned, and that a time salvation, then that salvation is excepted, and it may be based upon works, as some teach; and they tell us our salvation rests upon what we do. Well, here is my conclusion, that my salvation is of the Lord; for my very obedience is based upon that grace and Spirit which comes from him. I can freely glorify Christ for it. The apostle tells us it is God that worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. So I find that without him I can do nothing. Hence I ascribe what I am to his grace. The same God is as mighty in his people now as he ever was. He is as able to give grace, and that grace is as effective as it ever was. Sometimes I am afraid I do not understand and appreciate God's teaching.

I would like to call attention to one thing that Paul said, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." The question arises in my mind, What is that particular sin? Let us go to the Scriptures for the answer. Paul wrote to the Galatians, saying, "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" He ascribes it to bewitching teachers who called their attention to the law and to some legal duty to add to make it perfect. Here was the hindrance; and this I believe to be "the sin;" some performance of something to make amends or to atone for some bad conduct; looking back; looking away from Christ. That will always hinder us; that will beset us. As an evidence that this position is correct, Paul said, "Looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith." This life of the child of God is a life of faith, and not of works; hence good works do not procure that peace, as some imagine, but are only evidences of a gracious state. It is easy to fall into error and draw wrong conclusions; but grace and the Spirit set us right. I have seen it run into a conditional salvation, but I do not look at it in that way. Our good works do not procure peace; but when we are walking in good works it is an evidence of the effect of the peace of Christ which abides with us and shall be in us.

I do not know that I have made my position clear; but it is so to me, and I so view it, and praise the gracious Savior who saves me, and who brings me back when I stray away from him; so that I can without division ascribe all the honor, power and glory to him, who saves me not only eternally, but (as I hope) also in time; for both my time and eternal salvation are ascribed to him who suffered, bled and died, and rose again, and who yet intercedes for me; who is, I humbly hope, my Prophet, Priest, King and Mediator. I sometimes feel to say, Blessing and glory and honor and power be unto thy name; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed me to God by thy blood. Then I can sing,

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

HOLLAND, Texas.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I feel an inward impression to write something for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, as I have to write on business matters. We are taught by divine inspiration that all men became sinners by the disobedience of one man, which was Adam, in whom his whole posterity stood, as the fruit stands in the seed. When Adam became affected, his whole posterity whom he represented became equally affected, and therefore equally guilty with him. He and they alike became dead in trespasses and sins. To be dead is to be in a state of entire inactivity. No dead substance can act. Life invariably precedes action; therefore action is by no means a condition of life, but is beyond doubt the evidence of it. We partake of our food, not in order to live, but because we are alive. We love God because he first loved us. Our love to him is an evidence of his love to us. He loved us while we were yet sinners. He loved us as much before as after the manifestation of his love to us; as much before as after it was shed abroad in our hearts. God's love is like himself, eternal. Love is the ground of his action. All that he has ever done for us are but so many evidences of his love to us. He chose us in Christ in order to bring us to a state of holiness, unblamable before him in love. He chose us not because of any degree of holiness in us, but in order to such a state. Being sons, by virtue of such a choice he sends forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father, after having been by the death of Christ freely redeemed from all iniquity. If Christ died or shed his blood alike for all men universally, why will or does it not prove alike effectual in the salvation of all? Why will not the same cause produce the same effect under the same circumstances? It will, as every one knows. But are the circumstances of all sinners the same? They are, as far at least as relates to their state of death and alienation from God is concerned. All are dead. So it is plain that the state and circumstances of one is the awful condition of all. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." "They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." Hence the state and condition of all are exactly the same. Now, if the love of God shed abroad in the heart of one sinner by the Holy Ghost tends to that one sinner's salvation, will it not have a like effect upon all in whose hearts it is shed abroad? It will. Then why are not all sinners alike affected and saved? Simply because God's love is not alike shed abroad in the hearts of all, and just because God does not choose to save all. If indeed God's choice was to save all, then surely that choice would include all and every means necessary to that end. God's choice has not a miscarrying womb, but one of fruitfulness, with strength to bring forth. For the Lord God of hosts hath sworn, saying, "Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass."

WILLIAM LITTLE.

NEW CHURCH, Va., Jan. 16, 1894.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please publish the following for the benefit of those who are suffering from dropsy? I want to speak through the press of the valuable remedy prepared by Elder C. W. Anderson, of Dutton, Arkansas. One of my friends, a brother in the Spirit, was suffering extremely. He had to sit in his chair all night in order to breathe, and sometimes had to be fanned in the face. His feet and legs were swollen to a gloss. We ordered a trial package of the medicine, and I never saw such sudden relief from anything in all my life. I do not remember the amount of water discharged. As soon as the patient rallied from the exhaustion (which was last August) he went at hard work, and has continued at it ever since, with no symptom of return of dropsy. I feel that it is out of my power to speak in as high terms of the remedy as it is entitled to. I would be glad if every one who is suffering from the same disease could be induced to try this remedy. My friend's doctor told him, a few weeks after he began taking the remedy, that he had the worth of his money even if he died. His case had been pronounced incurable by the doctor. Any person feeling to do so may write to the patient, James M. Martin, New Church, Accomac Co., Va.

Yours in hope,

T. M. POULSON.

LITTLE ELK, Ore., Jan. 13, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been impressed to write you for several days, but have put it off on account of feeling my inability and weakness to write to those so much superior to me in the knowledge of divine truth; but knowing of no other way by which I can thank the brother or sister for sending me the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I am found this morning trying to write, hoping that God in his mercy may lead my mind from earth to things above, of a heavenly nature. O how thankful I am to the one who has sent me the family paper. It may not be known to the sender, but I feel that God will bless them for helping a poor, unworthy sinner saved by grace, if saved at all. I have often wished I were competent to write as do the brethren I read after in our family paper; for then I would not be ashamed to write. But by the grace of God I am what I am. If I could feel assured at all times that Jesus shed his blood for me, and that I am embraced in the covenant of promise, what joy and comfort it would afford. I live upward of fifty miles from our church. I am surrounded by Deists, Infidels and Spiritualists, so that I have no one but my wife to converse with and to sympathize with me. But blessed be God, he hath not entirely deserted us; yea, he holdeth us up by his almighty power, for which we desire to be ever thankful.

Dear brethren, if you see fit to publish this little epistle of thanks, please correct all mistakes, and believe me to be a believer of the truth. Your brother in hope of eternal life,
J. M. LAWRENCE.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

SHALL WE CONTINUE THEM?

THOSE of our readers who have interested themselves in the matter cannot but have noticed the great falling off in the contributions to the "Indigent Fund." While we feel considerable delicacy in calling attention to this matter, we deem it a duty in behalf of those who have been supplied the paper through the kindness of the brethren and friends contributing to this fund, to state that unless assisted in this matter we shall be compelled to drop many from our list who are really unable to pay anything for their paper, but who most highly appreciate the privilege of reading it. We have never been financially benefited by this fund, for we have always carried twice as many indigent subscribers as there have been dollars contributed.

By reference to the receipts published it will be seen that there have been just sixty-two dollars received for this year. We are supplying the paper to several hundred gratis, that is, except what is received for this fund, and unless assisted we shall not be able to continue sending the paper to them.

SELECTED.

HANDS OFF THE SCHOOL FUNDS.

A CIRCULAR has been sent out from "eminent Catholic authorities" in Baltimore urging the adoption of a school system which shall give to church and parochial schools of every denomination—Catholic, Protestant or Jewish—the status of public schools and the support of the public school fund.

The circular aims to be distinctly unsectarian. It asks no more for Catholic schools than for those maintained by Methodists, Presbyterians or Episcopalians. Its fundamental contention is that religion, as a basis of morality, must be a part of education if education is to be worth while.

But unsectarian as its spirit appears to be, the proposal is obnoxious in the very highest degree. It would be so even if every citizen accepted its premise that religion is the only foundation for morals and that it should be a part of all education.

In fact very many worthy people do not accept that contention, but on the contrary reject it with great earnestness of conviction. The rights of such citizens are as sacred as those of any other class, and any appropriation of school moneys for the teaching of religion would be an invasion of their rights.

But even if there were no such class, the taxation of the people to teach religion, whether in one form or in a hundred, would be in flagrant violation of the basic ideas of our governmental system.

With us religion is a matter of purely private and voluntary concern. The State has no more business to teach it than it has to prescribe and enforce forms of worship. The State has no more to do with the Church or the churches than the Church or the churches have to do with the State.

This is fundamental in our system. It is of the essence of that perfect liberty which the system was devised to secure. The acceptance of that idea of an absolutely free Church in an absolutely secular State was one of the great advances made in the construction of our Government. Americans are not likely to abandon it now.

The state has no function whatever with respect to religion except to protect all citizens equally in their perfect religious liberty. It has no right to tax one man for the purpose of propagating another man's religion. For it to teach any religion would be an unwarrantable invasion of provinces in which it has no business to intrude.

The school funds are sacredly set apart to provide secular education for all the people. Hands off!—N. Y. World.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his home in Shokan, N. Y., Oct. 9th, 1893, Wm. H. Bush, aged 59 years and 2 months.

He was married to Delilah Winchel on Nov. 26th, 1859. In his last sickness, which was of some months' duration, he suffered a great deal from a complication of diseases of the liver and stomach. He had his senses to the last, and said to his wife, "Rejoice that my sufferings are almost over." He professed a hope in Christ a number of years ago, and manifested his faith by coming to the church of Olive & Hurley on Oct. 31st, 1868, and was baptized on the following day by Elder I. Hewitt, from which time his seat in the meetings was seldom vacant.

He leaves a wife, my dear sister, with three daughters and three grandchildren, to mourn their loss of a kind husband and father. His funeral was largely attended on the 11th, when a sermon was preached by Elder John Clark, of Delaware Co., N. Y. May the Lord sustain the mourning ones in their sad bereavement.

J. V. WINCHEL.

OLIVE, N. Y.

SISTER Elizabeth Rhodes Rimer was born in Franklin Co., Ohio, July 21st, 1816, and died Dec. 25th, 1893, of "La Grippe" and general decline.

She was one of the first settlers in Sugar Creek township, Putnam County, having moved here with her parents at the age of fifteen years. On March 1st, 1838, she was united in marriage with Jacob Rimer, and moved with him to her late home, where they lived until her death. She was the mother of nine children, all of whom (except the eldest two) and her husband still survive.

She united with Sugar Creek Church, and was baptized by Elder Henry Morris on Oct. 9th, 1875. She was a strong believer in the doctrine of election, predestination, and salvation by grace alone. Her seat in the church was never vacant when able to fill it. She was an affectionate and loving companion, a kind and indulgent mother, and was highly esteemed by all who knew her. The loss to the family and church is severe, but our loss is her eternal gain.

J. G. FORD.

RUSHMORE, Ohio, Jan. 24, 1894.

My dear husband, John W. Hallenbeck, passed away Jan. 20th, 1894, aged 56 years and 8 months.

His disease was consumption, which caused intense suffering the last two months of his mortal life; but from many things that he said to me during his illness, and the closing scene, I believe that he has exchanged a life of sorrow and pain for one of joy and peace. While suffering the pangs of dissolution he whispered to me, "I am going soon." Said I, "Have you asked the Lord to go with you?" He answered, "Yes." At the moment of death he lifted one hand, his eyes opened wide, with such a bright and joyful expression that the face was instantly transfigured. It had been much marred by suffering, but now was over-spread by such joy and peace that it was lovely to look upon; therefore we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

M. J. HALLENBECK.

SOUTH WORCESTER, N. Y.

In Ridgetown, Ontario, Jan. 23d, Ina Cecil MacDonald, and on the 28th, Edith Laura MacDonald, children of James C. and P. Louisa MacDonald, and grandchildren of Elder Wm. L. Beebe, were called away from earth, Ina being aged 5 years, 10 months and 18 days, and Edith 4 years, 3 months and 5 days. Ina's disease was vermicular bronchitis; Edith's was heart failure.

Thus within less than one week both these darlings were taken from the embrace of loving arms, leaving the family circle shrouded in gloom, and crushing the hearts of the sorely afflicted parents. In their sad bereavement the world can afford no consolation. Only the hand of that God who has smitten them can minister comfort in their heavy affliction. May they find the Lord a present help in this time of their sore trouble, and be enabled by his Spirit to confess that even in this dark dispensation his grace is sufficient for them. It is in such sorrow as they are now enduring that the power of faith is manifest in causing them to mourn not as they that have no hope. By living faith may they look beyond the gloom of the grave, and see the light of eternal day shining forever in the home of the redeemed, where their darlings are free from the pains and sorrows of this polluted earth.—Ed.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have just learned by mail from M. L. Vanmeter (a nephew), of Redding, Chasta Co., Cal., of the death of his mother, Rhoda C. Vanmeter, which occurred at nine o'clock p. m., Jan. 4th, 1894, aged 73 years, 4 months and 12 days.

Her maiden name was Hackley. She was born in Grayson Co., Ky., and when quite young was left an orphan, and was raised by her uncle, Owen Willis, of said county. When quite young she professed a hope in Jesus, and joined the Beavercreek Church of Primitive Baptists, and faithfully maintained that faith until death called her to a better world. She and my brother, Jacob R. Vanmeter, were united in marriage in Grayson Co., Ky., Dec. 18th, 1838, both being quite young. They resided some years in the state of Arkansas, and some years in La Salle Co., Ill., and awhile before the late war they located in Linn Co., Mo., near Brookfield, joined the Liberty Church, and continued in her fellowship until their death. My brother died near Brookfield, Mo., in the faith of the gospel, in September, 1879. Sister Rhoda was the mother, I believe, of eight sons and two daughters. Two of the sons and one of the daughters preceded their father to the grave; and the other daughter, Mrs. McClure, died soon afterward. Two of her sons are eminent physicians and surgeons. Abraham is at Lamar, Mo., and Miles E. at San Francisco, Cal.

The deceased lived with some of her sons in California during several years, and spent the last few with her son Marion L., where she died. She was afflicted some years with a heart trouble and other ills, but finally fell asleep in Jesus, I believe, to rest until she shall be called for.

Sister Rhoda was a very industrious woman; and I heard her say once that there had seldom been a day since she was old enough to work that she was not tired. She was a true and faithful wife, an affectionate mother, a kind neighbor, and a loving sister in the church. A very worthy and noble christian lady is gone to rest.

I learn that her remains are embalmed, and to be shipped to Brookfield, Mo., in February.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., Jan. 23, 1894.

A MOTHER in Israel has fallen, and a pillar of the Hartford Predestinarian Baptist Church has been called from the sorrows, sufferings and afflictions incident to this mortal life, and now sleeps where the wicked cease from troubling and where the weary are forever at rest.

Our precious, beloved and much esteemed sister in Christ, Susan A. Biggs, widow of Elder James W. Biggs, departed this life Nov. 20th, 1893, at her home in Hartford township, Licking Co., Ohio, aged 84 years, 7 months and 13 days.

The subject of this notice was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stuart, and was born in Fauquier Co., Va., April 7th, 1809. She was married to Elder James W. Biggs on Feb. 24th, 1834, emigrated to Ohio on March 25th of the same year, lived near Alexandria sixteen years, and moved to her late home in the year 1850, where she resided until her Master called, "Child, come home." She was the mother of eight children, six of whom survive to mourn the loss of a kind and noble mother. When she was twenty-eight years of age she and her husband were baptized, and were constituent members of the Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church called Harmony, Licking Co., Ohio, in April, 1837. In 1850 she and her husband removed their membership to the Hartford Predestinarian Baptist Church, where she was left a widow nearly thirty-one years ago. Here she remained a consistent, worthy and very useful member, firm in the doctrine of salvation by grace, steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints, ever looking to Jesus, the author and finisher of the same. She was a woman of more than ordinary intelligence, of a quick and discerning mind, gifted in exhortation in our church-meetings, and punctually and faithfully attended her meetings, always ready and willing to bear her full share of the burdens of the church, and to see that the servants were cared for. Her house was always a welcome home for her brethren. She was a true and devoted friend of the late Elder G. Beebe, and a subscriber for many years to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Our dear sister was a great sufferer for the last eighteen years, having fallen and injured her hip, so that she never walked without crutches since; but surely the Lord has shown her great mercy, and wonderfully blessed her and her family, not only temporally, but spiritually. Her younger son is Deacon of the church of which she was a member. Her daughter, sister Sarah C. Boyd, is also a member of the same church, and the Lord has greatly blessed her with a remarkable gift to write and speak of the goodness and mercies of God to his poor and afflicted people. Her oldest son, living in Iowa, is a minister of the same faith. Her youngest daughter was baptized in the fellowship of the Hartford Church, but moved to Illinois.

Our dear sister requested while living that I should preach her funeral, and write an obituary notice for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The funeral services were at the Hartford Church. After singing and prayer by my son, Elder J. C. Hanover, I tried to preach from the words, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thess. iv. 18. After a few appropriate remarks by her brother-in-law, Elder J. H. Biggs, we took our last look at her beautiful face as she lay in her beautiful casket; after which we repaired to the Trenton cemetery, where the casket was placed in an iron vault and deposited in the grave. She gently sleeps until Christ shall come, when she will awake with his likeness; for the truth of God is that those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

The unworthy writer attended the church of which she was a true and orderly member for about twenty-three years, and will say that while she was blessed with a profound and clear understanding of the doctrine of election, predestination, and salvation by grace, she always manifested a deep-felt sense of her unworthiness, blessed with that meek, humble and quiet spirit which in the sight of God is of great price. May grace, mercy and peace abound in all the household of faith.

Yours in the bonds of love,

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

EXODUS XIV.

WHEN Israel toward the promised land
As pilgrims went their way
They murmured, though it was God's hand

That led them day by day.

When daily he the manna gave
To feed them by the way,
They doubted not his power to save,
For all was bright as day.

But when before them lay the sea,
Egyptians in the rear,
There seemed no way for them to flee,
Their hearts were filled with fear.

"Stand still!" to them was the command,
"The Lord shall fight for you."
None e'er shall dare his power withstand;
They shall not thee pursue.

Then wait, my soul, upon the Lord,
On his sure promise stay;
For they who ever trust his word
Receive new strength each day.

Helpless as Israel though thou art,
And many are thy foes,
Thy God will daily strength impart,
If all should thee oppose.

JOHN XII. 24.

"EXCEPT a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—For some cause my mind has rested upon the above quoted words a great deal of late, and the impression they have made has remained with me, giving me some comfort and joy of mind. I very often hesitate to write or speak upon some of these Scriptures, which seem to me so rich in deep spiritual meaning, and so full of experimental truth. I doubt not that all Scripture is full of such meaning; but still some portions of the word have ever seemed to give me glimpses of "the throne, and of him who sits thereon," more than others, and of them I hesitate much to write or speak, because they seem so full of the things which cannot be uttered. In trying to speak about such Scriptures, or to investigate them, there seems to me a voice in them like that which spoke to Moses out of the burning bush in Horeb as he drew near to behold it, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Wherever in all the Scriptures Jesus is shown us, that place is holy ground indeed; and the text quoted above has for many years seemed to me to be filled with things of a peculiarly sacred nature. I wish in all that I may here write to speak soberly, cautiously and reverently of the things couched in these words of the Savior. It is of himself that Jesus here speaks; and what theme is so sacred as this?

The words of the text which I have quoted at the head of this article were spoken by our Lord in connection with other sayings under the following circumstances, as recorded in the connection of them. Six days before the last passover of which Jesus ever partook he had come to Bethany, where they made him a supper, at which Martha served, and at which Lazarus, whom he had raised from the dead, sat at meat with him. At this supper Mary also anointed the feet of Jesus. Much people, we are told in the ninth verse, had come together, not only that they might see Jesus, but Lazarus also, who had been raised from the dead; and because of him many of the Jews believed on Jesus, for which reason the chief priests consulted together to put both Jesus and Lazarus to death.—Verses 10, 11. In the verses following, up to verse nineteen, we are told how multitudes followed him, crying "Hosannah," chiefly because of the miracle which he had but just wrought in raising Lazarus from the dead, as appears from verses eighteen and nineteen. Certain Greek proselytes also, who had come up to Jerusalem for the passover, desired to see him, and came to Philip with their request; and Philip told Andrew, and Andrew told Jesus.

Now in response to this Jesus answered, "The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified;" and then immediately follow the words of the text, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." From this whole narrative, and especially from the verse preceding the text, it seems to me that the chief and central thought of all this narrative, and of Jesus' own words, is to set forth the glory of Jesus; and the text itself is but one form of setting forth this one great truth, that Jesus must be glorified. I desire to call attention first to this one chief consideration, viz., how Jesus Christ was glorified in his own person, and is now glorified in the persons of his believing people, and then try to show how the text itself also presents the same things. The hour was come that Jesus should be glorified. To this agree other Scriptures to which I wish to refer. In chapter thirteen, after Judas, having received the sop, had gone out, it is recorded that Jesus said, "Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him. If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him." In chapter seventeen Jesus begins his prayer to his Father with these words, "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee." In the fifth verse he said again, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." In the tenth verse Jesus said again of his disciples, "And I am glorified in them." In chapter twelve, a few verses after the text of which I desire to speak especially, Jesus said, "Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." Afterward Paul said, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." These and manifold other Scriptures directly testify that to glorify the name of Jesus is the chief design of the gospel. Jesus is the sum and substance and center of all that the Scriptures teach, even as he is also the chief corner-stone in the church of God, and the one all-sufficient refuge of all his people.

But what is the glory of Jesus? By what is he glorified? In what do his glories consist? These questions open up a field too wide to explore in one short article. It is a field so wide that though patriarchs, prophets, apostles and saints of all ages have been engaged in its exploration, yet the end has never been reached. Like the love of God, "it is void of bottom, brim or shore, and lost in Deity." Yet we may speak of some of the things that have been revealed to us, though upon such a theme our words must ever be halting, feeble and broken. Negatively, the glory of our Lord is not such as men desire, nor is it such as unrenewed men can understand. It does not consist in any earthly pomp, nor in any human power, wisdom or authority. His glory can never attract natural men; and that which pleases the unrenewed mind must ever be contrary to Jesus as he really is. If natural men admire Jesus, it is not the Jesus of the gospels that they admire, but a Jesus dressed up in such robes as he never wore when he tabernacled on earth. His was not the glory of a king, a warrior, a statesman, nor a philosopher. He was, it is true, all these, and more than all these, by so much as heaven is more than earth, or life more than death; but the kingdom over which he came to rule was spiritual, not natural. The warfare which he waged was not against flesh and blood, but against sin, death and hell. The law which he came to ordain was from heaven, and not of earth; while the wisdom which he possessed was that knowledge by which he justified many, because he bore their iniquities. If we wish to see in a few words how Jesus was regarded by men when he was upon earth, and how he is still regarded by the world, turn to the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. I cannot take time to transcribe it all here, but will refer to one or two sentences. "For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground." "And when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men," &c. If these words mean anything, they mean that the glory of Jesus was hidden from all natural men. It was not such glory as could possibly be seen by any natural powers that men possess. In harmony with this Jesus himself said to Peter, after he had confessed and said, "Thou art the Son of God," "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." From all this it follows that what men think is the glory of Jesus is a false glory, while his true glory they cannot see; and in additional proof of all this we see that the people looked for an altogether different Messiah, and that even his own disciples were disappointed in him. In strict harmony with the carnal view which they had of him and his kingdom, and of the object of his coming to earth, was their frequent contention as to which among them should be the greatest in his kingdom. Had even his own disciples had any adequate conception of the true glory of Jesus before his Father, they would have known that to share his glory and his kingdom, or to enter into them at all, they must be led by motives altogether diverse from those which had led to such contention among them. If even his chosen disciples, with whom he continually lived and talked, were so carnal that they could conceive of no higher glory than that he should be a king, and rule as other kings ruled on earth, while they should be exalted, as the favorites of other kings were, is it any wonder that carnal Jews utterly rejected him? When their eyes beheld him, there was no beauty that they should desire him. Their conception of what is beautiful and glorious was purely such as would have its embodiment in a Jewish Cæsar or Alexander or Cromwell, who would be surrounded by invincible legions of troops, and be able to command the wealth of the world, and compel the homage of all mankind. The glory of which they and all natural men conceive is that which will gratify human pride, and in which men can exalt themselves over their fellows. Such glory as this is not the glory of Jesus. He is not glorified by displays of human riches, power and wisdom, nor by those who would seek to make these things the help of his cause on earth. Of what avail was it that the fickle multitudes spread palm branches in his way, and cried "Hosanna," when a few hours later the same multitude cried, "Crucify him! crucify him!" They were but exalting a false conception which they had of Christ; and when the true Christ began to appear they saw no beauty in him, and cried, "Away with him!" This is no less true to-day. Under a false conception of him men build costly temples, add multitudes of unregenerate men to their numbers, organize societies in his name which he has never commanded, and which claim honor for work which they claim to do, but which men can never do (and by which claiming to do they rob Christ of his glory), and provide for artistic music and singing by trained soloists, choirs or quartettes, made up mostly of men and women who are devotees of fashion, and who (many of them) make no claim to know the Lord. All this, and more of the same kind, they do; but if the true Christ be once presented before them in his humility, poverty, meekness, submission to God's will, crucified and risen again, as the sole hope of perishing sinners, and frowning upon the pretentious and ostentatious piety and false charity of the day, as he did when he dwelt in human flesh, these same multitudes, following their leaders, as other multitudes once followed other leaders, from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod to Pilate again, would cry out against him, and say, "We will not have this man to reign over us," even as did their prototypes in the days of Jesus' flesh. It is hard for even the most humble and spiritual of all the children of God to always resist the temptation to mistake purely worldly gain and advantage for the glory of the Lord. Surely, the tempter says, he must be here, in this gilded and costly temple, and with these thronging multitudes. See how they are blessed, and how they are increased! It is sometimes hard to see that the wealth, the fashion, the fine music, the polished speaker, the superfine society, are the things to which the people are flocking, and not Christ, the true Christ. These things are never of any real glory to him. Had they been, would he not have surrounded himself with all these aids when he was dwelling in human flesh? Down in the secret heart of men, who boast of these successes, there is rank infidelity to the real Christ. They know not Jesus of Nazareth; they possess not his Spirit. In secret they think that he made a great mistake when he came in such lowly garb, and in so sorrowful a fashion. How could he hope to win men, or to succeed under such a guise? In opposition to the thoughts of men about him and his kingdom, in all the word the truth is held forth that his kingdom is not of this world; that the kingdoms of the world are not his; that the Son of man has not where to lay his head; and that only a remnant (an exceedingly small number) shall know and serve him. The wisdom, the might and the riches of the world are still, and always will be, his foes because he ever lives to cast shame and contempt upon these things, and to humble and abase them. Jesus may dwell with the wise, the rich, the mighty, but if he does it is not by their aid, but in spite of their opposition. The whole spirit of his reign in the hearts of men still is, "Let not the rich man glory in his riches; let not the wise man glory in his wisdom; let not the mighty man glory in his might; but he that glorieth, let him glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord," &c.

But if these be not the things by which Jesus is glorified, in what then does his glory consist? May we not sum it all up and say that his is the glory of the cross? Does not Paul mean just this when he says, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ?" And if the cross was once his glory, shall it not ever continue to be? The true glory of Jesus consisted in the very things which men despised; I mean the glory that he manifested on earth. It was the glory of God, and not of men. The glory of his mortal life was in his patience, long-suffering, meekness, humility, submission, and obedience to God. It was seen in his kindness even to the unkind, in his love and pity even to his enemies, in his forgiveness of those who did him wrong, and, in short, in all that made him sorrowful and burdened while he lived, and resigned to God's will when he was crucified. By so much as he is greater who ruleth his own spirit than is he who only taketh a city, was Jesus greater in his humiliation than was ever any mortal man in his highest exaltation. How infinitely more glorious does the meek and unresisting sufferer appear clothed in the mockery of royalty by the hands of scoffers who hated him, than does Pilate or Herod in their royal robes, or Caiaphas in his priestly garments; but not to the eye of the natural man. As his glory was spiritual, so only they who can discern spiritual things can behold it. Were the Master to-day to appear on earth, this would be still true, his glory would be hidden from men. Only a remnant could behold it. Were he to come once more in human flesh, and set up the kingdom that the Jews still look for, and were the power of his sceptre to be felt and acknowledged from the very ends of the earth, still the glory of such a reign could not equal the glory that appears when he reigns in one poor heart, producing there his own meekness, gentleness, obedience and love. Such glory as this is divine, and only those who live in the divine life can behold it. The other would be but an earthly, temporal glory, attractive to the carnal mind, but possessing no charms for the spiritual. God has glorified the name of Jesus, and will glorify it again, as he said; not by bringing the glory of Jesus down to the carnal conceptions of men, but by revealing the true glory of the Master in men. It still remains true that not only was Jesus thus glorious in himself, but that he is glorified in his disciples, as he said. It is by his presence and power that any spirit of meekness, love, humility or obedience dwells within us. These things are the fruits of the divine life, and by these fruits he is glorified.

I feel that any words of mine must utterly fail to show forth this true glory of Jesus as I see it in my mind. And I know that what I can see is but a partial conception, at the best, of all that the Scriptures teach. Now it seems to me that it is this glory of the divine life first manifest in himself, and then by the working of its own almighty power made manifest in his people, that Jesus presents in this striking figure of the corn of wheat falling into the ground and dying, and then bringing forth much fruit. When Jesus himself uses a comparison we know that it is correct, and we can rest upon it safely. Jesus here says in substance that the history of a corn of wheat is also a history of himself. The one is visible, and tangible to our mortal senses; the other is spiritual, and seen and felt only by the spiritual. This parable does not reveal that which is spiritual to the natural man, and no words of ours can give sight to the blind. But to the spiritual mind this and all other parables convey spiritual truth, under the similitude of that which is natural. I desire then to close this article by briefly tracing this comparison used by our Lord and Master.

First, "the corn of wheat is living, and has life in itself. So Jesus had life in himself. He is the life. So far as the parable is concerned we must not ask how the corn or grain of wheat came to have this life. Jesus just takes the living grain as it is, and we have no right to trace the comparison further back than he has done. We have a right to say that the corn of wheat had life, because it could not be said to die unless it had life to yield up.

Second the corn of wheat is cast into the ground. So Jesus, the living seed, came down from heaven to earth and dwelt in earth. As the seed is cast into the earth by the hand of the sower, so God sent his dear Son into this world.

Third, the seed lives as long as it is not cast into the earth; but it lives in itself only, and does not live in anything else. So Jesus says of himself, that he must have abided alone, although he lived, except he had come into earth.

Fourth, as the corn of wheat, though cast into the earth, must still abide alone except it die, so also Jesus, coming to earth, is still alone until he also dies. Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer these things, and to enter into his glory.

Fifth, as the corn of wheat must be cast into the earth upon which we live and move, so must Jesus come down and dwell in human flesh. This is, strictly speaking, the earth into which he came.

Sixth, the object of casting the corn of wheat into the earth is that it may die, and, dying, gather to itself a more glorious body which shall bear fruit for the husbandman, and glorify the seed in which was its life. So also the object of Jesus' coming to earth was that he might die, and, dying, build up his glorious body, which should bear fruit to the glory of God, the heavenly husbandman.

Seventh, as the earth, into which the corn of wheat is cast, is of itself dead, and never can of itself live, so we are of ourselves dead to all divine life, and never can of ourselves live.

Eighth, as the corn of wheat when cast into the earth and dying reaches out and by the power of its own life lays hold of that which was dead, and gives it life, and brings it thus into living organic union with itself, and thus builds up its own living and glorious body, so Christ, being lifted up, draws all men to himself; that is (to carry out the language of the parable), he takes hold, by his own power, of men and women who were and are dead, and quickens them from the dead, and brings them into union (life union) and communion with himself, and builds them up into his own glorious body, that in them, as his living people, he may be glorified and exalted. And so the apostle's words are fulfilled in each one of his chosen people, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and in sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." Surely no stronger or clearer presentation of the work of Christ as the living seed, the quickening Spirit in and upon the dead, could be presented. We were dead; and if we now live, it is because Christ is our life and lives within us. Thus life conquers death, and makes the dead live and bear living fruit unto God.

As I have written the above thoughts the constant thought of my mind has been, am I interested in all this glorious work? Is Jesus glorified in me? Has he made me alive from the dead? and has he brought me, an alien and a stranger, into living and loving union with himself? How far off I was by nature from him! as far as death is from life! I find in answer to these questions a hope springing up in my heart that to me also has he said, "And because I live, ye shall live also."

I remain your brother in the precious hope of everlasting life.

F. A. CHICK.

MRS. J. K. BOYD—DEAR SISTER IN THE LOVE OF GOD:—Not knowing who, if any one, will respond to your request through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of January 3d, 1894, it is on my mind this evening to suggest a few thoughts for your consideration, and will in the first place say that I fully indorse what you have written in your article I refer to. It is the special duty of God's children, when they see the sword coming, to warn the Lord's little ones. It does not matter in what form, nor from what direction it comes, we should show the Lord's people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins. The devil through his policy and cunning craftiness ensnares the Lord's people more through the spirit of amalgamation than in any other way, probably. The Old Testament abounds with proofs of this fact, so much so that I shall mention but few of them. The reader can read for himself. We are emphatically told in the Scriptures to "Let them alone." And again, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 10, 11. Then, if we should even refrain from receiving them into our house (church), but brother them, or go to hear them, one or both, we are partakers of their evil deeds. To countenance their religious maneuverings in any way is sin; "For whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." And we cannot have any faith in either their doctrine or practice, if we believe our own and the Bible; for they are opposite to each other, as much so as things can possibly be. Now, so far as extremes are concerned, we ought all to be extremists. My reason for saying thus is, that heaven and hell are as extreme as extremes can be; so is Christ and Belial, light and darkness, truth and error, and the meek and lowly followers of Jesus and the ravenous wolves, &c. Now, the church's faithfulness to her head and husband these seducers call prejudice and selfishness, saying, "There is but little between us, and we worship God the same as you do. Let us all build together. Let us all have one purse," &c. Now, sister Boyd, I am not prepared to say whether there is little or much between the Lord's people and their religious neighbors, or enemies; for I was not present when the Lord put the enmity between the serpent and the woman, between his seed and her seed; but there is one thing that I am prepared to say, and that is, be it little or much, God put it there; and "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever." Forasmuch then as God put it there in the morning of time, it is there now, and has been all along the line, and shall be forever. It is not our privilege to remove this enmity or gulf (Luke xvi. 26) if we could do so; but we have no ability to do so, even if we had the inclination. These are things that God has in his own power; hence they are not ours to tamper with. Poor, sinful man had better keep his dirty hands out of the Lord's business. I say, this enmity has existed all along the line from the garden down till now, between the two families (Christ and antichrist), so that they have never got together (in sentiment); no, nor ever will. It is even written, "The people [Israel] shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations." This has reference to the religious singularity of the Lord's people; that they shall not be reckoned among the religious denominations, but "shall dwell in safety alone." To sanction their doctrine and pretensions of religion is to deny ours and contradict the Bible: The Lord chose his people in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love; and he hath not only chosen them in him before the foundation of the world, but saved them, and called them with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in him before the world began. The Lord's children are a special and peculiar people, whom he hath loved with an everlasting love, and hath set them apart for himself; in whom he has said, he will be glorified. Hence we cannot mingle or intermingle with them in any way religiously, and be innocent; for they are called in the Scriptures "Whited Sepulchers," "full of dead men's bones." They are also called graves, tombs, monuments, men's bones, dead bodies, &c.; and in the type, in the ancient, when an Israelite touched any of them he was unclean, and therefore had to be shut out of the camp until he was cleansed according to the law of purification. Now, dear saint of God, we have but to examine this type and law of cleansing national Israel, and we are at no loss to see spiritual Israel dabbling with the dead bodies, bones of men, whited sepulchers, &c., which indeed appear beautiful to the natural thought, enticing to blind reason, and right to the carnal heart. I want to instance a case or two that I am personally acquainted with; it has been and is among us here. I know of two aged Elders who have been preaching for many years, who commenced dabbling with their religious neighbors, preaching with them, brothering them, &c.; and it went on from bad to worse, and from worse to worst, until last summer one of them, to cap the climax of assumption, led off about two hundred of men's bones, and abruptly organized themselves into a little mushroom association, and since then have organized one little bantling (church) with eight members, and have been proposing to receive members on their Methodist "baptism;" and the most of the members, who were baptized by the other brother of later years, are gone into the faction. The body is a viper, in a doctrinal sense, and makes it a point to abuse the Old Baptists, and the Bible doctrine. I have not written these things to insinuate on those people whatever, but as dear children of God we may take these things as examples; "For many strong men have been slain by her." I do most assuredly believe that the two Elders I have mentioned are men of God; and my humble convictions are that if the church had dealt faithfully with these brethren when they first began to violate her laws, trample down her admonishments, and err from the path of truth and uprightness, she would have saved a soul (this preacher) from death, and hid a multitude of sins; for it is as plain as noonday now that the church through sympathy of the flesh neglected her duty and was not faithful toward her gifts. Hence a multitude of sins are manifested, involving the church, preacher, and those weaker children for whom Christ died, which might have been hid, and this erring faction saved from the death to spiritual enjoyment and fellowship of the saints, if the church had dealt faithfully with them, and enforced her law and rule of cleansing; for good discipline will not destroy good material.

And now, dear children of God, there is no way better than the best way, and no way safer than the safest way; and Boaz's counsel to Ruth was, "Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens"—the ministers of God, who preach with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. It has always been a damper to me, when I knew of one of the Lord's ministers dabbling with these dead bodies, handling men's bones, &c., and then baptizing a member in the fellowship of a gospel church. It does in reality seem to me that there is an impediment, a stain, a pollution, &c.; for the Scripture says, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." And it is asserted also in the Scriptures, "Whosoever toucheth one that is slain with the sword in the open fields [the church is a garden inclosed], or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days."—Num. xix. 16. And such must be shut out from the congregation until cleansed. "But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul [person] shall be cut off from among the congregation; because he hath defiled the sanctuary [church] of the Lord, &c. Verse 20.

I have extended this letter too long; but as I have written the subject has magnified, and the field widened, and my heart inflamed with love for the Lord's humble poor.

This letter is at your disposal. Remember me in prayers.

Yours in hope,

W. J. MAY.

BATH, Maine, Jan. 5, 1894.

MY BELOVED SISTER BESSIE:—Your letter found me well in body and mind, and I feel like trying to tell you of the exercises of my mind. There is quite an excitement in Bowdoinham, and many are following those who preach sanctification the work of man. I have been hearing about it, and the Lord has led my mind to travel over the path again of how I was brought to a knowledge of the truth. I cannot write it all out clearly how this love was shed abroad in my heart and I was made to love the things I once hated. I was led in a way I knew not. It was the Lord's work, and marvelous in my eyes then, and it always seems marvelous whenever I am made to meditate upon it. The Lord has made me glad many times for the great things he has done for me. I can never forget when I was going to "work for Jesus and help him to save souls," as it is expressed by the world. And, dear Bessie, I should be in that very place to-day if the Lord had not taught me I was a justly condemned sinner, and cut me off from every work of my own. He made me cry out, "Lord, save, or I perish." "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." Just at the time when it seemed as if there could be no way for me to be saved, this same wonder-working God revealed Jesus unto me as my Savior. I saw the plan of salvation by grace, and my joy could not be expressed. Jesus had finished the work of salvation, and it was beautiful and glorious. Every step of my experience has made me know it was not my own works. I almost always say, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and

GODLY FEAR.

"WHEREFORE we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire."—Heb. xii. 28, 29.

In compliance with the request of our brother whose note of inquiry will be found in another column of this paper, this text is appropriate as speaking of "godly fear." This is very different from that fear of personal suffering for sin, which invariably produces terror in the heart of every one who is made conscious of his subjection to its power. It is of this difference that our correspondent wishes an expression of the views given us. While it is evident that there is nothing in godly fear inconsistent with perfect love, it is also true that there is a fear which hath torment, and which is clearly cast out by perfect love, that heavenly fruit of the holy Spirit of Christ which is given unto those whom he has called by his grace. In contrast with the spirit of bondage under the legal terrors of the old Sinai covenant, the new, gospel dispensation has no voice of words whose awful sound brings fearful consternation to those who hear its dreadful thunders. Indeed, it is because that the kingdom of our Lord is established in holiness and love, that there is in it neither curse nor crying, nor sorrow, nor death; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.—Rev. xxi. 4; xxii. 3. The reason assigned for this infinite blessedness is not that the saints are better in themselves than their fellow-men, but that the throne of God and of the Lamb is in this holy city.

Those who are included with the inspired writer in receiving this kingdom which cannot be moved, are the exclusive heirs of this blessed inheritance with the Lord Jesus. Only as he is identified with the church, which is his body and the fullness of him that filleth all in all, can the Lord Jesus Christ be revealed as inheriting all things. In his eternal glory as the God of the universe, he can inherit nothing, since all things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In his self-existing Godhead there could be nothing for him to inherit. Therefore every member of his body, every subject of his salvation, is inseparable from him in the inheritance of all that glory which is given to him by the Father. In him we do receive the kingdom which he has received of his Father, and thus all of those for whom he gave himself a ransom do sit with him in the throne of his glory. This kingdom is not like the kingdoms of this world, which pass away; it is an everlasting kingdom, so that not even the destroying hand of time can remove it, or change its glory. Neither is it held before us as a reward to be won by our careful observance of precepts and conditions. The text speaks of the kingdom as a thing which even now we are receiving continually. The hypocrisy of will-worshippers is exposed by the conclusion they draw from this established truth. They find in it the removal of every inducement known to them for the saints to refrain from sin and to desire righteousness. It will be observed that in our text the very reverse of this conclusion is presented as the legitimate consequence of the assured enjoyment of this divine grace thus bestowed and already received by us. The Spirit of truth, in the unchanging certainty of this possession of the kingdom of God, has stated the ground upon which we are authorized to "come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."—Heb. iv. 16. This is the same sentiment presented in our text. "Let us have grace," not that we may hold out faithful to the end of this earthly life, so as to deserve eternal glory as the reward due to our persistent efforts, but that we may thereby be enabled to "serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." This service is the most delightful bliss to which the real saint can aspire.

Those who are chosen of God in Christ Jesus to the grace of receiving this kingdom are the only characters included by the writer with himself in the word "we." There could be no propriety in applying this language to those who have no interest in the kingdom specified. His own disciples are exclusively addressed by our Lord when he says, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke xii. 32. It must be that same little flock by whom the kingdom is received; since the fact that it is given to them includes the fact that they have received it. Not even in natural things can there be a gift unless that one to whom it is given has received the gift. It might be that there had been an offer made; but it is not a gift until it is received. So they unto whom the language of our text is addressed are definitely limited to such as have the kingdom of God in themselves. Those in the nation of Israel unto whom this letter was written were in possession of the kingdom by which they were identified as the "little flock" unto whom it was given. That natural kingdom which was given them in the flesh as children of Abraham had been moved, since they were then under the yoke of Roman bondage. The kingdom which cannot be moved is the same of which Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world." There can be no earthly "kingdom which cannot be moved," since the very fashion of this world passeth away. As our Redeemer claimed no earthly throne, so his disciples must expect no recognition from the world. They receive the kingdom of God, which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; and this heavenly kingdom comes not with observation, or outward show.—Luke xvii. 20. Not even the natural mind of those to whom it is given can see the divinely glorious kingdom. This is the occasion of the constant warfare between the sure testimony of the faith of Christ in the saints on one hand, and on the other hand, that of their natural reason which cannot see the spiritual evidence borne by faith. From this darkness of the natural mind arises all the unbelief which troubles the saints. No fruit of the Spirit can be discerned by the natural mind, and therefore reason can never see the godly fear which always causes the subjects of grace to tremble at the word of the Lord. The very fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom, when presented to the judgment of reason is accounted as an evidence that the sinner is not led by the Spirit of God. Very often the saints are sorely tried on this point, feeling conscious of their own destitution of righteousness in their flesh, and, like our "Inquirer," fearing that they have never known the Spirit of the Lord Jesus as their justification before God, they are ready to yield to despair under the apprehension that their only fear is that carnal terror which causes believing devils to tremble.—James ii. 19. Certainly that is not godly fear which produces their miserable distress. It is to them an evident token of perdition that they are tormented by the conclusive evidence of the same truth of divine sovereignty in which the saints find assurance of salvation, and that of God.

While wicked men and devils are subject to this fear which has the torment of slavish terror, it is only by the revelation of that grace which is in Christ Jesus that any sinner can know that fear of the Lord which manifests the hatred of evil. Selfish pride may inspire in the natural mind very bitter condemnation of the sins of other people, but nothing less than the Spirit of God can produce that hatred of sin which causes its subject to abhor himself as a justly condemned sinner. Where this fear rules in the heart it always develops those peculiar fruits which are specified by our Lord as manifesting the subjects of divine blessing. Its effect is seen in those who are poor in spirit, in them that mourn, in the meek, in them that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, in the merciful, and in all who bear the image of Jesus as persecuted and despised strangers and pilgrims, who find no city to dwell in among the self-righteous idolaters of this world. Such is the fear which marks those who have seen the glory of holiness revealed in the face of Jesus Christ. They adore and tremble before the perfection of God as it has shined in their own heart. This is a heavenly fear of the Lord, inseparable from the perfect love which casteth out the selfish fear which our "Inquirer" doubtless means when he specifies "slavish fear." We have no knowledge of any fear in the natural heart but that "hath torment." This results from the selfishness of the carnal mind. Whatever restrains the evil inclination of that mind is regarded as opposing the interest of self; and the enmity of that heart is thereby excited; this results in expressions of enmity and rebellion against that God who has set bounds to the wickedness of man.

In direct reply to the request of our brother, it might be said that the fear which hath torment is the product of the natural mind, and is included in the enmity against God which is itself the very embodiment of all that is abhorrent to the law of perfect holiness; the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, is entirely distinct from every fleshly emotion. There is nothing selfish in this divine fruit of the Spirit. It is impossible that it should be produced by any effort of the natural mind or will. It is beyond the power of the natural mind even to desire to have this fruit of holiness. The only fear which can originate in the heart of a sinner is the same selfish emotion which produces trembling in devils who believe. Such fear could not lead to the belief that it was itself a delusion. The fear of the Lord searches the heart and causes the cry to go out to God for light to penetrate the dark recesses where evil thoughts are hidden. Every one who is governed by this godly fear can say with the psalmist, "I hate vain thoughts; but thy law do I love." This is the abiding witness of the Spirit dwelling in the heart of those who are thus hungering after perfect righteousness. If any one feels that he has attained unto the perfection demanded by the law he cannot hunger and thirst after that which he honestly supposes that he has secured. None ever mourn their own vileness but those who love holiness; and none love holiness but those who are led by the Spirit of God. All such are the sons of God. This is the inspired decision of every such case. It is already recorded in the eternal testimony of God; and no cavils of reason and the adversary can ever change its comforting and conclusive assurance in support of the hope of such as long for the salvation of God. While "perfect love casteth out fear," that love is itself the filial fear of the Lord by which the children of God are manifested. So far it is from forbidding the hope of those in whom it dwells, that it is the most indisputably conclusive assurance that they are the sons of God.

In the strong array of charges which our "Inquirer" has brought for the support of his unbelieving doubts, those who are true disciples of Jesus cannot fail to read their own experience. Indeed, it is hardly possible that he could himself feel any fellowship for one who never knew such trials as those in which he recognizes his own condemnation. If the purpose for which God has made himself known to our friend and brother was that he might harden his heart, as he fears, it certainly has failed to result as it was designed, since the very anxiety of his earnest desire to know the truth proves that his heart is melted under the burning power of the love of righteousness wrought in him by the Spirit of holiness which has been given to him. Our brother cannot for a moment entertain the belief that any purpose of God has failed. When the heart of Pharaoh was hardened by the Lord, it was not his desire to be filled with the love of God. Neither did he desire the prayer of Moses in his behalf when the Lord would destroy him.

In regard to the case of Simon the sorcerer, to which our "Inquirer" refers, it is not our province to decide as to the genuineness of his profession. The record states that he believed. His effort to buy with money the gift of the Holy Ghost, was the occasion of the severe rebuke administered by the inspired apostle. In that transaction his money did perish with him, being utterly rejected. But one thing is certain in regard to the case; if he really desired the prayer of the apostle on his behalf, he was a true believer then, even though his former profession may have been false. Would Peter have directed him to repent and pray, if he had not recognized him as a subject of salvation? It is not essential to our present experience to know what was true of others mentioned in the Scriptures, further than they are for our instruction in what is written of them. It is not wise for us to ask, "Lord, what shall this man do?" The important point is to render obedience to every precept given to us. The question of our fitness does not enter into the case at all. The only qualification required is, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "Love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." "And this is life eternal; that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." When unbelief challenges the hope of one who loves the truth, it involves the rejection of the decision of the church by whom he has been received, and of the inspired Scriptures, in which he finds his own experience written. Godly fear confesses the truth of the testimony of God; slavish fear cannot receive or know that truth.

SHALL WE CONTINUE THEM?

THOSE of our readers who have interested themselves in the matter cannot but have noticed the great falling off in the contributions to the "Indigent Fund." While we feel considerable delicacy in calling attention to this matter, we deem it a duty in behalf of those who have been supplied the paper through the kindness of the brethren and friends contributing to this fund, to state that unless assisted in this matter we shall be compelled to drop many from our list who are really unable to pay anything for their paper, but who most highly appreciate the privilege of reading it. We have never been financially benefited by this fund, for we have always carried twice as many indigent subscribers as there have been dollars contributed.

By reference to the receipts published it will be seen that there have been just sixty-two dollars received for this year. We are supplying the paper to several hundred gratis, that is, except what is received for this fund, and unless assisted we shall not be able to continue sending the paper to them.

UNTIL MARCH

first, 1894, we authorize every subscriber on our list to act as agent for us in procuring new subscribers, and for every new subscriber they send us they may retain one dollar, and send us one dollar. These terms apply only to new subscribers.

For every two new subscribers and three dollars sent us we will enter the two new names on our list for 1894, and credit an old subscriber one year; making three subscriptions for a year for three dollars, and additional new ones may be sent at one dollar each.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK US TO SEND A NEW ONE AND CREDIT AN OLD SUBSCRIBER ONE YEAR FOR TWO DOLLARS, AS WE CANNOT AFFORD TO DO IT.

N. B.—No new subscriber can send to this office and get the paper for himself for less than the regular rate.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed several hundred extra copies of each number of this volume, and shall continue to run a surplus of each issue until further notice, so that all new names sent in, can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

I will declare what he hath done for my soul." He loved me first, and chose me in Christ before the foundation of the world. I cannot help loving him, for he has filled my heart with his love. I cannot help rejoicing in Christ Jesus, for the Father has made me know it pleased him to have all fullness dwell in Jesus; and I cannot have any confidence in the flesh after being made to see all I need treasured up in Jesus. There is not the least chance for me to think I ought to try and tell those who trust in their own works that they are wrong. Only the power of God is sufficient for these things. I can go home to my friends and tell them what the Lord has done for me, and there will be great rejoicing. I feel I am at home talking with you about these things, which have filled my heart with a sweet joy. The thought comes into my mind whether the Lord will bring one little lamb to the fold amidst all the confusion and excitement around the church at Bowdoinham. I feel so glad my home is with this dear people who trust in the living God. Each one has been taught of the Lord that "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." We have seen Jesus as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, and have been established in the truth. It is the precious things of the gospel which give us the joy which satisfies and sanctifies the mind. I have just read your dear letter again; and your request for me to write "just what the Lord gives you," seems to have been complied with; for I feel these things I have been trying to write you about have come from him, and not from the flesh. I have enjoyed writing to sister Dulin, and thank you for sending your letter to me with the request to write to her. I received a card from her the other day, asking to send my last letter to the SIGNS, as there were so many good things in it. I did not dare to say no, and I can rely yet on brethren Beebe's judgment. I cannot remember how my mind was led to write to her, but probably nothing worth publishing, the same as this delightful chat with you. I have enjoyed trying to tell you of the way my mind is led, but I cannot make you feel the joy in my heart. Here comes the Lord's work again; for as you read, he can lead your mind in the same way he has mine, and you will rejoice too. Perhaps after reading this you will be impressed to take your pen and write more clearly of the way you have been led, and send it to the SIGNS, and then all the brethren would have something worth reading. I hope sometime to meet sister Hobbs and the dear sister you are visiting now. I was glad to read sister Hobbs's letter in the SIGNS, for I enjoyed the editorial about the "Rev. D. D." I am surrounded with the same false religion, the same weak, helpless god. It is a good thing for the heart to be established with grace. I do still write a letter to sister Mary Parker every week. A short time ago I had the feeling take possession of me that they could not interest her, and I wrote her about it, so she could tell me whether they did or not. It had been many months since I had had a letter from her; and although I knew she was suffering terribly, and could not write, yet I was afraid a letter every week would only add to her troubles. But she wrote me one of her good letters, and assured me I was welcome every week; for if she was too sick to read it the day it came, she enjoyed it when she could read it. I expect I enjoy it the most, for it is pleasant to hurry my work when she comes into my mind and get a chance to sit down and tell her of the thoughts passing through my mind. Even if I am feeling the exceeding sinfulness of my heart, and having a view of how far short I come of being what I have professed, and the warfare rages fiercely, I do not want to complain; for the lesson has been taught me many times, so I could say, "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing." I desire to wait patiently until the Lord appears for my help, and gives me a view of the blessed Savior, who has not left one enemy for me to overcome in my own strength. How beautiful it is that God giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. But, my dear Bessie, you will be tired reading this long letter. I hope you will write every time you can. We do not move from here until the last of February. I will let you know. Give my love to all the saints you meet. May God give you the peace of Christ, and then your joy will be full, is the desire of your loving sister in hope,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 2, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Through the goodness and mercy of our covenant-keeping God I am still spared, and hope I am truly thankful to God, who is the giver of every good and perfect gift. In him we live and move and have our being. I feel very much as did Jeremiah of old when he was called to speak to Israel; and Jesus says, "Without me ye can do nothing." I have had a desire to write to the dear brethren and sisters, but feeling my inability I have put it off. I have just finished reading the SIGNS of November 29th, which is full of instruction and comfort. The first communication is from our dear pastor, and full of instruction and comfort. The next is from A. H. Williamson, full of marrow and fatness, followed by one from Jefferson Farley, speaking of the time when the burden of sin rolled off, and he felt easier than he ever before had. Methinks that every heaven-born child can bear witness to that experience.

O that every one who has felt their sins forgiven might feel the force of the Scripture, "Go home to thy friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee." I love to hear the babes in Christ tell their experience. It takes me back fifty-six years ago, when I felt the burden of sin taken away, when in my twentieth year. How apt the child of God is to think that then is the end of their troubles. But alas! we find that we are in the flesh. How comforting when we can call to mind the precious words, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Then let us "glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." "For when we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Can we not bear witness to this Scripture? I would encourage the dear brother to go on and tell what a dear Savior he has found; to speak comfortably unto Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, because she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sin. Although you feel weak and poor, Christ is in you the hope of glory. He is your strength.

Brother H. W. Newton says he falls so far short of commanding language to convey his thoughts or express his feelings. I am not a stranger to such feelings. I feel unworthy to take the holy name of God upon my polluted lips; but I desire to go in the worthy name of Jesus, for there is no goodness in myself.

I have been much edified in reading the SIGNS. It is a great comfort to hear from those who speak the same language. I would say to those who have so kindly written me that I am not capable of writing to them. I often think, How can it be possible that anything I write or say will do anyone good? But we read, "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

This morning after I read the SIGNS my heart was so drawn out by what it contained that I felt to respond to it. I was filled with a sense of the goodness of God, that I should receive tokens of his love and mercy. I felt strengthened to go on my journey, rejoicing in hope of eternal life. But I need not picture out this number of the SIGNS alone, for they are all full of marrow, and wine on the lees well refined. Some may say, Do not speak so highly of the SIGNS. If I did not believe that it sets forth Bible doctrine I could not uphold it. It sets forth that which I believe to be truth.

I have been called to part with a beloved brother in the flesh, Jacob M. Search. He was very dear to us all. We have hope that our loss is his gain. He had enjoyed a hope for many years, but like many others he had not the strength or felt his unworthiness too much to acknowledge it. I have also been called to part with a dear little grandson, who was the joy of the whole household. May we be still and know that the Lord is God, who has a right to do whatsoever seemeth good in his sight.

Lest I weary you with my letter I will close. Your sister in Christ, I hope, ANN M. FETTER.

STATE ROAD, Del., Jan., 1894.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Since I learned of the sudden death of our beloved sister Ruth Anna Holcomb, and read the obituary notice of her death, I have thought about writing a brief biographical sketch of her life and christian experience. The work of grace is in many respects the same in all cases, and the lessons taught are the same. Many miracles were wrought by Christ and the apostles, but it was not in every case that the enemies were constrained to acknowledge that "A notable miracle hath been done, and we cannot deny it."

Sister Holcomb was born and raised several miles away from any church of our order, and her parents never made any profession. I knew her first as a scholar in my school, conscientious and obedient, both in the school and at home. After I left the state I learned that she frequently attended the Kingwood Church, and manifested much interest in the preaching, while yet a child. Her father was not opposed, and would provide a way for her to go when he could. About the time she was grown up her health began to fail, and for many months she was confined to her room or to her bed. I do not not know that any of the brethren or sisters ever called during her long illness to see her. The family residence was quite out of the way. There was little prospect of her ever being able to attend another preaching appointment. I could not but feel much sympathy for her, and I remember writing to her, hoping to give her some assurance that she was not forgotten, and that some at least were aware that she loved that gospel truth which she was now deprived of hearing. She gradually recovered sufficient health to be up and about. Meantime she lost her mother, who was, I think, an experienced woman. Then her father began to go down, and for some years she cared tenderly for him until he was called away. There was now no way to any of the churches but by the railroads, and there was no railroad to Kingwood. Eventually, as is now known, she went to one of the Hopewell churches and offered, and was gladly received; showing in all the after years of her life that meek and humble spirit characteristic of the saints. The village of Stockton, where she resided for a time, was a place for occasional appointments, and sister Holcomb could always be counted in the company. Latterly she had resided in Trenton, where an interesting company of Baptists have for some years kept up regular preaching appointments. When one is clothed with the garments of salvation, what a prominent place it gives them in the courts of the Lord's house. An orphan girl, without health, and with limited means, and having to endure repeated domestic afflictions, how brightly shone the work of grace, and how the fruits of the Spirit did abound.

About the time that sister Holcomb went to the church, as I was quite well acquainted with all the way she was being led, I wrote and sent to her an acrostic on her name, expressing what I supposed she would feel to adopt as expressing her own mind. Several letters from her pen have appeared in the SIGNS.

Recorded be my name among the heirs of grace;

Unsealed be the book, that I may therein trace

The dealings of the Lord with poor, unworthy me;

His loving kindness prove, and all his beauty see.

Among the happy throng, upon the mount of God,

Named with the Father's name, and washed in Jesus' blood;

New joys to know, with heavenly harps to sing

A new, melodious song of praise to Zion's King.

Here may my spirit dwell; here would my soul find rest,

O'erwhelmed with Jesus' love, and with his presence blest;

Let me but see his face, and hear his gracious voice

Call me his loved child, and I can then rejoice.

Over my life his sheltering wings be spread,

My soul in pastures green by living streams be fed.

Blest Jesus, to thy kingdom may thy child be led.

In continued fellowship,

E. RITTENHOUSE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 29, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you a short but very full letter from brother Marvin Vail. It is so good, so joyful, so full of praise to the Lord, so comforting, that I cannot feel willing to keep it to myself; and I have told him so. He has been in so dark a state of mind that the coming of the morning again to him is a joy to me. Whether in the dark or in the light, he tells so much of my feeling that I am always glad to hear him speak, and I know it is so with many. If the Lord will, he will be with this church on the third Sunday in March.

My wife and children went to Florida about December 1st, on account of her health. If the Lord will, I expect to leave here February 12th, and join them at Winter Park, Orange Co., Florida. All my letters will be forwarded from this office, and will reach me wherever I may be, until my return. Sister Bessie is visiting friends and relatives in New York City, Middletown and vicinity.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

WAVERLY, Pa., Jan. 22, 1894.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—Your very precious letter was received. I think I have been in a frame of mind for several days to appreciate the testimony of God's children. What a change from the terrible state of mind I was in for weeks, when I could scarcely think of anything but "Curse God and die." And can you believe it, the very thing that was the cause of my terrible state of mind was afterward turned to my great comfort. Could I tell you what I saw in both Job and his wife, I would be glad, though I suppose it would be nothing new to you. Two weeks ago I attended the funeral of a little child four years old; and while the people were viewing the clay such glorious thoughts came pouring into my mind as I never can describe. O! I thought, could these sorrowing friends see and feel as I do, they could but rejoice. The clay seemed nothing to me, but I saw in my mind the glorified body of Christ, the church. But I hardly dare mention it. Perhaps I ought not. I fear, I dread the awful place I have been in back of this sweet resting place, so much so that it has marred my joy sometimes the last few days. Will the dear Lord take me there again? If I feel, as I do now, that the Lord loves me, and I love his dear people, I can bear it joyfully; but to be left alone, with nothing but my vile, sinful self, is horrible in the extreme. A few days ago I got to thinking, Do the saints of God pray for me? The more I thought it over, the more I felt I must know, until I found myself in real agony. I felt I must know; but how I was to know I could not tell. But Jesus spoke a feeling in my poor heart and answered my desire. I heard no voice, I saw no man, but O such love as I felt for Jesus and his people! I knew they loved me, and as they loved me they prayed for me.

I will stop here. We are usually well, and hope you and family are well. Love to all. Write again.

Yours in love,

D. M. VAIL.

WESTON, Mich., Jan. 15, 1894.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—In mind I am with the family of the dear ones who read the SIGNS, and it is impressed upon me to write something of what I hope are the Lord's dealings with me; but I so poorly express myself that I am always afraid to try. I have been in darkness a long time; but this morning the Sun of righteousness with all his healing glory has arisen, and with joy I am enabled to say, "Let the inhabitants of the rock sing." "Sing unto the Lord a new song." "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Blessed are they that trust in the Lord. I have received joy for mourning. Blessed be his holy name, he is God, and there is none other. How precious to have such an assurance, to be enabled to say, My Lord and my God! How gladly we obey his command, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest," when he gives us the will to do so. Is not this indeed wonderful, to know that it is all of God? Not one thing did man have to do with it, else it would not be all of God. He hath placed my feet upon a rock. He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise to his adorable name. He hath loved me with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness hath he drawn me. He hath made darkness light before me.

I have been very sick with La Grippe. How many weary hours I have lain in bed; and the thought of our dear sister Mary Parker, sitting as she does, compelled me to say, often to say, How much better off I am than poor Mary; for I can lie down. I often wonder if the Lord has sent the affliction to that patient sufferer, that we might be reached through her. Surely every one of our Father's children sometimes wonder why it is so. Yet we know it is the Lord.

I enjoyed the communication from brother Curry on the Columbian Exposition, and also many others I could speak of in the SIGNS. Why, it is the only paper we have to read and know we are reading the truth; for we are not blind; the Lord has opened our eyes that we may see his wonderful works, though the world sees not. Yet how often I am amazed when I ask myself,

"Why was I made to hear his voice,
And enter where there's room,
While others make a wretched choice,
And rather starve than come?"

It is the Lord's work. He doeth all things well; and although it appears to us as though all is confusion in our national affairs, yet God is able to bring order out of confusion. Can we not trust him?

But I must not take too much of your time. May you be blessed in your labors. May the Lord give you out of his storehouse all things needful, is my earnest wish.

SARAH E. WYMAN.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1894.

MISS MAGGIE HARDING—MY DEAR SISTER:—I have made several attempts to write you since I have been here, but could not do so until now. I came here about three months ago, not expecting to be gone from home more than about three weeks. I may be home very soon, but cannot say positively. O how I have longed to meet with the church once more, as I have not met with you since the first Saturday and Sunday in July last. How many times of late these words have been presented to me,

"One day amidst the place
Where my dear Lord has been
Is sweeter than ten thousand days
Of pleasurable sin."

Nor have I heard a sermon preached since last July. O how desolate indeed is our sojourn here if we cannot have church privileges. I feel to express the language of Ruth to Naomi, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." I would love to write a few lines to the church, to let them know I would like so much to meet with them and hear them tell of their joys and sorrows, and to hear our dear pastor explain the Scriptures, as he does, which is meat and drink indeed to the hungry soul. But knowing my utter inability to say anything that they could understand, I hesitate about writing at all. But I do sometimes hope the Lord is merciful unto me, and that he ever liveth to make intercession for me; but the most part of the time I feel that he has forgotten to be gracious unto me, I feel so miserable and undone. I am so prone to sin and unbelief that thick darkness pervades my pathway, and I cry, "Unclean! unclean!" I feel too mean and low to ask for a ray of light to shine once more to soothe my sorrowing heart. But before I know it I am asking for his mercy, and saying, "O Lord, thou son of David, have mercy on me." O! I do feel that language cannot express my heartfelt thanks for a heart to pray, as I sometimes hope he has given it me. My sins are so great that sometimes I feel pardon is not for me, and that I must give up in despair. But as light shineth in a dark place, so his light will shine, and cause me to praise his great and holy name, with joy unspeakable. Then I say, Great is the mystery of godliness. It is past finding out. It is not known unless revealed according to his holy will. I feel to say, Thy will, O Lord, be done; not mine. Poor me, I am not worthy to have one good thought. But he worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. The fifteenth chapter of John is very precious to me, and has been for some time.

I must bring this scribble to a close, as I fear you will tire of reading it. If you attend the next meeting at New Vernon you may tell the church that you have heard from me, and that I have not forgotten them, and hope they will remember me, a poor worm groveling in darkness.

With much love to each of you, I will close. Your sister in hope of a better world, world without end, MARY J. DORMAN.

JANUARY 12, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS on what the difference is between godly fear and slavish fear? We read that perfect love casteth out all fear, and that he that feareth is not made perfect in love. I know I fear God, but I am led to believe that it is only a slavish fear of my just punishment. I know if I am a child of God all is well; but I greatly fear I am not. I have many reasons for thinking so; and if you feel as I do you would think the same, and could have no fellowship for me. Yet I feel that the dear brethren have hitherto fellowshiped me, and I have had fellowship for them; for they believe in the same Almighty God that I do; that he has all power in heaven and earth, and that he will save all whom Jesus suffered for on the cross. Yet I feel that we might believe all this and yet have no interest in his shed blood. This I greatly fear is my case. Is this a slavish fear? It seems if I ever have known the power of God it is only as he has made himself manifest to such as have no interest in his shed blood, and only to make his power known in hardening the heart, for a purpose known only to himself. I ask you to pray for me. So did Simon the sorcerer ask to be prayed for; but his heart was not right, and he was in the gall of bitterness. Was he a child of God?

GITTINGS, Md., Feb. 3, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed find two dollars, which please apply to sending the SIGNS to those who are needy. I should have sent sooner, but my mind and time have been very much occupied. I fear there are not so many responding to the necessity of this fund as heretofore. If so, this is wrong. If my little mite will supply the SIGNS to two of God's dear little ones, who so love to read it, ought not I to be thankful to the Giver of every good that he has enabled me to do it? I certainly do feel thankful, and am glad to do it, or I would not. It seems to me that I can recognize the hand and power and purpose of God in all things. If I am cast down I can see his hand; if I am lifted up I can also see his hand; or if fortune or misfortune, it is of him whose purpose is being fulfilled.

Yours in hope,

MILTON DANCE.

[We take the liberty to publish the above letter without obtaining the consent of brother Dance, as it is so in accord with the notice first published in last number, under the caption, "Shall we continue them?" We trust the brethren and friends will appreciate our position in this matter. On the one hand we are pained to be obliged to discontinue the paper to any brother or sister because they are too poor to pay for it; and on the other hand we feel a delicacy about calling for aid; yet without assistance we are not able to continue them.—ED.]

OBITUARY NOTICES.

By request I send the obituary of our sister, Mrs. Mary Ardes, who was born July 30th, 1805, in Belfast, Ireland, and died Nov. 9th, 1893, at Mayfair, in the township of Ekfrid, Ontario, Canada, aged 88 years, 3 months and 10 days.

She was a member of the Particular Covenanted Baptist Church of Ontario. She with her son and sister moved from the city of New York some years ago and took up their residence with sister Gurney, close to the meeting-house in Ekfrid. She united with the church upon a profession of her faith, and was baptized by myself. The dates of her reception and baptism are not at hand. She was a faithful and consistent member.

The writer preached at the time of her funeral, her son and sister being so ill that they could not go over to the meeting to attend the funeral; but they have since recovered.

WM. POLLARD.

IONA, Ontario, Feb. 1, 1894.

OUR dear and highly esteemed brother, James Emmet Smith, departed this life to go to his eternal reward on Jan. 24th, 1894, aged 79 years, 5 months and 28 days.

Our brother was united in marriage (the second time) to Valera Nosler in 1867. He had serious impressions about his future welfare in his seventeenth year, and was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ in 1872. He united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1870, and was baptized by the late Elder John Whitely. He lived an exemplary christian life twenty-three years, and was an ordained Deacon, in which office he served with credit to himself and the church. He was an uncompromising Predestinarian Baptist, believing salvation to be the work of God alone through Jesus Christ. He died after a lingering illness of about one month, at the residence of our highly esteemed friend, L. Simmons, his son-in-law. All the kindness that could possibly be administered from kind hands and kind hearts was administered; but the Master had called to his child, "Come home." He expressed a perfect willingness to go, saying that he had lived long enough. He gently, without any extreme suffering, fell asleep in Jesus.

He leaves an aged widow, who is so afflicted by paralysis that she is helpless; but her faith is strong in the Lord, and the presence of Jesus both animates and sustains her on the bed of languishing. May Israel's God support and protect her, that she may fear no evil while walking through the valley of the shadow of death, is the prayer of the writer.

Six children mourn their loss (four by his first wife and two step-children), besides many other relatives and friends; but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we are sure that our loss is his eternal gain. He and sister Smith were constant readers of the SIGNS, I think, almost from the beginning of its publication, which they have carefully preserved until his death.

The writer of this notice spoke on the occasion from 1 Cor. xv. 26 and its connections; after which the remains were laid away to await his Master's call.

J. C. TURNIDGE.

William Campbell was born April 7th, 1803, in Ohio, I think, and was married to Lucinda Reed in the year 1825. He never joined the church, but lived a devoted life, and has left testimony that he hated sin and was reconciled to God. He was a believer in the Primitive Baptist faith. His wife professed a hope in Christ in her twenty-fourth year, and has been a firm believer in the Baptist faith, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. She has been a member of the Big Spring Church, Cumberland Co., Ill., for many years. He has lived in Greenup, Cumberland Co., Ill., about thirty-five years. Had he lived until the 7th day of April next he would have been ninety-one years old.

He leaves a wife eighty-seven years old, with three sons and five daughters, and all their relatives and friends, to mourn their loss; but we mourn not as those who have no hope. The writer of this notice tried to preach on the occasion at his house.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hinkle Faries, wife of Mr. Isaac Clark Faries, departed this life Dec. 25th, 1893.

Mrs. Faries was born May 14th, 1854. Her sickness was long and tedious, but borne with christian fortitude, patience and resignation. She never made a public profession of religion, but gave unmistakable evidences of union with Christ. Besides a husband, she leaves two sons and one daughter, a father, mother, brothers and sisters, to mourn for her.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the New School Baptist chapel in Madison, Ohio. The attendance of relatives and friends was large and sympathetic. Her four stalwart brothers lovingly and tenderly bore the pall. Her remains were consigned to the tomb in the Old Baptist cemetery at Poast Town, Ohio.

"The storm that wrecks the winter sky
No more disturbs her sweet repose;
There summer evening's latest sigh,
That shuts the rose."

H. M. CURRY.

Reuben Hess, the darling babe of brother Nicholas and sister Annie Hess, of Shohola, Pa., was born April 30th, 1893, and died of pneumonia on Oct. 1st, 1893, aged 5 months and 1 day.

He was a little sufferer here on earth, with not one well day from his birth. We should not wish him back, for the little sufferer is now at rest; for Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." There was no Elder to be had at the funeral, and to comfort the mourning ones hymn 192, Beebe's Collection, and Psalm cxix., were read; then the little body was laid in the grave to await the resurrection morn.

"Why should we mourn departed friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

ALSO,

Marvin D. McKean, infant son of brother Gipson McKean, of Shohola, Pa., was born March 25th, 1893, and died August 12th, 1893, of cholera infantum, aged 4 months and 8 days.

Elders Jenkins and Vail were despatched for, but neither could come. Hymns 1250 and 1257, Beebe's Collection, were read, and also Matthew xviii.; then his little body was taken and laid by the side of his two little brothers in the grave-yard to await the resurrection.

"Our covenant God and Father he
In Christ our bleeding Lord,
Whose grace can heal the bleeding heart
With one reviving word.

"Fair garlands of immortal bliss
He weaves for every brow;
And shall rebellious passions rise
When he corrects us now?"

"Silent we own Jehovah's name,
We kiss the scourging hand,
And yield our comforts and our life
To his supreme command."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE LONE WIDOW.

MY DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find the poem, "The Lone Widow." It is the companion poem of "The Lone Pilgrim," which appeared in the SIGNS last spring, and was written by the same author. Several readers of the SIGNS have requested me to send it to you for publication.

MARY PARKER.

I CALLED at the house of the mourner below,
I entered that mansion of grief;
The tears of deep sorrow most freely did flow,
I tried, but could give no relief.
There sat a lone widow, dejected and sad,
By affliction and sorrow oppressed;
And there were her children in mourning arrayed,
And sighs were escaping their breasts.
I spoke to the widow concerning her grief,
I asked her the cause of her woe,
And if there were nothing could give her relief,
Or soothe her deep sorrow below.
She looked at her children, then looked upon me—
That look I shall never forget!
More eloquent far than a seraph could be:
It spoke of the trials she met.
The hand of affliction falls heavily now,
I'm left with my children to mourn;
The friend of my youth he's silent and low
In yonder cold grave-yard alone.
But why should I murmur or feel to complain,
Or think that my portion is hard?
Have I met with affliction? 'tis surely his gain;
He has entered the joys of his Lord.

JOHN ELLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE .

FATALISM.

FROM my earliest acquaintance with the Old School Baptists I have heard all the Arminian tribes calling them Fatalists, and the doctrine preached by them Fatalism. When an enemy of the truth desires to bring odium upon the doctrine of Predestination, and to calumniate maliciously those who believe in salvation by grace, the choicest word that his vocabulary can afford him is Fatalism. I find of late that some of our brethren have caught this favorite Ashdod word and wielded it with as much enthusiasm, skill and self-satisfaction as the most hot headed Arminian in his rashest, bitterest and most malicious invectives against the truth. I have never been in favor of striving about words, but I cannot allow this use of the term Fatalism to go unnoticed any longer. There are no two words in our language more directly opposite in their meaning than Predestination and Fatalism. The one is the strongest antithesis to the other. The most astonishing thing to me is that classical scholars, or even men of general intelligence, would stake their reputation as scholars and men of intelligence by confounding the meaning of these terms. I shall, for the benefit of the candid reader, endeavor to inquire into the origin, nature and import of the doctrine of Fatalism, and leave each one to draw his own conclusions as to the fairness or the correctness of the use of this term as a calumny of the doctrine of Providence or Predestination.

Fatalism as a doctrine, system of philosophy, or religious belief, originated among those nations of antiquity that knew not God; hence it is of purely heathen origin. The idea of fate must have been evolved in the following manner. Observing men of all nations, and especially the shrewd, intellectual, ever watchful Greeks and Romans, discovered in the vicissitudes of every day life, both of individuals and of nations, things of great import transpire over which kings and sages had no control. They saw plagues, pestilence and famine consume and waste men, as winter cold blights, withers and scatters the leaves of the summer forest; they saw storms and earthquakes do their work of wholesale destruction, sweeping away men as grasshoppers and swallowing up cities as aunt hills; they saw the weak perish before the strong, as the morning mists melt away before the advancing sun; they saw the overthrow of kingdoms, the downfall of nations, the lying waste of empires. Against all such things they found themselves utterly powerless, and in their helplessness were swept away in the besom of destruction. In the midst of distress they resorted to their temples, they sacrificed to their gods, they invoked their patron deities, but all in vain; no help came, no deliverance from their dire distresses. Under such circumstances it was perfectly natural for men to conclude that these are either no gods, or that the gods themselves had no power to help and protect them. Some came to the conclusion that there are no gods, and that all events come upon men inevitably by a blind destiny. This is original Fatalism. Others, who could not give up their traditional deities, and the charms of their delusive worship, were driven to the conclusion that there is a power above the gods to which the gods themselves are subject. This is the secondary phase of original Fatalism. This view was held by many prominent men, among whom was Cicero, who defined fate as the power that the gods themselves are subject to. This last phase of the doctrine of fate developed until finally an imaginary trinity was invented, called by the Latins Parcae and by the Greeks Moirae. This trinity was composed of three women, called by the English reader the Fates, whose names were Cloto, Lachesis and Atropos, and who controlled the destinies of gods and men after the most capricious, vindictive and irregular manner. Shrines were consecrated to them and temples built in their honor in many parts of Greece and Italy. The worship and doctrine of this imaginary female trinity was called Fatalism. Fatalism in its various ramifications formed the prominent feature of all ancient literature except that of the Jews. So clear was this people of the idea of fate that there is no word in the Hebrew corresponding to the fortuna or Parcae of the Latin and the Moirae of the Greek. The reason of this is that Moses and the prophets taught them that one supreme God ruled this universe.

In Sophocles and some others of his time the term fate became synonymous with the word chance. At first glance it seems that these two words are directly opposite in meaning; but a little reflection will make it plain that chance and blind destiny are about the same thing after all.

It will now be seen that Fatalism is first the belief that all things come inevitably upon the human race by blind destiny, with no God to send, direct or avert them. Second, the belief that there is a power above the gods to which they themselves are subject. And third, that all things come by pure chance. Now, who ever saw anyone purporting to be an Old Baptist who believed any of the foregoing phases of doctrine? Who ever saw an Old Baptist who believed there is no God, and that all things come by a blind and necessary destiny; that all events are fortuitous or by chance? Who ever saw a Baptist who believed there is a power above the gods, and that Clotho spins the thread of life, Lachesis determines the length, and Atropos with her inevitable shears cuts the thread? Then how silly, foolish and impertinent is this cry of Fatalism in Baptist pulpits and periodicals.

Now, if any one will consider the difference between events coming to pass that God himself cannot hinder, but on the contrary is bound to permit, suffer or endure, and events coming to pass as he himself has ordained by his own determinate counsel, such a one can see the difference between Fatalism and Predestination; he can see how ignorant a man must be of the meaning of his own language when he calls a Predestinarian a Fatalist. Strange as it may seem, those very Arminians who are most vociferous in charging Old Baptists with Fatalism are really Fatalists themselves. It is true that they do not think so, but they think that the ground of this charge is far from them; but upon a very slight analysis of their doctrine it will appear most clearly that the sin justly lies at their door. One sentence from their teaching will establish the truth of this assertion. Do they not persistently proclaim that men go to hell against the will of God? that God desires all men to be saved, and has done all he can to save them, and yet men go to hell? that Christ made a full and complete atonement for the sins of all the world, and yet men go to perdition? If all this be true what takes men to hell but fate? Is there not some power that God himself is subject to? I once heard Bishop Wilson, of Baltimore, say that when the will of man makes its choice, that God himself cannot change it. Bishop Wilson may very justly and correctly be called a Fatalist upon the authority of his own expression. Numerous quotations might be given from representative Arminians of all ages, as well as from the populace, to show the likeness of their doctrine to ancient Fatalism.

It is not so much the Arminian that I desire to deal with in this article, as those of our own brethren who, when they wish to dispute the doctrine of unlimited predestination, call it Fatalism. It has just been shown that Predestination and Fatalism are terms of directly opposite meaning, and it may now be positively asserted that Predestination is the only thing that can rule Fatalism out of the universe. Wherever Predestination stops fate steps in. There is no place between to be occupied by any other species of events. History is full of instances where the fortune of dynasties, the downfall of nations, the course of empire, depended upon what seemed to be the most trivial matters, mere trifles, which came without the agency of the leading spirits, or even in defiance of their wills. Oliver Cromwell was about to emigrate to this country, when the departure of the ship in which he was expected to sail was hindered. He remained, and assumed the leading part in affairs at home. Had he not remained, Charles the First might have retained his head, and Blake certainly would not have laid the foundation of the maritime supremacy in England. The treaty of Utrecht, which materially affected the social and political life of great nations, was occasioned by a quarrel between the Dutchess of Marlborough and Queen Anne over a pair of gloves. The difference between one color and another in the livery of horses begat two most inveterate factions in the Roman Empire, the Prosini and the Veneti, which never suspended their hostilities until they ruined that unhappy government. The negotiations with the Pope for dissolving Henry the Eighth's marriage, which brought on the "Reformation" in England, are said to have been interrupted by the Earl of Wiltshire's little dog biting the Pope's toe as he held it out to be kissed by that ambassador. The Tory ministry, which gave a new shape to all Europe, was brought in by the Dutchess of Marlborough spilling a pail of water upon Mrs. Masham's gown. Mohamet when flying from his enemies took refuge in a cave, which his pursuers would have entered had they not seen a spider's web over the entrance; but on seeing this they concluded that there was no one within, and passed on. Thus a spider's web changed the history of the world. The turning point at Waterloo, one of the great decisive battles of the world, resulted from the singular circumstances that prevented the arrival of General Grouchy. The well planned attacks of the Barbarians upon Rome was averted by the cackling of a goose. A series of most trivial events ended in the overthrow of Antony. Louis the Sixth cut his hair and shaved his beard to obey the order of his Bishop. Eleanor his wife found him very ridiculous in this condition, and avenged herself as she thought proper, and Louis obtained a divorce. She then married Count Anjou, who afterward became Henry the Second of England, and thus gave rise to those wars that afterward ravaged France for three hundred years, and cost the French three hundred thousand men. Was the prevention of Cromwell's departure from England a mere fortuitous event, or was it the intervention of an active, working, ruling providence? Did blind destiny spread the spider's web upon Mohamet's cave, or was it provided by God, who works all things after the counsel of his own will? Was the biting of the Popes's toe by the little dog a mere caprice of the Fates, or was it one of all the things that work together for good to them that love God? We must here strike the balance between Fatalism and Predestination. If nothing is predestinated, then all things are by fate. If all things are predestinated, then there is no such thing as fate. If some things are predestinated, and others not, then the government of this universe is divided between God and the Fates. The man who does not believe in predestination at all is in reality a Fatalist. Let him deny it as he may, and reason as he will, there is no other subterfuge for him. The dilemma has but two horns, and one of them he must take. Then just in the proportion that a man divides the affairs of this world between Predestination and that which is not Predestination, just in that proportion that man is a Fatalist. This article is not intended for a defense of the doctrine of unlimited Predestination, but is merely meant to submit to the reader a fair presentation of Fatalism, and to show the difference between it and Predestination, and to point out the inconsistency and confusion of those who confound the one with the other. Those of us who insist upon a limited Predestination, and who call our brethren who place no limit upon God's decrees, Fatalists, are really much nearer the borders of Fatalism than our brethren whom we thus inconsistently stigmatize.

Again, if the term fate by modern usage means unalterable destiny, all Predestinarians, whether contending for limited or unlimited decrees, are alike Fatalists; for they all believe in the fixed destiny of the human race. Then why should the pot call the kettle black?

An able minister passed through the churches of my care, railing against Fatalism, as he called it; but many of the brethren could not tell what he was driving at. They had heard Methodists talk that way, but thought rather strange of a Baptist to speak so. At one place his argument was that a certain man who was a member of a church believing the Predestination of all things, was caught in very disorderly conduct, wicked, outbreaking conduct; and when brought before the church in discipline, he put them all to silence by gently reminding them that it was all predestinated, and he could not help it; and they could not exclude him for something that, according to their own doctrine, he could not help. Now, this is very poor argument against Predestination; but I suppose that in the absence of better it is often used. In the first place, I do not believe such a circumstance ever occurred, but that this is a lie concocted by some Arminian three hundred years ago, to bring odium upon the doctrine of grace. In the second place, if such really did occur the man did not love the doctrine he professed; it was not the doctrine of his heart; but was mere tradition; perhaps not so much as tradition with him. Instead of exposing the doctrine and the church, he exposed his own vile hypocrisy and insincerity in the truth he professed. This is about as pertinent argument against Predestination as the old saying, "If God has ordained me to salvation, I will take my fill of sin, and be saved anyhow," is pertinent as argument against unconditional election. The terms are off the same piece.

Where does Predestination cease to be a wholesome gospel doctrine and become a baneful Fatalism? Where is there any well defined line setting forth the limits of one and the beginnings of the other? What proportion of the affairs of this world can a man believe is predestinated, and not be a Fatalist? The charge of Fatalism against Predestinarians is no new thing. The Pelagians were loud against Augustine in this charge, the Arminians against Calvin, and all manner of work-mongers against men who held the truth in every age.

MATTHEW XVI. 18.

"AND I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

THE two Greek words, petros and petra, used in text above, have distinctly different significations; and when properly defined and clearly understood, the latter conveys an idea that is sublimely beautiful. Liddell and Scott's unabridged Greek Lexicon defines "petros, a piece of rock; a loose stone; hence very applicable to Simon, as a member of the church, as an apostle of Jesus, receiving from Jesus his life, his authority, his power, his righteousness, and his apostolic commission." The same lexicon defines "petra, a rock; a ledge or shelf of rock; never used by good authors in the sense of petros, for a single stone or loose stones, but masses of living rock; hence the bed rock upon which the earth's surface is built, and by which it is supported and bound together; a beautiful symbol of firmness. Hence petra is grandly symbolic of Jesus, the foundation, upon whom the church is built; symbolic of his firmness, of his power, of his durability, and of all his everlasting and eternal attributes."

We are not left to guess that petra refers to Jesus, and to him only, for Paul says, "Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone and rock [petra] of offense: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed."—Rom. ix. 33. Peter says, "Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock [petra] of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed."—1 Pet. ii. 7, 8. Paul says, "And did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock [petra] that followed them: and that Rock [petra] was Christ."—1 Cor. x. 3, 4.

Jesus also sets forth the same idea in Matt. vii. 24, 25, and in Luke vi. 47, 48, saying, "Whosoever cometh to me [see John vi. 44, 65], and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: he is like a man that built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock [petra]: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock" (petra).

Matt. vi. 24-27, and Luke vi. 47-49, set forth the two systems that have ever been in the world; one based upon creature ability, obedience and righteousness; the other founded upon Jesus' wisdom, power, righteousness and other eternal attributes. And God, our God, has always had, has now, and will ever have, a people that trust in his power, look to his indulgently benignant hand for all needed blessings, and desire to humbly and obediently worship him, not from slavish fear, but from a filial love of his most adorable attributes. Hence Moses says, "Ascribe ye greatness unto our God. He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 3, 4. The psalmist says, "The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust."—Psa. xviii. 2. "From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to the rock that is higher than I."—Psa. lxi. 2. "But the Lord is my defense; and my God is the rock of my refuge."—Psa. xciv. 22. The prophet declares, "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."—Isa. xxxii. 1, 2. Hence, with all this testimony before us, we conclude that Jesus is the petra of the text, the foundation upon which the church is built.

"And upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell [the powers of darkness, the nether world, death] shall not prevail against it."

Let us now examine the two small words will and shall as they are used in the text. Will, used with the first person or speaker, and shall used with the second or third person, or the object spoken to or of, denote determination on the part of the speaker. Every linguist knows this to be a fact.

"I will build my church," denotes both predetermination and election. "Gates shall not prevail," denotes predetermination also. Jesus means by this, "I will build my church," that he has the wisdom and power to complete the building, and that he has decided in his own mind to put his wisdom and power into use in building it; and by his "the gates shall not prevail against it," that he has also decided to use his wisdom and power in preventing the powers of darkness from pulling down and destroying his church.

We, without the fear of successful controversy, lay down this proposition, that every intelligent being in the universe works strictly and absolutely upon these two great fundamental principles. Nor does it matter whether the worker is a being of finite wisdom and power, or a being of infinite wisdom and power.

Every event that has ever transpired, and every enterprise that has ever been undertaken or carried to successful completion, were wrought out on these immutable principles.

It does not matter how insignificant or small the event or enterprise may be, or how stupendous or magnificent the event or enterprise may be, the same grand laws or principles underlie them all; the doctrine of predestination and choice.

This is true of the works of devils (if we may ascribe intelligence to devils), of men, of angels, and of the infinitely wise God.

Some one may say, "That is the absolute predestination of all things." Be that as it may, the proposition is none the less true; and "Truth crushed to earth will rise again; the eternal years of God are hers."

Every farmer, whether successful or otherwise, acts upon these laws. He first determines in his own mind to make his crop; he chooses the land which he will devote to his crop; the manner, degree and quality of the preparation of the land; and then from the great variety of seed or crops he makes his choice. Sometimes he succeeds; sometimes he fails; but he is none the less a predestinarian. The reason he fails is because his wisdom is so finite or limited that he cannot look forward and see the difficulties and obstructions that are before him, and his power is too weak to overcome them, could he have foreseen them.

Every housebuilder is also an elective predestinarian. He decides to build, determines the dimensions of the house, the number of rooms, the amount of material (as nearly as he can), and the cost of material and labor to make it a complete building. He chooses the material and buys it, and then he goes to work; and, if no physical disability comes upon him, no financial disaster overtakes him, no fire consumes, no storm destroys his work, he successfully completes his house, and with gladness enjoys the labor of his hands.

Every man that ever invented a machine, whether a wheel-barrow or a complicated steam engine, whether a sand-glass or a four-hundred-day clock, is in his way and in his work absolutely an elective predestinarian. Take the watchmaker, for instance; the watch, with all its parts, the exact position occupied, and the exact function performed by each wheel or part, and the exact relation sustained by each component part to all the other parts, exists complete and full in his mind, before he ever gives shape or size or position to the component parts: for, if he did not have all these things in his mind before he gives shape, size and number to the component parts, he could never put them together so as to make a perfect timepiece. But, having this knowledge, he has invented our chronometers, and they have been measuring our seconds, our minutes, our hours, and our days, from time immemorial. Then tell me not that men are not elective predestinarians.

The same is true of every voluntary act of angelic intelligences: and, if we ascribe the works of men and angels to these principles, why should we not, with equal propriety and fitness, place the magnificent works of the omniscient, omnipotent and omnipresent God upon the same immutable, eternal laws?

In the infinite and eternal mind of him who says, "I will build my church," this sublimely grand and supernally beautiful timepiece, which we call the universe, had its exact counterpart, before the first astral notes harmoniously rang out over the dawn of creation; and, with immutable exactness, has been measuring the minutes, the hours, the days, the years, the ages, the centuries, the cycles, from the mysterious beginning, without a stop, without a break, without the slightest friction; and each moon, each world, each star, each sun, each system of suns, has been controlled and upheld by that invisible yet wonderful power of its infinitely wise and supremely great Creator and Inventor. Hence, it is not surprising to my little mind that David, when he viewed the mechanism of this universal chronometer, innumerable in its parts and incomprehensible in their varied relations and functions, exclaimed, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." Or that John, on the lone, barren isle, cried out, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints."

"I will build my church," says the same Architect who created this stupendous universe. Has he the wisdom and power to execute his will? Let holy writ testify. "And darkness was upon the face of the deep [the immensity of space]. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." Job says, "But he is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his soul desireth, even that he doeth." The prophet Isaiah declares, "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." The apostle Paul affirms that he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." And Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." From the above testimony, we see that this Architect is endowed with all knowledge and vested with all power; hence, we conclude that he is amply qualified to carry the work to a finish.

The next idea in the declaration, "I will build my church," is the election or choice of the material of which it is composed. Now, if the Bible teaches this doctrine, we should be honest enough with ourselves, and with our fellow-men, and before God, to accept and indorse it; if the Bible does not, we should leave it severely alone.

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word [this doctrine], it is because there is no light [no such doctrine] in them." "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4. But some might say, "That applies only to the apostles." Suppose, for argument's sake, we admit that such is the case. Suppose we admit that God chose the apostles because he saw in them a fitness to complete the unfinished work of Christ; we must also admit that whatever work they did after that choice was manifested unto them, was the very work for which they were chosen. Evidently their preaching was, at least, a part of the work for which they were chosen. Now let Paul preach. "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, [why, Paul?] because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."—2 Thess. ii. 13. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Now tell me when "the beginning" was, and I will tell you when these (not apostles, but a whole church) were chosen to salvation. Now let Peter preach and testify, and see if he does not make a still broader application in his teaching: "Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect [eklektois, chosen, called out, selected] according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience," &c. Now tell me when the foreknowledge of God began, and I will tell you when these scattered strangers (not apostles) were chosen, called out of five different tribes or nations; when they became a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that they should show forth the praise of him who called them out of darkness into his marvelous light. Let James also preach and testify; and we will see that he, in his teaching, makes an application wide enough and long enough to include every vessel of mercy, every piece of material necessary to make the church a complete building. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" This choice embraces not only the prophets and apostles, but also all the innumerable company to whom the King says, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And we believe that, as the kingdom was prepared back there, and its subjects chosen too, so every provision and every blessing necessary for the eternal happiness, and for the ceaseless enjoyment of its subjects, were likewise carefully provided and securely reserved by the same wise providence in the great depository of spiritual supplies. Nor does Paul leave us to guess at this, but tells us that God hath blessed the saints in Christ Jesus (the elect poor of this world) with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen the heirs of that kingdom in him before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4. Hence, we are bound to admit that election is a Bible doctrine.

Having made choice of the material for the building, the next idea or item is buying and paying for it. The apostle declares, "Ye are bought with a price." What is the price? The Lord Jesus said, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom [lutron, the price paid] for many." Paul said, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the

"Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James v. 13-15.

While uniting with brother Bundy in the request for the views of Elder Jenkins on this subject, with deference to their judgment, and to the views of all our brethren, we submit such thoughts as have been given us on the text proposed. A personal acquaintance with our inquiring brother gives the assurance that he is able and willing to make all due allowance for the weakness and ignorance of those who are embraced in the fellowship of the church; therefore we are encouraged to the extent of our limited ability to freely express our understanding of the true signification of this portion of the inspired rule.

In the first place it must be observed that this whole epistle is addressed very definitely "To the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad." From declarations contained in the epistle it is evident that these scattered tribes are the spiritual Israel in distinction from the natural descendants of Jacob. The natural tribes of Israel were not yet scattered abroad at the time when this letter was written; but in accordance with the words of our Lord, the disciples were scattered when they were persecuted for the testimony of Jesus, "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word."—Acts viii. 4. To these scattered ones the message has peculiar and exclusive application. They only can answer the description given by the Holy Ghost of those who are to be judged according to the perfect law of liberty. It is manifest, therefore, that in every particular this whole letter must be designed for their instruction and comfort.

The severe reproof and condemnation administered to those who "have heaped treasure together for the last days," has been thought to apply to those who were not of the scattered twelve tribes. It might well be wished that no such wickedness could be found among the children of the kingdom of God. But in all the record which is given of the saints they are uniformly presented as subject to all the evil passions under which the disciples of Jesus are now compelled to wrestle. Since sin entered into the world the history of the chosen people of God has been one unvaried lamentation under the oppression of its hated power. The most exemplary patriarch, prophet, or apostle, whose faith has set him as a pattern for the instruction of the saints, could claim for himself nothing more than that he was a sinner saved by the infinite grace of God. By the same grace which gave him life in Christ Jesus at first, he must be kept through all his earthly pilgrimage, and when he heard the voice of his Lord calling him from this earthly house of his tabernacle, he could only ascribe his preservation in time to the infinite love and faithfulness of God. When the grace of God which was in Paul had labored more abundantly than all the apostles, he could still claim himself to be the very chief of sinners. Our natural reason cannot grasp this essential truth. The fact that we find ourselves still subjected to the vanity of a sinful mind in the flesh affords the tempter an occasion to challenge the genuineness of our hope in the salvation of God. Being conscious that we are still sinners we are ready to sink in despair. Yet the grace of God in the salvation of sinners is the whole burden of the revelation which is given in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Without the remembrance of this there can be no correct application of the inspired testimony which God has given for our guidance into all truth. Having this vital principle in view, faith can receive the truth that while they remain in the flesh the saints are not released from the bondage of corruption.

The whole written law of the gospel kingdom would be entirely needless if the saints were already free from their natural emotions, and perfectly conformed to the spiritual perfection which is in Christ. It is for their instruction in righteousness that the Scriptures are given. In them the man of God alone is perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. They do not appeal to the natural reason. Through that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit the saints are enabled to see in the sacred record the revelation of that same truth which they have received in their own experience. From all others, however highly educated in the wisdom of this world, the God of heaven and earth has hid these things; and for this Jesus poured out his soul in thankfulness to his Father.—Matt. xi. 25. Now, remembering that the "twelve tribes scattered abroad, to whom James wrote, were just such sinners in nature as ourselves, it will not be strange that they were in need of the severest admonitions in his epistle. On the other hand, considering that the Spirit recognized them in all their vileness as subjects of saving grace, there is encouragement for the hope of every one who abhors his own sinful heart and life.

To just such conscious sinners James was moved by the Holy Ghost to write this letter, and to them the admonition and instruction in our text is addressed. "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray." This is not a general prescription to be filled by the religious apothecaries of the world. They can supply their customers with prayers made to order for all occasions, or with very finely polished prayers put up in stylish binding for the use of the world. In this text, as in all the Scriptures, the character is specifically described, and none is authorized to pray even among the twelve tribes addressed, unless he is "afflicted." This is a condition to which none ever could even so much as wish to attain. When one is suffering voluntarily, as deluded fanatics have sometimes done, he is not "afflicted." Such sufferers take pride in their endurance, and despise others who suffer less than they do. There can be no affliction where pride is thus fostered. In the sense of our text none can be "afflicted" but those who are among the scattered tribes, of whom the Lord says, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord."—Zeph. iii. 12. When one of the saints is thus afflicted, he has in his heart the prayer of faith; and his prayer is not merely in compliance with this direction; it is indited by the Spirit which moved the apostle to write our text.

"Is any merry? let him sing psalms." If this were designed to enjoin the literal singing of the written psalms which are printed in Bibles, there would be no occasion for restricting it to the saints. Many who do not claim to regard the truth at all, would be able to sing much more scientifically than any of the believing saints. Surely that cannot be the correct understanding of this direction. There is in the Scriptures a very clear illustration of this singing, on the banks of deliverance. Miriam and Moses, with all the children of Israel, were merry, and sung wonderful psalms of praise to the God of their salvation. So, Mary's psalm of rejoicing is recorded in Luke i. 46-55. When the Spirit gives this merriment the psalm of praise always is sung in the heart. This song can never be so much as imitated by carnal will-worshipers, who chant to their own invented instruments the song of praise to themselves. Indeed, the "twelve tribes" cannot sing this song in a strange land. In the land of Israel this triumphant and melodious song is sung. Its highest note proclaims the victory of divine grace in the washing away of all the sins of all his saints in the fountain of the precious blood of our crucified and risen Redeemer. It is never sung but when the saints are divinely merry.

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." Fanatics who give no evidence of the knowledge of God, construing this language of the Spirit as referring to natural diseases, have attained a brief notoriety among men by pretending that they have sufficient faith to heal diseases of the flesh by the power of their prayers. Invariably God has rebuked such blasphemous pretenders by destroying them in their delusions. It is certainly true that when the Spirit of Christ gives the assurance of faith to his saints, they receive the answer of the prayer which is indited by that faith. This is not the submission of the will of God to the dictation of man; but it is the direction of the Spirit which searches all the deep things of God, by which the saint is moved to ask according to the will of God. Whether that prayer calls for the opening of the prison for the release of an apostle, or for the rebuking of a fever by which a mother is prostrated, or for the closing of the windows of heaven to withhold rain, the prayer of faith is omnipotent. Not that puny man may dictate to the Almighty; but that the prayer of faith is always according to the manner which Jesus taught his disciples, to pray, "Thy will be done!" Never has our Lord authorized his followers to depart from this manner in presenting their prayers before the throne of God. When they ask for anything in the name of Jesus, their petition is always indited by the same Spirit of the Lord God which was upon him, by which he always asked and was heard "according to the will of God." In consideration of this grace bestowed upon them, the saints have confidence in prayer. If the gracious purpose of God were subject to be laid aside to make room for the desires of the saints, who would ever dare to speak in prayer? It is the sweet assurance that the will of God is immutable, by which the saints are encouraged to cast all their cares on him, and to pour out their griefs and their desires before him. When they ask amiss, it is divine love by which their petitions are denied.

The sickness to which our text refers is that to which Paul calls attention, 1 Cor. xi. 30. The cause of such sickness is there explained by the failure of the saints to discern the Lord's body in judging themselves by the law of Christ. For the benefit of such as are thus sick among the scattered tribes it is not only in compliance with this direction, but also it is the desire of the sick one as led by the Spirit, to "call for the elders of the church." This embraces not simply the ordained ministers in the local organization of believers nearest him, but also all in every age and in every place who "call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." There is no hope of relief for those who are sick in this sense, by seeking the wise magicians and doctors of antichrist. Only in the spiritual among the saints can there be found relief for such sick ones among the assemblies of those who hope in the salvation which is revealed in Christ Jesus. Those whom God has chosen by inspiration are fully prepared and qualified as Elders to administer the oil of grace for the healing of such as are weak and sickly among the churches. They have left out none of these sick ones from their prayer, which is over all the flock of God, for whose benefit they shine as stars forever in the gospel firmament, and turn many to righteousness.—Dan. xii. 3.

It is not intended to deny that the prayer of faith still has the power to save those who are sick with the diseases to which the bodies of the saints are subject. But it must be distinctly understood that the only effectual prayer is that which is dictated by faith, which is the fruit of the Spirit alone. Such prayer cannot arise from the desire of the natural heart.

"And if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." This expression confirms the application of this text to those who are sick in the sense to which we have referred. There could be no need of the conditional form here used if the reference had been to the character of the sick one as a natural man. But when taken in the sense of those who are sick from denial of the truth, there is manifestly special need of the direction for the forgiveness of the sins of such. Certainly the text does not teach that the salvation of the saints from the curse of the law is suspended upon the condition of prayers to be offered up by their fellow-sinners. The sins which are to be forgiven him are such transgressions of the law of love and fellowship as had constituted a barrier between him and the church. That is only a hypocritical mockery of gospel order which could nominally receive a transgressor into restored membership in the church while still holding any portion of his transgression as an impediment in the way of perfect fellowship and love of the one body of Christ. There is an erroneous idea implied in the expression frequently used as professing "full fellowship." This seems to signify that there is a limited degree of fellowship. That is not fellowship at all which is less than the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. That this perfect love may continue among the saints every one must from his heart forgive his brother every trespass. These are the sins which shall be forgiven the restored sick brother.

Hoping brother Bundy and all our readers will carefully compare the thoughts here submitted with the infallible standard of truth, and kindly show us wherein we have manifested sickness or committed sins, we leave the subject for the present.

church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Hence we see that the price paid in this most wonderful and (to us) most momentous transaction, was both the life of privation and the death of the cross, which Jesus Christ endured. He divested himself of the riches and glory that he had with the Father before the world began; he passed angelic nature by, and took upon him the seed of Abraham, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for he having suffered, being tempted, is able to succor them that are tempted. Having assumed this body, he is subjected to all the privations and temptations incident to a life in extreme poverty. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," said he of himself. Born in poverty, cradled in a manger, he journeys through life, always doing good, healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the dumb, cleansing the leper, curing the lame and the halt, blessing little children, raising the dead, and preaching his own everlasting gospel to the poor. Thus he ministered to the poor in both temporal things and in spiritual things, feeding the hungry, raising up the lowly, and consoling the broken-hearted; and, notwithstanding all this, he was despised and rejected, mocked and buffeted, scourged and betrayed. But in all this he has left an example to those for whom he came into this world to set an example, and to endure all this cruelty, and more; for we see him in the garden of Gethsemane, and hear him say, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death;" suffering agonies untold, and anguish unutterable, almost he shrinks back from the last dread ordeal; and three times he cries out, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." All this poverty, all this privation, all this cruelty, all this temptation, all this agony, all this anguish, all these dying groans, are what Jesus paid, that he might redeem his people from all iniquity, and fulfill the angel's prophecy. He under sentence of condemnation is taken to the cross and crucified, thus doing what Peter said he did, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." "Who was delivered for offences, and raised again for our justification." Having laid down his life for his sheep, and having taken it up again, he is mighty and able to seek, prepare and place the material as he will have it; which is the next item in the text.

What is the material, and what its natural condition? Sinners, without strength, without understanding, without righteousness, without the fear of God, sinners whose hearts are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, sinners dead in trespasses and sins. Now, that this material be fitted for and put in its place, all this great destitution must be overcome and removed, and the things absolutely needed must be supplied. How this great work is accomplished is the question at issue; and, upon the principle of cause and effect, it is evident that the work must be done by a power separate and apart from that possessed by the sinner. We who advocate the doctrine of God our Savior differ from all conditionalists, in that we ascribe all this work and the glory thereof to the power and wisdom, the goodness and mercy, the grace and love, of our God. To the law and to the testimony. "The Lord will give strength unto his people."—Psalm xxix. 11. "For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall."—Isa. xxv. 4. "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength."—Isa. xl. 29. "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job xxxii. 8. "Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law."—Psalm cxix. 34. "Then opened he their understanding."—Luke xxiv. 45. "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isaiah liv. 17. "This is his name whereby he [the righteous Branch] shall be called, The Lord our righteousness."—Jer. xxiii. 6. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—1 Cor. i. 30. "And they shall be my people, and I will be their God. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me."—Jer. xxxii. 38-40. "And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am the Lord."—Jer. xxiv. 7. "And I will take the stony heart [deceitful, wicked heart] out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh: that they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God."—Ezekiel xi. 19, 20. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."—1 John v. 11. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans vi. 23. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live."—John v. 25. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life: and they shall never perish."—John x. 27, 28. From all these gracious evidences it is not strange that James would say, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." Hence we see clearly that "The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord." The material thus prepared and fitly framed together groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; and these lively stones are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, who said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This preparation, this growth and this upbuilding have been progressing ever since the days of righteous Abel, all through the "ages" down to the present, and will continue until the last stone has been manifested and prepared and placed in its proper position in the building. All this is, and will ever be, the work of the mighty power of God, who is able to preserve his church from all the ravages of the power of darkness, and minister unto it an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. A kingdom presupposes both citizens as subjects, and laws by which they are protected both in person and possessions. Our natural citizenship is here in the United States. Now, suppose any number of us, say ten thousand, should go to the different foreign countries of the earth. The laws of our home government would follow us in every step we take and in every turn we make, vigilantly watching over us; and should any of us or all of us be unjustly treated, these laws would reach over and demand satisfaction, as was the case at Valparaiso, Chili, a few years past. Not only so, but while we are scattered strangers in foreign lands the laws of our home government protect us in our rights to whatever estate or inheritance we may have at home, and none can appropriate what is ours to his own use; but the same laws at home will turn it over to us when we return home, to have and to enjoy in all its rich fullness. The apostle says, "For our conversation [politeuma, citizenship] is in heaven [that is, in the kingdom which God prepared from the foundation of the world for them that love him]; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." Now God's people are scattered strangers in this world, but their spiritual citizenship is in heaven; and the supreme laws of heaven, the laws which God writes in their hearts and puts in their minds, the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which frees them from sin and death, the law by which they receive an abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness, and by which they shall reign in life, follows them in every step they take and at every turn they make, and protects them from all dangers, keeps them from all harm, watches over and after them in every condition, in sickness or in health, in poverty or in wealth, abroad or at home, in the hut or on the throne, telling them that all things work together for good to them that love God, shedding his love abroad in their hearts, and teaching them that nothing can separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. Not only so, but that same law protects them individually in their right, claim and interest to and in that inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; and not even an angel can step in between them and their inheritance during the time of their wanderings as strangers and appropriate what is theirs to their own use. Hence Paul can say to them, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Jesus can say, "And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." "And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

May God in his mercy sanctify these thoughts to the comfort of his humble poor, and to the glory of his name, is the desire of your little brother in hope of eternal life, MATTHEW IX. 7.

"AND he arose, and departed to his house."

This was said of him who was sick of the palsy, and who had been healed by the Savior, and to whom the Savior said, "Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house." Gracious words indeed to the poor paralytic; and we do not question that his obedience was the fruit both of love and joy. The healing of this man was one of the miracles which our Savior performed during the work of his ministry. It is a literal truth, presenting volumes of spiritual instruction and food for the poor and afflicted people of God. Not only is it a literal circumstance, occurring in time and witnessed of men, but it presents a type of the subject of God's mercy before and after the miracle of the power of the word which manifests forgiveness and redemption in the lost and ruined sinner. The "sick of the palsy" presents a character helpless in the extreme, having the breathing of a natural life, but destitute of the power of locomotion; in a word, a living, helpless creature. Were it a necessity that man should work his way into eternal life, this man would be cut off entirely. To one, however, who has the mind of Christ, this miracle sets forth the fullness of the power of Christ, not only to forgive sins, but also to heal all bodily infirmities; and so he declared to the Pharisees, who questioned his disciples concerning his eating with publicans and sinners, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." It is only he who has tried every vain creature attempt to save himself, and who has learned the bitter lesson that he is utterly helpless, that cries for help unto the Lord. Let us go back together to the time in our experience when we were passing through a condition of Egyptian bondage; when as time passed on our burdens became heavier and heavier; and at a time when they were unbearable a Moses was raised up unto us, and by the power of Israel's God he led us away from our heavy tasks to a place from which we verily thought there was no possible way of escape; to the ends of the earth, the end of all creature help or strength. As the children of Israel were hemmed in upon every side, the Red Sea in front of them, an impassable barrier, mountains upon either side, with the enemy pressing upon them in the rear; so the sorely-trying conscious sinner, when he comes to the end of all his works, can see no way by which he can effect his own salvation. Mountains of sin have risen so high upon his right hand and upon his left hand that they obscure from his vision every ray of the sunlight of hope. The river (or Red Sea) of death stares him in the face; while his enemies, the power of death, relentlessly pursue him from behind. He realizes how utterly helpless he is, as much so as the man sick of the palsy, who lay helpless, and must be carried upon his bed to Jesus to be healed. Now let us notice particularly the similarity of the address to the children of Israel by their leader, whom God had sent to deliver them, to the words of Jesus as addressed to the man sick of the palsy, whom God also had sent to deliver. "And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will show to you to-day." "And Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." In each case was deliverance set forth as a foundation for hope, in each case were words of cheer, and in each case was the address to the helpless and destitute. Still farther will we carry this analogy of truth in experience. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." Jesus said to the evil-minded Pharisees, who "said within themselves, This man blasphemeth," "But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (then saith he to the sick of the palsy), Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house." Each received the word of the power of deliverance, and each acted in obedience to the word. "And he arose." The power of the word of God is life-giving. The word is Jesus; and when the voice of Jesus is directed to an object, that object is moved or acted upon according to the command, and the voice of Jesus never falls short of accomplishing that which he please. When that voice entered the tomb of the dead Lazarus he came forth out of the tomb in instant obedience to the command, though he had been dead four days. In like manner when Jesus said to the man sick of the palsy, "Arise," he arose. The power of life in Christ Jesus invariably accompanies the word of command. Precious and blessed promises are given in the Scriptures (which promises are the twelve pillars in the temple of faith) to the believer, and upon these promises rests the hope of him that believeth. But who is the believer? It is he to whom the word of the power of life in Christ Jesus has been spoken. "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." The light which illuminates the heart of man produces faith in that one, and by faith comes belief. Time belongs to the natural creation; and the opening of every flower, and the consummation of every circumstance in every man's life, occurs according to its appointed time and season. But when the subject in the belief of God is born into the kingdom and atmosphere of divine life, he then inhabits a country in which time is not reckoned; therefore we cannot say that when one is born again light follows life, and faith succeeds light, and belief faith, in order of time. But when one is born into the family of God he is born possessing every faculty which belongs to the divine life; just as one being born into the kingdom of nature possesses every faculty which belongs to his natural life. So then, when one is translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son he is that moment a living child, a seeing child, a child of faith, a child of hope, and a believer. Jesus at one time said unto Martha, the sister of Lazarus, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Now, just such a character was this one sick of the palsy. He was possessed of divine life; and that life was the light by which through faith he believed that Jesus had the power to heal him. He was a believer before he sought Jesus, for had he not been he never would have sought him. This wonderfully blessed and favored character, the child of grace, is blessed and favored because the love of God is shed abroad in his heart, and love begetteth obedience; and while the power to obey is conveyed in the word of command, he is made willing in the day of God's power; not coerced or forced into obedience against his will, but made willing and glad to obey with a happy, thankful heart. In this manner the man sick of the palsy arose, clothed with the power to rise, healed of every bodily infirmity; and, more precious than all, his sins were all forgiven him. He had heard of Jesus with the hearing of the ear, and he believed that Jesus could heal him; but now his eye hath seen him, his belief is verified, and he is able to rise and give glory to the author of his salvation. Because of our totally depraved and sinful nature, we in our wanderings through this sin-cursed world are sometimes led to wonder (if indeed we have been called upon to "arise" by the voice of the Beloved) in what manner we have manifested it, and to whom. When the sick of the palsy arose his deliverance was witnessed by the disciples, the Pharisees, and all who were about him; all of whom, however, were merely external eye-witnesses; all of whom could testify, but only to the healing. As it appears to me, the true witness to the birth of every child of God is the church of God, his mother. Jacob was in the waste howling wilderness entirely alone, as to natural men or women, when he came into the light of the gospel day, and his eyes were opened to behold his mother which had borne him; and he said, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." The natural mother may give birth to her natural child, and none be present to witness to the birth; but the mother in her anguish of pain has every testimony within herself that deliverance has come, and her quick ear catches the first cry which manifests a living child. The church travailed in pain and sorrow all through the dark and shadowy dispensation under the law—she was in bondage; and when she was delivered from that Sinai yoke she arose triumphant and glorious, having whereof to testify. Her direct testimony now is to and for her children, that she and they are no longer debtors to the law; for she now stands espoused to the Lord of life and glory, by whose perfect obedience and love she was delivered. So the apostle tells us, "For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." It is in the light of this new life that he who is bidden by the voice of Jesus does arise out of bondage, a new creature in Christ, freed from the law of sin and death. When we would seek for evidence that God has reconciled us to himself through Christ let our feet follow the dictates of our heart, and if they take us to the world for evidence then may we conclude that we are both in the world and of the world; but should they take us to the church of Christ, and we find ourselves with fear and trembling seeking to abide in our Father's family, resting with contentment and peace within the sacred embrace of our mother, then may we take courage and press onward.

"And he arose, and departed." This is the next step after having arisen in the new life, to depart; as Abraham departed from his country and from his idols at the command of God, walking by faith. "He went out, not knowing whither he went." "Wherein in time past we walked according to the course of this world." Now, being turned about, and having been commanded to arise, we depart from iniquity. Our departure is away from the old haunts of sin and uncleanness, wherein in the times past we delighted to dwell; and now we walk according to the power of an endless life. Our delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law do we meditate day and night. This is in consequence of our transition from death unto life, from darkness unto light. We can say, with one of old, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." We depart because we hate that which we once loved. Sin has become a very stench in our nostrils, and we hate ourselves because our flesh is sin.

"And he arose, and departed to his house." There is no uncertainty about the walk of those who are healed by the word of Jesus, except as they view themselves in the light of carnal reason; no uncertainty about the direction of their walk; no uncertainty as to the place of their heart's desire. This man who had been sick of the palsy, and was healed, "departed to his house." His house is no more a charnel-house of corruption, a den of thieves; his sins are all forgiven him, and his house is the church of the living God. There is where his best friends and kindred dwell. Rather would he be a door-keeper now in the house of the Lord (though he might have been a potentate in the earth) than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. His house, which was once a place of cursing and bitterness, a place of gain and of traffic, is now a sanctuary of prayer, a city of great solemnity, a quiet habitation, a place of rest and peace. This habitation he desires above all things in the earth. The assembly of the saints is his delight. I have felt such a sense of security and restfulness in a little meeting of the saints that words cannot express it. The social intercourse of the saints in the house of the Lord (not meeting-house) is not such as is recorded in the histories of the world. Each one loves all the others with a pure heart fervently, although there may be some fleshly differences between them. The conversation runs in the vein of heavenly things, the substance of which is the works of Jesus (not of each other). I was sick, and Jesus healed me; I was blind, and Jesus gave me sight; I was sorely afflicted, and Jesus delivered me; I was bound, a captive, and Jesus set me free. The burden is Jesus, and to him all praise and glory is given.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 8, 1894.

HANNIBAL, Mo., Jan. 8, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Having finished the business matters, I will add a few lines to the many very precious brethren, writers and readers of the dear old SIGNS OF

THE TIMES, with many of whom I have been associated in the fellowship of the gospel for more than half a century, having been a continuous subscriber to the dear old paper for about fifty-five years, and have rarely ever failed in receiving or in reading a single number in the whole time. I have been well advised, so far as I have been capable of understanding, what has been the doctrine and order advocated in its columns, and now in my eighty-second year I am free to say that in the main it has been in harmony with the doctrine of God our Savior as recorded in the Scriptures of truth. It could hardly be expected it would be entirely without fault, either in doctrine or order; for all connected with it, writers and readers, see only in part, and know only in part, while in this vile, carnal nature. I walk much in darkness, in this sore affliction and long confinement; and still the dear Lord has remembered me in great mercy, while I am so full of evil, and so unthankful. I know not what the Lord has in store for me, but I am firm in the faith, that he has a purpose for good to me; but it is hidden from my view, and he will do all his pleasure. O that I could be entirely reconciled to his blessed will in all things! "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." O that I could praise his blessed name the remainder of my days! I cordially, dear brethren, accept your generous offer to continue the dear old SIGNS complimentary to me, for I shall want to read its precious truth as long as I live, which will likely not be long. I am sorry I have not been able in the long years to better subserve its interests. It has come to me very regularly and promptly every Friday during this sore affliction which befell me in July, 1892, filled with precious truth, which was a solace and comfort to me when blessed with "the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." "But," said Jesus, "ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

Dear brethren, I am scarcely able, either physically or mentally, to write, and will submit these few very imperfect and very badly composed thoughts to your disposal. I am not able yet to walk without helps, and can hardly hope I will again; but I know the Lord is able, if in accord with his purpose, to heal me as he did the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple; and in conclusion, with love and fellowship to you and all the dear readers of the precious old SIGNS for volume sixty-two, I will close. May the Lord bless you in the work of publishing and other labors of the coming year, and may it be a happy new year.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Lydia Alexander, wife of Deacon Robert Alexander, died at her home in Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 2d, 1894, in the 69th year of her age.

Our dear sister, though a great sufferer at times for more than two years, was able to be about until a few weeks before her death. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone, and died resting in the finished work and righteousness of her glorious Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. She was a devoted member for more than twenty-one years of what was known as the Ebenezer Baptist Church of Utica.

Besides one brother and her companion, she leaves three sons by a former husband, as well as a large circle of friends, to mourn their loss. We shall miss her, but feel that our loss is her eternal gain.

C. A. SPENCER.

UTICA, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1894.

My dear little brother, Walter C. Fetter, youngest child of C. S. and Mary C. Fetter, departed this life at Southampton, Pa., Nov. 23d, 1893, aged 3 years and 2 months.

He was a very bright and affectionate child, and dearly loved by all who knew him. He was the last to come of a family of nine children, and the first to go. It was hard for us all to give him up, but there is One who is able to heal the broken hearts. May he be with them to comfort them. His disease was typhoid fever, which went to his brain. He suffered terribly for about six days, when the Lord, as we hope, took him home to rest.

Elder Durand preached on the occasion a very comforting sermon from the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," &c.; after which the remains were buried in the graveyard by the Southampton meeting-house.

His sorrowing brother,

CASPER G. FETTER.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Feb. 10, 1894.

DIED—Jan. 4th, 1894, at the residence of his son, brother D. T. Keator, in Batavia Kill, N. Y., after a general decline in health, brother Joel Keator, aged 80 years.

Brother Keator made a public profession many years ago, uniting with the First Old School Baptist Church of Roxbury, of which he was a member at the time of his death. He openly manifested his interest in opposition to all the so-called religious benefits and improvements as innovations against the truth, and to the last manifested a full hope and reliance in the doctrine of God our Savior.

He leaves two sons, with their families, and other friends, as well as the church, to mourn. His funeral was largely attended at the house of the church.

ALSO,

DIED—Jan. 10th, 1894, after a short sickness at the house of her son, in Roxbury, N. Y., sister Betsy Cator, at the advanced age of 85 years.

She had been gradually failing for a number of years, yet was strong in the Lord and the power of his might, and, we believe, died in the triumph of faith, leaving two sons, with other relatives, as well as the church, to mourn.

Sister Cator united with the Second Old School Baptist Church of Roxbury in early life; and though having been deprived of meeting with the church for a number of years, she still retained the precious belief in God's abounding mercy to the chief of sinners. Her funeral was largely attended at our meeting-house.

ALSO,

DIED—Jan. 26th, 1894, at his residence in Clovesville, Delaware Co., N. Y., Mr. John Craft, aged 74 years.

Mr. Craft was not a professor of religion, yet for many years was a believer in the doctrine of God our Savior, as preached by the Old School Baptists. His health had been gradually failing for some years until the end, although able to be up but a day or two before his death.

He leaves our widowed sister, very lonely in old age, besides several children and others, to mourn. His funeral was largely attended at the Baptist meeting-house. May the Lord comfort the mourning ones.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

BROTHER Arden Sanders was born in Stokes Co., N. C., Jan. 16th, 1810, came to Alabama in the year 1832 or 1833, was married to Miss Sarah Caldwell in 1834, professed a hope in Christ in the summer of 1835, and in November following joined the Old School Baptist Church at Pleasant Hill. He and his wife were baptized in the little town now known as Springville, St. Clair Co. He was soon afterward ordained Deacon in the church. He has been a faithful reader of the SIGNS for many years, and enjoyed the principles it has held forth. The good Lord, who brought him into existence, permitted him to stay here to an old age, and sent the summons to call him home on the 16th of April, 1893.

By his request the writer was called upon to preach what is generally called a funeral sermon, to a large and mixed multitude of people, from the following Scripture, "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." His remains were then laid away to await the resurrection, when all the elect of God will be called to sing that eternal song of redeeming love and saving grace.

E. F. GILLILAND.

CLEAR SPRING, Ala.

With deep sorrow I ask you to publish the death of my dear mother, Mrs. Huldah A. Corbette, who departed this life at her residence near Manassas, Prince William Co., Va., May 9th, 1893, in the 79th year of her age.

She had been gradually failing in health for some time, growing more feeble, until she passed the dark portal like a helpless infant falling into a gentle sleep. She was a great sufferer in her last illness, being confined to her bed but a short time. Mother possessed naturally a great deal of patience and forbearance, which is truly a virtue. We believe that she had a good hope through grace, but a sense of her unworthiness prevented her from confessing it before the church. She attended the Old School Baptist meetings very regularly, and was very fond of reading the Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES until her eyesight failed her. Mother was kindly cared for by my sister, who lived with her. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her.

She leaves two daughters, ten grandchildren and one sister, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Brother J. Broders spoke comfortingly at the funeral, and read one of her favorite hymns, "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!" We do not mourn without hope, nor can we wish her back to this sorrowful world.

E. A. LAMB.

Mrs. Emma E. Pruitt departed this life Jan. 13th, 1894, after suffering intensely for about two years. She was the wife of George Pruitt, residing near Girdle-tree Hill, Worcester Co., Md. Her age was 55 years, 2 months and 5 days.

Her disease was said to be inflammatory rheumatism and kidney trouble. Sister Pruitt was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church in Salisbury, by Elder George Slater, on Dec. 10th, 1861. Soon after the organization of the Old School Baptist Church in Snow Hill she took a letter and united with that church, and lived an orderly christian life until her death. She manifested a decided reconciliation to the will of her Lord all through her sickness, saying that she was willing to die or live, as the will of the Lord might be. She said to her companion a short time before her death, "The warfare will soon be ended." We miss her very much in our church meetings, for she was nearly always present. We believe that God has taken her unto himself, where the wicked cease from troubling.

She leaves to mourn her departure her devoted companion, with three sons and five daughters. May they all take pattern by her life, for I believe she was a model woman. Her funeral took place at the meeting-house in Snow Hill on Jan. 15th, when the writer tried to speak words of comfort, reading as a text, "For we which are in this tabernacle do groan." Her remains were laid away in the church-yard at Snow Hill, to await the trump of God, when she shall come forth. May the Lord heal the breach by his grace. We would express our sympathy for the bereaved family.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WILL OF MAN.

ITS SUPPOSED FREEDOM IN OBTAINING SALVATION.

BROTHER Shipman, of Arkansas, has asked me to give my views on the above-mentioned theme. In compliance with his request I submit to him and all the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a brief and hurried discussion of the subject. Volumes have been written upon the nature, tendencies and capacities of the human will by all the different schools of philosophy and theology, beginning in the early history of christianity. That the will is free, and is the decisive power in morality, salvation and damnation, seems to be the favorite system of all nominal christian moralists, philosophers, and all work-mongrel, Arminian, will-worshipping churches. Free will forms to-day the chief god of nineteenth century thought and theology, and still sits as of old, in the temple, exalted above all that is called God, and showing itself that it is God.

The discussion of the will belongs properly to the domain of psychology, but I shall know nothing in this article but the Bible and christian experience. My motto is that where fact contradicts philosophy, to take fact and let philosophy go. Where Christ contradicts theology, take Christ and let theology go. If the will were such an important factor, the essential factor in man's salvation, Christ certainly would have emphasized that fact, the apostles would have dwelt more pointedly upon it, and the whole volume of inspired truth would have been given upon entirely different principles, for entirely different purposes, and would necessarily be made up of entirely different contents.

The first condition found in the human will that disqualifies it for the important functions claimed for it, that I shall notice, is its weakness, its uncertainty, its utter fallibility. The Savior said there was a man who had two sons; and he said to them, Go work in my vineyard. One said he would go, but did not; the other said he would not go, but afterward repented and went. Why do you suppose this incident is recorded in the Scriptures? To fill up space, to finish out a page? It is written for our instruction, and serves not only to teach us which of the two boys did the will of the father, but gives us a practical example of the uncertainty of the will. One said he would not, but he did; the other said he would, but did not. How constantly do we find this uncertainty of will exemplified in ourselves and those around us. We say to-day, I will do a certain thing to-morrow; but when to-morrow comes we are out of the notion entirely, and perhaps doing the very opposite. We say we will not do a thing; but perhaps before an hour has elapsed we are fully in the will to do the very thing which we had but a short time ago averred that we would not do. Is it not true then that the will cannot be depended upon for the most trivial things of everyday life? Then how much less can it be depended upon for the incomparably weightier issues of eternity! The world is full of failures in everyday life, resulting from this feebleness of will. How many men and women fail of success in providing comfortable homes in this world from this uncertainty of the will. Then how infinitely farther short must they fall of laying up treasure in heaven through will power. How unreasonable to suppose that God has left the issues of eternity upon the feeble, fickle, uncertain, incompetent will of man. This uncertainty and incompetency of the will is not only a matter of worldly experience, but it is most constantly, powerfully and painfully present in the everyday life of the saints themselves. Has not Paul recorded concerning himself that the good which he would he did not, and the evil which he would not that he did? Is this the language of a man endowed with free will, and preaching the doctrine of free will? This is the common experience of all saints. If the christian cannot depend upon the strength, certainty and freedom of his will for his daily conduct, is it reasonable that the sinner who is dead can bring himself from that state into life and light by his will power?

"The carnal mind is enmity against God."—Rom. viii. 7. The will is an attribute of the mind. They stand in the logical relation to each other of container and thing contained. Then, if the mind is enmity against God, the will is necessarily enmity against God. Is it reasonable to suppose that God has placed himself, his Christ, his grace and salvation, at the disposal of that which is enmity to him? If this were so, would not all they who know the sinfulness of sin and the weakness of the flesh cry out in hopeless despair, Who then can be saved? Christ called attention to the practical working out of this enmity when he said to the Jews, "Ye will not come unto me." Arminians, in their ignorance of the Scripture and the power of God, frequently quote these very words to prove that coming to Christ is left with the will of the creature, when in fact the words prove the very opposite. It is the will that keeps them away, because it is enmity against him. This enmity shows a practical demonstration of itself in the choice of the people when Pilate offered to release a prisoner, in compliance with the Jewish custom at the feast of the passover. He put before them two celebrated personages, Christ and Barabbas: the one the meek and lowly Lamb of God, the Savior of sinners; the other a notorious thief, robber and murderer. When Pilate said, "Which of these men shall I release unto you?" with one accord they chose Barabbas and rejected Jesus; chose a thief and a robber, and condemned the holy and just One. They were well acquainted with the character of both these persons as men. They knew the innocence of the one and the guilt of the other; but enmity against God made the choice. Such is always the choice of the carnal mind. It seems to me that this incident, properly presented, would be enough to stop the mouth of any one proclaiming that salvation depends upon the freedom of the will, in choosing Christ. Here was a fair test, a demonstrative trial, and a convincing result. When the Arminian's favorite theory is brought to the test it will invariably result in this way—a thief chosen, Christ rejected.

Again, ignorance of God, and of right and wrong, of good and evil, is most conclusive evidence against the doctrine of free will and salvation through its choice. A man cannot choose that of which he has no knowledge. Before a man can choose God he must know God; before he can choose Christ he must know him as Christ; because intelligence is essential to the validity of a choice. But men in nature do not know God; they are totally ignorant of Christ. A fundamental principle of Bible doctrine is that the world by wisdom knows not God. Not only is this fact asserted by the Scriptures, but it is strikingly exemplified in the history of our race. Did men know Christ when he was in the world? When he asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" what was the answer? "Some say John the Baptist; some Elias; some Jeremias, or some of the old prophets risen from the dead." All of them wrong. Their highest conception of him was no more than that of a risen prophet, a man who had come up out of the grave, instead of one who had come down from heaven. Every incident in his life, from the cradle to the skies, is concurring testimony that men did not know him. Even his own disciples, they of his own choice, knew him only as he would reveal himself unto them, both before and after his resurrection. He declared himself that "no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; and no man knoweth the Father, but the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." God and Christ are known only by and to each other. They dwell mutually in the secrecy of their own glorious, eternal and invisible personality; and no man (there is no exception to this no man) knows either except through their mutual revelation.

Then it is of the utmost folly to talk of men having power to choose, and their destiny depending upon the exercise of that power. But the boast of this ignorant, idolatrous, blasphemous age is that men are wiser now than ever before; and although they might have been somewhat ignorant two thousand years ago, that matters are quite different now. The man who would take this subterfuge from plain declarations of Bible truth, and the universal exemplification of the same in the conduct of men, is to be pitied for his ignorance, and his cause is to suffer in the estimation of all sensible men for lack of argument. Did not the Jews have an acknowledged advantage over all other men in respect to these things? To them the law was given, to them were committed the oracles of God, and through them as concerning the flesh Christ came. They searched the Scriptures continually, and studied them most diligently. They received the most rigid and thorough religious instruction and training; and when Christ came they in ignorance rejected, persecuted and killed him. If the Jews, who were his own kindred, and among whom he did his wonderful works, in whose streets he taught, and who had been instructed out of the law and the prophets concerning him, did not know him, how much less shall all other nations be expected to know him. If men knew him not when he was here in the flesh, and all nature witnessing and acknowledging his power, how much less shall they know him now when he has ascended into the heavens. Man's ignorance of God, and his conduct toward the man Christ Jesus, prove that salvation is not through the choice of the human will.

The doctrine of free moral agency, as it is called, is universally based upon the idea of man's knowledge of right and wrong, of his qualification to choose between good and evil. This doctrine necessarily gave origin to the old cunningly devised fable of the line of accountability, which is founded in ignorance and superstition, and requires very little investigation of the proper kind to explode it. If our future destiny depends upon the choice of the will, it necessarily depends upon our knowledge of right and wrong; and if our destiny depends upon our knowledge of right and wrong, this knowledge must be so infallible that there can be no possibility of making a mistake. But does man possess this absolute knowledge of good and evil? If it can be shown that he does, then the doctrine of free will may stand, so far as this argument is concerned; but if it can be shown that he does not, then the doctrine of free will must fall with it. The first field for investigation in this matter is ourselves. Have I that knowledge? Have you that knowledge? As for myself I must frankly confess that I have never yet arrived at that place where I always know right from wrong. Perhaps in many things, in the traditional sense, I know right from wrong; but where is my absolute knowledge of good from evil? Where is yours? How often do we perplex ourselves every day over matters continually coming before us in which we are at a loss to know the right thing to do? Frequently, not being able to decide by our own deliberations, we seek the counsel of friends or advisors, and after all find that we have done the wrong thing at last. This is an indisputable fact in the everyday experience of every man. Every christian has found in his own experience that the commandment which he thought was unto life was unto death. Is not the whole religious world, who are engaged in teaching the way to heaven, divided among themselves as to what is the way? Did not the builders in ancient times disallow the stone that became the head of the corner? I will give one example before leaving this part of the discussion. The apostle Paul, or more properly Saul of Tarsus, who had all possible advantages in ethical culture and religious training, after his call declared that when he was persecuting the saints, compelling them to blaspheme, delivering them to death, wasting the church of God, he went not against his own conscience, and that he truthfully thought that he was doing God's service. Many others have lived and labored and died under the same delusive ignorance. What need we further witness that men in nature do not know good from evil? The saints themselves only know as led by the Spirit of God. With the false idea of men's knowledge of right and wrong must fall the favorite air-castle of free moral agency.

The whole process of salvation is directly opposed to the doctrine of free will. The doctrine of election, which lies at the foundation of all salvation, is in direct antagonism to free will; so much so that in order to establish the latter the former must be emphatically denied. That the purpose of God according to election might stand, it was said of Jacob and Esau, "The elder shall serve the younger." Is not this opposed to the will of the creature? Would free will lead the elder to serve the younger? But this is so in order that the purpose of God according to election may stand. Then it is true that free will and God's purpose according to election cannot stand together. Which must fall? Furthermore, if salvation were through the will of the creature, where is the necessity of the election of grace? All believers in the doctrine of free moral agency are led necessarily into a flat denial of election, and, in fact, every other principle of the doctrine of God our Savior.

What had the will of man to do in bringing Christ into the world? Did men make a contract with God that if he would send Christ to die they would accept the sacrifice? Did Christ come into the world to do men's wills? If Christ saves men if they will, what is plainer than that he came to do men's wills? But he says that he came not even to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him; "and this is the will of him that sent me," continued Christ, "that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but raise it up again at the last day." Christ himself was not a free moral agent; he did not come upon that principle. He came not to do his own will; he came as one sent of the Father, bound by the everlasting covenant to execute the will of the eternal Jehovah.

The Savior said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Is there any harmony between this expression and the doctrine of free will? Does not the one essentially down the other? Does not the fact that this birth is a necessity prove most conclusively that all the powers and capacity of the natural man are wholly inadequate to bring him to God? Does it not absolutely cut off every shadow of a possibility of salvation through the combined powers of men, angels and devils? A christian is a child of promise; just as much a child of promise as Isaac was. "We, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise."—Gal. iv. 28. A child of promise is a child that was to be; a child especially promised, which could not possibly come into existence upon natural principles. Isaac was by promise. He was not born after the flesh; his birth was absolutely impossible from that source. So then the christian comes by promise, by the promise of the Father, and is born of the Spirit, because the flesh cannot produce him. If a man should preach that Isaac was born after his own will, or even through the procreative powers of his parents, men would at once reject it as false. A man would be at once apprehended as insane if he were to preach that any man is born after his own will. It is just as unreasonable to preach that men are born again after their own will, or even through means of any kind. That man who has not been born again has no more existence as a christian than the generations who are yet unborn have as citizens of this world. It is just as impossible and unreasonable for a man to come into the kingdom of God through the power of his will, as for a man who shall be born a hundred or a thousand years hence to determine where, when and under what circumstances he will be born, or whether he will be born at all or not.

The doctrine of free will is contradicted by every principle of salvation as taught in the Bible and exemplified in the experience of them that are saved. It is contradicted by many direct quotations of Scripture. "It is not of him that willeth."—Rom. ix. 16. "Not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man."—John i. 13. Salvation is always ascribed to the will of God. There is a willingness that accompanies the experience of the saints, but it is given them of God, the fruit of his Spirit, God himself working in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

H. M. CURRY.

LEBANON, Ohio.

Ghent, Ky., Jan. 9, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am in receipt of a letter from brother Eldan Bartlett, of Garrard County Ky., in which he requests me to give my views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on what is taught in the fourteenth verse of the sixteenth chapter of First Samuel, which is in these words, "But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him."

The apostle says, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. The above quotation from First Samuel is evidently part of that Scripture mentioned by the apostle. Therefore it behooves us to look to its wise, deep and wonderful teachings. The history of Saul as recorded by the prophet would be of little value to us if it were not given by inspiration of God. If it were not so given we might as well look for instruction in righteousness to the histories of Napoleon or Wellington. But the sacred and holy purposes of the Almighty were that his people while they sojourned on earth should have a rule of faith and practice, that they might be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. He in his love for them inspired his servants and enabled them to record the great, wonderful and ever glorious truths contained in his sacred word. But how strange it appears to me that any of God's dear people should ever think of calling upon one as feeble and ignorant of the sacred teachings of that great volume, as I know myself to be, to expound its ever precious truths to them. This I know, "without him I can do nothing;" therefore I know that what I may write upon that wonderfully mysterious subject will be less valuable to the dear saints than blank paper, unless my pen is guided by wisdom from on high.

But the Old Testament abounds in types and shadows, and they point away to the great and wonderful things seen, known and felt by the people of God in the gospel dispensation. Evidently Saul was a type, and his character pointed to that with which God's dear people are most familiar. The first Adam, from whom we all have descended, was of the earth earthy, and that earth brought forth thorns and thistles. They were its natural productions. They did not afford food or raiment for man, but pierced him sorely. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and in that flesh dwelleth no good thing; and the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, &c. All these traits of character are clearly manifest in the history of king Saul. Then he evidently is a type of the fleshly nature of all Adam's race. But more especially is he a type of the fleshly nature of the children of the kingdom while they are clothed with mortality. The apostle says, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17. Our Lord said, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."—John vi. 63. Then the children of the kingdom while here below are clothed with flesh and blood, which is not made spiritual in the great work of regeneration. Saul could not retain his dominion over Israel as king, but must yield to David, who was a type of Christ. So you, dear saint, must yield up all your fleshly powers, and be brought under the glorious reign of him who is King of kings and Lord of lords. But that will not be till you are removed by death from the power and dominion of the flesh. When Saul died he ceased to persecute David; and when you lay aside the habiliments of the flesh you will cease to persecute him who was the great antitype of David. But in the text we are told that "the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him." Saul in early life was a man of low degree. He said, "Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou so to me?"—1 Sam. ix. 21. But when he was anointed king of Israel, pride, arrogance and self-esteem became prominent in his character. When the women said, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands," Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him, and he said, "They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me but thousands; and what can he have more but the kingdom?" David had slain Goliath of Gath, and had conquered the Philistines, and thus saved Israel from their enemies. It was then the evil spirit which the Lord had sent upon Saul was made manifest, and that evil spirit was the workings of the flesh, and the jealousy and envy shown toward David was the effect of the work of the flesh. Then the Spirit of the Lord departed from him. That Spirit was the protection given to him, which was manifest in his battles with the Philistines and his victories over them. It had no resemblance to the graces of the Spirit given to the saints in the great work of regeneration, which are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, &c. But when Israel rebelled and desired a king, desired to be like the nations of idolaters round about them, the Lord gave them Saul, who possessed the same fleshly nature that was so clearly made manifest among God's chosen people by their desire to throw off the form of government given them by the Almighty. Israel was a rebellious people, although they were the chosen of the Lord. In the manifestations of their fleshly nature they rebelled against him who had delivered them from Egyptian bondage and given them a heritage in a goodly land. And so it is with you and I, brother Bartlett, if we are the children of God; day by day as we journey onward towards the tomb, a spirit of rebellion and irreconciliation manifests itself in us. Then, like Saul, we become proud and self-reliant. He was proud of his victory over the Amalekites, and relied on his own judgment when he disobeyed the commandment of the Lord, when he said, "Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass."—1 Sam. xv. 3. In disobedience of that command he spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them. But when Samuel came to Saul, Saul said unto him, "Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed. Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on. And Samuel said, When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel? And the Lord sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners, the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed. Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord?"—Verses 13-19. But Saul continued to plead his obedience and his good works, and to lay the blame on the people, by saying, "The people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal. And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king."—Verses 21-23. I have said that Saul was a type of the fleshly nature of the children of the kingdom. If we are the children of God, brother Bartlett, we, when viewing our proneness to sin in our every day life, can see the character of Saul in ourselves. It was thus with Isaiah when he said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." It was thus with David when he said, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." It was so with Paul when he said, "I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." They were all the children of God, but gave evidence of the reigning power of sin in their mortal bodies. "He that offendeth in one point is guilty of the whole law," is the language of inspiration. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Then evidently king Saul was a prototype of the fleshly nature of all

God's dear people. In that nature they are all guilty of the whole law. In that nature they have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Saul offended in disobeying the commandment of God, and he was rejected from being king. How often, dear saints, when walking in disobedience, you find yourselves rejected, and the beauties and glories of the kingdom of God's dear Son are removed from you, and you weep as Saul did when Samuel told him that he was rejected from being king. But there is this contrast between you and that proud king: his disobedience was not made manifest to him until he was rebuked by Samuel, who said, "The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine, that is better than thou."—Verse 28. Then Saul mourned; but, like Esau, he could find no place of repentance. His sorrow was of the flesh. He sought the worldly honor of the kingdom. He said, "I have sinned: yet honor me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people and before Israel." That appeal to Samuel was but the result of his fleshly desires. He desired to be honored before the elders and before Israel. His was not the language of the psalmist, who said, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit."—Psalm li. 10-12. Saul desired worldly honors, while the psalmist prayed for that righteousness which is alone the gift of God. His prayer was, "Create in me a clean heart, O God." "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation." How often, dear saints, when a desire for worldly honors like that which was manifest in Saul prevails with you, the absence of the salvation of the Lord is mourned by you, and in darkness, gloom and sorrow your cry is, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit." Then worldly honor, glory and fame recede from your view, and you cease for the moment to be like king Saul. When the Lord hearkens and hears your prayers he does not give you worldly honor and glory; he does not restore unto you an earthly kingdom; but he creates in you a clean heart, out of which go songs of praise, adoration and thanksgiving to his great and wonderful name. Then you cry out, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts. My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord. My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." This presents the contrast between that which was prefigured by Saul and that which was shown by David. David was a figure of Christ, and it is Christ in you the hope of glory that enables you to give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, and to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. No confidence could be reposed in Saul. He sought the life of David. He through covetousness disobeyed the command of the Lord. He tried to deceive Samuel, and to lay the blame of his disobedience on the people. These are all striking characteristics of the flesh, or the natural man, the old man, which the apostle declares is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts. But you, dear saints, are admonished to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. All should do this in their daily walk and conversation. All should desire to live to the honor and glory of that great name, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies and envies, and all evil speakings, which are all of the flesh, and found in the character of Saul. Then be not followers of Saul, but followers in all things of the glorious Son of God, who rideth upon the heavens in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky; to whom be all the glory.

These poor, rambling thoughts are at the disposal of the brethren editors; and if published, brother Bartlett and all the dear saints who read them will please receive them as a token of the love of one who often fears that he is a follower of Saul rather than of the glorious Son of God.

BATH, Maine, Dec. 24, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have had some comforting thoughts concerning Jesus as the true Vine, the Father as the Husbandman, the disciples as the branches, and the fruit they bear. I feel a desire to express some of them to you with the ability which God gives me, and I shall gladly leave it to your judgment whether it is worthy a place in the SIGNS or not.

The vine and the branches looked very beautiful to me; for Jesus said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." The Father is the husbandman, and he will care for the vine. The branches which bear fruit he will purge, that they may bring forth more fruit. The children of God are known by their fruits; and these all seemed like beautiful clusters of ripe spiritual fruit. The knowledge of being a sinner, the mourning on account of sin, the hungering and thirsting after righteousness, the desire to be more like Jesus, so that our walk and conversation would be as becometh a child of God, the evidence of having passed from death unto life, the fullness of joy in the presence of Jesus, being able to say that Jesus is the Lord by the Holy Ghost.

FEB. 4, 1894.—Dear brethren, I have been waiting to see if my mind would be led to write any more on the theme in the first of this letter.

RESCINDING ORDINATION.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have been a subscriber for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for thirty years. If my memory serves me right, I have not asked you or your father to give your views on any subject until this time. There is a matter which has been upon my mind for more than four years, upon which I wish your views. It is this: Has the church of Christ any scriptural authority for rescinding the act of ordination of Elder or Deacon, which has been done by a counsel and the laying on of hands by a Presbytery? If this request meets your approbation, please reply through the SIGNS, and oblige one whose desire is to walk uprightly before the world, and orderly in the house of the Lord.

H.

Although this inquiry has been on hand a long time, the subject is not less important than when it was first proposed. Nor has it been for want of disposition to comply with the wish of our brother that its consideration has been delayed. Rather has it resulted from conscious inability to present the truth in its clearness and power. Even now, it is with much hesitancy that we attempt to write on the matters involved. This is not because of any lack of perfection in the revealed law of Christ, but from a realizing sense of the extreme liability of our ignorance perverting the truth of God through the blindness of prejudice and tradition.

The whole system of the organization of the church is involved in the subject submitted by our brother. It is not a sufficient answer to his question to refer to the established usage of the church as far as her history can be traced. False doctrine and disorderly action have gained no authority by having been covered beneath the dust of a thousand years. Nothing can command the obedience of the church of Christ without the seal of his approval in the inspired record of truth. Therefore, in seeking the solution of any question of doctrine or order, it is necessary to consult the Scriptures as the only infallible standard. In all ages the Baptists have regarded this as the conclusive test of gospel truth. Many inventions of men have at various times crept into the practice of the church, by which the simplicity of the gospel has been buried for the time beneath ceremonies and traditions which have seemed plausible and harmless; but the terrible fire of the word of the Lord never fails to consume all such innovations upon the purity of his own doctrine and law. Only the word of the Lord endureth forever.

In examining this subject, the first thing to be considered is the law of Christ in the establishing of his church. Certainly all the power which the church can possess must be derived from the commandment of her King. That commandment is definitely set forth in the decisions and decrees left upon record by the apostles of Jesus, whom he commanded to teach the observance of all things whatsoever he had commanded them as his immediate disciples. Then it is safe to conclude that nothing is to be regarded as sound doctrine without the express declaration of those inspired judges in the spiritual Israel. And nothing can be in gospel order unless it is authorized by the direct judgment of the same appointed rulers.

While the nations of this world find it necessary to enact innumerable specific laws to meet the various circumstances and cases which may arise in their ever-changing times, in the kingdom of our God and Savior there has never been any occasion for modifying or altering that perfect law of liberty which is ordained in the very foundation of this divine government. When in their blindness the saints have departed from this law of their Lord, they have never been able to find the answer of a good conscience toward God in any device of their own wisdom. Only in confessing their sin and folly and in returning to humble obedience have they been blessed with the approving acceptance of their Lord. By heartfelt experience they know that in his presence there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore. For these evidences they do hunger and thirst, and without them they can never be satisfied. Hence it is clear that the church of Christ cannot exercise any power without the direction of the Spirit of Christ. Whatever is done under the guidance of that Spirit is not less firmly established than the throne of him by whose commandment it is done. When the saints are led by their own carnal mind in doing anything, it is no more the act of the church of Christ than if it had been done by those who never heard the name of the Lord. Whatever they may do in this way is but their own act as natural men. Certainly such action cannot be binding upon the church as of divine authority. This must be true of every action, whether in the reception of members, or in the execution of discipline, or in the ordination of official servants in the organized church.

Baptists have been accustomed to regard the claim of infallibility by the Pope as arrant blasphemy; is it not equally presumptuous for us to claim that it is impossible for the church to err in her administration of the ordinances? This seems the unavoidable inference from the proposition that there is no power in the church to correct an error by which a brother has been set apart to a place for which the church has found that he is not properly qualified. There can be no question of the power in the church to cut off an offending member from her fellowship. Is it consistent to deny her authority to require subjection to her judgment on the part of those whom she retains in membership? But the law of the Lord has expressly enjoined mutual subjection on every professed follower of Jesus. So far from leaving room for those whose claim to official position is disputed, to assert independence of the judgment of the church, even those whom all confess as elders are admonished against claiming to be lords over God's heritage, and unto them it is said, "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble."—1 Pet. v. 4, 5. In the spirit of this injunction the peace of the church is not maintained by arbitrary force, but by the love of God ruling in every member. While this humility and esteem for the brethren control them the elders and deacons will not resist the judgment of the church, even though it require them to give up the positions to which they have been regularly chosen. If they have not the Spirit of Christ no conformity to the letter of the Scriptures can be acceptable service to him. On the other hand, there is a possibility that the members of the church may be governed by a carnal motive in refusing to recognize a gift which has been bestowed upon one of their number. Then the claim is likely to be urged that the church is sovereign, and her decision must be final. The stronger the power of this fleshly feeling the more impatient will it render those under its control; so that confidence in their own importance may even blind them to the most manifest evidences of the qualifications of a brother for the work unto which he has been called of God. When a whole church is controlled by such prejudice it is indeed in a very deplorable condition. Nothing less than the direct interposition of omnipotent grace can restore such a church to the spiritual standing from whence it has fallen. When led by the prejudices of the flesh nothing can be done in obedience to the commandment of Christ. The fact that the form of church order is observed only adds hypocrisy to the wickedness of violating the perfect law of love, which is ordained of God for the government of the church in all her actions. Even in the apostolic age there were cases in which this carnality prevailed in the churches. It is not strange if there are such instances in the present day. When walking after the flesh, the whole church and counsel may be no less liable to err than any individual member. It would be preposterous to conclude that such error must never be corrected.

In consideration of the complications which may result from improper action in conferring the sanction of the church upon such as have not the gifts to which they aspire, the church cannot be too earnestly desirous to be guided by the Spirit of Christ in deciding every case coming before her. It is much more difficult to know how to correct an error, than to know what the law of Christ requires in a case where there has been no action taken. Since elders and deacons are the servants of the church, it must be true that they are subject to the church whom they serve. They could have no official standing without the organized church to which they belong. They do not sustain the church, but receive all their powers from the sanction and endorsement of the church subject to the law of Christ. Thus whatever they do officially is the action of the church by whose authority they have been set apart to their positions. In those organizations of antichristian orders claiming to be churches, their clergy assume to rule over the lay members. But no such aristocracy is authorized in the kingdom of our Redeemer. Here we have neither clergy nor laity. Jesus says, "Be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Master, even Christ; and ALL YE ARE BRETHREN."—Matt. xxiii. 8. No such kingdom was ever known among men as this which is established by our Lord. The whole law of the kingdom is love; and he that is least in the company of the disciples is the most highly honored. The humility which seeks the most obscure place is already exalted nearest the shining pattern of our glorious Lord. This peculiarity of the organization of the gospel church must be observed in arriving at a correct answer to the inquiry of our brother.

No power has been conferred upon the church by which she can make any law or rule for her own government. Whenever an organized company of believers adopt any practice or doctrine without the commandment of our Lord as defined by his apostles, they depart from their allegiance to Jesus. To the extent of that departure they cease to be entitled to be called a church of Christ. Yet there is provision in the order which our King has established by which those who have erred may be restored to the path of obedience. Whether a single believer or a church has departed from the right way of the Lord, it is the glory of the gospel that Jesus is exalted with the right hand of God to give repentance and the forgiveness of sins to such disobedient ones.—Acts v. 31. Certainly there is a place for such repentance in the law of Christ.

Since the church has the exclusive authority for selecting those of her members in whom she recognizes the qualification for serving as elders or deacons, it necessarily follows that she must be authorized to sit in judgment upon the conduct and practice of the servants thus chosen. Specific direction is given in the case of an accused elder. "Against an elder receive not an accusation but before two or three witnesses."—1 Tim. v. 19. While this admonition implies that especial care should be taken to avoid injury to the usefulness of an elder by entertaining captious charges against him, yet it clearly shows that their having passed under the hands of a presbytery has not placed them beyond the reach of the jurisdiction of the church. And since the power of the church to withdraw fellowship from any disorderly or unruly member cannot be doubted, the power to rescind her own action granting approval of the gift of one of them seems necessarily included in the greater authority of excluding him from her membership. It is difficult to comprehend why any elder or deacon could wish to retain his official standing in a church when that church had manifested a question of the correctness of her action in setting him apart to that place. Love to the church would lead to submission to her maturer judgment.

It is true that when a Presbytery has passed upon the case of one and set him apart to a particular work, as is customary among Old School Baptists, the church has voluntarily submitted her judgment to that of the Presbytery. Under such circumstances, there might be only a becoming deference in conferring with the same Presbytery before withdrawing her endorsement from their action. Such a course would be in accordance with the direction, "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous."—1 Peter iii. 8. Judging from our own feelings, if the church of our membership should signify their mind that it would be for their benefit that our exercise of ministerial gifts should cease, with our present sense of unprofitableness we could not ask that the case should be submitted to a Presbytery. If any of our correspondents feel inclined to write on this subject, we unite in the request that they may let their views be known to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

I find that the righteousness of Christ is what my mind dwells upon now. It far exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees; and if we have had the evidence that the precious blood of Jesus has cleansed us from all sin, and we have been clothed with this beautiful robe of righteousness, we have already entered the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of God is within us; and it "is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." The words of Isaiah express the experience of my heart much better than I can, "And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Since I was brought into a knowledge of the truth by the power of God, and beheld the righteousness of Christ, there has been a peace given me which passeth all understanding. I do not mean to speak in a boasting manner, but I do feel that the quietness and assurance which I have felt have been "the effect of righteousness." It has been given me in times of deep distress, when my strength was all gone, and I had fallen, and thought there was no one to help me. The Lord heard my cry, delivered me out of my distresses, and caused me to rejoice that the peace, quietness and assurance forever were found in him. It was the effect of his righteousness, and not my own. I felt to sing,

"O let the dead now hear thy voice;
Bid, Lord, thy banished ones rejoice;
Their beauty this, their glorious dress,
Jesus, the Lord, our righteousness."

It is far beyond my power to express the sweetness of that faith which is the gift of God, when it comes into my heart with power, and enables me to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset me, causing me to look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of this very same faith. It is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." I do hope for salvation through the work of Jesus Christ; and faith assures me that he did die, did arise again, and is alive for evermore; and every child of God is saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation. We have not seen God with our natural eyes at any time, but this faith is an evidence that we have been taught of him and made to believe in him—an evidence of things not seen. One of the disciples says, "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory: receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." The redemption of God's people is all finished.

"If he shed his precious blood
To bring me to his fold,
Can I think that meaner good
He ever will withhold?"

"Satan, vain is thy device!
Here my hope rests well assured;
In that great redemption price
I see the whole secured."

If you think this is not worthy a place in the SIGNS I shall feel confident that your judgment is best. I am glad that we have a paper which declares the truth so clearly. Jesus set forth as the all-sufficient Savior will be the most nourishing food for the weakest babe in Christ, and meat for those who are strong in the Lord, not in themselves. May you be spared many years to declare the truth as it is in Jesus, is my desire.

Your unworthy sister in hope,

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed find two dollars to pay for the SIGNS. It does seem to me that if any lover of the truth would take it one year they would want to take it as long as they live. I feel that way about it. I do not take it because it is cheap, but hope I take it for the truth's sake, and for the building up of Zion in waste places and in desert lands. I feel to be all of these things myself, a waste place and a desert land. In the last two years of my life I have been led into very deep waters, and many times been made to cry out in the language of one of old, "Lord, save, I perish." I feel that I have been made to do business in great waters. It is a great wonder to me that I am yet alive and am not consumed. David said, "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters, these see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep." It seems like the older I get the darker my way is. I cannot see one moment ahead. "The way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." It is written that the Lord found Jacob in a desert land, in a waste howling wilderness. He led him about and instructed him, and kept him as the apple of his eye. O that the Lord would lead me and keep me by his power, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. O that I could walk more humbly before him, and say at all times, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." I know that my trials on earth have been great; yet in the midst of them all I have had some moments of sweet reflection; and sometimes, ere I have been aware, I have been using the language of David, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside the still waters." And again I am made to say, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." But these bright moments are of short duration. The tempter is always about, to fright my soul away. For when I would think a good thought, evil is present with me. The good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" I often feel that if it were not for the record of Paul's experience, and that of many of the dear saints, and many of the little trembling ones who write for the SIGNS, I would be of all men most miserable. They all testify to the same things, knowing and feeling themselves to be the chief of sinners; yet they feel to say of themselves as did Paul, "By the grace of God I am what I am." O that our hearts might be more closely knit together, and that this love of God in our hearts would flow like a river. There is nothing more beautiful than to see the love of brethren one toward another. But O! this wretched, deceitful heart of mine. It is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. O that I could live each day of my life as though it were my last day; but I cannot.

Dear brethren Beebe, I hope you will excuse me for bothering you with this scribble, for I had no thought of writing so much when I took up my pen. If you think there is anything in this worth the attention of any of the little ones you may put it in one corner of the SIGNS; and if not, throw it in the waste-basket, and all will be well with me. Wishing you and the dear old SIGNS much success, I now say, Farewell.

Your brother, I hope.

J. F. OLIVER.

LONDON, Ontario, June 18, 1893.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Doubtless you will remember that when Elder Lester preached at Southampton he quoted the words, "And he sweat as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." I spoke of this as being so deeply impressed upon my mind, and it has been at times ever since. One night last week, when not feeling very well, and feeling very lonesome and sad, I went to my bed at an early hour, and soon began to think of the scene in Gethsemane's garden. Yes,

"His way was much rougher and darker than mine;

Did Jesus thus suffer, and shall I repine?"
Soon after this the following lines came to me. If you think they are worth saving, do so; and if not, cast them away.

Come, sinner, come, and view the place
That's named Gethsemane,
Where Jesus shed those sacred drops,
Pressed out in agony.

Pause, sinners, pause, for who can know
The heavy weight that fell,
When God on him his vengeance pour'd,
To save our souls from heli.

When press'd in agony he groan'd,
God sent his angel down,
To strengthen him while drops of blood
Were falling to the ground.

Think, O my soul! it was for thee
Those heavy strokes he bore,
To open wide a door of hope,
And Jesus is the door.

That gloomy night has pass'd away
Which on our souls once hung;
And now shines forth the glorious day,
And Jesus is the Sun.

WE LOOK FOR THE SAVIOR.

THE substance of a sermon at the funeral of Mrs. Mary Ball, of Minneapolis, Minn., at the house of her sister, Mrs. Lina W. Beck, of Crawfordsville, Ind., by Elder D. Bartley, Dec. 26th, 1893, and written for the SIGNS by request of the family.

Text: "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. iii. 20, 21.

The text is to christians, or those who are in the Lord Jesus Christ by a spiritual life-union with him. The word "conversation" applies to our christian life and interest and walk. The new version reads, "Our citizenship is in heaven." That is, our inheritance, treasure, heart and life are there. Heaven is our home. This was true of our sister Ball, whose body now rests so sweetly in the casket before us. Jesus was her Redeemer and Savior, her life and hope and glory. In him she believed, trusted and rejoiced; and in him she peacefully fell asleep.

This world is not our home, for we are born unto sorrow, pain and death. The children of God (those who are born again) are pilgrims on earth; for God is their Father, his Son Jesus is their Brother, and holy heaven is their eternal home. Therefore being risen with Christ, we should seek those things which are above, where he is, and set our affection on things heavenly and divine. We should wear the world as a loose garment, and not be worldly in our lives and minds; for the world and the fashion of it passeth away. "Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God," says Paul. Worldly-mindedness and worldly-seeking are a snare to the church, and its chief sin. "Beware of covetousness, which is idolatry."

"From whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." This shows that he has come to us once, and that we have seen and known him as our personal Savior; therefore we look for his second coming, and wait in hope. The coming of the Lord Jesus was two-fold: for he came personally in the body of his flesh as our Brother, High Priest and Redeemer, to suffer and die for our sins, and so make the atonement to the holy law of God, "that he might redeem us from all iniquity;" then he also came to us personally, to every one of us who believe in him, and as our risen Savior spoke to us the life-giving word of forgiveness and salvation, causing us to see and believe in him, "the resurrection and the life," and believing, to rejoice in him as our own glorious Savior. When the lowly Jesus thus came in his flesh, and came to us in our flesh, he sorrowed and suffered for our sins, and died unto sin, and so did we; for we are made partakers of his sufferings and death, as also of his life and holiness. This is the twofold experience of every child of God and heir of salvation; and this experience covers the whole christian sojourn. The incarnate Son of God was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief through all the days of his life in the flesh; but when he died for our sins on the cross he had then drank the cup of woe and accomplished the baptism of death, and they forever passed away from him. So, too, shall it be fulfilled in us for whom he suffered and died and rose again; for as the man Christ Jesus, our Mediator, was one with us in our death, and swallowed up death in victory on our behalf, so also are we made one with him in his blessed and holy life.

Now all to whom Jesus has thus come in this blessed experience of salvation, manifesting his precious life in our mortal flesh, do behold him as gone into heaven for us, our intercessor and advocate with the Father, from whence we look for him to come again. In this glorious hope of eternal life through the Lord Jesus Christ the dear sister calmly fell asleep. To all who thus die in the Lord, death and the grave have lost their sting and victory. Jesus himself interprets the death of a believer as a sleep. The mother sings the loved child to sleep, because it awakes renewed. Godless infidelity, soulless, faithless, hopeless and dark, can offer no promise of coming glory and immortality to solace our sorrow in this hour of bereavement. So in the height of his eloquent bravado over his dead brother Mr. Ingersoll fell upon the casket and sobbed in hopeless sorrow; but the believer in our ascended Christ looks up to heaven through his sanctified sorrow and smiling tears, from whence he looks for the Savior.

When man had sinned in Eden, and brought death upon his unborn race, God in his mercy promised us a Savior, the Son of the woman. Abel and the patriarchs, the prophets and the people of God, believed the promise and died in faith. Forty centuries came and went; but at the appointed end the angel of God proclaimed to the shepherds of Israel, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

When the risen Christ ascended on high two men in white robes said to the overjoyed disciples of the glorified Son of God, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Yea, before he went away through the door of death Jesus himself said to them, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." In the text his servant Paul says that we look for him from heaven. Again, it is written, "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." His first coming was as the Son of man, as our sin-bearer, to obey and suffer, die and redeem, and so put away our sins forever by the sacrifice of himself; and then to raise up unto God without sin all the redeemed by the power of his resurrection, and save us by his blessed and holy life. The time of his first coming was "in the end of the world;" that is, the end of the law or the legal dispensation, called by Paul "the fullness of the time." He came thus but once—"Once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Moreover, brethren, let us keep in remembrance that his first coming was personal; for he came as the man Christ Jesus, the one anointed Mediator between God and men. His going away, too, was personal and as a man, as Luke testifies in the gospel and the Acts; and so the dying Stephen said, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God."

So, friends and brethren, the second coming of the Son of God, of which the text speaks, shall also be personal and but once; for said the two angelic men in white robes to the disciples, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." This word, "shall so come," shows that he shall return to the earth, where his disciples are, even as he went away.

Dear friends, our minds should be fully established in the divine assurance of the second personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; not again in the humiliation of the flesh, to suffer for sins unto death, nor to be persecuted and rejected of men, but without sin, in great power and glory, to raise the dead and judge the world in righteousness. In the gospel of our salvation there is no truth and promise more positively revealed and established than this. Indeed, the holy Scriptures present this as the crowning work and glory of Christ in salvation. The divine testimony shows also that his second personal coming shall be in the end of the gospel day, as his first personal advent to the earth was in the end of the legal night; and as the angels of God announced the first advent of the holy Son of man, and then proclaimed at his ascension that he should come again, so shall they herald his glorious appearing. He himself said, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Again, he says, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Paul says, "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels:"

"when he shall come to be glorified in his saints." In Athens he testified of God, and said, "He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Four times in one chapter (John vi.) does Jesus speak of that day, calling it "the last day," when he will raise up again all that the Father gave him. Twice in the last chapter of the New Testament does he say, "Behold, I come quickly." Then, as his last leave-taking and word of promise, he said, "Surely I come quickly." Now therefore we look and hope and wait for him to come again from heaven, and with the beloved John we respond to his last word and say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

This promise of our Lord's coming in glory and immortality was the hope and trust of sister Ball. So, too, did Mary and Martha earnestly hope for the Master's return; nor were they disappointed, for, lo, he came to them in the power and blessing of the resurrection and the life, and sorrow and weeping and death itself fled away when Jesus came.

"Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Thus does the close of the text comfortingly show us, dear brethren, the blessed and glorious work and purpose for which our Savior shall come again. Our bodies are now corruptible, mortal and vile because of sin. By man came sin and death; but, blessed be God, "By man came also the resurrection of the dead." The first is not more sure than shall be the last, for the resurrection of the buried body of Christ is abundantly authenticated; so likewise shall all who are Christ's be raised up. "Christ the first fruits: afterward they that are Christ's at his coming," says Paul, the man of faith. "At his coming." O he is coming! "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." The faithful and inspired Paul also says, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. * * * Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? * * * Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

When this final, spiritual and immortal change shall come to us our risen and heavenly body shall then be fashioned like unto his glorious body, says the text. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." The power of our risen, ascended and immortal Christ is able even to subdue sin, Satan, death and all things unto himself; and according to the working of this power in us he will thus raise up, change and glorify us in our body, that we may forever behold the glory of the Son of God, see him as he is, and rapturously glorify our Father in blissful, holy heaven.

In this divine assurance of the gospel of Christ the bereaved family find sweet solace, and their sorrow is sanctified; for they realize by faith that God giveth his beloved sleep, and that the dear departed is not dead, but sleepeth in Jesus.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am requested to send you for publication a notice of the death of sister Mary M. Little, which occurred Jan. 20th, 1894, at her home in London Tract, Pa., aged 73 years and 1 month.

Her disease was cancer of the stomach, which developed very rapidly, there being no intimation of anything of the kind until but a few weeks previous to her death. She was baptized by Elder Thos. Barton on the second Sunday in August, 1866, and continued a faithful and devoted member of the London Tract Church until called from the scenes of earth into the full joys and blessedness of the eternal state. Her seat was seldom vacant, and we shall miss her pleasant companionship in our little meetings.

She leaves one child, a daughter, Miss Mattie, who has proved a faithful and dutiful daughter, and who is now left to mourn in her loneliness the loss of mother and friend; but we trust that she may be given to realize the blessed consolations of the word, and that her mourning is not without hope.

The assembling of a large congregation of friends and neighbors at her funeral on the 24th attested the esteem in which she was held by all who knew her. Elder Wm. Grafton preached on the occasion, greatly to the comfort of the bereaved.

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Feb., 1894.

IN Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., on the evening of Thursday, Feb. 8th, 1894, Miss Hannah Augusta Welling, after a long and lingering affliction with bronchial consumption, was gently delivered from her sufferings, drawing her last breath so quietly that anxious watchers did not know the moment when her spirit was released.

She was the daughter of the late Wm. and Elizabeth Welling, both of whom were highly esteemed members of the Warwick Old School Baptist Church. Sister H. Augusta was born in 1835, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Warwick Church on Dec. 1st, 1861. Although almost from her childhood much afflicted, grace was given our sister enabling her to display great fortitude, and even cheerfulness, until she became so weak as to be unable to continue to see her many devoted friends. Nothing was neglected for her comfort which love could suggest to her surviving sisters, Sarah and Joanna, with whom she resided, and who, with her married sister, Mrs. A. B. Kolyer, of Brooklyn, are left to mourn their loss.

A large assemblage of those who had known her for a lifetime attested the high estimation in which she was held by attending her funeral. Her pastor spoke briefly from the words of comfort recorded 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; after which her emaciated body was laid in the cemetery with the loved ones who had preceded her.—ED.

Mary L. Smith, eldest daughter of Jos. E. and Martha E. Smith, was born in Rush, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., May 19th, 1872, and departed this life Feb. 16th, 1894, her age being 21 years, 8 months and 27 days.

The cause of her death was consumption. She was not constantly confined to her bed until about the last week of her illness. She expressed great patience throughout her sickness, and requested her relatives to sing and pray. She was a good, faithful, christian girl, also an affectionate daughter and kind sister, much beloved, and a highly esteemed friend. She was well-liked by all who knew her. Some time ago the Lord for Christ's sake revealed himself to her as the chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely; but she did not confess her hope in Christ until Saturday before the third Sunday in August, 1893, and on the following Sunday was led down into the liquid grave, and there buried in baptism by Elder Benjamin Sallee, and raised to walk in newness of life. She united with the New Hope Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists, of which she was an emolumental member and much beloved sister. It can truthfully be stated that she walked worthy of the vocation wherewith she was called.

The funeral services were conducted by Elder Wm. A. Thompson, of Springfield, Ill., his text being found in John xiv. 6. His remarks were attentively listened to by a large audience. The remains of the deceased were laid to rest in the Minor cemetery, near those of her aunt, Mrs. Mary T. Richardson, who departed this life Jan. 15th, 1893.

We do truly mourn our loss of our dearly beloved sister, and greatly sympathize with our brother and sister and the entire family in their bereavement.

Done by order of the New Hope Church, on Saturday before the third Sunday in February, 1894.

BENJAMIN SALLEE, Mod.

MATILDA ARNOLD, Clerk.

DIED—At his home in this place, Milaca, Minn., Jan. 25th, 1894, of typhoid fever, Charles H. Bevere, aged 36 years.

Mr. Bevere was born in Ulster Co., N. Y., in 1858, where he passed his boyhood and early manhood. On Feb. 22d, 1887, he married Miss Amelia Boyington, who after seven years of a happy life survives him, her deep sorrow being shared by three sweet little children, two daughters and one son.

Mr. Bevere was an honest man and a true christian. More can be said of no man. He was possessed of a kind heart, and no man was his enemy. Few men leave behind them a clearer record than does Charles Bevere. A richer inheritance than the example of an upright life no man can bequeath. After long weary days of sickness rest came to him. He has found peace, eternal peace. Heaven was opened to him, and he has found a welcome from One whom on earth he loved to honor.

After prayer at the family home, the funeral and interment took place at Clear Lake, Minn., Elder Taylor officiating. The text was a part of Revelation xiv. 13: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

"Sleep on, beloved, sleep, and take thy rest;
Lay down thy head upon thy Savior's breast.
We loved thee well, but Jesus loves thee best.
Good night! good night! good night!
Only good night, beloved, and not farewell.
A little while and all his saints shall dwell
In hallowed union indivisible.
Until we meet again before his throne,
Clothed in the spotless robe he gives his own,
Until we know even as we are known,
Good night! good night! good night!"

MRS. G. MCCLURE.

DIED—At her home near Reynolds, Taylor Co., Ga., Jan. 12th, 1894, of "La Grippe," Mrs. Emeline Brand, wife of M. L. Brand, aged 69 years, 7 months and 24 days.

She was born May 18th, 1825, and was a daughter of Sheradan and Matilda Davis. She joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Mt. Carmel in her fourteenth year, and was baptized by Elder James Reckmore in 1834. She was married to M. L. Brand

Oct. 15th, 1843. Twelve children blessed their union. Six daughters and one son preceded her to the tomb. Four daughters, one son, her dear companion and many relatives and friends mourn our loss; but our loss is her eternal gain. I was not with my sainted mother when she died, and will copy a portion of what my father wrote me after her death:

"I am improving in health, but am overwhelmed in grief and loneliness at the loss of my dear wife. She departed this life last night. She calmly and gently sank to rest, professing a strong hope and faith in her dear Savior. The closing scene of her life was beautifully calm and serene. She passed away without the least struggle, and was conscious to the last. O, dear daughter, you cannot imagine how lonely and desolate I feel."

I will just say that mother's godly walk and conversation were such as become a meek and lowly follower of our dear Redeemer. She was of a quiet, retiring nature; but when the doctrine of God our Savior was assailed she stood firm and unmoved, ever trusting in that finished salvation, having no confidence in the flesh. She was ever ready to minister to those in distress. As a wife, mother and neighbor she could not be excelled.

"Wife and mother, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

M. J. McQUEEN.

BRINKLEY, Ark., Feb. 14, 1894.

"THE hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness."

Died—Jan. 13th, 1894, Mrs. Elizabeth Tompkins. This dear sister was eighty-seven years old the day before she died. She was married to Charles Tompkins, in Delaware Co., N. Y., and came to Michigan in 1834. She was the daughter of Joseph Every, being one of a family of ten children. She was called to mourn the loss of her dear companion in 1862, leaving her a widow; and truly she was a widow indeed. She was the mother of four children; one died in infancy, and a son and two daughters survive her. Her son's wife died some thirteen years ago, and she remained in her old home and did all she could, being a very frail body. This dear one came to the Old School Baptist Church of Columbia when she was nearly seventy years old, with the same glorious truth that caused her to hope in the God and Rock of her salvation. She had had a hope for many years, but was always fearing and trembling, feeling her unworthiness to follow her dear Master in baptism; yet the Lord gave her abundant grace. She seemed greatly to rejoice in God her Savior, and was always so glad to meet with her brethren and sisters, whom she always admonished to hold fast and never leave the old paths. When she could meet with us no more, at times we went to see her, when she would grasp our hands and tell us how she loved us and the truth. But no more will we see her here, nor hear her words of encouragement. We laid her beside the dear companion of her youth to await the last trump. Elder Swartout baptized her, and also spoke on the funeral occasion. She leaves two aged sisters (one in her ninety-second year, I believe) and the church to mourn our great loss, which truly is her great gain.

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove
My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love;
And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

M. P. LEWIS.

WOODSTOCK, Mich.

DIED—Dec. 27th, 1893, Mrs. Ann N. Brown, aged 80 years, 4 months and 2 days.

She was born in Louisa Co., Va., and was a daughter of Wm. and Ann D. Lipscomb. When fourteen years old she moved with her parents to Franklin Co., Tenn., united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Beans Creek, in same county, in her eighteenth year, and was baptized by Elder Wm. Woods. She was married to John Brown on Jan. 7th, 1835.

Thus, though this dear old saint battled with the storms of life for eighty years, in a few words we record that she has come and is gone; but by request the writer accepts the pleasant duty of recording some events of her useful life.

Sister Brown was a remarkable woman in many respects. Possessed of a good intellect and a most wonderful memory, it was both interesting and instructive to hear her narrate the many incidents that she had observed during her long and eventful life. In 1839 she with her husband joined by letter with Shiloh Church, Yalobusha Co., Miss., where they walked together in sweet fellowship until the death of brother Brown in 1864, where she has ever since remained a faithful member, useful too, as by her long experience and sound judgment she was a safe counselor in matters affecting the interests of the church. Her opportunities being favorable, she spent much of her time in visiting sister churches, as well as being faithful to attend all the services of her own church. Perhaps no member of this (Hopewell) association has traveled more to meet with the brethren and sisters than she, for the most part on horseback, as she preferred that to any other conveyance. The highest type of a christian woman, blended with a kind and genial nature, it is not strange that in this long and varied intercourse she attracted to herself a large circle of warm personal friends, many of whom will read this and feel sad to know that never again will they hear the pleasant greetings of sister Brown. She was a woman of great energy, and has lived a life of activity and industry. She retained to a great degree the faculties of both mind and body, having ridden horseback four miles a few months prior to her death to visit a sick friend. It was ever her delight to visit her neighbors and friends in sickness and distress; and being of a cheerful, hopeful nature herself, she always had a word of comfort to offer others. For some weeks before her death she had been unusually well, but was seized with a severe attack of "La Grippe," and lived only one week. She was unconscious for several hours before she died, and so left no dying testimony, but a living one. Yes, her life work is ended; but she has bequeathed a legacy to mankind, to her church, to her neighbors, her children and their children, in the memory of her unblemished character and spotless life, the influence of which will outlive monumental stones. While we all sadly miss her pleasant words of cheer, we can but pity the desolate daughter, sister Mary Meaders, who so long has tenderly cared for her mother, and is the only surviving member of the family. May the voice of God's love whisper in her heart, "Not lost, but only gone before." Only sleeping where kind hands tenderly laid her body to rest beside the dust of her companion in the cemetery at Shiloh, to await the resurrection morn. Yes, "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!"

May the same faith that sustained this precious mother be granted the bereaved daughter and daughter-in-law, to support and comfort them in their lonely widowhood; and if it is God's will, may the four grandsons, now young men in the prime of life, be directed by his love and wisdom to follow in her footsteps, and lead just and upright lives. May we with all the sorrowing relatives be reconciled to his will with us here.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

HINDMOST.

"REMEMBER what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; how he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it."—Deut. xxv. 17-19.

The pathway of the pilgrims to the heavenly country can only be known, appreciated and described by those whom the Holy Ghost has called to walk therein; and "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." To them he gives "one heart and one way." This gracious declaration of Jehovah in the new covenant is unspeakably comforting, for it secures our continuance and steadfastness till all our journeyings are over, and we shall enter "heaven itself," whither Christ Jesus, our High Priest, has entered, and now appears in the presence of God for us. Our beloved Savior takes knowledge of all his blood-bought ones. He knows all their wanderings in the wilderness, and the angel of his presence will ever be their salvation. Let us together, believers in Jesus, consider some of the features belonging to the way, and the fare of the redeemed, wayfaring men. But let us first take a glimpse of them at the commencement of the way. Our text says, "Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt." They were bondmen in the land of Egypt, under cruel servitude to Pharaoh. At length so bitter was their lot that they were constrained to cry in their affliction unto the Lord. They were a type of regenerated sinners, who are taught to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin which enslaves them. God in his great mercy to poor sinners to whom he designs to reveal the riches of his grace in saving them from their sins, causes them to know what a wretched, sinful, lost and undone condition they are in. While the tribes of Israel were around their flesh-pots, eating their garlies and onions, they appeared to be well content to abide in the land of Goshen with their flocks and their herds. Forty years before the time that Jehovah had decreed to visit them and bring them forth into the land that he had promised to give them, Moses visited his brethren; and he supposed that they would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them; but they understood not. They thrust him away, and refused him. O! had they been left to the will of their flesh they had all perished in Egypt. Long years before the exodus of Israel from Egypt their father Abraham confessed the doctrine of sovereign grace, saying, "God caused me to wander from my father's house." So it was the God of Abraham that caused the people to come forth out of the land of Egypt, and to wander in the wilderness. Do we not love that doctrine confessed by our father Abraham? "God caused me to wander."—Gen. xx. 13. We in our day sing,

"His love from eternity fixed upon you,
Broke forth and discovered its flame,
When each with the cords of his kindness
he drew,
And brought you to love his great name."

O! had he not pitied the state you were in,
Your bosoms his love had ne'er felt,
You all would have lived, would have died too in sin,
And sunk with the load of your guilt."

Thus with melody in our hearts we sing, who have hope that Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us. "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." Israel marched out of Egypt. Then there was not one feeble person among their tribes.—Psalm cv. 37. It was the time of their youth, and in the kindness and love of their espousals, they went after the Lord in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.—Jer. ii. 2. So poor sinners to-day who are called by the sovereign grace of God, and have tasted the sweets of redeeming love, are no longer bowed down under servitude to sin; for God's salvation has broken the bands of their yoke and made them to go upright. The day spring from on high hath visited us, and from the womb of this morning by precious faith in our risen Redeemer we have the foretaste and earnest of immortal youth. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death. O the blessedness of the pardoned and justified sinner who now walks in newness of life. His iniquities are forgiven and his sins are covered by the blood and righteousness of the Lamb of God. Against any of the children of Israel at such a time as this shall not a dog wag his tongue. Well may the believer in Jesus walking by faith in the strength of the Lord, go forth of the house of bondage, making mention of our dear Savior's righteousness, even of his only. There was not one feeble person among their tribes. While we were under the law, our hearts were fearful, our hands were weak, and our knees feeble. But when faith in Christ Jesus came to us by the matchless gift of the grace of God, we were no longer experimentally under the bondage of sin and the curse of the law. Out of weakness we were made strong, and though feeble in ourselves we were as strong as David, who in the name of the Lord slew a lion and a bear, and brought low in the dust Goliath the giant who defied the Lord of Host, the God of the armies of Israel. God brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness. The joy of the Lord which he put in their hearts was their strength. Thus onward they marched to the promised land. In less than a month's time they were called to pass through various vicissitudes; and when they were come to Rephidim "Then came Amalek and fought against Israel." This was the first fighting that the tribes of Israel were engaged in while journeying in the wilderness. Ah! when Amalek came! some were feeble, faint and weary, and with tardy steps they followed in the rear, and Amalek smote the hindmost ones. What a change has taken place since that night of their departure from Egypt. Then there was not one feeble person among their tribes. Our journeying in spiritual things, during the time of our pilgrimage while in this world, is that our God will prove us, and we are to be constantly taught that we are helpless, sinful mortals; and in all our trials we shall prove the sufficiency of his grace, and his own name shall be glorified in it all. The predestinated path in which believers are ordained to walk will be found to be through much tribulation; and in times when we feel our strength is decayed, our souls will be "much discouraged because of the way." David exclaimed, "He weakeneth my strength in the way." It is needful that we learn our weakness, for then we shall know how God's grace is sufficient for us, and that his strength is made perfect in our weakness.

"Hindmost." In manifold aspects the children of God are brought to feel themselves the hindmost.

Paradoxical as it may appear, those in the very foremost rank, contend that they are the "Hindmost." Thus the Apostle Paul could say, "I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles," "though I be nothing." Such heartfelt declarations are not exceptional, or peculiar to the apostle Paul, who felt himself to be "less than the least of all saints." But such acknowledgments of our own nothingness spring from the humbling grace of God, which effectually teaches all the saints to esteem others better than themselves. As we are actuated by the Spirit of Christ we shall not be assuming to a pre-eminence; we shall not be lording it over God's heritage; we shall not be found seeking the uppermost rooms, nor chief seats in the synagogues; but in our hearts we shall be found in honor preferring one another.

Let us, dear children of God, attend a little closer to the events that transpired among the tribes of Israel as narrated in our text. It must have been an astonishing and inspiring spectacle, even to the natural eye, to have witnessed such a host, a nation numbering millions, marching through the wilderness. But O how faith's view of these scenes transcends! How much more glorious, inspiring and comforting when it pleases the Holy Spirit to give us glimpses of what these events were spiritually significant of! Then we truly know that all these things happened unto them for ensamples unto us. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."—Rom. xv. 4. In the foremost ranks may be seen such valiant ones as Caleb and Joshua. With eager steps they press forward to the land that floweth with milk and honey, which God hath promised them. Onward come the tribes, all following in the direction whither the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night leads the way. As they pass in review before the eye of faith the varied experience of God's elect is portrayed. But see, dear kindred in Jesus, those in the rear! My heart is much set upon them. I scarcely know how it is; but my eyes are drawn, and my soul's sympathies flow out unto them. Many of them walk wearily; some are staggering and ready to faint by the way; but all have their faces toward those who have gone on ahead; and though hindermost, their feet with slow and feeble steps still tread in the footprints of the foremost ones. "In the footsteps of the flock." Shall we mingle among them? I confess, from their appearances they would be companions for a poor sinner like me. Yes, their walk is like mine, a sort of a tardy, staggering, limping gait; and as I listen to their speech, and catch the language of their moans and sighs, I hear the echo of my own heart's lamentations. How is it, ye hindmost ones of the tribes of Israel, that you are in the rear ranks, and some of you so far behind that you are creeping along alone in a solitary way? Your former companions have outstripped you in the race. Ah, replies one, when we marched forth out of Egypt, and crossed the Red Sea, and saw that Jehovah had triumphed gloriously, and we were free, then was my heart of good courage to go after the Lord into the wilderness. But this wilderness is a barren land, a land not sown. We soon baked up all our dough into unleavened cakes; for we were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had we prepared ourselves any victual. Soon our unleavened cakes were all used up, and a famine stared us in the face. What could we do? There were no harvests of standing corn to gather, but a waste howling wilderness encompassed us. Then my poor heart sank within me. I remembered the flesh pots of Egypt, when I did eat to the full; and now it appeared I must die of hunger; my heart murmured over my hard lot; and I thought, How could God furnish a table for us in such a wilderness? My pace slackened, my strength left me, and I was faint and ready to die. But the God of Israel was merciful and gracious; for "at eventide quails came up and covered the camp, and in the morning the dew lay round about the host; and when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoarfrost on the ground. And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, It is manna; for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat."—Exod. xvi. 13-15. It was sweet to my soul as wafers made with honey; and I thought, I will save some of it for the next day; but on the morrow it bred worms and stank. And now all the manna gathered in the morning is gone by nighttime. There is no lack, but nothing over. And now I am so nervous, feeble minded, I fear some morning when I awake there may be no manna to gather, and that God will leave such an unworthy one like me to perish in this terrible wilderness. Is this anything like you, poor hindermost child of God? Say you perhaps, It is. I hope I have an interest in Christ, the Pass-over Lamb; but I am such a sinner;

I am so full of murmurings. If I am given a little of the hidden manna to eat, I fear I shall perhaps go short to-morrow. I find myself taking thought for the morrow, what I shall eat, and wherewith all I shall be clothed. O my distrustful heart! I am worried about these things, so that I am sickly and faint. All my little strength is gone, and I feel I must sink down, for I have no might to hold on my way. I am so unbelieving that I fear I have wearied the Lord with my iniquities; for in my distrustful heart I have, I know, "limited the holy one of Israel." So here I am, lagging behind, while the dear children of God are all ahead of me. They feed upon Jesus, the Bread of Life, to-day, and they believe that their God will to-morrow and all their life's journey give them each day their daily bread. Ah, I see them all before me, and I'm so far behind. Yet my heart cries out still, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

What is the matter with thee, O hindermost one? How is it that you travel so slowly? Does not your heart yearn to be marching in the front ranks with Caleb and Joshua, who wholly follow the Lord, and are of good courage? O yes, I would well like to be in such company. I catch a glimpse of them now and again. I see their cheerful countenances, and mark the ardor with which they press forward, and I hear them speak of their high hopes of inheritance and rest in the promised land. Then I think how much they differ from a poor worm like me. They are worthy, God loves them, and they live beneath his smile; but I am full of trouble, and my anxieties weary me, and so I drop behind. This clothing that I wear, and these shoes, are all I possess. Thus I was arrayed when I came forth out of Egypt. Now, suppose I should wear them out, I should have nothing to wear. Ah, now, I am feeble and weary, and I fear that in some dark night I shall have my garments taken away from me, and then I shall have to go naked in this wilderness; for I know that my poor, unskillful, feeble hands could only weave as it were a spider's web; and such miserable webs would never do for this journey. I could never cover myself with my own works. If it were not for these shoes I could not walk at all, or follow in the tracks of God's redeemed, so rough and rugged is this wilderness.

Ho, ye hindermost one, what aileth thee? You look sickly. Why droops your head, while sighs and moans attend your tottering footsteps? How is it that your strength has given out, and you are so far in the rear? Ah, I am indeed the hindermost one, if one at all. Mine is a story to my soul's shame. I blush to tell why I am so behind.

"When my heart first believed,
O what joy I received!
What a heaven in Jesus' name!
On the wings of his love
I was carried above
All sin and temptation and pain,
And I could not believe
That I ever should grieve,
That I ever should suffer again."

But O! I am so vile, I am such a sinner, my place is behind all the rest; and though afar off, O may I be suffered still to follow in the footsteps of the flock. Yes, I am a sickly one; I cannot keep up abreast with others. "I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul." Ah, the lusts of my flesh have overcome me; I kept not under my body. I was carried away captive with my vile nature, and lusted exceedingly, and now I am the very hindermost one. Ah, I am such a sinful wretch, it is only with a painful limping step that I can hobble along. O that my crookedness and limping steps were healed!

"But now with tardy steps I creep,
And often sigh and often weep;
But strip me of this house of clay,
And I will sing as loud as they
Who march in foremost ranks."

Ah, poor hindermost one, why look you so sadly to-day? and why do you travel so behind? Do you inquire of me? Why, how can I go ahead? This world is a wilderness of woe. Each day I prove that my way lies through a terrible wilderness, and my soul is much discouraged because of the way. Fiery serpents and scorpions abound in this terrible wilderness. Yes, I am one of the bitten ones; and I should have perished in my sins, but for God's mercy and grace. He had compassion upon a poor vile rebel like me, and I looked unto Jesus, the antitypical brazen serpent, and I hope I yet live. Have you seen those in the forefront how they march onward? They are the valiant ones. God is their hope, and he giveth them power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing by any means hurt them. But ah, I am so afraid, and my soul is humbled in me. I fear the serpent's sting, and the torments of the scorpion's bite. My sins often sting me, and the poison thereof drinketh up my spirit. Satan, that crooked serpent, often alarms my soul with his hissings in my ears, and sometimes his fiery stings I feel.

"O! such a worthless worm am I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die."

I fear that serpent death, whose sting is sin. So I have troubles without and fears within, and follow on behind.

Ho, such a one, you hindermost one, how comes it to pass that you are in such a sad plight? Ah, I am feeble and sore broken, I am ready to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me. Foes without and enemies within vex my soul. My conflicts are oft so severe I cannot tell where they will end. Then again I may well be behind. How little I know! Others have knowledge; they can talk upon the doctrine of Christ, and can tell such wonderful things in their experience. O how small my experience seems, compared with theirs. They truly are the children of God; but I am so insignificant, I have so little understanding of divine things; and when I do attempt to speak of any of these things I talk in such a blundering, stammering manner that I feel ashamed, and think I ought never to open my lips on such subjects. They are too high for me. I feel my place is in the rear; and if I could only keep out of sight I would, for I fear that it is presumption in me, that I presume to be in the way at all. I do not want it to be noticed that I am following after the redeemed of the Lord. Yet though I am poor and needy, and know that I am feeble, I long to follow in their steps. O that I knew that their God was my God. My soul followeth hard after God.

What have you to tell, poor hindermost one? Ah, I am in sad straits. I have been finding fault with the doctrine of predestination. Once I was happy, and I said, God is love. In those happy times I was enjoying sweet prosperity, and I thought I loved my God, who had appointed me such a blessed lot; and I could sing, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea I have a goodly heritage." But I had not journeyed many days before I found I had to encounter adversity; and then I was asked to believe that God had set adversity for my portion, as well as prosperity. I readily received good at the hand of my God, but O! how could I welcome evil? I could not see that evil also came from his hand to me. I thought I loved my God, who predestinated all my mercies and my delights; but I have been filled with hard thoughts, and have murmured when I thought of God predestinating my woes and afflictions. Ah, I have fallen to the rear. "He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, and not into light."—Lam. iii. 2. Woe is me, for I have kicked against his providences, and I am so slow to learn that tribulation is the decreed portion of the people of God; that the waster to destroy, the sword, the rod, the axe, which make such painful havoc with my soul, are all in the power of the God of love, who performeth the thing that is appointed for me. It is written, "He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will;" "that we should be to the praise of his glory," who trust in Christ. Ah, I could submit and believe that he worketh all those things that bring me comfort and delight; but when I am under the lash of men's tongues, when Satan casteth me into prison, when beasts of prey internal, external and infernal make a prey of my life, is all this wrapped up in the decrees of God, and thus unfolded as my portion? O! I have found it hard to believe it. I have been foolish and have fretted against the Lord. Yes, I have tried to frame in my mind some other God. But by terrible things in righteousness he hath answered me. In my rebellion with some others like me, we appointed one over us, and called him Captain, instead of Jehovah, who only is the Captain of the hosts of Israel. What wretched work we made of it! all came to naught. Truly it must be of the Lord's mercies that I am not consumed. Here I am, away behind, with my miserable staggering gait. At times I catch some notes of the song that they sing in the front ranks.

"Since all that I meet shall work for my good,
The bitter is sweet, the medicine is food.
Though painful at present, 'twill cease before long,
And then, O how pleasant the conqueror's song."

O! how I wish I could learn that song and sing it with all my heart.

How is it with you, poor sighing one? You seem to be making no headway at all, but are rather getting farther and farther behind. Ah, I see it is so, and it has happened unto me so different from what I anticipated. I feel as though I had been bewitched. It was not long ago that I thought I had hit upon a method by which I should ever be one of the foremost ones in this pilgrimage. When first my soul tasted the freedom wherewith I hoped Christ had made me free, it was a blessed time. I began my journey filled with the Spirit. I was then looking for supplies of grace to be ministered unto me by the Comforter; and then (Ah, those happy times!) I was looking unto Jesus, lest I should be weary and faint in my mind while striving against sin. I did run well in those days, and what could hinder me? I thought I enjoyed the sweets of God's pardoning love, and rejoiced that the Lord had, as I believed, justified a poor sinner like me freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; and in my heart I said, My Father is God. O what a blessed time it was! You ask what did hinder me, that I did not continue to run well. Well, I don't know what it was, unless it was a son of Hagar, the bondwoman, who told me that though I was running well, I ought to do better in the flesh, and that I must attain to perfection in this race by the flesh; that I must keep the law of Moses, and then I should be justified and saved everlastingly. So with my flesh I went to work, hoping thereby to soon outrun my fellows in the race. But O what a wretched plight I am in! Being zealous to arrive at perfection by my good works, I frustrated the grace of God. I feel I am fallen from grace. The smiles of the Lord are gone. Instead of grace coming unto me by Jesus Christ, reproofs and frowns are my portion from the Lord. Ah, instead of looking unto Jesus' blood and righteousness alone, I have been diverted and turned aside unto another gospel;

but O it cannot be another gospel, for no glad tidings come to me therein. Look at my feet. How can I help being the hindmost one? for instead of running well by faith in Christ crucified, my feet have become entangled in this wilderness; my sins and imperfections clog my steps. Surely I must have been bewitched. That son of Hagar has mocked me. My blessedness in Jehovah, my righteousness, is fled from me, and seems now like the remembrance of a pleasant dream. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The iniquity of my heels compasseth me about; my feet are entangled; and so I am the hindmost.

Another hindmost one. How do you fare in the way? Ah, my story is somewhat like other hindmost wayfarers. I have encountered unlooked for things since I left Egypt. I thought when I went forth after Miriam, with timbrels and dances (on this side of the Red Sea), and sang the triumphs of the God of Israel, that with unceasing thanksgivings and melody to the Lord I should pursue my way to the land of rest. But my timbrel is gone, my song is hushed, my feet are lame, and my heart is now distressed with fears that I shall come short of the rest that remaineth to the people of God. O! shall I ever be adorned again with my tabrets, and go forth in the dances of them that make merry? Only three days after we emerged from the Red Sea we found ourselves in the wilderness, with no water to drink. I thought this was hard lines that had fallen to my lot so early in our pilgrimage; and then, when water was found, I sought to slake my raging thirst; but as soon as I tasted it I could not drink it, for it was so bitter. Then my rebel heart complained, and I cried out, What shall I drink? But God graciously sweetened the waters so that I could drink, and I was refreshed, and again pursued my way. Then we came to that delightful spot in this wilderness called Elim, with its palm trees and wells of water. Here we were indulged to encamp awhile, and with my spirits revived, and my heart (as I thought) trusting in the Lord, I was ready to go after him in the wilderness. But I am a fickle, feeble, sinful worm, so easily discouraged, so full of unbelief, I fear I am not a believer at all; for when our water-bottles were spent again, and no water was to be found, then various insinuations seemed to enter my mind, and I began questioning, "Is the Lord among us or not?" If he were, would we be in such straits? Would my lot be such as it is if I were a child of God? Will the Lord cast off forever? Will he be favorable no more. Is his mercy clean gone forever? Doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Ah! in my infirmity I feared the Lord had forsaken me, and left me to die in the wilderness of my sins. O my wretched, distrustful, murmuring heart! God brought forth water out of the rock; and see, there it flows in this wilderness like a river. When I am just about ready to die I sip a few drops and am strengthened and lift up my head again; but I am such a sinful, wicked wretch, I am filled with misgivings that this river of love will cease to flow and to follow a poor miserable worm like me in all my wanderings in this dry, parched land. While I am thus swallowed up with my woeful surmises, onward marches the host of Israel, all ahead of me, and I am left behind. The foremost ones say this river will flow on all our journey, and that my trouble is that I am unmindful of the Rock, Christ Jesus, from whence these precious waters flow. They say, We are journeying through a waste howling wilderness; but hath our God been a wilderness unto Israel? Ah, there those believers in Jesus go on, singing as they go,

"See! the streams of living waters,
Springing from eternal love,
Well supply thy sons and daughters,
And all fear of want remove.

"Who can faint, while such a river
Ever flows their thirst to assuage?
Grace which, like the Lord the giver,
Never fails from age to age."

Ah, here comes yet another one; but you are somewhat more cheerful than the rest; and though you are last, I have a persuasion that you will be numbered among the first to eat the fruits of the land of Canaan. What is the secret of your cheerfulness? O, it may be all summed up in this: you see I am poor and needy; but my heart believes that the Lord thinketh upon me. O! is this not wonderfully gracious? so I find my heart singing,

"O happy souls, how fast you go,
And leave me far behind;
Don't stop for me, for now I see
The Lord is just and kind.

"Go on, go on, my soul says so,
And I'll come after you;
Though I'm behind, yet I can find,
And sing hosanna too.

"May you have strength, that you may run,
And keep your footsteps right;
Though fast you go, and I so slow,
You are not out of sight.

"When you arrive in worlds above,
And all their glories see;
When you get home your journey's done:
Then look ye out for me.

"For I will run fast as I can,
Along the way I'll steer,
Through Christ my strength I shall at length
Be one among you there.

"There altogether we shall meet,
Together we shall sing;
A countless throng to swell the song
Of Moses and the Lamb."

Here comes another faint and weary one. Tell us your story of the journey, poor sinner. You are behind, like many others. Ah, I am weary, and my soul is often much discouraged because of the way. At times I am strengthened, and with joyful, bounding strides, like the hart, I make my way to the front ranks, and spend some exceedingly happy moments in communion with Caleb and Joshua. But O! how short a time I can stay there! I stumble in some of the rough places, and get lame, and again I fall to the rear. Those foremost ones must be shod with shoes of iron and brass to be able to maintain such unwavering steps in those rough places. Egypt was a cruel place; there in my hard bondage wherein I was made to serve under Pharaoh, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord; and in his wondrous mercy, and with his outstretched arm, he ransomed us from the power of the enemy. But our exodus from Egypt was not as I pictured to myself it would be. I thought a speedy entrance would be granted me into that land, that which is the glory of all lands. But my exodus from the house of bondage has been to be ushered into wilderness after wilderness. Here and there are some green spots where my weary soul finds rest and refreshment, and then into this terrible wilderness I descend again. Sometimes I fear there will never be any exodus from the wilderness for me. When we began our journey I thought we shall soon be out of the reach of the Egyptians, and enter that delightful land which by the promise and oath of Jehovah is the inheritance of his purchased people; but God led us not by the near way, but soon into a wilderness place we came and were shut in. Then came those hosts of the Egyptians pursuing after us, with their horses and chariots. Did they overtake us, and drag us back into that cruel bondage again? O no! But my timid heart quaked with fear, and I murmured at my perilous condition. O! it is wonderful and blessed to hear how they talk in the foremost ranks! But ah, my unbelieving heart! Can you believe it? O! I want to. Those near companions of Joshua affirm with joyful confidence that the Egyptians could never have overtaken us and enslaved us again. They declare that Israel was loved, chosen and owned by God; that in the covenant ordered in all things and sure we were his people, and he was our God before we were brought into bondage; therefore it was that the God of the Hebrews came into Egypt and said, "Let my people go." With his outstretched arm he brought forth his chosen ones; and though the Egyptians held them fast, and refused to let them go, Israel's God, the Lord of hosts, was strong, and redeemed them unto himself. He himself paid the ransom. The blood of the Passover Lamb forever sets us free. That it is impossible for the tribes of Israel to come into such condemnation again, for they are passed from death unto life. Ah, I am a poor sinner, but I love this doctrine, and cling to it yet as my soul's hope and everlasting consolation; and at times I so cherish it in my heart that I am

AN EVIL SPIRIT FROM GOD.

"BUT the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him; and Saul's servants said unto him, Behold, now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee."—1 Sam. xvi. 14, 15.

In compliance with the desire of an esteemed brother the following remarks are submitted for the consideration of our readers generally, as well as for his own careful examination by the only perfect standard, the record which God has given in the inspired Scriptures. With whatever deference the views of eminent saints may be regarded, nothing is to be accepted as of divine authority without the unquestionable mark of the seal of the Holy Spirit, with which God was pleased to endue those holy men who of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Those who desire to walk in humble obedience to the commandment of our Lord Jesus cannot receive any other teaching as infallible except that which is thus certainly the word of the Lord. On the other hand, they must submit implicitly to the established decision of the Scriptures of God, even though it require the surrender of traditions which have been held in high esteem for centuries.

Probably the difficulty encountered by our inquiring brother in understanding this text arises from the statement that the evil spirit by which Saul was troubled was "from the Lord." Carnal reason claims that only such things as in our estimation are good can come from the Lord, while the manifest existence of evil things is regarded as in some way in opposition to the will of God. So far as we have learned, none have ever been able to find higher authority than the wisdom of men for the denial of the government of God over the far greater portion of the events of time. Neither have the saints ever been able to trace in this limitation of the dominion of God any assurance in support of their hope of ultimate victory over sin and its consequent misery and death. Yet the pride of the sinful heart assumes to determine that unless the Almighty is governed by the standard of mortal judgment he is unjust. With those who prefer the guidance of reason rather than the word of God we have no inclination to discuss the subject of our text; but to those who tremble at the voice of our God, it will be sufficient to consider the subject in the light of the testimony which is borne by the word of those princes whom our Lord has set to rule in judgment in the kingdom of his glorious grace. Recognizing our inquiring brother as of the number whose God is the Lord, and trusting that every reader may by grace be delivered from confidence in any earthly teacher, we desire to examine the point involved in comparison with that which God has revealed of his own eternal truth and holiness.

The revelation of the existence of God is not more assured than the fact that he is infinite in all his perfections. There is none in heaven above nor in the earth beneath in whom this perfection can be found. It is evident therefore that none can judge the works of God. Of him exclusively can it be said that everything he does is true and righteous altogether. The righteousness of created beings depends upon their conformity to such laws as demand their obedience. By that test they are just or unjust. But no such criterion can be applied to the Sovereign of all the creation which he has brought into existence by his omnipotent word. It cannot be charged against him that he is unjust, or even unkind, in anything which he has done or said. In the manifestation of his eternal purpose of grace he brought all created things and beings into existence. Can any saint question this portion of the record as given by inspiration? Surely not. Is it not equally testified that he governs the universe which he has created, and which is sustained alone by his power? This is not left to inferences drawn by finite minds. It is so expressly written. "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil." "But our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "Whatever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places." "Remember the former things of old; for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure; calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my counsel from a far country. Yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it." Many other portions of the testimony of truth as plainly set forth the unlimited sovereignty of our God over all the works of his power. To those who know the omnipotence of the Creator these declarations of his supreme government over all things whether animate or inanimate, in heaven and earth, and under the earth, will suffice to give the firm assurance that nothing ever has or ever can transpire by which the design of God shall be defeated. While no created mind can comprehend the unsearchable mystery of his will, yet it is expressly written that neither wicked men nor devils can do anything by which to withstand the execution of his eternal purpose. At his command unclean ravens must bring bread and flesh to Elijah at the very instant when it most clearly displays the present help of his God in his extremity. He used the heathen as his rod in chastening his national people; and after his work was accomplished he destroyed that very instrument which he had made subservient to his will. He called Cyrus as a ravenous bird from the east, and opened before him the two leaved gates of Babylon for the deliverance of his chosen people from that bondage which was the consequence of their rebellion against the commandment given for their government. Cyrus rendered the very service for which he was raised up, and yet he knew not the God in the performance of whose will he wrought. Until the iniquity of the Amorites was full the children of Abraham could not possess the land which God had given to them. The very enmity of those who would defeat the appointment of divine wisdom is made to subserve the development of the decree which it sought to resist. Thus, even the wickedness which man regards as contrary to the will of God, is included among the things which work together for good to them who love God, who are the called according to his purpose. So it is written, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."—Psalm lxxvi. 10. Shall man excuse himself in sin because God has appointed that it shall show his own praise? As well might the enemy claim credit for the restraint of that remainder of wrath which God has placed under the heavy barrier of that decree which gave the seas their bounds.

In the text to which our brother has called attention it is important to notice that the Spirit of the Lord which departed from king Saul was that wisdom by which he had been qualified of God to rule over the nation of Israel. Saul was by divine appointment made king over Israel, and of him the Lord says to his national people, "I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath." At the command of the Lord Samuel had anointed Saul as the first king over all Israel. That anointing was expressive of the sanction of the Lord in support of his kingly power. In his disobedience to the word of the Lord he rejected the God by whom he was exalted to the throne, and the Lord rejected him from being king. It was in this sense that "The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul." There is no evidence that Saul ever knew the Lord as his Savior from the condemnation of sin and death. In that sense, there could be no possibility that the Spirit of the Lord should ever depart from one to whom God had given it. It is very evident that in setting up Saul as the first king of Israel the Lord did not design to perpetuate his government, since he had chosen David and established his throne forever. Yet there was a typical significance in the giving of the throne to Saul before the kingdom of David was made manifest. All that is written of the dealing of God with the nation of Israel finds its antitypical substance in the way in which the gospel kingdom is established in righteousness in our Lord Jesus Christ. Without noticing more fully this real meaning of all the history of the chosen tribes, it may be observed that the kingdom of Saul very fitly sets forth the dominion of the law which was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. That law was indeed holy in all its righteous demands; but it had no power to give life to sinners already dead in sins. It could only show the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and thus confirm the hopeless condemnation which rested upon all those in whom its perfection was revealed. Herein consisted the glory which pertained to the law. But in the manifestation of the liberty of the sons of God in the gospel kingdom of Jesus Christ, our spiritual David, all the glory of that legal dispensation is lost in the superior glory of God shining in the face of our triumphant Redeemer. Until the time was fulfilled for which the legal covenant was given the Spirit of the Lord gave divine authority to its every precept. But when the prophetic night of legal observances passed away in the coming of our Lord, the power and glory of the law was lost in the perfect righteousness of Christ as the end and satisfaction of its utmost demand. As the royal glory of Saul was lost in the establishment of the throne of David, so the law has no longer dominion over those who are made free in the victory of Jesus. In this sense, the Spirit of the Lord, that is, the sanction of divine authority, has departed from the law of sin and death, the legal sun is turned into darkness, and the moon of ceremonial sacrifices is henceforth a mere unmeaning dispensation of blood. In this is illustrated the way in which the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul. While he stood as the anointed king of Israel his word was law and his dominion embraced all the power of that kingdom. This was the effect of that anointing which he had received by the commandment of the Lord. David recognized this sacred protection over Saul, and would not lift his hand against him because of the anointing oil, even when he knew that Saul sought his life. Herein is shown how our antitypical David came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill its every demand. When this was done he had finished the work which his Father had given him to do, the law was magnified and honored, and his people were delivered from its dominion by his spotless righteousness. The glorious perfection of holiness which was the manifestation of the Spirit of the Lord in the law, was now in more refulgence displayed in the face of Jesus Christ. As the Lord had rejected Saul from being king of Israel, so through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus the saints are forever free from the dominion of the law. The Spirit of the Lord has thus departed from that ministration of death, and in unmeasured fullness that Spirit now abides upon Jesus as the real David of whom the son of Jesse was but a faint figure. In this application of the text the evil spirit from the Lord which troubled Saul would represent the death of the law under which the saints were held in bondage. The efforts of Saul to destroy David signify the powers of death which were arrayed against our Savior, through which he must pass to the throne of his glory. But in their terrible assault upon Jesus these powers of death derived their dreadful strength from the law. Death itself has no sting but sin; and sin has no strength but in the law by which is the knowledge of sin. To deny this would involve the loss of all hope of salvation for any sinner. None who hope for freedom from condemnation through the grace of God in Jesus Christ can afford to recognize the law as still having power to command their service. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."—Gal. iii. 10.

For the comfort of the tried and afflicted saints it is clearly revealed in the Scriptures that our Lord has perfect and unrestricted dominion over evil spirits as well as over the angels of heaven. Neither the proud ruler over the kingdoms of earth, nor the combined legions of devils, whose enmity against God cannot be questioned, can have any power at all except it is given them from above. Since sin entered into the world every effort of the adversary has been directed to the denial of this truth of the unlimited sovereignty of God. Yet it is still true that our God is supreme in power, "And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand or say unto him, What dost thou?"—Dan. iv. 35. Not only are all the powers of darkness subject to his immediate authority, but when our Lord sent forth his disciples to preach his word, they found that even devils were subject to them through his name. This is the God of salvation, who reigns in his own glorious power over all the worlds which he has made. This doctrine of the universal government of God is not flattering to the carnal pride of natural men; but it is the very foundation of the hope of every conscious sinner. Neither devils nor wicked men can have any strength to resist the will of that God who upholds all things by the word of his power. Therefore they who have fled for refuge to his protection can never be moved from that sure defense. If it is his will to make use of a wicked Pharaoh for his own glory, he raises him up for that purpose, and destroys him when he has subserved that purpose. All the legions of devils cannot so much as drown a herd of swine without the command of Jesus; and they confessed his authority by beseeching him that he would not send them away out of the country.—Mark v. 1-17. Whether at the will of God these evil spirits trouble a wicked king, or move the rulers of the people to crucify the Lord of life and glory, they can do nothing but as they have received power from above. Hence they can only do whatsoever the hand and counsel of God before determined to be done. Those who know God as the only and blessed Potentate have no need to fear the rage of the wicked.

"A faithful God restrains their hands,
And chains them down with iron bands."

ABOUT GONE.

OUR supply of back numbers, to the first of present volume, is about gone, therefore we have discontinued sending them to new subscribers unless especially requested.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address, strengthened, my feeble, tottering knees are confirmed, and I can walk then so much better in this wilderness. But I will return to my story. Ah! I lifted up mine eyes, and there were those hateful Egyptians. Must I again come under their cruel yoke, and smart under their lash? It seemed to me I could hear the harsh voices of my past sins, coming from afar, saying, "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil, my lust shall be satisfied upon him; I will draw my sword, my high hand shall destroy him."—Exod. xv. 9. I would have hastened my escape, but whither could I flee? The wilderness had shut me in. There before me were the waters of the Red Sea of Jehovah's judgments, which are a great deep. I cried unto the Lord, and he heard my cry, and showed me his salvation. Through those mighty waters he made a way, and I passed over, which the Egyptians (my sins) assaying to do were drowned. Then my soul broke forth anew in triumphal song, and chanted the praises of the God of salvation. Now, I thought, all is well; I am accepted, and accounted one of the ransomed church of God. Have I not the evidence by my soul's experience that I have descended in sufferings unto death, and have been raised up in the joy of the risen Savior? And as a believer in Jesus I have put on Christ, and am now a member of his visible church. I said to myself, My troubles are at an end. Sweet prospects (by precious faith) of the delightful land filled my mind. Already it seemed I were there. But no! into the wilderness of temptations I must go. That sweet land of gospel rest is, I fear, so very far off, and at times almost fades from my sight. I fall into such temptations and conflicts that under the pressure of my woes I question whether there exists a land of rest for me. Then I am sorely afflicted with hard-heartedness. I become so wicked, so perverse, I cannot pray; for the words upon such lips as mine are a mockery; and even when I cry and shout I fear God shutteth out my prayer.

"My prayers are now a chattering noise,
For Jesus hides his face!
I read, the promise meets my eyes,
But will not reach my case."

I am not worthy to rank with the flock, for I abhor myself in the dust, my soul is pent up in this wilderness. Weary of earth, myself and sin, I trudge along my lonely way, and know not where at night I shall pitch my tent. "O land of rest! for thee I sigh."

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Feb. 20, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—A few days since I received a letter from brother E. D. Varnes, of Cramer, Ill., of which the following is an extract:

"If it is not asking too much of you, will you give me your views through the SIGNS in regard to king Saul? I will refer to one or two expressions. 'And the Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man.' And farther on it reads, 'God gave him another heart.' Do you think that Saul was a child of God? I will tell you why I ask you this. I am a very doubting child of God, if indeed I am one at all, and many things come to my mind to condemn me. I suppose it is our old enemy that does it. The suggestion is like this: You are numbered among the children of God, and have their fellowship; but there is something hidden from them which they do not see, as in the case of Judas. They all said, 'Is it I?' It appears that the others did not know the heart of Judas. I feel to love the Lord's people, but the most of my time I greatly fear that I have no part nor lot in the matter; and I feel helpless in the matter. I have more doubts about myself than about all others of Adam's sinful race. Pardon me and pray for me, that God may have mercy."

Now, brethren, with your permission I feel like trying to make a brief reply to the above through the SIGNS, as brother Varnes has requested; and I do so more for the sake of having this portion of his letter published than because of anything that I feel able to write upon the subject which he has named. As I read the above extracts, when his letter came, I felt like saying, as I have heard the little ones say many times, If a man like brother Varnes has such doubts and fears and troubles, surely I need not wonder that such a one as myself should also meet with them; and if it will prove of any consolation to brother Varnes, I want to say that his letter was a great source of consolation to me, because it assured me that I was not journeying in a solitary road. I think that I can and do rejoice when my brethren are made glad in the Lord. Even though I am sad and full of doubting, and cannot see the face of the Master, I yet am glad that others are walking in the light; and I believe that to witness the joy of one who is made glad has power to touch even my hard heart, and bring tears to my eyes, more than their troubles have power to do. But though all this is true, yet when the children of God talk about the valleys and the mists and shadows and darkness, and of how the fiery darts of the enemy cast them down and almost make them lose hope, they get nearer to where my journey leads me, and I feel encouraged by it to still hope on. Brother Varnes's letter has thus been a source of strength to me. Is not this fulfilling the apostle's word, "As poor, yet making many rich?" His poverty has made me rich. Thus in some faint measure do we follow the footsteps of the Master, of whom it is testified that "though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich." There is no crown without the cross, there is no saving our life without losing it, there are no riches without poverty, in the experience of the things which are spiritual. Ever, as it was with Peter, must it be with us all. Ere we can strengthen another, must we become aware of our own weakness. To be converted from self-pride, self-glorification, self-confidence, is essential, if we are to ever be of any use in the house of God, if we ever are able to strengthen the weak; and thus is fulfilled the language of Paul in each of the children of God, "When I am weak, then am I strong." Brother Varnes feels weak, but I have found him strong. He feels poor, but he has made me rich. He could not have made me rich in any other way.

But I will try to say a few words about king Saul in the light of the Scriptures referred to by brother Varnes; and then I want to say a few words about the temptation that has assailed him from the narrative given of Saul the king, and of Judas, the Lord's betrayer. The Scriptures to which our brother has referred are found in 1 Samuel x. It would be good if all who read this would stop right here and read the ninth and tenth chapters of 1 Samuel carefully before going farther. These chapters contain the narrative of the manner in which Saul was chosen to become king of Israel, and are full of interest and of lessons of instruction if regarded as mere matters of history; and still more so when we recall that Israel was God's chosen people, and that here is recorded the manner of his dealing with them when they became dissatisfied with his manner of governing them, and desired a king like other nations. "God gave them a king in his anger, and took him away in his wrath." God gave them the desire of their heart; but the desire of their heart was rebellion against him, and granting their desire was the sorest chastisement that could have been visited upon them. When our souls become dissatisfied with God and with God's plan, and we desire something of our own in his place, no severer chastisement can be ours than to grant us our desire. To be separated from God, to have anything come in between us and God, is the greatest evil that can possibly happen to us. Israel desired a king, and a king came in between them and their God, and so, as they preferred, was it done to them; and this itself was the punishment of their rebellious hearts.

But the particular question which brother Varnes has asked is this, "Was Saul the king a child of God?" Many things are said in these ninth and tenth chapters of 1 Samuel concerning Saul which seem to be characteristic of a child of God; but nearly all that is said about him afterward seems entirely inconsistent with his holding such a relation to God. My own impression is that he was not. Certainly there is no evidence that he, like David, was a broken-hearted penitent before God, or felt his need of mercy and redemption through Christ. It should be remembered that God has power to speak through unregenerate men, as he did through Baalam, and that the hearts of all men are so in his hand that even the unregenerate among men are moved by him to do or not to do according to his will. It should also be remembered that God spoke by the prophets in all the history of Israel, even to their most wicked kings, as when he spoke to Ahab by the prophet Elijah. God dealt with them as a nation, and sent his word to them and to their kings, although the most of them were entirely carnal. Even in the last days of the Jewish kingdom, when Jesus was about to crown his ministry on earth by his crucifixion and resurrection, we read concerning Caiaphas the high priest that he, although a wicked man and a hater of Jesus, prophesied (and prophesied just because he was high priest) that Jesus must be put to death.—See John xi. 51, 52. God spoke through him, though he himself did not know God. So I understand Saul the king prophesied, but without being possessed of that personal experience which characterizes all true believers; and so, when it is said in 1 Samuel x. 9 that "God gave him a new heart," I understand that he gave him new thoughts and purposes, such as he did not need as a private citizen of Israel, but did need in the position to which he was called.

Now I have given my opinion in response to brother Varnes's inquiry, and have stated my reasons briefly for my opinion. But my opinion is very far from being infallible, even in my own estimation; and so I shall not feel surprised nor hurt if brother Varnes fails to see this as I do, or any others among those who may read this, for that matter.

But there is one thing more of which I wish to speak, which is not an opinion, but to my mind a certainty; and that is that the very extracts from brother Varnes's letter given at the head of this letter prove that he himself is a child of God and an heir of eternal glory. By what he has written my mind has been led to the familiar and comforting words of Jesus, "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled;" and to the words of the apostle, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." It seems to me sure, beyond all controversy, that no one ever desired that about which he knew nothing. If we desire or hunger and thirst after righteousness, it must be because we have felt its need and its power, and so have found out how desirable it is, and that nothing can ever satisfy us but righteousness. It also appears to me so true that it needs no proof that we can never desire to love that which we do not already see the loveliness of; and that to see that which appears to us lovable is the beginning of love itself in our hearts. What we desire we love; and the more desirable it appears the more we shall love it, whatever it be. If we saw no beauty in Christ we should not desire him. If we saw no excellency in righteousness we should not desire it. It is still further true that the thing which we do not desire we have no anxiety about. If Jesus is not lovely in our sight we shall feel no anxiety for him. Whether he be ours or not will not concern us while we see no beauty in him, and do not desire him. It seems to me still further true also that we can never doubt our love to God, nor lament our lack of love to him, unless we already love him. Suppose some father or mother should some day overhear their child grieving and talking after this fashion: "I fear that I do not love my parents as much as I ought. It seems to me that I cannot appreciate all their kindness to me as I should, and my warmest love to them is far too cold. O! how can I love them more?" Those parents, hearing these things from their child, would feel that surely the deepest love possible for them dwelt in the bosom of their child. But suppose, on the other hand, those parents should overhear their child exulting, and saying, "I am sure that I love my parents as much as it is my duty to do, and that I appreciate all their kindness to the full extent." Would not those parents, seeing and hearing this self-satisfied child, feel altogether dissatisfied? I leave brother Varnes to answer this for himself.

Now, the application in my mind is this. If any man is satisfied with himself, his love, his faith, his christian graces generally, it is sure, to say the least about it, that he has a very slight appreciation of the holy character and the infinite beneficence of God, and a very dim notion of the worth of a Savior, and certainly a very partial knowledge of himself. But where can be found, what words can express, a higher degree of love than when a soul grieves that his love is cold and faint, and thinks that the warmest love he can possibly feel is all too cold for the worth of the object loved? It is true always, as Paul has said in 2 Corinthians x. 18, "For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth." The man who must plead mercy alone is always justified before God, rather than the man who is satisfied with himself. It is very evident that brother Varnes is not satisfied with himself, nor with his attainments in the divine life. He surely does not commend himself. He doubts his love to God and the people of God; therefore it is sure that the Lord commends him, and that his love to God and his people is very great.

I have just sketched a few scattering thoughts out of the many that have occurred to me, and in conclusion I will just say that it is not recorded of Saul the king that he ever had these soul exercises of which brother Varnes speaks. These exercises are the evidences of life: not natural life, but spiritual; not earthly life, but heavenly. Whether Saul was a child of God or not, it seems to me sure that all who feel as brother Varnes has written are born of God.

I remain your brother in the hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

STATE ROAD, Del., Feb., 1894.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—In conversation with a ministering brother one day I expressed some sentiments that appeared to interest him, and he requested me quite earnestly to write the subject out for the SIGNS. Perhaps if I write at all I might as well write that, as I have nothing else bearing upon my mind just now. The subject was the scene at the resurrection of Christ, and the seeking for the body by those who contemplated embalming it.

"Behold, two men stood by them in shining garments: and as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen."—Luke xxiv. 4-6. If we will learn anything from these events so carefully placed on record, I think we must view all the parties as representative characters; and while we hope to understand who are represented, we may hope to understand also who are not.

The persons here addressed were certainly seeking a living Savior, but as yet they knew not where they might find him. They were seeking him where he was not, and of course where he would not be found; but they were not aware as yet that it was a living Savior that they sought, and that they so much loved. They would not know this until he manifested himself unto them. It was not by searching for him that any of them at any time found him. He was found of them every time when they had sought him not; and when found he was present with them. While these humble believers were seeking him sorrowing, "two men stood by them in shining garments." They were afterward called angels. Matthew speaks of but one, but says his countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow. Mark says a young man, while John speaks of two angels; but in each case those who saw them were overawed and prostrated at the sight. If I speak of them in a representative character and of a continuous mission, I will not mean to call in question the literal record, nor the correctness of the version as it is given. The evangelists no doubt recorded the event just as it was reported to them; and as the message was the same and the mission the same as recorded by each, there is no discrepancy that will at all mar its grand design. I understand these men or angels to represent the gospel ministry, which was ready to be revealed as soon as Jesus was risen from the dead. These are the two anointed ones that stand by the God of the whole earth. These are his two witnesses, to whom he gave power that they should prophesy. They said to those to whom they were sent, who were taken with great fear, "Fear not." "I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified." "Behold, two men stood by them." These men (or angels) always stand by the God of salvation, and always occupy the same position; so those who are really seeking a Savior to know, when they are found in distress at the sepulchre, will find these two witnesses standing by them. It belongs to their mission to know those who are seeking a Savior to know, and to declare unto them that he goeth before them, and that they have nothing to fear. In regard to their mission, their garments were significant. They were characteristic of their calling. The garments of the Jewish priests represented rather what they ought to be than what they were; and the same may be said of the Jewish people. The garments with which they were required to be clothed were certainly very suggestive and instructive. They represented purity and brilliancy, but they were certainly not the garments of salvation. King Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, bespoke for the Lord, when he should build up his spiritual temple, that he should clothe his priests with salvation; and the psalmist, in contemplating the glory of the Lord that should shine upon spiritual Zion, says that he shall clothe her priests with salvation, and her saints should shout aloud for joy. They are the Lord's priests, in that he provides them and clothes them; but they are her priests because they are provided for her and bestowed upon her. All earthly emblems and illustrations fail to fully show forth God's salvation; but that with which her priests are clothed is no more perfect and glorious than that which awaits all his believing people. He has clothed her with the garments of salvation, and covered her with the robe of righteousness. The salvation of which the gospel ministry testifies is just that, and only that, which has come to them; and they only speak what they do know, and testify that they have seen. The ministry knew a living Jesus, but they to whom they testified did not. The ministry knew that it was the living Savior they were seeking; and when the living Savior was declared to them they knew that it was indeed him they were seeking. "And they worshiped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy." There is little else given us descriptive of those shining ones except that they were men, and that they were clothed with shining garments, and that they had a message for those who were seeking a Savior. We may learn from this that the salvation of which the Lord's people are subjects will appear in and upon them, adorning them, and showing the graces of the Spirit in all their deportment and conversation. They were not only white and clean, but the light that was in them shone forth so as to be seen, and the illumination felt and enjoyed by others. One thing that they said, and that they continue to say, was a question to which we do well to find the answer. "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" This certainly implies that it was a living Savior that they felt their need of, and hence a living Savior was declared to them; but they would not find him where they were looking for him, nor as they were looking for him.

We have account in the Scriptures of a young man who was destitute of wisdom, who, instead of heeding wisdom's voice, was obeying the voice of the antichristian harlot, who said she had made her peace, and now had peace offerings with her to offer for others; and that he went after her straightway, but that he did not know that the dead were there. It is hardly to be supposed that any one who knew a living Savior, or even knew their need of such a Savior, would ever seek him among the dead. Those above referred to at the tomb never went back there to look, as they now knew there was no reason why they should; and those who may be understood as represented by them throughout the gospel dispensation, when once they have met a living Savior, will nevermore expect to find him among the dead. A preached gospel will find the reason why, and will show to all the children of wisdom the reason why they do not find, and need never expect to find, a living Savior among the dead. The religious dispute has always been, as it was in Paul's day, concerning one Jesus whom they said was dead, but whom Paul affirmed to be alive. Not only did he assert that Christ was a living Savior, but "Christ liveth in me." That is, the life that Christ was unto his people was manifested in him. But if people do still seek among the dead, and it is not a living Savior they are seeking, what is it? I suppose if they could find the old Roman cross upon which the Redeemer suffered they would idolize it; but as they cannot obtain it, and have never seen it, they will imagine its form and make images of it. The supposed likeness of the cross is thus placed on the top of their church steeples, and over their church doors, and worn as an ornament upon their bosoms. They have never seen the virgin Mary, but they will make an image, and call it by her name, and pray to it and worship it; while the holy and unchangeable law of God forbids the making of any image or likeness of anything either in heaven or on earth. Not only these, but a stone from the pathway, a chip from the tomb, a piece of wood from the garden, anything connected with the earthly life and travel of the Redeemer, to be revered with idolatrous reverence. If a piece of wood from the manger, or a slab from the stable at Bethlehem, could be obtained, what an important acquisition it would make to the vast accumulation of dead things. Even the matter of making pilgrimages to Jerusalem and various localities in Palestine, what is it but seeking among the dead for what is not there? Are not all these dead things? They have no life in them, much less any power to give life to others. They observe days and times, as Christmas and Easter, and also certain days of the week; which days are as destitute of life-giving power as was the image that was said to have fallen down from Jupiter.

Why, if people know anything of a risen and exalted Savior, why should they spend time and money in wondering over these dead things? If Christ is indeed risen, there is such a thing as knowing the power of his resurrection. He is Mediator between God and men, and ever liveth to make intercession for them. Do people know him who are continually employing men as intercessors? Would they discard him, and turn to presumptuous man to intercede for them, if they had ever seen or known him? Are not these presumptuous intercessors, who assume the prerogatives of the great Mediator to themselves, as destitute of power or of right in this matter as was the image that Aaron made for Israel to worship? Those very people who will reverence an image of the cross are continually shunning the cross itself. The life that he lived, the faith that he taught, the worship that would be accepted, the ordinances by which his people would be separated unto his gospel, these are all living things, and Christ lives in them. He may be found where two or three are gathered together in his name. He is and will be with his people always, even unto the end of the world. His life is the life of his people. His Spirit is the spirit of their worship, and of all the devotion and obedience to his word and will that marks them out as his believing children. If he is known at all, he is known to be seen and loved in all things upon which his name and seal are set. Is there any reason why those who have risen with him, and have known the power of his resurrection, should seek for anything among the dead? The word came unto John the evangelist with divine power, "I am he that liveth, and, behold, I am alive forevermore." This word was and is a living word in the hearts and lives of his witnesses; and so not only in that day, but unto this day, with great power they give testimony of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all. The men in shining garments were not sent to Jewish scribes or priests; and if they seek at all they will probably find all they seek for among the things which the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming.

I submit the above reflections to the consideration of the brethren.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Inclosed find a little mite, which you can apply to your "Indigent Fund." I hope the dear brethren may come to your help, so that you do not have to bear so much of the burden of furnishing to those who are not able to pay for the SIGNS, yet love to read it. I believe the readers of the SIGNS will send you in due time, so that you can say, "We will continue them." If each one that is able would send you but a little, it would soon make sufficient. Any one who loves to read the SIGNS I would not like to be deprived the privilege, for I firmly believe that it sets forth the truth as it is taught in the Scriptures, though in opposition to the religion of the world. But the world knows us not, as it knew not the Master, and therefore they put him to death; and if they persecuted him, they will persecute his believing children.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mary Jane Newman was born in Pickaway Co., Ohio, Dec. 11th, 1854, and died Feb. 16th, 1894, aged 39 years, 2 months and 5 days.

Her entire life was a life of very great affliction, being blind and deaf from her entrance into the world. She was the only child of Eliza Newman, her father having preceded her to the grave many years. She had learned to read at the Institution for the blind at Columbus. Janny, as she was called, was the pride of her mother, and the object of the highest esteem of her many relatives and friends. She was a kind and dutiful daughter, and possessed a meek and gentle spirit. Her life from the cradle to the grave was a model worthy of any youth's imitation. She was never known to be angry, nor to give a harsh word to any one. She never made a profession of religion, but was a regular attendant with her mother at the Baptist Church at Turkey Run.

Her funeral was largely attended on Monday, the 18th, and the writer tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing friends and relatives; after which her remains were laid to rest in the Reber burying-ground, to await the resurrection of the just, of which we feel that Janny is an inheritor, through the righteousness of him who has conquered death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

ORDINATIONS.

THE Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church of Jesus Christ called Salem, in Lancaster Co., Neb., met according to order on Saturday before the third Sunday, being the 17th day of February, 1894.

After praise and prayer, proceeded to business as follows:

Called for the peace of the church.

Invited brethren and sisters of our faith and order to seats in council.

Called for references.

There being a reference from our January meeting, it was read.

Moved and seconded that we call a council of ordained authorities from our sister churches to meet with us at our next regular meeting, Feb. 17th, 1894, to examine the call and gift of our beloved brother, JOHN CHAPMAN, to the work of the gospel ministry, and, if thought proper, set him apart to the full functions of the gospel ministry.

A presbytery of ordained authorities organized by choosing Elder C. M. Cooper, of Mt. Pleasant Church, York Co., Neb., Moderator, and to deliver the ordination prayer.

Elder James H. Ring, of Salem Church, to deliver the charge.

Deacon J. N. Berry, of Salem Church, to extend the right hand of fellowship.

The church presented brother Chapman to the council for examination.

After due examination as to his christian experience, call to the ministry and scriptural qualifications, and being fully satisfied of his call to the work of the gospel ministry, proceeded by laying on of hands and prayer to set him apart.

C. M. COOPER, Mod.

J. N. BERRY, Clerk.

A VERY solemn charge was delivered by our beloved pastor, Elder J. H. Ring, even the solemn charge that Paul gave to Timothy, to be faithful to preach the Word, even Jesus, as a full and all-sufficient Savior, trusting in him for strength, wisdom and ability to sweetly unfold the hidden mysteries of his kingdom, which none of the nations of the earth can know or teach, but which Zion's children know, and that only as Jesus reveals them.

The church then sang the good old song,

"Bless'd be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love," &c.

The right hand of fellowship was extended to Elder Chapman with much rejoicing.

JOSEPH BRUCE, Church Clerk.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HINDMOST.

"REMEMBER what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; how he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it."—Deut. xxv. 17-19.

"Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim."—Ex. xvii. 8. How did he come to meet them? Did he say, I will first fight against those foremost ones that are valiant for the truth, and then, having vanquished them, the rest will be an easy prey? O no; he feared not God. He was crafty, and sought the vulnerable point in the mighty host, "and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary." O Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai, of the tribe of Dan, captain of the rearward host, why did you suffer the enemy thus to break in upon you, and so cruelly smite the feeble, faint and weary ones? O why was the standard not unfurled? Thy sixty two thousand and seven hundred valiant men of the rearguard, where were they?—Num. ii. 26-31; x. 25. You deserve to be court-martialed. What have you to say for yourself, and for the host under your command? Ah, I never can forget that time when Amalek came; and I feel that I can never forgive myself for my offense that day, though I have hope to believe that the Captain of our salvation has in his great mercy pardoned my guilt. You may read for yourself in the official records of the deplorable and disorganized state the rearguard was in when Amalek came.—Ex. xvii. 1-8. Murmurings, rebellion, strife and infidelity ran riot among the people, and they were saying, "Is the Lord among us or not?" Ah, the remembrance is bitter; but it must be confessed that the rearward was in a state of insubordination to Moses, and to the God of Israel. Is it then any marvel that when Amalek came none of those men of might could find their hands?—Psa. lxxvi. 5. There was scarcely a spear to be seen among all my sixty-two thousand and seven hundred men (Judges

v. 8) to guard the hindmost, that were so feeble and faint and weary. Our standard-bearer's strength was small, and he was among the hindmost ones; and when Amalek came and smote him he fainted beneath the stroke.—Prov. xxiv. 10; Isa. x. 18. O! had not Jehovah-nissi (Ex. xvii. 15) himself lifted up a standard for us (Isa. lix. 19), then the Amalekites had swallowed us up quick. The God of love was the banner over us.—Song ii. 4. Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword. "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation."—Isa. xii. 2.

Amalek, who (Gen. xxxvi. 12) and what art thou? Thou art the enemy of the chosen tribes of Jacob, and the foe of Israel's God. "Because the Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation."—Ex. xvii. 16. There is to be no truce, no cessation of arms, till thou, O Amalek, shalt perish forever.—Num. xxiv. 20.

Amalek, who smote the hindmost of Israel, appears in various shapes. Antichrist in all its forms fights against the children of God, smiting the feeble ones when they are faint and weary. All false doctrines, instead of ministering to the relief of the hindmost, are a horde of wrathful Amalekites smiting and making sad the lambs of the flock. These doctrines of men and of devils put an unbearable burden upon the necks of the disciples. O! thou art a cruel enemy. O Amalek, thou fearest not God. Ishmael persecuted Isaac; even so it is now. Amalek, thou art the world, the flesh and the devil, ever to be found lying in ambush, in readiness to pounce upon and to smite the feeble ones of the flock. The life and pathway of faith in Christ Jesus is contrary to the course of this world. They then who walk by faith must meet with its enmity. "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Not always from without, but those things of the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. These Amalekites make sad havoc, and cruel strokes they inflict upon those who fear the Lord. Then the devil, the prince of these Amalekites, with his fiery insinuation, distresses the feeble-minded, hindmost ones of Israel, so that they are weary and faint in their minds. All these combined wage an unceasing war against the followers of the Lamb. Then may not Amalek also represent the chastening and afflicting rods with which God corrects his people? Thus David cries out, "The enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead. Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate." Our God hath said, "I will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes." So the Lord, for his people's profit, gives them up at times to smart under the rod of the oppressor. "They chose new gods; then was war in the gates." O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger; and the staff in their hand is mine indignation.

When Amalek came, what could these hindmost ones do? They had no wisdom nor might to ward off his attack, so all that were feeble were smitten; not one escaped the strokes of Amalek. "What son is he whom the father chasteneth not?" Was the coming of Amalek a chance incident that happened unto the tribes of Israel in their pilgrimage? No, poor hindmost soul; there is not a stroke, not a temptation, not a pang, from whatsoever source it may come, but the God of thy mercy hath decreed for thee. Not one blow more, not one sorrow less, all thy cries and sighs and tears, thy joys and triumphs and hallelujahs, are all decreed for thee by God, who is love. He performeth the thing that is appointed for thee, and many such things are with him. All thy times are in his hand. In his hand is thy breath, and all thy ways; and those times that pass over thee, and over all the nations of the earth, are according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. You say, Ah, if it were so, if I were the object of Immanuel's love, would such foes as the motions of my corrupt flesh, my carnal imaginations, be suffered to make such terrible inroads into my hidden life, so that I am crushed down to the earth? Do not all these smittings of Amalek prove that it cannot be that the Lord delighteth in me? I fear that my name is not Hephzibah. I am as a mere straggler. I fear that I have no right to attempt to limp along in the tracks of the ransomed host. Look at my fleece, if there is any left on me. Those Amalekites have made such a prey of me, I have been so rent and torn, that I ask you, Is there anything about me that looks like a sheep? Even if I am one, I am not fit to associate with the flock. I am so diseased and sick with sin, and have been so broken in my wanderings upon the dark mountains; there I have so often stumbled. Those Amalekitish shepherds have smitten my soul with their doctrines, and with their do and live system, it appears to me; with force and with cruelty they have ruled me. The good Shepherd says concerning his flock, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." But I have been well-nigh killed every day, and have been delivered up to be slaughtered by these hateful Amalekites, the world, the flesh and the devil. These lions that I am among have devoured and have broken my bones. "I am feeble and sore broken." O that the Lord would seek me, and deliver me from Amalek.

"Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt." Do we think those hindmost ones will forget what Amalek did unto them? Not easily. Jeremiah could say, "Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me. This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning: great is thy faithfulness." We are prone to forget, especially the gracious works of the Lord in our behalf. When the Holy Spirit causes us to remember the various troubles that have been our heritage, then we are also made to ponder somewhat upon the Lord's mercies to us in the midst of all our trials, without which we had been consumed. Great is the faithfulness of our God, ye hindmost ones. As Israel of old was called upon to remember what Amalek did unto them by the way, in so doing there would loom before them the merciful and glorious deliverance vouchsafed to them by Jehovah-nissi. Let us then, ye hindmost of Christ's flock, contemplate for a little while how salvation came unto them. Look upon this field of Israel's first conflict. There fall the hindmost ones beneath the cruel strokes of Amalek, till there is not one left standing. They all were smitten. "They fell down, and there was none to help." "And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in mine hand. So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron and Hur went up to the top of the hill. And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword." The gracious Lord in his great mercy brought salvation unto them. In all this typical picture Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, is seen. When we were without strength he brought us deliverance from sin, death and hell. He vanquished all our foes by the sacrifice of himself. Blessed be his glorious name! O ye fearful hindmost ones, we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us. Joshua fought and discomfited Amalek, but all the while Moses' hand must be upheld. Moses represents the law, and he had in his hand the rod of God. The authority, the majesty and power of the Almighty, and his holy law, must not fail, but must be upheld in the salvation of his people; but Moses' hands were heavy, and he could not alone hold up the rod of God. Thus we read that "a man is not justified by the works of the law." "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." "Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword." The priesthood held up the hands of the law. O yes; it was our dear Redeemer who established the law. He magnified it and made it honorable. His sacrifice and priesthood upheld and glorified all the attributes of the eternal God, and his own arm brought salvation unto his people. God of old led his people by the hand of Moses and Aaron—by the law and by the priesthood. So it is in the experience of the flock to-day. If we are looking to the law and to our own deeds, and are turned away, and make light of the priesthood, then Amalek prevails, sin prevails, temptations gain the mastery, we are smitten under the manifold strokes of Amalek, we are overcome and brought into bondage; yes, we are discomfited by Amalek, and Joshua can scarcely be seen. But when to Christ crucified our eyes are turned again, then we lift up our heads, for our salvation draweth nigh. We see in Jesus the law, the majesty, yea, all the perfections of Jehovah, glorified, sin condemned, and the hindmost, uttermost sinners saved. Out of our weakness, by precious faith in Christ crucified, we are made strong, and wax valiant in fight, and turn to flight the armies of the aliens. Amalek is discomfited by Joshua.

"Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it." What! is there hope that such poor, feeble, hindmost ones shall be brought on safely, and attain unto the possession of that good land? Yes, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. He will bring thee, poor, sin-smitten, mourning soul, into the land of thine inheritance. How sweetly, captivately, our Jesus speaks, saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Though Amalek hath smitten thee in the wilderness with the sword, the Lord still looks upon thee with grace, and he will cause thee to rest in the land that floweth with milk and honey. Having begun a good work in thee, poor sinner, he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

"The work which his goodness began
The arm of his strength will complete;
His promise is yea and amen,
And never was forfeited yet.

"Things future, nor things that are now,
Not all things below nor above,
Can make him his purpose forego,
Or sever thy soul from his love."

"Then earth and heaven will wonder
That I the conquest gain,
After so often groaning,
Half-dead among the slain.

"'Twill be an endless wonder
That I should safe arrive
Through seas of tribulation
To Canaan's land alive."

But, says one of the poor, feeble ones of the flock, I cannot see how I shall be able to endure unto the end. I fear that one day I shall perish by the hand of Amalek. I am so faint-hearted, I am so buffeted by the Amalekites, that instead of making progress, and that desired rest becoming nearer to my view, and within reach of a poor, tottering sinner like me, these messengers of Satan impede my path. I have cried unto the Lord twice, but no relief has come. I am weakened, faint and wearied striving against sin. Ah, I know I have not yet come unto the rest which the Lord God giveth to his people. "O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me." Poor hindmost soul, thou shalt hold on thy way, for Jesus shall bring thee in, and cause thee to rest in his love.

The grace of the Lord shall be thy sufficiency, and the power of Christ Jesus shall rest upon thee. As thy day, so shall thy strength be. The Lord thy God hath a favor unto thee, and his right hand and the light of his countenance shall give thee salvation. He will command deliverances for thee, and through his rich mercy thou shalt come up out of the wilderness leaning upon thy Beloved. So you may well sing,

"My conquest is sure through his blood,
Though now there's a warfare within,
And Satan comes in like a flood,
To draw my poor heart after sin.

"Fresh succor from Christ I receive,
Who did all my conflicts foresee;
And through his rich grace, I believe,
He saved a sinner like me."

But another poor hindmost one is saying, O! it seems too good to be true that such a miserable sinner like me shall ever find rest from all mine enemies that are round about me. Could you see my daily walk; not that only which can be seen by men, but that walk which only mine eye seeth, and the eye of the holy One of Israel. I am so ready to slip with my feet. When I press forward, then some lurking Amalekite creeps forth and trips me up, and I slip again. I fear I am too unworthy; I am such a polluted sinner; I am so fretful, so full of complaints; I am so ungrateful, often murmuring over my lot and the Lord's dispensations; I am even at times envious of the prosperity of the wicked. My feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped. It is of the Lord's mercies that I am not consumed. Can it be that I shall ever see the end of thee, O Amalek? Yes, thou hindmost one of Israel, thou shalt pursue thy way, and triumph over all thy foes; for thy God giveth thee the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. God will have war with Amalek from generation to generation, and thou at length shalt see the extermination of Amalek. In the history of typical Israel this was fulfilled, and how much more gloriously is it fulfilled among the tribes of spiritual Israel. The earnest of these things is and shall be known by the dear children of God, by precious faith in the dear Son of God. Our conquest is sure through his blood. We shall be more than conquerors through him that hath loved us. The God of our salvation shall thrust out the enemy before us, and shall say, Destroy them. Thus the arms of our hands shall be made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. Through God we shall do valiantly; for he it is that shall tread down our enemies; and though at times we are stricken down in the war, yet faith in Jesus shall be given us. We shall renew our strength; we shall arise again. Our foes shall fall down slain, and God shall give us the necks of our enemies; yea, we shall bruise Satan under our feet shortly, for the war is of God.

O, beloved of God, in how many ways and how many are the times that we are made to feel ourselves to be the hindmost ones of the flock; and while feeble, faint and weary, we are smitten down into the dust by Amalek. But "Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the holy One of Israel." Oftentimes our God hath pleaded the causes of our soul, and hath executed judgment in our behalf; and though Amalek still compasseth us in our steps, and lieth in wait to catch us, and to draw us into his net, yet our God hath been our salvation hitherto. The Holy Ghost, the Comforter, is still our guide, and hath helped us, and brought us thus far on our way.

"Here I raise my Ebenezer,
Hither by thy help I'm come;
And I hope by thy good pleasure
Safely to arrive at home."

The land which the God of Israel gave unto his people, and put them in possession of, and gave them rest from all their enemies round about them, was typical of the gospel land of rest that the believer enters into by faith in Jesus, our dear Redeemer; and what is our inheritance and rest and blessedness enjoyed now by faith, but the earnest of that eternal inheritance of bliss at the right hand of the everlasting God? The heirs of the covenant which God made with Abraham in due time possessed and dwelt in the land of Canaan; so the heirs of the new covenant, made with him whose day Abraham rejoiced to see, shall all come at length into the fullness of their inheritance which Jehovah hath laid up for them. Blessed be the name of the Lord, the promise is sure to all the seed. This includes you, ye hindmost ones of the flock. There are no uncertainties in this covenant.

"This covenant, ye hindmost, stands,
Thy rising fears to quell;
Sealed by the Surety's bleeding hands,
In all things ordered well."

"Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."—Heb. vi. 17-20. In due time the tribes of Jacob marched into the land of promise; the hindmost ones too, though feeble, and often faint and weary in their journey. But their God sustained them, led them on safely, thrust out the enemy before them, and settled them by lot in the good land that floweth with milk and honey.

"Thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it." Was Israel unmindful of this? Did they neglect to do as God decreed? O no; it was remembered by them, and brought to pass as the Lord had said, "I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven." In Judges v. 14 we read, "Out of Ephraim was there a root of them against Amalek;" and in Judges vii. 12 we find Amalek confederate with the Midianites in conflict with Gideon's valiant band. Then again there is a record of Amalek being joined with other nations, taking crafty counsel against Israel. "They have said, Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance."—Psa. lxxxiii. 4. But O! that was a notable time recorded in 1 Samuel xv., when Amalek was well-nigh blotted out from under heaven. "Samuel also said unto Saul, The Lord sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore hearken unto the voice of the words of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I remember that which Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt. Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." But Saul would have spared Agag, the king of the Amalekites, alive, for which he lost his throne and kingdom. "Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites. And Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past. And Samuel said, As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal."—1 Samuel xv. 32, 33. Ah, Amalek, thou art brought low! Wilt thou ever arise against the hindmost ones again? Let us, ye feeble ones of the host, search the records. Yes, here thou art again. O Amalek, thou art a crafty, cowardly, cruel foe! "It came to pass, when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the Amalekites had invaded the south, and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire; and had taken the women captives that were therein: they slew not any, either great or small, but carried them away, and went on their way. So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was burned with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives. Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep." But David and his men of war pursued after them; and when he overtook them, "behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, eating and drinking and dancing, because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah. And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day: and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels, and fled. And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives. And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor anything that they had taken to them: David recovered all."—1 Sam. xxx. Will the remnant of Amalek ever rally again to battle against Israel? O yes, if they can only find them hindmost, feeble, faint and weary. Did that time ever come? you ask. Yes, and it was the final conflict. Israel triumphed and overcame at last, and Amalek utterly perished from under the heavens. Read the book of Esther, and there the story is told. The tribes of Israel were brought low, and held as captives in the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of king Ahasuerus. Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, was the Jews' enemy. All bowed down to him, and did him reverence; but Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence. How could he when God had said, "I will have war with Amalek from generation to generation?" "Then was Haman full of wrath. And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had showed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai." He obtained authority from the king to destroy them all, and erected a gallows fifty cubits high to hang Mordecai thereon. Yes, even Esther the queen was not exempt, and could not have escaped in the king's palace. "Then were all the Jews in sore perplexity." "And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and many lay in sackcloth and ashes." O Haman, thou Agagite, thou seed of Amalek, dost thou think to cut them off from being a nation, that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance? O Amalek, thou shalt know that Israel's King is higher than Agag. His kingdom ruleth over all, and thou shalt utterly perish forever. Mordecai believes this, and says, "There shall enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews." The enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, but Jehovah turned it to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them. Haman, that wicked enemy, and his ten sons, were hanged upon the gallows, and seventy-five thousand of Israel's enemies were slain. Thus in this final conflict Amalek utterly perished, and Israel remembered, and was enabled by the Lord their God to blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven. O Amalek, thou art extinct; thou art quenched as tow; thou shalt no more lie in wait; thou shalt no more arise to smite the hindmost of Israel, even all that were feeble and faint and weary. Jehovah hath triumphed, his people are free. "Happy art thou, O Israel! who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places." The Jews rested from the slaughter of Amalek, and made it a day of feasting and gladness. "Therefore the Jews of the villages that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth of the month of Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another. And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of King Ahasuerus, both nigh and far, to establish this among them, that they should keep the fourteenth day of Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same yearly, as the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a day of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor."—Esther ix. 18-22. Well, beloved of God, we have together traced the history of Israel and Amalek; and these things are "written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."—Rom. xv. 4. Lift up your heads, O ye hindmost ones. The Lord will never leave thee nor forsake thee; he will perfect that which concerneth thee. Thine enemies may harrass thee, their vile insinuations may often distress thy soul and smite thee down to the earth; but thine enemies shall be found to be liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places. "Jesus, Captain of salvation, Now thy gracious power display; Send a word of consolation, To revive the tribes to-day. Come, unfold thy heavenly banner, Bid us still our march pursue; Compass us around with favor, And to us thy glory shew. Let our loins with truth be girded, And with peace our feet be shod; By eternal mercy guarded, Fight and conquer through our God. Forward bid us go and prosper, Put thy sword, Lord, in our hand; Let us still go on and conquer, Till we meet at thy right hand. Blessed Captain, go before us, That thy troops may follow on; Let thy precious name, O Jesus, Bid us fight, and make us strong. Though a host of foes surrounding, We shall nothing have to fear, While thy presence is supporting, And we feel our Captain near." In love and fellowship for the hindmost ones of Israel, FRED. W. KEENE. NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

ALEXANDRIA, Va, Feb., 1894. BRETHREN BEEBE:—In answer to a letter received Jan. 16th, 1894, from sister A. M. Wagg and Jennie Starkes, of Palestine, Texas, requesting for me to tell them who that man was in the parable of the talents (Matt. xxv.) referred to in my article published in the SIGNS of Jan. 10th, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods, to one five talents, to another two, and to another one, and straightway took his journey, I will say to the dear sisters that I can give no better explanation than Jesus in the parable has given. If I understand him in the parable, he is using in figure a man to represent the kingdom of heaven traveling in a far country. In another place (Luke xvii. 20, 21) he says, "And when he was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo, here, or lo there; for behold, the kingdom of God is within you." This explanation, it seems to me, is sufficient of itself to show that the kingdom of heaven is presented as traveling in a man. It may be interesting to the dear sisters to go back and trace this kingdom in his travels; for you remember Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world;" therefore his kingdom must be traveling in a far country. We go back to the days of Adam and Eve, and we read that Eve had three sons, Cain, Abel and Seth, who seem to be representative men; Cain representing the natural man, and Abel the spiritual; and that God accepted or had respect to the offering of Abel, but had not respect to the offering of Cain; and that Cain slew Abel, and after the death of Abel Eve had another son, called Seth. We pass over the old world, before the flood, down to Noah, whom I understand to be a representative man, and a lively type of the church or kingdom of heaven, traveling as a man. We read how miraculously he and his house were preserved, when the end of all flesh came up before God. The great deep was made a pathway for him to travel on in his journey; for in that man was preserved all the elect vessels of mercy that should be manifested in time. In this salvation of Noah and his family we have a figure well worthy of our attention. The same element that destroyed all flesh except Noah and his family, was made a highway of safety to bear on its bosom the precious souls sheltered in the ark; representing the kingdom of heaven. So also in our experience, the same law of condemnation that consigns us down to the dark waters of death, and from the presence of God, is made unto us by the perfect righteousness and obedience of Jesus, our Lord and Savior, the waters of salvation in the ark of the covenant of grace. For the prophet Isaiah (liv. 9) says, speaking of the church and (Continued on page 85.)

A RANSOM FOR ALL.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FRIENDS:—For the information of some here, I ask you as a special favor that you give a short comment at your earliest opportunity on 1 Tim. ii. 6. "Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." What evidence is there that he gave himself a ransom "for kings, and for all that are in authority," as well as all men for whom prayers, &c., are to be made? Is there any way in which he could have given a ransom for all the world, and yet some be lost? Can it be in the sense of the passage that he is "the Savior of all men, specially of them that believe?" I do not think it is the practice of your people generally to pray for the characters named in this chapter. The genuine truth is what we should desire, my dear friends, and not endeavor to conform the Scriptures to our views. An early reply will much oblige your friend,

"For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."—1 Tim. ii. 5, 6.

Personal acquaintance with our inquiring friend affords assurance that he is earnestly desirous of understanding the truth as it is in Jesus. Doubtless many other readers may have been perplexed by the adversaries of the gospel of God who pervert this text among others, making them seem to forbid the doctrine of personal and particular election in the salvation of the subjects of divine grace from their sins. While they may be firmly established in the belief of the truth as it has been taught in their own individual experience, it is yet a trial to many to be unable to see the consistency of that truth with the scriptural language which is wrested so as to appear to deny it. Certainly our friend is right in saying, "The genuine truth is what we should desire." Nothing but that which bears the seal of inspired authority can be of any value to those who stand at the bar of infinite justice. If our friend has encountered those who "endeavor to conform the Scriptures" to their views, he has been guided by divine wisdom in rejecting all such expositors. Nothing is worthy of the confidence of a believer in God but that which he has revealed. When correctly understood all the divine record is perfectly harmonious with itself throughout; therefore when any sentiment is found to be condemned by one expression of revealed truth the conclusion must follow that such sentiment is not the correct understanding of the doctrine which God has given for our learning. Whether such sentiment is generally accepted in the religious world, or merely the imagination of our own mind, the fire of that word of the Lord will utterly consume it. Every thought of the heart and every device of man must be subjected to this infallible test. If it is here condemned, even though it has been cherished by believers for centuries, it is false. If this word of the Lord sustains it, though our fathers have rejected it, "Let God be true, but every man a liar."—Rom. iii. 4.

In quoting the whole sentence in which the clause cited is embraced, it is hoped that the reader may be able to determine whether the sentiment held by our people generally is condemned by this portion of Scripture. If we were writing exclusively for the benefit of our inquiring friend, knowing him to be a very competent interpreter of language, it would not be necessary to do more than refer him to the connection in which Paul uses these words. Can there be any uncertainty in the plain statement of the object of the exhortation in the first verse, to which the apostle assigns the very first importance in his instruction to Timothy? He does not direct that this prayer should embrace the salvation of the specified characters from their sins. The only object of this direction is expressly stated, "that we [disciples of Jesus] may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." Even this is not in order to obtain the commendation of our fellow-men, so that we may escape persecution. The only and sufficient reason assigned is, "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." It can in no wise be understood from this text that God will have any men to be saved but such as he will have to come to the knowledge of the truth. The same will embraces both these objects. Either that will is effective, or it is not. Then, if the will of God is that every one of the human race shall be saved, it is also his will that every one should come unto the knowledge of the truth. Is it true that such knowledge is thus universal? If not then the will of God has failed in that particular, and there can be no certainty that it will not fail in the ultimate salvation of any sinner, since the same obstacle which prevented the will of God from being fulfilled in the giving of the knowledge to all men, might prove equally insurmountable in the case of their salvation. Surely no honest believer in the inspiration of the Scriptures would be willing to accept such a blasphemously absurd exposition of the subject. On the other hand, if the will of God is not effective in the one case, it cannot be sure that it will be more successful in the other. Thus, according the conditional theory, there is no salvation secured by the work and suffering of our Lord Jesus. Universal death and ruin might be proved by such perversion of this text; but no salvation at all could be assured to anybody according to that interpretation of it. Sinners who are conscious of their need of salvation by grace, will not be satisfied to hope in any such delusive devices of human pride. This is the scriptural introduction to our text.

"For there is one God." This assertion forever condemns all theories which represent the purpose of God as dependent upon the will or works of man. The only revelation of himself which this one God has given, is that by which he is declared to be infinite in all his perfections, "the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy." He says, "I am God; and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Let it be remembered that this is the one God of whom Paul was writing to the believing and faithful Timothy. Can there be any failure of the fulfillment of the will of this omnipotent, sovereign and all-wise God?

"And one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." There can be no such thing even among men as a mediator without implying two parties at variance. It is not expedient now to consider the glorious character of our Mediator in all his relations to his ransomed people. Time and space would fail, even if our friend had not specifically requested that our reply should be "a short comment." The one point to which we must call attention is that this one Mediator has not failed in his official work. It was for the accomplishment of this will of him that sent him, that God was manifest in the flesh. No other being in heaven or in earth could mediate in this case. The Mediator must be the equal of both the parties between whom he would intercede. As the self-existing and eternal God his purity must instantly consume the transgressors if they would draw near to him. But while his holiness is not sacrificed, yet as God manifest in the flesh he could claim equality with the sinners whom he came to save, and also he thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Thus "the man Christ Jesus" is the one Mediator between God and men. While the tempter often assails the saints with his cruel suggestions of their sinfulness and unworthiness, their case rests exclusively upon the efficacy of their divine Mediator. If there is one for whom he intercedes unsuccessfully, then it is not true that the Father always hears him. But he is our ever living Intercessor, "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost [or evermore] that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Heb. vii. 25. If there were a possibility that some sinner for whom this Mediator intercedes might yet be lost, not only would it utterly destroy all the hope of every saint, but it would rob our Mediator of his peculiar glory as the successful Advocate and Savior of his people from their sins. Then his name could not be Jesus. But the comforting fact is written in the Scriptures as well as in the heart of every believer, that his intercession is always heard. Not even in their severest trials can the tempter shake the confidence of the saints in the efficacy of the blood of Jesus for the cleansing of all the sin of every one for whom it was poured forth. If they are included in the number for whose sins his soul was made an offering, they know that he is able to complete the work of bringing them into the perfect blessedness of his own eternal glory. In this assurance is the ground of all good hope in the grace of God.

"Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." Intelligent readers will not need to be told that in the very specification of the gift of himself as "a ransom" must be included the fact that those for whom he so gave himself are all alike redeemed from the bondage in which they were held until that ransom price was paid. It is impossible the ransom should be effectual on the behalf of one without securing the complete deliverance of all for whom the redemption price was paid. Hence, it is manifest that every one designated as included in the number for whom this Mediator gave himself, must have the very same benefit of that one ransom. Now, if the whole family of Adam is alike ransomed, then there can be no more done for one than for all the rest of them. This would give no more assurance on the part of the penitent sinner than what was equally true of the vessels of wrath who "are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. If they were included in the number for all of whom our Mediator gave himself a ransom, then they were in no wise benefited by the redeeming blood of Jesus. Nor can the language of Jude refer to the temporal destruction of those corrupt cities; for they certainly were not at the time when Jude wrote still suffering that vengeance, since nearly three thousand years had passed over the desolated plain where the awful storm of fire and brimstone had enveloped them. Certainly of those thus destroyed it could not be said that they were yet suffering that vengeance which had consumed them so long before that time. Beyond controversy Jude means just what he writes, and those guilty cities are everlasting examples of the just judgment which rests upon condemned sinners. But they were of the family of Adam, and if they were ransomed by our Mediator, that did not save them. And if that ransom failed to save one for whom it was paid, it cannot be effective in the case of any other whose case stands upon the same ground. Thus the necessary result of construing the word "all" in our text as including the whole race of mankind, is the conclusion that the ransom did not avail for the salvation of any sinner. This conclusion again denies the express declaration of Jesus, who says that he came to save that which was lost, and that he finished that work.

There can be no such thing as a ransom without previous right of possession on the part of him who would ransom the property. If I have a farm involved under a mortgage, when I pay the claim that is against that property I have redeemed it; but it is no more mine than it was before it was involved. A stranger could not cancel the mortgage, and claim the property. So, when our Mediator gave himself a ransom for all, it certainly can include no more nor less than those who were his own before they were involved under the condemnation from which he ransomed them by the gift of himself. Our Lord Jesus declares his original title in the property which he ransomed. In his prayer he says, "I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world; thine they were, and thou gavest them me." Here is his original title. When they were involved in sin and condemnation, the right of redemption was in him as their rightful owner. Hence, it was strictly just that he should give himself a ransom for all of his people, whom he calls his own sheep. Justice cannot receive from him a ransom for any others. Neither can any other power ransom the people of God except this one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. In this amazing display of divine grace justice is not less gloriously manifest than love and mercy.

If there were no other limitation expressed in the text, the specification "to be testified in due time," which is added by inspiration, must restrict its application to those in whom this testimony is given by the Spirit of truth, who takes of the things of Jesus and shows to his disciples all things concerning their Redeemer. It is understood even among men that testimony does not change truth. When the truth is testified, it is only declared for the instruction of those who receive the testimony. So, the fact that this effectual ransom has been given for any individual is testified when the Spirit reveals that great salvation in the sinner, who is thereby manifested as a subject of redeeming love. The mediation of Christ Jesus is limited to them for whom his blood was shed. To each of them it is testified by the Spirit of truth, and this witness in every case comes "in due time." The testimony in Abel was not delayed until the time of Abraham, neither did this testimony in the case of Paul come in the time of Noah. So, in the case of every saint, the revelation of that grace of God which brings salvation is in the exact instant when God has designed that each of the heirs of eternal life shall be translated out of the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the sons of God. Thus Christ Jesus is the only and successful Mediator between God and the men whom the Father gave him out of the world. They are all the world for whom he gave himself a ransom. He did not even pray for any others but this election of his grace. The saints are not directed to pray for the characters mentioned in the connection of our text, except for the end specified, "That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life," &c.; and for this there is no occasion to utter any set phrase in the form of prayer. No example is left on record by inspiration in which the great and mighty among men are made the subjects of special prayer for their salvation from sin. We think our text is in exact accordance with that to which our friend refers; and also, when the Spirit shows its real import, it is in harmony with every word of the Scriptures.

While painfully sensible that we know not what we should pray for as we ought, there is comfort in the assurance that "The Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; and he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." If left to our own judgment, we should feel that our prayer might well be for all lovers of divine truth and gospel order to yield practical obedience to the command of Jesus by following him in baptism. Then they would be in a position to sympathize with the weakness of those who are endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. But perhaps they see too much of the frailty and imperfection of those who have professed to follow Jesus, and for that reason prefer to keep out of their company. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abound unto our inquiring friend, and lead him with all saints into the knowledge and practice of the way of holiness.

ABOUT GONE.

OUR supply of back numbers, to the first of present volume, is about gone, therefore we have discontinued sending them to new subscribers unless especially requested.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

AS OUR subscribers are well aware, we have for several years been making an effort to so increase our subscription list as to enable us to supply the paper at a reduced price, and had all the several thousands to whom we have sent the paper the first year at a reduced rate remained on our list, we should have ere this been able to make an announcement of a reduction in our subscription rates; but we are sorry to say that at least four out of every five to whom we have sent the paper for the first year at a reduced rate have declined to continue it subsequent years at the regular rates. While we are actually losers financially by our extraordinary offers to old subscribers to procure us new subscribers, yet we have been gratified by having our circulation increased from fifteen hundred to two thousand permanent subscribers; and in many cases the increase has been in new fields where the SIGNS OF THE TIMES has been comparatively unknown. Although the circulation of the paper has been gradually increasing, yet it has not been sufficient to enable us to give encouragement of any immediate reduction in the subscription price without some further aid in sustaining the expense of publication.

Ever since the paper has been established as a sheet of wide national circulation we have been importuned by our subscribers, as well as by those who have had no special interest in sustaining the publication, to open our columns to advertisements; but never having had any experience in that line of business we have hesitated to make the venture. Since the commencement of this volume, however, there has been a combination of circumstances that has encouraged us to make the experiment, and we therefore make the following announcement, viz.:

Inches	1 week	4 weeks	13 weeks	26 weeks	52 weeks
1	$1 90	$ 7 20	$17 00	$34 00	$ 45 00
2	3 80	13 50	34 00	48 00	75 00
4	7 60	22 50	51 00	72 00	131 25

No advertisements will be received for this paper unless guaranteed to be strictly as represented.

Our object in taking this step is with the hope that we may thereby be so assisted in defraying the expenses of publishing the paper that we shall by the commencement of next volume be able to announce a material reduction in our subscription rates, which we are as anxious to do as any of our subscribers can be to have done.

Brethren and friends answering advertisements in this paper are requested to state that they saw the advertisement in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

her redemption, "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee nor rebuke thee." We leave Noah and his sons, and we take up the travel of the church or kingdom of heaven in Abraham, whom God called out of his father's country and father's house, to go to a land he would show him. Surely in this man was represented the kingdom of heaven traveling in a far country; also in Isaac and Jacob, who afterwards was named Israel, traveling down into Egypt, and sojourning there four hundred years, until they became a mighty nation; of their being brought up out of Egypt with a high and strong arm by the mighty God of Jacob, under the leadership of Moses, the servant of God, and fed in the wilderness forty years with manna from heaven; and thus return back to the land of Abraham, under the leadership of Joshua; and of their victories over all their foes; of David and the prophets, and Solomon, who built the temple; until we come unto the time when the King of the kingdom of heaven should be born of a woman, made like unto his brethren, wrapped in a mantle of flesh and blood, as a servant under the law, filling all the demands of the law in every jot and tittle that stood against every member of the inhabitants of his kingdom; and, as head of the body, offered himself a perfect sacrifice for their sins, acceptable unto God, bringing in everlasting righteousness. This man tells us of the parable of the talents, and of the kingdom of heaven as a man traveling in a far country, and straitway took his journey. We now hear of the man or kingdom of heaven traveling as apostles and ministers of the gospel of the Son of God all over the world, through Asia, Africa, Europe and America; also the Isles of the sea; on his journey preaching, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." The dear sisters who have asked about him have heard his servants tell all about him, and the glories of his kingdom; and to-day if I should ask them how much they would take for the knowledge they have of that man, they would say, Not all the gold of Ophir, nor a thousand worlds like this. Now, my dear sisters, I have told you briefly a little of the man you have inquired about, and I expect you can tell more than I have told.

In answer to the request of the dear blind brother for my views on 1 Timothy v. 8, I will say, that if the dear brother would only give his views experimentally of what he believes is contained in the text, it would be more interesting to me than any views I may be enabled to give. But as he has requested my views, I will give just such views as present themselves to my mind at this time. One thing, however, I will note, that a single verse of Scripture does not always present the spirit of the epistles written by the apostles. We should always take the whole subject the apostle is dwelling upon. Designing men may take a single verse of Scripture to prove some unscriptural notion of their own, and cause confusion instead of edification. From this abuse of the Scriptures there have been divisions made in churches; and where love and fellowship before abounded, hatred and strife arose from contention about passages of Scripture on which there was a disagreement of opinion; and this reminds me of a certain passage of Scripture referred to by a dear brother, which reads (Job xxxviii. 2) "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" This Scripture (to me) means that if we have not an experimental view of the Scripture, it would be better not to give any view, than to make up one for the sake of showing our superior knowledge in spiritual things, and speculating upon the declarations of holy writ. Such speculating has caused confusion and strife amongst the churches, to my own knowledge. With these introductory remarks I will try, as the Lord may enable me, to give what little view I have of the subject inquired of by the dear blind brother. The text reads, "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." In this epistle of Paul unto Timothy, whom he calls his son in the faith, he gives directions pertaining to the order of the church, including not only the pastors or bishops, and the deacons, but every member belonging to the church, and the respective duties they owe to each other; and the charge he gives is like a two-edged sword that cuts both ways. It not only tells them the duties they owe to each other in church fellowship, but it also includes the family circle of the members at their respective homes. He instructs them how they should act, walk and live in this world as professed members of the church of Jesus Christ. He also assigns to them the punishment and penalty of the disobedient members of the church. In this particular part of the charge, wherein the text is found, he gives directions how the widows that are widows indeed should be cared for by the church, and says, "But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents; for that is good and acceptable before God. Now she that is a widow indeed and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day. But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth. And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless." Then follows the text, as already quoted; and Paul goes on to say, "Let not a widow be taken into the number under three score years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work. But the younger widows refuse; for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry; having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith." Also, in the 16th verse he says, "If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed." To my mind this last charge bears directly upon the text. The apostle seems to guard against the church being imposed upon by the indolent members, as quoted in the text. "But if any provide not for his own, specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." For illustration, we will draw a picture as described by the apostle; and in doing so, say we take a member of the church which does not provide for his own, specially for his own family, his wife and children, and they of his own household. Could we say that man or woman has kept the faith? James (ii. 14-17) in referring to the same subject, says, "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Just so I understand the Scripture under consideration. A man or woman that does not provide for his own, specially those of their own house, hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel, and not worthy to be fellow-shipped in the church. This admonition of the apostle is to all such a sword that cuts both ways. We may slight widows indeed, and perhaps many of us are guilty of so doing. I do not excuse myself. But if we do not show piety at home, how can we escape the rebuke of the apostle? For instance, a man or a woman professing to be an Old Baptist, a member of the church of Jesus Christ, that does not provide for his own house, I will say such a report would not be received by infidels, who do not believe on the Son of God. Infidels, as men, and women, are generally charitable to their own, and the deserving of mankind; they take delight in being generous and kind to those of their own houses. They thereby build monuments to their names, to be praised of men, and report the good they have done for humanity's sake and for their fellow-men. Truly the apostle in using the contrast of such ones being "worse than an infidel," preached the everlasting gospel of the Son of God. Let us hear what Jesus says, (Matt. v. 20) "For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." The scribes and Pharisees did not believe in Jesus; yet he refers to their righteousness. A man's or a woman's righteousness is generally known by their walk and conversation. If they be followers of Jesus, their desire is to obey his commandments. In John xv. 12-14 we read, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." To my mind, in this command we have the line of duty fully set forth, and, if followed, we will do well. Jesus laid down his life for us. In laying down that life he provided for his own, specially for those of his own house. He fulfilled all divine justice demanded of him, and brought in everlasting righteousness. Should not we, as followers of Jesus, in the social circle provide the daily provisions for our household needed in this life? If we do not, then we have denied the faith, and are worse than infidels. Some one may say these are spiritual things spoken of in the Scriptures, and do not relate to domestic things. I am afraid of such ones; for it sounds very much like I have heard it said by the enemies of truth, that "you Old Baptists believe if you are born to be saved, according to your doctrine, you will be saved anyhow; it does not matter what you do or how you live." And it may be that some Old Baptists rather believe it, as it suits their carnal nature. But allow me to say to you that Satan never used a more deceptive net to catch Old Baptists in than this, especially the unsuspecting; and it does seem to me that in the days of the apostle there were some such cases, and that some who professed to be members of the church based their eternal salvation on believing what the tempter had said. In the Scriptures of divine truth, there is nowhere found an "anyhow" salvation. You can find it amongst the religious world, for they say it does not make any difference what church you belong to, or how you get to heaven, so that you get there. That would be an "anyhow" salvation, but not found in the Scriptures, and is a denial of the purpose of God in saving his elect vessels of mercy, predestinated before the foundation of the world; and it is a denial of the words of Jesus, who said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Therefore, my beloved brethren, let us, as much as in us lies, follow the admonition of the apostle unto Timothy, taking care of the widows that are widows indeed; also the afflicted and destitute brethren, who are made widows in the spirit of the charge given by the apostle, and are included in the text; and as much as in us lies, fight the good fight of faith, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our salvation, trusting that in his own good time we may receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dear brethren Beebe, I have tried to answer the requests of our dear sisters and brother in my poor weak way. I feel that I have not done the subject justice; but I hope they will throw the mantle of charity over what I have written; for if they knew what a little gift I have to write, and the poor scribe I am, they would have asked some of our gifted brethren to answer their requests.

Affectionately yours,

JOSEPH BRODERS.

WINTER PARK, Florida, Feb. 25, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have written many letters since I came here, but do not find time to write to as many as I would like to, nor very fully to any; so I will write through the SIGNS to all of its readers who may be interested. I left Southampton Feb. 5th. It was a clear day, but the coldest of the season there. At noon I took a train at Broad Street station, and without changing from the car I arrived at this place Tuesday night about eight o'clock, the train being one hour late. I found my dear wife, who had been here since "Thanksgiving day," suffering considerably. She has improved much in health since then. The children have been quite well. We have great reason to be thankful to the Lord for his tender care over us all, and for all of his great goodness in providence. Sister Bessie has had a very favorable time for visiting sisters in the church and relatives in New York City, and in and near Middletown. She is to go in a few days to spend a few weeks with our niece at Girardville, Pa.

Since I have been here it has been warm and pleasant most of the time. There have been two or three days when the temperature was between forty and sixty degrees. With that exception it has generally ranged between sixty-eight and eighty-four. For many days it would reach eighty by nine o'clock a. m., and remain there till five o'clock p. m. Yet the heat is not oppressive, owing to some effect of the many lakes upon the atmosphere. I have noticed the pleasantness of the atmosphere to breathe more than I did at any time or place last winter. Perhaps I needed it more than then on account of the severe attack of "La Grippe" that I had in December and January. The air has seemed soft, and yet elastic and invigorating. I can see how like a soft but elastic pillow it would feel to tired and weak lungs and throats.

It seems to me that there is something wonderful about this climate in its effect upon those afflicted with throat and lung trouble, and some kinds of rheumatism, as well as many other diseases. I have seen and known of many wonderful cures having been experienced by living here for a time. There are some in this town who remain here all of the time. They are well while here, but have some return of their trouble when they return north. Others feel it necessary to spend the winters here. But in many cases a permanent benefit has been received, and in some a complete cure, by a residence here for a time. As a general thing each one will recommend the place here where he lives as the best for all complaints. There is no doubt in my mind that there is a difference in localities, some suiting better for one complaint or for one person, and another being more favorable in the case of another person or another complaint. I have observed that in cases of impaired breathing powers some part of the interior is generally much more suitable than the coast. It is not my purpose in this letter to compare the advantages of different localities, nor to express any preference for any. The effect of a residence at De Land of nearly three months last winter was very remarkable upon the health of my wife, who had been suffering from acute bronchial trouble. She was relieved beyond our utmost expectation in so short a time. But there are many other places where the same effect might have been experienced. De Land is not near any lake, and is about three miles from the St. John's river, and is quite dry. Winter Park is about thirty-six miles farther south, and there are three lakes of considerable size near. From the top of the Seminole Hotel seven or more can be seen. We find it very suitable to us this winter.

This letter is intended chiefly to speak of these things in this brief manner, for the benefit of any who feel concerned. I will also say that from what I have seen I think that any man able to perform any manual labor can always find employment.

This town is composed mainly of a good quality of cottages, quite a distance apart, each having ample ground. Many have orange trees in the yard, and some an acre or more of oranges about the house. There are tall pine trees and little scraps of forest all through the town. The stores are few, as it was not intended for business. Orlando, a town of about three thousand, is only four miles south, and people go there for their goods. Rollen's College was established here about eight years ago, and is a good institution of learning. The Seminole is a very large hotel of the very first class, and also of the first class of prices. There are a number of good boarding houses where the rates are reasonable. At Orlando parts of houses may be rented by those who wish to keep house in a small way.

I have visited two churches since I came, one forty miles north, at De Leon, and one five miles from here, and have spoken in the Methodist hall one night. It is our expectation to leave this place March 2d. Until March 16th our address will be Ocala, Marion Co., Florida. One sent to Southampton will be forwarded to any place where we may be. We expect to be at the coast, probably Daytona, a couple of weeks, and to reach Southampton before the second Sunday in April, if the Lord will.

I will mention that pineapples are cultivated in this vicinity, but they have to be protected. This is done by a covering of boards three inches in width placed two inches apart at a height of six or seven feet. This is sufficient protection both from sun and frost. Farther south, in what is called sub-tropical Florida, they grow without protection; but those raised here are said to be finer than those. Between this and Orlando is the largest protected pinery in the world, consisting of six acres, containing sixty thousand plants.

Your brother in hope,
SILAS H. DURAND.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Elder J. W. Christopher departed this life on Feb. 11th, 1894, at his residence in Limestone Co., Ala.

Words cannot express what he was to the Baptists. He was Moderator of our association, and one of the ablest ministers it has ever been my privilege to meet. Under all circumstances he was willing and able to contend for the doctrine of the Baptists, which is the doctrine of God our Savior. He was courteous, and was loved by all who knew him. We do not want to complain at the dealings of the Lord, who works all things after the counsel of his own will, and who sees not as man sees. It is hard for us to believe that his place can be filled, while we bow in humble submission to him who said by taking him away, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." He has finished his course, fought the good fight of faith, and there is for him a crown of righteousness. He is gone up higher, to take up his abode in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

We extend to the bereaved widow our deepest sympathy, and would say to her, Our loss is his gain.

E. T. HAMPTON.

HOWELL, Tenn., March 5, 1894.

DIED—In Hopewell, N. J., Jan. 24th, 1894, Mrs. Catharine E. Stout, aged 81 years.

Mrs. Stout had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church at Hopewell thirty-five years, during which time it could be said of her in truth that she showed her faith by her works; for while her husband, the late Aaron Stout, was living, and they resided on their farm, their house was a home for the Old Baptists and their friends, especially at the time of our association. Sister Stout has left three brothers, one daughter, five sons, and a large number of nephews and nieces, as well as many friends and the church of which she was a very worthy member.

Her last sickness was of short duration. She was paralyzed, and lingered only a few days; but she was wonderfully sustained. I was present a short time before she expired, and she repeated a number of times the words, "Not by works, but by grace." She showed while in the agonies of death the power of reigning grace.

At her funeral on the 27th ult. the following words were used: "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

ALSO,

DIED—In Hopewell, N. J., on Feb. 3d, 1894, Mr. Daniel Housel, in the 86th year of his age.

In the death of Mr. Housel the community in this section has lost a worthy man, a kind neighbor, and a strictly honest man. He was not a member of the visibly organized church, but a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, having no fellowship whatever with the carnal theory of "do and live," nor any of their modern so-called religious inventions; and he always attended the regular meetings of the Old School Baptists when he possibly could. He called to see us a short time before his death, and spoke of how remarkably well he had been during the winter up to that time; but in a few days he was partially paralyzed in one side, and lingered only a few days before death released him from all his bodily sufferings. He has left a wife, our dear sister Housel, who feels her loss very much, for he was a kind and affectionate husband. He also has left one child, a son, also a brother and a number of grandchildren, as well as a large circle of friends.

His funeral was on Feb. 6th, and in compliance with the request of his sorrowing and afflicted widow the following words were used as a text, "Be still, and know that I am God."

ALSO,

DIED—In Hopewell, N. J., Feb. 4th, 1894, Mrs. Mary H. Sutphen, aged 68 years.

Mrs. Sutphen had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Hopewell forty years, during which time she remained well-established in the truth of the gospel, always filling her place in the stated meetings of the church, unless providentially hindered; and her acts of kindness were an evidence of her genuine love of the truth. The cause of her death was a cancer in her breast, and for a number of days before her death her suffering at times was excruciating; but she manifested wonderful resignation to the dark and inscrutable providence of God, saying, "It is all right." About twelve years ago she accidentally bruised her breast, but thought it would soon be well again; but the result was death finally.

She has left her husband, three children, one son and two daughters, also several brothers and sisters, as well as nephews and nieces, how many I am not able to tell, as well as the church, to mourn their loss. Death has made a great inroad into our church and congregation within a year past.

Sister Sutphen's funeral was on Feb. 7th, and the following words were used as a text upon the sad occasion, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

WM. J. PURINGTON.

HOPWELL, N. J., March 9, 1894.

Esther Ann Spurgeon, daughter of Isaac and Ruth Smith, was born in Licking Co., Ohio, May 8th, 1824, and died at her home in Noble Co., Ind., Dec. 3d, 1893, aged 69 years.

She was married to Amon Spurgeon Dec. 29th, 1839, and was the mother of ten children, who are yet living, except one son, James, who died in 1889. At about the age of twenty years she united with the Predestinarian Baptist Church called Poplar Fork, at Gratiot, Ohio, and was baptized by Elder Baker. Here she remained a consistent member until the fall of 1864, when she came with her family to Noble Co., Ind., and was in the constitution of the Elkhart Church, in April, 1866. She died a worthy member of this church, and was truly a mother in Israel. Her home has ever been a home for the kindred, and indeed for the needy of every class. A son, daughter and daughter-in-law were members with her, and others of her children love the doctrine she rejoiced in. Her death is a great loss to the church, her family and the neighborhood, where for so many years she cared for the sick and went about doing good; but we have hope that she now enjoys the bliss of heaven, where they no more say, "I am sick," and where it is always day.

Elders Lines and Bretz (her pastor) preached comfortingly at her funeral, after which she was laid beside her husband, who died in 1891. May the Lord give us sweet submission to his dispensations.

A. H. SMITH.

Miss Anna Hastings died Nov. 29th, 1893, aged 30 years, 1 month and 21 days.

Sister Hastings was baptized by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Dec. 17th, 1865. She was an exemplary member of the Little Creek Church, and her adorning was the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Our sympathy is with the father, mother, three sisters and three brothers, who are bereaved of a lovely member of their family. The father, two sisters and two brothers are members of our church.

Sister Anna was so faithful in attendance that we miss her at our meetings; but we have the sweet consolation that with her all is well. Her patient endurance of suffering, and implicit trust in the Lord to the end, was a manifestation of the sustaining grace of God in her case. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Many attended the funeral, at which the writer of this memento tried to speak comfort to the bereaved from the appropriate words, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Rev. xiv. 13.

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

"BUT we have the mind of Christ."

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The subject contained in the above words, and in their connection, was presented to my mind very forcibly a few weeks since by the following incident, which I desire to speak of first, and then try to pen down such reflections as occurred to me at the time, and have occurred to me since.

One morning, while walking in the village where I live, I fell in company with a gentleman whom I frequently meet, and have known for several years. Directly after we met he said to me, "I am, as you know, a member of the Episcopal Church, but I do not know that I am altogether orthodox according to their creed in my view of some things." Then he went on to make this assertion, "I know it is not the commonly received doctrine, but I cannot conceive of any higher joy in heaven than to meet the friends who have made my life happy here, and renew on higher lives (that is, lives freed from all fear, jealousy, and imperfections of all kinds) the intimacy we have enjoyed here." Upon prosecuting the conversation still further he said, in reply to some remarks of mine, "That all may be so; but I cannot conceive of anything higher and better than the joy and pleasure that I have here in my friends." Still further conversation only served to emphasize what he had already said. I thought, How much more truth he is expressing than he himself is aware of. All that he said is but illustrating the language of Paul all along in this second chapter of First Corinthians, the substance of which is that the natural man receives not the things of the Spirit, and cannot know them. The knowledge of natural things and the knowledge of spiritual things is not merely a difference in degrees, but in kinds of knowledge. Spiritual things are not a higher order of natural things, but an entirely different and diverse order. This is the teaching of this chapter; and the same lesson was emphasized and illustrated in my talk with my acquaintance. His ignorance of spiritual things, his frank statement of his inability to conceive of anything higher and better than the love of friends, did not arise out of any lack in good morals or good feeling, nor out of a lack of human learning; for he is widely read and very thoughtful, and I have never heard of any wrong actions being charged to him. Yet in spite of these many natural advantages above thousands of his fellows, he yet confesses that he knows nothing better than what this earth can afford when its present imperfections shall have been removed; and by this he meant, so he said, that here our love was sometimes marred by quarrels and the indulgence of ill-temper, which things would not disturb us there. I have not spoken of this to censure or to criticize my friend, but merely to emphasize the truth of the chapter above mentioned, and about which I wish to write if I can.

The whole teaching of this second chapter of First Corinthians is founded upon the truth that there are two kinds of life. The one is natural, the other spiritual. The lower life is the natural, the higher is the spiritual; and Paul's teaching is that the lower has no power by which to lift itself up to the higher, or by which it can desire the higher, or even know that there is a higher life. The teaching of this whole chapter is that all natural men, whatever differences may be among themselves in point of wisdom, reason or morals, are, so far as the life of God and the knowledge of God are concerned, totally dead, and by consequence totally ignorant of heavenly wisdom. My friend, by his confessions, unwittingly affirmed the very things of which Paul here speaks. Paul said, "The natural man cannot know the things of the Spirit;" and my friend said that he could not conceive of anything above the natural. The difference is that Paul asserts that there is something which far transcends the best of all earthly things, while my friend does not believe that there is. How different his testimony would be had he once seen what was revealed to Paul.

In this chapter Paul sets forth in contrast the wisdom of the world and the wisdom of God. This was needful, for the church at Corinth was founded in a city where human philosophy was highly esteemed; and one of the peculiar temptations to which this church was exposed was the tendency to deify human wisdom, and to claim for it the power to explore even that which was spiritual. Paul therefore writes by way of warning to this church. As human righteousness, which Paul sometimes calls the righteousness of the law, and sometimes the works or deeds of the law, would, if believed in, destroy all faith in the imputed righteousness of Christ, even so a confidence in human wisdom and philosophy would entirely nullify and make of no account the wisdom of God which was in a mystery, and which was ordained before the world unto our glory. Therefore Paul combats both, and preaches Jesus as our righteousness in the one case, and as our wisdom in the other. To pharisaic righteousness Jesus is a stumbling-block, and to human wisdom he is foolishness; but to the contrite heart he is the power of God, and to the spiritual mind he is the wisdom of God. This truth Paul sets forth in all his letters, but in this second chapter of First Corinthians he makes it especially plain.

The difference between human wisdom and heavenly wisdom is not a difference of degree, but of nature or kind. The foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the wisdom of men is foolishness with God. This does not cast human wisdom aside as a worthless thing, but puts it in its proper place. Human wisdom sins only when it seeks to intrude into the things that do not belong to it. Natural life and natural wisdom are of God, as much as are spiritual life and spiritual knowledge. Each has its own proper place. When Paul teaches that natural wisdom cannot embrace spiritual things, he is throwing no discredit upon human wisdom; he is only saying that it has its metes and bounds, and cannot pass beyond them. The world by wisdom (its own wisdom) knows not God. Each world, the natural and the spiritual, has its own life and its own wisdom, which pertain purely to itself; and while the higher can comprehend the lower, the lower cannot comprehend the higher. The lower cannot be brought to believe that there is anything higher and better than itself by any powers which it possesses. It is true always that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, &c.

This brings me to consider the chapter of which the text is the last verse. Both the first and second chapters cannot be studied too carefully. They are filled with declarations of truth that are fundamental and of the utmost importance. In the first chapter Paul states that he has heard that divisions exist among them, one saying, I am of Paul, another claiming to be a follower of Apollos, another of Cephas (or Peter), and still another faction saying, "I am of Christ." Paul seems to rebuke this faction as well as the rest; by which I think we have a right to conclude that they had in their partisan course dragged Christ down from his place, as the one Lord and life of his people, to be the head of a party. This faction was as carnal, and their spirit as much opposed to the religion of Jesus, as was the case with the others. Paul rebukes all these parties, and shows that such a course on their part sets the cross of Christ one side, and makes it of no effect. Paul enforces this by telling them that he was glad that he had baptized so few among them, lest any should say that he had baptized in his own name. With Paul Jesus was everything, and to preach Christ his highest desire and honor.

Then Paul proceeds to set forth the wonderful contrast which follows between faith and human reason, between human wisdom and the divine wisdom, between philosophy and revelation, between him who knows God and him who knows him not. To set these contrasts forth completely would require the transcribing of this whole chapter from the eighteenth verse to the end. So entirely does Paul see that all the glory must be given to God, if indeed any man does know the truth, that he asserts that of purpose God has chosen the foolish and weak and base and despised things of this world, and has rejected in the main the strong, the noble, the wise; and the purpose is that no flesh shall glory in his presence. Such is the pride and deceitfulness of the human heart, that had God chosen the great, the mighty, the wise, to be built up into his kingdom, even his own people would have been under constant temptation to ascribe to these purely natural advantages that which belongs alone to God; but when it is seen that those whom men count poor and mean and ignorant are the ones gathered in, and that thus the church of God is built up and overcomes her foes, no one can deny that these results have not been by might nor power, but by the Spirit of God. In this way it is clearly shown that the attainment of heavenly wisdom does not grow out of the exercise of human wisdom, but must be by revelation from above.

In still further presenting this truth Paul states (ii. 1-5) that when he came to them he purposely discarded themes of human wisdom, and determined to know nothing but the gospel of a crucified and risen Savior; and in addition to this he also discarded even the words of human wisdom in preaching Christ, lest their faith should stand, or be, not in Christ, but in human wisdom. He would not have his brethren deceived in this matter, and he was jealous for his Lord. Nothing must come between the believer and his Savior. If anything did come in between them it would be to the hurt of the believer and to the dishonor of Christ. If human wisdom must be used to attain to a knowledge of Christ, and then called upon to present Christ, then human wisdom is glorified, and the doctrine of revelation is made a nullity. If human wisdom can attain to a knowledge of Christ, what need is there of any revelation in us? So Paul continues on to say that we speak wisdom among them who are perfect; yet this wisdom is not of this world, nor of the princes of this world, which come to naught (as all earthly things must). "But," he says, "we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory." This wisdom, he expressly says (verse 8), none of the princes of this world knew; and the proof that, with all their human wisdom, they did not know this divine wisdom, is that they crucified the Lord of life and glory, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Had they by their human wisdom attained to the hidden wisdom of God, then would they have recognized and loved his Son, and would not have crucified him. In view of ~~the~~ ^{the} ought, who to day so arrogantly boast of the power of human learning to advance the kingdom of God, to cease their vainglorying, and hide their heads in shame. I do not here, and neither does Paul, make light of human wisdom in its own place and for its own uses. It is only when it arrogates to itself the power to explore the realm of a wisdom higher than itself that it has reason to be ashamed, and to stand rebuked before God.

In this second chapter, verses nine to eleven, we have crowded into a few nervous sentences, filled with words alive with truth, the statement of how men come to know the things of God. This statement contains truth that enters into the very heart and soul of the believer's hope and security. If human wisdom attained to the knowledge of that which is divine by reaching up and grasping it from below, then as memory failed, or other objects claimed attention, its grasp might grow weaker, and eventually fail altogether, and the soul having once tasted the goodness of the Lord might yet perish forever; and so it is just what we might anticipate, when we see to-day in all Arminian religion the assertion that men can "get religion," coupled with the assertion that men can lose it again. But if we attain to the divine wisdom by the power of this higher life reaching down and laying hold upon us, and by its own transforming power building us up into the image of this wisdom, then we are certain of being kept, because God cannot change, nor cease to watch over us; and the life which we have received cannot cease to act within us and upon us. What we do to-day may be undone to-morrow; but what God does is done forever. This last is the precise truth stated in these three verses. Man by nature has never seen the things of God, and has no understanding of them (verse 9); but God himself has revealed them unto us by his Spirit. This does not mean that the Spirit of God reveals these things as one man can inform another of any fact or event. There is, I mean, no voice outside of the believer speaking to him from some distance away; but the Spirit speaks, if he hears it at all within him. "For the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."—Verse 10. Manifestly this does not mean the Spirit of God in his own holy and perfect essence, for in this sense he is forever full of all wisdom and knowledge; but the meaning must be that as the Holy Spirit dwells within believers, he leads them into the understanding of the deep things of God, which elsewhere he has called "the wisdom of God in a mystery." This revelation is to each one personally. Inspiration was given to a few men to infallibly declare what had been revealed to them; but the revelation must be made directly to every one who ever knows the truth. Reading the Scriptures is not to us a revelation of the things of God; for unless these things have first been revealed to us by the Spirit of God, the Scriptures are sealed up from our view. If this revelation be by the reading of the Scriptures, then the eye has seen and the ear has heard the things of God, if indeed we have read the Bible at all; but what a vast difference there is between reading the testimony of others to certain things, and experiencing those things ourselves. I cannot know love, hate, fear nor joy by others' testimony; I must feel these passions for myself.

All this is borne out by the eleventh verse: "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." Surely if any language was ever plain and reasonable this is. The spirit of man alone can know the things of a man; that is, only men can know men. A brute cannot understand a man, nor can an angel. This is but the simple statement of a plain, everyday truth. Paul says that all this that is true of the natural man, and the natural things with which he has to do, is also true of the spiritual man and the things of the spiritual world.

In verses twelve and thirteen Paul asserts that we (apostles and teachers) have received not the spirit of the world, but that which is of God, that we might know the things freely given to us of God; which things we speak, not with words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, "comparing spiritual things with spiritual." This word "comparing" has the force of combining, matching together; and I understand the meaning to be that Paul would not seek to mix that which was spiritual with that which was natural, but would in his teaching always show that the spiritual alone could understand spiritual things, as he has been showing all along.

Now, in verse fourteen, occurs one of the plainest, strongest statements of truth that it would be possible to put together: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual [not natural] judgeth [discerneth] the real word [discerned] of no man." How completely these few clear-cut sentences destroy the modern Sunday School idea, in which by human teaching it is sought to impart to unregenerate children a saving knowledge of God! How this same language also condemns modern evangelistic work, as it is called, and puts the seal of condemnation upon nine-tenths of the so-called gospel ministry of the world. Judged by the standard of these brief sentences, by far the most of modern churches are fleshly or natural in their origin, in their membership, in their ministry, and in their aim. Most of them hold and openly teach that the natural man can receive the things of God; while most of those who admit, when pressed, the truth of this language of Paul, yet judge it to be unprofitable to teach it, and proceed to ignore it in their ministry and in their revival work. It is safer to trust in man than in God, it is safer to put reliance in human wisdom than in the wisdom of God, it is safer to look to human teaching than to revelation, seems to be the opinion of nine-tenths of the religious world. Thank God, there are still a few who have imbibed and are penetrated with the spirit of this second chapter of 1st Cor., and who trust in God and rest not in human wisdom. These must expect to be despised by the Greek, even as they are hated by the Jew. Human wisdom always despises the wisdom of God, even as human righteousness always hates the righteousness of God.

Now Paul clinches his close, terse argument by boldly throwing out the challenge, "Who hath known the mind of the Lord that he may instruct him?" It is an assertion of the strongest kind, that no one has or can know the mind of God, except as God is himself pleased to reveal it; as he says in verse ten. To present the meaning of Paul in this sentence would be to re-write in a great measure all that I have here written. This sentence is a sort of conclusion or climax to the whole argument. Its substance is that we cannot attain to the wisdom of God, and therefore can tell him nothing. We can impart nothing, but must receive all.

Now, the closing sentence of the chapter which stands at the head of this article is an assertion that the apostle did know the things of God. Jesus Christ (who is the wisdom of God, and in whom were hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge) had been revealed in him. This is his authority for speaking. Now, Paul is entirely consistent with himself. He teaches that as he had learned the truth by revelation, so must all others learn it. "We have the mind of Christ." We could have no right or power to testify of the things of God unless we had received the knowledge of them. This knowledge, he says, we have received in Christ, and therefore we have a right to speak of heavenly things. We have received this, not of men, and therefore we do not preach men. Paul, Apollos and Cephas are but ministers. Therefore "we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants [only] for Jesus' sake." Paul did not go to Peter nor to Apollos for wisdom. He did not, he says, receive the truth of men, neither was he taught it by men; therefore he speaks not in praise of men, but of God. Ministers are useful to the people of God, but they cannot do God's own peculiar work. They cannot raise men up to the knowledge of God. This other men must receive, even as they themselves have received it, by revelation. Now this, it seems to me, is at least along the line of teaching in this wonderful chapter. I fully realize that it is but a very imperfect presentation of the truth here revealed. Does it not perfectly chime in with the statement of my friend quoted at the beginning of this letter? The natural man cannot conceive of anything better in the next world than he knows in this. He can conceive of a better natural world than this; that is, a world free from sorrow, pain and open sin; but he does not, he simply cannot, conceive of that which is spiritual.

Thus Paul teaches the same things that Jesus taught when he said, "Except a man be born again [or, as in the margin, "from above"] he cannot see the kingdom of God." That is, except a man have the divine life he cannot know divine things. Thus this second chapter of First Corinthians contains the same humbling and yet comforting truths that have been so often seen in the Savior's language to Nicodemus. Man by searching cannot find out God. This is the truth that humbles man. If any man knows aught of the things of God it must be that he has the Spirit of God. This is the truth that comforts and gives assurance.

I leave these remarks. May God add his blessing. I remain your brother in the hope of the gospel,

F. A. CHICK.

ELDER-POULSON—DEAR BROTHER:—Will you please give your views on Luke xvi. 19-24, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES (for it has been resting on my mind for some time), and oblige an inquirer after truth?

AMELIA SHOCKLEY.

"THERE was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day; and there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame."—Luke xvi. 19-24.

It has always been amazingly strange to me that anyone should make such a request of me, for I feel to be ignorance itself; but I have no inclination to withhold such as I have.

In the first place we must remember that this is a parable. What is a parable? Webster says it is a moral fable enforcing a useful truth. Then this parable contains a useful truth if we can get at it. But we should remember that the spirituality of the entire Scriptures is a parable to the uncircumcised in heart. I think it beyond a question that the primary application of the subject is to the Jews and Gentiles, as the Abrahamic covenant, sealed by the oath of God, not only embraced the entire seed of Abraham, but secured unto them all the promises and blessings by which the rich man could be clothed in purple and fine linen, so that he could fare sumptuously every day. But every Gentile was left out, having no right or inheritance to any of the blessings within this inclosure or covenant, which the gate at which Lazarus was laid seems to signify the entrance of. But if we should, as poor sinners, both Jews and Gentiles, gain any instruction or comfort from the investigation of this subject, we must get at the spiritual or profitable truth that the Master designed to set forth.

It was at the gate which is called the rich man's gate that Lazarus was laid. Why he was there, and how he got there, and how long he had been there, is for us to think about. Necessity was evidently the cause. The question may be asked, Should he not have known that he could not get where the rich man was? No; no more so than the impotent man should know that he could not get into the pool of Bethesda after he was there. It is evident that he was stronger when he started than he was when the Savior found him; but he was there to die to all hope of being healed in that pool, and to realize a life of faith in Jesus Christ.

Lazarus was a beggar when he went to the rich man's gate; he was still a beggar while he lay there; a beggar for mercy and for pardon. It is the Lord that raises the beggar from the dunghill, and the poor from the dust, to a seat with princes, even the princes of his people.

There were two things in particular that Lazarus did not know at that time. He did not know that he could not get just where the rich man was; and he did not know that he could not clothe himself with the rich man's clothing. For he needed to be clothed in something better and more enduring, even the righteousness of Jesus Christ. And although he desired to be fed upon or to eat of the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table, yet he could not have eaten them, for it was not the precious hidden manna that would have given him healing strength; no more than the poor prodigal could eat the husks that the swine did eat. This poor beggar got no sympathy from the rich man, nor help from his table. But the dogs came and showed their sympathy; yet what did it amount to? Nothing; for there he was to die, and there to be made alive. We are told that the application of a dog's tongue to human flesh, or a wound, is poisonous, excites the wound, and aggravates the case. We might say they were Gentile dogs, sympathizers, like Job's three friends. They applied the words of their tongues, but there was no healing balm in them. Not knowing the cause of his wounds, or why he was a beggar, no more than Job's three friends did in his case, their words only laid a heavier weight upon him, which made Job cry out, "Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me." So when the Lord has revealed to a poor soul the depth of his or her corruption, they become a poor beggar, and sores begin to multiply, until they are a stink in their own nostrils. No licks from dogs or words from sympathizing friends, nor anything short of him whose word is full of healing virtue, and who applies his word right to the wounded spot, can satisfy them. So the licks of the dogs could not save Lazarus. He could not be saved by the dainties from the rich man's table, and he died. Precious death indeed! that death which the psalmist says is precious in the sight of the Lord. It is that death out of which the life of faith and hope in the Lord Jesus Christ springs. "I kill, and I make alive," saith the Lord. Now the angels or ministers of the word take hold upon him. If the meaning is that he is naturally dead, what have the angels to do with him? It is only the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God that shall deal with the dead. Like it was in the case of another Lazarus, the angels or ministers could not do him any good until after he was dead and called forth.

He was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. What does this mean? The Arminians say it is heaven. I do not believe it. I think Abraham's bosom signifies the church. So the Lord said that he will send forth his angels with the great sound of a trumpet; not to keep them from dying the death that Lazarus died, nor to raise the dead, but to gather those who had passed from death unto life, and who possess the spiritual signs of life divine. Is that the way in which God's people get home to Abraham's bosom, the church? Yes, he bears them in their weakness, but with a sweet longing for home with their kindred and friends, upon the wings of gospel truth.

Thus we have traced the poor Gentile beggar through death unto life, and then by angels borne home to the bosom of Abraham, the church.

As there are two distinct characters presented in most of the parables, we do not expect to locate the rich man where we have Lazarus. After all that had been referred to had taken place with Lazarus, according to the narrative, the rich man also died, and was buried. It seems to me there comes a time with the seed of Abraham literally, when all of this purple and fine linen fades away, and the abundance of the table begins to fail, like the widow's oil and meal. This one was rich. His riches fade. It leads to death. The pride that he had of being the seed of Abraham is cut off, and he is buried in confusion; horror and distress; in fact, he is buried in hell. Now, like the psalmist, the sorrows of death compass him about, and the pangs of hell take hold upon him. In this condition he lifts up his eyes, being in torment; yes, torment indeed. It is not necessary that we should enter eternity in order to know the truth of what the Bible says concerning the state of happiness and rest unspeakable, and also that state of condemnation and woe; for God reveals it to his people, both Jew and Gentile, in this time state. Then they are his witnesses of these things. In this distress the rich man sees Abraham afar off (O how this sounds!), and Lazarus in his bosom. There is none of this kind of recognition in eternity. He does not see as yet any beauty, nor has the bosom any attraction for him; but he wants that rest that Jesus is to the poor, condemned soul. He does not ask to be taken to dwell with Lazarus, but to be relieved from the torment that he is in. He did not even appeal to Abraham to come, but to send some one, even the beggar that lay at his gate. How carnal was his understanding! Yet he knew he was in torment, but how to be delivered he had not yet seen. How utterly fruitless is the effort of all earthly powers to relieve one in this distress! It is just as impossible as it was for Lazarus to pass that great gulf; and I think that is what is meant by the great gulf. It seems to me that we can see in this narrative the fulfillment of some Scriptures. "Blindness in part has happened unto Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." Also, "The first shall be last, and the last first." Also, "And ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, and ye yourselves cast out."

I have written in this queer kind of way, in connection with as much of the parable as the sister requested. The remaining part of the conversation of the rich man only goes to show that his carnal understanding in reference to spiritual things had not yet been swallowed up through the victory of faith. I have given this view as my own, and no one but myself is responsible for it. I retain nothing at this time that I remember having ever heard from any one. If you think it contains anything that will be of any profit to the sister making the request, or to any of the readers of the SIGNS, you may publish it; but if not, throw it aside with the trash; for after I write, and sometimes after trying to preach, I feel very much humiliated and ashamed.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FRIENDS:—I will try to write to you in reply to the sermon you wrote for me in the SIGNS last August, which was a feast to my poor soul. I hope the Lord will direct my pen, for without him we can do nothing. Your editorial was headed "The Footsteps of the Flock." I will now write of some of my travels, and I hope God has directed my steps to the flock. He is the Shepherd of the flock, and says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." But am I one of the flock that has strayed away? Yes, it seems to me that I have been lost all the days of my life. I can see nothing good that I have done. I first joined the Methodists, and thought I was doing God's service. I tried to do all the good I could. I had never heard a Baptist preach; and when I finally did hear one preach, I thought of all the doctrine I had ever heard it was the worst. That was eleven years ago, in the state of Illinois. At that time I thought I was so good that I surely was not deceived. It seemed to me he preached that no one was right except the Baptists. O how that did stir me up. I felt willing to take God for my help, and would

SIFTING THE SAINTS.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have been taking the SIGNS OF THE TIMES since 1865. What you publish is my faith. If we believe in God let us serve him, and say, His will be done! I have never before asked your views on any subject, but now I wish you to write on Luke xxii. 31. I desire particularly to know why Satan wanted him to sift him as wheat. I am nearly blind.

ENOCH HALL.

"And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."—Luke xxii. 31, 32.

In reply to this question it might be sufficient to say that the desire of Satan doubtless originated in that enmity which God put between the woman and the serpent in the curse recorded in Gen iii. 15. Those who recognize the unlimited sovereignty of God have no occasion to be alarmed at the malice and wickedness of the enemy of all righteousness, embodied in this text in the one name Satan. This name of the tempter signifies literally, "Adversary." While none of the children of God who are subject to the assaults of this adversary have power in themselves successfully to resist his wily devices, yet they have strong consolation in the fact that he has no power to touch them without first obtaining the commission from our redeeming Lord. Far as it transcends the understanding of finite minds, the fact is clearly revealed in the inspired testimony of Jesus that our God has made use of the wrath of man for the manifestation of his praise; and that he gave Paul "A thorn in the flesh," which thorn, he says, was "the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure."—2 Cor. xii. 7. It is worthy of special observation that this messenger of Satan was definitely designed to buffet Paul. He does not complain that while the Lord had sent this messenger with the purpose of comforting him, the devil had made him a thorn in the flesh. He was fulfilling the specific purpose for which he was given to Paul when he buffeted him. Of this no candid man can avoid being convinced by the very letter of the record. As in the case of Pilate in condemning Jesus to be crucified, this messenger of Satan could have no power at all against the apostle except it were given him from above.—See John xix. 11. This is a point upon which it is very important that the saints should be well established, as their only comfort is in the certainty that their Redeemer is strong. Not only is he strong in comparison with the mighty powers of earth and of sin, but he is infinitely strong, saying, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." This word of our exalted Redeemer excludes the possibility that Satan should have any power in either heaven or earth. Hence, it is plain that however great was the malicious desire of Satan that he might have Peter, for the purpose of sifting him as wheat, he could do no more than execute the will of our Lord in preserving that chosen vessel from the effects of confidence in the flesh. There is no lack of desire on the part of Satan to have the saints that he may try them in the cruel meshes of his sieve. His malice never can be satiated. But the mercy and goodness of the Lord set the limit to the manifestation of that malice. Just so much of the wrath of man must be displayed as shall declare the praise of our Lord. The remainder of wrath omnipotent grace restrains. This includes the malice of devils as well as the rage of all the adversaries whose combined enmity seeks the injury of those who hope in that salvation which is revealed in Christ Jesus. Wicked men and devils are not called upon to do the service of God in manifesting their enmity contrary to their own desires. As in our text, the Lord says, that Satan had desired to have Peter that he might sift him, so in every case it is his desire that he might have and sift the believers in Jesus. This was manifested in the trial of Job. It is the work of Satan ever to accuse the brethren, and thus he does continually sift them as wheat. But it should afford strong comfort to them that are in any trouble to know that Satan must confine his efforts to annoy and sift them within the bounds which are set for him by the express authority of their redeeming Lord. When suffering under the severe assaults of Satan in this process of sifting them as wheat, it is not possible for the afflicted and poor people of God to understand that they are still kept safely in the hand of their almighty Savior. They could not be sifted at all if they realized that the everlasting arm of their God was still underneath them in every trial.

Reason is confounded in attempting to grasp the design of our God in choosing his people in the furnace of affliction. Natural men suppose that there must have been some insurmountable necessity under which it was beyond the power of God to choose his people in eternal bliss, and that therefore he was obliged to take them in the afflicted state in which they were without the divine appointment. Although this way seems right to the limited mind of man, to the conscious sinner it can afford no consolation. If the devices of Satan have once prevailed against the purpose of God, and sin entered into the world contrary to the design of the Creator, then how can there be any assurance that the same evil may not at last prevail against the word and will of God, thus defeating all his appointments of love and grace? This fearful possibility is the only consistent conclusion to be drawn from this false assumption of reason. But there is in our text revealed the great fact that Satan has no power but the ability which is given him from above whereby he buffets the saints for the correction of their disposition to be exalted above measure. They must indeed be sifted as wheat; but the effectual fervent prayer of our Savior sustained Peter even when he was shaken in the dreadful sieve of Satan. Then, our Redeemer as the righteous Servant of God under the law "prayed for" his tried disciple that his faith should not fail. But he knew that the prayer was according to the will of God, and his Father always heard him. Now, in the throne of his glory, with all the power of heaven and earth in his possession, he no longer prays as a suppliant, but with his omnipotent word he commands, and his will is done in earth as it is done in heaven. Death and hell can do nothing but in the execution of his infinite decree. Surely in this consideration there is strong consolation for all who fear the name of the Lord, and who hope in his victorious grace for deliverance from sin and death.

The love of God was not confined to the acceptance of his people in the furnace of affliction because divine power could not have placed them in a more pleasant position. Infinite love could select no more favorable place for them in all the unbounded dominion of that God who gave them the heritage of tribulation in the world. Not only has their sojourn been appointed them in this valley of the shadow of death, but "The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him."—Lam. i. 17. There is strong assurance of hope in the revelation that even in afflicting the saints the enemy is limited to the definite command of our God. No inspired evidence can be found in support of the notion that the affliction of Jacob is merely permitted for the gratification of the malice of his adversaries. Every sorrow and every pain is given to the saints in the same great love which God commended toward them by the gift of his Son to redeem them from guilt and condemnation. While they feel that their faith must fail under the severe sifting of Satan, beyond their sight the omnipotence of the prayer of Jesus forbids that failure.

It is important that the saints should observe particularly that no uncertainty is intimated as to the result of the assault of Satan upon Peter. There could be no failure to produce the end designated in subjecting this servant of Christ to the cruel power of the adversary. No corruption of the flesh nor weakness of the spirit could separate Peter from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. Not all the devices of Satan, with all the wrath of man and the alluring vanities of the world, could erase his name from the book of life. In that immutable heaven of electing love, which embraces every saint, it is indelibly written by the will of God; and Paul has left on record the judgment of inspired truth, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. viii. 38, 39. Certainly words can express no more comprehensive assurance of the final preservation of all whom God has chosen to eternal glory. While it is indeed given to the saints to endure the sifting of Satan, it is also forever settled in heaven that in all the sifting there shall none of them be lost. "For lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."—Amos. ix. 9. So, in this sifting, the purpose of the Lord must be accomplished in converting Peter from the selfish confidence in which he had professed that though all men should be offended and deny Jesus, yet he would be true to him. When he was sifted, then he was prepared to strengthen his brethren. There was much appearance of strength in that profession of devotion in which they all said the same as Peter had said. To finite understanding their faithfulness was not only evidence of their ability to stand alone, but that they were prepared to render efficient service in the protection of the Lord from the assaults of his adversaries. No afflicted and poor child of God ever received any real strength from the zealous assurance of these followers of Jesus when they expressed confidence in themselves. Without the knowledge that they were completely delivered from that reliance there would never have been any strength afforded to one of the brethren of those disciples. But in the record of their conversion unnumbered myriads of the saints in all succeeding ages have been abundantly strengthened. Herein is illustrated the omnipotence of the prayer of living faith, as well as the certain fulfillment of every commandment of the King in Zion.

It is of little importance to know what motive prompted Satan in his desire to have the disciples of Jesus that he might sift them as wheat. It is enough for them to know that his devices are always evil so far as his designs are concerned. But there is strong consolation for every tried and afflicted believer in the knowledge that all his wishes and devices are under the control of that omnipotent Redeemer who has prayed for all them whom the Father has given to him. By his fervent prayer he ever makes effectual intercession for all who come to God by him; and it is certain that none of those sheep of his fold, for whom he laid down his life, shall fail to come unto him. The truth, the power and the faithfulness of God must fail in order that one of these little ones should perish. They must endure the sifting of the adversary, not for the purpose of gratifying that enmity which would destroy them, but for the deliverance of the saints themselves from that delusive snare of Satan in which they are held when they trust in their own devotion and faithfulness. There is not a particle of the dust of earthly reliance but that the word of God has given to be the serpent's meat. Sometimes this dust has become so closely attached to the saints that they fear the serpent is about to devour them when he is only feeding upon that meat which God has given him.—See Isa. lxxv. 25.

For the comfort of our aged and afflicted brother, it is well to observe that even when our Lord was humbly serving under the law, the wicked adversary had no power to hurt one of those little ones for whom he came to suffer and die. The prayer of the Redeemer in his humiliation was sufficient to support his sifted disciples. Now, that he is exalted with the omnipotence of Jehovah in the throne of his glory, it is certainly safe to rest in the confidence that he will never leave nor forsake those who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before his saints in Christ Jesus. Then, however dark and incomprehensible may be the way in which the Lord leads those who hope in his salvation, under the guidance of that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit they may still confidently commit themselves, with all their desires and affections, to his gracious protection. So Peter says, "Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." This humble assurance of faith is expressed by Job when he says, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him; but I will maintain mine own ways before him."—Job xiii. 15. This is very different from that false confidence which would claim to trust in God as an excuse for walking after the carnal inclinations of the sinful mind. True confidence in God is never manifested without the hatred of sin. This is the occasion of the constant mourning of the subjects of divine grace by reason of their conscious pollution and the corruption of their own hearts. That is not the Spirit of Christ which would claim the hope in the grace of God as an occasion for their continuance in sin. Perfect trust in the grace of God always produces earnest and sincere desire to be free from sin. Therefore it is the only reliable evidence of true faith when the believer abhors every appearance of evil in himself.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EVER since the SIGNS OF THE TIMES has attained its wide national circulation we have been importuned by our subscribers, as well as by those who have had no special interest in sustaining the publication, to open our columns to advertisements; but never having had any experience in that line of business we have hesitated to make the venture. Since the commencement of this volume, however, there has been a combination of circumstances that has encouraged us to make the experiment, and we therefore make the following announcement, viz.:

Inches	1 week	4 weeks	13 weeks	26 weeks	52 weeks
1/2	$.95	$ 3.60	$ 8.50	$12.00	$ 22.50

take my Bible and read, and asked God to show me the right way. During that fall while reading the Bible I read where the Lord said, "There shall be one fold and one Shepherd." Also, "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." I cried out, "Is it possible, O God, I have tried to climb up another way?" By many passages of Scripture did the Lord show me that I was wrong. But to believe that God had foreordained a people to be lost, and some to be saved, I could not. Yet I read, "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" Now I thought, Am I a vessel to honor, or a vessel to dishonor? But God opened my eyes so that I could see I was one or the other. The next spring we moved to Iowa, and then did my nest begin to be stirred. O what a wretched sinner I felt I was! No one but God knows. I would try to pray, but all I could say was, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." It seemed I was searching for some one to lead me; but behold, there was none. I prayed to God almost night and day for three years, but did not want any one to know of my condition. O! if I could have found one friend who believed as I did, it would have done my soul good. I was oppressed on every side. It seemed like I was nothing but a stumbling-block to my family. In the third year, in the fifth month, it seemed that I had to give up all hope of being saved. I was afraid of God, and afraid of the storms. (You know Iowa is noted for its storms.) O what a wretched condition to be in! I could not sleep when I saw a cloud rising. I wanted God to send me a preacher to tell me what to do. I would pray him to send some one to tell me all things. I would get up off my knees and go to the door to see if I could discover some one coming. You will see that I wanted to have my own way, and that was not God's way. That night was the greatest night for storms that I ever knew, and I gave myself up to God to do with me as he pleased. O what a blessed thought, to give myself up to God! I went to bed and told my husband that if God killed me in the storm it would be all right with me. It seemed that I was perfectly satisfied; for I thought I was lost, and was satisfied it was God's will if I was lost. After we went to bed there came such a storm as I had never before seen. We had been accustomed to going to the cave when it stormed. My husband said, "Let us go to the cave." And I replied, "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." I stood still for a moment, and then went to the window and looked out, with fear and trembling, and saw the lightning, and such a beautiful light; and I heard a voice saying to me, "Fear not, daughter of Zion; thou shalt be saved, and thy whole house." O what joy filled my poor soul! No one can know it but those who are called of God. I laughed for joy. My husband saw that something had taken place, and kissed me. I sat down in a chair and thought, What kind of a salutation was that? I got up and went to my Bible, and it opened to where it said, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." O what a blessed thought! Then I could see how poor and pitiful I was in the sight of the all wise God. I felt so little, I thought I was nothing but a child. O how plainly I could then see what the blessed Savior meant when he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The next morning I thought I had never seen such a beautiful world. I thought everything was praising God. Are these the footsteps of the flock? If these are not the footsteps of the flock, "Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon; for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?" The Lord has said, "If ye love me keep my commandments." Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. But have I kept his commandments?

Dear friends, I will close this. Will you be so kind as to tell me where the nearest church is in this country? Sometimes I feel like I would go to the four corners of the earth to hear the gospel preached, if it were in my power. We would like to have a preacher come to us. You may publish this if you see fit. Pray for me that I may be enabled to follow the footsteps of my blessed Savior.

Your unworthy friend,

ANNIE E. SMITH.

LAURENS, Iowa, March 3, 1894.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FRIENDS:—As my subscription is due I will try to write you, if the Lord will direct my pen; for I well know that without him we can do nothing. But if God be for us, who can be against us? I would like that you, or some one else, tell us through the SIGNS where the nearest preaching point is from Laurens, Pocahontas Co., Iowa. I have a great desire to find out; for if it is possible, I would like to hear the gospel preached. The apostle says, "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Jesus said to his disciples, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." I sometimes feel he surely meant me; for I have a desire to be in the fellowship of the church, although I feel too unworthy to ask a place of shelter. Jesus said, "I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance." It is said that the Lord found Jacob in a desert land, in a waste howling wilderness. He led him about and instructed him, and kept him as the apple of his eye. O that the Lord may keep me by his power, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

Now, if any preacher feels like coming to preach to the poor, let them make it known by writing to us; for there are others here who would like to hear the gospel preached. Although I feel, like one of old, that I am not worthy that you should come under my roof, yet you will be perfectly welcome here. If the Lord is willing, we will get help in due time.

ANNIE E. SMITH.

[As we are not acquainted with the location of the churches in the state of Iowa, we hope and trust that some of the brethren will furnish the writer of the above letter with the desired information, and that she may be privileged to follow the Redeemer in the order of his house.—ED.]

354 FRONT ST., OWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—If I may be permitted a little space in our best of papers I would like to express the sentiment of many others as to the choice things of the Spirit contributed to the SIGNS for the comfort of the household of faith. Of a truth God's declaration by Zephaniah is felt, "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering." Particularly do I feel this regarding some of the editorials, chief of which I enjoyed the introductory to volume sixty-two. How beautiful is the whole of it. And in the last number of the SIGNS I felt that the subject of "Perverted Scriptures" was remarked upon so clearly and purely. I cannot tell how blessed brother Durand's article on "Vital Knowledge" seemed to me, to possess such knowledge; and yet to claim it for myself is to claim all things present and things to come as mine: fellowship in the sufferings of the Savior, the joy of the redeemed at the turning of their captivity, a glad hope of eternal rest when mortality is swallowed up of life, and fullness of joy in the presence of God, satisfied, when I awake, with his likeness. What riches are in the word satisfied! Can such a hope be mine, who am so rebellious, so ungrateful, and so selfish? Often I am filled with uneasy questionings as to whether my hope, which I received more than twenty-one years ago, is well grounded. I seem so dull in knowledge, and can attain to so little that is spiritual. Attain is not the word. God giveth gifts unto men, and spirituality is only enjoyed and felt by those who possess vital knowledge. If indeed Christ is my wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, I need no merit, for his glorious robe of righteousness covers all my sin and deformity; and he is my Physician, my Healer. O for grace to love him more! I greatly feel the need of instruction and guidance in my ignorance and blindness; yet God abideth faithful. Sometimes I am made to feel the smart of the correcting rod which is for the back of fools, as was the case recently. I felt to murmur and rebel in a most distressing way. I stepped to the door in the evening and looked upon a beautiful scene, the most beautiful of rivers, with gas and electric lights reflected in its clear waters, a carpet of glistening snow covering the ground, and myriads of stars brightly glistening above me. I thought of a portion of the Lord's words to Job, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." I was so glad to have a thought of Scripture, and turned to the chapter, which I read. Loving reproof was in it all, and I was filled with silent joy that I was looked upon with chastening favor. I think I understand how necessary to the child is stern discipline at times. I must again refer to the introductory article, and say how true that there is no spiritual profit in either verbal or written intercourse unless the love of Christ governs all. In the same paper are the sweet gems of thought and experience by brethren Coulter and McConnell, furnished by brother Supplee; also the article by C. W. Bond. All are excellent. Brother Chick solves many an important question to my satisfaction, and I feel that sweet charity and humility are richly bestowed upon him. His article on spiritual worship induces me to say that the awful need which God's children feel of help and strength gives them utterance, if indeed groans do not take the place of voiced feeling. The Spirit maketh intercession for us in that kind of relief. Our little Ruth exclaimed one day, after returning from school, "Mamma, my teacher says we must all say our prayer upon retiring." I replied, "My child, act honestly. Do not say what you do not feel. Great need of God's help alone is prayer. If you deeply feel like asking God to help you to do right, and other benefits, I am willing." Her lips quivered, and she said, "Mamma, I really do want to be good, and will try; but let us talk about something less sad."

I am fully in sympathy with brother Durand in his desire for knowledge which is not spiritual, yet realizing that it is only natural aid in our daily intercourse with our fellow-mortals; also in the more blissful, enduring fact that such desire is entirely gone when the spirit of grace is in exercise. Many precious things appear in the SIGNS that are very deserving of notice, the writers of which are indeed God's suppliants, inasmuch as their extreme need of mercy and guidance makes them so; and of a truth they were sometime afar off, but now are brought nigh by the blood of the Lamb. May our hearts be attuned to sing his praise, and our language be pure, and our speech be with grace, seasoned with salt. May we gratefully enjoy our valuable publication and lovingly cherish the faithful service of the editors and publishers, and worship God in the Spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh. I often desire to communicate with many of the dear family of God, both by private letter and through the SIGNS. I desire to tell them that I rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. May the dear sufferers experience the soothing touch of the divine Healer, and their rest be complete as it will be when the veil of flesh is removed forever.

With sweet fellowship I am yours unworthily,

W. A. BEARD.

WOODBURN, Va., Feb. 8, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I have been intending to write to you ever since the association. At that time I was in Tennessee on business, and missed the comfort of meeting you upon that occasion. Fully was I made to feel yesterday evening that God all along through our natural lives, in his own time, place and way, fulfills his promises. He has promised to be with his people when they are gathered together in his name. Yesterday evening by appointment brother White met his little flock at sister Furr's house. His text was Job xxviii. 12; but he used all the chapter from the twelfth verse to the end. I will not try to use his language; it would be useless, and I could not. But it would have done you good had you been with us, and seen the glory of God manifested in the faces of his people. I do not think there was one present who was not made to feel the power of God, and to humbly know that wisdom is of God, and that he alone understandeth the way thereof. Hoary heads trembled, as it were, in the presence of God, and realized how little man knoweth, and how presumptuous to pretend to know. Brother White by God's grace was given power to lay this portion of his word before the people in such a manner that I am sure all were made to understand; and it appeared to me that God was having him talk directly to me, making me to feel my littleness, how utterly dependent I am upon God for all things, and yet how unworthy the least of his goodness, and feeling that had he judged me according to the flesh I would have been cut off long ago; but in his divine wisdom he has spared me. I do know that I fear the Lord, and I pray that I may be given understanding so that I can shun evil. But you do not know, brother Beebe, how frail I am and how easily I fall. Fully do I realize that wisdom and knowledge are not with me, and sometimes I feel that I must give up as lost; but I cannot. There is a power unseen and unfelt by natural man that worketh in me to will and to do of God's good pleasure; not mine; and then I feel constrained to cry, Lord, do with me as thou wilt. Of myself I can do nothing. I think sometimes of those dear brethren and sisters that are here in the church, how their beaming eyes of love look upon me, how they trust me, and throw around me the spiritual grace that God has made to shine in them; and it goes down into my unworthy heart, making me to cry, O God, deliver me from this bondage, or I die. They know not how wicked I am, unworthy to mingle with them. Sometimes it seems like a mystery that I am with them, and that they cannot see as I do how wicked and unworthy I am, and shun me. But no, they come to me with that sweet love that passes understanding; and my poor heart, vile and deceitful as it is, fully realizes that it would rather lose all else than this.

But where have I gone? I did not intend to write you concerning myself, further than to say that God touched the heart of poor little Susie, and she came to God's people, and was received by them. Brother White baptized her soon after he finished his sermon. Poor little child, if she is spared to live out the usual time there are many trials before her. But I feel so thankful to God for his goodness, knowing he will richly repay her for all her trials and sorrows.

Brother Beebe, I am going to do that which I feel in the flesh I would not do; to take a liberty with stranger; for I never met him in the flesh, but I have in the Spirit. Brother White gave me for perusal a letter from brother, B. F. Coulter to him and requested me to return it, as he wanted to answer it. Now you see what boldness is in me, to send you this letter, asking you to publish it. I want all the brethren to read it. I do not think anyone can read it and not be benefited by it. I will undertake to make peace with Elder White; cannot you with brother Coulter for me? All join in love. Your unworthy brother,

J. L. BALL.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 2, 1894.

ELDER E. V. WHITE—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have been thinking of you ever since you were here, and now I feel that I must write and tell you how much good your sermon did me. When the provisions of the gospel are so set forth as to reach the weakest, the smallest, and the most destitute, and also the vilest sinner of all the flock, then I feel there is some hope for me. Sometimes I can get a little comfort and encouragement from the experiences of my brethren, but mostly my own case is so far below what a christian character should be, so far below my brethren, so filled with the meanest and vilest thoughts is my mind, and so easily yielding to the lusts of my sinful flesh, that I wonder, can such a one as I hope in the love and mercy of God? And yet I know there is a desire in my heart for the things that are not seen. I think the only real foundation for hope that I have is when I can see Jesus just as you presented him the other night, as going deeper in suffering, as becoming weaker and more ignorant, and of less reputation, than any whom he came to save, and whose blood cleanseth from all sin; for surely I am the weakest, the most ignorant, and the least deserving of any creature. I cannot ask the Lord for mercy according as I have done such things as give honor and glory to his holy name; but I want to say with the psalmist, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions: wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. For I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me." I want to feel the power of a living Savior. I desire to relish and be sustained upon the children's food. I cannot live upon the carcass of dead creature works. They work death in me, and not life; and only as I bear about in my body the dying of the Lord Jesus can I get rid of them. It is often encouraging to me to know that "my sin is ever before me," because that knowledge can only be possessed by them who walk in the light. Then, "Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall [these I call to mind through the knowledge of my sin], therefore have I hope." Brother White, my hope is more to me than all the treasures of this world if they were mine. Like the Jews, my flesh cries out for a sign; but if I am given the one sign of the prophet Jonas, the death, burial and resurrection of my Lord, I shall not go seeking after signs in the storms, the rumors of war, and the dreadful things that occur in the earth. I shall not strive and labor for the things that perish, to the destruction of my soul, but looking for the consummation of the hope that is in me, laboring to be patient in all things appointed unto me, and for those things which endure unto everlasting life.

B. F. COULTER.

WAVERLY, Pa., Feb. 14, 1894.

ELDER J. D. HUBBELL—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your very welcome letter came in due time, and I was glad to hear from you. I am always glad to know that the dear people of God think of so unworthy a creature as I am. I love them, and wish I might be worthy of their love and fellowship. If I know my own heart I do desire the peace and prosperity of the Zion of our God; for

"There my best friends and kindred dwell,

There God my Savior reigns."

How sweet and precious the language of Ruth has been to me for a few weeks. "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." I trust that

"This God is the God I adore,

My faithful, unchangeable friend,

Whose love is as great as his power,

And neither knows measure nor end."

When I feel this in my heart I am happy indeed.

"Though waves may roar and thunders quake,

And seas may their huge billows break,

My Father God is with me still,

And brings me safe to Zion's hill."

Here I lose sight of self, poor, polluted self, and view by faith the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world; for all sin is of the world; none of God. As I gaze upon this Jesus I also view the church, his bride in him, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. O what perfection! Righteous in his righteousness, perfect in his perfection, so that Solomon, personifying Christ, could say, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." How I love this precious truth; it is my meat and my drink. I feel to hope this morning that I am clothed and in my right mind, and that Jesus loves even me. But O! the cruel doubts, the bitter trials, the fierce temptations, I have had to pass through to bring me to this precious resting place. Could I tell you all, you would pity me; but I never can tell it; yet I feel from my acquaintance with you that I have a companion in tribulation. But I cannot feel troubled much now; for while Jesus is with me I can fear no evil. His rod and his staff comfort me. I wish I were with you and family while I feel in this way. I do so want to see all of God's people that I can hardly wait. But the dear Lord knows how long I will remain in this happy frame of mind. Perhaps ere the setting of another sun I will be in the belly of hell; but I feel just now that what my God appoints is best. I am not now in a condition to pray, for I have my heart's desire. I feel that my whole being is full of praise and thanksgiving to my dear Lord; and what more could I ask?

I have just returned from Canada. I attended the three days' meeting at Duart, and also visited the little church at Euphemia. I enjoyed very much my visit in both places, and found precious brethren indeed wherever I went. Elders Pollard and Eubanks were there, and both preached. Elder Pollard preached a sermon full of marrow and fatness, just what I wanted to hear. Also the last sermon preached by Elder Eubanks was so sweet that it dropped into my heart like honey and oil. It was love, love, love, all through. I felt just that way, and it did me good.

Brother Hubbard, you do not think I am childish or foolish because I feel in this way, do you? I hope not. I cannot help it, and I do not want to. After passing through such a long wintry season, with no evidence of fruit, nor even evidence of life, but death, hell and destruction, and then to be brought into the banqueting house of my Savior, and feel that his banner over me is love, is it any wonder that I love God and his people, and feel that they love me in Jesus, and that I want to praise him?

I want to say that the grand old SIGNS OF THE TIMES has seemed excellent to me of late. It is always good, but I do not always enjoy it as of late. The editorials, yes, they are all good from beginning to end.

But I must bring my scribble to a close. My family and friends generally are about as well as usual, so far as I know. I hope you and family are well and happy, and the friends in your section. Love to all.

As I desire my brethren to know how I feel just now, if you think best you may send this to the SIGNS office.

Your brother in sweet hope, love and fellowship,

D. M. VAIL.

WESTON, Mich., Jan. 8, 1894.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I thought I would pen a few thoughts relative to our family paper the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have been a reader of the paper for a number of years, and have not as yet discovered wherein it has in any way departed from the principles set forth in the prospectus, or at the Black Rock convention in the year 1832. That document came from men who had been thoroughly purged from the principles of antichrist by persecution. Hence the principles set forth in that document are Bible principles, and I have never had any misgivings as to the truth therein contained. I have never yet been able to discover any departure from those principles in anything from your father's pen, nor from yours. In every editorial they are plainly set forth—the sovereignty and immutability of God. This is the God that makes alive from the dead. This is the God that quickeneth whom he will; and whom he will he hardeneth. This is the God who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. He is the potter; we are the clay. He forms the vessels as he please; some to honor, and some to dishonor. This is his high prerogative. Now, while I am penning these few thoughts relative to the power and immutability of God, it creates a feeling of humility and meekness rather than a feeling to find fault. O that the dear Lord would so order that all his little children may be made willing by his tender mercy and love to meekly bow to the holy mandates of his will. For this God is God over all things. He made all things for his own glory. He made the wicked for the day of evil, and holdeth them in chains of darkness to be punished. He sendeth strong delusions that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who have pleasure in unrighteousness. I now feel to adopt the language of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, that what the Lord doeth is right, simply because he doeth it. Is the absolute predestination of all things a Bible doctrine? He predestinated to make a world, and I believe he made it according to that ordination. He made man; he made the old serpent, the devil; he made the innocent dove; he made the crooked serpent; and all is to the praise of his righteous and holy name, and all shall answer the end for which they were made. He made a Judas, and he according to predestination betrayed our Lord and Master into the hands of wicked men. All this was for the lifting of Jesus on high. All this was absolutely necessary for the redemption of all the chosen vessels of mercy. None but God has wisdom, power and authority to bring about such wonderful things. All things come to pass according to his mighty power and wisdom. Therefore he can say to the proud waves, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther," and they obey him.

I wish in my heart that all Old Baptists could feel in their hearts to send for the SIGNS. I wish it were a welcome visitor in every Old School Baptist family; and I believe it would be if they loved its principles as I do. Of course there are some who are not able to pay for it; but may the good Lord move the hearts of those who are able to add their mites to the indigent fund. If they only could feel to do this, many a dear brother and sister would be made to rejoice.

Now, brethren Beebe, you may do with this as you see fit. If you consider it worthy a place in our family paper you may insert it; and if not, throw it aside, and there will be no offense on my part. I subscribe myself

Yours in love,

T. J. WYMAN.

H. S. JOHNSON, ADVERTISING MANAGER—
DEAR SIR:—Your favor of the 13th, informing me that advertising space was open in your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, received, and it gives me pleasure to have this opportunity of appearing by "card" before the readers of the SIGNS, of whose character I am well aware, having been one of them and associated with them all my life. Reared of Baptist parents, and associating with that people, there is no class that I would rather please nor more regret to displease; and in presenting my advertisement to their especial notice through the SIGNS I qualify it with an absolute guarantee that my goods are as represented, reliable in every respect, and satisfactory to all who desire an article for the purpose. I am personally acquainted with Elders Rittenhouse, Francis, Durand and others, and feel that I can refer to them as to my honesty of purpose and integrity of character, especially to Elder Rittenhouse, whom I have known all my days. In addition to the guarantee offered to my customers in general, I desire to assure the editors of the SIGNS that I will make good and satisfactory any just cause of complaint that may arise between their patrons and me, even to refunding money in any case where the goods fail to realize the standard of excellence claimed for them.

If the editors will accept no other advertisements except those that carry with them the same kind of guarantee which I here present, the space offered in the SIGNS will far exceed in value, in proportion to circulation, that of other mediums, and will preserve the excellent character and reputation of that paper for integrity and cleanness.

I inclose check for $13.00 to pay for insertion of advertisement inclosed.

Wishing you success in your new enterprise, I am very respectfully,

F. O. FRASHER.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—By your permission I will offer some thoughts on the heading of this article for the consideration of the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

This little book has been very sweet to me at times, and I have read it over and over, and nearly every time I read it I see something new that I never saw before; but for the last few days it seems to me that the Spirit of God has been leading my mind into the things contained in this little book to a greater degree than it ever did before. This whole history, as given in this little book, is one continued chain of figures. I hold that Ruth is a type of the church, both individually and collectively; for what the experience of one is, is the experience of all in all ages of the world. Boaz is a type of Christ; his reapers a type of God's sent ministers to comfort Zion, whether in the legal or the gospel dispensation. Naomi is a type of the law and the prophets, that testified of Jesus. The land of Moab represents the state the church is in by nature. Ruth had a husband in the land of Moab; but he died, and that freed her from the ties that bound her to Moab. Just so it is with every member of Christ's body. When they are quickened into spiritual life their first husband is dead; and the apostle asks the question, "How shall we, who are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Naomi hears that there is corn in the land of Bethlehem, and gets ready to go back to her native land. Ruth and Orpah start out with her, but she tells them to go back to their father and mother and to their gods. Orpah goes back; but Ruth clave to her mother-in-law, and would not be persuaded to go back. If her first husband had still been living she would not have left him to go with her mother-in-law; but now she has no more use for the gods that she used to think so much of. She tells Naomi to "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me." They went on together to the land of Bethlehem-judah. Naomi had nothing to give

Ruth. She must go out and glean in the field to get something to live on; and it was her "hap," or good fortune, to fall into a parcel of land that belonged to Boaz. This was not a mere accident; the Lord directed her into the field of Boaz. She made poor progress gleaning for awhile; but when Boaz came from the city, and had a little conversation with her, and instructed his reapers to drop some handfuls on purpose for her, she does a great deal better. But when Boaz is talking to her she does not know who he is; neither did the blind man know who had opened his eyes till he met Jesus again. I do not doubt but what I could find hundreds of brethren and sisters to-day who did not know that it was Jesus who relieved them of the great burden of sin that was pressing them down to what seemed everlasting destruction. It was my unhappy lot to not be able to realize any hope for about five years after I was relieved of my trouble.

Ruth gets among the maidens of Boaz; and right here let me say that, although Ruth is by nature Moabitish, she has already learned to speak the language of Canaan, and can converse with the maidens of Boaz, and we might naturally conclude that they told Ruth a great many things that did her soul good. "And Boaz said unto her, At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers." Was not that good? Ruth was surprised to receive such kindness in the family of such a great man. She had already said to him, "Why have I found grace in thine eyes?" She was instructed that when she was thirsty to go unto the vessel and drink. When she asked, "Why have I found grace in thine eyes?" Boaz said, "It hath fully been showed me all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband; and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore." Jesus said that if any man would be his disciple he must leave father and mother. The children of God must all leave their native land and kindred, as Abraham left his, and went out, not knowing whither he went, but was directed by the great Jehovah. Ruth did not know anything personally about the land. Naomi had told her, no doubt, a great deal about it; but she is now in it, and can sit beside the reapers, the maidens of Boaz, and hear things that she never heard before, and perhaps never thought of. It is no speculation to say that Ruth thought that this was the happiest day of her life; and when she finishes her day's work she hurries home to tell her mother-in-law of her good fortune, and to beat out and winnow what she had gleaned. Brethren, you must not forget to winnow your gleanings. No matter whom you hear preach, investigate it; compare it with God's word; put the rule and the plummet to it. If any speak not according to this word, reject it. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." We find there were men appointed of God to comfort Zion under the legal as well as the gospel dispensation; and this figure applies more particularly to the legal dispensation, or this part of it that I am now investigating. It was said to Isaiah, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Again, we hear him say, "Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come and save you." We hear a great mourning in this day coming up from Zion, and the cry is, "O my sins, my sins! my inability to do the commandments." Dear, mourning soul, I know that your cry is genuine. I know that you feel sometimes like you were altogether forsaken. If I had not been in the same condition you describe I would be as poor a comforter as were Job's friends; and I know I am poor enough as it is. But, dear, mourning soul, the very thing you complain about is one of the greatest evidences, and is calculated to strengthen your little hope that you are one of the favored ones of the earth. Dear saint of God, did you ever think, when you were complaining so much about seeing so much of your corruptions, that you are murmuring against the goodness of God? For it is the goodness of God that leadeth thee to repentance. What would you take to be placed back in the condition you were in when you could not see these things? Why, this knowledge you have is a gift of God, and is evidence that you have been quickened into spiritual life. You have been made to know that salvation is of the Lord, and that all your righteousness is as filthy rags in the sight of God. Do not forget, poor soul, that all we like sheep have gone astray; but the Lord hath laid on Jesus the iniquity of us all. Try to remember that "in all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old." Try to remember "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Yes, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. These groanings and sighings I hear are the evidences of your heirship; and those that make the most complaint have the greater evidence. Jeremiah bought a piece of land of his nephew, and took the evidences of the purchase, and put them in an earthen vessel, both the sealed and the unsealed. This surely represents the evidences of the christian. There is an evidence within the heart of every child of God that cannot be seen by any other, as Elder Beebe once described in speaking of the man with the ink-horn by his side, that was sent to put a mark on the foreheads of the inhabitants of Jerusalem. This inward evidence is the new covenant written on the "fleshy tables of the heart" (not on tables of stone, as the old was), and enables you to know the Lord; and you have the Spirit bearing witness with your spirit that you are a child of God. You are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. Dear, mourning soul, if you could see the evidences in others that you feel in your own bosom, would you not think it the best of evidence? These evidences are sealed; but there are evidences that are not sealed. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling: for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." A tree is known by the fruit it bears; so is a christian. "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith." These fruits in christians make them show their faith by their works; and these works are the unsealed evidences. They are said to be "known and read of all men" that have eyes to see that ye are Jesus' disciples. These things I have written that I might drop a few handfuls for some gleaner in the field.

When Ruth went home with her first day's work, and told her mother-in-law where she had gleaned, she said, "The man is near of kin to us." The law required Boaz to marry Ruth because they were related, and not to make the relationship. Do you not see? Abraham married his half-sister; and he made his servant swear that he would take a wife for Isaac of his relatives. Speaking of the church, Solomon says, "A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed." I will say that they were "chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world." "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." "As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil," &c. I love this relationship doctrine, and I cannot help it. You that are strong please bear with my weakness, if it is a weakness.

So Ruth followed the reapers of Boaz, and gleaned after them until the harvest was ended; and her mother-in-law said, "Shall I not seek rest for thee, my daughter?" She advised Ruth to go and lie at Boaz's feet on a certain night, and Ruth did so. It seems that Naomi knew exactly how the matter was going to turn out. It seems to us that it would have been a bad move for Ruth to go and lie with Boaz; but God was in it all, and was making a figure. Boaz thought there was nothing wrong about it, for he said, "All the city doth know that thou art a virtuous woman. Lie thee down." Ruth wanted him to spread his skirt over her. Who has ever been at the feet of Jesus but wanted his robe of righteousness spread over them? They were up very early next morning, before it was fairly light, and he told her to bring the veil that she had upon her and hold it; and he measured six measures of barley and laid on her, for he would not send her away empty. Was there ever one sent away empty who came and bowed himself down at the feet of Jesus? No; he always gives them about all they can carry. This grain Ruth did not have to winnow. It had been winnowed by the master. It was all good, clean grain. Last night was the last of the legal dispensation, and this morning is the beginning of the gospel day. Naomi said, "Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest until he have finished the thing this day." The thing that was to be finished was the redemption of the land, and to marry Ruth; and Boaz set himself about the business immediately. There was a nearer kinsman than Boaz, and he must go and consult him about the matter. When Boaz had stated the case, and told the kinsman that he had the first right to redeem the land, he said he would do it; but when Boaz told him he must marry Ruth if he redeemed the land, he said he could not marry Ruth, lest he should mar his own inheritance. "Redeem the right to thyself." So Boaz bought the right to redeem the land and to marry Ruth.

Now we pass out of the legal into the gospel dispensation. The Bridegroom is making preparations for his bride; she must soon leave Judaism and keep house for her Husband. Here the parable of the ten virgins is appropriate. The kingdom of heaven is "likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," &c. It was at midnight the cry was made; right at the end of the legal dispensation, and the beginning of the gospel day or dispensation. John the Baptist is the one that made the cry. There had been four hundred years of darkness over the last part of the legal night. No prophet had been sent to give them a ray of light; but all at once John is heard declaring that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" and, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." These ten virgins represent the different characters that came to John's baptism. Those that had oil in their vessels were those that had the grace of God in their hearts, and brought forth fruits meet for repentance, and were gladly received by John and baptized. The foolish virgins represent the Pharisees and Sadducees that had not the grace of God in their hearts, and thought they should be received because they were Abraham's seed; but John surprised them when he cried out, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" That was enough to insult these dignitaries. Now notice the tenth chapter of John: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out." He leadeth them out of Judaism. The church has up to this time dwelt under the law and the prophets, as Ruth dwelt with her mother-in-law;

but now there is a change in the order of things. "If that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." Now Jesus is about his Father's business. Boaz agreed with his near kinsman to redeem the land and marry Ruth; and Jesus in covenant with the Father redeemed the bride and married her. As she had sold herself for naught, she must be redeemed without money. The cattle upon a thousand hills, nor ten thousand rivers of oil, were not sufficient; nor had the vast quantity of blood that flowed from Jewish altars been sufficient, but only pointed to the great sacrifice that was now about to be made. As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Now, after he had preached his own everlasting gospel, and given his bride full instructions how to keep house, he is ready to make the great atonement. Isaiah could look down through the long years and see him led as a lamb to the slaughter; and as a sheep is dumb before her shearer, so he opened not his mouth. He could see him pouring out his soul unto death. "For the transgressions of my people was he stricken." All the old patriarchs, from Abel down, by faith saw the bleeding Lamb. Now the great event is about to take place, and Jesus is led up Calvary's rugged brow, bearing his own cross, and is raised between heaven and earth, as though he were fit for neither. He cried out, "It is finished!" Yes, he has finished the thing this day, the gospel day; and by this one offering he hath forever perfected them that are sanctified. "If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" Arminianism has never been able to tell how the death of Christ could affect a sinner. If there had been no relationship it would not; but he stands as related in several ways.

The bride was espoused to him a long time ago as his bride, even in the ancients of eternity. Well, the husband is bound by the law to pay the debts of the wife, if she is not able; and that was exactly her condition. Was not that the condition of Ruth the type? A type must conform in all the main features to the antitype. Another reason that his death would affect her was that her life was in him; and when he laid down his life he laid down her life. Let us suppose that Adam had died before Eve was taken out of him; would she have still lived? No; and when Jesus laid down the life of the church, that would have been the last of it if he had not had power to take it again. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." "After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight."

There were no churches organized while Jesus was on earth. He commanded his disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high; and when the day of Pentecost had fully come the Holy Ghost was sent down, as a rushing, mighty wind, and filled the whole house where they were sitting; and they began to speak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Here, I conclude, was the dedication of the spiritual temple, or the consummation of the wedding. The apostles start out now in all directions, preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, and establishing or organizing churches.

Ruth is no more a poor widow gleaner in the field for a living, but is the happy bride of a rich man. The church is admonished to forget her widowhood, and arise from her dust and ashes, and put on her beautiful garments. She is the King's daughter, and must be arrayed in fine linen and needle-work. She is all glorious within. Now she can say, "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. He brought me to his banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love." Now she realizes that "lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land." "O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock." The Savior said, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." She has weathered the storms of persecution through the dark ages, all that could be invented by wicked men and devils; and we see her to-day contending earnestly for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. We see her to-day looking back through that faith to the bleeding Lamb of God; and when she sets her table, and spreads the bread and the wine, she looks to the broken body and shed blood of her glorious Husband, and is reminded that "If God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" She is enabled to rejoice in tribulation, "knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts." This hope is as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and entereth into that within the veil, whither our forerunner hath for us entered, even Jesus, our High Priest.

This subject has been like the five barley loaves and the two small fishes; it seemed rather small when I commenced to write, but I see now that "the half has not been told."

ZION.

THERE are some sounds that fall more sweetly and pleasantly upon our ears than others, while the same sounds at one time are more abundantly filled with music to our ears than at other times. In our receptive moments a word spoken, signifying by name an individual, a place, a time of sunshine or of darkness, calls to mind sweet memories of times past, of the incidents of our life, which are so interwoven that they make a harmonious chain, each link bearing the impress of the handiwork of God, who through love has wrought all our changes. When the heart of the conscious sinner is attuned to the praises of the glory of his gracious Redeemer, there is nothing that reaches his ear, his eye, or his heart, out of his Master's kingdom, but in answer will his heartstrings vibrate in harmonious union of thanksgiving and love. Thus every voice of heavenly origin comes to him as the sweetest music. And when he turns to the prophet and hears him say, "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities," it takes him in sweet consciousness, with solemn reverence and godly delight, to the times and the seasons when his soul was lifted away from earth to the heavenly Jerusalem where Jesus dwells, and which is the habitation of all the redeemed. One of the poets has said, "What's in a name? A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." And I answer, There is much in a name. There are times in our experience when the one word "Zion" is the only word which will fitly and sweetly express to our contemplative mind the city of our God, although there are other words applicable to that invisible kingdom. In our exalted moments Zion presents itself to our mind as a mountain of holiness, as a place of exaltation, lifted above the confines of the earth and all things earthly; and by faith we behold the glad mountain, and upon its perfectly rounded heights "a city set upon a hill, whose light cannot be hid;" for its light dependeth not upon sun or moon or stars, for God is the light thereof. We behold also with the prophet of old, "The Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the Seraphim; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory." And upon beholding such wonderful and glorious sight we are ready with the same old prophet to exclaim, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." As by faith we intently gaze with rapture upon all that is within the range of faith's vision, the mountain of holiness, the city, lighted with translucent rays from the countenance of its King, the King upon his throne, and the inhabitants of the city, this in its broad sense constitutes "Zion," the city God hath built. But let us take a closer view of this exalted city, the mountain of holiness. Probably the first thought which occurs to us when looking upon a natural mountain is that it rises above the plains and the valleys of the earth, its summit pointing toward heaven. Next we think of the firmness of its foundation, and its solidity from base to dome. Our mind turns then to its difficulty of ascent. All this we view with the natural eye, and contemplate with the natural mind. Now let us place in contrast that holy mountain viewed only by faith and contemplated by the mind of Christ. Like the natural mountains it is exalted in the heavens. It soars above the sin-cursed earth from which its inhabitants are taken. Its foundation and superstructure are holiness to the Lord. Its undulating ascent is perfect purity, no sin's defiling touch has ever marred the beauty and loveliness of its green pastures and its still waters. There "the wolf and the lamb shall feed together." All its borders are as a quiet habitation, a place of sure retreats, of peace, of rest and of security.

The city. As in the whole mountain the atmosphere that is breathed is holiness, so also in the city. Heavenly anthems of praise are wafted by the gentle breezes of perfect love through this lucid atmosphere of holiness, from the worshipers in the streets of the city to the throne of the adorable King. The streets of the city are gems of beauty and brightness, like the chariot which king Solomon made for himself of the wood of Lebanon. "He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love for the daughters of Jerusalem." The gates of the city are marvels of structure and design, made with precious stones, and in each stone a voice; and at the appearance of the king, the voices are lifted up saying, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the king of glory shall come in. Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the king of glory shall come in. Who is the king of glory? the Lord of hosts, he is the king of glory." In the harbors about the city are not seen "Gallant ships," neither "Galley with oars," for the hand of man has had no part in framing this beautiful city. Do we look for a temple in this city of the great King? Yes, I think we do; but we see it not. John said, "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." How is the city lighted? "And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."

The King. Now words fail. No expressions from finite lips are adequate to tell of the beauty of the Lord, the majesty of the King, the wisdom of the Counsellor, the humility of the Savior, the loving-kindness of the elder Brother; all embraced within the power and love of the mighty God. Let us keep silence, and with reverential fear listen to the words of inspiration. "And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire, and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp two edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead."

The inhabitants of the city. O that the pen of a ready writer might for a few moments be given me, that I might tell of this lovely, this poor and afflicted people, outcasts of the world, yet kings and priests unto God; a people not reckoned among the nations of the earth; yet "A chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; a mourning, an afflicted and a sorrowing people; yet a happy people; for "Happy art thou, O Israel, a people saved by the Lord." A people filled with doubts and fears, yet having a good hope through grace. A working people, yet having ceased from all their works as God did from his. As inhabitants of Zion we behold them, with the Father's mark upon them, the holiness of the Lord. John did write, "And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having the Father's name written in their foreheads." These are they that came up through great tribulation. This remnant according to the election of grace are the only people among all the inhabitants of the earth who can sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. They alone can sing of redeeming love. Such songs are only sung in Zion; and none can pass through the gates of the holy city save the redeemed of the Lord. When we are looking upon the holy mountain, the King in his glory, and the inhabitants thereof, we are not looking away off through unmeasured distance, into the heaven of heavens, or into some located spot, but right in the hearts of the people saved by the Lord. We by faith discern the new Jerusalem, the church of Christ, our beloved Zion. The Beloved in the song asks the question, "What will ye see in the shulamite?" And with a perfect knowledge of all that is required to make up the christian character, the pilgrim of Zion, he follows the question with the answer, "As it were the company of two armies." We do not look for a company of saints in order to see the fulfillment of this similitude, but in each individual child of God we behold "the company of two armies." And he who is an inhabitant of Zion realizes in his daily experience the constant warfare that is waging between these opposing forces. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other." There never has been a truce between them. Let us now view these two contending armies, as their forces are gathered in martial array, and set one against the other, each arrayed in the habiliments of his own country. One army is under the leadership of "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," while the other is commanded by the Lord of life and of glory, the spirit of whom worketh righteousness and peace in the Holy Ghost. The power of death has been given to the one, the power of an endless life to the other. The evil workings of the flesh (all of which are sin) are the weapons of warfare under the banner of the dark prince, and many are the devices by which the poor pilgrim is laid in the dust. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like." All these are encamped without the walls of Zion. Now let us glance at the paraphernalia with which the army of the Captain of our salvation goeth to the battle. "Having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate

PROVE YOUR OWN SELVES.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I see you are often asked for your views on portions of the word. Will you be kind enough when convenient to give your views on 2 Corinthians xiii. 5? Your compliance will oblige one who desires to know the truth by faith, and to be found walking in the footsteps of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Your brother, I humbly hope, in the Lord,

REPLY.

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"—2 Cor. xiii. 5.

The admonition to which our esteemed brother calls attention is one which can never cease to be important to the disciples of our Lord Jesus. Although directly addressed to the church of God at Corinth, with all the saints in all Achaia, yet the same characters in all ages and in all locations are equally interested in the instruction given. For the benefit of believers to the end of time the inspired record has been given as the treasury in which the man of God is perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Not only is the letter of the Bible to be received as the infallible testimony of God, but every circumstance by which that expression of truth was called forth, must also be considered as the divine explanation of the literal text. In adapting these immutable instructions to the condition of the saints in all succeeding ages, the wisdom of God provided that there must be an occasion in the apostolic day for such decisions to be written as should cover all the varied circumstances through which the church must pass while time shall continue. To human comprehension it is unaccountable that there could be need for such severe reproofs and rebukes to be administered to those saints who had the immediate instruction of inspired apostles. It almost arouses a feeling of impatience to find them so ready to depart from the pathway of obedience even while the words of their infallible instructors were yet sounding in their ears. But while amazed at their tendency to disregard the instructions received from the appointed teachers whom they had known as the apostles of Jesus, it is well to consider how we have profited by their departures from the path of obedience. If they had never needed reproof, then we might well despair when realizing our own constant need of those rebukes with which the Lord doth correct man for iniquity. Without their folly and carnality there would have been no occasion for the admonitions which are our only safe guide in endeavoring to be followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Not only should we be thus left without instruction to direct our footsteps, but the adversary might well assail our hope on the ground that we could find no pattern in the experience of the apostolic churches for our encouragement. Thus the very sins of the saints who are given for our example, are made to serve the purpose of our Lord in the strengthening and support of the poor and tried followers of God in all subsequent ages.

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." Let it not be forgotten that this direction is given exclusively to those whom the apostle addresses as saints. He does not propose to those who have not the love of God, that they shall institute an examination in order to obtain evidence that they are in the faith. Neither does he present any argument by which to convince unbelievers that they ought to be in the faith. The only point to be considered in the examination enjoined is, "whether ye be in the faith." This is an individual examination which each of the saints is directed to institute in his own heart. It does not so much as authorize an examination of one another among themselves in order to ascertain whether their brethren are in the faith. When they are engaged in this examination in the spirit in which it is enjoined in our text, the saints never have any thought or time to give to the consideration of the case of any one else. Each one is alone, standing before the judgment seat of Christ, where each must give account of himself to God.—Rom. xiv. 10-12.

In this self-examination there is but one point to be determined. The question of your worthiness is not to be considered. The accuser may affright the trembling sinner by presenting the dark account entered against him in the record of conscience, so that he is ready to faint and give up all hope; but this is not the matter to be examined. Seeking in himself for merit, the apostle could find no good thing. It is only to settle the question whether ye be in the faith, that this serious investigation is to be directed. In order to correctly ascertain the answer to the very important question involved in this examination, it is necessary to understand what is "the faith." This cannot be more concisely stated than in the language of Paul, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."—1 Tim. i. 15. When the trembling saint is ready to perish in the cruel temptation of the adversary, it is a full deliverance and victory for him when the Comforter takes and shows unto him this glorious truth of his Redeemer. Then he is in the faith, and already he has the victory; "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John v. 4. There can be no hope of attaining the mastery over the strong array of enemies which beset the pathway of the saints except as they are in the faith. If they would take refuge in the strength of reason, or in their own righteousness, their enemies are always too strong for them in such vain shelter. Only in the defence of the impregnable shield of faith can they ever hope to obtain the mastery over every adversary. Not even the fiery darts of the wicked can penetrate this heavenly shield. Under its protection they shall be able to quench all those terrible darts. When those fiery assaults come upon the saints while trusting in their own strength for protection, they are sorely wounded, and learn by bitter experience that "They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy." Yet the Captain of their salvation is always present for their deliverance when refuge has failed them. They do indeed find trouble and sorrow; but their life is hid with Christ in God, so that it cannot be touched by any weapon that is formed against them that trust in him. In this omnipotent faith of God the saints can never fail; therefore, it is of vital importance to them to be grounded and settled in the faith, and not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which they have heard. Well may it be a matter of earnest examination with every believer to know whether he is in this precious faith. Hence follows the direction, to which it is indispensably essential that every one should give earnest attention and implicit obedience.

"Prove your own selves." This commandment can be obeyed only by an honest comparison of the ground of our confidence with the standard of truth as given by the pen of those princes who rule in judgment by the appointment of the King in Zion. Certainly there could be no proving of ourselves, or of anything, without an established test of righteousness to which must be conformed everything which is proved. The adversary is ever ready to present for our use in proving ourselves, and in examining ourselves, the law of Moses, with all the terrors of the old Sinai covenant; and when the awful thunder of divine wrath shakes that mountain, the watchful enemy claims that our hope is a vain delusion, and that we are not in the faith. But the grace of God brings us salvation from this miserable condemnation. When the faith of Jesus Christ shines in our heart we see Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness to every one who believes in him. Therefore we are no more under the law of sin and death, but are under the new covenant of grace; and the righteousness by which we are justified freely through that grace must be found in Christ Jesus, in whom all his saints are complete. In him every one of them is holy and without blame before God in love. This is the faith of God. Is this your ground of hope? Have you any other dependence? If you are not trusting in the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, where is your hope? With these questions the believer may most assuredly prove himself. While resting confidently in the belief of this truth no unbelieving doubts can find an entrance to disturb your peace. If you are seeking comfort in works which you have done, then the enemy has captivated you in his deceitful snare, and you are not "in the faith." Under such bondage you are beguiled of your reward, and instead of resting in the finished salvation of God in Christ Jesus, you are laboring as if still under bondage to the law of sin and death. While struggling in this hopeless servitude you are not in the enjoyment of the liberty wherewith Christ has made free all those who are redeemed from death by his perfect offering of himself once in the end of that legal world for all his own sheep. This is the faith in which every one who believes does enter into rest. The word "prove" in the text signifies "try" or "test," and is but a more emphatic repetition of the admonition "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith."

"Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" To the natural mind it seems consistent that where the immaculate Christ of God abides there surely can be no room for any sinful thought, much less for any earthly or corrupt desire. Hence, when the weak believer finds in his heart all the vile affections which originate in the depravity of rebellious nature, he is ready to yield to the suggestion that his hope is vain, and that he is still under the curse of God, which abides upon as many as are of the works of the law. For the correction of this serious mistake, the apostle was moved to direct the attention of the saints to their own experience. Thus, there is in every sinner who has been brought to that knowledge of God which is eternal life, the perpetual and abiding witness called by Paul, "Christ in you the hope of glory." Very often, under deep distress on account of their own unworthiness, the saints are forced to complain that in themselves there is no mark by which they can be justified in claiming the name of Jesus as their refuge. Yet they have to confess with the sweet singer of Israel, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." It has always been when we felt that we were cut off from all hope, and just ready to perish, that the Lord Jesus has appeared for our salvation. In this way every saint must be qualified to bear witness to the faithfulness and goodness of the Lord. Only as Jesus Christ is in them can they have the knowledge of their utter helplessness in themselves. And, on the other hand, none can have the manifestation of Jesus Christ in them without seeing all their own righteousness as abominable uncleanness and as filthy rags. If this light has shined in the heart of any sinner, it is conclusive testimony that Jesus Christ is in him; and where he has thus manifested himself, there is the life which identifies its recipient as an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ. This is not a mere theory which the saints have learned by tradition received from their fathers. Every one has this knowledge in his own self. Yet while it is positive knowledge to each of them, it is only by faith that it is known. Their reason can no more receive this knowledge than can the natural mind of the most benighted heathen. It is written, "The just shall live by faith."—Gal. iii. 11. The constant warfare in every believer results from the wide difference between the testimony of reason and the knowledge of the truth as revealed through that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit of Christ in him.

Many of the tried saints have been troubled in consideration of the closing words of this text. Unbelief has perverted the words, "except ye be reprobates," as implying that some of those to whom the apostle was writing might yet prove to be reprobates. Even the suggestion of this possibility is sufficient to destroy the comfort of every one who mourns his own sinfulness. If of all the myriads who hope in the grace of God, but one is left as a reprobate, without the right to trust in Jesus for the remission of his sins, then every quickened sinner must at once confess himself that one; for each feels himself the very chief of sinners, and regards his own salvation as the crowning miracle in the manifestation of grace for the forgiveness of sins. But the true interpretation of these words involves no such fearful possibility for the saints to whom this letter is addressed. While it is true indeed that Jesus Christ does not dwell in those who are reprobates, it is not to be understood that any lover of God and his truth may ever be included among such reprobates. Where Jesus Christ is in any sinner, his presence is manifest in the hunger and thirst after righteousness which marks those who are blessed of our Lord Jesus. This is very different from that proud assurance which moved the Pharisee to boast of his own righteousness. He certainly did not hunger and thirst after that righteousness of which he boasted. On the contrary, he despised the publican whose conscious destitution of merit forbade him even to come near to the sacred temple of God. The Pharisee was reprobate, or rejected, as having no knowledge of his need of any better righteousness than what he could secure by his own works. Since he was well satisfied with his own character he had no need of the indwelling Spirit of Christ. Such is the character designated in our text as "reprobates." That name cannot apply to any sinner who feels his need of Christ. If such reprobates are numbered among the saints in the visibly organized church, they are never troubled in regard to their condition as guilty sinners before God. There can be no mistake in the case of one who is grieved on account of his own corruption and sinfulness. Only the light of the knowledge of God can reveal this true condition of a lost sinner. Every one who has this knowledge is thereby marked as a vessel of mercy ordained unto salvation; and this is the infallible evidence that Jesus Christ is in such a mourner.

That our dear brother may experience the comfort of this precious evidence of Jesus Christ as abiding in himself, and evermore be enabled to glorify God in his body and in his spirit by walking in the way of holiness, is our prayer on his behalf. Surely there must be strong consolation for all who long for the salvation of God, when they know that none but the children of God ever can feel that heavenly longing to dwell in the presence of their Redeemer.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; praying always," &c. When the tired and footsore soldier of the cross has followed his Captain through many sieges, scarred and bruised with the battle axes of his enemy, coming off victorious in the strength of grace, the vanquished foe gone beyond sight or hearing, he is then favored to look upon Zion, to enter within its gates, and what a place of peace and rest is there! truly a quiet habitation; for whosoever is in Zion, is in the presence of its King; and in his presence is fullness of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures for evermore. How sweetly then the name of Zion, in rich sounds, falls upon his ear. It is heavenly music. The name of Zion calls to his remembrance bygone days. It tells him in dulcet tones how tribulation hath wrought patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope is replaced by a momentary glad assurance that Zion is his restful, happy home, that his Redeemer liveth, and now sitteth at the right hand of God, making intercession for all his saints.

GIRARDVILLE, Pa., March 11, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The following verses were sent me for sister Mary Parker. I know she will be willing to share them with her kindred in Christ, and if inserted in the SIGNS they may come with soothing to many another who is longing for rest, and waiting for the dawn of an eternal day. The selection is by one who has been comforted by the words of our afflicted sister, and in her declining years has been sweetly fed by the fruit of sister Mary's pen. Truly she is loved by many, and will never be forgotten on her bed of languishing.

"I'm kneeling at the threshold,
Weary, faint and sore,
Waiting for the dawning,
For the opening of the door;
Waiting till the Master
Shall bid me rise and come
To the glory of his presence,
To the gladness of his home.

"A weary path I've traveled,
Through darkness, storm and strife,
Bearing many a burden,
Struggling for my life.
But now the morn is breaking,
My toil will soon be o'er;
I'm kneeling at the threshold,
My hand is on the door.

"Methinks I hear the voices
Of the blessed as they stand
Singing in the sunshine
Of the far-off sinless land.
O would that I were with them,
Amid the shining throng,
Mingling in their worship,
Joining in their song.

"The friends that started with me
Have entered long ago;

One by one they left me
Struggling with the foe.
Their pilgrimage was shorter,
Their triumph sooner won;
And heaven will receive me
When all my toil is done.

"With them the blessed angels,
That know no grief nor sin;
I see them by the portals,
And I long to enter in.
O Lord, I wait thy bidding,
Thy time and ways are best;
But I'm wasted, worn and weary;
O Father, bid me rest."

With your permission I will add to this an extract from the last letter I have received from our beloved sister. Her condition has been so unusually severe of late that she could write but little, and grieves that she is not able to reply to the many dear friends whose expressions of love and sympathy she appreciates so much.

Your sister,

BESSIE DURAND.

MY DEAR SISTER:—If I could only feel sweetly assured that I am nearing the glad and glorious end of this transitory, painful life, to enter upon a blissful immortality beyond the silent crossing, in the fair city of gold, where is the pure river of the water of life, there to dwell with my precious, blessed Savior world without end, how easily could I wait, and how peaceful and submissive I would be until the Master comes to call me home. But O! the journey seems so long, the distress and pain so hard to bear, and I fear I am not so patient as I ought to be. How good is the dear Lord, how pitiful and tender of mercy, notwithstanding all my rebellion, bitter complaints, and impatience to be freed from this body of sin and pain. Oftentimes when I seem ready to sink with misery, pain and despair, when all human help avails nothing, and when my own strength and power to endure give way, then it is that Jesus comes to me, speaks peace to my soul, comforts and eases me, like a gentle mother would soothe a poor, sick child; and O how sweet it is to leave off trying to help myself, to feel that Jesus, the mighty One, is my helper, that he envelops me with the wings of his love, and that underneath are the everlasting arms. Infinitely more efficient is this panacea, this sweet balm in Gilead, to even my pain-racked body, than all the skill and medicine of my earthly physicians. I feel that I may just as well send them all away; they do me no good. If I could but lay hold upon Jesus at all times, at all times realize that "vain is the help of man," how much better could I move onward to the final goal. "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Pray for me, my dear sister.

I have felt so weak and lonely the past months, and so many letters are due from me; but I can only write now and then a little, and at long intervals. How my heart goes out to you and sister Hobbs, dear Elder and sister Jenkins, and all the dear saints who worship with you at Middletown this coming Sunday. Do please remember your poor, suffering, sinful sister on her couch of pain, as you all meet together and hear the glorious sound of the gospel. What good news and glad tidings it would be to my hungry soul could I listen to and drink from the golden cup of the divine sanctuary. Even the name of Jesus would be sweet music to me; and to meet face to face among the assembly of the saints would be almost heaven indeed.

In deep christian fellowship and love, your afflicted sister,

MARY PARKER.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 29, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. I feel that I want to speak of the goodness and mercy of the Lord to me through this closing year. Although I have often felt to rebel against providence in my affliction, yet at last I have had to say, Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life.

"His mercy never knows a bound,
And be his name adored."

All glory be to the Lord. Of late my mind has been much on his mercy. Surely had it not been for his mercy I would have been consumed ere this.

"Without his sweet mercy I could not live here; Sin soon would reduce me to utter despair."

I often have to weep to the praise of the mercy I find. I do feel that of all creatures I should be the most thankful, one so vile as I, so limited in understanding of divine things: I sometimes think I desire to be thankful. There seems to be a warfare between the flesh and Spirit, which hinders our joy and communion with our heavenly Father, who is so lovely, leading us daily while in this low ground of sorrow and disappointment. During this closing year many loved ones have been called home to rest, as we trust, from all the toils, cares and strife which attend this mortal state. Our dear sister Ruth Holcomb has left us for a higher and better world than this, we have no doubt. She was a bright pattern of christian life. Why am I spared and others taken? No doubt there is a purpose in it; for we are told, "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." Our bounds are set, and we cannot pass them. I often find myself singing the hymn,

"Time! what an empty vapor 'tis;
Our days, how swift they are," &c.

Sometimes in my wakeful hours at night I hold sweet communion with my heavenly Friend, when none but he is near. But I feel myself to be a poor sinner, and if ever saved it will be by grace alone, all of the Lord from first to last.

"Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

We, as a church, are at peace, and our dear pastor preaches a finished salvation, Christ and him crucified, which is food to the hungry soul. It seems of late that I have been made to pass through deep waters; but we are told in the word that through much tribulation we must follow our Lord. He never puts more upon us than we are able to bear. He knows our feeble frame. He knows what is best, and works his righteous will.

"Affliction is a stormy deep,
Where wave resounds to wave;
While o'er my heart the billows roll,
I know the Lord can save."

This passage of Scripture has been on my mind for some time, "He knoweth the way that I take." Yes, he knows our ways, knows our hearts, knows our every motive, his all-seeing eye is ever watching us, for he neither slumbers nor sleeps. O that we might praise him more and serve him better. But I am so prone to wander, and am so cold and lifeless, and often feel to say,

"Is there ambition in my heart?
Search, gracious God, and see;
And turn each cursed idol out
That dares to rival thee."

Dear brethren and sisters, you who have a name and place with the Lord's people, let us strive to be instant in season, out of season, and fill our places at the appointed times for worship, and not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is. Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith.

I have not written what I thought to write at the beginning, but just as it has been given me. A happy new year to all lovers of the truth. In hope of life eternal,

R. F. HART.

MASON CITY, Iowa, Jan. 30, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The time is past when I ought to have sent on my remittance for the SIGNS. Frost and dry weather have been so disastrous to our business that this winter finds us in very close circumstances. I have been on the point of writing you to stop my paper, for I know you cannot print it without great expense; but I cannot muster courage enough to write it. We are situated so far from our meetings, and often times the weather is so cold and stormy, that myself and wife cannot attend. But the SIGNS is a constant visitor every Saturday, so that we can have a good meeting by ourselves every Sunday. For this reason, dear brethren, I hope you will still keep on sending the welcome guest, and I will forward the money as soon as possible. How I would like to speak of many of the writers who write so ably for its columns. How I would like to take each by the hand and call them brother or sister. Brother Durand's letter in the number for Jan. 24th was cheering and consoling. It came with power and demonstration of the Spirit. Brother Chick's letter on the subject of spiritual worship was sublime. There are times when it seems as though it would be adding sin for one so sinful as I am to approach the throne of grace. I have shrunk away many times with my soul breathing forth the petition that the Lord would take me unto himself and teach me his precepts that I might not err, or remove me from this world that I might not disgrace his holy sanctum.

But I must forbear. I did not think of writing so much. The worshiper of God has no worthiness of his own, neither has he anything to cover his nakedness. He has been worked to death, as it were, under the law, and his boasted power for great works is slain. But Jesus has revealed the truth to him, saying, I am your worthiness, and have stripped you of your filthy rags, and clothed you with my own spotless robe of righteousness. Then instead of standing in the corners of the streets to pray, to be seen of men, as they used to do, they enter into the closet of the heart, and say, Salvation is of the Lord.

If any of the brethren living in or about Lincoln, Nebraska, should see this, I want to say to them that I would like to correspond with them.

Brethren Beebe, I submit this to your better judgment,

Yours in hope,

A. B. LESTER.

RIDDLESBURG, Pa., Feb. 3, 1894.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—I have often thought of you since I met you at the Juniata Association, and have often thought of writing to you; and I did write my experience, with the intention of sending it to you; but when I had done so I looked it over and put it into the stove. I had a conversation with a man yesterday which has caused me constant meditation ever since, so that it seems I cannot get rid of it. This man remarked that God did not intend Adam to fall. I said that he did fall, and surely God was able to keep him from falling if it had been his will. The religious world look upon the fall of Adam with sorrow. I have often heard them so express themselves. And they often, or I may say always do, express sorrow at the suffering of Christ; and, indeed, I myself have often felt that way. But to-day I felt weary and heavy laden, and laid me down to rest, being still in deep and solemn meditation. It seemed that I fell asleep, and was in a small company of people. I was talking to one man, and he turned his back to me whenever I would talk. It seemed that he could not look at me when I was talking. It was not the man I was talking to yesterday, but a man I knew in the flesh and (I hope) in the Spirit also. I was talking about the word redeem. In order to redeem anything it must be something that was owned before the redemption. There was something so glorious to me in the thought that I was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable. I was made to rejoice in the fall of man, and also in the crucifixion of Christ. Redeemed! The word had never before seemed so glorious to me. Redeemed to what? "To an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." Upon this I awoke; but my thoughts still go on. Surely the change is a glorious one; heaven instead of Eden; Christ instead of Adam. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

With this I will stop writing; but I cannot stop thinking. Let me hear something from you.

Yours in hope,

WILLIAM MELLOTT.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah E. Matthews, of Logan, N. Y., March 14th, 1894, by Elder Charles Bogardus, Mr. Anson C. Dewey and Mrs. Alletta A. Erway, both of Schuyler Co., N. Y.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Near Petersburg, Kent Co., Del., on Thursday evening, March 1st, 1894, Lola Meredith, infant daughter of A. F. and Annie G. Meredith, and granddaughter of Peter Meredith.

God saw fit, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, to take her unto himself. She was not quite five months old. Although her life was short, it was full of suffering and pain. May its parents and three sisters feel that it is all for the best, as it has been taken from all the trials and temptations of this sinful world. May they be made to realize that "He doeth all things well."

ANNIE MEREDITH.

SISTER Elnora Rollison was born in Muskingum Co., Ohio, April 24th, 1817, and departed this life in Columbus, Franklin Co., Ohio, Feb. 25th, 1893, aged nearly 77 years.

She was united in marriage to Harvy Heskett on Oct. 13th, 1836, and to this union were born five sons and four daughters, one of whom has gone to the land of the blessed. She with her husband united with the Windsor Old School Baptist Church in the year 1837, and at her death was a member of the Clinton Church, near Columbus. She was a faithful member fifty-seven years, and was one that stood for the old landmarks of our faith and order. She was a kind mother and neighbor, and her walk is worthy of comment, and has been noticed by many.

Her funeral was conducted by the writer, at the Clinton church-house, where many came to pay their tribute of respect to the departed.

R. W. PETERS.

DIED—At his home in Seward, N. Y., Nov. 25th, 1893, George W. Strobeck, aged 57 years and 9 months.

He was a great sufferer for about one year with Bright's disease, but was very patient, never murmuring. Everything his friends did for him was appreciated, and he would say, "All right." He was not a member of the church, but loved to hear the Old Baptists preach. During his sickness he spoke of having met with a change, and said he was willing and ready to die. His request was to have Elder Bundy preach at his funeral; but he, being away at the time, could not reach here.

He leaves his wife, sister Martha Strobeck, to mourn her loss, besides a number of brothers, sisters and friends. In life he was very generous, a kind neighbor, always cheerful, having a kind word for every one. Seemingly a light cloud hung over him. His voice we will hear no more; but he is only gone a little before us, and we feel to say, God does all things well.

A MOURNER.

DIED—Near Rosemont, Hunterdon Co., N. J., Jan. 30th, 1894, our mother, Mrs. Eliza Kugler, widow of Samuel R. Kugler, in her 79th year.

She was a member of the Old School Baptist Church at Locktown, N. J., and was a lover of the truth. She had been a reader of the SIGNS for many years, and for the last five or six years it contained nearly all the preaching she heard. She was sick about two weeks with "La Grippe." She was willing to go, and bore her sufferings without a murmur. She was very childlike, and everything was right with her, and often said we were so good to her. At times she could not speak, but when she did she spoke of the precious Savior, and in her last breath tried to praise the Lord.

Our dear mother is gone, and it was hard for us to part with her; but God knows best, and he doeth all things right. Elder Bundy preached a comforting sermon to a large assembly of relatives and friends.

H. RISLER.

DIED—At his home in Tyre, Seneca Co., N. Y., Jan. 2d, 1894, David S. Odell, aged 66 years, 4 months and 2 days.

He was a member of the Baptist Church before the division. Twenty-eight years ago he united with the Old School Baptist Church at Clyde, Wayne Co., N. Y., of which Elder Brown was pastor. At the time of his death his membership was with the May's Mill Church. He lived quite a distance from the place of meeting, but he attended as often as possible, and his presence in the meetings will be missed by the little church at May's Mill. He leaves a wife, two sons, one daughter and several grandchildren, besides his brethren and sisters in the church, to mourn their loss.

At his funeral on Jan. 4th I spoke from these words, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory."

CHARLES BOGARDUS.

WHITE CHURCH, N. Y.

DIED—On the morning of Feb. 14th, 1894, at her residence in Lexington, Greene Co., N. Y., sister Julia Hogaboom, aged 82 years and 5 months.

She was the wife of the late Cornelius Hogaboom, and was baptized by Elder Samuel More, twenty-six years ago, in the fellowship of the Lexington Old School Baptist Church. She was a faithful and devoted christian, and her seat was seldom vacant until the last year of her life, being injured by a fall, from which she suffered much. Though feeble, she was brought to the meeting-house one day during the session of the Lexington Association, held at Lexington in September last. Truly a mother in Israel is gone from among us to that heavenly rest prepared for all them that trust in the living God, and to receive that crown of righteousness prepared for all them that love his appearing.

She leaves one daughter, the only child, Mrs. Douglass, and one grandchild, to mourn their loss, but not as those who have no hope. She will be greatly missed by the church and neighborhood. The writer tried to speak to the comfort of the afflicted from Philippians i. 21: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

R. W. SANFORD.

DIED—At the home of her daughter, sister Sarah Newton, in Tonica, Ill., Dec. 23d, 1893, sister Mary Witty, aged 79 years, 5 months and 6 days.

Sister Witty was born in Kentucky, July 17th, 1814. When a young girl she moved with her parents to Park Co., Ind., and was there married to Lawson Seybold, Oct. 25th, 1832. Three daughters were born to this marriage. About 1838 she joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Greenbush, Ill. On Feb. 8th, 1842, her husband died in Knox Co., Ill., whither they had moved from Indiana. In 1850 she was married to Jacob Witty, and to this marriage were born two sons. Two daughters and one son are left to mourn their loss, which we believe is her eternal gain; for we sorrow not as those without hope.

Sister Witty was much afflicted for several years. Her last sickness was "La Grippe," from which she gradually grew weaker until called home. She was one that never left us in doubt in regard to her standing, for her conversation was in heaven. She seemed to forget the things which are behind, and to reach forward to the things which are before. She was particularly fond of conversation on the Scriptures, and would always have a text ready. But her race is run; she has filled her appointed days. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. Asleep in Jesus! She shall awake in his likeness.

A short service was held at the house, conducted by Elder T. Gill and the writer.

JOHN DOWNEY.

WENONA, Ill., March 7, 1894.

On Thursday, Feb. 22d, at the family residence, near Eagle, in Aldborough, Ontario, Miss Flora B. McColl, daughter of the late Duncan S. McColl, sank peacefully into the sleep of everlasting repose, after severe suffering from quick consumption, in the 17th year of her age.

Her many amiable traits of disposition had very strongly bound her to the hearts of all who were favored to associate with her; and the heartfelt sorrow of her widowed mother and the immediate family can scarcely exceed the sincere grief of her numerous companions and fellow-students in the Chatham High School, where she had made remarkable progress in her studies. Although she had made no public profession of hope in Christ, yet her unselfish devotion to the comfort of others, and her cheerful composure in the inevitable presence of death, with the earnest interest she had long manifested in the subject of salvation by grace, afford abundant assurance to her surviving friends that she sleeps in Jesus.

After preaching at the house by Elder Pollard, the emaciated body of the dear one was laid in the family cemetery, beside the grave of her noble father, who had been released from the cares of earth about four years ago.

May the sorrowing ones be comforted by the loving-kindness of that God who alone can minister consolation to every mourner; and may each of the bereaved family by grace be reconciled to say, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."—ED.

DIED—At the family residence near Frederica, Del., Jan. 1st, 1894, Miss Beatrice Frazier, aged 22 years, 10 months and 12 days.

She was the daughter of Thomas E. and Mary Ann Frazier, and of the congregation at Cow Marsh. Her mother was for many years a faithful member there, as was also her grandmother. The grandparents on the mother's side were members in Sussex, the mother being of the Laws family. The fairest flowers seem soonest to fade. Just blooming into womanhood, well educated, and rather unusually bright and intelligent, her health began to fail more than a year before her death, and from that on it was a scene of patient but continuous suffering. She manifested much seriousness before her affliction commenced, and attended our meetings when she could, frequently speaking of the good preaching she had heard, and desiring even to the last to hear, as she expressed it, a good gospel sermon once more. It was evidently a great satisfaction to her to have the brethren call and converse with her of the dealings of the Lord with his people. Why must it be so? Why should she not have remained with us, to have made and adorned a profession of faith in Christ? Amiable and affectionate, she lived to be loved by every one that knew her, and was called away to leave a grief-stricken family.

I tried to find consolation for the afflicted friends from the contemplation of the following sentence, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit."

E. RITTENHOUSE.

DIED—At her late home with her daughter and son-in-law, Hiram Bogart and wife, near Prophetstown, Whiteside Co., Ill., on the morning of Feb. 23d, 1894, Mrs. Delilah Winchell, aged 82 years, 3 months and 14 days.

The immediate cause of her death was a fall which occurred in her room on Feb. 10th. To all outward appearances she was on the road to recovery, when quite suddenly, without any previous warning, and without a struggle, she passed peacefully away. At her request the writer was sent for, and although more than a hundred miles from home in an opposite direction, arrived in time to attend the funeral, which was quite largely attended on Sunday.

Sister Winchell's maiden name was Vanvelsan. I have often heard her speak of a time when the late Elder Gilbert Beebe lived with her father's family in the city of New York when a young man, and that her father (also a Baptist minister) married and baptized him; and in turn she was baptized and married to her first husband, Stephen Keator, by Elder Beebe. This first marriage occurred on Dec. 30th, 1830. The fruits of this alliance were two sons and three daughters, one daughter having preceded her to the land of rest, Mr. Keator having died in 1861. She was married a second time in 1867 to Lemuel P. Winchell, who died in 1879, leaving her to fight single-handed the battle of life. She was wonderfully blessed in the possession of a most amiable disposition, although uncompromising in her convictions of the doctrinal truths of the Bible, as held by the Old School Baptists. She had the happy faculty of making friends of all with whom she came in contact. She was a bright and shining light, and her life was well worthy of emulation. She united with the Olive Church, in Ulster Co., N. Y., in early life, and never changed her membership.

She leaves two sons, two daughters, eleven grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren, together with many brethren, sisters and friends, to mourn, all of them having sweet assurance that she fully realized God's promise that

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove
My sovereign, eternal unchangeable love;

And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

She was a life-long friend of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and a constant reader from the day it was founded until the day of her death.

Your brother in hope,

SMITH KETCHUM.

ELMWOOD, Ill., March 4, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed I forward you for publication an obituary sent me by sister Waddy, which will speak for itself. I will only add that I had long known our deceased sister, and have enjoyed many visits with her. Her delight was truly in the law of the Lord. The theme of the sovereignty of God was very precious to her. I attended the funeral services, and tried to speak of the glory of that gospel which proclaims salvation for sinners.

I remain your brother in hope of life eternal,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., March 19, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—According to promise I will now try to give you some of the particulars of the sickness and death of our dear sister Burrows, which occurred on Jan. 5th, 1894, at the age of about 80 years.

She was baptized by Elder Obadiah Brown when about sixteen years of age. She united with us some twenty years ago or more by relation of experience. She was taken ill on Christmas Day. I went to see her once or twice a day during her illness. On New Year's Day, while I was there, she raised her hands toward heaven, evidently in prayer. She could not see to read, but would repeat portion after portion of the Scriptures. One day she repeated the hymn, "Alas! and did my Savior bleed?" &c. O how she loved to dwell upon heavenly things. They were her meat and drink. She would often say, "Can it be possible that the great God can notice such a worm as I am?" O how she could contend for the faith of God's elect. How I miss her, for I have spent so many precious hours with her; but I cannot wish her back. She was a great sufferer, and would often say she wanted to go home and be at rest. Her prayer was, "O my blessed Savior, banish all hatred, envy, malice and heresy from me." Thus she pleaded for mercy from the eternal throne. A friend asked her if she would like her to read to her. She answered, "If you read, please turn to the tenth chapter of John." Being surrounded by other professors, she was often asked by them who the children of God are. She would answer by saying, "All who are led by the Spirit of God are the sons of God." She possessed a great knowledge of the Bible. A little place at the feet of Jesus was all she craved. I could write and tell very many things, but must forbear.

Now, dear brother, do as you think best with this. I am, I hope, your sister in hope of a better home, where

"Sickness, sorrow, pain and death

Are felt and feared no more."

Affectionately,

HENRIETTA WADDY.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BATAVIA, N. Y., March 18, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE, AND ALL THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH:—By the mercy of God I have been given strength to write the things unto you that I must.

On the second Sunday in December last I was helped to tell my experience to the members of the church at White Church, N. Y., and was received; and on the day before Christmas I was baptized by Elder Charles Bogardus. I was asked several times to write my experience for the SIGNS, and after reading the editorial at the beginning of the year (January 3d) I felt that perhaps it was right that I should. I started, and wrote a portion, and then was brought to a stop. I could see plainly that it was impossible for me to proceed, so I laid the writing away, and concluded if I were ever to finish it I should be made to know it. Soon afterward I had fears and doubts that greatly disturbed me, and I prayed to God to remove them if it were his will, and give me wisdom and strength concerning the things of his kingdom; and while I was sick for more than a month afterward God was very gracious to me, and I was allowed to remain in green pastures and beside still waters for a time, and many portions of Scripture came clear to my mind while reading them. After I recovered I was overtaken on Sunday, March 11th, by a realizing sense of the awful days that are upon us, and during almost the entire week I was in utter misery and trouble. Toward the end of the week it was made very plain to me, in the daytime, while I was at work, that we were living in the days that Christ told his disciples to flee to the mountains. For a time I was stunned and faint; for although I had heard Old School Baptists say that we were living in the last days, and believed it, yet I had not thought the end to be so near, even at the very doors. All this was given me at different times as I was able to bear it, for I was greatly troubled. Then it was made known to me that I should write this for the SIGNS. I could not be reconciled to this at first, even though I thoroughly believed it, and knew it was God's own work; for I knew myself to be a mere babe regarding these matters, and wondered who would believe if I should write. Then these words came to me, "Noah and his family believed." I still drew back, for I seemed to see naught but ridicule ahead for me, and I was in the depths of distress for one day and one night. I was impressed with the idea that I must write it, and at once. Then at last, in desperation, I prayed for strength, and wrote, and my mind was eased. If all things seem the same to us yet for a short season, let us not be deceived, but pray to God that we may walk soberly and steadfastly as beseemeth us, and pray for strength and courage to do his will; for without him we can do nothing. Those of us who are out of the world are not to enter in, and are to pray that we enter not into temptation. Those who yet remain in Babylon the fourth verse of the eighteenth chapter of Revelation warns, "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." "The street shall be built again [in Jerusalem], and the wall, even in troublous times."—Daniel ix. 25.

It came to me this week also how much Old School Baptist experience in general, and my own in particular, is a type of the way the last days will come upon us; that is, the different ways it will come upon the natural and the spiritual man, or the two in warfare. I say my own experience in particular, because I seem to have been forgiven much more than any of whom I have ever read; therefore it would seem the better type. I do feel that I have been obstinate, proud, self-willed and sinful beyond hope of pardon; so I do have cause to praise God always in my heart, even as his people will praise him when time shall be no more.

When I was quite young a dear Old School Baptist sister of my parents visited at our home, and made some remarks about the end of the world which greatly frightened me. As I asked no questions about the subject it was never mentioned to me, and no doubt I was considered too young to understand the conversation; but I gathered several ideas that were new to me, and for some time afterward I lived in much fear, and had many grave doubts about the matter. These were the first serious thoughts of a religious nature that ever came to me; but as I grew older, and all things went on the same as ever, they only came to me at odd times. I was early taught to treat Old School Baptists with respect and kindness; and I did indeed think them the excellent of the earth then, because my parents seemed to love them so well. I thought, too, that I would surely be an Old School Baptist if I lived to be old enough.

During my thirteenth year I became aware how the world regarded Old School Baptists. At the public exercises of the High School that year a young man took it upon himself to imitate (as he said) a "Hard-Shell" Baptist preacher. His appearance was seedy; and he had added as ornaments a large red handkerchief, steel-bowed glasses and a white wig. He took for his text these words, "And he played on a harp of a thousand strings, the spirits of just men made perfect." He spoke through his nose in a sing-song tone, and made himself generally awkward and repulsive; but as the Principal, and to all appearances the entire audience, seemed convulsed with laughter, I concluded that it was some great joke, although I thought religion of whatever sort a poor subject for ridicule. On my way home I was told that there was the sort of religion my parents believed. I fear I gave a somewhat heated reply, for I was very incredulous. When I saw my father (B. F. Hamilton) I asked him if Old School Baptists were ever called "Hard-Shell" Baptists. He smiled, and replied, "Yes, that is one name by which they are known." I was convinced then; but as I could stand many things better than I could ridicule, it was a very hard blow to me. I hardly know just how much influence the circumstance may have had upon my intervening years, but I am not trying to justify myself in the least; for I do know that whatever the influence was, I have been walking in the path predestinated for me to walk in by God before the foundation of the world. However, from that time I began to secretly despise these poor, afflicted people. As we lived quite a distance from them or their meetings, their visits to us were naturally few and far between. I wondered much if my parents really did take the comfort that they appeared to in their presence. As many letters came to our home from Old School Baptists who lived in different parts of the United States, it occurred to me at one time that I might obtain valuable hints about the geography of our land from them, as well as matters of interest regarding their families. With these ends in view I persevered for some time. One part of the country might have been precisely like another for all I ever learned to the contrary from their letters; and beyond the common forms used in writing to close with, scarcely anything was ever said about the family. On the contrary, they were filled with praises of the great goodness and mercy of God, and with the writers' great sorrows, doubts, fears and troubles of all kinds. I thought that God was not as good to them as he was to other people, as their own letters plainly showed, and I concluded that it was not worth while to waste my time over them.

A few years later, at the earnest wish of my parents, I visited at White Church, N. Y., at the time when Elder Charles Bogardus was ordained. There were many Old School Baptists present, and they all treated me with great kindness, as I well remember; but I was pleased to take a great dislike to them all, just because they were Old School Baptists. Though I did not know it then, I was with my best friends; and though I was well-pleased with myself at that time, I was not fit to associate with those good people. I thought they seemed so deceptive; for they told of their awful sins, afflictions and troubles, and then praised God for his wonderful goodness to them. But what looked to be most singular and dreadful about them was that they did not appear to have any reason to believe they were going to be saved. They said "if they were saved it was by the grace of God," and "they hoped they were saved," and all such things, until I was thoroughly disgusted. When I reached home I told my mother that I hoped neither she nor my father would ever ask me to go there again, for I never should go.

Soon after this I began to grow very much ashamed of my parents' religion. When strangers asked me to what denomination they belonged I merely replied "Baptist," leaving out the "Old School" for policy's sake and very shame. My conscience troubled me on these occasions so much, and as Peter was ever brought to my mind, I always resolved never to answer so again. When put to the test, however, I was nearly always found wanting, and was not brave.

The SIGNS OF THE TIMES I have considered my chief enemy, because it was ever around as a witness of those people that I tried so hard to keep out of my mind. The time is not long past (three years, perhaps) since I used to place it carefully many times at the bottom of the pile of papers on the centre-table, lest some chance caller or guest of the family might pick it up and ask unpleasant questions. I never read it then, because I understood nothing of it, nor did I care to understand it. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14.

About this time I had convictions that my parents had been deluded. To think of their belonging to a people who did not know whether they were saved or not was awful to think of, and I earnestly hoped they would see their mistake. Out of respect to their wishes I never went to Sunday School more than three or four times in my life; and then I confess that I was somewhat surprised at the frivolous conversation and the jokes that went around, as well as the very poor lessons that were recited. Neither have I been to any of the so-called churches but few times, as I am glad to say now. I had times of feeling quite bad over my isolation, for I seemed to be counted out of picnics, concerts, and all attending pleasures, besides receiving many hard hits from the righteous people of the world. I had one consolation, however, for I began to compare my conversation and actions with those of my associates; and I came to think that I was very good indeed, and that one did not need to be a regular attendant at church or Sunday School in order to live a good moral life. I became very self-righteous in consequence. I have read the Bible much from my childhood, and as I believe now, for three reasons. In the first place, to please my parents. Then, after a time, I think I read it because I thought I was good in the degree that I read. But now because it is one of the greatest comforts I have.

During the fall of 1890 I was gradually withdrawn from the world by ill health, and was brought to think about the Old School Baptists more and more. It was a great sorrow to me, for I loved the world and the things of the world, and hated Old School Baptists and all their doings. I thought I had been living a very happy life, and it was with poor grace that I became reconciled to the change. I spent most of that winter in bed, and then I naturally thought of my condition, and had much trouble of mind as to what would become of me if I should die. I read my Bible much of the time, but could not understand it, and it troubled me. I grew more and more depressed, when one night I had a dream, by which I was shown that I would be saved. I lived on the remembrance of it for weeks. It seemed so merciful of God to make it known to me when I was so sick and miserable, and it showed that he had not forgotten me. I had always been skeptical regarding dreams as matters of importance, and had my opinions of people who did; but now I was completely changed. I seemed to know that I should be an Old School Baptist, but I did not mind then. As I grew better my pride gradually came back to me, and I reasoned that I never would have any experience, because it was made known to me that I would be saved. That looked like an evidence that I would never have anything in common with them, for they did not know, and I did. For all they had so much to say about experience, I had concluded that whenever they wished to join the church they went and made it known the same as any people did; for how else could it be? I wondered much that any one would care to join them, for I could not think of the first thing that would serve to draw me in. I felt that a person with his eyes open, as I thought mine were, who would deliberately join them was deserving of praise, and little or no pity. I could see all that my parents had given up for them, and I wondered that they could be fooled so long.

Shortly before this several of our young friends died, and that served to give me some serious thoughts regarding these things. I had been too proud to let my parents know that I cared the snap of my finger about these people anyway, but now I was bound to know just what my mother thought of it; so I asked her one day if she thought God would send those whom we called good, as the people of this world go, to everlasting punishment just because they were not Old Baptists. She looked at me a moment, and then replied, "Will not the Judge of all the earth do right?" I understood then that whatever God was pleased to do was right, and we were not to question it, and I felt that I had been answered well.

Some time in March, 1891, we were expecting company whose good opinions I thought to keep, and for the first time in my life I made my sisters promise that they would not tell what our parents believed; and hoping the rest of the family would keep still I rested easy, having no fears of myself. While there was yet time I was awakened from a sound sleep in the night by a terrible fear coming over me. I was as one dead from fear. I heard no voice, but I realized four things at once. First, how terrible, great and all-powerful was the God of heaven. Second, how like a worm of the dust I was. Third, what a fearful thing it would be to fall into the hands of the living God. Fourth, that I must tell our company that my parents were Old School Baptists. To use Paul's own words in his defense before king Agrippa, I will say that "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," hard as it was for me, but told all that was shown me that I must; even as I have to-day written all that was shown me, hard as it was for me to do it. These things were both from God, and I do know it. May we not rejoice and be exceeding glad, even though it terrify us at first?

During that summer my brothers, sisters and myself were planning to take a short trip to some pleasure resort, but God made it plain to me that we should go to May's Mill to meeting instead. To tell the truth, I was glad to go. Elder Bogardus preached to us. I have never heard Old Baptist preaching more than seven times in my life; but that meeting did me more good than them all, and I never can tell what a comfort it was to me. I felt that their eyes were upon me, however, and I resolved that I could not join the church; yet at the same time I knew that I was in the hands of God. I was relieved when we started for home; but I grieved over the matter much, for I saw no predestination in it, and only felt that I had been given a chance to join and had refused it.

I was tempted now all along to join other churches, for it did seem that the others were happy, and knew they were to be saved. It looked so much like guess-work with the Old School Baptists; yet I loved them now in spite of myself. I was turning the matter over in my mind one day, as I often did, when it did seem, in whatever way I looked at it, that the other churches must be right. Then like lightning came this verse to my mind, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."—Matt. xvi. 25. That matter never troubled me from that day, for I was convinced in a second, and cannot make too much of the comfort that it gave me. God was very gracious to me all along, and I had much to comfort me; yet I had my old nature to contend with always.

One day I was having so much trouble over my sins that I promised God I would tell the next Old School Baptist minister I saw how it was with me. Some time afterward Elder Vail was expected to stop and see us for a short visit. I suffered much then, for I felt that I must tell, or be lying to the God of heaven. As God had predestinated it otherwise, Elder Vail did not come, and I breathed again.

One night in the summer of 1893 I retired feeling the worst I ever did in my life. I saw myself the very worst wretch in the whole world, and all my evil deeds came before me. I could think of nothing good that I ever did in my life. I am the oldest of a family of eight children, and I knew that they all loved me, and that my opinions and follies must have had some weight with them. I was cut to the heart in thinking it all over, and cried myself to sleep. As soon as I awakened in the morning these things came right to my mind, and I was about to take up my trouble for the day, when like a flash came these words to me, "Let not your heart be troubled." I never could tell how glad I was; and I have not lost the sense of comfort given to me then even to this day, for the words come often to me in the same way.

About the last of August we received word that Elder Bogardus and wife would visit us. Now came my great trouble, for I felt that my time had come. I was glad, yet sorry, for I felt that I could not live much longer unless I did tell; yet how could I? Well, they came, but I kept well out of the way until their short visit was almost ended; then becoming desperate, and fearing that I should not be allowed, I went to the Elder. I smoothed matters over the best that I could, and only told the bare facts; and also that I did not know as I had been in as much trouble as some. He told me he was satisfied of the work of grace in my heart, and that he thought I would feel it my duty to be baptized at the first opportunity I had. As it is as much as my life is worth to say anything in public, I told him that I never could tell my experience. I felt rebuked and ashamed when he answered kindly, "As your day is, so will your strength be." I was glad that I had told, for I knew I had done right; yet after he was gone I felt that I had been trying to deceive him, for I had been in deep trouble, and I knew it then. This worried me much for a time, but I did not seem to see it my duty to go as yet; but about the last of October I felt that I must go soon or I could not live much longer. I could hardly eat or sleep; and then did I understand that "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."—Psalm li. 17. I had a great longing now to go to White Church, where I had said I never would go again. The last of November my brother Charles invited me to go to May's Mill with him to meeting, and I was very glad; but I felt that my last sin would have been forgiven me if I had only been permitted to go to White Church. I went with the full intention of joining the church, for I had no doubts about their receiving me, as I was sure they would see it all to be the work of God. While there it was gradually made known to me that I could go home with Elder Bogardus and his wife to White Church and join there, and my delight knew no bounds.

I related my experience to the church on the second Sunday in December, and was received, and baptized on the day before Christmas. The night before, as I lay thinking these things over, and rejoicing in my heart, I realized for the first time how much a child of God had to live by faith. Then I understood for the first time what the term "household of faith" meant. I thought how good it was for the disciples that they could talk with the Lord face to face. I do not wish to be misunderstood in this, for I had no doubts about the right or wrong of the matter, and was perfectly happy. Just at that moment, however, it rained against the window; and it did seem to come like a voice from heaven, for it told me many things. I had expected nothing better than thick ice and much snow on the morrow, when I was to be baptized; but it had gradually grown warmer, and then it rained at Christmas time. The next day I had great peace of mind, which I never shall forget as long as I live. I do fully realize the long suffering of God toward me, and I see how his love passes all understanding. When I think of all that I have deserved from the hand of God, then am I astonished beyond measure at his goodness.

I have been given great strength in writing this, for which I thank God; and I hope and pray that you may have a like strength in receiving it. I do pray to God, in the name of Jesus Christ, that you may all be given faith to believe what I have written at the first of the piece, and that we may all have wisdom from on high with which to understand these things; for I believe them to be true, and I was made to write it. We shall all need great strength from God from this time on, for our old natures are with us yet. When we get a realizing sense of all this, then do we know what Christ meant when he said, "In your patience possess ye your souls."—Luke xxi. 19.

Yours with a full sense of unworthiness,

FALLEN FROM GRACE.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—This afternoon I became unusually interested in reading in the epistle to the Hebrews, wherein is set forth both systems of religion, works and grace. Works I mention first, because it was the first system ordained of God, to prove its own failures, and to demonstrate thereby the need of another, a more successful and absolutely perfect salvation. The subject therein treated reminds me of an expression of Paul to the Galatian brethren, who evidently had been led to embrace the legal or work system, mingled somehow with their faith by false teaching. "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."—Gal. v. 4. The apostle had in both letters, as in every one of his epistles, been treating on the perfect effect of the atonement of Christ, contrary to the delusive teachings of the Means Baptists (for there were none but Baptists then) of his day. He was led to treat largely upon the only two possible methods of salvation, works and grace. In Galatians he has shown that grace salvation belongs to God's people by inheritance. In Hebrews he has shown that work salvation belongs only to Abraham's seed, by a combination of inheritance and works, but it is only of time effect; and as their obedience was not perfect, the result was correspondingly imperfect, and only a time matter at that. But in order to comfort the heirs of eternal salvation he has in every letter to the saints compared the works of man and the works of God, and shown by their individual experience and the holiness of the law of God that each one must receive comfort only from the faith that they receive from the perfect work of Christ in fulfilling the law and applying the benefits of his righteousness to them.

I make these prefatory remarks that we may bear in mind that Paul was not trying to prove the Arminian or work theory of falling from grace as the world receives it, but to the contrary. Paul had already shown by the record of the past that all human and natural excellence had failed and would fail. He establishes God's own power as supreme. "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?"—Heb. i. 13. In the next verse he asks, "Are they not all ministering spirits [or voices of instruction], sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" All the typical excellencies of the Melchisedec priesthood were not designed to serve under the regulations of the law of Moses, or the inheritance of Abraham (for Melchisedec was before Levi and his priesthood), but served in the interests and behalf of every actual "heir of salvation;" such a salvation as God required, such only as he accepted, and such eternal salvation which Christ became the author of to all them that believe. How important then that the belief correspond with the actuality of the priesthood, the sacrifice, the atonement, the salvation. It is this faith that Paul is contrasting with the faith of the world, or works of the creature. It is essential to the comfort of these heirs of salvation that they be not dismayed at all the false theories of men who would lay various theories of necessity for their salvation. It is not essential to their eternal salvation that they repeatedly experience "the principles of the doctrine of Christ;" but, leaving them, they are to "go on unto perfection; not laying again [note this word "again"] the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Heb. vi. 1, 2. These have already been passed in their experience, and they can never feel the same "again;" never can feel the same experimental fitness to their own personal case as when each was first applied with power to them by the Holy Ghost. When God gave repentance it was not to be repented of. When God gave to "every man [of these heirs] the measure of faith," it was sufficient to keep them "unto salvation." When God baptized them in the waters of regeneration, and raised them up to walk in newness of life, and led them forth by the footsteps of the flock, and gave them a hunger to fulfill all righteousness, even as they would rejoice to follow Jesus into and through the waters of baptism into the visible fold of Christ, where the "laying on of hands" was sweetly received as a token of true and heartfelt welcome, it is not again to be administered, as if to suggest that there was some lack in the divine impression of obedience; for without the full experience of God's regenerating grace no mock immersion is expected or required by the church; nor is any immersion to be reckoned as baptism unless it be wholly in accord with the faith of the church by whose authority it is administered, and also of the candidate baptized. When called to account for their hope, it is assured to them through the resurrection, which when once happily passed need leave no fear of a long and tedious passage through purgatorial cleansing or Arminian judgment; for being once raised, there need be no farther process of spiritual change or resurrection of the dead.

Behold, what wonderful grace is here revealed. The child of God is but once to pass through the ordeal of all that is herein presented as already passed, and not to be laid again as a foundation, but as a sweet remembrance, a holy tie, an enchanting presage of all his choicest hopes. "And this will we do if God permit." Is there any hint of weakness of faith in this "if God permit?" Nay, it is the only strength of the christian's faith; it is the only sweetness of their joy; it is the only foundation of their hope to bask in the sovereign will of him who now letteth and will let till all enemies be put under his feet. "If God permit" is the whole base of the christian's hope; nor can the children of God desire heaven otherwise. It is a true token of the work of the Spirit in their heart, before they can perform one of the works of obedience to Christ, or bring forth one fruit meet for repentance. "For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved from wrath through him." Then, as if to confirm the result of his labor of love in establishing them in their faith and steadfastness of their hope in Christ as their only Lawgiver, Judge, Surety, Advocate, Mediator, Elder Brother, Everlasting Father, possessing all the glory of the eternal God, he sums up what would be the result of all their faith if it were possible for the immutable and eternal perfection of God's work to fail, in the loss of any of those for whom Christ fulfilled all that ever has been done or can be done in their eternal salvation. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God; but that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned." This Scripture is taken by those who know not the grace of God and its power, to convey the idea that even those described as "once enlightened," &c., may after all fall away, just as the earthly fruits of thorns and briers give no satisfaction to those by whom the earth is dressed. Can it be possible that God is so weak, after he has given his own nature, after he has given the Holy Ghost, that he is unable to keep them from falling? If there is a comforting assurance in all the divine record it is here; for the apostle follows up his logical contrast of earthly figures and legal failures revealed through all the Mosaic dispensation, through all the Levitical priesthood, through all the thorny and briery disfavours of nature, and exclaims in all the assurance of a God-implanted faith, "But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." He is not forgetful to speak of the evidences that convinced him that they were "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord." He says, "For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister." What an assurance the apostle received here, in the faithful and loving charity that abounded among these Hebrew brethren. With what zeal they bore the burdens of the weak, and ministered of their substance to satisfy the hunger and clothe the nakedness of the poor saints. It seemed that they did not need a long report from some Treasurer and Secretary of a Board to formulate an impressive appeal. The simple knowledge of need suggested to their hearts the remedy needed; nor were they slothful to perform as they had ability, or as God had prospered them. O what a lovely contrast is here presented. No need to offer one hundred dollars for the best essay prepared for the purpose of filching the last possible cent or quarter dollar from the little store of the orphan, the widow, the laborer, or the close-fisted and unwilling niggard. How true it is that he who gives cheerfully and understandingly is already loved of God. As Paul told the Corinthians, "God loveth a cheerful giver." God is not unrighteous to forget the spirit he put into

CONSTRAINING LOVE.

"FOR the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again."—2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

An esteemed correspondent submits the inquiry whether this language applies to all of Adam's race, or exclusively to them that were chosen in Christ before the world began. In reply it is only necessary to consider whether the whole sinful race of Adam are constrained by the love of Christ. Did the love of Christ constrain Herod and Pilate and all those whose hands were stained with the innocent blood of our crucified Redeemer? When the cowardice of Pilate would have moved him to release Jesus, was it the love of Christ which constrained the rabble to cry, "Crucify him!" and to ask the release of a murderer in preference to the sinless Son of God? There can be no difficulty in seeing the absurdity of such an application of the language of the apostle as should involve a result so clearly in contradiction of the whole record of inspiration. Those who claim such an interpretation of this text show clearly that they have no correct appreciation of what that love is, nor of the power by which it constrains those in whom it is revealed. Most of those who thus distort the expression deny that it does really constrain any one at all, since they represent that it cannot effectually move any without their consent to its influence. Such expositors teach that the love of Christ strives to constrain everybody, but it is successful only in the case of those who will submit themselves to its control. Such constraint could never overcome the enmity of the carnal mind, and consequently it could not secure the salvation of any sinner from his sins. The omnipotent love of God in Christ Jesus not only produces in chosen sinners conformity to his divine holiness, but works in them real hatred to sin, causing them to long for deliverance from the bondage of corruption under which they find their members still groaning. Thus they are constrained by that heavenly love. This is true of every one who is manifested as a subject of redeeming grace. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." But it is more particularly of himself and his fellow-apostles that we understand Paul to speak in this text.

It must be observed that Paul was one of the twelve judges whom our Lord appointed to set in order all things in his own everlasting kingdom. Here he has recorded not only the final judgment of the supreme court of the gospel heaven, but he has also given the positive declaration of his authority in pronouncing such an important decree. Henceforth the denial of this settled truth is open and blasphemous rebellion against the King by whose appointment the apostles as princes rule in judgment. Paul does not leave this essential and fundamental principle in the gospel system resting alone upon his own authority, even though he was clothed with apostolic inspiration. For the assurance of the saints he would have them know that this decision was the result of the constraining love of Christ. Surely there must be vast importance in the declaration of this judgment when it is so particularly explained as resulting immediately from the manifestation of the Spirit of Christ in the apostle. Can there ever be a question among the saints with regard to the matter which is so solemnly decided in this everlasting judgment? Strange as it may appear, even this written judgment is very frequently disputed by those who can find salvation nowhere but in its immutable truth. The enemy challenges the hope of the saints upon no other ground but the denial of this apostolic judgment. If this decision is acknowledged as correct, the unavoidable result must follow that there is no condemnation to those for whom Jesus laid down his life. Clearly there can be no further demand of the holy law against those who have paid its extreme penalty; and this is all fulfilled in dying for sin. Hence, upon this solid foundation of the divine judgment, constrained by the love of Christ, is built the whole glorious hope of salvation which is revealed in the infinite grace of God. Every suggestion of conditions to be fulfilled by the subjects of this love of Christ is an effort of the tempter to beguile them of their reward in resting in the faithfulness of their loving Redeemer.

In common with all the testimony of Jesus, this judgment of the inspired apostle searches the hearts of all who hear it. To those who are destitute of the hunger and thirst after righteousness which characterizes those who are led by the Spirit of God, the assurance of this freedom of the saints from the law of sin and death affords encouragement to continue in the sinful conduct which they love. Knowing nothing of the exceeding sinfulness of sin, they seek only an excuse to do the evil which rules in their carnal nature. Every one who finds this conclusion as the desire which governs him, and would avail himself of the certainty of salvation as an encouragement to continue in sin, thereby gives incontestible evidence that he has not been blessed with the Spirit of Christ as his guide into all truth. Where that holy principle rules in the heart it will not fail to produce fruit in the hatred of sin as most bitter bondage, and in earnest desire for righteousness as the embodiment of all liberty and joy. Thus by the declaration of this truth of the gospel the thoughts of all hearts are made manifest. The Lord Jesus says, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day."—John xii. 48. If that word dwell in the heart of any man he will not need the terrors of punishment to cause him to refrain from sin, nor the joys of future bliss to prompt him to obey the commandments of Jesus. The saints have the abiding witness of the love of holiness in their mourning under the consciousness of the power of sin working in their members. Until the love of God was given them they felt no bondage in the service of sin. Only when that holy principle wars against the evil of their carnal mind do they now mourn under the weight of the yoke of that hated slavery. Every such mourning one is already blessed by the infinite love of Christ. In the judgment recorded in our text there is justification unto life for all who bear this evidence of unity with Christ Jesus in his death. Nothing can ever bring such into condemnation, since they are no longer under the law whose full penalty has been satisfied. They may well rejoice in Christ Jesus, for he is the end of the law for righteousness unto them. They can have no confidence in the flesh, for they know by bitter and continual experience that therein dwells no good thing. Their only rejoicing is that they "are dead to the law by the body of Christ." To such there is now no condemnation, since they are freed from the law by which they were found guilty before God.

In the apostolic statement of the result of the death of our Redeemer, as embraced in our text, there is presented the highest consideration by which the saints could be urged that "they should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." It is not because they owe their natural existence to the creative power of God; for in that sense they are only dependent upon him as are all the works of his power. Certainly even in that relation it is the reasonable service of every creature to obey his commandments. But the subjects of redeeming grace have an infinitely stronger motive for devotion to his service. They are saved by the blood of Jesus from that hopeless condemnation under which they had fallen by their own sin against the holy commandment of God. Well may they be admonished by the word of truth, when they would yield their members to the service of sin, "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's."—1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

In the conclusion that they whom Jesus has redeemed should live unto him, it is not enjoined upon those who profess allegiance to him that they should disregard the relative duties which they owe to their fellow-mortals. The grace of God shed abroad in the heart of a sinner never made him a worse man in any relation of life. Specific directions are left for our instruction in all these matters. But the motive by which the saints are to be governed in their conduct is infinitely higher than any consideration which could be afforded by this world. Instead of being attracted by the desire of earthly advantage in doing "good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," from the fact that we are the purchase of the blood of Jesus, we are to be led by his Spirit in doing everything "heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ."—Col. iii. 23, 24. In obedience to this requirement the disciples of Jesus are not called to assume an appearance of austere and hateful severity and gloom. Neither are they to claim to be more holy than their fellow-men. In practical obedience to their Lord they give the best evidence of devotion to his service. He says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." And all his commandments are embraced in the one precept in which he says, "Follow me." Then to live unto him is to deny self, and look unto him as our pattern and only director.

While every believer is constrained to obedience by the same infinite love of Christ which moved the apostle, it is important to note the difference between the power by which they are impelled and that which governs those who are seeking by their own works to attain unto justification before God. Nothing but the goodness of God leads the subjects of his salvation to repentance; the repentance of the natural man results from the desire to gain by the service rendered that life which the saints inherit by virtue of their unity with Christ. There is certainly a very wide distinction between these two principles. The covetousness of the natural heart would secure the blessing of God by its own service of good works. The effect of the grace already received by the saints leads them to desire freedom from the dominion of sin and perfect conformity to the holiness which is revealed in Christ Jesus. As many as are led by the Spirit of God are manifest by the fact that they hunger and thirst after righteousness. No earthly power can constrain with such resistless and unceasing force as this divine principle of the love of God shed abroad by his Spirit in the heart of one whom he has translated out of darkness into the marvelous light of the kingdom of the dear Son of God. Such a quickened sinner does not have to try to love righteousness; the constant grief of his soul is that he cannot escape the snares which continually entangle him in sin. Not even his hope of heavenly bliss could be satisfactory without the assurance of everlasting freedom from this bondage of corruption under which he now groans, longing for deliverance.

It is not all of the sweet assurance of faith in Jesus to believe that he died for our offences; the resurrection is the crowning glory of that great love which is given us in him. As in his death all were dead, and infinite justice was thus perfectly satisfied on the part of every one of them, so in his resurrection is given the assurance that there is now no condemnation to them whose sins were borne in his body on the tree. The life of the sinner was the demand of the violated law of God. No substitute or ceremonial offering could ever cancel that holy sentence. "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me; in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God."—Heb. x. 4-7. In the connection it is explained, "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." That is, this one offering is sufficient and final. It is never to be repeated.

Now, here is the test by which the distinction is manifested between those who have the Spirit of Christ and those who are still under the power of death in sin. If by revelation of the perfect redemption which is in the death and resurrection of the Redeemer any sinner is encouraged to continue in sin, there is no indication that the love of Christ constrains him at all; but rather that he rejoices in the sin which crucified the Lord. But if the effect of that knowledge of the sinfulness of sin, by which Jesus was brought down under the suffering of death, produces hatred of self and of every evil thing, the evidence is conclusive in those who are thus constrained by the dying love of Christ, that they have that love shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto them. However they may write bitter things against themselves under daily consciousness of the power of sin working in their members, so that even their own heart may condemn them, yet "God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things." Then well may we in the fullness of this great love be constrained to the denial of self and of fleshly lusts, that we should not henceforth live unto ourselves, but unto him which died for us, and rose again. discerning the body of Christ, may we never forget his word, "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "We love him, because he first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."—1 John iv. 19-21.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

their hearts. "God is love." "He that loveth is born of God." It is only as the fleshly veil of selfishness prevents the child of God from showing forth the love he may often feel struggling within, that he is prevented from showing the same diligence to the full assurance of faith. But God is in no way in need of any of these words of the apostle to aid him in the final salvation of his people. It is only in bringing forth the fruits of that salvation that Paul spoke out what was cordially received by them. As the grace of God abounds, the sweet fruit of the Spirit is partaken. Where grace does not reign, a falling away may be expected, but not in the sense of the text, "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." This refers to the churches of Galatia, who had been called unto the grace of Christ, but who had been bewitched, and made to believe that there was some relation between their obedience to the law of Moses and their hope. Any law that must be obeyed as a condition of salvation must be the potent means of salvation. Therefore if it be by works, it is not of grace; but if it be by grace, then it is not of works. Whosoever has once believed in Christ as the end of the law, and afterward has become confused or bewitched, and made to believe that there is something left for him to do in order to secure what Christ did to perfect him forever, has fallen from his first faith in grace. Of such only can it be said, "Ye are fallen from grace." B.

STATE ROAD, N. C., Sept. 27, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I inclose to you the experience of our dear brother, Elder Asa Howard, who is one of the precious among God's dear people in the state of Texas. I feel that his experience will be read with much interest by the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, therefore I humbly ask you to publish it. In all my travels in thirty-two states and territories I have never met a more precious brotherhood than I met on my recent tour in the great state of Texas. May God bless them all abundantly, is the prayer of their loving brother, I hope,

WM. R. WELBORN.

WEATHERFORD, Texas, Sept. 21, 1893.

ELDER WM. R. WELBORN—DEAR BROTHER:—In compliance with your request, by the help of God I will proceed to give you a brief relation of my experience. I was born near the city of Springfield, Missouri, on February 28th, 1846. My father and mother were members of the Old School Baptist Church, and lived in the service of their heavenly Master. My mother died when I was but three years old, leaving me, with several brothers and sisters, to the care and protection of our lone father, who provided as well as he could for the comfort of his children. He married again, the daughter of Elder Joel Hendly, of Tennessee, after which we emigrated to the state of Texas, in the fall of 1853, and settled in Tarrant County, where he spent the remainder of his life. There I grew up to manhood, having been blessed with good counsel, and by precept and example was taught to be honest and honorable. From my youth I had serious thoughts, and when I heard the Scriptures read they had a solemn, sacred sound throughout; yet I knew not their meaning. As time passed I became deeply concerned about my future destiny, and of a suitable preparation for the realities of the unknown world. I was taught to respect religious assemblies, and how to demean myself in company and before all people. In 1860 our nation was plunged into a bloody war, and I saw the blazing comet in the open heavens, which seemed to betoken swift destruction and awful dissolution. At the age of sixteen years I volunteered my services to become associated with the southern army. When I had joined the army and set out on a military expedition, five months of service satisfied my curiosity, and I returned home, having realized to some extent the privations incident to a soldier's life. I remained at home with my father until the fall of 1864, when it was made obligatory upon me to go to the field of conflict, which like an arrow struck my heart with great terror, knowing the sufferings and hardships of a soldier's life, and the uncertainty of the battlefield. The thought also of being separated from father, mother, brothers and sisters, perhaps to see them no more forever, touched my heart and shook my sensibilities to the utmost. On that eventful evening my emotions were indescribable. The very thought of leaving all my dear kindred seemed intolerable. I thought, Will I see them no more? Approaching dissolution seemed apparent. Death, the yawning grave and a future judgment were before me. A day or two previous to the above evening I had taken my father's gun and gone out squirrel hunting, hoping my sad feelings would pass off and my mind become differently occupied. But alas! these feelings had taken root to continue. As the sun was sinking behind the western hills I started homeward. Walking through a beautiful valley I came to an elm grove, and looked carefully for some secret spot where I might fall down upon my knees and ask God for mercy; for I felt that I must pray. I came to a little cluster of trees, in the midst of which I knelt down, where no eye but that of God could look upon me, and tried to pray, or say something, I know not what, when the thought was presented to me, Guilty! guilty! O you guilty wretch! Instead of finding relief, a dark cloud intervened, and condemnation covered me. I now felt that my very effort at prayer was full of sin and pollution, and I wished that I had never made such an attempt. Shame and reproach had taken hold upon me.

Thus, time passed on, and I set out to join the army again at Shreveport Louisiana. We encamped in the suburbs of that city for nearly two months. In the meantime the same strange feelings remained with me. I would attend places of amusement to drive away these gloomy forebodings, for my sins seemed to increase, and the darkness seemed like towering mountains before me. My cry continually was, "O Lord, be merciful to me, the chief of sinners." The rigor of the law seemed to be pouring forth its wrath upon my poor lost soul. I felt, O that I had never been born! Time after time I would slip away from camp to hide myself among the thick pinery to try to pray. Those who are familiar with the sibilant sound of a pine forest can imagine how lonesome I felt, and the mournfulness of a heart full of sorrow, mourning in consequence of sin. My prayer seemed like the corrupt breathing of abject poverty, vanity and destitution. The thought was with me, O you poor rebel! whence comest thou? The sentence of the holy law, I thought, was pronounced against me, and my doom was sealed; for I saw nothing but darkness and the dawning of a judgment that I was unprepared to meet, although the very breathing of my soul was "Lord, have mercy upon a poor condemned sinner." O what a deplorable condition! My eyes fill with tears as I portray the awful anxiety and intensity of a mind filled with perplexity and reeling on the brink of despair. O what an awful extremity, with no eye to pity, no friend to have compassion. Surely all is dreary. The world, the ocean, with all things, seemed portentous. I felt dejected, sinking down beneath a heavy load of sin and degradation. I thought, Must I die here in this wilderness, far away from all earthly friends even, and my body decompose on the battlefield, without a burial? The consideration of this was awful indeed. I thought, Perchance the Lord will remember poor me for the sake of my christian father and mother, who taught me to be truthful and to live honestly with all men. I thought of all these carnal things, but they were no redress for my grievances. These were only momentary reflections that only tended to aggravate my case and increase my misery, rather than to quiet my troubled breast. All things had failed me. My own works condemned me. I thought, Can I live? For five long dreary months I was hardly conscious of anything.

Early in the month of March, 1865, if I mistake not, our army was ordered from Louisiana to the southern part of Texas, where we remained until the war closed. The surrender of Lee's army announced the return of the poor, wrecked, weather-beaten soldiers, whereupon I was permitted to meet my dear father again, and all my earthly friends. They welcomed me with sweet embraces and greeted me with joy, but my soul was full of trouble. O that I could have chimed in with the sweet sentiment of "Home, sweet home." Finally I gave up every prospect. Every refuge had fled away. I felt that I would soon be engulfed in the fiery domain of eternal night. In this agonizing state something seemed to flow over my poor heart, speaking peace to my soul. At that moment I felt that my burden was all gone, the gloomy veil departed, the storm subsided, and a refulgence of joy and peace took the place thereof. All nature appeared lovely, as if pouring out adoration to the God of the whole earth. Here I realized the goodness of God; that he had been gracious to me in all the travail of my mind, in the wilderness of my sins, and I knew it not. I now felt reconciled to God, and felt to praise his holy name, and to serve him faithfully. My soul was full of glory. I thought my troubles were gone, and that I would know no more sorrow. My course seemed marked, my skies were serene, my seas clear. But I was soon assaulted with many doubts and fears. I found a warfare, and a cross to bear. Truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of all his elect. He is a blessed Deliverer, whose mercies saved a soul condemned to die. I would try to get my burden back, that I might be more certain how it was removed. But old things had passed away, and all things had become new. I never saw a great light, such as I have read of others seeing; but I felt a calmness, a demonstration in my soul that tongue nor pen can never describe. I attended a Primitive Baptist meeting and heard them preach salvation by grace, which harmonized with my experimental knowledge. The old preacher would talk to me, and admonish me to go to the church and do my duty. I continued to follow this old servant around from place to place like a poor little lamb for several days. I desired the company of christians, but felt unworthy and unfit. I attended a union meeting held with the clear Fork Church, four miles north of Weatherford, with this same preacher. Many had gathered together, and a deep interest was manifested throughout. On Saturday four joined by experience, yet I could not go. On Sunday a large congregation met at the stand, and Elders Autry, Bryant and Clark preached to the people. This was the fourth Sunday in July, 1865. At the close of the service an opportunity was extended to any one who desired to talk to the church. A hymn was sung, and near the close the old servant said, "Come along if you want to." I did not see him, but I knew who his speech was directed to. I made my way through the crowd, gave my hand to the Moderator, and sat down. I related some of the things above written, was received amidst much rejoicing, and was baptized the same day by Elder John Bryant in the presence of a thousand people, as Elder Bryant expressed it, in a wilderness place, like that of Judea where John the Baptist baptized. My conscience was made easy and my mind satisfied. I traveled on, concluding that all I would have to do would be to meet my brethren in church capacity and join them in the sweet worship of the Lord of life and glory. But to my utter astonishment the solemn subject of preaching the gospel arrested my attention. I tried by many excuses to eradicate such thoughts; that I was so young, and altogether disqualified for that high station. But all my excuses were ineffectual and failed to remove that impression. From that time till the present, which is nearly twenty-eight years, I have tried to proclaim the unsearchable riches of the complete Savior. Here I might write volumes, but I must be brief. I was licensed to exercise a public gift in the spring of 1866, and in July, 1867, was ordained to the work of the ministry. Many sore trials and temptations have I encountered; but the Lord has helped me hitherto, and will help me all through my journey. The predestination of God in all things, unconditional election and special atonement is Bible doctrine that I prize above rubies. On that doctrine rests my little hope, notwithstanding the frowns and cold indifference of a mocking world.

Now, dear brother, I have given you a synopsis of what I claim as the ground of my hope through the atoning merits of the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin. Tell me, is it thus with you? If I am embraced in that new covenant it is all through amazing grace, amazing mercy, from beginning to end. Praise the Lord and bless his name for evermore. Let the inhabitants of the Rock sing. When it goes well with you, remember me. My kind regards to you and dear sister Welborn. This is yours to do with as you see fit.

ASA HOWARD.

ASHLAND, Mo., Jan. 11, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—The coming in of the new year notifies me that my time is out for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I am very sorry that I have to ask you to stop it for the present. My indigency and the pressure of the hard times among my brethren, and my inability to labor, my time being all taken up in trying to supply the churches and destitute places, to the best of my little ability, render me unable to pay for the paper. I have so much enjoyed reading your editorials and the many rich communications from so many of the brethren. O how I prize those articles, tempered with so much mildness from brother F. A. Chick, and the firmness of brother Durand; also the letters of brethren Rittenhouse, Purington and others. The trials of dear brother Brink, who left the New School Baptists and joined the Old School, under the ministry of dear brother Jenkins, brought to my mind the trials of my youth. Not knowing anything of the Old School Baptists, I made the same mistake, and soon began to realize that I was homeless. I felt like I was thrown out on the broad ocean, in a frail bark, without oar or rudder, amid the stormy winds and rolling billows, without land or landing anywhere in sight, and consequently saw no probability of ever landing. I had no cause to expect that I would ever be safely moored in any port or sweet heaven of rest, the thing which my anxious soul was earnestly seeking and praying for. At length, in the midst of the storm and the darkness and gloom, a favorable breeze sweetly wafted me near the shore of a sweet resting place for weary pilgrims. The saints all seemed so happy, and the peals of gospel tidings were flitting on the breezes so sweetly, that my soul was thoroughly enraptured with the joyous prospect that lay before me. But an eddy seemed to be tossing me and my frail bark, first near the landing, and then farther away; so I found myself going round and round, and each round looked as though it would bring near enough the shore that I might land. But ere I was aware the time had passed, and I was yet afloat. Day after day and time after time passed, while I was anxiously praying and earnestly desiring that I might be permitted to join the happy company. At length one day, at a time most unexpected by me, as though the time had been justly appointed, and ere I was aware, I was safely landed among the happy, singing throng. I told them my story of love, and how I had been cast out on the boisterous, tempestuous sea, and how I had been whirled about in the eddy, and how I had been graciously lifted out of all its danger; whereupon I was kindly taken in and baptized. Many have been my trials from then till now; but I still trust in the safe old ship of Zion, while the great Captain of our salvation is at the helm.

Excuse me, brethren, for troubling you. I did not think of writing so much when I began. If you think there is anything in it worthy of being read by the dear little ones, so use it; and if not, cast it aside, and all will be right; but let me remain a trusting brother.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

ELDER Silas H. Durand having changed his residence from Winter Park, Florida, to Southampton, Pa., wishes his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

MARRIAGES.

On March 17th, 1894, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at his residence in Hopewell Borough, Mr. Joseph H. Breese and Miss Mary E. Wyckoff, both of East Amwell, N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Margaret E. Harding passed from earth in the triumphs of a living faith in the God of her salvation at the residence of her brother-in-law and sister, Himan S. and Fannie Collard, near Winterton, Sullivan Co., N. Y., on Saturday p. m., March 17th, 1894.

The cause of her death was pneumonia. Her last sickness was short. She was not only reconciled, but glad to depart this mortal life, which had contained much of affliction and sorrow for her. She was a beloved member of the New Vernon Old School Baptist Church, having been baptized in the fellowship of the same by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, August 8th, 1875. Sister Maggie was a daughter of the late Jairus and Elizabeth P. Harding, who were also members of the New Vernon Church. She was in the fifty-fifth year of her age. She is survived by three sisters, Fannie, wife of Himan S. Collard, Lydia, wife of Charles H. Brown, and Miss Elsie B. Harding, who with the church and a host of friends feel that they have sustained a great loss in the removal of this loved one.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a congregation that filled the meeting-house at New Vernon, where for many years the sweet voice of the departed had been raised in the songs of the sanctuary, and in testimonies to the power and goodness of God; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was deposited in the cemetery adjoining, by the side of the father and mother who had preceded her to "the house appointed for all living."

We close this brief tribute to the memory of our dear sister by quoting a hymn which she had dated and marked by a turned leaf a few days before her departure.

"Father, whate'er of earthly bliss
Thy sovereign will denies,
Accepted at thy throne of grace
Let this petition rise:

"Give me a calm and thankful heart,
From every murmur free;
The blessing of thy grace impart,
And let me live in thee.

"Let the sweet hope that thou art mine
My life and death attend;
Thy presence through my journey shine
And crown my journey's end."

ED.

DIED—At her home in Meridian, Miss., Jan. 30th, 1894, Mrs. S. A. Fewell.

"Sister Fewell was the youngest sister of the late Elder R. C. Leachman, of Virginia, by whom she was baptized in the year 1865 or 1866." (I copy from a letter from her daughter, sister L. R. Fewell.) "She was born in 1816, in Prince William Co., Va., where she married Mr. T. T. Fewell, and lived there until 1860, when she moved to Middleburgh, Loudoun Co., to educate her fatherless children. From thence, ten years afterward, she moved to Meridian, Miss., where she has ever since resided.

"The immediate cause of her death was blood-poisoning, produced by a fall which dislocated her right shoulder and hip. She was ill for eight months, and a great sufferer up to the very hour of her death, but bore it all with the most heroic fortitude and christian resignation to the will of an all-wise Father, whose chastening hand she recognized in her misfortune.

"She leaves three children, a daughter and two sons, to mourn the irreparable loss of a mother, with whom they had been the first earthly consideration during her thirty-six years of widowhood; also a wide circle of friends, who esteemed her for her uprightness and integrity. In the twenty-four years of her residence in Meridian she never attended the meetings of any other sect; and the only objection to it as a place of residence was the deprivation of church privileges, the nearest church of our faith being in the country, nine miles away. Hence she retained her membership in Bethlehem Church, in Virginia."

I can add but little to what I have transcribed from sister Fewell's letter. I met the subject of this notice some years ago, and am assured of her steadfastness in and love for the truth; and her life has shown that she could not be carried away by any wind of false doctrine. She was much esteemed in the church where her membership was, and her death adds another to the long list of the dear saints who have been called away from us in this part of Virginia in the past few years. May God remember his afflicted poor, keep them in the strait and narrow way, and comfort all his mourning ones.

Affectionately yours,

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., March 20, 1894.

"My days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass. But thou, O Lord, shalt endure forever; and thy remembrance unto all generations."—Psalm cii. 11, 12.

I am requested to inform you of another who has fallen out of our number at Rock Springs, brother Edward Wicks, in the 73d year of his age.

The deceased was a brother of the late Samuel Wicks, who was a member of the same church, and Deacon while he lived. The deceased was baptized in the fellowship of the Rock Springs Church by the writer, and while he lived in reach was very regular in his attendance on the meetings and calls of the church; but several years previous to his death he moved to Chester, where he ended his days. He was quietly laid away to rest at Rock Springs, where many of his people lie; and I believe he was the last of the name as members of that church, which name has continued there for a great many years, the ancestors having emigrated from England. Now, when I stand in that cemetery and look around, I find myself surrounded with the membership which I met there thirty-five years ago, having all passed away but one who is in reach. The last time I met the brother he asked if I were not glad that I had not much longer to live. I believe he was anxious to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. He leaves a widow and two sons, with a number of nephews and nieces, all of whom seem to take a calm view of the matter.

Brother Wicks was a very orderly and consistent member, and as a man was esteemed; but having a liberal share of the troubles of this life, he has gone from the evils to come, leaving the male membership of that church very small.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md., March 23, 1894.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I now forward for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a notice of the death of sister Maria Owens, who departed this life March 18th, 1894, in the 62d year of her age.

Maria Stuart was born in Pike Co., Ind., April 10th, 1832. When a child she came with her parents to Illinois. At the age of twenty-two years she was married to Jesse Owens, who is gone to the better land. Seven children were born to them, three of whom survive her: Richard Owens, who resides in Holdrege, Neb.,

Mrs. Mary Johnston, of the same place, and Mrs. Charles Wright, of Maroa, Ill.

As well as I can remember, about twenty years ago she became a member of the New Providence Church, of the order of Old School Predestinarian Baptists. She was sound in the faith, believing Christ as her Savior, and remained a consistent member until her death. Since last October she had been a victim of that dreaded disease, consumption. Since her husband's death last November she had resided with her daughter, Mrs. Laura Wright, Maroa, Macon Co., Ill.

Sister Owens was a faithful wife and indulgent mother, loved by all who knew her. She leaves a large number of friends, who will sympathize with the bereaved family. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Laura Wright. Her remains were consigned to the tomb in the Old Baptist cemetery at the New Providence meeting-house.

"The storm that wrecks the winter sky
No more disturbs her sweet repose;
There summer evening's latest sigh
That shuts the rose."

L. O. DAVIS.

WARRENSBURG, Ill.

By request of brother and sister A. P. Glenn I will write of the death of their daughter, Mrs. Ida Coffman.

She was born August 12th, 1872, at Greenbrier, Faulkner Co., Ark. Brother A. P. Glenn moved to Conway Sept. 27th, 1886, where the deceased met her husband, Mr. Coffman, and was married to him March 16th, 1893. They then moved to Texas, and afterward returned to Conway. Then brother A. P. Glenn and family moved to Hartman, Ark., and Mrs. Coffman moved with them, where she died with bed fever. She left a dear husband and a little babe, with father, mother, sisters and brothers, to mourn after her; but their loss is her gain, for she fell asleep in the Lord on March 13th, at seven o'clock in the morning. On the same day, about five o'clock in the afternoon, I preached her funeral from Rev. xiv. 13: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

A few days before she died they telegraphed for me, and I went. Mrs. Ida was in her right mind, and said she was going to die, and also told of her hope of eternal happiness. She called all the family around the bed, told them she would die, and named the dear little babe Ruth. The babe was born Feb. 24th, 1894. At her funeral was a large assembly, for her friends were many. Although her body lies silent in the grave, and the soft winds blow over its quiet home, and sweet flowers over it bloom, yet she rests in heaven, where there is no more sorrow, sighing nor tears, for God has wiped them all away.

Yours in hope,

D. WESTALL.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., March 23, 1894.

Mrs. Nancy T. Alward was born in Suffolk Co., N. Y., on April 12th, 1817, and died near Middletown, N. Y., on Feb. 1st, 1894, aged 76 years, 9 months and 19 days.

She was a daughter of the late Isaac Tooker. Her husband, Stephen P. Alward, died about twelve years ago. Their adopted daughter, Carrie, died several years ago; since which time her only remaining sister, Mrs. Deborah T. Jefferson, of Albany, N. Y., has tenderly cared for her. Another sister, Mrs. Hannah Kymer, of Branchville, N. J., died about two years ago. The only surviving brother, Samuel Tooker, resides at Beersville, N. J.

Mrs. Alward never united with the church, but was an Old School Baptist in sentiment, a lover of the truth as it is in Jesus, and gave unmistakable evidence of having experienced the new and spiritual birth, without which no one can see the kingdom of God. She was blessed with a remarkably pleasant and amiable disposition, which endeared her to all who knew her. The last few years of her stay on earth were filled with suffering, having experienced several strokes of paralysis; but her end was peaceful, and we are assured that for her to die was gain.

The funeral services were held at her late residence on Saturday, Feb. 3d, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins; after which her mortal remains were buried in the family plot in the cemetery near Westtown, Orange Co., N. Y.—ED.

AUNT Margaret Nave died Feb. 28th, 1894, at Cantrall, Sangamon Co., Ill.

She was born in 1812, in Tennessee, where she was married in 1830 to Henry Nave, who died in Cantrall almost four years since. Two children were born to them in Tennessee, who died in infancy. They came to Illinois in 1839 and settled near Cantrall, and afterward moved to Cantrall, where they both died. She joined the Bethel Church of Regular Baptists in 1840. Their house was a stopping-place for their brethren, and it seemed to be a great pleasure to them to wait on them and talk with them. Aunt Margaret's theme was Jesus and what he had done for sinners; and although she was poor in this world's goods, she was rich in faith and a blessed hope of the happy life beyond the grave.

Elder Wm. A. Thompson preached her funeral in Cantrall to a very large and attentive congregation on March 2d. Her body was taken to the Brittain graveyard, near Cantrall, and buried by the side of her husband. Of her relatives she left one sister to mourn her loss, and a great many friends.

Your unworthy brother,

PHILEMON STOUT.

COTTON HILL, Ill., March 22, 1894.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THERE will be a three days meeting held with the Old School Baptist Church called Sidling Hill, situated in Fulton Co., Pa., to commence at ten o'clock on Friday before the first Sunday in May, and to continue Saturday and Sunday.

We extend a cordial invitation to all of our faith and order who feel it in their hearts to visit us. We hope the Lord will put it into the hearts of some of the ministering brethren to visit us.

All coming by railroad will come to Hancock, Md., on Thursday, as early in the day as possible, where they will be met and conveyed to the meeting, a distance of about twenty miles. Those coming had better write to me, brother Dennis Mellott or brother Isaac Varnes, at Needmore, Fulton Co., Pa.

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

A THREE days meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the Broad Run Church, Maryland, beginning on Saturday before the second Sunday in May (12th), 1894.

The train arriving at Barnesville Station about 11 o'clock a. m. will be met on Friday, the 11th. Should any arrive on later trains they will inquire of the stage-driver for Thomas Gott or Benjamin White. We ask our brethren to come, also all others who may desire so to do.

ANY one knowing the present address of Mrs. P. Knight, of Cat Creek, Ga., will please send the same to this office.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EVER since the SIGNS OF THE TIMES has attained its wide national circulation we have been importuned by our subscribers, as well as by those who have had no special interest in sustaining the publication, to open our columns to advertisements; but never having had any experience in that line of business we have hesitated to make the venture. Since the commencement of this volume, however, there has been a combination of circumstances that has encouraged us to make the experiment, and we therefore make the following announcement, viz.:

We will receive for the last page of the paper suitable and reliable advertisements at the following net rates, viz.:

Inches	1 week	4 weeks	13 weeks	26 weeks	52 weeks
1/2	$.95	$ 3.60	$ 8.50	$12.00	$ 22.50
1	1.90	7.20	17.00	24.00	45.00
2	3.80	14.40	34.00	48.00	90.00
3	5.70	21.60	51.00	72.00	135.00
4	7.60	28.80	68.00	96.00	180.00

A LADIES DESK.

THE Chautauqua Ladies' Desk is not only ornamental, but convenient, affording a safe place for keeping correspondence, etc. Its three roomy shelves are just the place to keep those choice books always in demand. This desk is offered free by the Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. of Buffalo, N. Y., whose advertisement is in another column, to any one who will buy, at once, a box of their "Sweet Home" Soap. Last year several thousand families received one of these desks and were highly pleased. The Chautauqua Lamp made this Company a good reputation (they can still be had), but the desk has eclipsed all. No other one article of household furnishing ever went into so many homes of this great and glorious land and gave such universal satisfaction.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., March 27, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The inclosed letter from brother Durand which I forward to you for publication in the SIGNS will speak for itself. After his letter to which he refers was published in the SIGNS, I wrote to him suggesting some questions, and saying that while I was not satisfied that the view of the text which he had given was correct, yet I was not satisfied that it was incorrect; and I suggested some things and some Scriptures which seemed to me to bear against the view which he had given. The inclosed letter is the pleasant reply which he has sent me to the suggestions which my letter to him contained. I think that such interchange of views is profitable when mutual respect and forbearance can be shown, and when the chief aim is to know the truth, and to search the Scriptures that we may learn their testimony concerning Jesus. It often occurs that when two brethren converse about a text of Scripture upon which each one supposes that the other is wrong, they each find out that their differences are more apparent than real, and that their different views of the text are not opposite, but rather supplementary to each other. I would not say that the Scriptures are many sided, so that one may see one side of them, and another side may appear to another, but rather that they are broader than we think for; and no one of us is capable of looking upon and comprehending the whole meaning of any Scripture. To one may be given to see a truth which is needful for him in some Scripture, while to another may be given to see a still further meaning in that same Scripture, which however is not contrary to, but in harmony with the truth which the other sees. Is it not partly, at least, with reference to diversities of this kind that Paul speaks when in Philippians he says, "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise [diverse] minded, God shall reveal even this to you?" Union and oneness in faith among God's people never comes about by argument, but by revelation. Nevertheless it is good to tell what we see, for thus fellowship is made to abound. Disputations do not promote fellowship, but testimony does.

cerning which brother Durand wrote, and of which he continues to speak in the inclosed letter, I will say that I had not thought of it as referring to what might be experienced here in time, through faith, by the people of God; and neither had I thought of it as referring especially to the resurrection of the body at the last day; but rather that it related to the general fact that when we should be done with this life and with this world, we should at once be clothed with life and immortality in the spiritual and eternal world. I had thought of it as meaning in substance the same thing as when Paul says, "Having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better."—Phil. i. 23. Or when he says, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Phil. i. 21. Or as Peter said, "Knowing that I must shortly put of this my tabernacle," &c.—2 Peter i. 14. And, as said before, it had never occurred to me as applying to any present experience of believers in Jesus. This in substance I wrote to brother Durand. His letter to which I have referred was full of experimental truth, which I enjoyed for its own sake, even when doubting the propriety of so applying that portion of the Scripture of which he was writing, 2 Cor. v. 1-5.

I desire to say now, as brother Durand has said substantially in the letter which I inclose, that I am now, and have long been, fully convinced that the saint's experience of glory in the future world does not differ in kind, but only in degree, from his experience of grace here. It is true I believe, as some one has said, that "grace is but glory begun, while glory is but grace finished." It seems to me like the bunches of the grapes of Eshcol which the spies brought from Canaan. All the land was like these few fruits; but these bunches of grapes were by no means all the fullness of the land. Our experiences of grace here are spiritual, as is all that the heavenly world contains; but here we see but in part. We shall be at home in that heavenly world, because what we shall see and enjoy there will not be strange to us, only that its abundance will be overwhelming. The beholding of the Father, which shall suffice us, the bearing of his image, with which we shall be satisfied, is just what constitutes our joy now, when our faith leads us unto them. But there and then no portion of our large desire will remain unsatisfied. And many Scriptures present that which is now and here in our experience, while at the same time they assure us of the glory that shall follow. So with regard to the text of which brother Durand wrote. He and I may think differently about what the special meaning of the Holy Spirit in those words may be, and yet I think we have a right to say that whether the special meaning of the words be our present experience, or an experience yet to be enjoyed when we leave these mortal shores, there is no vital difference, since our experience here is but the beginning of the final glory, while the final glory is but the finishing of the present experience. I ought, I think, to frankly say that some expressions in the connection of 2 Cor. v. and the first verses seem yet to me too strong to be limited to any present experience; and yet I can, I think, appreciate all that brother Durand has written upon the subject, and I gladly send his letter to the SIGNS. I have been, I suppose, rather slow to believe that some Scriptures, like the one under consideration, relate to a present experience; because if there be a heaven beyond, we can know it from the testimony of the Scripture alone; and so there must be some portions of the word that tell us about it. I want to believe in a heaven, and I want some scriptural testimony that there is a heaven and a future life in heaven; and for this reason I may be too ready to understand some Scriptures as referring to that world, when in reality they do not. In my thoughts about that world I always carry my present joy and communion with the Lord and with his people along, and think of it all as an unbroken experience, begun here and perfected there. As the kingdom of God here is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, so it seems to me that heaven beyond is but all this perfected; and just as hell beyond is but wickedness and sin perfected or finished, bringing forth death, with all its shame, corruption and sorrow, so heaven beyond is but righteousness perfected, and bringing to the soul life, with all its crown of glory, immortality and joy.

One other thought in brother Durand's letter to me I wish to allude to with approval. He speaks of making the Scriptures the final test, and not our feelings, or what we may think are revelations to us; and neither are we to make the writings of any man since the days of the apostles our standard. I want to express my cordial approbation of this. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." This is as true now as when it was penned by the inspired prophet; and neither our own thoughts nor the thoughts of others can escape this test. The Bible contains the only perfect record of God's will, or of the doctrine that is according to godliness. I trust that I do hold, as I ought, in great respect, and even reverence, the feeblest breathings of the veriest babe in Christ. When I meet one of God's dear children, whether an old man or a child, I feel that I ought to put off my shoes from off my feet, for that this is holy ground. God is with that one, as he was in the bush that burned and was not consumed. But yet I want to remember that they are yet in the flesh, and so may speak wrong. So with the old writers. I read many of them with profit and spiritual comfort, and feel that they are of the one family of God; and yet even they, great, good, wise and spiritual men as they undoubtedly were, were fallible, and often did misinterpret the Scriptures and held sentiments and used practices unwarranted by the Scriptures; and so their teachings, like ours, must be brought to the one infallible testimony; and we ourselves must neither accept them as our guides, nor on the other hand boast over them as though we are wiser than they were. They and we alike are to be regarded as weak, fallible men, having but one infallible guide and teacher. In my writing and speaking I do not often quote from other men, either of former generations or of the present generation, lest I should seem to quote them as authority. At times their words seem to me to convey the truth better than any words I can frame together; but yet, for the reason named above, I think it best to use my own manner of expression, faulty though it may be. I would not be understood as saying that it is wrong to quote another's words, but I have felt desirous of avoiding even the appearance of making any uninspired man an authority. Neither would I be understood as condemning the widest reading of good men possible; on the contrary I approve of it; only let us make no man our standard; and let us, above all other reading, read the Scriptures. I do hold in high regard such men as Toplady, John Gill, and many others like them; but I cannot accept them as authority. We ought not to let even such men as they judge for us. Let us go to the pure fountains which we know are not defiled; and even then we derive no certain benefit unless we have God's Holy Spirit to unlock their treasures for us and reveal the things of God.

I had not thought to write so much when I began, but my pen has followed my mind. I trust the God of wisdom may lead us into all truth and into further understanding of the Scriptures.

I remain your brother in the hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

Ocala, Fla., March 16, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—Your letter was received nearly a month ago at Winter Park, and I have been waiting for a convenient time to reply. When I am away from home, moving from place to place, constantly meeting new acquaintances, "visiting," and attending miscellaneous appointments, it is not easy for me to find an opportunity to write upon a subject that requires careful and uninterrupted meditation. I will not wait any longer, as I have a little time at my disposal now.

You have written in your usual kind and thoughtful manner, and have been careful to disclaim any intention of controversy, and to avoid even the appearance of it. If all of us as careful of our brethren's feelings, there would be much less trouble among brethren who entertain different views upon any subject. I wish to say that I desire that brethren who do not agree with any view which I have expressed publicly should present their objections, and set forth their own understanding, as publicly as I have presented mine. I have been benefited by such a course on the part of faithful brethren who have spoken or written thus in love, sometimes by being made to see that I was in error, and sometimes by seeing where I failed in clearness and correctness of expression. If I am writing with a view to my own reputation, then my vanity will be wounded when I am forced to acknowledge that any view I have expressed is an error. If this should be the case with me, yet I hope I might be satisfied that such a wound would be among the best results of the criticism which exposes the error. But I am thankful that I have not been troubled much with such feelings. I think my soul is made glad whenever I have seen the truth newly presented, whether by myself or by another, in the ordinary consideration of a subject, and also when presented as opposed to a view I had previously held. I am thankful that I have found it so easy to acknowledge an error that has been shown me, when I could see it. Some might probably wonder at my saying this, for there have been many views of mine which brethren from time to time have thought that I ought to see were erroneous, and yet I could not acknowledge them as errors. When one assumes a dictatorial manner, and uses harshness or ridicule, and employs the arts of a debater or wrestler, to trip and throw, I want to get clear of such controversy as soon as I can consistently with my obligations as a defender of the truth.

I am glad you have written. You have presented some thoughts, and referred to some Scriptures, which are important in the full consideration of the subject of my article to which you are referring. Your suggestions do not present to my mind any essential difference from the view I tried to express. The one point of difference is not inconsistent with my view, I think. I will now refer particularly to some things in your letter.

I believe that each child of God receives what true and vital knowledge he has of the meaning of any Scripture by revelation of the Spirit. No one of the Lord's children has ever been prepared or allowed to give that knowledge to another. But I do not understand the expression of one's belief that the meaning of a certain Scripture has been revealed to him to be a proof, or any part of the proof, that his view is the true meaning of the Scripture. I have never intended it as such myself, nor have I accepted it from another. That proof will be found in the Scriptures, and will be attested by the experience of the saints. I have read views which brethren said had been, as they believed, revealed to them by the Spirit as the true interpretation of a certain text, when I had other views of the same text, which I also thought had been taught me by the Spirit. As the views were both true in themselves, whether the meaning of that Scripture or not, I could easily think that the Spirit had made the revelation in each case; not that the Spirit would reveal two antagonistic interpretations of the same text; but "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation," and no one has ever been given a rigid form of words to be set down as the only authorized expression of the meaning of a certain portion of the word, from which there can henceforth be no departure. I agree with you that every revelation must be tried by the word, instead of the word by the revelation. This I have been dwelling upon in my writing and speaking in the past few years; for it has been forcibly pressed upon my mind by the effort of theologians to try revelations, experiences and thoughts, not by the Scriptures, but by the expressed revelations, experiences and thoughts of other Christians in the present and past ages, and to make the words adopted by some man or councils of men as the true definition of texts and expressions of doctrine, like that bed to which every one must be conformed by stretching or cutting off. The word is the Lord's to-day, as it was when he inspired the writers and speakers; and it is spoken to his people now as well as then, not to gratify curiosity, or pride, but to supply a felt need, as food to the hungry, clothing to the naked, healing to the sick; and the same portion will come with power to, and supply the need of, thousands upon thousands under all their great variety of circumstances and needs.

The understanding which I formerly had of the two houses in the text, 2 Cor. v. 1, was that the one meant the natural body of the saints, and the other the risen, celestial body; and this has been the general understanding, so far as I know, as expressed in books. You do not hold this view, so we do not see differently in this main point. The expression of the apostle Peter about putting off this tabernacle, evidently referring to the time of his departure, need not, therefore, be further considered in this regard, as he evidently does not refer to the same thing that Paul does by the expression, "our earthly house of this tabernacle," which is to "be dissolved," not merely "put off." I have referred in my article to phrases in other parts of the Bible which appear to correspond with this, speaking of the "earthly tabernacle," and of the "greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;" the "tabernacle of God," which is "with men."

Your thoughts upon 2 Cor. iv. and last verse, as expressed at the funeral of Mrs. Grafton, are according to my understanding of the meaning of that text. One expression which you quote from what you said will intimate what I also understand concerning the first and following verses of the fifth chapter, "And the eternity of the unseen things, which are in Christ. These things are begun below; but they also fill eternity, and shall be ours forever."

These things which are in Christ are what I understand to be referred by the expression, "a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and, "our house which is from heaven." The only point upon which we may see differently is as to whether the apostle is referring to these things as begun here, as desired by the saints now to be experienced more and more perfectly, as that with which they long to be clothed upon, and as that which is realized more perfectly by the saints the more perfectly they are favored by the grace of God to walk blamelessly in the ordinances of the Lord; or whether he refers to the departure of the saints from this mortal state, and their entrance into the full enjoyment of those things in glory. I will give some of my reasons for thinking the first of these is his meaning.

1st. In the last of the preceding chapter the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" is worked for us while we are looking at the things which are not seen. That does not seem to me to express the condition of the saints in glory, but the effect upon them here in the midst of affliction, when they have a view by faith of "those things which God hath prepared for them that love him," exalting their souls in the Lord above all the fears and vanities and afflictions of this present time state, causing them to regard those afflictions as "light, and but for a moment," in comparison with the eternal weight of glory," which we now see that they bring to our view, or "work for us,"

"As darkness shows us worlds of light,
We never saw by day."

2d. In the preceding portion of the fourth chapter the apostle speaks of the troubles, persecutions, perplexities and various forms of affliction by which the apostles and other ministering servants of God are prepared to instruct, comfort and build up the people of God. It is only by death working in them that through their ministry the saints realize the working of life in them in the sense spoken of by the apostle; as he says in another place, "I protest by your rejoicing, which I have in Christ Jesus, I die daily." "Bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus," causes the life of Jesus to be manifest in their mortal body. From this state of affliction, through death working in them, the apostle is assured by faith that they shall be raised up to all the blessed experiences of the gospel which their ministry presents as the heritage of the saints. I formerly thought, as you say you have, that the raising up of both the apostles and those to whom they minister, spoken of in iv. 14, referred to their departure from this world. But the place and manner of its introduction here, with what the apostle says in other places, has caused me to regard it of late as referring to that deliverance by faith in Jesus, through the power of his resurrection from the power and dominion of the affliction and death to which he has referred.—See Phil. iii. 8-15. To the Colossians (i. 28) the apostle says, "whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." This refers to the effect of the apostles' labors upon the saints, establishing them in gospel order. It has appeared to me that in this place the apostle is expressing his confidence that the apostles also will be raised up from this pressure of affliction which he has so pathetically alluded to here and elsewhere, and presented in the same gospel liberty, the liberty of the sons of God for which they long, in which the saints are presented through their labor in the apostolic ministry. Paul could present himself as with them in all their afflictions, in their "weakness and fear and much trembling;" and he will also be presented with them in all the privileges and blessings of the gospel which he preaches to them. And this appears to me to be experienced in the way expressed in the last verse of chapter four.

3d. All the saints shall enter glory alike, in perfect conformity to the image of God's dear Son. Their entrance and enjoyment there will not depend upon the work of the ministry here, nor will their enjoyment in heaven be any greater or less according to the merit of any work or walk here. He who performs a supposed duty here with regard to its effect upon his eternal state, is acting from a natural, selfish motive, and not by the leading of the Spirit. But the comfort of the saint here does depend upon his walk in obedience to the commands of Jesus. He cannot enjoy the peace of God while his conscience is burdened with transgression. He cannot have the manifest favor of God while walking in disobedience. He cannot enjoy those birthright privileges in his Father's house which he has sold for fleshly enjoyment. He cannot have the felt liberty of the sons of God while under the power of the bondage of corruption, deliverance from which can only be experienced while here by the power of faith, through the power of the resurrection of Jesus.

The apostle's labor, and his teaching to the saints, appear to me to be not so much, if at all, to picture to them the joys of heaven, and to repeat to them assurances that they will one day get there, as to urge upon them by every spiritual consideration to walk in the Spirit, to adorn the doctrine of God their Savior, to strive together for the faith of the gospel, and to attain unto the perfection of Christ; and to declare unto them the true exaltation and glory of the saints when they walk as becometh the gospel of Christ. When they are favored to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, they are "filled with all the fullness of God."

5th. The expression, "If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked," does not appear to me to be applicable to the entrance of the saints into glory; but it seems to refer to what the apostle says in Phil. iii. 9, "That I may be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law." Those of the saints who depend, at any time, and to any extent, upon any work or merit of their own for acceptance with God for his favor, are found naked before him whenever he appears to them. With such clothing on they are made ashamed in his presence. This is an experience which few saints have not had. Many, if not all, have known it to some extent while clinging to some earthly hope, or exalting some work of their own.

6th. The declaration that when we are present with the body we are absent from the Lord, and the preference expressed by the apostle to be rather absent from the body and present with the Lord, I cannot see as referring to that absence from the body and presence with the Lord which they experience upon their departure from earth and time, but to an experience of the saints while still here. It could hardly be said that no saint is present with the Lord till he goes hence, although there is a sense in which he will then be with Jesus as never before. But the apostle seems here to be speaking of two things, both of which are known in the experience of the saints here. They know the blessed experience of being present with the Lord when they are walking by faith, and not yielding to fleshly propensities, desires and fears; as they know the sad experience of desolation that follows a being "at home in the body," finding or seeking satisfaction from the treasures of this world, seeking the favor of men, depending upon worldly wisdom and strength, and walking after the flesh. Then what coldness, death, bitterness, unrest. It is fearful. The apostles knew the terror of the Lord when he inflicts the promised stripes for disobedience, and they persuade his people against this "at home" feeling in the body being yielded to by them. Every child of God knows enough of the terror of this state to wish to be kept from it. But how deceitful is the natural heart, and how gradual the departure of the false way from the right one.

But this absence from the Lord is not always through open and bold transgression, but through that bitter feeling that we sometimes have of the depravity of the flesh, and the sensitiveness to afflictions and disappointments; and the apostle says, "We labor, that whether present or absent we may be accepted of him." When we walk in darkness and have no light, we are yet graciously commanded to trust in the Lord, and stay upon our God.

I would write more, and on other subjects, but must close now.

Your brother affectionately,
SILAS H. DURAND.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Feb. 26, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have felt a desire a long time to write you; but feeling I could not do it as I desired, I have resisted the impression, yet it will follow me to do so. If I could write as I desire, and in a spirit of love to the faithful in Christ, I would at all times desire to exalt the Lord and the precious Redeemer by whose power and grace I have been upheld until this present moment. My mind so often dwells on the past, the years that have gone by, and the blessed seasons that I have enjoyed with the dear people of God in hours of deep sorrow and affliction. How dear have been such seasons. Sweet has been the communion, and dear their fellowship. Hundreds of those dear saints are now resting from their labors, sweetly sleeping in their graves, and their happy and redeemed souls are now basking in the full blaze of eternal glory, being made like their glorified Redeemer. How dear is the fellowship of saints, a bond of union that can never be broken. This union does not grow in the garden of nature; it springs from the fountain of eternal love, and is brought about by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit, which makes dead sinners alive, and awakens from the death of trespasses and sins, which leads to repentance, and reveals Christ as the way, the truth and the life. This blessed work brings strangers and foreigners nigh by the blood of Jesus. So the fellowship of saints springs from the ocean of God's love. This golden chain is fastened to the bleeding cross of Jesus. It goes back to Abel and runs down through all time until it takes hold of the last jewel of the cross. It is all linked together, and it cannot be broken. It is sealed by the blood of the Son of God. The fellowship of the saints is a sacred bond. It is of infinite value and precious. Did it not abound in the days of the apostles and martyrs when they went to prison and to death, and when they met in caves and dens of earth to worship their glorious Lord and Master, who gave his precious life to ransom them from death and bring them nigh to God? Now the dear saints are under that same power of love and faith. How carefully should this blessed fellowship be cherished. It is the love of God shed abroad in the heart, and unites to Jesus and his chosen people. The fellowship of God's children is sometimes marred through the imperfections of the flesh; but it cannot be broken. We know the enemy is ever on the alert to mar the peace of the saints and break fellowship for a time. If he can get his cloven foot into the building of mercy he is satisfied; but that is all he can do, for the King of Zion will destroy his hold. If the love of God abounds in the hearts of God's people, fellowship will flow from heart to heart, and true charity will abound, which suffereth long and is kind; and they will be knit together in love. This blessed love will cover a multitude of imperfections, the reigning power of self will be on the background, and the blessed fruit of the Spirit will be seen, which yields the peaceable fruits of righteousness to those who are exercised thereby. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." It is wondrous love, boundless grace. O that it might be said of the dear saints, "Behold, how these love one another." My mind goes back in my experience to some fifty-five years ago. My heart was so drawn out after the dear saints. My heart was drawn out to all the patriarchs, prophets and apostles, and to all the saints in by-gone ages, and it seemed to me that I communed with them. My heart was filled with love, and I felt that I was willing to bear the reproach of the cross. Such seasons are sweet and blessed. But am I one of that number? I often think of the poet, and feel to say,

"When thou, my righteous Judge, shalt come
To fetch thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at thy right hand?
I love to meet among them now,
Before thy gracious feet to bow,
Though vilest of them all;
But can I bear the piercing thought,
What if my name should be left out
When thou for them shalt call?"

I trust I do love the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. I feel pained to see anything that looks like discord or variance. The kingdom of Christ is but one; her doctrine is but one. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." Antichrist has lords many and gods many; many faiths, many laws, many baptisms; but this is not the church of God. Nations may fall and kingdoms crumble to atoms, but the kingdom of God will never be shaken. All the floods of error and delusion may beat upon her, but she cannot be moved. The gates of hell cannot prevail against her, for she is founded upon the Rock of ages. I have no doubt but trying times await the church of God. Persecutions may drive all the dear saints together, so they may cease to strive about words to no profit, but come meekly down to the simple word of truth, and like little children sit at the feet of Jesus.

I often think of your dear departed father. He was a bold defender of the truth, and labored and suffered much persecution for the truth. His labors were blessed of the Lord, in preaching and in writing, and his works follow him. I remember with grateful emotions his great kindness and gospel fellowship in my hours of deep affliction and trial. His last visit to my home was touching, when in family worship he read in regard to Paul parting with his brethren. He was melted to tears, as were all the rest; and truly it was his last farewell. Yes, the dear servants of God, many of them, have gone, my precious husband among the number. How happy and blessed are they now with their glorified Redeemer, with all the heavenly host. Wonderful, wonderful love. Glory to God in the highest! May the mighty Redeemer be with and sustain us by the power of his Spirit; and may all our dear brethren editors be thus led and sustained, so that they may unitedly labor in behalf of the peace and prosperity of Zion. May peace and love abound, and glorious harmony, among the saints, so that sweet fellowship will flow from heart to heart, and the little ones be strengthened; for some are weak and feeble among the fold.

KNOWING YOUR ELECTION.

"KNOWING, brethren beloved, your election of God."—1 Thess. i. 4.

Whatsoever may be the judgment of men on the subject, it is certain that the doctrine of the election of the saints in Christ Jesus is one of the principles of the system of salvation which is revealed in the Scriptures. There can be no experimental knowledge of divine grace but that necessarily involves this principle as the only ground of hope for the favor of God to be manifested toward guilty sinners. When the Lord in his providential government in time claimed his portion, he found Jacob "in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye." This record does not state that the reason for the choice of Jacob could be traced to any merit which he possessed as a man, nor yet was it in consideration of works of righteousness foreseen in him. Paul cites this illustration in proof that the election of God is exclusively by grace, and not of works, lest any man should boast. "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger; as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated."—Rom. ix. 11-13. Until the enemies of truth and righteousness can destroy the plain meaning of this testimony, and disprove the whole volume of inspiration, there can be no possibility of refuting the declaration of the apostle, wherein he includes the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus with himself, saying, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved."—Eph. i. 3-6. Language cannot be so framed as to more definitely express the fact that the whole system of salvation originates in the electing love of God. In equally clear and unequivocal words the important truth is revealed that in this election of divine grace is secured the final deliverance of every subject of the love of God, not only from the penalty of sin, but also from its pollution and guilt. So that in denying the full and complete salvation of all the subjects of this election the enemy must reject the testimony of those holy men who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. With those who show such contempt for the word of the Lord we have no right nor disposition to contend. If we could convince their judgment of the truth, we could not hope to give them the love of it; so that they could only receive the belief which causes devils to tremble. It is far more profitable to labor for the encouragement of the afflicted and poor people for whose comfort all Scripture is given, than to seek for victory in argument with those who can neither know nor receive the things of the Spirit of God. When enemies assail the faith of the saints, they have the warrant of divine authority and example for contending earnestly for that faith; but when they become so strong in themselves that they seek to achieve honor to their own skill by provoking controversy with those who resist the truth, they are presumptuously tempting the Lord, and he will show them their weakness by giving them unto the power of the adversary for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Instead of this severe chastening being an evidence that they are not truly subjects of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, it is only in dealing with those whom he claims as his children that the Lord visits his chastening upon transgressors. So Wisdom says, "My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction; for whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."—Prov. iii. 11, 12.

To the weary pilgrims who are beset with doubts and fears, so that it seems presumptuous for them to claim that they positively "know" anything, it often appears that they cannot know their election of God. Neither can they realize that the apostle could have that knowledge concerning them. At times they do indeed feel that they know the election of God secures the salvation of every one whom he has chosen; and they have no doubt of the power of God in saving all whom he has ordained unto eternal life in Christ Jesus; but of their own interest in that salvation they have but a trembling hope. When they have the confidence of faith by which to rest in the election of God as the only foundation of their hope, no consideration of their own sinfulness can disturb their peace. Then to every accusation which is brought against them in consideration of the sin which doth so easily beset them, by faith they can answer, "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. 4-7. Since all our pollution and unworthiness was fully known to God when he chose us unto salvation, it is evident that no mountains of guilt can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. And, as if to make his grace more abundantly sure to those who mourn their subjection to the power of sin, Jesus says, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice; for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matt. ix. 12, 13. To those who are ready to perish in consideration of their own unrighteousness, there is all the riches of everlasting consolation in this gracious word of the Lord. Never are the saints tempted to doubt their interest in the redemption that is in Christ on the ground that they are too righteous to need that grace. He has never called to repentance one who could continue to be satisfied with his own righteousness. The very first effect of the entrance of his word in the heart of the sinner is the manifestation of such exceeding sinfulness as shows the justice of God in his condemnation. This light never fails to convince the one in whom it shines, so that every enlightened sinner confesses before God that his condemnation is just. Those who have learned this truth can never hope for acceptance in their own merit. To them there is infinite joy in the word of the Lord proclaiming that grace by which he saves his people from their sins. There can be no mistaking this joyful sound. Only those who are blessed of the Lord can ever know the glad tidings of great joy contained in this precious word of the gospel of divine grace. And this fact gives assurance that all the consolation of this truth belongs to every one who hears it as the joyful sound. They have in this knowledge the infallible evidence that they are led by the Spirit of God, and are therefore the sons of God. This is the only way in which any saint can know his election of God. The natural mind cannot receive this revelation, because it is known exclusively by the faith which is the fruit of the Spirit of God. This revelation never fails to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Hence, it must be alone by faith that any saint can know his election of God, or can receive that knowledge concerning others, in whom the Spirit of Christ is manifested by the fruit which is borne. In this knowledge there is nothing to puff up the pride of the carnal mind, nor does the possession of this assurance of your election of God lead to that presumption which would say, Let us continue in sin that grace may abound. On the contrary, the Spirit of Christ finds in this perfect knowledge the very highest motive for constant aspiration after holiness, and unceasing desire to be free from sin.

The apostle does not address this language indiscriminately to the world of natural men. To the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ, he says, "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father." These are the characters whom Paul designates as "brethren beloved;" and of the knowledge of their election of God he speaks confidently. In their walk according to the order of the gospel he finds the evidence of that election. It will be observed that this is directly the reverse of the system which is consistent with natural reason. All the doctrines and commandments of men are founded upon the theory that the saints by their works must secure their election of God. As specified in this address, the walk and conversation of these saints prove conclusively that they are brethren beloved of the apostle, and that they are subjects of that election of God which was settled in heaven before the world began. Nothing can be found in the revealed testimony of truth by which the subjects of divine favor are authorized to attribute their interest in this election of God to anything which they have done. As in the case of the sons of Isaac, the purpose of God was settled before they had any manifest existence. This is the election of God by which his people were blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ before the worlds were made, or time itself was created by the will of God.

The inestimable value of this revealed truth in the experience of the saints, is found in their deliverance by it from that legal bondage under which they were seeking to be justified by their own works. Since they were chosen in Christ before they were manifest in the flesh, none of their works or wishes can have any weight in securing the benefits resulting to them from that choice. So far is that election of God from depending upon their obedience that the very reverse is declared to be the truth. Peter addresses the scattered saints as "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." Thus it is evident that the election of these strangers cannot depend upon that obedience which is itself secured in the election of divine grace.

Hence, not even the fact that they are conscious of their own vileness as rebels against the holy commandment of their God, nor the conviction of their own heart, by which they are condemned, can affect the testimony of faith assuring them according to electing love before the worlds were made, of their interest in the eternal choice of God in Christ Jesus. Thus it is seen that this vital principle of the doctrine of God our Savior is not a mere notion, over which men may argue; it is the very foundation upon which God has built the whole system of salvation for sinners. Without this truth there can be no hope for any transgressor of the holy law of God. When the blessed Comforter takes and shows to the mourning captive who is without hope, that heavenly provision of grace by which the love of God chose his people in Christ before sin was manifest, then the principle of election is full of glory in his sight. And throughout all his subsequent experience, when by grace that choice of God is shown as his only deliverance from the power of sin, which is ever bringing him into captivity, then he learns in every trial that this provision of divine grace not only secures his salvation from sin in the final triumph of electing love, but that it is in this same election that God is his refuge and strength in every conflict, and the victory is always given him through the same election.

Since there can be no separating those who are "beloved of God" from the subjects of this election, it cannot affect the signification of this text if the marginal rendering be substituted for the reading as quoted from the authorized version. According to that rendering, it would read, "Knowing, brethren beloved of God, your election." Certainly the election of God embraces all who are beloved of him, and no others. The whole experience of the saints attests constantly this election of God even in directing their steps, and giving them his protection in every time of need. So, the tried saints may sing, with David, "If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, now may Israel say, if it had not been the Lord who was on our side when men rose up against us; then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us; then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul; then the proud waters had gone over our soul. Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us a prey to their teeth."—Psalm cxxiv. The doctrine of personal and eternal election is clearly expressed in this psalm, as it is in all the Scriptures; and the saints can never afford to forget that all their hope for time and for eternity must rest upon this indispensable principle. "Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God." May this knowledge be abundantly ministered to all who trust in the grace of God for salvation from sin and death, and in the light of this truth may each trembling believer find refuge and strength while resting in the love of God, and looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of their faith.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

The strong have to bear with the infirmities of the weak. My dear brethren, I am weak and feeble. I need constant strengthening grace. I know and feel that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing. I have come down to the time of "old age," and have seen much of the goodness of the Lord. Of all the children of grace I ought to be the most grateful and humble. I have known and felt affliction and sorrow; deep and sore trials, deep waters, I have passed through, and the waves and billows have rolled over me. But he who is a strong hold in the day of trouble has been my refuge and my high tower. So in the Lord alone I desire to glory and bless his holy name forever. "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints!" All his works praise him; and should not his saints bless him?

Will you please forgive my folly in trying to write you in my weakness and infirmity? Will you throw a mantle of charity over all, and remember me as one of the weak ones of the flock, who desires to know the fellowship of saints?

Your aged sister in hope of perfection in Christ,

M. M. HASSELL.

P. S.—Dear brethren Beebe, I have scribbled you a long letter; but after all I feel to hesitate to send it. It is so badly done you may not be able to read it. My sight is so poor that I cannot see to read a word out of my right eye, and my left eye is very dim. I hardly can see to read my letters after writing. I desire to feel resigned to God's blessed will. I humbly hope we will meet where sight will be perfected in glory. No dimness of sight there. I hope you will accept this from a weakling. I will be seventy-nine my next birthday. Time flies, and the end will soon come with us all. My kind remembrance to all the faithful with you.

KINGMAN, Kan., Nov. 29, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As I have two new subscribers I will send their subscriptions with my own for the dear old messenger, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I walked eight miles to see two of the many Baptists in a famine land, spiritually speaking. I hope I was suddenly directed and suddenly started to see them, without any previous preparation. I had never met them before, but we had a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, not to be forgotten soon either by myself or them. I was hungry, and so were they. We put our money to the exchangers, and I think we more than doubled it. I have never met two better and sounder Baptists in all my life. They dropped everything and gave their whole time to talking of the goodness of the Lord. I took the SIGNS to them, and they were more than glad to have the opportunity to take it. If this shall find a place in the SIGNS, I would say to my dear brethren, Go out into the highways and hedges and hunt the scattered lambs of the fold of Christ, and compel them to come into the borders of the family circle. They will be glad you came around and gave them an opportunity to get our family paper. Get them to drop some of their political papers and spend their money for something they need, and which will benefit them spiritually. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Let us try to live for our brethren as well as for ourselves. Dear children of God, if we had all the wealth of the world without our hope we would be miserably poor. The richest millionaire would give all he had to live a while longer on earth; but the poor christian would sing,

"Hinder me not; come, welcome death, I'll gladly go with you."

We are so apt to crave the things of this world, and all feel more or less like saying, Let us have more of the things of this world, and then we will try to give more of our time to the cause of Christ. But Jesus said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He feedeth the small insects of the earth and clothes the grass of the field. How much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith? Think who owns this world and all that is in it, and then think how much you own of this world that God did not give you. If you have much of the goods of this world, remember that the great God gave it to you. Do not think because a brother has not as much as you have that he is a bad manager. If you were placed in his stead you would do exactly as he does. Who maketh thee to differ from another? What hast thou, O man, that thou hast not received? It is God that maketh one to differ from another. We have not anything that we did not receive from the hand of the great God. It is God that giveth, and it is God that taketh away, no matter how much or how small the amount may be. God doeth his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

Your brother in hope of a better world,

J. M. DULEY.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind.

DEAR BRETHREN:—This morning I keep up such a talking with my dear kindred in Christ, and for the sake of some with whom I am personally acquainted I will try to put a few of my thoughts on paper. I tremble when I think of my weakness, and pray the Lord to guide my pen. I have thought much of the unwritten language expressed by a look or a sigh. The poor publican stood afar off, and could not so much as raise his eyes to heaven, but smote upon his breast, and said, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." A sister who followed along after the church and fed beside the shepherds' tents for twenty years, had not courage to enter the fold. Her downcast eyes and solemn looks during our meetings would speak the language, "If I were only worthy I would love to live with this people." Finally an old sister, a deacon's wife, took her by the hand and said, "Come, live with us; we understand your language." Thus she was enabled to rise to her feet and speak of Jesus and his power to save; and she continued a faithful member as long as she lived.

Dear old sister West, of our church, now ninety years old, fell and broke her hip ten years ago. For many weeks she was a great sufferer, and some of the time was so blind that she could not see to read, or even see her friends. Her physician said she would never walk again, and would, perhaps, never see again. But after some weeks she could sit up in her bed, which she had placed near an east window, and had the SIGNS handed her. "The Testament was too heavy for me," she said. At first she could only read the heading in large print, SIGNS OF THE TIMES. She said, "That seemed like speaking to an old friend, and my heart was filled with praise that I could see that much." The next day she sat up in the window, and had a white door opened against her, so that it reflected on her paper, and she read one page of the SIGNS. She said, "Then I thanked the Lord for restoring to me my sight. That reading seemed sweeter to me than honey." Now this dear sister walks without crutch or cane; but she is feeble and hard of hearing. She cannot hear preaching, but enjoys reading, and tells me during my frequent visits to her what she has read. Mary Parker's writings she always mentions, and tears run down her face when she mentions the extreme sufferings of the much afflicted and tried sister. On the first Sunday in June, 1893, it being sister West's birthday, she was taken to meet with the church and commune with them. She said, "I cannot hear your voices, but I can see the image of the blessed Master in your countenances. I thank him for his many mercies, and for this blessed privilege of sitting with you at the Master's table." At one time she asked for the church to sing the hymn, "O for a closer walk with God," &c.

LINA W. BECK.

SANDUSKY, Ala., March 3, 1894.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have passed over the true time a little to send on my remittance for the SIGNS. I have held back awhile hoping I might find a new subscriber, but so far have failed. I wish I could send a hundred or more. I am of the opinion that if the SIGNS could be established as a dollar weekly the subscription list would still increase, it would be so cheap. It is already the cheapest, and, I think, the strongest paper among our people. It was founded upon a solid platform of doctrine; and now, in the sixty-second year of its age, so far as I can judge, it maintains the same old principles by the editors and correspondents. The senior editor and some of the pioneer writers have gone hence to share in their inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away; but the Lord in his goodness has raised up others to take their places, who still contend for the old faith, and do not yield one inch of the ground occupied by the primitive fathers. For this we should all be thankful, and endeavor to cast the mantle of charity over the imperfections of those who assail these sacred principles with unbecoming epithets, as they, like some of old, "know not what they do."

The eighth number of the SIGNS for this year has reached me, and the matter of each number has been to me excellent and encouraging. I have read and reread Elder Curry's article in the last number, because he took a peculiar and interesting subject to write upon. He has given us a more complete exposition of the terms "fate" and "fatalism" than I had ever seen before, and I am not prepared to take any issue against him on any point he has set forth. My opinion is that he has fastened it upon the parties it belongs to, and has cleared the Old Baptists of the charge. It remains for those other parties to wear it, or clear themselves if they can. They may say they do not believe it; but their system proves it, and they will have to change their system to come clear. Nothing short of predestination of all things will bring them entirely out; for Elder Curry has plainly shown that where predestination stops fatalism begins. Those of our brethren who are trying to testify on both sides of this question had better drop one or the other. It is hard to understand children that speak half in the speech of two nations. I suppose Elder Curry's congregations are as intelligent as any Old Baptists, and he states that they could not tell what the able minister referred to was driving at. If that minister should fall in with Elder Curry's article he will find some food for thought, and ought to make a profitable resolve. The ministers of God are commanded to speak comfortably to Jerusalem; but there is no comfort to be derived from one who lampoons predestination. If this word, with all its concomitants, is not just as God saw it from eternity, who can tell in what particular he is disappointed? I would that we could all say, with Paul, "Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe;" that when we come to lay our armor by we may also say, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." These words of Paul fill me with emotions that I cannot express.

I will close this imperfect scribble, and leave it to your better judgment how to dispose of it. "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing."

Yours in the afflictions of the gospel of Christ,

P. J. POWELL.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR dear brother, Deacon M. Allen, departed this life Jan. 21st, 1894, at the residence of his son, Mr. Henry Allen, in Harrison Co., Texas, at the advanced age of 82 years, 9 months and 6 days.

The deceased was born April 15th, 1811, in Jasper Co., Ga. He received a hope that his sins were forgiven, and united with the Enon Church, Muscogee Co., Ga., and was baptized by Elder J. G. Willingham in 1834. He was therefore a member of the Primitive Baptist Church about fifty-nine years, and for several years prior to his death a Deacon in that body. By reference to Vol. lviii., No. 20, of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, a sketch of his christian experience may be seen. He moved to Texas many years ago, and lived and died an honorable citizen of Harrison Co. He and his wife raised several children. The writer does not know the number, nor the date of his wife's death, but she preceded him to the grave several years. Brother Allen held a high position in the estimation of many brethren, sisters and friends, who will long remember his soundness and faithfulness and interest in the welfare of Zion. He was a great hand to travel to and from meetings, often visiting sister churches. We shall sadly miss his presence; but we are thankful to believe that he has gone

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And sabbaths never end."

ALSO,

Mrs. Penelope Scarbrough, wife of our brother J. N. Scarbrough, passed from this mode of existence on March 12th, 1894, at 2:25 o'clock a. m.

Sister Scarbrough was the daughter of James and Elizabeth Satterwhite, and was born in Harris Co., Ga., Nov. 1st, 1823, and was therefore in her seventy-first year. She was married to brother Scarbrough on Dec. 4th, 1853. To them were born two sons and two daughters, all of whom, except one daughter, are still living.

Sister Scarbrough experienced a hope in Christ in early life, and united with the Union Church, in Russell Co., Ala., in 1852, and was baptized by Elder Tate. She moved with her husband to Texas in the winter of 1853 and 1854, and was in the constitution of the Bluff Springs Church, in Harrison Co., in the year 1860. She has ever since that time lived a sound, consistent and esteemed member of said church. She was of a meek and quiet disposition, and we have ever regarded her as a devoted and faithful companion to her husband and mother to her children. For several days prior to her death she realized her situation, and talked quietly and calmly of the approaching end, leaving abundant evidence that the change was a happy one. May the good Lord afford that comfort to the mourners which he only can give.

The writer was present on the occasion of the burial, and tried to speak to the comfort of the mourners, using as a text 1 Corinthians xv. 48, 49.

ALSO,

Augustus Arnold peacefully and quietly fell asleep in Jesus on Feb. 15th, 1894, at the house of his father, in Upshur Co., Texas. He was the son of J. B. and S. C. Arnold, and was born in the state of Alabama, April 24th 1869, and was therefore 24 years, 9 months and 22 days of age. His disease was typhoid fever.

"Gus" was of good moral character, and possessed a kind, genial disposition, and therefore had many friends, as was evidenced by the large attendance at his burial. He did not belong to the church, but left satisfactory evidence to those who witnessed his death that he possessed a good hope through grace of a better life beyond this vale of tears. The following particulars were given me by his uncle, who was with him some time before he died:

"About four hours before he passed away he began to show signs that he knew that death was near. He called for his brother Joe's baby; and when it was brought to him he took it in his arms and said, 'Come to me. God bless your little soul! Just such as you came from heaven; there are many like you up yonder.' Shortly after this he called to his uncle, D. A. Culpepper, and asked, 'Where are all the women? [they being out of the room at the time.] Tell them all to come in and stand where I can see them, and where they can see me. My time is about up. Now, I want you all to sing.' On being asked what he wanted sung he said, 'Anything that's good.' 'Grace!' 'tis a charming sound,' was sung. During the singing he lay perfectly quiet, with his eyes turned heavenward; not a muscle seemed to move. Before this he was very nervous. Afterward he said, 'Sing another short piece, and I'll leave you.' A young man in the assembly started the piece, 'There's a land that is fairer than day.' He stopped him, and said, 'Don't sing that here; sing something good. Sing, The day is past and gone.' After this was sung he said, 'I hate to leave you all, but I must go.' He then called his relatives (several of whom were present) to him one at a time, and bade them an affectionate farewell, saying, 'All who want to, come and kiss me.' Being asked by his uncle, D. A. Culpepper, if he thought it would be a happy change with him, he said, 'Of course it will.' He then seemed to sink for a little while, and then revived again. About this time his brother Joseph, who had been absent, came in. In bidding him farewell he said, 'I want you to be a better boy than you have been. This old world is nothing compared to the one to which I am going. I have now said about what I want to say. I must go; my time is up.' His father said, 'You revived a little while ago; you may revive again.' He said, 'No, I won't; I only revived to wait until Joe came.' A few minutes after this he passed quietly away. Many other things than those mentioned transpired during the dying hours, which were strong additional testimony that 'Gus' was both a believer in and a partaker of that salvation which is solely by grace. May this glorious thought afford consolation to the many bereaved relatives and friends."

May God enable them to realize that their loss, which is but for a short time, is his eternal gain.

"O happy soul, who safely past

Thy weary warfare here,
Arrived at Jesus' feet at last,
And ended all thy care.

"No more shall sickness break thy rest,
Or pain create the smart;

No more shall doubts disturb thy breast,
Or sin afflict thine heart."

H. B. JONES.

LONGVIEW, Texas, March 20, 1894.

DIED—At the residence of her brother-in-law, Wm. Turner, of Orford, Ontario, March 8th, 1894, Sarah McMillan, daughter of brother John McMillan, aged 37 years.

Her disease was dyspepsia, turning to consumption of the bowels, from which she suffered very severely at times, but was never heard to murmur or complain, but was wonderfully patient through long months of lingering illness and pain, and was truly wasted to a skeleton. She was wonderfully supported through all her sickness by the unfailing grace of God, of which I desire to write a short sketch, which I hope may be of interest to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

I could tell about her natural amiability and kindness of disposition, but that is not what God's poor and afflicted people desire to hear; but, as the poet says, they desire that "grace all the work shall crown." As our dear friend gradually grew weaker from the effects of the disease, it was not to be hidden that her mind was sorely exercised as to her condition before God; and though she said but little or nothing, the earnestness of her countenance when conversation on spiritual things was going on was evidence that she realized the solemn position of a sinner passing into eternity. I had long felt that she was a subject of grace, although she never spoke of her hope to me; but from her conversation I knew that she knew and loved the doctrine of God our Savior, and had no use for any of the false systems of religion that are abroad in the earth, and which are all of the earth, earthy, and have no power to benefit a sensibly lost sinner. As our dear departed friend grew weaker and weaker it became more evident that her distress of soul was getting deeper and keener. I tried to encourage her hope, and quoted many passages of the word of truth that I thought were very applicable to her case, but all in vain; for while she knew it was all true, yet she was made to realize that the only thing that could help her was the Lord himself coming to her and shedding abroad his love in her heart. On one occasion I was telling her father some of my own experience in the adjoining room, not thinking she heard; but she called to me to come in and tell her again what I had been saying, and with tears from her eyes she told me how she had the same vision, but feared it was a delusion. My experience and hers being alike, comforted her in some measure; but she felt that was not what she wanted, but her desire was that the Lord would say in her own heart, "I am thy salvation." On another occasion she said she had the words come to her, "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come unto you." She said she could rejoice, but only for a moment, as it were, when all again was gloom and despondency. But the appointed time for her deliverance came, and all the powers of darkness had to flee away before the presence of him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and to whom belong the issues of death. A little more than two weeks before she died, as she lay on her bed, whether asleep or awake, or whether in the body or out of the body, she said she could not tell; but there arose to the vision of her spiritual understanding the form of the Savior with the spear thrust in his side, from out of which flowed blood and water; and it flowed over herself, taking away all her guilt and fear, and causing her natural strength to so revive that if she had not been gently but firmly held would have got right up to praise and adore her beloved Savior, who had come to deliver her from all her fears. She told me that the room and the house seemed to be as bright as the sun, and everything was praising the Lord. She called all the family one by one, and told of the wonderful work of God to her, and said many things that were precious to those who heard, but which perhaps will not be prudent to take up your space with, as I have already trespassed to a considerable length. She said to me after her deliverance that she felt so full of the love of God that she could hold no more. How wonderful are the works of God!

From this time she gradually wasted away, getting weaker and weaker, until the dear Savior said to her, "Come home," and she gently fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle or a groan. The last two weeks or more of her life was to her a heaven below, and not a murmur escaped her lips. She said to me one day, "I feel that I would like to get well again, and I think I will; but it makes no difference whether I live or die, for all is well." It was truly a privilege to hear her tell of the goodness and mercy of God to her, and how she had learned how vain are the efforts of man to bring deliverance to the Lord's children. That work, as well as the giving of life, belongs alone to the God of Israel.

I could relate many things of interest concerning her, but do not wish to occupy too much of your space; and I would not have troubled you at all, but it was such a wonderful display of the manifestation of the power and glory of God that I felt it would be of interest to your readers. She was buried in the Duart cemetery, and Elder Pollard preached a very appropriate, able and comforting discourse from Colossians i. 21, 22. May the Lord comfort the mourning ones, is my prayer.

HIGHGATE, Ontario.

Mr. Morgan Schutts was born Oct. 1st, 1808, and died March 16th, 1894.

ALSO,

Mrs. Esther Schutts was born Jan. 23d, 1810, and died April 23d, 1892.

Brother Schutts had resided in Oakland township, Pa., fifty-six years. By fixedness of purpose and by a life of unflinching integrity he won the respect and esteem of all who knew him. Early in life he was converted to Christ, and declared to be a child of God by faith. In 1834 he was baptized, and united with the Baptist Church in Maryland, Otsego Co., N. Y. Sixty years he walked with God in faithful and devoted service; thereby he made his "calling and election sure." His last illness was painful, but he was sustained by the all-sufficient grace of God. Though at times his mind was clouded, he never lost sight of Jesus.

His funeral was largely attended on Sunday, March 18th, and the writer preached from Matthew xxviii. 6: "Come, see the place where the Lord lay," and directed the thoughts of the bereaved ones to the assurances and consolation which they might derive from the fact declared by the text.

At the time of her death Mr. and Mrs. Schutts had been married sixty-one years. Baptized at the same time, they pursued together the heavenly journey, sustained by the same faith, comforted by the same hopes, and cheered by the same spiritual joys. Owing, perhaps, to her peculiar temperament, the experience of Mrs. Schutts was more marked than that of her husband, but, like his, was characterized by firm reliance and an overcoming faith. As she neared the heavenly shore, and looked back over a long life of vicissitude, and traced the pathway in which she had been led, she could say, Christ my Lord has ever been near to console me in all my afflictions, and sustain me in all my trials. He has not left me comfortless when all earthly sympathy failed; and I joy in God through Christ, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

Next to the Bible, brother Schutts loved the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which he had taken and diligently read for forty-nine years.

MUCH ESTEEMED BROTHER BEEBE:—On arriving home from a visit to brethren south of me I found a letter from a dear brother whom I left in Kansas more than twelve years ago, and in it a request that I should send you the obituary of his wife, sister Sally A. Compton.

The beloved wife of J. A. Compton was born May 31st, 1850, and died March 3d, 1894. She was the mother of seven children, all of whom survive her. Brother Compton says that she died as she had lived. This is most cheering intelligence to me, as of one who knew her personally for six years during my residence in the state of Missouri, where I formed their acquaintance; and to this state they had recently moved for the benefit of her health, but under the force of a combination of terrible diseases, and wading through a sea of fearful suffering to the realization of that substantial peace procured by the holy life and vicarious death of the dear Son of Jehovah's love. Our dear brother C. says that she had many precious love visits from her beloved Lord and Savior during her severe afflictions; and I do verily believe that if the Bible terms, "The excellent of the earth," were ever truly applicable to poor, sin-polluted worms of earth, those terms were met and shone conspicuously in her case. Although their married life was spent in the stern and unrelenting grip of poverty, they mutually together shared those durable riches and righteousnesses which were purchased by that adorable Being who, when a man of sorrow, and most intimately acquainted with the griefs of his redeemed and elect bride, was so poor that he had not where to lay his head. I will just add that after many wanderings to obtain a settlement in this fickle and inconstant world, she came back very near where eighteen years ago I was permitted to bury both husband and wife in the waters of the James River, at Compton, Webster Co., Mo. I would fain breathe a desire that the bereaved husband and dear family may be enabled to seek and obtain succor to sustain them in their sore affliction from that faithful and infallible source proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb.

DE KALB, Ill.

My dear husband, Willard S. Records, died Feb. 28th, 1894, aged 38 years, 4 months and 4 days.

He was not a member of the visibly organized church, but a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and always attended the regular meetings of the Old School Baptists when he possibly could. From this, as well as many things he said to me during his sickness, I do believe that he is resting and sleeping that blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep. His disease was consumption, from which he suffered greatly the last three months before he passed away. He seemed to be very much distressed when he was taken sick, and had been before, and said that he would not mind dying if he only had the bright evidence that he was a child of God, like some he read of in the SIGNS, which he dearly loved to read. A few days before he was called away he said to me, "Lou, I don't dread death any more. I know I have a Savior, and he is all my hope now." He seemed to sink away like a child falling asleep, fully satisfied.

He leaves an aged father and mother and five brothers to mourn their loss, but not without hope; while I am left with four children, three boys and one baby girl two months old. I desire the prayers of all the dear brethren and sisters, that I may be given grace to look to him who alone can heal the broken heart. Elder Poulson preached at his funeral to a very large congregation in the Old School Baptist church-house in Salisbury; after which his remains were laid to rest there in the church-yard.

"Dearest husband, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

Your sister, I hope, in much sorrow,
LUCINDA E. RECORDS.

SALISBURY, Md., March 28, 1894.

Jonas Nesley was born Sept. 10th, 1812, and died March 5th, 1894, aged 81 years, 5 months and 25 days.

He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Shoemaker on March 3d, 1833. To this union were born eight children. One son, one daughter, one brother and ten grandchildren survive him. He professed a hope in Christ and united with the Methodists in the year 1827, and remained a faithful member of the same until his death in the triumphs of a living faith in Christ.

His funeral was largely attended on March 7th, and the writer tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing ones from a text selected by the deceased, and at his request that the writer should preach his funeral and use the said text, John viii. 36: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." After which the body was laid in the vault at Reynoldsburgh to await burial, and the resurrection from mortality to immortality and eternal rest beyond.

DIED—At our home near Snow Hill, Md., on Saturday, Feb. 17th, 1894, my dear grandfather, Spencer Davis, aged about 80 years.

He was partially paralyzed for seven months, but was the most patient sufferer I ever saw, never complaining. Everything we did for him he would say, "It is all right." He never made a profession of religion, but lived a quiet, peaceable life. He leaves two children, with grandchildren, to mourn their loss, which we trust is his gain. May the Lord resign us to his will.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more our sorrows know."

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits, of distinguished men, views of our principle cities, etc., etc.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

By John Bunyan with Explanatory Notes by the Rev. Robert Maguire, D. D., and a Complete Account of the Life of John Bunyan, written by himself. To which is added the Celebrated Poem, entitled "The Little Pilgrim."

In this superlative edition of this charming story we have presented a perfect portrait gallery of almost every imaginable type of humanity in the characters so indelibly impressed upon our minds by Bunyan's vivid description.

The copious explanatory notes by Rev. Robert Maguire, D. D., Rector of St. Olave, Southwark, are very concise, right to the point, abound in beautiful thoughts, and throw a flood of light on Bunyan's "Immortal Allegory."

The work is printed from clear, new type, and comprised in one Octavo volume of 548 LARGE PAGES. It is splendidly embellished with about 130 fine engravings; including a steel plate portrait of the author and 16 engravings in tints.

Bound in Fine Satin Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

PREDESTINATION.

ETERNAL! Infinite! thy name we praise;
Without beginning, without end of days.
All things to thee eternally were known,
From smallest atom to the boundary zone.
Of worlds yet undiscovered, all were made
By thee, and for thee, in thy counsel laid;
And hence thy wisdom could the end foretell,
Certain and sure, in all things ordered well.
"Thy works shall praise thee"—the divine decree;
Thy saints shall sing their praises unto thee.
Knowledge of causes, laws, and means, and end,
In God's infinite wisdom surely blend.
The supreme law, his own eternal will;
Then every fraction shall its station fill.
To him the present, past and future stand
An open book in his almighty hand.
Is Joseph sold? Do brethren basely lie?
'Tis God has sent him, that they may not die;
And Egypt's ruler he must needs become,
And famine drive them to their brother's home.
God works in every line his sovereign will,
And Israel's saved, and hungry Jacob filled.
Free agency no place nor plea can find,
For God created all the laws of mind.
Conditions, circumstances, choices, all,
Jehovah's mandate makes to rise or fall.
From earth's creation, Adam's earliest breath,
Man's reason chose the road that leads to death.
Yet God had loved in Christ, the eternal Head;
The earth is made to be inhabited.
The children must of flesh and blood partake;
The holy, righteous law of God must break.
The offering was prepared, as slain of old;
The law and prophets often this foretold;
Their names God wrote in his eternal book,
Ere he the nature of his brethren took.
Their names he in his breastplate ever bore,
And them he carried all the days of yore.
And here all evil which within it lurks,
The eternal good of those who love him works.
'Twas love, eternal love, ere time began,
The choice of God in his own darling Son,
That sent the Lord of glory down to earth,
And of a woman gave him humble birth.
Salvation thus is born, and hope begins;
He comes to save his people from their sins.
All power in heaven and earth is in his hands;
He lives to fill the law's severe demands.
The victim of eternal Justice dies,
His body the accepted sacrifice;
Then rises the appointed day and hour,
The demonstrated "Son of God with power."
His life laid down, his life he takes again;

The Lamb of God, the helpless sinner's friend.
The law has over them no more demand;
The debt is paid; in him complete they stand,
And clad in righteousness of spotless white,
Though sins were scarlet, dark as blackest night.
'Tis God who loved, saved, called and bless'd,
Preserves them to prepared eternal rest.
To bring them there his righteousness is pledged,
And his almighty power is thus engaged.
Lift up your heads, ye trembling, doubting few!
Redemption's nigh; earth's trifles bid adieu,
And run with patience all the christian race,
And honor him who called you by his grace.
This house of clay must soon decay and fall;
Await with joy the heavenly Father's call.
When rising, from earth's cares and sorrows free,
We'll join our Savior, and shall like him be;
'Mid scenes of joy unknown to earthly eyes,
And harmonies of heaven and paradise;
The tree of life, rivers of water sweet;
Our loved ones round the crystal throne to meet;
With sorrow, sin and tears all pass'd away;
To praise eternally in endless day.

ELGIN, Oregon, Jan. 21, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have felt a desire for some time to give my views on the unity or oneness of Christ and the church. I notice in some of our Old School Baptist papers that some brethren are very much opposed to the doctrine of eternal vital unity of Christ and the church, and some class it among heresies. Now, it may be that I am so unlearned and ignorant that I cannot see what such a doctrine will lead to; and as I do not wish to believe or hold to that which is contrary to and not supported by the word of God, I have concluded to let my brethren know my belief, and if wrong, then let them show me the good and the right way of the Lord.
John tells us, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." Then it follows, "He that hath the Son hath life [in him]; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Now, brethren, when was this life given to poor sinners of Adam's race? Was it not when they were chosen in him? Were they not chosen in him before the world was? Paul says to his Colossian brethren, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Then, if Christ is our life, when did he become our life? Was it not from everlasting? My own simple mind is, there never was a time when Christ was not the life of his bride; and we know his "goings forth were of old, from everlasting." There and then his bride's substance was not hid from him. "Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them." In this oneness of life, I believe, it is that Adam is "the figure of him that was to come." When God formed man of the dust of the ground it is said, "Male and female created he them, and called their name Adam"—both in one. The life, as well as the law, was given to Eve before she was separated from her husband; and when she was made of the rib of Adam, and brought to him, he said, "This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh." There never was another such bride given to man as was Eve. They twain were one flesh without the law making it so. Some brethren speak of Adam following Eve into the transgression, and that he did this rather than be separated from her; but, brethren, will that idea do? Was Adam ever separated from bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh? "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." My mind is this, that Eve no sooner ate of that forbidden fruit than was Adam involved. He took it at her hand. It was, and is so to-day, that a wife's debt involves her husband; it is set to his account no sooner than she contracts it. Was there ever a time when Christ, the heavenly Husband, was separated from his bride? Paul says, "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body." "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." Christ loved the church just as well while involved in sin as since he washed her in his own blood; for Paul says, "For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church. For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." It seems to me plain that because of the oneness of life which we had in Adam, we as his descendants are sinners, as Paul says. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." This they did in Adam, because of oneness of life; and in that sense our life is as old as Adam. Again, Paul says, "By the disobedience of one man many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Was not this all accomplished by the unity of life in each case? So that, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Here are the two Adams; the first a living soul, the second a quickening Spirit. The Bible gives no account of death out of Adam, neither of life out of Christ. Brethren, I wish to say right here that to destroy or do away with this eternal vital unity, we destroy the very foundation of salvation for poor sinners. "For it became him [because of this oneness of life], for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee. And again, I will put my trust in him. And again, Behold, I and the children which God hath given me." These children thus given are sons and daughters of Adam, partakers of flesh and blood; and now Christ, who is the life of these children, must be one also with them in that relation in which they had sinned. So it is said, "He took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." "Made of a woman, made under the law." In all things made like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Here is where he was "numbered with the transgressors." Here as Head of the church, as Husband of the wife, as Shepherd of the sheep, he was made to be sin, who knew no sin, that his people might be made the righteousness of God in him. Justice in God's law said it must be satisfied. Sin must be punished. "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones." But how will smiting the Shepherd release the sheep? The law requires the life of the sinner. Christ is our life, and as the life of the church he was delivered for our offenses; as Peter says, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree; that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we are healed." The prophet says, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." I do not believe that a volunteer or substitute could take our place and do this; no more than could I volunteer and take the place of a condemned criminal, and go to the state prison in his place. God's throne is established in justice. He will not punish the innocent, and let the guilty go free. But Christ, who is our life, says, "I lay down my life for the sheep." So I understand that every one of God's people becomes dead to the law by the body of Christ; as Paul says, "Know ye not that so many of us as are [margin] baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Again, Paul says, "The love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." Peter tells us, "He that is dead is freed from sin." Does not the prophet have reference to this when he says, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise?" Again, "Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." As the poet says,

"One when he died, one when he rose,
One when he triumphed o'er his foes;
One when in heaven he took his seat,
While seraphs sang all hell's defeat."

I believe this sentiment is proved to be correct by the words of Paul, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." This is the way, brethren, I understand that God can be just and the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus. I view Jesus as everything to his people that the Father desires they should be. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell. And ye are complete in him." Of God Jesus is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. All this is Jesus to his people. Well may the poet say,

"If God is mine, then present things
And things to come are mine;
Yea, Christ, his word, and Spirit too,
And glory all divine."

"If he is mine, then from his love
He every trouble sends;
All things are working for my good,
And bliss his rod attends."

While I meditate on the wonders of salvation the words of the beloved

John seem so appropriate, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." That we should be called the sons of God, poor, fallen, sinful creatures that we are. Jesus says, "Thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me." "Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." Well may Paul say, "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved), and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places." Always together. "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." "For whom he did foreknow [in the covenant of grace], he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." This tells us that God's people are by nature not conformed to the image of Jesus. In that earthly life and nature they are as vile as sin can make them. Here all have gone out of the way; none do good. "By nature the children of wrath, even as others." Jesus says, "Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Paul tells his Ephesian brethren, "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." This, I understand, is to give life. When a sinner is quickened he for the first time realizes that he is a poor, lost, undone sinner. The eyes of his understanding are opened, and the first cry escapes his lips, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." Now he is in the way he had not known. He is not now a mechanical sinner, or one who has only been told that he was a sinner; for he feels now what he had only heard before. He finds now to his sorrow that he is ten thousand talents in debt, and nothing to pay with. Feeling the curse of God resting on him, brought to the end of his own strength, he cries, "Lord, save, or I perish." Here the arm of flesh faileth him, and grace, free grace, is his only hope. Now in his own experience he is dead to the law, having been slain by it; for now that which he had thought was ordained unto life, he has found to be unto death. Here is the experience of God's people, spoken of by the prophet Isaiah in the thirty-fifth chapter of his prophecy, "The desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert." What a surprising wonder is this, so contrary both to reason and nature. Here the poor soul drinks of the fountain of everlasting love; for these streams are of that river that David says shall make glad the city of God. But there is now another experience in store, and that is to learn that these streams are from the river of life, and do not have their rise and origin in this desert. We must learn that this desert is and will remain a desert. No oasis in this desert. "In me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." All that a poor sinner has that is good is of God; no part made sinless or holy. Our holiness is not here. Here we are vile and corrupt; but Jesus is the Lord our righteousness, and from him is our fruit found. We received in the new birth eternal, spiritual life; but it is our life just as much as is our natural life. One is from the earthly Adam, the other from the heavenly or second Adam. In our first birth we only have a corruptible nature; in the second we receive the divine nature. This divine nature is what prompts God's people to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God. In fact, we walk by faith and live by faith.

Now, brethren Beebe, I am going to leave this in your hands, with the request that if you do not think best to publish it do not. May the Lord in mercy bless you in your labors.

Your brother, I hope, in gospel bonds,

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As some of the brethren seem to have mistaken my views on predestination, thinking I hold that God leads men by his Spirit to do wickedly, and therefore they are not accountable for their acts, I desire to state them as clearly as possible in the SIGNS, though I am not gifted in writing, and cannot well express my thoughts with pen. I have had a great desire for some time to write on this and other subjects, and several times have attempted it; but after reviewing what I had written I felt it unprofitable, and consigned it to the flames. I do not feel now that I can make my views plain on this mysterious subject, but perhaps the brethren can understand me.

I have never taught that God by his Spirit causes men to err, nor tempts them to evil, nor that man is not accountable to God for his acts because God has determined that he should do them. James says, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." Again, he asks, "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"—James iv. 1. Our temptations, wars and fightings proceed not from the Spirit of God, but from our lusts. "When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin." This plainly teaches that sin is the fruit of lust, and not of God's Spirit. Let us look for the origin of lust. It is a very general belief in this part of the country that Eve conceived lust by the serpent; but the Scripture does not say that when lust is conceived it bringeth forth sin, but "when lust hath conceived." It is the lust that conceives, not the person conceives the lust. If sin is the fruit of lust, it would be just as impossible for a person to sin when there is no lust in him, as it would for fruit to grow where there is no tree; and had man been created without lust it would have been impossible for him to sin. So I conclude that man was created with lust, which is a fleshly, carnal desire; and when the serpent beguiled Eve that lust conceived and brought forth sin; and sin, when it was finished, brought forth death. So "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Man possessed lust from his creation, but it had to conceive before it could bear fruit.

Man only acts as quickened or moved by a spirit. Matter in itself is entirely inert. "The body without the spirit is dead." Man always acts according to the spirit principle that is in him. There are two spirits that quicken or move the child of God to action: the Spirit of the living God that dwells in his children, and moves them to acts of obedience and righteousness; and the spirit of antichrist, "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," and moves them in all their actions, and the children of God to acts of sin and rebellion. The apostle Paul places all the acts of the child of God under two heads, viz., the fruit of the Spirit, which "is love, joy, peace," and everything that is pure; and "the works of the flesh," which embrace every corrupt and sinful act. As there is nothing but flesh in them who are not born of the Spirit, all their acts are sinful and vile. If man only acts as moved by a spirit, and these two spirits move him (who is born of God), it is plain that he will always obey the one that acts the stronger upon him, and he has no control of himself. "The flesh [spirit that dwelleth in us] lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."—Gal. iii. 17. Can you any more avoid doing the things that you would not, than you can succeed in doing the things that you would? "To will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." Why? Because "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit." We are led and controlled by these two opposing spirits; but what controls these spirits? Or are they two rival powers that always stood in opposition to each other, and each performed all its pleasure, except when it came in contact with the other? We will trace them to their source, and ask, Has the Lord and Satan always stood in opposition to each other (which would make each eternal), and each done his pleasure, only when he came in contact with the other? Or has the Lord made Satan for himself, and controls him as he sees fit? Of the advocates of an eternal devil I would ask, Can there be two eternal things, and one before the other? For God "is before all things, and by him all things consist."—Col. i. 17. Is the devil a thing? A thing is anything you can think of. Can you think of the devil? If so, the Lord made him; for "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil."—Proverbs xvi. 4. Those who claim that the Lord made him, but did not make him with his wicked spirit and corrupt principle, but made him good, and he by disobedience became corrupt, will do me a great favor by explaining the difference between the devil and his wicked spirit, if the wicked spirit or corrupt principle itself is not the devil; but if you believe him to be a material being, and matter is entirely inert, and only acts as moved by a spirit, explain the origin of that spirit that moved him to his acts of disobedience. Paul says, in Romans xiii. 1, that "there is no power but of God;" which absolutely excludes from men and devils all power but what they receive from God. John tells us that Satan was bound a thousand years, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and when the thousand years are fulfilled he should be loosed out of prison, and go out to deceive the nations. The Lord bound him, that he should not deceive them; and at his own appointed time loosed him, to deceive them. So he only occupies the bounds which God has fixed for him, and all his wicked works fulfill God's purposes. If the wicked spirit that moves men to acts of unrighteousness is given its bounds by the eternal God, and can only go to the end of the power which God assigns it, can it be possible that the acts which it moves men to perform are unfixed, undetermined, or left out of God's predestination? Most assuredly not. To me it is a comforting thought that God works all things after the counsel of his own will; that whatsoever he pleases he does in heaven and earth, in the seas, and all deep places.—Psalm cxxxv. 6. He has made all things for himself, and everything moves in the path which the Lord has assigned it. He has given the sea its decree, that its waters cannot pass his commandment, and says to it, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther: and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."—Job xxxviii. 11. Is it not as much God's decree that "Hitherto shalt thou come," as it is, "but no farther?" Is it not as impossible for the sea to stop before it reaches the limits which God has given it, as it is for it to pass them? "Here shall thy proud waves be stayed." They cannot fail to reach that place, neither can they pass it.

The Lord says, "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt."—Isa. lvii. 20. If the wicked are like the sea, is it not as true that the Lord has given them their decree that they cannot pass his commandment? Balaam says, "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the Lord saith, that will I speak."—Num. xxiv. 13. It is as true of the wicked as of the sea (for they "are like the sea"), that "hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther." So with all men; the Lord "hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." "Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass."—Job xiv. 5.

The great objection people have to this doctrine is that the carnal mind cannot understand how God can predestinate all things without being the author of sin; and I shall not attempt to explain this, for I have not known the mind of the Lord, nor been his counselor. Could the carnal mind understand it, it would be evidence that it is not the doctrine of our Savior; for "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. The natural man not being able to understand it, is proof of it being of God. Some attempt to show how God hardens men's hearts so as to be free from sin. This seems to me to be trying to fix up an excuse for the Lord. We know that he is righteous in all his acts, and whatever he does is right; and if we cannot understand it we should "be still, and know that he is God." We may not be able to see how God can be "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity," and yet looketh on them that deal treacherously, and holdeth his tongue "when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he" (Hab. i. 13); yet it is true. "He hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." If he pleaseth to raise up Pharaoh, and harden his heart, that he might show his power in him, that his name might be declared throughout all the earth, who shall reply against him? Has the worm a right to impeach his justice because he did not give it the strength of the lion? or the ostrich to say, He ought to have given me the wisdom of man? "Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?"

narrow conception men have of the power and wisdom of God than to hear them ask how God can do a thing without being the author of sin. If he can predestinate one wicked act of one man, and not be the author of that one sin, on the same principle he can predestinate all the wicked acts of all men, and not be the author of their sins. Then it only remains to be proved that God ever predestinated one wicked deed of man, and this objection is buried. Numerous places are in my mind where the Lord predestinated men's wicked acts, but I only wish to mention one. In Absalom's rebellion, when king David was fleeing from Jerusalem, when he had come to Bahurim, there came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, whose name was Shimei, and cursed still as he came. He cast stones at David, and at all his servants, cursing him, telling him of the blood he had shed, and that the Lord had returned upon him all the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead he reigned, &c. Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, desired to go over and take off his head. "And the king said, What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? So let him curse, because the Lord hath said, Curse David."—2 Samuel xvi. 10. Was Shimei justified in his cursing because the Lord had bidden him? Did that exonerate him from sin? No; for he fell down before David and confessed his guilt. He says, "For thy servant doth know that I have sinned."—2 Samuel xix. 20. David swore unto him that he would not put him to death with the sword, but commanded Solomon to "hold him not guiltless;" "but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood."—1 Kings ii. 9. Here is an instance where God bade a man curse, and yet he owns his sin, was held not guiltless, and his hoar head was brought down to the grave with blood for it. Who can deny that God predestinated Shimei to curse David? Who will claim that Shimei was guiltless because God predestinated it? He who claims that he is justified in his wicked acts because God predestinated them is one of those who are "turning the grace of God into lasciviousness," and using it as an occasion to the flesh. As Elder Durand says, "If one can go in a way that is sinful and foolish, and find enjoyment in it, and not realize painful checks of conscience that spoil the expected joys of the flesh, and feel powerful desires to be kept back from the vanity, what evidence is there of life? One may say, It is the old man, and he cannot do anything but sin; or, It is predestinated that I should do this, and I cannot help it. But this is not the language of the exercised soul. I would have to reply, I will not dispute what you say, but will add that it was predestinated that you should thus manifest the falseness of your profession, and undeceive those who had received you as a child of God."—SIGNS, Vol. lxi., page 274.

I quote this because I cannot find language to express my thoughts as well as they are here expressed. I hope none of the brethren will draw the conclusion that I think we should "continue in sin that grace may abound." "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" May we "make no provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof," but through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, that we may live. When we live after the flesh we die; and how painful is this separation, or death to the joys of our salvation. But when we through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, we live to these joys and spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Then how pleasant to sit down under his shadow with great delight, and how sweet his fruit to our taste. May we be brought to his banqueting house, where his banner over us is love.

J. W. FAIRCHILD.

PSALM CL. 1.

"I WILL sing of mercy and judgment: unto thee, O Lord, will I sing."

This is a song of that mercy which is free, and which was predestined of the Father long before it was written. "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy; and whom he will he hardeneth." Why should man say it is not just in God to save some and not others? Would it not be better to say, Why should he save any? for all have sinned. Should we not say, How merciful to save any? Why should he love us when we are such rebels? If you can tell me why a mother loves her children, and why a father leaves all for his sons, then I can tell you why God loves us. "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father." It is only his people who can truly wonder at his mercy; that mercy which he revealed to Abraham, giving to him the promise, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Not that he would save all nations eternally, but in giving them a salvation in time. In giving to a nation peace, that his people may enjoy it, is not the whole nation blessed? In this, and in many other ways, man is blessed by the "peace on earth." This mercy is far reaching. Strangers in Israel enjoyed the fruits of good government. Though held in check, restrained by her laws, they were naturally benefited by them. Surely the Father in showing mercy and in his protecting care of his chosen ones has blessed those whom his people love naturally.

When David said, "I will sing of mercy and judgment," surely the Lord was with him, and it was a time of rejoicing. We cannot sing of mercy when in darkness; but when the light comes, and we see that we have been walking along by a deep pit of death and sin, the words, "My grace is sufficient for

BELIEF AND SEALING.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the text, Ephesians i. 13, 14? I heard a Missionary Baptist preach from that text last Sunday. He seemed to hinge our eternal destiny or salvation on our belief. If we believe not, then we are never sealed; and if not sealed we are lost. After preaching I asked him how were we to believe, or what caused us to believe. He answered, "Christ quickened the dead sinner into life, and caused him to believe." I asked, "Why did you not tell it that way in the stand?" He replied, "I was not on that part of the subject." Please let me hear from you, if not asking too much.

"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Eph. i. 13, 14.

Although fully appreciating the fact that it is utterly impossible to reply separately to every perversion of the truth devised by those who are engaged in propagating false doctrine, it is our desire to render service to troubled believers in salvation by grace by presenting such views as are given us upon any subject connected with the testimony of Jesus. It is not required of those whom God has called to proclaim his gospel that they should convince natural men of the truth of the doctrine. Their work is done when they have declared the message which they have received "by the revelation of Jesus Christ." In every one who hears that proclamation the witness of the word will infallibly determine whether he is led by the Spirit of God into the truth, or whether he is still in the night of death in sin. While the testimony of Jesus is to them that perish foolishness and a stumbling-block, unto those who are called by the Spirit of truth it is "Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." Surely it is not necessary to tell the saints that nothing short of the omnipotence of God can animate one who is dead in sin with the life which is in Christ Jesus. Every one who has been translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the light and liberty of the kingdom of the dear Son of God, has learned by experience that no other power but the voice of God can give life to those who are dead. Therefore the preaching of the gospel is not designed to profit unbelievers; it is for the comfort and confirmation of those who believe. None can believe without faith, which is the evidence of things not seen, in every one who is born of God. Even in natural and earthly things it is impossible for men to control their belief. In the absence of evidence there can be no real belief, even though there be no inclination to dispute what is presented; but when the evidence is received, belief necessarily results, although the whole heart may desire to avoid that conclusion. Thus it is manifest that belief does not depend upon the will of man; neither is it subject to his control. This fact alone is sufficient to prove the falsehood of the doctrine which represents that the salvation of sinners results from their will in believing the gospel. Since they have no volition in believing natural things, it is absurd to contend that they have more control of their belief in spiritual things.

In the preceding context Paul ascribes to the riches of the grace of God the redemption of his people from sin and death, and the revelation of "the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him; in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ." This last clause is rendered in the margin, "who first hoped in Christ." By this translation it is evident that the apostle designated himself and the other inspired apostles as those "who first trusted [or hoped] in Christ." They are indeed to the praise of the glory of that God who called them, and established them as his immediately inspired princes who shall rule in judgment till time shall be no longer. He does not claim that their trust in Christ was to the praise of their own glory; but all the glory belongs to that God who purposed that they should be set forth as the first to trust, or hope, in the grace which was revealed in Christ Jesus.

"In whom ye also trusted [or hoped], after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation." It is one of the peculiar excellencies of the doctrine of Christ that it is taught alike to every subject of electing love. While there are diversities of gifts, yet the one Spirit of truth shows unto each of the saints the same essential principle of salvation by the grace of God alone. This is taught in the first experience of every conscious sinner. Seeing himself under just condemnation, he can hope for no favor in consideration of works which he can render in satisfaction to divine justice. When Christ is revealed in him as his justifying righteousness he is made to rejoice in Jesus alone as the hope of glory. No claim of personal merit is then thought of. All the joy of that heavenly light which shines in his heart is the rejoicing that abounds in Christ Jesus, and self is forgotten. Yet so deceitful is the working of sin in the heart of the believer that he constantly seeks for confirmation of his hope in the works of his own hands. Finding a law in his members that when he would do good evil is present with him, he is ready to yield to the suggestion of the adversary, and confess that his hope is a delusion. If it were left to their strength to keep their own trust in Christ, the tried saints might well sink in despair; but the rock on which they stand is the immutability of the counsel of God, which he has confirmed by an oath. Even the keeping of themselves is not left to their own watchfulness. They are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." Language could not furnish expression for clearer condemnation than that which is here given of the doctrine advanced by the preacher to whom our sister refers. The clause here quoted cannot be distorted to admit the deductions which he professed to draw from it. It is expressly stated that they did not trust in Christ until after they "heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation." How could their salvation depend upon their believing the proclamation that they were already saved? The proposition is absurd even in its statement; no argument is needed to expose its falsehood, since it is manifestly inconsistent with itself. That salvation whose glad tidings they had heard, could not depend upon their believing the message which reported it to them. Those who have heard the word of truth, and rejoiced in the gospel of their salvation, must necessarily be saved before they can hear that word. But now they are qualified to trust in Christ Jesus as the God of their salvation. They are not yet released from the body of this death; and while they remain here in time they are subject to conflicts and temptations which they are unable to resist in their own strength. From their earliest knowledge of Christ as their Savior they are constantly compelled to trust in him for deliverance in every time of need. This trust is not a condition upon which they bring him under obligation to save them; it is their highest privilege to rest their every care and confidence in the unchanging faithfulness of the word of his grace. This is their present salvation while passing through this dark valley of time, where death casts its gloomy shadow over every object. How often are they cut off from earthly refuge, and compelled to write bitter things against themselves, as they feel that in themselves dwells no good thing! Yet their trust is in that Jesus who spoke the word which was to them the gospel of their salvation. They must ever ask, as did Simon Peter, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life; and we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God." It is of necessity that every believer trusts in this only Savior of his people. Nor is it possible that any other character but a believer ever can trust in the Christ of God.

"In whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." It is not with the expectation of showing the real meaning of this inspired language to any who have not the light of divine light that this comment is written. Those who cannot see the clear testimony of Jesus in the Scriptures certainly cannot be taught it by the efforts of any finite being. To such characters Jesus said, "Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word." None of those who know the Lord will claim that they can give that knowledge to their fellow-men. It is communicated by no other power but the voice of the Son of God; and it is life eternal to every one to whom it is given. To every one who has received this unspeakable gift it is the abiding witness by whose testimony they are led to believe the gospel of the grace of God. Having received this gift of God by which they believe in the salvation revealed in Jesus, they are then qualified for the reception of the sealing of "that Holy Spirit of promise." As they were dependent upon the grace of God for the faith by which they believed God, so they are dependent upon that grace for the experience of the sealing whereby they are confirmed in the hope of the gospel as made sure to them in Christ Jesus. It is not needful that the saints should bear this seal in order that they may be known to their God. It is because they are known to him as his own elect sons, and heirs of eternal glory, that he has sent forth the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father. It must be observed that those who were thus favored of God to receive this sealing were not thereby made sons of God. Paul says it is "because ye are sons." This is very important for the consideration of those who believe. None can bear this peculiar mark unless they have been already "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Even among men the use of sealing is to identify that which is the property of him by whom it is sealed. No one would understand that he might acquire possession of anything by sealing it with his own name. So, the saints to whom Paul addressed the language under consideration, in the sealing by which they were marked, bore the witness of that Holy Spirit of promise, establishing beyond controversy the fact that they were the children of God, and that they were "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." To this infallible witness Paul directs the minds of the saints, and the assurance thus presented is illustrated by the idea of sealing, as establishing beyond controversy a legal document. But instead of their having received such a seal as should establish them in an earthly or temporal kingdom, they "were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance." This settles the matter beyond controversy that every one who has received this mark is an heir to this divine inheritance. If it were the seal of an earthly king it might be that his kingdom should fail, or his will might change; but by this sealing with the Holy Spirit the truth of God is pledged for the fulfillment of the promise. This is the significance of the "earnest" which is already received by every one whose hope is in Christ Jesus. It is the pledge by which God, that cannot lie, has given assurance that the inheritance with the saints in light is secured unto every one in whom this earnest abides. The Holy Spirit of promise is all that is given to the saints in this earthly house of our tabernacle. The fulfillment of that promise can only be received when we awake with the likeness of our glorified Redeemer; but the earnest which is now received cannot prove a delusion. The heritage is sure to all the seed.

This unfailing testimony of the Holy Spirit of promise cannot cease to sustain the hope of every one to whom it is given "until the redemption of the purchased possession." This is the consummation of the glory embraced in the gracious promise of God, which he promised in Christ before the world began. It is the inconceivably glorious accomplishment of the eternal counsel of God in the final exaltation of all his ransomed people in his own perfection of holiness. The "purchased possession" of our Redeemer is the whole general assembly of those whom he ransomed from condemnation and death by the sacrifice of himself without spot to God. They were all given him by his Father before they were manifested in Adam. They were still his own people when they fell under condemnation in their earthly head. He must satisfy the demand of justice against them, even to the laying down of his life for their redemption. This is the sense in which they are "the purchased possession." Jesus never purchased any sinner who was not written in the book of life before the foundation of the world. In that book none were written but the members of the body of Christ. But while they are redeemed by the perfect redemption price which Jesus paid on Calvary, they are yet subject to the vanity of the body of this death. This is the occasion of their groaning in this tabernacle. They cannot do the things which they would do. They are saved by hope under their present subjection to vanity and constant strife against sin; but their redemption is certain, for it is already accomplished, and it draweth nigh.

The last clause of our text presents the strongest consideration which could be given in establishing the sure accomplishment of all the promise contained in the text. It is not alone that grace abounds in the salvation of his people from their sins, but that abundant display of saving grace in Christ Jesus is "unto the praise of his glory." The failure of that salvation in a single case must then involve the loss of that much of the declarative glory of our God. Then let the conscious sinner rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. For that glory the purchased possession must certainly be redeemed from subjection to the body of this death. They are guilty sinners in themselves; but "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." Then let the saints be patient in tribulation, and evermore rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, which shall be revealed when our Redeemer shall come to deliver his afflicted and poor people from this mortality, and translate them into his own immortality. Then shall be clearly seen that all his appointments are "unto the praise of his glory."

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

"thee," are indeed welcome. When we have been saying, O Lord, give me this or that; or, take not this pleasure from me, but satisfy my ambition; or, withdraw this thorn that is so sharp, and which causes so much pain; then when he says, "Peace," we can sing of mercy. But how soon we forget his loving care, and the source of life, and go about seeking the living among the dead. It seems as though we should remember where our life is, and who feeds and teaches us. Often when we do not understand some portion of the word we go about asking this one and that one, forgetting that "they shall all be taught of the Lord." May the Lord help us to come to him, or rather draw us that we may run after him. Then we can truly sing of his mercy, which keeps us from sin and shows us our weakness. He knows that we are not worthy to be called by his name, and that it is through his mercy alone we are saved from sin. O that the Lord may not leave us alone, for we are weak and blind. Would it not be best that we should die? What profit can come of our lives? Why not cut down the unfruitful trees, that they may not cumber the ground? Yet may the will of the Lord be done. Have we not been cut down and cast into the fire? And who shall say that we do not come through it all in newness of life, and with the song of mercy and judgment? While in darkness we may sigh for the fleshpots of Egypt; but when the light comes we look upon a land of milk and honey, and upon peaceful times. Night comes on again, and we wonder, Am I deceived, and deceiving others? Then again we come to one of the sure things, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." And this love is so pure, so gentle, so comforting, surely it is of the Father, for no other love is like it. Instead of feeling angry with a brother for a fault, it makes us feel more pity for him; and the love seems to take a stronger hold as we look at one in the hands of the law; and back we go to that sure promise that God will take care of his own. "That of all which thou hast given me I should lose nothing." What a sweet mercy to be allowed to mingle with them, and to feast at the table of the Lord. Even if the thorn of unworthiness does hurt us, we cannot give them up.

How can we sing of his judgment? Only those who have felt the terrible weight of it can do so. Standing before that throne of truth, called hither by the word of the King, feeling the weight of a burden of sin, we must of a truth fall down before him, like an unfruitful tree, to be cast into the fire, crying, Guilty! unclean! We do not feel to wait for judgment to be passed upon us, for we know we are guilty, and can only say, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner;" forgetting or not knowing that the mercy has gone before, and is the cause of this soul-searching. What a mercy to have our sins made manifest to us. It is a strong proof of light and life, since the dead cannot see or feel; so it is the light of life eternal that is making manifest this burden of sin. This is indeed a new life, a new man, made manifest, or born, and crying for the sincere milk of the word. Only living children cry and are hungry. Only the children of the kingdom can say, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."

For days I thought and studied to write about judgment. I wandered about, but found nothing. But this evening, being alone, I have felt it. The weight of sin and trouble seemed too great to bear. A poor, useless piece of clay, why was I made? I cried aloud, and the prayer seemed to rise from my heart, "I thank thee, Father, that we have an Advocate to make intercession for us." While we cry out with longing in our hearts that we can see no way to satisfy, a light falls upon us, and is in our heart, and we are ready to sing of judgment.

Perhaps I should not write so much about myself; but I trust it may help some one who, like me, feels his burden heavy. If so, I hope he may also feel the peace of God quieting his stormy thoughts, and be enabled, as I am at this time, to say, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." May we have grace that we may serve him in giving a cup of cold water to the thirsty. We have no confidence in ourselves, but all confidence in him. No matter how unworthy we are, he can enable us to feed the hungry. May God give us strength to sustain us in such trying hours, enable us to follow the leading of the Spirit, in the deed as in the spirit, making us willing to follow in the path of sorrow and loneliness, if needs be, humbly looking for the light that is to light us to rest. Trusting the Lord will give us strength to bear the slurs and scoffs of the world, and will restore unto us at needful times the joy of his salvation, I am, with fear and trembling, I trust, your brother,

LAWRENCEBURG, Ky., Jan. 9, 1894.

UNION GROVE, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1894.

MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—While reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I have often thought of giving in my testimony; but I have delayed until now on account of a feeling of inability, and do not know that I shall now succeed. I know that God is the giver of all good and perfect gifts, and without him we can do nothing. I fully indorse what Mrs. J. K. Boyd says. She quotes, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and says, we are commanded to come out of Babylon, and not be partakers of her iniquity. I have at different times gone to the meetings of different denominations, and have heard some things said that were good. They would quote some Scripture, and that I knew was true. The Scriptures plainly tell us that a fountain cannot send forth both sweet and bitter water.

What a dear and precious Savior we have. He has revealed himself to us as the only Savior of sinners, and such I feel myself to be. It is now thirty-two years since I first had these thoughts and reflections. I know and sensibly feel my weakness. In the year 1858, after I had passed my sixteenth year, my father was away from home, and it was the custom of my mother to take the Bible and read to her children. I well remember the portion she selected on this particular occasion, in the book called Revelation, where it is declared that time shall be no longer. I was sitting back of her, but so as to catch every word, for I did love to hear my mother read. I thought she was a christian, and hoped that some day I would be like her. As soon as she began reading, the thought came into my mind as if some one had spoken it, The day of judgment will be soon at hand, and you are not prepared to meet it. I went to my bed, but passed a very uneasy night; but I said nothing to any one about my feelings. During all that winter I could not sleep much on account of my sins. Thus time passed on until spring, when I was taken sick, and thought I would surely die. But I got better, and resumed my work, and attended parties and places of amusement until the year 1859, when I was married and went to housekeeping. Then my youngest sister was scalded so badly that she died twenty-five hours afterward, which added new grief to my poor soul. It seemed to me that I could not live, for she was the idol of my heart, and also of the whole family. As I now look back over the past I wonder with amazement, and often say to myself, It is a great mercy that I have been spared thus far; for if I had my just due I would be cast off forever. But glory be to God's great name forever, for unto him all the glory belongs.

Thus time passed with me for three years or more, until I was again called to a bed of sickness. Then my troubles got to their height, for I thought that surely hell was my portion. But while on the brink of despair, when no arm but God's was near, these words were applied to my soul, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."—Isa. xl. 1, 2. I spoke about it to one of my aunts who was staying with me, and asked her what she thought about it. She tried to encourage me, and said it was a good evidence that my sins were forgiven.

But I could not think it was meant for one so vile as I.

"Although his solemn praises were flowing from my tongue, Yet fears were oft suggested that yet I might be wrong."

But however the case may be, I know I cannot change it nor do I wish to. The declaration has gone forth that his mercy endureth forever. When I look back over my crooked path, and see how far short I have come of living the life of the dear Savior, according to the pattern he has left on record for his followers, I often exclaim, like Paul, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" If not altogether deceived, I have known some joys as well as sorrows. I have lost by death two lovely daughters; but I feel that they have left a world of sin and sorrow, and that God has a right to do with his own as pleases him, however contrary to our nature. I feel to bow in humble submission to his holy will.

Affectionately your humble and unworthy sister,

E. A. HUNTLEY.

FORT BRANCH, Ind., Feb. 14, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—There must be light in order for a shadow to exist. The light is not the shadow, but the first cause of a shadow. In order to produce a shadow there must be something set before or in the light. Shadows are mentioned in many places in the Scriptures, and differ in nearly every place, if not every place, as to their meaning. The inspired writer in Hebrews x. 1 says, "The law having a shadow of good things to come." There can be nothing real in a shadow, but a form or prefiguration of the true substance that stands in the light to cast the shadow or form of the thing to be known or sought for. We learn from a shadow or pattern what the real thing or substance is, by tracing the shadow in all its forms back to the substance itself; and when we find the substance sought for, we have no more use for the shadow. The apostle Paul says, "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster," or the law. Israel of old worshiped and served under the shadow, in offerings, &c. But when Christ, or the good things that were to come, did come, the shadow vanished away, and the works and forms with it. They had now reached the substance prefigured by the sacrifices; therefore all things were completed and perfected in Christ. The service or sacrifices under the shadow did not make the comers thereto perfect; but the offering of Christ did. He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified.

In order that one may see the substance, and learn the lesson prefigured by the service under the shadow, they must also be in the light, or in possession of faith; and faith, or the sight of faith, is given to them by the Holy Spirit writing the law in their mind, or upon their heart. In this seems to be a remission of sins; as the apostle says, "Where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sins." He exhorts the saints to hold fast the profession of their faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised. "Provoking one another to love and good works;" not willfully misrepresenting one another, nor backbiting, nor devouring the sheep, but adorning the doctrine, in honor and reverence to the builder of the house. God is the builder of all things. "Moses was faithful in all his house as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end."—Heb. iii. 5, 6. "For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."—Verse 14. The "ifs" in these quotations indicate, as I understand, that if we hold or remain firm in the confidence that Jesus is all in all in the things pertaining to salvation, it is evidence and assurance of the work or seal of the divine Spirit, showing that we are his by purchase; but if we continue not in the faith, but fall away after the popular faith and false religion of the world, and deny the sufficiency of Christ to save, it is evidence that we are not made partakers, nor ever have been, of the real substance, but are deceived, and have only the shadow, an outward, carnal profession, and have never seen the substance in faith. Such follow their own pernicious ways, causing the way of truth to be evil spoken of; very often deceiving and beguiling some of the sheep, and causing them to be drunken with the wine of their abominations and lying spirit which they are possessed with, in order that they may have full access to perform their wolfish trickery, to devour certain sheep of the flock against whom they have a spirit of envy and hatred; thinking if they can get such and such ones out of the fold they can then run things their own way. But it is well said that they shall be known by their fruits, or works; for while they run to and fro, and connive in secret plottings, in order to hide their trickery and crimes, they only make themselves the more manifest to all around them that they are wolves in sheep's clothing; with their lips professing to know Christ, but in their works denying him; foaming out their own shame, and advertising themselves to the world; fulfilling the Scripture, that there is nothing hid that shall not be revealed, and that that which is spoken in secret shall be declared upon the housetop. When these wolves get the power in this way among the sheep, the church or places of assembly ceases to be a peaceable habitation and a quiet resting place, as Isaiah intimates.—Isa. xxxii. The sheep cannot go in and out and find pasture then; for there is no shelter from the stormy blast of the false brethren, while the wolves control the law and discipline. As the sober sheep cannot fellowship them, they must withdraw, or be excluded. While wolves may be left to destroy the peace of the sheep in the shadow of the great Rock, and may deprive them of the liberty of the shadow in that particular place, and may howl around and make terrible threats, yet they cannot destroy the Rock, the real substance; nor can they destroy the life, or peace, or rejoicing, or confidence of the sheep, which is in Christ Jesus; for he always has been and ever will be a rock for the saints in a weary land. He is the author and finisher of their faith and salvation. But woe to those who oppress and devour the little ones. May the sheep be careful to not drink of their wine of disobedience, lest they be drunken, and so bring shame and disgrace upon themselves.

ST. LOUIS, Mich., Jan. 18, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel a desire to pen a few thoughts in reply to our inquiring brother Scott. Not that I feel able of my own self to write anything to edification, but such as I have I will freely give. The first thought that flashes into my mind on reading our brother's inquiry concerning faith is the apostles definition of faith. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The faith of God's elect receives God's truth, whether their natural reason can see it or not and receive it in love; for this faith works by love and purifies the heart from dead works, to serve the living God. The doctrine and ordinances of the church of the living God are also called the faith of God's elect, and are received without question by true faith as the perfect law of liberty, and is really from faith to faith, as coming from him who is invisible, whose right is to rule. It was by the power of this holy faith that the holy martyrs of Jesus have suffered untold miseries since the world began, not accepting deliverance at the expense of denying the faith. It is this to-day that sustains all the true defenders of eternal truth, as seeing him who is invisible; not accepting popularity and ease at the expense of truth. These keep the faith, and, like the apostle, see by an eye of faith an invisible crown of righteousness, which the invisible Lord and righteous Judge shall give them in due time; and not to them only, but to all them who love his appearing. This faith loves the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ as he appears in the great doctrine of election, predestination and unity with the church.

in choice before the world began; for this is the way the great God and our Savior appears to the faith of God's elect. They have the evidence within that this is true, though unseen by mortal eye, and can say, when those glorious points of truth are contradicted and blasphemed, "Let God be true, and every man a liar." This faith does not need the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ in their doctrine to be smoothed over or toned down to suit the caprice and notions of mortal men, but looks carefully and prays to be delivered from wicked and unreasonable men; for all men have not faith. First, it is unreasonable to expect the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ to appear in any other way, seeing he is Lord of heaven and earth, and dwelleth not in temples made with hands, neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything. Second, he does not have to appear in any other way, for he does his pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand. So those who have not faith cannot please God, for they are always contrary to him, being abominable and disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed. So true faith sees another invisible thing to mortal eye, namely, that God is not disappointed in them.

I will send this for the consideration of brother Scott and the brethren generally, if brethren Beebe shall see fit to publish it.

DAVID TITMUS.

MACOMB, Ill., Dec. 3, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—I feel a desire to try and write to you who read the much loved paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It is with fear and trembling I make the attempt, as it is my first attempt, and I feel weak and ignorant. I want to tell the dear saints of some of my trials and troubles. I feel that God has had mercy on poor me. I have been traveling the road of trouble, and seeing myself a sinner, for about twelve years, and have been praying God to have mercy on me. I have often, while about my work, found myself saying, "Jesus! blessed Jesus!" But I never told any one of my troubles until about three years ago, when I was taken sick; but not dangerously so. I was sick about three weeks, and all that time thought a great deal about dying. It was on my mind nearly all the time. I thought how soon the great Lord might take me away, and I believed I was so wicked that he would be a just God in sending me to torment, and I believed that would be my portion if I should die. One day while my mind was so troubled with that thought of dying, and felt that I could live but a short time, and that I would be lost forever, my girl said to me, "Ma, what is the matter?" I told her I did not know. But all at once, when all hope was gone, there was the most beautiful light I ever saw, and a voice said, "Look well at this, for this is the way it is in heaven." I hope the good Lord opened my eyes and showed me where and how I could go. I felt some better after that, my mind was somewhat relieved, and I felt somewhat encouraged, hoping it was the work of the Lord. I am often cast low down in the valley, and am made to feel how little and unworthy I am. Sometimes I am made to rejoice and feel glad to know that I have a just and holy God to reign over me. I always love to go to the Old Baptist meetings, and always go when it is possible. On the second Saturday and Sunday in last September I went to an association in Hancock County, Illinois, and heard such good preaching from the dear brethren that I was made to rejoice. The gospel was preached, and it came to me with much power. It was rich food to my poor soul. I had never felt that I was fit to join the church, but often felt that I would like to if I were only good enough, so that I might go among them, for I always thought they were the best and most happy people on earth. I had no notion of joining the church when I left home. On Sunday some one said there would be baptizing on the morrow, and something said to me, "Why don't you go too?" As that was on my mind all the time, I told my sister-in-law I would not go to meeting that evening. She asked me why, and I told her I was afraid I would have to join the church if I went, and that I did not want to do so, as I was not fit to think of such a thing, for I was the worst of all. But she told me to go, and I went. Two others went forward and related their experience. I could not stay away any longer, and so went forward and told the church what I believed the Lord had done for me. If I have done wrong I hope the good Lord will forgive me. I want you all to pray for me, for I feel unworthy to be one among those I believe to be God's children. While we all have our trials and temptations, Jesus has said, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." I love to be with this dear people, and would like to be with them all the time. I know the period will come when we will not have to part, where there will be no more death, sorrow nor pain, for the former things will have passed away. May the dear Lord grant that I may reach that heavenly shore.

Dear brethren Beebe, I fear I have written more than I need to, and have not told much. I know I am weak and sinful, and not fit to eat the crumbs that fall from God's dear children; but do as you please with this, and all will be right.

Much love to all the household of faith. I am, very unworthily, your sister,

EMILY F. BYERS.

LAMONTE, Mo., Jan. 10, 1894.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I will write you a few lines, as my dear old mother is remitting for our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which has, with her Bible, been her almost constant companion for the last thirty or forty years, and is now her lone companion, as she is so afflicted with rheumatism that she can no longer hold the Bible on her lap. It furnishes her almost all the preaching she gets, as well as reading, and so she passes many lonely hours in its perusal. Occasionally some of the dear brethren come to see her and preach for her. We have a family of six, one a little boy of seven years, five belonging to Walnut Branch Predestinarian Baptist Church, all fully agreed on the doctrine of salvation by grace, the Old Baptist doctrine, which is the doctrine of the Bible; all eagerly devour the contents of each number of the SIGNS, seeing very little to object to; receiving much solid comfort from the precious experiences and doctrine contained in the contributions of the dear ones. I see much trouble arises from periodicals publishing angry discussions in their columns; also, occasionally we have had papers to spring up which seemed afraid of the whole truth, and have admitted articles as well as sent forth editorials reflecting on some portions of Bible doctrine, which were calculated to cripple some already weak in the faith. Sheep are very strange animals; for let one get scared and run from either an imaginary or real foe, and the entire flock are almost sure to take the same scare. So let those who are established take heed that they get up no imaginary scares at the doctrine of God our Savior, for weak, doubting ones to become crippled on.

Now, brethren editors, I can truthfully say that I have seen nothing to seriously object to in the SIGNS. I know it has suffered at different times for not allowing discussions to go through its columns which would only have served to gender strife and division, and been condusive of no good. I know, precious brethren, that you have had much to bear, as did also your precious father, for the truth's sake; but it has been almost exclusively from enemies of the truth, which sooner or later have shown their colors. And now, my precious brethren, I want to say that I can doctrinally indorse all that I see in your paper in the way of communications and editorials, although some things seem too deep for me, and rather dark and mysterious; but as far as my limited judgment goes they are precious truths. Our beloved brother Paul tells us that he is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. It is the power of God unto salvation, and to the believer. Then this salvation must consist in a deliverance from antichrist, as the servant of Christ wields "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Go on, precious brethren, with the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, and may the Lord bless you, is the prayer of your brother, J. A. TEAGUE.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WILLOWDALE, W. Va., March 31, 1894.

WILL brother F. A. Chick please give his views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on "sanctification," and oblige an inquirer after truth?

Your sister in hope,

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. By James D. McCabe.

THIS work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principle cities, etc., etc.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIMS PROGRESS, and a Complete Account of the Life of John Bunyan, written by himself. To which is added the Celebrated Poem, entitled "The Little Pilgrim."

In this superfine edition of this charming story we have presented a perfect portrait gallery of almost every imaginable type of humanity in the characters so indelibly impressed upon our minds by Bunyan's vivid description.

The copious explanatory notes are very concise, right to the point, abound in beautiful thoughts, and throw a flood of light on Bunyan's "Immortal Allegory."

The work is printed from clear, new type, and comprised in one Octavo volume of 548 LARGE PAGES. It is splendidly embellished with about 130 fine engravings; including a steel plate portrait of the author and 16 engravings in tints.

Bound in Fine Satin Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LEXINGTON, Neb., Jan. 15, 1894.

JOSEPH BRUCE—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—As I have promised to write you a sketch of my experience I will now try to fulfill my promise. I was born in Jefferson County, Iowa, October 7th, 1861, and brought up by good parents, who were believers in the Adventists' doctrine. In the year 1877 my dear mother was taken away from this earth to the realities of a world beyond. From that time on I worked away from home most of the time. In the year 1882 I was united in marriage to Annie M. Jones. In 1884 we moved to Ringgold County, Iowa. One night in February, 1885, it occurred to my mind that I was a sinner, and that I ought to live a better life. This caused me to shed many tears. As time passed on the thought left me; but at times I was made to look back to that night. In July, 1885, we moved back to Jefferson County, and in 1886 moved to Van Buren County. Shortly after this a protracted meeting began within a half mile of us, conducted by the Methodists. We attended nearly every night, and I began to notice a change in my wife, which made me feel badly, for I did not believe their doctrine. My mind would go back to that night in the year 1885, when I was first shown that I was a sinner. On the 15th of March, after we had retired for the night, my wife fell asleep, but my mind was exercised beyond measure. I could see that she was a changed woman, and I believed the Most High God had done the work. I felt that I was not fit to live with her, and thought that of all men I was the most miserable. The next night we went to meeting as usual, and she related what the Lord had done for her. After we retired that night she fell asleep as before, while I was as restless as one could be. When I could lay no longer I sat up, and so wore the night away, having slept scarcely any. But I did not tell my wife anything about my trouble. On the night of the 17th my trouble got so great that I felt I could not bear it any longer. I awakened my wife and told her of my trouble. She asked, "Can't you pray?" I told her I could not; that I was too wicked. Those who have never had such feelings cannot imagine how I felt. I saw myself a great sinner before God. I saw that all his laws and precepts were good, while I was carnal, sold under sin. So I said to my wife, "Can't you pray for me?" and she uttered what I thought was the sweetest prayer I had ever heard. After we went back to bed a light appeared to me which seemed to fill the whole room. The light appeared brighter than the noonday sun, and it seemed as though I could see Jesus hanging on the cross, crying with a loud voice, "It is finished." I was made to feel that he had borne my sins in his own body. We talked a great deal that night, for I could not sleep much for thinking of the vision of Jesus which I had seen. When morning came I arose, and everything seemed to be praising God. I felt like I wanted to go and tell the neighbors what I had experienced; but I did not. It occurred to me that there was something for me to do, and when we went to the meeting that night we both joined on probation. Still I did not believe what they preached, nor the way they said sinners were saved; yet I felt that I had some duty to perform. In the course of time the meeting closed, when a Sunday School was organized, and I was elected treasurer. As time went on that got to be a great burden to me, so I quit taking any part in the Sunday School. I only sat and looked on, and received the money that was contributed. At last I concluded I would not play Judas for them any longer, so I handed them the bag of money and resigned. Then I could hear it murmured around, "He is backsliding." But I still felt there was something for me to do, but I could not find out what it was. It seemed as if there was a veil over my eyes yet. One night I had a dream or vision. I thought I saw a great crowd of people, and there seemed a great attraction in the midst of them. There seemed to be a building or structure there, but the crowd was so great that I could not see what it was that attracted their attention so greatly. As I looked up I saw two rafters, which I caught hold of and pulled myself up sufficiently so see. In a great chair sat a great woman, exceedingly large, and dressed in the finest of gold and diamonds, and every fine jewel that is obtainable in the world. She was talking to the people, saying, "I will not work; you have got to keep me." At this time the timbers I was holding to began to give way, and I let go, and turned and went away. As I went, it seemed as though I was attracted by a small crowd, and I went and looked on. I saw, as it were, Jesus ministering to his church, and telling them how he had been crucified, and had arisen again from the dead, that they might be brought home to ever be with him. When I awoke it seemed so plain to me that I could hardly believe it was a dream.

As time passed on the preacher wanted to baptize all the new converts; but my wife and I had come to the conclusion that we did not want him to baptize us. Then came the quarterly meeting, and on Sunday morning was "love feast," as they called it. They passed bits of bread and water, and wanted all in the house to partake of them, and by so doing wish the Methodist Church to prosper and gain members. When they came to us we shook our heads, for we could not wish them success. My dream was too plainly before my eyes. As time went on and "Conference" set, the preacher had to move. One Sunday he called to see us, and said he wanted to baptize us, as he was going away, and wanted to make as good a showing as he could. I told him when I wanted him to baptize me I would let him know. Before he left us he said he wanted to have prayer with us, and I told him he might; for I did not think he could hurt us any. As he had said he wanted to make as good a showing as he could, I thought it was more show than reality. One day while at the home of my niece I met old sister Spitler. This was the first time I had ever talked with a Primitive Baptist. We talked about four hours, much to my satisfaction. After this my mind was drawn toward Round Prairie Church, about eight miles distant, and on the third Sunday in December, 1886, we went there and heard Elder Speirs preach about an hour and a half from the third chapter of Genesis and twenty-fourth verse. "So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." He preached the experience of a child of grace. I was amazed and wondered who had told him all about me; for this was the first time I had ever seen him, and it was the first Baptist sermon I had ever heard, although I was raised within eight miles of that church. During the meeting my vision came before my mind, and I could plainly interpret it. I felt a desire to unite with the church, but felt too unworthy, and so let the opportunity pass. During that winter I read the Bible and compared its teaching with the sermon of Elder Speirs, and found that they agreed. On the third Sunday in March, 1887, I went again to Round Prairie, my wife having gone on Saturday with brother and sister Spitler. When the opportunity was given I felt like going forward, but a feeling of unworthiness prevented me. At this time I was living on brother B. T. Williams' farm. One day he asked me what I thought of the Old Baptist doctrine. I told him it just suited me. He asked me if I could understand it. I told him I could. We had a great deal of talk that day about the church, and about Jesus Christ, and what his object was in coming to this world of sin and sorrow. On the third Sunday in April, 1887, I offered myself to the Round Prairie Church. I tried to tell them a part of what I have here written, and to my surprise I was received. While at the water that same day my wife was received, and we both were baptized by Elder R. Speirs. Then I felt as though I had performed the duty I had felt for over a year, but could not find out what it was until the good Lord revealed it to me. Brother and sister Spitler went home with us and staid all that night, and I think it was the happiest time of my life. I thought all would be peace and happiness with me; but after a short time the tempter came and told me I was deceived, and that I had deceived the church, and I would have to answer for it; also many other things, which caused my heart to ache. From that day to this I have had many ups and downs, many dark and cloudy days. But we are promised by the Savior that he will never leave nor forsake us. I do feel thankful that he has spared me as long as he has, and has been so good and merciful to me. I can say with Paul, "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) there dwells no good thing." When I would do good, evil is present with me. The things that I would, I do not; and the things I would not, them I do. But thanks be to God, "it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." If salvation depended on anything good I must do, I would be lost. If I am saved it is through the goodness and mercy of God. He knew when he made me what kind of a creature he was making, and certainly knew what he would do. He sent his only begotten Son to pay the debt of his people. The Scriptures tell us that "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." It is only through Jesus Christ and him crucified. "There is a way that seemeth right unto man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." There are those in the world who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. The Savior said, "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him two fold more the child of hell than yourselves."

I will close. I have told you scarcely anything that I wanted to tell you. I may write again. Yours in hope of a life beyond the grave,

F. O. LONG.

JOHN III. 16.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The Bible contains more rhetorical figures of speech than any other book I have ever read or studied; the simile, the metaphor, the metonymy, the interrogation and allegory. In all these varieties of rhetorical figures of speech the Bible abounds. Hence it is not strange that works on rhetoric blossom with so many beautiful flowers gathered from this garden of wisdom to illustrate the different modes of expression. With these preliminary remarks I will proceed to take up and consider the text in John iii. 16.

Zacharias, speaking of John the Baptist, said, "And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways, to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins through the tender mercy of our God; whereby [Greek, en hois, referring to mercy for its antecedent] the dayspring [Greek, anatole, sun-rising] from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and the shadow of death."—Luke i. 76-79. "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." "That was the true Light, which lighteth [instructs, teaches] every man that cometh into the world." Greek, kosmos, order, good order, government, the universe, from its perfect arrangement, opposed to chaos, or confusion; the earth, the inhabitants of the earth, mankind.—John i. 4, 9. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world [kosmos]; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one."—Matt. xiii. 37, 38. Here we have the elect and the non-elect clearly defined by the great Teacher, who taught as one having authority, and spake as never man spake. The 44th verse says, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field [the world]; the which when a man hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field." His deed to the field protects him in the full and peaceable possession of the field, together with all appurtenances thereunto belonging. In this instance the purchaser does not buy the field for its own intrinsic value, its own native fertility, but purely for the rich treasure hid therein, the pearl of great price; and because of the treasure, the pearl, he carefully preserves the field until he has gathered out all the treasure, all the pearls, and then he has no further use for the field. How often has this been illustrated in the gold fields of our western country, and the diamond fields of Africa. So long as the treasures existed in paying quantities, the fields were guarded with the greatest vigilance; but so soon as the gold and diamonds are all gathered out, the fields are abandoned.

John iii. 14 says, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." The uplifting of the brazen serpent benefited none but the Israelites, and none of them but the living bitten ones. All the surrounding tribes and nations might have been bitten by the poisonous serpents that troubled Israel, and yet none of them would have been benefited by the brazen serpent, because it was not lifted up for their benefit, but only for the living bitten ones of Israel; for to successfully accomplish a desired end or purpose, the means must be intelligently applied with an eye single to said end or purpose. The ordained means, as in this case, may be amply sufficient to accomplish much more than they do; yet not having been designed for the accomplishment of anything farther than the original purpose, they (the means) perfect it, and their efficacy ceases right there and then. The dead Israelite was not benefited by the brazen serpent, for he could not look upon it. The unbitten Israelite was not benefited by it, because he felt no need of the healing virtue of the brazen serpent. Not the whole, but the sick, need the physician. "Even so must the Son of man be lifted up." The careless, impenitent, unbelieving, dead-in-trespasses sinner is not benefited by the sacrifice which Jesus made when he offered himself through the eternal Spirit without spot to God; for he is lifeless in sin, and hence cannot feel and see his deplorably wretched and helpless condition; nor does he feel the need of nor seek after the medicinal virtue emanating from the cross of Christ. The self-righteous Pharisee is not benefited by Christ's offering; for he feels self-sufficient; feels that his personal legal obedience will make him righteous and secure his acceptance with Christ. Hence neither of these two classes are benefited by the one great offering which Jesus made when he laid down his life, nor do they believe in him. Hence they perish, having not eternal life; and that, too, not because there is insufficient efficacy in the sacrifice, or insufficient virtue in the healing balm of merciful love for the cleansing and the saving of every son and daughter of want; but because the efficacy and virtue were not designed by infinite wisdom and goodness and love for the deliverance of any but the elect, the treasure, the pearl of great price.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." Here we have the figure, the metonymy, the container (world), for the thing contained, the treasure, pearl, elect, the children of the kingdom. God does not love the world for its own intrinsic, inherent value; but he loves the treasure, his people, and for their sakes he carefully guards and preserves this world. Hence his people are called "the salt of the earth."

"That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." As it was with the living bitten Israelite, so it is with the sin-sick soul; having been quickened from death in trespasses by the law of the Spirit of life, which God writes in his heart, and which life God graciously gives, he feels his sinfulness, his poverty, his helplessness, his utter inability to keep the law and to propitiate for his past sins, and to secure his acceptance in the sight of that order-loving, sin-hating God. Hence as the bitten Israelite looked to the brazen serpent for relief, so the sin-sick soul looks to Jesus for deliverance from the power of darkness, and for translation into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Hence he believes in Christ, and feels that his is the only name under heaven given among men whereby he can be saved; and he exclaims, "To whom shall I go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved."—John iii. 17. "He that believeth on him is not condemned." "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." "By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." Hence he that believeth does not perish, but has eternal life; but "he that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Now, as God works all things after the counsel of his own will, he will preserve this world, and in this sense is the Savior of all men.—1 Tim. iv. 10. Christ gave his flesh for the life of the world, the preservation thereof, till the last vessel of mercy, the last one of the children of the kingdom, shall be manifested and fully prepared by grace divine for the perfect enjoyment of the beatitude of heaven. And when he who is immutable, who declared the end from the beginning, who does all his pleasure, who speaks and it is done, who commands, and it stands fast, who is the same yesterday and forever, hath done all things according to his good pleasure which he purposed in himself, the prophecy of 2 Peter iii. 10 will be fulfilled. The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up; a new heavens and new earth will appear, wherein dwelleth righteousness. But until all this is complete, the saints, the people of God, will need the intercessory prayers of Jesus. Hence he says, "I pray for them; I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine." If they were of the world, the world would love its own; but because they are not of the world, but Christ has chosen them out of the world, therefore the world hateth them. But let the saints ascribe glory and gratitude to God for Christ having overcome the hating world. Let them glory in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which they are crucified unto the world, and the world unto them. Jesus said he would pray the Father (and the Father always hears him) to send them the ever-abiding Comforter, the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive; but the saints know him, for he dwelleth with them, and shall be in them. He gave his people the word of God, and the world hates them because they are not of the world, even as Christ is not of the world. Christ did not pray the Father to take his elect out of the world, but that he would keep them from the evil, from the contaminating, blighting influence of the world. Jesus Christ the righteous is the propitiation for the sins of the elect Jews; and not for them only, but also for the sins of the elect Gentiles. These chosen ones out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people are commanded not to love the world, neither the things of the world; also, to be not conformed to this world, but to be transformed by the renewing of their mind, by the Holy Ghost, that they may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. They are of God; and by the reign of his grace, and the indwelling of his love, and the communion of the Comforter, they overcome the spirit of anti-christ; and the fact that the world hatefully persecutes them is one of their strongest, brightest evidences that they are of God; for if they were of the world, the world would love them. They that are of the world, speak of the world, and the world heareth them, which is an unmistakable evidence that they belong to the world.

May God for Christ's sake continue to manifest himself to his elect treasure, to his priceless jewels, to his elect poor, as he doth not unto the world; and may he keep them from all evil temptation, is the desire of your little brother in hope,

T. C. HERNDON.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Feb. 28, 1893.

ELDER D. MARVIN VAIL—DEAR BROTHER IN THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST:—I read your letter and would like well to see you and have a chat with you about many things. It is a pleasure for me to have the companionship of those who preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, because none but those whom the Holy Ghost has put in the ministry can fully enter into the joys and sorrows, the cares and continual solicitude for the welfare of the people of God that must exercise the soul of one whom God has given such a high and sacred vocation. Often it looks like a thing incredible that such a vile sinner, that such a creature as I, has been called of God to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified. I know, dear brother, from personal experience the sore and painful exercises of soul portrayed in your letter lately published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. When I met you among these mountains some seventeen months ago (then so little thinking that I should soon be living here), I was in the depths of trouble of soul regarding my position as one preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ. The distresses that it pleased God I should be made to endure for some nine months before this time cannot be put into words. Every day, and every hour of my wakeful hours, my soul was deeply exercised. It was not all grief, anxiety, and darkness; O no! There were moments of relief, sweet seasons when as a babe I was nestled in the bosom of our God. My soul was comforted in the knowledge that he was my God, my unchanging Friend, my Salvation, my Shepherd, yea, my all! I was constrained to believe, notwithstanding all the temptations, all the afflictions my soul had endured, and all the providences that had befallen me, that I was loved of God, and one to whom he would shew his mercy and grace. Such times were like drinking of the brook in the way; so that I could lift up my fainting head. I sometimes look back to the time when I was first impressed about the work of the ministry. Those words in Jeremiah i. 7 were with power spoken by the Lord in my heart, "Thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak." Many times since then, when my soul has been cast down within me, and I have been "ready to halt," the Holy Spirit has often remembered this word unto me, and thus encouraged me in the way. When I look into such Scriptures as Ezek. xxxiv., Jer. xxiii., 1 Peter v. 14, Acts xx. 28, and the epistles of Paul to Timothy and to Titus, I am constrained to exclaim, "Who is sufficient for these things?" To be a pastor after God's own heart (Jer. iii. 15), one must certainly love all the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made him overseer. There are both lambs and sheep in the flock, and sometimes feebleness, infirmities and sickness are manifest among the people of God; and when disorders arise among the saints, it is truly a trying time to the faithful gospel minister. Though my experience is but limited, yet have I learned that I am in need of constant supplies of wisdom and grace from our God, that I may fulfill with joy that ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. I know that the gift to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to the edifying of the body of Christ is of God. The apostle Paul has said that God maketh us able ministers of the new testament. We are but earthen vessels, which the Holy Ghost filleth with the treasure of the precious doctrine of Christ; and the excellency of the power is of God, and not of us. This truth is often a comfort to my soul. I am so often feeling so barren, desolate, empty, sinful, unfitted for the work; I am so unequal for so sacred and such a divine vocation; I say in my heart sometimes, What will the poor flock do to-day? I have no food for them. I look abroad, but all, as far as my poor dim sight can see, is a barren waste, scorched and desolate, a veritable wilderness; no green pastures, no tender grass springing up after rain, wander where I may. I may try to think upon some spiritual theme, but it seems like a stagnant pool. I peruse the Scriptures, but it appears as a sealed book to me. I may search the hymn-book to see if I cannot find a thought, but all is in vain. I am empty and profitless; and if I am a steward of the manifold grace of God, it would appear the Lord of the house withholds at such times the keys of the kingdom of heaven. How then can such a poor, worthless one enter in and bring forth things new and old, when all is under lock and key? I am made to experience such destitution that I feel when I come to speak before a congregation I have no word from the Lord to testimonially open or shut the kingdom of heaven. Indeed I have sometimes been in such darkness, unable to concentrate a thought upon heavenly things; all seems like a vast parable, and I am for a season like those without, to whom it is not given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. There is a set time to favor Zion. I have been, dear brother, in straits, and in my infirmity I have attempted many expedients to bring to myself relief. Sometimes I seek to call to remembrance texts of Scripture that I have preached from in times past, thinking that perhaps I may find a little food in them. But all the places I wander into and cast my eyes upon appear to be like parched places of the wilderness, a desert land. How then can such a worm like me feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood? At such times as this I have often experienced the gracious ministry of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. He instructs my soul, and causes me to remember that I am an earthen vessel, and that it is only by the grace of God that the ministers of Jesus Christ preach his unsearchable riches; that the excellency of the power is of God, and not of the poor, empty, earthen vessel. "Thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak." When I have found all cisterns to be broken, then the gracious Lord has drawn my heart to look to him alone, and I have gone to my appointments looking to the Lord to fill a poor, empty, earthen vessel, and to enable me to pour out such precious, divine and spiritual treasures as he himself shall pour in. "Our sufficiency is of God." I feel ashamed that I have ever been unmindful of this, that I ever should have had a thought that I had the ability, a sufficiency in myself with which to come before the household of God. O how good, my dear brother, it is that our God will keep us humble, dependent, looking and waiting at his feet. Then it is I find in due season green pastures appear, quiet resting places are found, and safe folds are revealed, all in the precious gospel of Christ. But there are times also with me that I feel to have no liberty given me in speaking. I seem like one pumping up stagnant water; my preaching appears to me like spreading on the table hard, dry, mouldy crusts of bread for the children to eat. When I have felt like this I have inwardly sighed, and my heart has pitied the dear children of God, for whom it appeared I had such poor food. But the truth remains that the excellency of the power is of God, and not of us. Such preaching has often been of God a word in season to some poor, weary, wayfaring man, a feast of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

It appears to me that if I pen much more I shall make this rather a long letter, so I will come to a close. I know that you will agree with me that to preach the gospel, and to have the oversight of churches, is such a calling that the wisdom and grace of God must be continually ministered to him, that he may be a faithful gospel shepherd. May the Lord be with you, dear brother, and bless you, and the churches under your care, is the heart's desire of your brother, I hope, and companion in the gospel of Christ,

FRED. W. KEENE.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 24, 1893.

DEAR ELDER VAIL:—By your request I write you this letter as a testimony of God's divine grace, through faith in Jesus, who, I hope, hath called me, a sinner, out of darkness into his marvelous light. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the tongue confession is made unto salvation. No sinner can express this truth correctly or see it in God's light unless it be by grace, through faith in Jesus Christ. He must be born again before he can see the truth as it is in Jesus; and surely his experience in grace must bear record with the word, and then his testimony will be sweet. This I say because it is my experience, and a great privilege above all others; for I can remember when the goodness of God led me to repentance, how I felt the blindness of my heart, the ignorance, the darkening of the understanding, with a heavy, guilty heart, a sinner from head to foot before God and man, not being able to discern the truth, and wishing often to be an animal of some kind rather than a man. I felt less than a man. Yes, such is my experience. It is impossible for me to tell you in this letter the way of the Lord to me. I feel every day as though I were the only sinner upon the earth. The view that I have of myself, too, for the moment seems discouraging, for it causes me to fear, doubt and mourn with many tears, of which I have a plenty. I have more tears and groanings than I am able to tell you of, my dear Elder. But we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we think or ask, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, world without end. Amen.

From your unworthy brother,
WILLIAM HENRY LESLIE.

BALTIMORE, Md.

DEAR BROTHER KEENE:—After many attempts in my mind to write to you since the meeting at Black Rock, I will try to pen a few lines; but I feel there is such a difference between us in spiritual things, what can I write to please or interest any of the Lord's people? While I have my full share of vanity in a natural sense, still I almost feel it is sacrilegious at times for me to attempt to write upon spiritual things, for fear that I know nothing about them. But I know this, that while you, dear brother, and the world, may be deceived in me, the great God is not; and I am so glad I cannot deceive him; for I might try if I thought I could. While I do not wish to, if I know myself, I feel there is so much pollution and corruption in my nature that if I were not restrained by the power of God I would certainly be led all the time by the evil one. You know the evil one can appear in many attractive forms, as an angel of light. I know God's grace swallows up all our sins, like a fathom.

APOSTOLIC ENTREATY.

"DEARLY beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."—1 Peter ii. 11, 12.

In the testimony of Jesus as left for our guidance by the appointed judges in spiritual Israel, there is unmistakable evidence of the guidance of the Spirit of Christ in the meek and affectionate language wherein the decisions and directions are written. None of the arrogance of earthly rulers is assumed by the princes who rule in judgment and occupy thrones of authority in this everlasting kingdom. Neither do they use feigned words in addressing their brethren unto whom they are sent to administer the law of Christ, the King who reigns in righteousness. Among men, those who have dominion and command the obedience of their fellows, while often assuming a form of humility in words, yet by their manner demand the respect due to superior position; and they thus exercise dominion and authority upon those whom they rule. Jesus told his disciples of this, and charged them, "But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."—Matt. xx. 20-28. In accordance with this instruction, Peter in our text addresses the scattered strangers not as subjects whom he would command, but as brethren whom he loved with an affection beyond the power of nature, and for whose welfare he was willing to labor and endure the loss of all earthly advantages. However much the pride of the carnal mind may be disposed to despise the authority which speaks in such terms of humble entreaty, to those who have the love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ, there can be no form of commandment which so directly addresses itself to their highest emotions as this very solemn entreaty of the inspired apostle. They do not render enforced obedience to the directions of their Lord, as if moved by the terror of slavish fear; but from grateful appreciation of infinite mercy and grace already received, they have no more exalted aspiration than that they may be found walking in every precept and example of their Lord. Hence, this form of entreaty is the very strongest appeal which could be spoken to the particular characters to whom it is restricted.

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul." It is important to observe that this affectionate form of address is not used in a mere complimentary sense, as is customary among men of the world. No natural affection can compare with the love of God by which the saints are united, so that they are "of one heart and of one soul." While this spiritual unity is beyond the comprehension of their own natural minds, and does not in any wise depend upon their own will, the subjects of its sweetly irresistible power know that it binds them together in such spiritual accord as causes them to forget the little animosities and divisions which involve the nations of this world in perpetual rivalry and bloody strife. The apostle is himself identified with his dearly beloved to whom he writes, as one with them in being "strangers and pilgrims," by reason of their sojourning in a strangeland, and finding no city to dwell in. As fellow-citizens of the same nativity in the heavenly Jerusalem, the fact of their companionship in this wilderness where they together wander as strangers and pilgrims, might well give them a feeling of tenderness and sympathy toward each other; but they are yet more closely identified in the unity of their sorrows and of their mutual longing for their one eternal home in Christ Jesus.

But what is this subject upon which it is needful that the apostle should so affectionately beseech these fellow-strangers? The anxiety of modern teachers of popular Christianity is directed to the continuance of that work in which the Pharisees were engaged in the time when they crucified the Lord of life. Now, as then, they "compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two fold more the child of hell than yourselves."—Matt. xxiii. 15. No such work is included in the entreaty of Peter. His wish is directed alone to the benefit of those whom his love so tenderly embraces. He solemnly and earnestly beseeches them to the honest practice of total abstinence. This is not that they should join with the world in a crusade against any article of natural food or drink; but that as strangers and pilgrims, they should abstain from fleshly lusts. Let all who have reverence for the word of the Lord particularly notice that no other total abstinence is enjoined upon anyone in the law of Christ, but that which is embraced in the entreaty of Peter in our text. It is of the utmost importance to the saints that they give constant and diligent attention to this exhortation. But the apostle has not left room for the suggestion that even the neglect of the strangers and pilgrims to give heed to this exhortation may endanger the salvation which is secured for them in Jesus. It is for the present deliverance of the soul from the cruel enmity of those fleshly lusts, that the saints are exhorted to abstain from them. Peter does not say that by abstaining from fleshly lusts they who are satisfied to dwell in this world may become the companions of those strangers and pilgrims to whom this exhortation is addressed. His solicitude for the characters definitely described in the opening words of this epistle, is all summed up in the specification that the lusts to which he refers, and from which they are entreated to abstain, are such as war against the soul. Since they have to encounter these adversaries in their weary pilgrimage here in time it is evident that their opposition is felt in their present experience. The word soul, as here used, signifies that comfort and satisfaction known by the saints in the answer of a good conscience toward God, which is found in the humble obedience of faith. Those who have been long in the pilgrimage of this wilderness of tribulation, cannot have failed to learn by experience what it is to feel the cruel effects of this war of fleshly lusts against the true spiritual joy and comfort which they prize as far above all earthly considerations. So Paul says, "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh; for if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do modify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Certainly this is said concerning the present comfort of the disciples of Jesus. It cannot refer to that life eternal which Jesus gives to his sheep, in which he says that they shall never perish.

"Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles." This clause explains how it is that these saints were to comply with the entreaty of which we have been treating. By the word conversation is not meant merely the words which might be uttered by them, but in all their walk and actions they were to "show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." It is in explanation of this holy calling that the exhortation in our text is written. They who are called with this high vocation can never afford to forget that they are no longer their own, being bought with the unspeakable price of the blood of Jesus Christ. Surely it is their reasonable service that they should glorify God in their body and in their spirit, which are God's. This requires that they should be honest in a deeper sense than that which relates to their outward deportment. Of course, there must be an honest course of conduct in their association with their fellow-men. Without this, no eloquent words, nor unanswerable arguments, will declaratively glorify God. But the honest conversation here enjoined must be measured by the pure standard of divine perfection. In the sight of God there is nothing honest but that which is perfectly conformed to the example and commandment of our Lord Jesus. When our conversation is according to this rule no rage of enemies nor devices of the adversary can do us any real injury. All their fury is directed against the impregnable walls of salvation which our God has set for the defense of his own eternal truth. Their futile rage can only result in manifesting more clearly the victory of the honest truth of the gospel of divine grace.

"That whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation." This does not signify merely that the opposers of the truth now speak against the saints as evil doers, but that the time will come when they must glorify God. This clause must be taken in connection with the preceding portion of the text. The compliance of the saints with the entreaty of the apostle so fully refutes the accusations of the enemies of the doctrine of God, that their very wrath in thus speaking against the strangers and pilgrims, instead of injuring the objects of their malice, redounds to the declarative glory of God through his grace sustaining the persecuted ones. The Scriptures abound with illustrations of the manifestation of the glory of God, in which the very efforts of wicked men for the destruction of the saints were turned to the accomplishment of the gracious purpose of God. Well does the psalmist say, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." The wrath of Cain furnished the occasion for the faith of Christ to be manifested in Abel. The wrath of Joseph's brethren brought about the fulfillment of the dreams which God had given to the child, by which their envy was excited. Adversaries of the doctrine of the infinite sovereignty of God see in this truth an excuse for their evil and corrupt actions. They do not recognize the essential fact that God sees and judges the heart, and finds murder in an angry thought, even though no blood has been shed. He is not like man, whose judgment can only deal with accomplished actions. Even when in his humiliation he was manifest in the flesh, our Lord knew what was in man. He was never mistaken in any of those whom he called to be his disciples, nor in one of those to whom he said, "I told you, and ye believed not; the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me; but ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you." No device of falsehood can deceive the Judge of quick and dead. When evil men charged Jesus with being an impostor, the works which he did were the witnesses of the true source of his divine power. So, when his disciples are falsely accused, there is no clearer vindication of their character than the works of obedience to the law of Christ which are wrought in them by the Spirit of truth. When thus refuted by the good works of those accused, the very malice of their detractors is made to bear testimony to the glory of that grace by which the saints are made to walk in newness of life. Such victory can never be attained by one who yields his members servants to the flesh, even though it be only to consult carnal policy for the direction of his conduct. God is glorified by his own works exclusively. Whatever carnal wisdom may suggest, all the glory resulting from such action is due to the mind in which it originated. Every creature of God declares the glory of its Creator by filling the place for which it is fitted. The bird is not required to swim beneath the seas; the fish is not made to walk in the fields; man was not made to occupy the place of angels or seraphim. The wisdom and omnipotence of God appear in all his works. Wolves and lions were not designed to eat grass like sheep. Yet the ferocious beasts were made by the same God who formed the dove and the lamb. Each of them glorifies the Creator in its own sphere. So, God is glorified in the wrath of man just to the extent which the hand and counsel of God before determined to be done, and that glory is further revealed in restraining the remainder of that wrath.

If by the phrase, "In the day of visitation," is meant the time when God shall be pleased to visit them in the revelation of his love for their salvation, there is a still more exalted sense in which "They may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God." This was exemplified in the case of the very religious Saul of Tarsus, whose zeal against the doctrine of Christ led him to persecute the saints even unto strange cities. When it pleased God to call him to the knowledge of the truth, he did glorify that grace which was displayed in the very saints whom he had punished in every synagogue. The grace which illuminated the face of the martyred Stephen as he prayed for his murderers, shines forever to the glory of God in the sight of every sinner who is brought to the knowledge of the truth. Wherever that meek and forgiving principle rules in the heart and actions of a saint, there is God declaratively glorified. But there is no room for boasting on the part of any creature; since it is only by abstaining from fleshly lusts that they can be the occasion of the ascription of glory to God. This exhortation forbids the indulgence of any natural emotion, or dependence upon any earthly resources. Everything which is not of the Spirit is included in the lusts of the flesh, from which the apostle beseeches the strangers and pilgrims to abstain. Experience teaches the saints this same needful caution. Nothing is profitable for the comfort and growth in grace of the followers of Jesus but the immediate instruction received from the guidance of the Spirit which leads them into all truth. All other attractions but lead them into snares of the enemy, where they suffer the loss of that comfort of hope, and the assurance of faith, in which alone they find rest to their soul. May all those who hope in the salvation of God as revealed in Jesus Christ be enabled to give heed to the exhortation of our text; and walking in love may they ever find the presence of their Redeemer their refuge and strength in every time of trouble! So shall they know the blessedness of keeping the statutes of the King in Zion, and abide in the blissful light of his countenance.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers; but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it. Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

less ocean, and raises us, his creatures, and leads us to repose in the depths of the eternal love of God. It is grace that finishes the work begun in us. But the question is with me, Am I one of the elect number? Was I remembered in the great covenant? Was my name written there? I ask, How could that be, when so many others doubt, who, it seems to me, have so much more ground to hope than I? Their walk is consistent, while I am naturally full of levity, easily amused, and like to amuse others sometimes, as the children say, for the fun of it; but compunctions of conscience I have always realized from a child; there are so many things I have done and said that I have been sorry for. I made resolutions long ere I joined the church; but alas! I have learned I am not my own keeper. Long before I united with the church I used to think I was better out of the church; and I say even now to myself, What can I say about spiritual things? Perhaps I am a hypocrite; and if so, I better not make any attempt to try to deceive any longer. I often wonder if I have an experience; and if not, I have no right in the church. Many a time have I lain myself upon my bed at night, disgusted, and despising myself for the sins that I have committed. Many bitter tears have I shed over my wrong doings. Ah, how must I appear in the sight of God, who knoweth all things? Years ere I joined the church I often tried to pray that the Lord would forgive my many sins, and be merciful to me, a poor, vile sinner. The desire to be a christian was a thought uppermost with me for a long, long time. I learned full well that I could do nothing good; that salvation must be of the Lord alone. I knew I was too prone to sin to be capable of one single act to merit God's favor. I have always felt that I deserved his frowns and scoffs rather than his mercies and blessings; and yet how bountifully he has bestowed them upon unworthy me. My dear brother, if I have an experience at all, I can only answer you as I did dear brother Chick, that I cannot date the beginning of it at all. I can remember when a child, perhaps thirteen or fourteen years old, I had said some saucy words to my dear mother, which I was very sorry for afterwards, and wept many bitter tears on account of it. I thought to myself, Why is it I yield so readily to the influence of the evil one? I am so impulsive. I thought at that time, if in such moments of temptation God would only put his dear name in my mind it would cause my tongue to be bridled, even if angry feelings and thoughts did exist within me. I thought I should then be saved from apparent disobedience; yet in the sight of the holy God my sin would be as great. Many resolutions did I earnestly make, only to break them again and again; so I have given up the fight long ago in thinking that I have power to control myself. I know I am not my own keeper for one single moment. While I have been kept from going into outbreaching sins, yet the world has had many attractions for me. I used to be very fond of dancing parties, and pleasures of that kind. I enjoyed also going to the theatre occasionally. All those things seem to have had their day with me; but I sometimes think it is only because as we grow older our tastes naturally are apt to change; and then I have different responsibilities now, a husband and home to look after. O! I am so afraid of deceiving myself and others; but I am glad to know I cannot deceive our God and King, and I trust he will make me submissive to his will in all things. After the desire I had that God's name might be in my mind at an angry moment, the desire was granted me, only to show me that the mere name in my thoughts alone was nothing without his power. I was depending upon my own strength, simply asking to have his name in my mind; like the religion in the world to-day, only the name without the power. Well, I traveled on in the gay whirl of excitement, and enjoyed myself generally, though at intervals I would have moments of sorrow for my sins. In the still hours of the night I would think upon the Lord, and sometimes peace would come to my troubled soul. Some precious moments would be given me; joy and sorrow commingled; sorrow for my sins, yet joy was there also in the thoughts that God had made me to sorrow over my sins. After years of worldly pleasures a great sorrow fell upon me in the loss of a very dear brother, just ushered into manhood, and who promised to be all that heart could wish in nature. I was proud of him, and loved him dearly. I felt when he told us his appointed time had come it was more than I could bear. I felt rebellious, for I would have kept him if I could. He seemed so willing, so submissive to the pleasure of the Lord. His death seemed to have drawn my affections from the world, and my thoughts were now concentrated upon heavenly things. How marvelous are the ways of the Lord! Brother Chick thought that sad event the time of the first manifestation of my experience; but I cannot say. I am so full of doubts and fears all the time, and not having any illuminating manifestations like some have had, it makes me anxious indeed at times. I have never had any beautiful dreams and visions like some have had. I have wished and longed for them, for then I would be so much better satisfied, I think. Five years after we lost that dear brother, we lost our father, which was another sorrow upon us, though he was relieved from great suffering, as he had been subject to rheumatism for years, and was greatly afflicted when our darling boy died, who said, "Father you'll be the next." Five years after we lost our father, our dear mother was taken from us, one whom we all looked up to so much, for we thought her judgment almost infallible. Though she was delicate all her life, yet her energy and ambition never forsook her. Even dear old father depended upon her management during the last few years of his declining life. What a trial it was to give up these darling ones; but there was unspeakable joy and satisfaction in the bright evidences of grace which each of them gave. O that my hope may be as bright as theirs, when called upon to lay aside this fleshly tabernacle. This is the desire of my heart. So you see my life has had its clouds, and some sunshine too; much that is natural, but not so much that is of a spiritual nature, if I know anything of a spiritual life. Our dear mother heard you preach but once, and that was at Black Rock, the time that you first attended an association in Maryland. She was well pleased with your preaching. She was considered quite a deep discernor of preaching, though her feelings of unworthiness kept her out of the visible church; and to think that I am a member of the church, when I cannot compare with her in patience, endurance, or in fact in anything; yet I feel if I cannot be there I have no place anywhere. When I went before the church I told them I came offering myself not as a christian, but desiring to be one. How readily the hand of fellowship was extended to me. I often catechise myself in regard to a christian life. I trust the little hope I have will never be removed from me, as it is very precious. I believe that true religion is a free, unmerited gift of God. I feel, if I am to be left to perish with the world and their idols, why do I feel to hear the truth preached with joy in my heart? I know that salvation is of the Lord alone, and only for his mercy and forgiveness and grace I should be utterly lost. I have no other place to flee to, and often wonder that he has been so merciful to me. I marvel that such a sinner has any comfort any way given me, when I do so much that is displeasing in the sight of God; but a little hope glimmers, and I would not part with it for kingdoms. I hope you can read this letter of imperfections. I close with kind remembrance. Your unworthy sister,

E. S. JOHNSON.

1 TIMOTHY IV. 1.

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils."

From the promptings of some kind of spirit within I again take up my pen to write; but it is with much fear and trembling that I do so. If it is the prompting of an evil or seducing spirit, I know full well that none of the Lord's people will be edified, comforted or built up in the faith of God's elect people by reading what I may write. "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." I have no desire, then, to trust in man, or in flesh (self), for guidance in writing upon any subject taught in the Scriptures of divine truth. Unless I am led by the Spirit of God, not only in writing, but in all I say or do, I can do nothing as I ought to do. If I am not led by the Spirit of the meek and lowly Lamb of God in all things it will be impossible for me to so write as to comfort any of God's dear children. Having no other desire but to comfort, and, if possible, try to exhort them to continue in the faith which once was delivered unto the saints, I pray the Lord to guide my mind aright. During the past four months I have received some very comforting letters indeed, some of which are from entire strangers to me in the flesh. Others, again, are not so comforting, as they tell of discord and confusion brought about from various causes among some of the churches; yet it is but the fulfillment of the declaration of Jesus, "It is impossible but that offenses will come."

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly [positively], that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith." I think I may safely say that the "latter times" referred to in the text are now. Paul in his letter to Timothy says, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers," &c. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."—2 Tim. iii. We need not go to some distant part of our land to find just such characters as the apostle here describes, for we find them all around us, even sometimes in our own families. Again, John says in his first epistle, "Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time." "Antichrist" means opposed to Christ, or one who opposes Christ. If we look around us we can find many who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. They not only teach things contrary to the Scriptures of truth, but they deny Christ's testimony when he declared, "All power in heaven and earth is given unto me." Again, Jesus in his prayer to the Father, just before he was betrayed, said, "Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." These blasphemers teach that Jesus is beseeching sinners to accept eternal life which he is offering them, but that sinners reject the offered mercy. "Some shall depart from the faith." Paul in his letter to Timothy charges him to "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness. And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some." Dear brethren, do we not see among us to-day profane and vain babblers, disputing about words to no profit, which Paul says is but to the subverting of the hearers? Instead of earnestly contending for that faith once delivered to the saints, which is the faith of God's elect, they give "heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Notice, it is "seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils"—all in the plural; more than one spirit, more than one doctrine, more than one devil. There are many seducing spirits, many doctrines, and, I believe, many devils in the world, but how many I do not pretend to know. Every seducing spirit and every false doctrine is of the devil, the enemy of all righteousness; and if we give heed to the seducing spirits, and are led into any false doctrines, we are being led of the devil, and not of God. In many places there is much confusion among the Baptists, some contending for one thing and some for another. One is contending that God is a sovereign, having all wisdom, power and knowledge; another limits his power. One preaches the resurrection of the dead; another that the resurrection is past already. One preaches two births, one natural and one spiritual; while some say there is but one birth, and others that the whole Adam man is born over and becomes a new creature. How many different views there are being advocated among us to-day I do not pretend to know. This one thing I do know, that one is the opposite of the other, and cannot both be truth. If one is the true doctrine of God our Savior, the other must be the doctrines of devils. I have no desire to discuss here which of these points of doctrine I believe is true or which is false, as it might lead to controversy, and I hope I am not prompted to write this for mastery. I hope I am not prompted by the spirit of some, who call all who differ with them heretics. There are some whom I have good evidence to believe are the Lord's children, that are being led by seducing spirits, and I desire not to abuse them by calling them abominable heretics because they do not believe as I do; but I feel to commend them unto God and to his word, and pray that they may be enabled to reject that which they cannot find a "Thus saith the Lord" for, and receive nothing as truth that is not according to "the law and to the testimony." If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally, and upbraideth not.

The prophet Isaiah says, "The leaders of my people cause them to err." It has been my experience, since I have been among the Baptists, that invariably where discord and confusion arise in the churches, as well as associations, the moving cause can be traced to some one who was or wanted to be a leader. Churches, and associations as well, have been rent asunder many times by would-be leaders of the people, in departing from the faith, giving heed unto seducing spirits. I want to quote John again: "Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come," &c. "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us." Those who go out from us because they are not of us seldom go alone. They sometimes so bewitch many of the dear saints that they depart from the faith, and give heed to these seducing spirits, and are thus led by these false teachers, whom Peter says shall be "among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies," or "doctrines of devils." We should not marvel at this, for it is in accord with what Peter further says, "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." When we see truth fallen in the streets, and, as it were, trampled under foot of men as an unholy thing, it is hard for us, poor, finite creatures, to feel that it is for good; we seem to forget that such sore trials among the saints are among the "all things" which the apostle says "work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

In conclusion I want to say unto those who have written me, as well as all others who may be passing through the same tribulations, sore distress and persecutions, that I feel incompetent to admonish you, farther than to look to him in whom you can safely trust. He alone can bring you off, in all these things, more than conquerors through him that loved us and gave himself for us. It is no marvel if discord and confusion arise among the saints. When malice, envy, hatred and strife prevail among the members of the churches we are made sorrowful. It is because iniquity abounds that the love of many shall wax cold. If any go out from us because they are not of us, it is but the removing of the things that are shaken, "that those things which cannot be shaken may remain."—Heb. xii. 27. It is for the purging of the church, the trial of the faith of the saints, which "being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

May the Lord keep all his believing children from departing from the faith and following after seducing spirits, is my prayer, for Jesus' sake.

THANKS.

THROUGH the kindness of Mr. Platt, of Hazleton, Pa., we are in receipt of one of his largest Baker and Roaster Pans, a set of the Christy Knives, and several cans of the Breaker Powder, for which he will please receive our thanks. From our experience we can say that they are all he claims for them in his advertisement.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

J. S. HAM having changed his residence from Mapleton, Iowa, to Hartington, Neb., wishes his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

MARRIAGES.

By Elder A. B. Francis, at Pittsville, Md., April 5th, 1894, Mr. James W. Parker and Miss Sarah E. Parsons.

By the same, at Delmar, Del., April 12th, 1894, Mr. John C. Lecates and Miss Martha J. Gordy.

At the residence of Mrs. Mary McConaughy, near Newark, Del., by Elder Wm. Grafton, April 19th, 1893, Harry P. Mitchell and Flora C. Rogers.

By the same, March 17th, 1894, Charles H. Jarmon and Bessie Staton, both of near Newark, Del.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Emma Sloan Edwards, formerly of Kentucky, departed this life Nov. 25th, 1893, after a short but severe illness of brain fever, in Delano, Cal.

Miss Emma Sloan was known to many of your readers as a pupil in the Hopewell Seminary, N. J., and a member of the class of '79. She was a granddaughter of the last wife of Elder J. F. Johnson. She left many friends in New Jersey, and soon after leaving school she married Dr. Joseph Edwards. They had made their home in the vicinity of Delano, Cal., and had purposed very soon to establish a Sanitarium in that country, so famous for its climatic advantages. Dr. Edwards was taking a special course at the Oakland Medical College, preparatory to entering on what they had planned for their life work. He was called suddenly from his college work to the bedside of his wife, and was prostrated by her sudden death; and, typhoid fever setting in, Dr. Edwards died Jan. 4th, 1894. They left six children under ten years of age. Mrs. Edwards was a firm Old Baptist in sentiment, though I am not informed that she ever made a public profession of her faith. She was a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and ever interested in the doctrine which it has so long defended. She felt, when first taken sick, that it was her last illness, and made disposition of her children. Her mother and grandmother care for the orphans, according to her request.

May the bereaved ones, the aged parents and the children of tender age, be the especial care of that God who watches over all.

E. H. BOGGS.

David Bruner was born in Breckenridge Co., Ky., Dec. 21st, 1827, and at the age of about fourteen years the family moved to Illinois, and settled in Schuyler Co. He was united in marriage with Miss Rhoda Hills, Dec. 2d, 1847, and to them were born eight children, five of whom (one son and four daughters) survive their beloved father.

Brother Bruner professed a hope in Christ, and was baptized by Elder A. Howard on the second Sunday in November, 1851, in the fellowship of the Sugar Creek Church of Regular Baptists, located in Schuyler Co. He continued in this faith without wavering until he was called to a better world, and was beloved by the brethren in Christ, and highly esteemed by all who knew him as a man of strict integrity and honor. His life was a pattern worthy of being followed by us all; and he will be missed by the community in which he lived, by the church of which he was a member, and more sadly by the respected family he has left, and most of all by his affectionate wife, our dear sister in Christ, who feels deeply the loss of the partner of her joys.

The deceased retired from his farm in 1889, and located in the village of Table Grove, Fulton Co., Ill., and there built up and enjoyed a valuable property, and quietly enjoyed a beautiful and comfortable residence; but for many months before his death he was in a weakly state of health, and for a few weeks was confined to his bed with a complication of ills, and on Sunday evening, April 8th, 1894, gently passed away, aged 66 years, 3 months and 18 days. Our beloved brother, some time before his departure, told his dear companion that he should soon leave her and her children, and that she must not weep nor shed a tear over his departure, as he was going to a clime of endless joy.

I was called to the house of mourning, and on the 10th of April, although a very unpleasant day, a large congregation met in a meeting-house in the village, and were addressed by the writer from the words, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." At his own request his grave was thoroughly lined and covered with brick and cement, where his remains were laid to rest until God shall call for him. The Lord bless the family.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill.

At the residence of brother John McConnell, in Ridgewood, N. J., on Saturday, April 7th, 1894, at 9 o'clock a. m., Miss Abbie M. Kugler quietly ceased breathing, after most intense suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys.

The subject of this notice was born Nov. 6th, 1872, at the home of her father, brother Wilson Kugler, near Frenchtown, N. J.; and having chosen the occupation of teaching, she had attained unusual eminence in her profession, having graduated with high honors from the State Normal School at Trenton, and commanded the approbation of the State Board of Education to such a degree that only her youth prevented their advancing her to the highest position in their gift. Three years since she was appointed head of the Primary Department of the school at Midland Park, N. J., and since she had been three times promoted, holding at the time of her death the highest position her age would allow.

Although she had never publicly professed faith in the salvation revealed in Jesus, she had given clear evidence of the work of grace in her heart. In an interview with the writer one month before her death she confessed her only hope in the sovereign grace of God, and manifested unquestionable assurance that she had no confidence in any other refuge but the blood of Jesus for the remission of her sins. No shadow of doubt clouds the confidence that she sleeps in Jesus.

During her severe suffering, even after she was lost to her surroundings, she frequently spoke of that interview, and seemed encouraged by the remembrance of it. She also, after she lost consciousness, often repeated the words, "called and chosen." Elder Wm. L. Beebe, who arrived at her bedside just before the breath left her, was requested to speak briefly to the mourning friends that afternoon, and used as a text the words which were last upon her tongue, which are written Revelation xvii. 14. Elder Bundy attended the funeral at her father's home on Thursday, April 12th, and preached from the text 2 Cor. iv. 15-18. The body was buried at Frenchtown, N. J. May the love of God console the dear bereaved parents and all who mourn, and enable each to say, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good."—ED.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—We desire to have you publish in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a notice of the death of our beloved brother, Deacon Josiah Barber, who had been afflicted with lung disease for more than a year.

He was born in Cobb Co., Ga., Feb. 20th, 1832, and was married to Miss Sarah Henry on Oct. 10th, 1858. After her death he married, Nov. 17th, 1863, Mrs. Bettie A. Cambell, who together with four children and several grandchildren survive him. Our dear brother obtained a hope in early life, and united with the Mission Baptists; but after his second marriage, she being a Primitive Baptist (a daughter of the late Elder Beaton Daniel), and attending their meetings with her, hearing the gospel preached in love, he became very much dissatisfied, yet it was hard for him to give up all his former works. He at last had a wonderful dream, in which it was made clear to his mind that he had never united with the church of Christ, and therefore had not been baptized. He then went willingly before the church at Malony Springs, Cobb Co., Ga., in 1868, giving a reason of his hope, and how the Lord had led him out of Babylon. He was received, and baptized by Elder Beaton Daniel; and after about six years the church called for his services as Deacon, and had him set apart in regular order to the office, which he filled with humility. About eight years ago he moved to this county (Newton), as his only daughter (Mattie E.) by his last wife had married our son (Newton C.); and they united by letter with the church at Harris Spring, and enjoyed the privilege of meeting with us a few years, when his wife was stricken down with neuralgia in her head and eyes, which caused intense suffering for several months, and resulted about two years ago in the loss of both eyes. They then had to give up house-keeping, and moved to Covington, in the house with his son-in-law, where they could be better provided for, having a room to themselves. During last year, while our brother was able to wait upon his dear companion, he would often speak in regard to how he was blessed of the Lord to have strength day by day, and wanted to live, if it were the Lord's will, as long as his companion, to wait upon her; but during the last winter he was taken down on his bed to wait until his change came, which was on April 5th, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., when he quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

We knew him many years, and can truthfully say that he was a model christian, husband, father, neighbor and citizen, and dearly loved by all who knew him. By request we staid by his bedside several days in his last sickness, and witnessed the wonderful triumphs of grace in his patient resignation to the will of his Savior; realizing that he was a poor, unworthy sinner, permitted to hope in the merits of the blood of Jesus; admonishing his children present, and others, to discharge their duty in every relation of this life; requesting them and his dear, blind companion not to grieve after him, for he hoped soon to be in a better home, and she would soon follow. He requested the writer to use hymn 1022 (Beebe's Collection) at the grave, which I did, and also tried to speak words of comfort to the bereaved and the friends assembled on the occasion, when his remains were laid to rest.

May each one of the dear family and the church realize in this sad dispensation that God's grace is sufficient for them, is the desire of your poor, disconsolate brother in hope,

WM. ADAMS.

THE TWO KINGDOMS.

"THE kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations." "Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations."—Psa. xxii. 28; cxlv. 13.

Adam's kingdom, and Jesus' kingdom; the kingdom of nature, and the kingdom of grace. The natural kingdom is material, and is subject to decay and dissolution. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day. And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament; and it was so. And God called the firmament Heaven. And the evening and the morning were the second day. And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear; and it was so. And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good. And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so. And the earth brought forth grass and herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind; and God saw that it was good. And the evening and the morning were the third day. And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years; and let them be for lights in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth; and it was so. And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, and to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness; and God saw that it was good. And the evening and the morning were the fourth day. And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind; and God saw that it was good. And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth. And the evening and the morning were the fifth day. And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and God saw that it was good. And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."—Gen. i. 1-27.

Now let us consider the order in which God created the universe, and see if we cannot trace out strong indications of infinite wisdom and clear manifestations of a lovingly merciful providence in this material creation. It is axiomatic that the animal kingdom could not exist in the absence of the vegetable kingdom; that the vegetable kingdom could not exist in the absence of the fertile soil, moisture, heat and light. Now, reverse this order and we have, first, "God said, Let there be light; and there was light." And one of the inseparable concomitants of light is warmth or heat; and this fact explains why Moses in his concise though brief account of creation omits the mentioning of warmth or heat, an element so essential to the vegetable and animal kingdoms.

Next comes the separation of the waters under the firmament from the waters above the firmament; and in this we see the provision for rainfall. Then God commands the waters under the heaven to be gathered together, and the dry land to appear. Having made all these necessary arrangements, God then spoke the vegetable kingdom into existence. Right at this period or stage of creation it becomes possible for that wonderful law we call oxidation to manifest itself; for until the vegetable kingdom was created there was nothing upon which that law of dissolution could bring its destructive potency to bear.

Next comes the arrangement of the sun, moon and stars in their respective orbits to shed their light upon the earth, and to be for signs and for seasons, for days and for years.

Having thus made the needed provision for the sustenance of animal life, God then by the word of his power brings the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the air, the creeping things of the earth, the beasts of the forest and of the jungle, and the cattle of the fields into existence.

Now let us consider some of the important laws enacted and executed for the control and benefit of these things. Take the element water. Pure water is both colorless and tasteless. In this we see a remarkable display of merciful wisdom. Suppose water had color and taste peculiar to itself, entering as it does so largely into the composition of the vegetable and animal; it would give its color and taste to every article of food; and instead of so many varieties of flavor there would be the one unpalatable watery taste. Can we not see in this a providential care?

Consider the law that a column of heated or warm air is lighter than a like column of cold air. By this law smoke rises to the etherial regions and is dissipated through the immensity of space, and the animal kingdom suffers no inconvenience therefrom. Reverse this greatly merciful law, and all the smoke of all the ages would be settled in the atmosphere immediately about the earth's surface, and long ere this all animal life would have perished.

Another law is that the vegetation takes carbonic acid and other gases, hurtful to animal life, from the air, and gives off oxygen, an element necessary to the animal life. Every exhalation from the lungs of the animal kingdom is impregnated with carbonic acid gas. Were there no vegetation to absorb this poison, the atmosphere would long ere this have been so vitiated that disease and pestilence would have swept all the living organisms from this world of ours. Can we not see something more than blind chance in all these things? Surely in all these, and many more we might enumerate, we have the signs, the waymarks, of a wisely careful providence.

Having made every needed provision that this earth be a fit habitation for that higher order of animal life; having prepared the air, and the means by which it is purified for the use of that higher life; having covered the dry land with flowery, fruitful vegetation; having filled the waters with fishes, the forests with birds and beasts, the fields with cattle and grain; having left his own finger-paintings on the clouds above the evening's glowing sunset; having jeweled the vaulted sky with suns and moons and stars; having done all these things, God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over" the earth and the things therein. "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed," "to dress it and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Right here is the first time and place for "that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world" (Rev. xii. 9), to manifest and apply his negative, destructive, deceitful influence; for up to this time there was not a creature on or in earth that was susceptible of being governed by law, capable of rendering obedience to, or of transgressing law. But just as soon as man passed from the plastic hand of God, and from his lips received the law, it became possible for "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," to exercise his malignant power over the creature that was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope.—Rom. viii. 20.

Now, what do we understand by man being made in the image of God? The Bible represents God as having features and members, as face, eyes, nose, mouth, organs of speech and breath, hand and arm, back and feet, and voice; laughs and sleeps, angry, jealous, grieved and hating. Hence, as regards the features, members and qualities, man is the image of God. But I have before me the picture, the image of George Washington; an image that is readily recognized all over this country by every school-boy, as the picture, the likeness of the "father of his country." His image has head, hair, ears, mouth, nose, neck, &c.; and yet it cannot feel, hear, see, talk; the most striking resemblance of all is, it cannot feel the thrill of patriotic emotions; it cannot control the movements of a defeated, panic-stricken host; it cannot lead an army on to victory; it cannot rule a nation. So man, while he is made in the image of God, possessing the features and members which God is represented as having, is destitute of all those infinite attributes, those matchless, inimitable characteristics by which the "I Am that I Am" is distinguished from every other being in the universe, and by which he is exalted unmeasurably above all intelligences. God is incomparable with any other being. God is self-existent; man is created. God is eternal, "even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God;" man "is of few days, and full of trouble." God is immortal and invisible; man is mortal and visible. God, by virtue of that grand system of laws emanating from him, or enacted and executed by him, is present everywhere. "Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee."—1 Kings viii. 27. Heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footstool. Man is locally present; can be in but one place at a time. God is immutable. "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth." His counsel stands forever. Man is mutable, is susceptible of being changed by his surroundings, and his counsel often fails. God is omniscient. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." "His understanding is infinite." "His eyes are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." "He knoweth all things." Man is limited in wisdom, and his understanding is finite. His eyes behold only what is presented to him, and he knows but little. "God knoweth the hearts of all the children of men." "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God."—1 Cor. ii. 11. God has foreknowledge. He declares the end from the beginning. His counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. Man has only after knowledge. He does not all his pleasure. He can positively, definitely, declare nothing from the beginning. God is omnipotent and irresistible. "For with God nothing shall be impossible."—Luke i. 37. "The things which are impossible with men, are possible with God."—Luke xviii. 27. "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Man is impotent, can do but little, and with him very many things are impossible. God is righteous; man is unrighteous. God is holy; man is unholy. God is the glorious Creator; man is the sinful creature. God is the in-initely wise Sovereign; man is the rebellious subject. Hence we see from this most striking contrast that as heaven is high above the earth, so is God infinitely above man, and his ways above man's ways, and his thoughts above man's thoughts, notwithstanding man was created in the image of God. How is Adam's posterity brought into this natural kingdom—Adam's kingdom? By the immutable laws of generation, formation and birth. (I will state just here, for the benefit of all concerned, that I have heard there is such a man as Professor Drummond; but I have never seen any of his writings, nor any other man's writings on this subject.) By the above named process we, the race of man, come into this natural kingdom; and having thus entered it, we become its subjects, and are amenable to the laws of the various departments; the health department, the social department, the civil department, and the moral department of this Adamic kingdom. By rendering obedience to the laws of health we enjoy the best there is to be had in that department; the elastic step, the glowing cheek, the vigor of strength, the sparkle of the eyes, the buoyancy of mind and spirit. By carelessly disregarding these laws we suffer the penalties by which they are sanctioned; the sluggish step, the pallid cheek, the weakness of body, the dimness of sight, the drooping of mind and spirit, the agonies of physical pain. By observing the laws which govern our social communings we are met by a genial warmth of welcome that gladdens our heart, brightens our lives, and knits our hearts in the joys of friendship; while we by rudeness of manners, and by uncouth and unchaste speech, violate these laws, we are disliked and disowned by those who would otherwise love and cherish us as friends. By rendering obedience to the laws of the civil and moral departments we enjoy the protection of person and property, the complacency of conscience within, the confidence of our fellow-man, and keep ourselves out of the police, the county and the state prisons; while if we willfully transgress these laws we suffer penalties by which they are sanctioned, and are outlawed, discarded, shunned and imprisoned. Obedience to the laws of the several departments of this Adamic kingdom is rewarded in this kingdom, and the violation of these laws is punished in this kingdom.

Now let us examine the gradation of life as found in this natural kingdom.

1st. The vegetation has a life peculiar to itself, and in its own sphere it is very much alive, a fact which every farmer is familiar with; but as regards the life by which the lower animal or brute kingdom is characterized, vegetation is dead; for it has not that life which enables its possessor to hear, see, feel, smell and taste. Hence, while vegetation is alive in its sphere, it is destitute of the next grade of life, and is dead in that respect.

2d. The brute or lower animal kingdom has life peculiar to itself, and in its own sphere is very much alive; and there are varieties of life peculiar to this sphere, viz., the bird-life, which enables its possessor to live and fly and inhabit the air; yea, makes it possible for the crane, the eagle, the condor of the Andes, to bathe their plumage in the cloud mist; the fish-life, which qualifies its possessor to live in, move in and inhabit the waters. Yet while the fowls of the air are so much alive in their ethereal realm, they are destitute of that fish-life; and while the inhabitants of the deep are alive in their watery home, they are destitute of the bird life; and every species in the brute or lower animal kingdom is destitute of the man life which enables its possessor, man, to reason, to deduce conclusions, to invent machinery, to compose poetry and set it to music, to form governments, and enact and execute laws wholesome thereto.

3d. Man in his natural kingdom is physically, mentally and morally alive, and is subject to the various laws belonging to the Adamic kingdom. He invents musical instruments, writes poetry and sets it to music, and by artful manipulation of the musical key-board produces harmonious sounds to accompany his vocal songs. He invents the steam engine, having discovered the expansibility of water when subjected to heat, and the latent power locked therein; he builds rail-roads, and thus utilizes the coal, the water and the iron in moving the products of the field, the factory and the mines, and thus facilitates travel and transportation. Having discovered the laws of electricity, that iron is a conductor, and glass a nonconductor of that fluid, he has formed a wire network all over this land, and spanned the trackless oceans; and thus he sends his messages flashing from lakes to the gulf, from ocean to ocean, and from continent to continent, facilitating the travel and commerce of the nations. Yet with all this boasted genius, wisdom and life, man, together with the worm of the dust, every bird of the air, every fish of the waters, every beast of the field, must at last feel the dread potency of the one supreme law of this natural kingdom; and that law is death. The worm that creeps, the fowl that soars, and the king that reigns, must alike succumb to its inevitable command, Die!

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power;
All that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave;
Await alike the inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

And notwithstanding man's pealing anthems swell his praise, and the fact that he is in his Adamic sphere alive physically, mentally and morally, as regards that higher life, immortal life, Christ-life, man is dead; for he has not that life, nor can he by his own obedience obtain it; but, like his Adamic life, the Christ-life, if enjoyed by sinful man, comes to him as a gift, graciously bestowed by the Father of mercy and the God of all grace.—Rom. vi. 23.

The great Teacher never used an inappropriate or meaningless illustration, but his examples were always aptly instructive; hence his use of the birth when he was instructing Nicodemus. How do we enter the Adamic kingdom? We enter it by the birth-law. When do we see the natural kingdom? Before we are born into it, or after we are born into it? When do we believe concerning the things of the natural kingdom, reason about them, enjoy them, and become subject to its laws? Before or after having been born into it? After having been born into it. Were we consulted whether we would be brought into this state, or what our condition or position should be in this state? We were not consulted, but were brought into this state independent of our volition or choice. Now, Jesus taught that we must be born again; that by the new birth his people both enter and see the kingdom of God. By the water birth, or the birth of the flesh, or being born of blood, we enter and see the kingdom of Adam; and by the new birth, the Spirit birth, being born of God, "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word [Jesus] of God, which liveth and abideth forever," the people of God both enter and see the Christ kingdom, and are by the same process made subject to the laws, and manifest heirs of all blessings pertaining thereto. Having been born of the Spirit into the Christ kingdom, they believe concerning the things belonging to it. God having thus put his law into their mind, and written it in their heart, their every foolish thought, their every unkind word, their every sinful action, is tried and judged by that inward written law. Hence God's people fully realize their unrighteousness, feel their dependence, cry for mercy and guidance daily, sorrow after a godly manner, desire to lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset them, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of their faith; and seeing so clearly their imperfections and shortcomings, they would faint by the way had not their covenant-keeping God promised that he will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities he will remember no more. While the supreme law of the Adamic, earthly kingdom is death, and every living physical organism must yield to its desolating power, the supreme law of the Christ kingdom is life indissoluble, and will overcome and dispossess this arch-enemy of all the subjects of the Christ kingdom, saying "to the north, Give up; and to the south,

Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even every one that is called by my name." "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

We have seen what ample provisions the Creator made for the inhabitants of the earth, Adamic kingdom, by bringing everything into it in that perfect order dictated and executed and prepared by infinite wisdom and provident care; hence we are led to believe that if he were so lovingly thoughtful in making this earth a home meet for all his material creatures, from the worm that crawls to the prince that reigns, he was infinitely more careful and exact (if he can be more exact in one thing than in another) in preparing that kingdom which is from everlasting to everlasting, as an eternal dwelling place for his spiritually immortalized children. Nothing was omitted in the first, and we are confident nothing has been omitted in the second that would add to the sinless joys, to the ceaseless felicity, to the eternal riches, of his elect saints, and to his own honor and glory. Hence Jesus said, "In my Father's house [oikia, house, dwelling place, hence kingdom] are many mansions [monai, stayings, abidings, tarryings, hence resting places]: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, * * * that where I am, there ye may be also."—John xiv. 2, 3. Here we are poor, or are liable to lose our possessions by financial disasters. There we are the heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; and our inheritance is incorruptible, undefiled, unfading, undecaying. Here our time is short, and half of that is night, and much of the other half the sun is hid by dark and lowering clouds, and a sense of gloom hangs over all. There we will enjoy one eternal day, lighted by the glory of God and the beatific smiles of the Lamb. Here we inhale a poisonous air, and sicken, suffer and die. There we will breathe an atmosphere aromatic with the love of God our Savior, and enjoy eternal health, pleasure and life. Here we bear the image of the earthy. There we will bear the image of the heavenly. Here we are weak. There we will be strong with the might of God. Here we are natural. There we will be spiritual. Here we are mortal. There we will have put on immortality. Here we see through a glass darkly. There we will see face to face. Here our knowledge is partial. There it will be full and complete. Here we are considered as the offscourings of the earth. There we will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of our Father. Here we live by the sweat of our face. There we shall be watered and fed by the blessed Lamb of God. Here we sigh and weep and mourn. There God shall have wiped away our tears, and we shall dwell around his throne. Then will all the saints of God fully and joyfully realize in all rich fullness that "whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren," and that he has freely given them all things. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Saints of God, such has been the humble experience and hope of the writer for over twenty years. Were he as well assured of his acceptance with God through Jesus Christ our Lord, as he is of the truth of the doctrine of God our Savior, he would never suffer another doubt; his mind would never again be overcast with clouds of darkness. But while the saints of God trust and doubt, fear and hope, rejoice and groan, they have God's immutable promise that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose;" that nothing can separate them from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

In conclusion I would say, Little children, if you love Jesus, keep his commandments; yield loving obedience to the laws of the Christ kingdom which you have entered by the new birth. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 1-4. May grace continue to reign over God's humble poor, that thereby they may finish their course, fight the good fight, keep the faith, and feel assured that there are palms of victory and crowns of righteousness which God, the righteous Judge, will give to them that lovingly look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of Christ our Savior, who shall come a second time, without sin, unto the complete deliverance of his jewels, his people.

May God's blessing attend these thoughts, that they may comfort his people and glorify his name, is the desire of your little brother in gospel bonds,

T. C. HERNDON.

THE PERFECT OFFERING.

HAVING for a considerable time had my mind exercised as to the nature and acceptability of the offering made for sin, I will to-night write down a few of the thoughts and send them to be published, if they are suitable matter to be read by the patrons of your paper.

"For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."—Heb. x. 14. The words that we find recorded here are but a portion of the "all Scripture given by inspiration of God;" and when we have the Spirit or mind of Christ to rightly divide the word of truth we are benefited in reading or studying the written word.

As stated in the commencement of this article, my mind has dwelt of late much on this subject. I hope it is not for speculation or criticism, but I trust for the reason that I have been made to know something of the grandeur and glory of the offering. Not long since, being at home, and a protracted meeting being carried on in one of the "churches" in our town, my wife proposed that we attend one evening. So we went and listened, thinking that during the discourse we would hear some words at least about Christ and his "offered salvation." But we were not even told that there was a Savior, only as men could help each other, and that all depended on the deeds of the creature. I thought of what Paul said in Hebrews ix. 22, "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission." But the speaker seemed to have no use for blood on this occasion, but only wanted contributions, either in money or some other way, to enable him to save souls.

But I am not writing as I intended; still these things may serve to lead our minds to the necessity of an offering, and the result that is accomplished by the offering for sin. In the commencement of this tenth chapter of Hebrews the apostle tells us, "The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered?" &c. But we find that burnt offerings would not remit sins, but were simply under the law a remembrance again of sins. The apostle Paul says, "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." He saw it in a little different light than that in which the preacher my wife and I heard preached it. So does every awakened sinner see it when they are brought by "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" to see how utterly helpless they are, and made, as Peter was, ready to perish. Then can they see the glory and beauty of the words of Jesus where he said, "I come to do thy will, O God." It was with the writer about fifty-one years ago that he was made to rejoice in the "taking away the first [works under the law], that he may establish the second" (view Jesus Christ as the offering of his body), once for me. If once offered, then it is a complete offering, holy, acceptable unto God.

"This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." After this is witnessed by the poor, guilty, helpless sinner, then can they "enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say, his flesh." From that time on they live by faith. We read that "Ye are bought with a price;" and we are told that for this reason we should "glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." From this time on the redeemed child can say, with the apostle, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." While this is the case, are we not in our bodies, and do we not then see with the apostle that "we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us?" This is the hope of every redeemed vessel of mercy; and in looking for the source from whence this hope is derived they are led involuntarily to the language used in the second chapter of Hebrews, "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." If now this is the condition we find ourselves in, what is it that gives us hope? Is it not that we can see the offering that was made was the same one that Isaiah brings to view where he says for God, or personating God, "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation?" It seems very clear to my understanding that this reference of the prophet is to the exact person that Paul says "was made a little lower than the angels." Here comes in the question of what the offering consisted. Let us see just a little lower down in this wonderful second chapter of this Hebrew letter: "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." What is it that is made perfect? Let us see: "For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." The question seems so clearly answered, that Jesus is not of the nature of something else, or that he substitutes that other body or nature for our sins, but that he is the head of the body, and that we are members of his body, and that our sins were laid upon him by the Father in consequence of that relationship. One proof text just at hand is, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest

"THEN Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious; for as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."—Acts xvii. 22, 23.

Since our mother was beguiled by the serpent into the pursuit of the knowledge of good and evil, the restless pride of the corrupt heart has ever sought to attain the coveted wisdom by the exercise of its own powers and in the investigation of the devices of natural reason. This was the motive by which Cain was actuated in bringing "of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord." The natural mind has never been able to bring any other offering; nor can it understand how utterly impossible it is that divine justice should accept at the polluted hands of a guilty sinner an offering already under the curse which came upon the ground for the sake of the man whose own voluntary action brought him under sin and death. The history of the world has but recorded the reign of sin, and its horrid consequences have filled the dark places of the earth with the habitations of cruelty. Yet the murderous spirit which was manifest in Cain has ever continued in the religion of which he was the prototype. When in the providence of God power from above is given the workers of iniquity, they have never failed to commit the same murderous crime in acting out their religion by which it was developed in the first murderer among the children of men. It is not a mere accident that the grace of God is revealed to but few of those whom the world esteems great and wise. Our Lord Jesus did not regard it as something deplorable that darkness thus covered the earth, and gross darkness the people. "At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight."—Matt. xi. 25, 26. There can be no question that the purpose of divine wisdom appointed this blindness of the natural man to the things of the Spirit of God. It is certain that in all ages the most religious and zealous class of men have been most active in persecuting the church of Christ, as it was the most pretentious worshippers whose hands were stained in the blood of our Redeemer. It is important to observe this fact, that the afflicted and persecuted people of God may not be deprived of the comfort found in the assurance that all their sufferings are measured in that same infinite love which God commendeth toward us, in that "while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." In this consideration there is rest for them that are troubled. Hence the saints are admonished, "Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels [messengers], intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, and not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God."—Col. ii. 18, 19. Instead of the truth of the gospel finding support among the learned and noble of this world, the apostle directs the attention of the saints especially to their peculiar calling. "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence."—1 Cor. i. 26-29. This inspired instruction must ever be observed by the disciples of Jesus, for whose benefit it is recorded. Such is the deceitfulness of the carnal mind that it is ever ready to rob the believer of the peace which is his in belief of the truth. In this cruel effort all the resources of worldly wisdom are found sustaining the work of unbelieving reason. Hence, there is necessity that the saints should give the more earnest heed to the things which they have heard from the only messengers or angels who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Even before the apostles fell asleep there were heresies manifested among those who had been regarded as of their own selves. And the saints were warned that such characters should arise after the departing of those inspired servants. They were not particularly admonished to beware of those who were weak in the faith, nor yet of such as were slow to learn; the most impressive caution was to "Beware lest any man spoil [rob] you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."—Col. ii. 8. It will be seen that there was need of special admonition on this point, that the saints might not be deceived. Such is the deceitfulness of the natural mind and heart of man that it is written, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." In the instruction which is left for their guidance the saints are nowhere directed to seek after the worldly knowledge which puffeth up those who acquire it. That wisdom which is given from above humbles its recipients, so that they do indeed each esteem others better than self, and feel that their own utter ignorance is exposed by the light which has shined in their hearts. Thus the more clearly one is led into the light of divine truth the more readily is he prepared to bear with the infirmities and ignorance of others; while those who are puffed up with the learning of this world are always ready to condemn those who question their superior knowledge for which they have devoted themselves to study. When the adversary has gained the mastery over a saint to the extent of making him feel that he has discovered wisdom unknown to his brethren, it is certain to cause the captivated one to see heresy and iniquity in all who refuse to accept his newly found improvements on the simplicity of the gospel. Since he has no scriptural support for the sentiments which he has invented, of course he is ready to receive the confirmation which may be found in the writings of uninspired authors, even though they may be arrayed among the persecutors of the disciples of Jesus. Such deceived ones frequently are very tenacious of traditions which may be traced only a few centuries back, even though they are in manifest opposition to the inspired standard of the Scriptures.

It is worthy of special attention that those to whom Paul spoke in our text were not a company of illiterate people; on the contrary, it is stated that they were so very earnest in their pursuit of education that they "spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing." In the margin it is stated of this Mars' hill, that it was the highest court in Athens. They were therefore the most learned people of that age, and it may well be questioned whether they have ever been excelled in worldly wisdom in any age. Yet they were in all things too superstitious. They not only worshiped such gods as they thought they knew, but they were so devout that they had an altar inscribed "TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." This afforded the text for Paul's discourse, in which he declared unto them this God whom they with all their intelligence ignorantly worshiped. It is impossible to imagine a more sweeping expression of the utter impossibility of human learning attaining to the knowledge of God.

While it is not strange that worldly religionists should ignore this clearly stated fact of the natural man receiving not the things of the Spirit of God, it does seem astonishing that those who have by personal experience learned that this knowledge came to them only by direct revelation of God, should so far forget that fact as to suppose that it may be taught by the wisdom of man to his fellow-sinner. Yet it is only by the acceptance of this absurdity that natural learning can be regarded as qualifying even a truly enlightened saint to know more of the mystery of godliness than could be known without such cultivation of the mind. So long as this superstition remains among the world of scientific religionists there is no occasion to fear its effects; but when the enemy succeeds in deceiving the subjects of divine grace with its specious pretence, then they are in danger of becoming entangled in this error of the wicked to the sacrifice of their comfort in believing the truth. It is for their benefit that this discourse of the servant of Jesus Christ is left on record in the Scriptures. This should not be forgotten when the suggestions of reason are found to conflict with the doctrine of God our Savior as revealed in the written word and in the experience of the children of God.

Paul did not assail the teachings of those highly educated men of Athens so far as they confined themselves to the science of this world which the natural mind can receive. His work was only to preach the gospel of the grace of God, and that in the words of inspired simplicity. So he says, "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given us of God; which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual." He gloried not in his education at the feet of Gamaliel, though in that none could excel him; yet for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord he counted his education and all other advantages as but loss. So far as this world is concerned, neither education nor any other earthly advantage is to be despised. All such things are included in the gifts of God bestowed upon his creature the natural man. In this earthly state they are beneficial alike to the believer in Christ and to the infidel; but when they are considered as in any way instrumental in the communication of the knowledge of the true God they are no less objects of idolatry than the gods of wood or stone to which the most benighted heathen bow down. Many of those who have attained great emulgence in earthly knowledge have candidly confessed, with those learned Athenians, that they knew not the true God. Others have found in natural science what seemed to them conclusive evidence of the eternity of matter, thus making the material universe their ideal deity. But whatever conclusions reason may deduce from the things that are within its grasp, there is no escaping the truth which God has revealed, that his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out. Only as they are taught of God can men ever know anything of that God who works all things according to the counsel of his own will, and who is not instructed in his acts by the creatures of his hand. "For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory forever. Amen."—Rom. xi. 34-36. In the face of this plain declaration it seems incredible that they who claim to accept the testimony of revelation should ascribe even to the writings of true believers the power to guide their readers into the knowledge of divine truth; much less can it seem possible that any subject of grace should be so bewitched by admiration of worldly wisdom as to recognize as the light of truth the doctrines and commandments of men who have in past ages been zealous in persecuting the faithful followers of Jesus. Yet such is the power of the carnal mind in deceiving the saints that they are sometimes captivated by the artful devices of the adversary; and when thus deceived they are found contending against the clearest points of revealed truth. In such captivity to error they are so completely blinded that they are ready to denounce their most devoted brethren if they will not accept the sentiment by which they are deluded. The most apparent mark by which to detect this form of delusion is in the spirit by which it governs its victim. While the light of truth invariably humbles those in whose heart it shines, this superstition which is built upon human learning is always intolerant and vindictive toward all who fail to render admiration to its worship of self. That the saints are liable to fall into such idolatry is manifest from the fact that they are repeatedly cautioned by the Lord and his apostles against this very form of departure from the way of holiness.

When any sinner is found confessing his ignorance of the true God, as were those who worshiped at that altar on Mars' hill, it is evident that he has been taught of the Spirit of truth, since nature can never know its own utter ignorance. Such an ignorant worshiper is prepared of the Lord to receive the preaching of the gospel of salvation. To all others the testimony of Jesus is a stumbling-block and foolishness. Since none can judge the heart of man but that God who sees its secret depths, it is needful that the gospel be preached in every place where opportunity is given by the providence of God. The truth thus preached will search the hearts of all who hear it. To those who hunger and thirst after righteousness it will be the food they crave; to all others it will be an unmeaning sound. To such this God of salvation is still "THE UNKNOWN GOD." However highly educated, they are still "too superstitious" in pretending reverence for the God of whom they are ignorant.

in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. ii. 14-18. I cannot close these thoughts in better language than the poet Watts used:

"Keep silence, all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod;
My soul stands trembling while she sings
The honors of her God."

Tremblingly, in hope of eternal life, I am,

BATAVIA, N. Y., April 16, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—For the benefit of those who seem to have doubts as to whether or not I wrote all that was shown me, in my piece appearing in the SIGNS of April 4th, I would like to write a few words. To know that some did believe already, gave me great comfort; although I had been given faith immediately after writing, to rest assured that God's people would believe sooner or later. I did write all that was made known to me; and after passing through what I did during that week, I would never have dared to keep back anything that seemed plain for me to write. I fully believe that these are the days spoken of when Christ said, "Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains" (Matt. xxiv. 16); and no person on the earth could make me believe otherwise. It was made very plain that I should write it for the SIGNS; and when for one day and night I endeavored to find some way of escape, the heavy hand that was laid upon me became at length unbearable. I prayed for my life and reason, and was made to write, and impressed with a sense of great haste. I am ashamed and sorry that I was allowed to draw back even for that length of time; for "when I would do good, evil is present with me." But after all, I was shown in a way never to be forgotten something of the power and majesty of the God of heaven and earth, and that all things shall go as he directs.

Regarding the books of Daniel and Revelation I know almost nothing; but I doubt not there are those among the Old School Baptists who have had those things revealed to them, or will have, all in good time; for Paul wrote, "Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." In Acts ii. 17-22, after the apostles had received the Holy Spirit, Peter said, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy: and I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood and fire, and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come: and it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Paul tells us in 1 Thess. v. 20, to "Despise not prophesyings;" yet in the next verse he says, "Prove all things;" and we read in the Bible what becomes of false prophets. There are ways, and will be ways, by which these things can be proved; for Christ said, "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled."—Luke xxi. 22. These things came to me much like thunder out of a clear sky; for I can remember but few times during the past winter when I had thought of the last days. Once while reading in 1 Peter iii. 20, 21, I seemed to see in those verses a type of the end. "Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight, souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

I have been much troubled about these matters ever since I last wrote; and this verse especially has often been in my mind. "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day." I have read Josephus' account of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus and his army, which I understand to be a type of the last days; and I understand in a way how it would apply at that time. One thing is certain, however, now, that Old School Baptists will be tempted to break the sabbath of their rest; and that may be why Christ charged those who are yet "in Judea" (outside the visible church) to pray that their flight might not be "on the sabbath day." All that we can do is to "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord;" for "he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." All for whom Jesus Christ died will surely be gathered in. "In the winter" might mean at the very last, even as winter is at the end of the year, and consequently during a time of great tribulation. I fear that these may be my own thoughts; and if any one has had any light upon this verse I would be glad to read about it in the SIGNS.

I was reading an article in the first volume of J. F. Johnson's writings, on page 352, last evening, concerning the abomination of desolation, that seemed very good and very plain to me. It was printed in the SIGNS, in the year 1864, Vol. 32, No. 4.

I suppose because of our unbelief some things that the prophets have predicted trouble us now. In Daniel xi. 35 we read, "And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed." But Christ "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin;" and he knows that the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak; so I think he will give every one of us strength for whatever we shall be called upon to pass through. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Cor. x. 13. If we are given faith to believe this, also the following gracious promise, happy are we: "But the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits."

We were to attend carefully to this verse, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—Luke xxi. 36. But for all that, John prophesied how it would be with us in the last days, in Rev. iii. 14, to end of chapter. "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."—Psalm li. 17.

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke xxi. 28. Christ would never have directed us to do anything that we were not able; so that does seem to prove that he will be with us "always, even unto the end of the world."

Yours in hope of eternal life,
ELLA M. HAMILTON.

STAMFORD, N. Y., June 1, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel a desire to add my feeble testimony with that of the dear children of God to his great goodness and mercy to one so unworthy as I am. As I take my pen it is not without the assurance that I do not possess the gift to write as others do, to the comfort and edification of the little ones. But we cannot expect all to have the same gift, for we read that there are a diversity of gifts. To me it seems right to cast in our mites as given us. The SIGNS comes as a welcome messenger, bringing glad tidings from far and near, the rich truth of the gospel, the sincere milk of the word, pure and unadulterated, which is food for the hungry, weary, worn pilgrim as he journeys through this vale of tears. Through this medium of correspondence we find the assurance verified that the Lord has yet a remnant on the earth who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Sometimes it seems all darkness. Then again the clouds seem to break, and by an eye of faith we can grasp the promise and behold the loving-kindness of the Lord toward us, poor fallen creatures; and how it humbles us in the dust before him to feel how prone we are to forget his tender mercy and watchful care over us. I was gratified with the editorial in the SIGNS of May 3d. It was excellent and comforting. The figure was beautifully illustrated, the certainty that all God's dear children shall feel, that not one grain of that handful of corn in the earth on the top of the mountain can ever be lost, but shall be preserved by the great King in Zion, to yield fruit to the honor and glory of his great name while here, and finally be raised to the enjoyment of that Sabbath of unending rest hereafter. This is precious truth. At this time the question arises with me, Am I included in that handful, even to the smallest grain? I have a hope that it is so; but when I look into this sinful heart of mine all seems unholy, black as the tents of Kedar. I feel so effectually covered with earth and earthly things that I can scarcely hope to rise to those joys prepared for the dear saints; but the Lord knoweth them that are his. Not one will be left out when he counteth up his jewels. The subject seems so well seasoned with the doctrine my soul delights in, that of God's predestination. It is that on which my hope hangs, and I feel that I have received spiritual food, crumbs from the Master's table, which has lasted for days.

I wish to make mention of the satisfaction I felt in reading the piece on the first page of the same number, written by our dear brother Chick, on the words of Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." It was rich. I read and re-read it, and it seemed to be a feast of fat things. It was an excellent sermon to me. Should we not feel thankful to the Captain of our salvation that he has given such ability to his servants that are placed on Zion's walls to instruct the household? O how I do long for that steadfast unyielding faith that Job possessed in his God. But it must be given us, as it was him. We are all dependent upon the same fountain. We are poor, finite creatures. In and of ourselves we can do nothing. There is none that doeth good, no, not one. All are gone out of the way. If there is any good thing in us it cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness or shadow of turning. I feel very weak and small in divine things, and the last among God's people. But I cling to the one evidence that I have passed from death unto life, for I have a strong love for the brethren. I greatly enjoy the privilege of meeting with them, which has been more seldom on account of bodily afflictions. My feelings and sympathy go out to the dear lambs of the flock that are standing without the fold, desiring a home with God's people, and who love the assembly of the saints, yet feeling their unworthiness. I speak from experience, as I was exercised in regard to these great and important things for two years, and feared I was neglecting my duty before I had strength given me to ask a home with the people I so dearly loved for the truth's sake. I feel to-day to exclaim, as did Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee." May thy God be my God, and thy people my people. For those who are passing like anxious moments in regard to obeying the commands of our dear Lord and Savior, my prayer is that the Lord will give them strength to come home to his house, the church, and enjoy the privileges therein.

Brethren, let us love one another, and bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. This imperfect scribble was commenced some time ago. I fear it is not worthy a place in our family paper. Do as you think best with it. If not asking too much, please give your views on John vi. 53, 54.

Your unworthy sister,

C. M. HOWARD.

PAXSON, Va., March 21, 1894.

MY DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Though weak and nervous in consequence of a long spell of La Grippe, I feel inclined to write you a few lines, though I have nothing very encouraging or cheering to relate. I have had but little encouraging and comforting experience pertaining to my hope since I have been confined to the sick room. This sometimes seems strange to me, as I have ample time to think upon spiritual things. And I have thought of them in connection with my hope; but simply thinking on these things, you know, does not draw comfort from them. But I often feel so destitute of spiritual interest and comfort that I doubt whether I know anything about these things experimentally. I think if I did I would feel more concerned and anxious than I often do. But even in this destitute condition I sometimes feel passive; that is, that I can do nothing to bring myself into the enjoyment of these things. I hope I have experienced this passiveness or resignation at times since I have been sick; and the words of the psalmist, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it," and that "it is vain for us to rise up early, to set up late, to eat the bread of sorrow," to obtain these things, have afforded me some encouragement. Though the words I have quoted from the 127th Psalm were not specially opened to me, they were a stay to me in my barren and sleepy condition.

Another Scripture also, viz., "I sleep, but my heart waketh," &c., was brought to my remembrance with some comfort, as it seemed to express not only my present, but much of my past experience. And how inexpressibly encouraging and comforting it is when we can see our experience expressed in the Scriptures. The spouse, though asleep, and too drowsy to arise, knew it was the voice of her Beloved that had awakened her heart. And I hope I have heard and recognized the voice of the Beloved in my experience, but have often felt too drowsy to arise and obey at once; making some excuse, as did the spouse, saying, "I have put off my coat, how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them?" The flesh is prone to make excuses, and often prevails, so that we cannot do what we would. But in this conflict between the flesh and the Spirit, the Spirit sometimes prevails, and then we arise at once and open to the Beloved, feeling so comforted, as was the spouse, that we do not think of our "coat" or "feet," or anything pertaining to the flesh, as typified or implied in the figures, "coat" and "feet." The outer man is brought into subjection and made to serve the inner man or spirit. I hope I have experienced this willingness at times; but sometimes in this ecstasy of joy I have found, as did the spouse, my Beloved had withdrawn himself, and I was left in trouble, feeling condemned for not heeding his voice at first. But I cannot express what I hope I have seen in these words of the "Song of Songs," and the encouragement and comfort they have afforded in my lonely hours.

As I am becoming tired, and may tire you, I will close for the present. I thought at first of writing a private letter, but felt impressed to write what I have to you; and now I doubt whether what I have written will profit any one, as I cannot express myself as fully as I have felt and desired. But as I cannot remove the doubt, I will send what I have written, and let you decide. Excuse pencil, for I am too weak to use the pen.

Yours in hope,

EDWARD C. TRUSSEL.

WORTHINGTON, Minn., Nov. 26, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please find inclosed two dollars, for the renewal of my subscription to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have taken it for sixteen years. I would like to send you some new subscribers; but I am, as the psalmist said, "as a sparrow alone upon the housetop." The dear old SIGNS is worth to me twice what it costs me. It tells me how my fellow-travelers feel. Their feelings are as mine when they complain of a sinful heart, which seems to be a mass of corruption. I spend the most of my time in darkness, and mourn and sorrow on account of sin that is within me. But there are times when I feel comforted, when I am meditating on Jesus and his disciples. How pleasant it is to have our heart set on that dear Savior who is the neighbor to all who feel his love in them. I sometimes believe I shall see him, and that he will show me the wounds he bore for his people. My heart's adoration is fixed on him. I have thought how David walked and talked with God, and I would like you to write upon the subject, so that I can see if there be any now who come as near doing so. If it be the preacher, or if it be all God's chosen ones, I would like to know. Do not refer me to some back number, because when I have read the paper I sometimes send it to my friends in England. I can see nothing in this world to be compared with one meeting with God's people. How sweet it is to meet when love flows from heart to heart. Are they then walking and talking with God? How David talked with God at the time he prayed to be delivered from his enemies, and also when he said, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Was he then talking with God? He said, "Thou knowest my thoughts afar off." Again, he breaks out, "Praise the Lord, O my soul." It seems to me that David's whole heart adoration was with God, and he loved to talk with him. His whole trust was in the Lord. When any of God's children are alone in this world as I am, can they be talking with their God? If so, it must be when I am at my plough, and my mind is upon Jesus, the hope of my salvation, and his word comes to me with such sweet promises as it did to Paul, saying, "My grace is sufficient for thee." It cheers and animates our heart with thankfulness to him for his loving kindness.

If I could write like some who write for the SIGNS, I would like to do so; but I cannot edify God's children. I seem to be dumb and dull of understanding; but I know you will throw the mantle of love over my ignorance, so I will venture to send this.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
HENRY JAMES.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BROTHER D. Weaver died at his residence in Navarro Co., Texas, Jan. 16th, 1894.

He was sick for three months and eight days. He was sitting in his chair when death came to him. He passed away like one falling asleep. He was born in Selville, Tenn., Feb. 20th, 1813, and was married to Miss Elender Deason. Eight children were born to them, three of whom are living to mourn their loss of a father. His first wife died July 3d, 1883, and on Jan. 22d, 1884, he was married to Palisteen Garret, a widow.

Brother Weaver joined the Old Baptist Church in 1880 or 1881, and was baptized by Elder J. H. Weeks. He was a consistent member, always filling his seat, always willing to help bear the expenses of the ministers, and also glad to have them visit him. He was a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for a number of years.

Pray for the unworthy writer.

J. D. WATSON.

DIED—At his residence near Meadowville, Barbour Co., W. Va., August 8th, 1893, brother Poling, aged 59 years, 5 months and 1 day.

He was born in Randolph Co., W. Va., March 7th, 1834, and was the son of Daniel and Hannah Poling. He joined the Old Baptist Church on the first Sunday in July, 1887, and was baptized by Elder J. S. Corder, in the fellowship of the Little Bethel Church. He was a faithful member until his death. He was firm in the doctrine that God works all things after the counsel of his own will. I waited on him in his sickness, which he bore with great fortitude. He said he wanted to put off this old body, that he might be with Jesus. All his conversation was of heavenly things. He often repeated the hymn,

"My times of sorrow and of joy,
Great God, are in thy hand;
My choicest comforts come from thee,
And go at thy command," &c.

He often called his sister to him to talk with her, and asked her if she would have a doubt of his being at rest with his dear Savior. He arranged all his business in complete order, and requested me to preach at his funeral, and I tried to speak from 1 Cor. xv. 56-58. One sister died a year and five months before, who gave the brightest evidence of a child of God that I ever heard. Five brothers and three sisters are left to mourn, besides a great many friends.

J. B. CROSS.

PASSED from this life, Wallace H. F. Palmer, youngest child of sister M. F. Palmer, aged 11 years, 3 months and 16 days.

Noble in appearance, full of promise, but withered in the bud. Had he not, who can tell what the fruit would have been? It should be a consolation to the bereaved mother and sorrowing sister that they knew his earthly end. How many there are whose life is as a boiling caldron because some fond one still lives, and they know not the end. How much better an honorable death than a dishonorable life! Indeed, experience does teach that life with its best charms and pleasures is altogether vanity. Your darling boy has missed nothing but vanity, and for that you have cause to be thankful. You know had he lived a thousand years, and dedicated all to the Lord, his claims on heaven would be no better than they were before he was born. "The children being not yet born, neither having done good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand." This faith shall make you as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed. The opposite will make you as the troubled sea.

The writer used on the occasion the following words, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The character of him who is the King of this kingdom, as well as they who are the subjects, is here given us. In the organization of all important earthly bodies, little children, the poor and the ignorant are not considered. Jesus was an important character, and his work was great; hence children must be forbidden, in the estimation of the disciples. With man dependency is an inevitable necessity; therefore men must gather around them those who can give the greatest support. Jesus takes counsel of none. He asks not the help of man. But he it is that gives to all men all things, and this he teaches them; therefore they are as little children. May God in his mercy give the things unto the mother and sisters that in his judgment are best.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

LEESBURGH, Va., April 18, 1894.

DIED—At his residence, three miles north of Mattoon, Coles Co., Ill., on the morning of April 5th, 1894, George McKinstry, aged a little more than 76 years.

Brother McKinstry was born in Preble Co., Ohio, Jan. 30th, 1818. He with his family moved to Coles Co. in 1869. There were born unto him one son and four daughters by his first marriage. Four of these children, with the widow, our sorrowing sister, survive. In the year 1884, I think it was, brother McKinstry with his wife came to the Little Bethel Church and related their experience, were received, and baptized according to their expressed desire and wish.

The deceased, until his health failed, some three or four years since, was very prompt in his attendance at church, the weather never being so bad as to prevent him being present. His affliction was long and severe, but was borne with great patience and resignation. All his worldly affairs were set in order, and he desired to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.

The very large attendance at the funeral on the 7th inst. attested the esteem in which he was held in the community. The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the afflicted family on the occasion. May the Lord bless, comfort and strengthen the bereaved family, and especially the sorrowing and companionless widow, whose house is left so desolate.

Your brother in hope,

J. G. SAWIN.

LOXA, Ill., April 21, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN—Being on a preaching tour through this country, visiting some of the old churches that I attended many years ago, I am requested by sister Wood to inform you and the dear family of God of the death of her husband, our dearly beloved and highly esteemed brother, John Wood, one of your old subscribers, who left the shores of mortality for a blessed home among the redeemed and blood-washed family of our God, in that eternal mansion prepared for them.

Our departed brother was the son of our dear and venerable brother and sister, Deacon Wm. and Peninah Wood, and was the oldest of the family. He was born in the state of Illinois, Jan. 30th, 1811, and died here at his home Dec. 14th, 1893, making his stay on earth 82 years, 10 months and 14 days.

I learn from sister Wood that he died from heart disease and dropsy. His suffering at times was to all human appearance unbearable, but through the tender mercies of our covenant-keeping God he was enabled to bear it with christian resignation to the divine will. He was led by divine grace, as I humbly believe, to see himself a poor, lost and ruined sinner in about the year 1838, and soon afterward joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Muddy Fork, Trigg Co., Ky., and was baptized by our lamented brother, Elder P. S. Nance, at that time pastor of the church. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Johnson, Jan. 7th, 1836. Nine children were born to them, six of whom survive. He had fifty-four grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. His first wife died August 20th, 1862. He was married the second time to Miss Lucinda C. Underwood, Oct. 21st, 1873, who survives him.

As I had been pastor of Muddy Fork Church from 1857 to 1871, a period of thirteen years, of course I was intimately acquainted with our dear departed brother, and can testify to his high standing as a dear and beloved member of the body of Christ, and one who lived in the love and fellowship of every member of the church. He was a kind and loving husband, an indulgent father, a good citizen, a strictly honest man, and regarded by his neighbors as one whose character was irreproachable. His wife, our dear sister, has lost a dear and affectionate husband, his children a precious father, and the neighbors a good and tried friend. Most deeply do I sympathize with our dear sister Wood in her bereavement, with his children and all the relatives, and pray God to bless their great loss to their good, and to reconcile them to this dispensation of his grace; to be still, and know that he is God. Brother Wood emphatically belonged to a Primitive Baptist family. His father and mother, some brothers and sisters, and both his wives, were members. From my long acquaintance with brother Wood and the dear church at Muddy Fork I find that only one member remains that was there when I first commenced preaching for them. It shows me that my time is near at hand, as I shall soon enter my eightieth year. I have already entered the fifty-fifth year of my ministry. I pray that the Lord in his mercy will remember his Zion, build up her waste places, and finally bring us off more than conquerors through him that loved us and gave himself for us. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

Yours in the tribulations of the gospel of Christ,

JOHN H. GAMMON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MALACHI III. 1.

"THE messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in."

When Jehovah spoke unto us while we were under the old covenant (Gal. iii. 23-25) what terrible messages we were made to hear from the Holy One of Israel! The law declared our guilt and condemnation. Tribulation and wrath were upon us. Every word breathed our doom, for we felt we were miserable transgressors of the law which is holy, just and good. Our carnal hopes were dashed to the ground under that sentence, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." Our hearts were heavy laden; and in the sorrows of our perishing condition we fell down, our guilt overwhelming us. Has your heart, dear reader, in some measure known these things? The messages of the old covenant demanded of us perfect righteousness, and poured forth upon our sinful heads condemnation and death, and forbade us to hope of being justified by our own deeds in the sight of God. We were shut up in prison, ten thousand talents in debt, and nothing had we to pay. How then could we hope to emerge from our house of bondage? We did exceedingly fear and quake, and mourned over our sins. Such distresses were we brought into under the messages of the old covenant that, like the tribes of Israel, we felt to say, "Let not God speak with us, lest we die."—Ex. xx. 19. We could not endure that which was commanded.—Heb. xii. 20. Weeping endured through this terrible and painful night, but joy came in the morning. The time of love came when God said, "Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount."—Deut. i. 6. The Holy Spirit then led us to Mount Zion, there to hear the messages of the new covenant. Do not our hearts, dear children of God, sing of this covenant with David, saying, "This is all my salvation, and all my desire?"—2 Samuel xxiii. 5. Let us muse upon this covenant awhile. O thou Comforter, the Holy Ghost, show us this covenant. O give us some spiritual glimpses therein; for without this covenant how sad, how awful, how lost and utterly undone our condition would be!

The covenant of grace was made by Jehovah the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. These three bear record in heaven, and these three are one.—1 John v. 7. As God is eternal, so the covenant of grace is called the everlasting covenant.—2 Samuel xxiii. 5; Isaiah lv. 3. This blessed covenant is also spoken of as being the eternal purpose which God purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Eph. iii. 11. Did God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, enter into a covenant? On what account? For whom?

"'Twas made with Jesus for his bride
Before the sinner fell;

"'Twas signed and sealed and ratified,
In all things ordered well."

It was for the elect of God that this covenant was made, and therein the Son of God is set forth as the covenant head of his body, the church. Yes, in this covenant God the Father elected his people, gave them unto his Son as his bride, his body, his flock, his people, his brethren. Unto the Son Jehovah the Father said, "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." Our covenant head, Christ Jesus, was verily fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, and was manifested in these last times the Lamb of God without blemish and without spot, to put away the sins of his people by the shedding of his own precious blood. How blessedly the Lord speaks in this covenant. "This is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."—Jere. xxxi. 33, 34. "They shall be my people, and I will be their God." Another most consoling feature of the new covenant is that it is unalterable; for thus speaks the everlasting God, "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth."—Psalm lxxxix. 34. In this well ordered covenant "God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."—Heb. vi. 17-20. Who shall disannul Jehovah's counsel? Who shall reverse it? "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth."—Job xxiii. 13. "The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance."—Psalm xxxiii. 11, 12. All is settled, and rests, and shall be fulfilled according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.—Eph. i. 11. "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."—Isa. xlvi. 10.

The new covenant is ordered in all things.—2 Samuel xxiii. 5. Nothing is omitted that shall be for the eternal happiness of God's elect, and for his own eternal praise. Therein his people are predestinated unto the adoption of children, and to an inheritance of incorruptible glory in Jesus Christ, their glorious and living head. They are ordained unto eternal life, and are made believers in Christ by Jehovah's grace, according to the working of God's mighty power. When the Son of God came into the world, and was made of a woman, made flesh, and dwelt among us, it was to establish the covenant.—Heb. x. 5-10. "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." Christ Jesus, our covenant Head, "being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."—Phil. ii. 6-8. Christ "loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."—Eph. v. 2, 25-27.

This covenant is "ordered in all things and sure." Our covenant Head is our Surety therein.—Heb. vii. 22. How then could anything or can anything possibly fail? Let us, believers in Jesus, rejoice. Our covenant Surety did not fail, neither was he discouraged (Isaiah xlii. 4); but in his love for Zion he set his face like a flint to accomplish the salvation and righteousness of his people.—Isa. i. 7, 8; lxii. 1. All the mercies, all the promises, are sure in this covenant.

"His promise is yea and amen,
And never was forfeited yet."

Jehovah promised us, and gave us eternal life in his Son before the world began. Will he recede from this? Will he repent? O no. God is without variableness or shadow of turning, and cannot lie. "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips."—Psalm lxxxix. 34. "He abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself."—2 Timothy ii. 13. It is the covenant ordered in all things and sure! Therein it was ordered that our covenant Head should give himself a ransom for his body, the church. He gave himself a sacrifice for our sins, an offering and a sacrifice of a sweet-smelling savor unto God the Father. Our Savior's sufferings, obedience and blood (like the typical sacrifices that were perfumed with the fragrant odors of the burning incense) are most fragrant unto the everlasting God. All that Emmanuel did was pleasing in the sight of God. In the atonement, which Jesus accomplished by his obedience and blood, all the attributes of the eternal Godhead were glorified. He glorified the Father on the earth. All his work as the Surety of the everlasting covenant is fragrant with the sweet odors of the love, the mercy, the grace, the justice and faithfulness and holiness, yea, with all the attributes of Jehovah.

"Here the whole Deity is known:
Nor dares a creature guess
Which of the glories brighter shone,
The justice or the grace."

All the heirs of promise according to this glorious covenant are redeemed and washed from their sins. They are called by grace, justified and glorified. All is secured unto the heirs by the promise and oath of God, by the blood of the covenant, and by the sealing of the Holy Spirit. He testifies of Jesus, shows us our blessings with which we are blessed in the Son of God, our covenant Head, guides us into the truth, and is our Comforter in all our trials and tribulations. He gives us the earnest of our new covenant inheritance. O the sweetness and blessedness of the fellowship of the Spirit, of the communion of the Holy Ghost. Come, Holy Spirit, the Comforter, and abide with me, a poor sinner, forever. O teach me, and bring to my remembrance all that God the Father and the Son have said and have done in the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure. Then shall I be enabled to endure, to lift up my head, to triumph, and to show forth the praises of the Lord in the house of my pilgrimage. Let us rejoice, believers in Jesus, that the covenant of grace cannot be upset. It cannot fail, for Christ hath sealed it with his blood, and it is now in force. Not one of the heirs can by any means come short of or be cheated out of his portion therein.

Our Lord Jesus Christ is the Messenger of the covenant, whom we delight in. He comes bringing good tidings of good. Not old covenant messages, telling of our guilt and condemnation. O no; but new covenant messages, telling of his own gracious acts, of our justification from all our offenses by his obedience and blood. He tells us of Jehovah the Father's love. He says, "I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee."—Heb. ii. 12. Jesus our High Priest has entered into heaven itself, having obtained eternal redemption for us; and now he dwells in our hearts by faith, telling us of his finished work. As the high priest under the old dispensation came forth from within the vail after having made reconciliation for the sins of Israel by the blood of the sacrifice, and blessed the people, so Jesus our Priest is the messenger of the Lord of hosts, and by faith speaks in our hearts messages from within the vail. He has the tongue of the learned, and knows how to speak a word in season to our weary souls. O how the child of God delights in the messenger of the covenant! When we, beloved of God, felt our sins and the curse of the old covenant to lie heavily upon us, so that we drew near to the grave, and our life to the destroyers, then he came to save us. Yes, the chiefest among ten thousand, the messenger of the covenant, suddenly came to our help. What message did he bring? O glad tidings of great joy! He was exceedingly gracious to us, and said, "Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom."—Job xxxiii. 23, 24. He showed to us that he had ransomed us from all iniquity, that he had redeemed us from the curse, that he had destroyed all our destroyers, that he had brought life and immortality to light through his glorious gospel; yea, he showed our uprightness, for our justification in the sight of the Holy One of Israel, to be in himself, that he is the Lord our righteousness. Then our sickness was over, our leprosy was healed. In the sweet evidence felt in our hearts that Jesus had died for our sins, and was risen again for our justification, by precious faith we put off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Knowing by faith that our old man is crucified with him, and the body of sin is destroyed, we reckoned ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord; and in spirit we could sing,

"The terrors of law and of God
With me can have nothing to do;
My Savior's obedience and blood
Hide all my transgressions from view."

In all our straits, and in every trial, Jesus the messenger of the covenant brings tidings of consolation to our souls. Amidst all the turmoil, vexations and sore conflicts that we are called upon to encounter in our pilgrimage, but for the comings of the messenger of the covenant how often we should faint by the way. Ah, and when we have been overwhelmed, and have fainted in the day of adversity, what voice could revive us? whose speech could cheer us? Only the voice of our Beloved, who cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. Sometimes our enemies so environ us around, our own sinfulness, the fiery darts of Satan, doubts and fears, our own fretfulness and perverseness so beset and plague us, that we fear that sin and Satan verily have the dominion, and that all our hope and blessedness must succumb to such incessant conflicts; that all must at length be devastated by the enemy who has come in like a flood, and has entered into our palaces. Ah, the city then is low in a low place. We are made to mourn, and to confess that we are vile, and that by nature we have ever been a provocation of God's anger. But Jehovah's grace in our hearts will not suffer us to utterly yield to the foe. O no; we cannot capitulate to the forces of hell. God has written in our hearts the doctrine of no surrender to sin and Satan. What! shall we cease striving against sin? "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" We sigh for relief from our oppressors, and are taught to stretch forth our hands unto God; but will he come to our deliverance? Ah, why is he so far from our roaring? Why does he stand afar off? O come to my help, O God of salvation; have mercy upon me. "Send thine hand from above; aid me, and deliver me out of great waters." "I am poor and needy; make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O Lord, make no tarrying." What does our covenant God say? "I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings." In due time the messenger of the covenant appears, he in whom we delight. We have looked unto the hills of God's mercy, of his faithfulness, of his electing, everlasting love, from whence we hoped our help would come. But at times our distresses have been so prolonged, we have been so besieged by our cruel sins and the fiery shafts of Satan, that it appeared our eyes would fail while we waited for our God; but when we have been brought exceeding low, then our dear Redeemer has come to our rescue. The messenger of the covenant is seen upon the mountains. O how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth. O what a message! Then again, dear children of God, in our seasons of earthly trials, of temporal afflictions, to which at least some of us have been subjected by our covenant God, no one could speak the word that could ease our smart. Only the messenger of the covenant could convey such a message as suited our trial, and under which gracious words we have been supported, and have been strengthened to endure, and to be reconciled to the dispensations of our heavenly Father. I confess to you, beloved ones of God, that I have been a poor, dim-sighted creature, little understanding the ways and thoughts of God. Well may he say, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." Had I been suffered to choose my own lot I should have selected everything that is agreeable and pleasing. I would have had my pathway strewn with flowers; the air should have resounded with the singing of birds. Not a conflict, not a sorrow, should I have appointed as my portion. But I in very heart can feelingly say, "My times are in thy hand." O! I am so glad it is so. Could they be in better hands? O no.

"All my times shall ever be Ordered by his wise decree."

I would not have my lot any other-wise than it has been; for I have found that my God knows best what is for my good, and that which shall be to his own praise. When we have been in straits, and bitter ingredients have been put into our cup that we were made to drink, O how timely and soothing have been the messages to our hearts of the messenger of the covenant! He has said, "Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine. When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Savior."—Isa. xlii. 1-3. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."—Heb. xiii. 5.

Though we are sinful and unworthy, though our way is beset with ills, and tribulation is our portion, the messenger of the covenant will come again and again, telling us of the glad tidings that the covenant contains, and that all is sure to all the seed. What better message could a poor, vile sinner like me receive from the everlasting God than this, which is one of the messages of the covenant? "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."—Heb. viii. 12. Ah, though we have to grieve over our pollutions, and many times put our mouths in the dust, and cry, Unclean! then in the time of love the messenger of the covenant cometh, and telleth what he hath done for us in this covenant that is ordered in all things and sure. He tells us that he gave himself for our sins, and that his own precious blood cleanseth us from all our stains; that he hath through his own sufferings, obedience and blood washed away all our filth, and hath presented us to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that we are holy and without blemish in his sight. O the healing virtue, the heavenly music, that is in the voice of our beloved Redeemer when he speaks to our heart, saying, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

Though we are tempted and harassed, and buffeted by the messengers of Satan, we prove all the devil's messengers to be liars, and we tread upon their high places, when the Son of God, the messenger of the covenant, speaks. Have you, dear reader, ever heard in your heart a message from the lips of the messenger of the covenant? Has he ever spoken to thee? Perhaps you say, I cannot tell. There have been times when my heart has been sad, and I have felt to be in the gloom, weighed down under the sight of my own sinfulness. I have longed to taste of God's pardoning love, to know that I was a christian, and that Jesus had died for me. Well, when I have been in such a state of mind I have thought about the Savior of sinners; or while I have been listening to the gospel being preached it seemed as though the glad tidings of love and mercy were for me. I have found myself musing upon these things, and there has been some comfort in my heart whilst doing so. I have for a little while forgotten that I am such a sinful worm, that I am not a child of God, and have been feasting upon the good things that are in Jesus. Then when I have thought upon what I have been indulging myself in, and how that I have been taking to myself what only belongs to the children of God, I feel, O how presumptuous I have been! How can such blessed things belong to me? How can such a polluted sinner like me be a child of God? O no; I am not a christian. How can it be that I am one of God's elect? How can God love me? Why, I hate my own self; and how much more loathsome must I be in the sight of the pure and holy God! O no; I do not think the messenger of the covenant has spoken anything to me. I fear I have only been as an eavesdropper at the posts of the doors of the King's house, and have been overhearing the kind and blessed things that are spoken to the King's household. I am separated from them; I am a poor, wandering outcast from the commonwealth of Israel. O that I did indeed belong to the household of God! But how could such a one like me be put among the children? How could such a heritage be mine? Yet, though I cannot tell how that could ever be, I find that my heart's language is something like this, "Remember me, O Lord, with the favor that thou bearest unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation; that I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that I may glory with thine inheritance."—Psa. cvi. 4, 5.

Blessed are you, poor, fearing one; for you are one of the heirs of the covenant. Blessed are your ears, for you have heard the voice of the Beloved, the messenger of the covenant. It was to you a joyful sound. His doctrine of salvation by grace alone has a melodious sound to your soul; and you feel that all your desire, all your hope, is in the glad tidings of the gospel. Has the truth as it is in Jesus been as sweet singing in your ears? Does your heart love the song of Jehovah's mercy to poor sinners? Then you are one of the ransomed church of God. Does your heart say, O that I knew this were so; then I should leap for joy? Do you inquire and say, How can I write such things to you? Do you ask what authority I have to speak in such a way to such a sinful one, to such an unworthy one, as you feel yourself to be? Well, poor, anxious soul, the gospel declares gracious tidings concerning thee. Our blessed Savior, the messenger of the covenant, himself says, "I will declare thy name [the Father's] unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." Only his body, the church, hear his voice. Only his sheep hear his voice. There can no outside ones hear. There can be no eavesdropper to hear what he saith unto his church; for only the members of his body, the church, have the spiritual ear to hear. Only the subjects of Jehovah's grace have an ear to hear. None but the heirs of the covenant are interested in the testamentary will of Jehovah. Only the seed to whom all things are made sure take delight in the covenant; and in their hearts they are taught of the Holy Ghost to say, "This is all my salvation, and all my desire." But those who are not embraced in the covenant of grace have no relish for the grace of God, and no desire after the gracious and blessed provisions made in the covenant for the poor and needy heirs of promise. They have no delight in the messenger of the covenant. But all the seed of Israel, the saints of God, sit at his feet, and only they receive his words; but his word hath no place in, and cannot be heard by, those who are not of God. All who are dead in trespasses and sins are like the deaf adder, that stoppeth her ear. The voice of the messenger of the covenant they cannot hear; it hath no charms to them. But Jesus' brethren, his companions, hearken to his voice. They delight in his precious doctrine; for his speech distills upon them as the dew, and revives their hearts by the way. As I write my heart seems to say, O beloved Jesus, "Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it. Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices." O Savior, thou art the ambassador of heaven. Thou art ever in the bosom of the Father, and all that the Father hath is thine. Declare and reveal unto my soul the knowledge of the Jehovah, that in the bosom of the eternal God I may see eternal thoughts of love to me.

When the Son of God, the messenger of the covenant, came into the world, the world received him not, knew him not; but such ones as old Simeon could exclaim, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—Luke ii. 29, 30. To poor sinners he was welcome; and the apostle Peter is a mouth for all the heirs of the covenant when he exclaimed, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God."—John vi. 68. He came into the world bringing to the poor the glad tidings of the new covenant. The poor and afflicted people of God to-day seek for the coming of the messenger of the covenant, whom they delight in. They crave the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, to reveal Jesus, the Son of God, in them, and to take of the things of Jesus and show them unto their longing souls. Only the good news of the covenant of grace can afford them everlasting consolation. A few words, yea, a word from this covenant, spoken by the messenger in our hearts, heals our wounds, allays our fears, banishes our woes, disperses our foes, dries our tears, and clothes us with gladness; for it speaks of pardon, and mercy, and grace, and love, and peace, and blessedness from God to us, poor, unworthy worms.

"Ere time began the church was blessed,
For her Jehovah love possessed,

From vast eternity!
Redemption, calling, pardon, peace,
Are streams which flow from ancient grace,
Unmerited and free!

"Go, trace salvation from its source;
From God it flows; mark well its course;
The whole his love sets forth!
Love brought the Savior from the skies,
Love quickens, keeps and glorifies,
And who can speak its worth?"

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been a reader of the SIGNS at intervals since boyhood, and am a subscriber because I like to read it. There is a subject referred to often by many of the writers, yet to my knowledge I have not seen an article written upon the subject; it is hell as a future punishment. By your permission I will write something for the SIGNS upon the subject.

Hell is referred to by almost all denominations as a place of future punishment. I am aware that I may differ from many of the brethren on this subject; but on the other hand I differ widely from all Arminians, which is one of the reasons why I attempt to write.

The first place I notice where hell is mentioned is in Deut. xxxii. 22, and has no reference to future punishment. The children of Israel had provoked God to anger by their vanities. "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Most assuredly no true Baptist believes that God meant eternal hell punishment to his people, whom he had led out of bondage by the hand of Moses. The second place where the word hell is mentioned is in 2 Samuel xxii. 6, and is the language of David. "When the waves of death compassed me, the floods of ungodly men made me afraid. The sorrows of hell compassed me about." No future punishment is spoken of here; he was only distressed. Compassed means completely surrounded. Here is experience, my dear brethren and sisters. You all have been compassed by the sorrows of hell, as was David. There was no way of escape for you. David says, "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and he did hear my voice out of his temple." So all of you in your distress have called upon the Lord.

Job speaks of hell (xi. 26), but not as a future punishment. In Psa. ix. 17 we read, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, (and) all the nations that forget God." This is the language of David again, speaking of the nations that forget God. But a man or a nation must of necessity know God before they can forget him. When one forgets God, he is again encompassed with vanities, and the sorrows of hell compass him about, and he again cries unto the Lord, who hears him out of his temple. We find no eternal punishment taught in all this. We read in Psa. xvi. 10, "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Most assuredly this refers to Christ, and speaks of his soul being in hell. The sorrows of hell had also encompassed him about while here on earth, and he also cried unto the Father. He was tempted in all points like as his people are, and knows how to succor them that are tempted. For further proof read Acts ii. 31. In Psa. xviii. 5 David again speaks of the sorrows of hell that compassed him about; and in Psa. lxxxvi. 13 he says, "For great is thy mercy toward me; and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell." Thus the language of David, anointed of God, and delivered from the lowest hell, is positive proof that hell is a torment to men while here on earth, and that of God's people, as the world does not seem to suffer its torments. Read Psa. cxvi. 3, 4; cxxxix. 8-10. Many places in Proverbs speak to the same end. "Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure."—Isa. v. 13, 14. Here God is speaking of his people, and not of hell as a future punishment. "I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me: out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice."—Jonah ii. 2. Surely Jonah was encompassed by the sorrows of hell; yet he was a living servant of God. There is no future punishment taught here; no hell punishment after death. Now I will turn to the New Testament, to the words of Jesus. "Who-soever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."—Matt. v. 22. This is said of a brother who is angry with his brother, and calls him a fool. Surely this does not have reference to eternal punishment, unless a brother could be lost forever, which we do not believe. The twenty-ninth verse reads, "And if thy right eye offend thee pluck it out, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Thus the hand that is cut off perishes, and the body is saved. I think every intelligent Bible reader understands this passage, that it does not prove that the member of the body shall be eternally in hell. I will refer to only a few more among the many passages on the subject. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."—Matt. x. 28. This was spoken directly to the apostles who were sent to preach upon the housetops what they should hear in the ear. Surely God is able to destroy the world at will; but is it his will to destroy his people? Paul says, God forbid that he should cast them away. It is not that fear he is speaking of. It is very unreasonable to suppose that there is a possibility of their being cast into an eternal hell; although they are to be encompassed by the sorrows of hell, as was David, and the waves of death to flow over them, even the death that Paul died daily. Those who fear God are not destroyed, but those who fear him not are. I will now turn to Rev. xx. 10. "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall

THE CHILDREN OF ZION.

"The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell. Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?"—Isaiah xlix. 20, 21.

In a private note Elder J. P. Allison, of Oregon, reminds us that he requested some time since that we should give our views on this portion of the inspired record. It will be scarcely needful to confess to our readers that much is written in the Scriptures of which no clear understanding has been given us. Glad as we should be to comply with every request in expounding the sacred word, but a small portion of the testimony of Jesus is within the comprehension of our limited mind. Beyond the universally applicable assurance that the Scriptures bear witness of Jesus, even in their most unsearchable mystery, it is with much hesitancy that we dare accept the exposition of them which seems most manifest in our sight. Were it not that the Lord has given assurance that his truth shall stand, and every false theory shall fall, we should not presume to comply with any desire for views upon the great mystery of godliness. Knowing that the divine Comforter will lead the saints into all truth, and that every error must be exposed in the light of revelation, we desire to submit all that we write or speak to the test of the only infallible standard, the inspired Scriptures. However plausible may be any suggestion or doctrine, it must be rejected if it be not in harmony with this rule; and all that has been recorded here, even though it seem inconsistent in the sight of reason, must be accepted as the truth of God. Our inquiring brother certainly desires no other views but such as are clearly sustained by the sacred testimony of inspiration. Much of the variance and discord which has distressed the saints in ages past was the result of depending upon the views of highly esteemed ministers, and considering them as the standard of orthodoxy. When led by the Spirit of Christ none of his ministers would dare to assume such a fearful responsibility as is involved in being thus regarded by their brethren. While it is the privilege and duty of the saints to esteem highly for their works' sake those who labor among them in word and doctrine, if they exalt such as their ideal of perfection they have thereby made the word of the Lord secondary to the views of those ministers. May the grace of our God keep all his little children from such idolatry.

In considering the text to which brother Allison directs attention it is needful to observe the connection in which it is written. While the prophet was moved by the Spirit of Christ to present the testimony of Jesus in this passage, as well as in all his prophecy, it is manifestly doing violence to the word if it be detached from the connection in which it is written, and expounded without reference to the evident design of the inspired penman. In the reference to the children which Zion had lost, there can be no other significance than the rejection of the natural children of Jacob, who were the children of that legal covenant which the Lord made with their fathers in the day when he took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt. In the type these were the children of Zion as being raised up for a monument of the unfailing mercy of the Lord, and of his strict fulfillment of his promise to Abraham. In this figurative sense only could Zion ever have lost any of her children. It must be observed that there never was a promise under the legal covenant embracing any spiritual blessing. All that was promised to the natural Israelites in obedience was that they should enjoy temporal advantages; and in disobedience their chastisement was the suffering of earthly calamities. While that natural covenant secured to obedient Israelites every desirable favor for this life, and to the disobedient it denounced corresponding chastening, it is manifest that it had no power to give life to sinners who were already under condemnation and death before they received that law. It was added only because of transgressions, and consequently could not have been designed for the justification of those sinners who were already guilty. Consequently all those natural children were "lost," as trusting in their own works under that legal covenant. There was no holiness in that law, but it was weak through the flesh. No man could attain to righteousness by works of obedience under that yoke of heavy bondage. In this sense it was true that all the children of that covenant were hopelessly lost. Zion might well mourn the loss of all her children while looking to the law for righteousness. So Paul says, "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." Under that law the children of Zion were lost in common with all the children of Adam. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."—Rom. iii. 20; Gal. iii. 10.

"The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me; give place to me that I may dwell." There can be no denying that this language expresses with equal certainty the fact that Zion shall lose the children designated here as "the other" and that she shall have those who shall make this appeal for room or place wherein to dwell. In one application this prophecy may be expressive of the gathering of the chosen people of God from among the Gentiles; and so it is most commonly explained. Without designing to controvert that view of the text, it may be well to consider the language as expressive of the contrast between the condition of the children of Zion, the election of grace, as lost in legal condemnation, and the same children as justified freely through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. In the fullness of the liberty of the children of God in the gospel dispensation, where they are manifested as the children of Zion in a spiritual sense, and when they are enabled to see their vital relationship to the Zion of God as their mother, they always say in the ears of Zion, "The place is too strait for me." This is said of that place of legal restraint and bondage. It is said by the child of God under the consciousness of his own utter helplessness as being unable to live by the service of the law of sin and death. It is also too strait a place for such a character to be confined under the law of Moses. So dreadfully is the living child oppressed in this narrow place that he can do nothing but cry, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" No mere natural words can express this desire of the soul for release from the strait place in which he vainly toils to obtain that life which is only received as the gift of God. He certainly cannot dwell in that close confinement where the law has imprisoned him, and where he hears the perpetual thunder of that word which demands, "Pay me that thou owest!" Whether Jew or Gentile, the subject of such conscious condemnation must ask release from this strait place. For their comfort it is written, "For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Instead of being called into the hopeless bondage of the holy law which requires perfect obedience, and visits death as the inevitable penalty of the first transgression, the children of Zion are called unto liberty. To them who have never known the hatefulness of sin, this liberty seems to give room for continuance in the works of unrighteousness and darkness; but to those who love righteousness it is the most earnest desire of their heart to be freed from sin, and to have liberty to walk in newness of life, in obedience to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. They cannot be satisfied in the strait place of legal ordinances. They long for that place of broad rivers and streams which the Lord himself is unto his people. Their tears, which have been their meat day and night, continually say unto them, Where is thy God? Thus they ask for place where they may dwell. The Lord himself is the only place where they dwell safely and are satisfied. When he is pleased to reveal himself as their present salvation, they have obtained the answer to their petition. In his presence is fullness of joy to them, and at his right hand they find pleasures forevermore. For this dwelling place they constantly ask in the longing of their heart, even though their tongue cannot find words to express their desire. Every child of Zion thus unconsciously fulfills this prophecy in saying in her ears that they are not content in legal bondage. "For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country."

"Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?" Under the legal dispensation there was no possibility that one should be manifested as a child of that covenant, without a clear record of where he had been. He must have been in the prison house of legal servitude, where perfect and perpetual obedience is required. Herein is the glorious contrast between the righteousness which is in the law, which cannot give life, and the living righteousness of Christ, with which he clothes the subjects of his grace. While the inexorable demand of infinite justice can never be satisfied with anything less than constant obedience to every precept of the law, that grace of God which brings salvation to the lost, finds its subjects in a waste howling wilderness, going in the ways of death; it leads them about, turning them back from the way which seemed right to them, and gives them the perfect righteousness of their Redeemer. They can never find rest among the slaves who seek for justification by the works of the law. They are the free born children of the covenant of grace. While looking to the works of the law for righteousness, every conscious sinner is utterly cut off from all hope. So, as the embodiment of all the saints, Zion speaks the feeling of all who are born of the Spirit of God, as she expresses the inquiry concerning her children. Finite reason could never have seen in the dying thief, or in the bloody Manasseh, or in the guilty Mary, one of these children of the Zion of electing love. It might well be asked concerning them, as of every sinner who is brought to hope in the grace of God, "Where had they been?" When Saul kept the raiment of them that slew Stephen, there was nothing to indicate that he was one of the chosen vessels of mercy. Much less could the truth be known by natural intelligence that among the heathen God had a people whom he had ordained unto the praise of the glory of his grace. So the delighted amazement expressed in these questions appropriately represents the rapturous surprise of the subjects of salvation when brought to the knowledge of their interest in that grace by which guilty sinners are made holy and without blame before God in love. There is especial fitness in the consideration of the condition of Zion as having lost her children, and being desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro. This is in harmony with the declaration concerning the saints, that "Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." It is one peculiarity of the experience of the saints, in which they are different from all others, that they can never find a permanent resting place in any works of their own. With the Captain of their salvation, they must ever cry unto God for deliverance, pleading, "For I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me. I am gone like the shadow when it declineth; I am tossed up and down as the locust."—Psa. cix. 22, 28. This is the personal experience of each one who is led by the Spirit of God, and it is the same with that of the whole company of the redeemed who constitute the spiritual Zion. These bitter complaints and deep groanings are but the expression of the utter desolation of those who are led by the Spirit to see their own just condemnation; and their rapturous surprise in seeing the righteousness of Jesus as their justification before God is well represented by the joyful language of Zion as written in this portion of our text.

We would not be understood as controverting the views of brethren who apply this prophecy to the bringing in of the Gentiles. In this, as in many other portions of the Scriptures, the meaning is applicable to different manifestations of the same testimony of Jesus, who is the subject and end of all prophecy. Submitting what is written to the consideration of brother Allison and all of our readers, we sincerely desire that they should favor us with their own understanding of the text and its connection.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

On our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

be tormented day and night forever and ever." I do not profess to understand the meaning of this revelation to John; but the simple fact that day and night are mentioned is proof that it does not mean eternal hell fire. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them," &c. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Verses 13, 14. Here seems to be the end of hell and death; therefore hell cannot continue as an eternal punishment. That there is an everlasting punishment I am not denying. David says, "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found."—Psa. xxxvi. 35, 36. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii. 2. If we know not what we shall be, we know as little of the punishment of the wicked. Many of our brethren express themselves in the language of Dr. Watts, in speaking of their distress on account of their sins,

"And if my soul were sent to hell, God's righteous law approves it well."

If they are of God's chosen, his righteous law will not send them to an eternal hell after death, although they may be compassed about with the sorrows of hell. This brings them to see their condition, they become sick of sin, and they cry to Jesus, the Physician who came to heal such as them; but the whole need him not. I hear one and another, yea, all of you, saying, "O! I have been down in the valley so low, I have thought I never could rise again; so cold, so distressed; the waves of death rolled over me; the sorrows of hell completely compassed me about. I felt that I would have exchanged my condition for the lowest beast of the earth, that when I died that would be the end of me." Yes, you even doubted whether you had a soul, or whether there is such a thing as a heaven hereafter. Yet in all this sorrow and affliction, like David and Jonah, you must cry unto the Lord, who will hear you out of his temple. Then you are able to ascend to the mountain tops, and view the promised land, and sing praises to the name of your God. May you all be enabled to sing thus.

Your brother, I hope, though one of the least,

A. MCINTURFF

Rockford, Iowa, April 16, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have felt impressed to write something of what I hope are the Lord's dealings with me. I was born in La Fayette County, Miss., in the year 1863. My parents were both God-fearing people. When about eight years old I began to have serious feelings about a future state. About this time the Methodists in our neighborhood were holding meetings. They made it appear that if a person wanted to go to heaven all they had to do was to join their church and do good, and they would go there. I had made up my mind to join them, but was afraid they would call on me to pray, and I felt I did not know how. When eleven years old this feeling began to wear off, and I got into the habit of swearing when my parents would not hear me. About this time we emigrated to Cero Gordo County Iowa, and a cousin came to visit us. He was an infidel, and talked a great deal, and I soon embraced his sentiments; yet I could not entirely forget the feelings I had before. I was afraid there might be a hereafter, and if there was a heaven I wanted to go to it. I would lay awake nights and think, What if I should die before morning, and there be no hereafter? On the other hand, if there was a hereafter, I felt I certainly would be cast into the lake of fire that burneth forever. I was afraid to sleep, for fear I would never awake, or if I did that I would awake in hell. I used to wish I had never been born. I remained in this state of mind about eight years, except when some one in the neighborhood would die, when I would stop swearing for a time, and then begin again, and be worse than ever. We lived in Iowa nine years, and then moved to Dakota. We had been there only three weeks when my father died very suddenly. I then gave up my infidel sentiments; for he had been such a kind and affectionate father, and such a good, honest man, I wanted to be just like him. He died without a struggle, merely quit breathing, and looked peaceful and pleasant. Now I felt there must be a heaven, and that he was there. I started out in my own strength, and thought if I could only quit swearing I would be a Christian. I thought I was not very bad, and did not see the need of repentance. I thought I had nothing to repent of except my swearing, and thought I would soon quit that; but the more I tried the worse I got, and finally gave up and quit trying. I never swore an oath in my life when I was angry without putting forth an effort to do so. The boys would say they hated to hear me swear, because it was such hard work for me; yet I could not quit the habit. About three years after this I began to read the Bible from curiosity. I read the New Testament through several times, but could not see anything in it until one evening while I was reading of the crucifixion. When I came to where the Savior bowed his head and yielded up the ghost, it came to my mind that he suffer all this for me. Then I saw just how mean I was, and it was no use for me to try to do better now, for I was too wicked. I thought I did not deserve to be saved. I felt I was getting meaner all the time. Sometimes I would feel like I ought to stop work and get right down in the field and pray. But I thought, Suppose some one should see me, what would they think? Besides, I loved the world, and would rather dance than eat when I was hungry, and loved to play cards, and thought I could not afford to lose these pleasures. I thought I would pray at some time, but not now; but the time came sooner than I had expected. One day while I was seeding a field my mind was burdened more than usual. My mother and sister were away from home, and I thought what a good chance I would have that evening to pray; that I would be alone, and if I made a blunder no one but God would hear me. When night came I got my supper, and then thought of my duty, but wanted not to do it. I took my violin and played everything I knew, until about ten o'clock. I had gotten everything off my mind except music, so I thought I would put away my violin and go to bed. As I knelt down to put it under the bed something struck my mind, and I had hard work to get up; but I finally sat down on a trunk, and made up my mind that I would not give up. But the Lord can and does do great things when his time comes. I was made to realize that his time had come, and I had to beg for mercy. I do not know just what I did say. My voice sounded strange to me, but my prayer for mercy was answered. When I got up the next morning my trouble was all gone, and it seemed to me like everything was praising God. I felt I was a different man, and my desires were altogether different. But I thought I would not tell it to anybody; but my people noticed the change. Shortly after this I had a dream. It seemed to me there was a large congregation gathered, and that it was a very desirable place to go; but we could not go unless we were called. Finally they began calling out one at a time. My youngest sister was called, and I was left out; but after a while I was called. I got up and started, but I cannot remember anything more about it sufficiently clear to explain it; but I felt satisfied in my mind as to its meaning. About six months after this I joined the Congregationalists, and became a most earnest worker. I was happy for about three years, and had no fear of death. I felt satisfied I was saved, and was ready to die at any time the Lord willed. Then I became dissatisfied with that people, for I felt they were not my people. They were depending on their good works to gain heaven; but I knew if that was the plan of salvation I could never reach there. Nothing but God's free grace could ever save me. I lost my interest in their meetings, and a cloud came over me. I lived in darkness and doubt for two years; but when I would look back over my past life I could not help but believe. Last fall when I came to Iowa I attended an Old Baptist meeting and heard Elder Jackson preach. It was the first sermon I had ever heard and believed was the truth. My darkness began to disappear. I have heard Elders Norton and Murphy since then, and they preach the same gospel. I have found my people at last, and I long to be numbered with them, but feel too unworthy to offer myself to them.

Yours in tribulation,

A. J. BROWN.

GALATIANS V. 22, 23.

BUT the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

With a heavy heart I examine myself to discover, if I may, even one of these fruits in my unworthy self; and I feel that I have not only fallen short in a part, but surely in all. In vain I run over in my mind my walk and talk since the Lord has shown himself gracious to me. Twenty odd years a professed follower of the Lord Jesus, and not one undoubted virtue so necessary to the walk and talk of a christian. I discern the fruit in others, even in those who have not followed their Lord and Master in baptism; and I feel to cry out as did one of old, O my leanness, my barrenness, in all that is lovable in the spiritual children. Why was I not made to dwell alone, content to behold the beauties of God's household from afar, rather than mar its serenity and peace with my deformity? O that I might manifest even one of the sweet fruits of the Spirit of the living God. Though I feel drawn toward them by some unseen, unfathomed power, I view myself as a worthless stone lying near, but not a part of the temple; and I know that if the building is perfect without me, it is well and strongly built, and lacketh nothing, and is cemented with love, pure love, that cometh from God, and surrounds the temple, and no enemy can touch it, to harm or destroy. Joy intermingles, and comes from whence none but God knoweth. I have been foolish enough to think I have felt love, joy and peace, through union and communion, in reading and in singing of heavenly and divine things. But delusions dwell in the land, and I may be of those of whom it is written, "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. "Peace," I have thought, was mine at times; but thinking so does not make it true; but there is some comfort for the time being even in a delusion. "Long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." May the Lord have mercy on me, for I can claim none of these things. But I feel to say with the apostle Paul, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not; for the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do."—Romans vii. 18, 19. But I almost feel guilty in applying any language used by the apostles or prophets to myself, as they all bore the fruits of the Spirit, and there is no doubt as to their being heirs of eternal glory. The wise men of the world tell us to "exercise faith." But the Bible tells me that faith is the gift of God; and I have not found any means to tamper with the Lord's property; neither can I see how we may exercise it, when we have no assurance or means of knowing we have been given it; for we are plainly told that "all men have not faith." I have just read a letter from a precious old soldier and brother in the Lord, whose letter literally teems with all these lovely graces; yet he calls himself ignorant, illiterate, &c. But the wisdom of the knowledge of God shines forth with such lustre that one forgets everything but the treasure of the Lord contained in the rude earthen vessel. Let all such brethren turn to 1 Cor. i. 26-29. Read and be comforted, all ye weak trembling ones, who feel that you have no comeliness in the eyes of men; ye who feel that your stammering tongue may disgrace your calling. Take these things to your comfort; for the God of Israel made no mistake, though he took counsel with no man. Faith, hope and charity are gifts we well may covet; yet I know that God bestoweth all things well. With a solemnity not to be ignored, Paul's language to the Corinthian brethren echoes and re-echoes through my heart, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." If I have it not, then I am poorer than the most destitute, and am indeed a fraud. I seem to view this precious gift in every manifest child. Not one appears so barren, so dry, so unprofitable as me. All the precious communications to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES show the writers to be in possession of these heavenly and divine attributes. And yet I, even I, tried and found wanting, call them brethren. I seem a usurper in the house of God, and with shame confess my unworthiness. They call me sister, and like music it goes all through my being, to even be called a child, though every member of the blessed family are bound by stronger ties than those. I gladly humble myself at the feet of these people. I would even wash their feet with my tears, and wipe them with the hair of my head. My heart cries out against a separation. Let me not be removed from those I call my people, and are precious in the eyes of him who sits upon the throne of his glory, and whom I now would call my God. And though I long beyond expression to be more perfect, I have no hope of being more so in this life. But he who beareth the infirmities of the weak, knoweth all that is in the heart of man, even before it is spoken. He searcheth the hearts, yea, the deep things of the Spirit. "For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."—Heb. iv. 12, 13. Grand and glorious is this King of kings, in whom abides the mystic fountain from which flows all the lights and joys of the humble poor, the shorn lambs of the house of Israel. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James i. 17. And old brother Paul says, "By the grace of God I am what I am," which language I am weak enough to apply to an unworthy sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

Without apology I submit the above to the discretion of brethren Beebe.

JANUARY 26, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have often had the desire, while reading the precious communications in the SIGNS, to give my feeble testimony to the comforting truths contained therein, and particularly so this morning, as I read the views of Elder Chick upon John iv. 24, that passage of Scripture being one which I received much comfort from many years ago. My mind also of late being much beclouded with doubts and fears, I have looked over my past life, in hope to find something cheering, reviewing the spots where God has been pleased, as I hope, to manifest himself to me, as he does not to the world. Long ago while watching my husband as he passed beyond my sight on his way to meet with the little church here, while family cares kept me at home, these words dropped into my mind, "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Unworthy as I feel of the least notice of Jehovah, I must say that I believe the Lord met with me that day; and though alone, it was a little sanctuary to me, and some of the blessed things which Elder Chick writes were given me by that still small voice of him who has said, "My word shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that whereunto I sent it." I have never enjoyed a better sermon than was preached to me that day by him who spreads a table in the wilderness for his hungry children. Rejoice, ye isolated ones, who have no pastor to go in and out before you. He who has all power in heaven and earth has said, "Bread shall be given them, and their waters shall be sure." All such blessed characters as do hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. I feel to say to-day, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." "Praise ye the Lord" that he has a people whom he has chosen out of the world, and predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." It is sweet to know that we are not reckoned among the nations. I am but a little lump of sinful dust, but the Lord thinketh upon me, and has given me a heart to feast upon the precious communications contained in our dear "family paper." I enjoy them all, though sometimes some particular one seems adapted to my case, as at this time. I had for several days wished I could hear those words spoken from, and when I read them from our precious correspondent my hope revived, and I can say, "There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky." May the dear editors be long spared to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon;" and may the correspondents be blessed in future as in the past, that they might write to the comfort and edification of the poor and needy.

One of the least of the flock,

A. M. FUGGLE.

NORA SPRINGS, Iowa, Nov. 18, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been blessed with health, and for some reason brought again to the time when my subscription is delinquent. I cannot do without your paper as long as I can get it, so I will send the two dollars in this letter for another year. The writings of the dear brethren and sisters who contribute to its columns seem almost a necessity to me, and the comfort derived from this source is more than can be measured by money. The trials and afflictions of the humble poor, oppressed by their consciousness of inbred sin and corruption, and their longing for holiness, find a responsive chord in my own heart, and with them I am made to cry out, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Again, "I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please." "Stand still, and see the salvation of God." His grace is sufficient for thee; and though in a little wrath he hid his face from thee for a moment, yet with everlasting kindness will he remember thee, saith the Lord Almighty. "Our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he pleased." He hath purposed, and he also will do it. He works all things according to the counsel of his own will, and hence can declare that all things shall work together for good to them that love him, and are the called according to his purpose. His hand created the smith that bloweth the coals, and fashioneth the instrument to his work. He created the waster to destroy. No weapon formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that riseth against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isaiah liv. 16, 17. He is able to declare the end from the beginning, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Then "Fear not," Jesus says, "I have overcome the world." The battle is fought and won, and ye have received at the Lord's hand double for all your sins, and are freely justified from all things from which ye could not be by the law of Moses. Ye are, by the law of the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus, made free from the law of sin and death. Then thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory.

I am, as ever, your unworthy brother in the bonds and afflictions of the gospel,

GARRETT MURPHY.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—You will find inclosed a letter written by A. B. Hanson, which I think would be read with interest by the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I leave it to your better judgment.

Yours in hope of the better resurrection,

WALLACE, Kan., March 26, 1893.

MR. BURCH AND WIFE—DEAR FRIENDS:—As my wife is writing, and wants me to write, and as it was your request, I will try to scribble a little. I enjoy such letters as you and your wife write, but I fear I am not able to answer, and cannot write anything to interest you. My wife wants me to write of some of my travels. My parents are Old Baptists. I had an opportunity to hear their ministers preach while I was very young. I always thought they were good people, and often wished I were as good as they. In the year 1880 I felt that I was a great sinner, and that there was no good in me. It seemed to me that I could not even speak a kind word, or do anything good. I seemed so bound up in worldly things that I could not think of anything good, and felt that I had committed an unpardonable sin. I would think I would watch, and not do so any more; but the first I knew I was sinking in sin deeper than ever. I would try to pray, but it seemed to me like mockery, and that I was trying to deceive the all-wise God, which is impossible. All I could say was, "Lord, have mercy on this poor sinner." Then I would think I was not in earnest, or I would do better. The United Brethren held a protracted meeting, and I attended it. They got a brother of mine, and all my associates, and I came very near joining them; yet I did not think as they did. They had too much work to do in order to be saved. I had already done all I could do, and felt sure that if salvation depended on something good that I must do, I was surely lost. I always took my sister and also a young lady who was boarding at my father's to the meetings. This young lady was a member of the church, and wanted me to promise that I would join on the next night. I told her that perhaps I would. I returned home, but could not sleep. I tried to pray, but could only say, "Lord, have mercy on me, a sinner." All at once my trouble was gone, and I felt that all was well with me. I felt glad that I had not joined that people, and did not care to go among them any more. I did not attend their meeting the next night, for I felt I would rather be alone than with them. I went to Old Baptist meetings most of the time, and liked to be with them, but felt afraid I went too often, as they might think the Lord was doing a work for me, and might be deceived. I thought if I were one of God's chosen people I would not be so sinful. I would read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, but if any one came into the room I would drop the paper, for I thought they would wonder why such a sinner as I was would want to read such a paper. I would read the experience of those I believed to be God's chosen ones, and would try to believe I was traveling the same road. Then I would think, O what evil thoughts! I could not see why the Lord would choose such a sinner as I was, and thought I was trying to deceive myself. When I attended the Baptist meetings I would wish I was good enough to go with them. On a Saturday I went to the church meeting. My father went alone on horseback, and I also went alone. It seemed to me that the minister preached all the time to me. I thought I was deceiving that people, and wished I had remained at home. I have never joined any church. I think I am too great a sinner to be in the church.

I fear you will not want to read my scribble, and will not write any more. I hope you will overlook my imperfections, and write me soon. I would like to attend some of your meetings, and hope I may at some time. The Lord works all things for good to them that love him; but I sometimes fear I do not love him, judging from my past life.

From a sinner,

A. B. HANSON.

A SUCCESSFUL SURGICAL OPERATION.

Dr. Hulett, assisted by Drs. Mills, Smiley and Purdy, performed a successful operation yesterday (April 26th) on Mr. Benton L. Beebe, of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, who has been a sufferer for many years with an aggravated kidney trouble.

The operation was performed on the advice of Dr. Bull, the noted New York specialist, with the belief that a stone possibly existed in the left kidney. None was found, however, but an opening was made in the diseased portion so that now a perfect drainage exists.

Mr. Beebe came out of the operation in excellent condition, and we trust that we may now be able to note his speedy recovery.—Middle-town Daily Times.

Brother Beebe is improving as rapidly as can be reasonably expected, and with proper care his physician and friends look for his full recovery.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR dear mother, Elizabeth Brown, whose maiden name was Prey, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Louisa Fisher, in Rockford, Iowa, Nov. 11th, 1893, aged 67 years, 1 month and 7 days.

She was born in Darke Co., Ohio, Oct. 4th, 1826, where she lived until about twenty years of age, when she moved to Wisconsin, and was married to Andrew J. Brown, August 18th, 1847. Father and mother, together with their family of three boys and five girls, emigrated to Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa, in September, 1873, where they lived until March 20th, 1883, when they moved to Spink Co., Dakota. Father was taken sick and died very suddenly with congestion of the lungs, April 17th, 1883, only three weeks after his arrival, being 62 years, 3 months and 4 days old. He left many friends and relatives to mourn their loss, but we trust that our loss is his eternal gain. He was not a member of any church, but had strong hope in Christ, and was sound in the doctrine of salvation by grace.

Mother remained in Dakota until 1892, when she came back to Iowa to make her home with her children. She had been a member of the Regular Predestinarian Baptists for more than thirty years. She experienced a hope and was received by the Mt. Pleasant Church, La Fayette Co., Wis., and was baptized by Elder Wm. Long, about the year 1860. She loved the truth, and those who loved the truth. She had poor health for some time, and suffered great afflictions for about two months. Although her mind seemed clouded and flighty at times, she always had a very clear conception of spiritual things. While she was sick she had two favorite hymns that she sang very often. One was, "O how happy are they who their Savior obey," &c.; and, "O happy day," &c. She would sing one of those hymns, quote a passage of Scripture, and then talk until she was completely exhausted. On Thursday evening, Nov. 9th, about six o'clock, she sang, "O happy day," &c., then quoted Revelation xxii. 17, talked awhile on it, and then prayed and sang. About midnight of the 10th she lost her speech, and remained quiet until twelve o'clock, the 11th, when she quietly passed away.

She leaves four daughters, one son-in-law, one daughter in Nebraska, and one son who is traveling. We have lost a kind and loving mother, but we feel to be submissive to our heavenly Father's will, knowing that he doeth all things well. We feel that our mother is where she can sing praises to the blessed Redeemer in a world without end.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

A. J. BROWN.

Mildred Gardiner, aged 3 years and 6 months, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Shelton, died of diphtheria at Pittsburgh, the home of her parents, after a brief illness, on March 14th, 1894.

The subject of this notice was born at our home in Monroe, Bradford Co., Pa., and was at the time of her death on a visit to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gardiner. She was remarkably bright and intelligent, far above her years. Just before her death she began singing, "Jesus is calling, calling," &c., and fell asleep in Jesus. She was loved by all who knew her. Our loss is her eternal gain.

ALSO,

Ella Shelton was born Oct. 12th, 1870, in Monroe, Bradford Co., Pa., and died April 1st, 1894, at Pittsburgh, while on a visit to her sister, of that dreaded disease, diphtheria.

She was of that amiable disposition which endeared her to all who knew her, and greatly so to the bereaved parents and sisters. She never made a public profession of religion, but took great pleasure in attending Baptist meetings and hearing the preaching; and during her last sickness she gave strong assurance that she was a child of grace, praying the Father to relieve her of her sufferings and take her home to himself. Her greatest regret was the thought of leaving her dear mother.

Yours in the bond of affliction,

C. J. SHELTON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REVELATION III. 20.

"BEHOLD, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

It is written that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," &c. So also I think we can safely say that all Scripture is received by inspiration of God. Webster defines inspiration as "The supernatural influence of the Spirit of God on the human mind, by which the prophets, apostles and sacred writers were qualified to set forth divine truth without any mixture of error." This is, no doubt, correct so far as it is applied; but I love to think of it in a broader sense also, to wit, the receptive, which I would define as the divine operation of the Spirit of God in the heart of the believer, whereby the mind is enlightened and made cognizant of divine truth, in contradistinction to error. For truly the reception of the wondrous truth of the mystery of the gospel is both supernatural and divine, and never comes through a fleshly source. When Peter, in answer to his Master's question, "But whom say ye that I am?" said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," then Jesus answered and said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." If we attempt to acquire a knowledge of the truth of Scripture by study or otherwise, we fail in the attempt; for this same reason, that the supernatural cannot be attained unto through any natural avenue. Therefore it must come by inspiration, or by the operation of the Spirit on the heart, by which the mind is controlled; which is directly opposite to the natural way of attaining unto natural understanding. For, by the natural, the mind must necessarily act upon the object which it sees; while with the supernatural the same mind is acted upon by the things which are not seen. We cannot therefore compare, with the natural mind alone, Scripture with Scripture, and make the Bible one harmonious whole; for we will find one part apparently contradicting another part. So we hear the worldly-wise quote the Scripture, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock," and say it means that Jesus is knocking at the door of your heart, beseeching that he may be permitted to enter; and if he is not allowed an entrance by powerful man he sorrowfully goes away defeated; which flatly contradicts the words of the Savior as recorded in the Scriptures, "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." May the dear Lord keep us all from the presumptuous sin of attempting to explain the meaning of Scripture by a process of carnal reasoning. This, I dare hope, is the prayer of my own heart.

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock." These are the words of Jesus; and the Spirit here takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us. John is directed by the Spirit to write unto the angels of the seven churches; and to the church in Laodicea he directs him thus, "These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Therefore it is verily Jesus who says, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock;" and in this rich and wonderful declaration he presents the incomparable fullness and the completion of his mission upon the earth. Therefore instead of coming as a weakling, seeking by persuasion an entrance into the heart of man, he comes as a king and a high priest, "by the power of an endless life," all-powerful and all-glorious, setting up his temple in the heart made soft and willing and glad by the power of redeeming love. When we realize how completely our whole life is enveloped in the sweet and precious name of Jesus, then can we understand how "of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace." The life of the saint is Jesus; his hope is Jesus; his love, his desires, his every breath, is Jesus; the whole atmosphere which surrounds him is Jesus. He is the embodiment of the fullness of the Godhead in us; and when he says, "I stand," it expresses the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and farther, "at the door." Is he not also the door? for did not he himself declare, "I am the door of the sheep?" (not the sheepfold). And still farther, "and knock." Is not the knocking the voice of Jesus? It is not a question, then, of the divine, in contrast, pleading with the human; but it is the divine in unison with the being or creature to whom the perfect righteousness of Christ has been imputed. Therefore Jesus comes to his own; he knocks at his own door. The declaration could not be twisted to truthfully apply to dead sinners; for Jesus is here addressing a special people, and also those who are in a special condition.

Neither is the subject a question of eternal salvation, but one of communion with Christ in time. The church at Laodicea had become lukewarm; and not only are these words addressed to the people who formed the organized church at that particular time, but are applicable to every one of the Lord's people who is in a lukewarm condition. This condition is one that is dreaded by every dear child of the gospel kingdom, who has at some time in his experience lost (by the degradation of the flesh) the sweet answer of a good conscience toward God, being bereft for a time of the sweet intercourse and secret communion of the Spirit. This message, then, can only be applied to an already alive people, the same people having retrograded through weakness and infirmity of the flesh. Now Jesus, as he declares, stands at the door and knocks; which door has never yet opened into the lusts of the flesh, or the depravity of the carnal mind, neither has Jesus ever made negotiations with the flesh. But this precious door opens into the inner sanctuary of the heart, where sacrifices of thanksgiving are wont to be made to the Holy One of Israel, and where dwelleth the Comforter, whom the Father hath sent; the which he declared to his disciples when he was about to leave them. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." We cannot think of Jesus as ever for one moment being absent from his bride; for has he not said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee?" When it was needful that he should leave them, as the man Christ Jesus, the Comforter was sent, "even the Spirit of truth." This is that which brings all things to our remembrance; the still, small voice which stands at the door and knocks—the voice of Jesus.

"If any man hear my voice, and open the door." This does not imply a doubt whether his voice may be heard or not when he speaks, but it does imply the condition necessary to hear the voice. Jonah must needs go down to the bottom of the mountains, into the belly of hell, and while there lose all his creature strength, and faint, before he could hear the voice of Jesus to the saving and the comfort of his soul. The cobwebs of every earthly desire must be swept away. The chains that bind us to the earth must be broken. All earthly ties must be severed. The door of deliverance must stand wide open. When all these have been accomplished for us then shall we hear the voice of knocking, as it sweetly comes from the darling Son of God. There is now no hindrance to the opening of the door. The door is Jesus, and we come unto God through him. He is the only door of acceptance. As the Mediator between God and his people, he became separated from the glory that he had with the Father before the world began, taking the burden of the sins of all his people upon himself, satisfying the utmost demands of the law, that they might become the righteousness of God through faith. It would be great folly to cry unto a savior if no savior were needed. The voice of the Savior cannot be heard except one is in the strait of direct need. Blind and naked and hungry and faint, the ear is strained to catch the faintest sound that matureth hope; and the cry of faith (as the voice is heard, as the knocking reaches the hearing ear) is the opening of the door to him who never suffereth the hungry to go without bread, nor the fainting one to lie by the roadside.

"I will come in to him." How wonderful the language, how sublime the thought, how precious the realization! "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." Gracious Father! precious Son! happy children! a glorified family! The love of God is not of that kind which says to the one without strength, Get up, and make your way to me, and I will strengthen you. But to whomsoever heareth and openeth he sweetly says, "I will come in to him." When he has come in, the unworthy sinner becomes worthy by putting on Christ, with whom he is now the joint heir to all the riches of wisdom and knowledge, and to the "all things" both in heaven and in earth which the Father hath appointed unto the Son. He does not say to the angel of these lukewarm souls, If you make an entrance for me I may come in some time when convenient; but, "I will come in to him." Accompanying his word is also his power, which makes every subject willing in the day of it. The chastenings of the Lord lift us out of lukewarmness; therefore "thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." He not only comes in to us in sunshine, but also in darkness. His dear hand, too, creates the darkness and forms the light. How sad it is to contemplate that although our High Priest is ever with us in word and in deed, never forsaking us for an instant, because of the great love wherewith he loves us, yet (knowing this great truth) for paltry lusts and wicked works do we turn from him, setting our feet toward Jericho; and this is the secret of the lukewarmness which at times pervades all our being, and for which we must needs be punished, ere we may cry that the warfare return unto us.

"And will sup with him, and he with me." He comes as an honored guest, and we take him into the guest-chamber. He does not lord it over his Father's heritage; but as man talketh to his friend, face to face, so we sit together in heavenly places in the light of his countenance. When we think of ourselves as comparing ourselves with the altogether lovely One, and then consider that he has condescended to come into this vile tenement of clay, we are ready to exclaim, with the poet, "Unworthy abode, glorious guest." To sup with one is to bestow upon that one a mark of honor and of confidence. It is to bring the host and his guest into an unusual intimacy and a close relationship. Love must enter into the agreement, otherwise confidence cannot exist; and the existence of the relationship produces equality. The bride in the Song, in her exaltation after one of these sapping seasons, says, "He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." Does it not come sweetly to your mind that the banqueting house is the temple builded in your own heart? There Jesus comes in to you, and sups with you, and you with him. The psalmist had this precious time in view when he said, "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." In the heart that was once the trusting place of many fleshly idols. How glad we are at these times that our honored, beloved guest also prepares the food upon which we are to sup. It is the richest food, and withal the most nutritious. It is the "butter and honey" of the prophecy which was a sign given to Ahaz the king. "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good." Among the many precious things that are told the delighted, exalted children (by him who is called "the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God") as they sup is this, "Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." The viands are from the garden of the Lord; they are the fruit of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, &c. At this delightful banquet the works of the flesh are left behind, and as far out of sight as though they never existed; and such a contrast is it to the lukewarmness of yesterday that we fear, when it is over, it was not real—a pleasant dream perhaps, so soon does the enemy creep in unawares, planting his seductive poison in such a way as to mar our present happiness. Yet in all successive conflicts and deliverances our mind is carried back in fond remembrance of that happy time when the Lord came in unto us, and supped with us, and we with him.

B. F. COULTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 27, 1894.

WOODSTOCK, Mich., April, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been thinking much of late of the many instructions found in the word of God for the believer; of how much of the written word consists of exhortation and admonition to the dear children of God; and we cannot feel that the wise Counsellor made any mistake in the matter when he ordered it so; neither do we feel that we ought to grow restive and uneasy when these things are repeated unto us, if we truly love the way of righteousness and peace, which it was deemed so necessary for us to know. The instruction of Paul was, "That thou affirm constantly" that the believer should "be careful to maintain good works;" and the reading of the connection tells us what are considered good and bad works. Not that this should be mentioned once in a while, or sometimes adverted to, but that it be affirmed constantly. The words of Peter in the first chapter of his second epistle have followed me much of late. Sometimes I feel that it falls to me to take up subjects that others either do not think of or else shrink from; that my part is the part that no one else wishes to do. Often when a subject works my mind and gives me no rest, I will keep looking for some other writer to take it up, so that I may be excused; and often I ask the Father, Why cannot some of the rest do it? And sometimes I sift myself out as long as I can; but the subject usually grows upon me with the waiting, until there are times that I almost hasten to do as the teaching, I trust, leads me, hoping for rest when it is done; and I usually rest a little while, and then something else comes upon me. I could not help noticing the language of Peter this morning as I read, "Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." "Moreover, I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance." "Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me." He here tells us that he is a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ; and his message is to those who have obtained like precious faith with himself, through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ; telling us of the divine power that hath given us all things that pertain to life and godliness. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound [not only that they be in you, but that they abound, be abundantly manifest], they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Add to your faith virtue." We see this is the very first requisition. In this much improved age (boastfully so), we hear talk or impressions thrown out something like this, If one has pleasing manners, polished ways, with other predominating good qualities, even if they are a little off in point of virtue, it is a mark of almost ignorance and lack of good breeding for people to say anything about the matter. Much literature and teaching points this way, if I rightly understand it. But what the Bible teaches is to me of the first consideration, no matter how old-fashioned it is. We read that by the law is the knowledge of sin; and we know the extent of the crime by the penalty annexed to it. True, we are told that if we fail in one point we are guilty of all; yet the same penalty was not attached to all transgressions alike. He that stole could restore so many fold. But the ordinary thief is to-day much more condemned by public opinion than those who commit crimes that the Lord and Lawgiver thought worthy of a stoning to death. Now we hear of crimes that were thought worthy of the death penalty, called indiscretions, irregularities and mistakes. As the times have gone on, the murderer only at present is executed for his crime. He has to suffer the same as under the old covenant. If under a church relationship we are to forgive all things, why not this also? We could point to Moses, who slew the Egyptian; to Saul, who held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen, &c. If, as we are sometimes told, our virtue will not save us in the eternal world, we still do certainly feel that it will save us in our heart's honesty before God. Circumstantial virtue is truly better than none; but that which arises from pure heart principle is the only genuine article. If we are true and faithful to ourselves, we must necessarily be so to all others. We feel that it will save us in the eyes of all people of honor and respectability. It will save us from being heart breaking trials to those who love us best. It will save us in the fellowship and confidence of all churches walking in gospel law and order. We think all this of next importance to eternal salvation. And even if there were no hereafter, should we wish to make this life and world a place of wicked and shameful pleasure, a sort of fool's paradise of sensuality? We cannot help but feel that even in this life, if there were no other, we would be more happy to live a life of virtue.

Let us commence with the first teaching of the Bible. We have already noticed the law. But notice how often a woman is spoken of as a virgin. Concerning one who should be the wife of a priest, this was the first and only requisition named. This is the predominating quality before all others. In the story of Ruth, Boaz said to her, "All the men of the city do know that thou art a virtuous woman." Was not this a matter of the first consideration? And it is such a pleasure to note the honorable course of Boaz to her, giving her honor, as unto the weaker vessel, even his protection. We also notice the long and honorable betrothal of Jacob and Rachel, and of Joseph and Mary. (The mother of our Lord must be a virgin.) We love to read how that Joseph was a just man; also of Paul, when he said the Lord put him in the ministry, counting him faithful, trustworthy. We do believe there always have been such, and always will be. We have heard the question asked, "Who can find a virtuous woman?" and asked as though the question implied that there were none. But the same writer testifies that "Many daughters have done virtuously." We repeat the question, "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her." Please do tell me, is this a matter of comparatively small consideration? Are virtuous women to be told, and told, and told that they are no better than the street harlots? We know that by nature we are children of wrath, even as they, and have just as much need to be born again in order to be eternally saved; but all things considered, if there is really no difference, where would there be any incentive to virtue for those who talk this way, if they truly believe as they talk? Why are not the street harlots preferred or held in equal balance as wives, mothers, daughters, sisters? Why did the apostle instruct Timothy that he teach the aged women that they teach the younger women to be chaste, discreet, to love their husbands (nobody else in that sense)? This is what we are to expect the Timothys to teach us. Even though they should be young, we are not to despise their youth; for we are told that they watch for our souls, as those who can give an account with joy and not with grief; having an oversight, being themselves patterns in all things; taking heed first to themselves, and then to all the flock. Ezekiel was set a watchman over the house of Israel to warn the wicked. And if the Lord said unto the wicked, "Thou shalt surely die," and the watchman failed to warn them, the wicked should die, but their blood would be required at the hand of the watchman. What a solemn thing this is. But suppose for that which the Lord says, "Thou shalt surely die," we are told, Thou shalt not surely die; would not this be the same teaching that was taught Eve in the garden? We are also told to watch over one another for good, and not for evil. We often get the idea as understood that we watch only for good, and are to be blind to evil in each other. If a mother only watches to see the good in her child, and shuts her eyes to the evil there, we cannot say whether this is truly a watchcare or not. We think it is more an influence for good and not for evil the mother who truly loves her child has for it. Watch over for each other's good, and not each other's evil, is my feeble understanding. "Add to your faith virtue." See that ye "make your calling and election sure." Wherefore, my beloved brethren, "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things." This is the Bible teaching; and can we who love the right way, in this awful, awful wicked age, feel to make light of virtue? We know the Lord in his goodness is able to keep us from falling, and to raise the fallen, and to grant repentance unto all; that all have need of this, and it is a source of rejoicing. "Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." And why this joy? Just because he repenteth, because he is sorry for his evil ways, and turns away from them. So there must be sorrow if one turns away and does evil things. The ring was not put on the hand of the prodigal son, and the best robe brought forth for him, until he came to himself, left his evil ways, and returned to the father's house. The Master tells us what are good and evil things as being done by us. "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil." "For out of the heart proceedeth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, &c. If the returning ones should find weightier influences for evil in the church than in the world, if the church is not kept pure in this sense, how sad it would be. Where would there be found a place for the wandering, the weak, the tempted and the tried? We have thought this the reason of the great necessity of taking so much heed to these things.

"And to virtue, knowledge." We think we are to earnestly inquire the will of the Lord concerning us, that we may know how we should do as obedient children; not fashioning ourselves after the former lusts, but that we may have knowledge of the right way of the Lord; not being unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

"And to knowledge, temperance." How needful is this. O! if we could always be in an even frame, not soon angry, not easily excited, not indulging in excesses of any kind, but moderate, temperate.

"And to temperance, patience." We are told to covet earnestly the best gifts; and I feel to most covet that of which I feel most deficient. How I have wished, how I have prayed, for patience. How I have truly felt the need of it. When we see virtue, and all that we were so long taught to be right, laid aside (if we do not regard virtue in others, it may argue just a little that we are lost to it ourselves), how we have wished for patience; for the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.—Eccl. vii. 8. There is a close point between a real love of virtue and a certain pride of character. There is always a place for us to be on guard, and there is such a sweetness and beauty in the perfect work of patience. "Be patient unto the coming of the Lord" is such a tower of strength in times of perplexity and trial, when we have to bear being misunderstood, and in many vexatious things.

"And to patience, godliness." I so fear I know nothing about it, I will pass on to "brotherly kindness." I think I know what it is; I have had it shown me so much; and no one could more appreciate it than I, and no one more earnestly wishes to give it to others than do I. It is truly next to godliness.

"And to brotherly kindness, charity." Though this is last, we do not think it considered least; for the same writer tells us, "Above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins." We can love our brother so well that this love as a garment will cover from our eyes all his imperfections. Yet there are different ways of manifesting our love, or charity. If we say we love our brother, and yet regard not his feelings by our walk, and exact that from him which we would not that he should do by us; if our conduct says, I will please myself and walk as I please, and you must need have charity for me; we perhaps then need to search our heart closely to see how much charity we possess, or how much real love there is in such a course; remembering that all things whatsoever we would that men should do unto us, we should do the same unto them; or if we do that which will influence our brother to stray, or prove a bad example for him, "Now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died." It is wicked and cruel to indulge in unjust surmisings and suspicions to each other. Yet we must remember that everything will cast its own shadow, and our shadow will tell whether our walk be straight or otherwise. We are told to be lovers of good men. For "in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. From such turn away." And even from every brother that walketh disorderly we are told to withdraw ourselves. To turn away or withdraw ourselves is to perform some action in obedience to what we are commanded; and I feel it would be a solemn thing to try to make easier ways for us to do and improve upon the law and rule which the Lord has given us. If we truly love our brother we will seek his best good; for love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. If we love our brother we will not kill him, nor steal from him, nor do anything forbidden in the law. Above all, we will not influence him to do wrong, nor lead him astray. This would be the greatest ill. We are to be kindly affectioned one to another in love; this same love which is of God. We read of vile affections; and if we seek or encourage a love which we are not entitled to, it would be villainy on our part, and such would be unholy and vile affection. The serpent truly loves the bird which it charms; but the welfare of the bird is not at all considered. That sort of love works ill to its neighbor. But the love we are to have for our brother is that which is like the Master's when he fulfilled the law for us, laying down his life in our behalf. To make outward demonstrations of love for any one is not this love, if we would be ready to do him injury if opportunity offered. If we have the love of God in our hearts we will not be doing contrary to that which he has commanded. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you." And if we love the world, the love of the Father is not in us. "If any man love not our Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." If we find the love of God in our hearts, we will also love our brother, who is born of God and possesses that charity which is the bond of perfectness.

"He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." Well may we say,

"Yet one thing we want;
More holiness grant;
Come, fill us with holiness,
Fill us with love."

HOLLAND, Texas, March 20, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—In the creation of the heaven and the earth and all of their concomitants, the all-wise Creator must have had some great, grand, sublime and glorious object in view, and that object worthy of himself. However much we may differ as to what the object is, the object must be accomplished, or a failure in the purpose of God will be the result. If the object was the salvation of all the world, then all the world must be saved, or God will fail of his object, his design be fruitless, his will miscarry, and his purpose upset. If the design was the salvation of all men indiscriminately, the design to be such must carry all the means necessary to the full accomplishment of the object had in view; and if the means from any cause fail in the full accomplishment of the end designed, such failure would not only prove the insufficiency of the means, but also a deficiency in the mind or judgment of the appointee. The blame may not and cannot be attached to the means, but to him who called and appointed them as the means of the salvation of the world. That which does not effect the salvation of all men may be the means of something, but the means of the salvation of all the world they are not; and as the Scriptures declare some to be lost, we conclude that there are not, nor ever were, such means as the means of the salvation of all the world. If God designed the salvation of all the world, he sent his Son into the world to live a life of obedience to the law, which was to be accounted theirs, and then to die or be delivered for their offenses, and rise again for their justification. Now, for what will the world, or any part thereof, be damned, if all of the above be true? If the will of God was to save all men, then all men must be saved; for he works all things after the counsel of his own will. Again, David says that the will of the Lord must be done; and Jesus says that he came to do the will of the Father. If the will of the Father was the salvation of all, then Jesus must, to do his will, save all; if not, he failed to do for the world that for which he was sent into the world. No one would presume to say that he wanted to save all, for such would prove a want of power on his part to do the thing desired. Neither can it be said of him that he tried, or is now trying, to save them, for the term implies a failure, or at least the possibility of it. No, Jesus did not try to live a life of obedience to the law, he did not try to die; he did not try to rise from the dead; nor yet did he try to ascend to the right hand of the Father, to give repentance and the CHILDREN OF THE DEVIL.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I should love to have you, or some of the brethren, give your views on the text, John viii. 44. Does Jesus mean natural or spiritual relationship? If he meant that they were spiritually children of the devil, then why is not the Two Seed doctrine true? If the sense is that they were natural children of the devil, tell me how? Yours truly,

ISAAC JONES.

REPLY.

"Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and the father of it."—John viii. 44.

Before giving a direct answer to the inquiry of our brother it is necessary that we confess that there are two great mysteries revealed in the testimony of Jesus. Just so far as it is the pleasure of God to make these mysteries manifest in the experience of his saints, that far they are clearly known. Beyond that which is thus shown to them by the truth all speculation is vain. Certainly whatever theory contradicts the plain record of inspiration must be false. Yet it must be remembered that it is only as the Spirit of truth takes of the things of Jesus, as written in the Scriptures, and shows to those who are taught of God the testimony of Jesus in them, there is no correct understanding of any portion of the word of inspiration. There are many expressions used in the recording of the revelation of the gospel, in which it would be evidently a perversion of the meaning designed if they were construed literally. Certainly it is not right to thus wrest the Scriptures. No portion of what God has spoken can teach a falsehood. Thus to interpret any passage is to discredit the whole Bible. Literal expressions, when detached from the connection by which they are explained, may often seem to contradict each other; but when their hidden meaning is experimentally shown to the saints there is no such conflict in their teaching. Even in the construction of common language it is always unjust to make it inconsistent with itself so long as it can be understood in any way to harmonize. Since the Scriptures were not originally written in the English language we are dependent upon natural learning for their translation into words which have meaning in our ears. While by no means ascribing inspiration to those men by whom the accepted version was rendered, we do think that there was a divine control manifested in their work by which they were used to give the saints the best English version which we are likely ever to have. In this translation many peculiarities of Hebrew and Greek expression have been retained. In all such cases the connection shows the sense in which they are to be understood so far as their literal signification is concerned. The spiritual testimony of Jesus is hidden from the natural mind even in the plainest statement of historical facts. The royal Preacher says, "I have seen the travail which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it. He hath made everything beautiful in his time; also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end."—Eccl. iii. 10, 11. The translators have given the meaning of the words of the original text as nearly as they could be expressed in our language. They had no power to give their deep and essential meaning as testifying the doctrine of God our Savior. Those who are taught of the Lord must receive that understanding directly by the revelation of the Spirit.

In the text presented for consideration by brother Jones, the apostle has recorded the rebuke spoken by Jesus to those who withstood his doctrine. So far as their fleshly relationship was concerned he had just said to them, "I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you." It was not in their literal birth as children of Adam that they were called the children of the devil, and he was said to be their father. Certainly they could claim their natural descent from Abraham, and in that sense he was their father. The true subjects of electing love who were among them could not claim closer relationship to Abraham in their fleshly birth than could the very characters to whom our Lord spoke the words of our text. Yet in the sense in which he was speaking, Jesus proved that those unbelievers were not children of Abraham, since they did not do the works which were wrought by faith and made manifest in Abraham.

In their spiritual birth the saints are all one in Christ Jesus, so that they are not spiritually the children of any other but the God of all grace. It is only in this unity with Christ that any of the children of Adam can be the children of God. That unity is not in fleshly manifestation, but in the life which is Christ in them the hope of glory. There is nothing visible to the natural mind, by which the saints can be distinguished from unregenerate men of the world. Even when they manifest the fruit of the Spirit by walking in love, and their labors are directed to the service of their brethren and to the relief of those who are in need, the natural mind sees nothing in that beyond what may be prompted by the selfishness of nature for the gratification of carnal pride. Perfect love as the fruit of the Spirit can never be discerned by the mind which is of the flesh. So, when Jesus himself wrought miracles in his humiliation, it was charged that he cast out devils by the power of the prince of devils. It is not strange that natural judgment should see in the followers of Jesus only the same motives and principles which arise from the corrupt fountain of the carnal heart. In the language of Scripture it is common for those who serve any principle, good or bad, to be designated as the children of that principle by which they are controlled. This is very plainly seen in the expressions, "Wisdom is justified of her children."—Matt. xi. 29. "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke xvi. 8. So the same expression is used of the ungodly, who are called "the children of disobedience," "the children of wrath" (Eph. ii. 2, 3), while it is clear that they were by fleshly relationship the children of the same fallen Adam, in whom all have sinned, and are dead in hopeless condemnation. Indeed, there can be neither mercy nor grace upon the theory that there are some of the children of Adam who are by nature better than others, and that it is this difference which secures the salvation of those better ones. No conscientious sinner could find a gleam of comfort in such a system. The context shows that such expressions are figuratively used. This peculiarity of the form of scriptural language is recognized by the translators who have rendered the Scriptures into English. In Young's Concordance it is stated in note 38, "Persons and things are reckoned children of that which they imitate, or to which they are attached." In illustration of this many passages are cited. Then the note is added by which this expression is particularly included, "And in such expressions as children of God, Abraham, Jacob, Israel, of faith, wisdom, wrath, disobedience, Satan, hell, the devil, the promise, the resurrection, the day, the light, the bride chamber, the bondwoman, the kingdom, &c." There can be no question that this is the sense in which the devil is said to be the father of those who resist the testimony of divine truth. Even to the natural mind it is manifestly absurd to construe this text as signifying that the devil was literally the father of those whom Jesus recognized as the children of Abraham by natural birth. There is no need that they should be spiritually born to constitute them the children of the devil, since they naturally belonged to that race of sinners, of whom it is recorded that they are children of wrath even as others. No others can be the children of wrath but such as are denounced in our text as of their father the devil. In the preceding verses Jesus gives the reasons which demonstrate the propriety of applying this designation to those very religious adversaries of the truth.

As the devil was a murderer from the beginning, those who have that principle of hatred in them are thereby shown to be his children. All falsehood originates in the devil; therefore every liar manifests the fact that he is moved by the devil by the utterance of that which is false. It is in this sense that he is said to be the father of those who hate the truth as it is in Jesus. He is the father of liars precisely as in the text he is declared to be the father of the lie which is spoken by him.

By the "Two Seed doctrine," we understand brother Jones to refer to the theory usually ascribed to the late Elder Daniel Parker. That doctrine is not sustained by the revelation which is given in the inspired record. That is all the reason we can assign why it is not true. The gospel of the grace of God is not a matter of reason at all. The natural man can find out by searching all things within the grasp of reason. No spiritual truth can be brought to the measure of such fleshly powers. Those who recognize the unlimited sovereignty of God as working all things after the counsel of his own will, have no occasion for devising any such system as that which attributes evil things to a self-existing spirit, independent of, and opposed to the power of God. No such source of sin is revealed in the record which God has given; and it is expressly written that "All things were made by him [the Word], and without him was not anything made that was made." "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."—John i. 3; Col. i. 16, 17. For those who recognize the authority of the Scriptures, this is sufficient for the condemnation of the doctrine which represents God as laboring to remedy the evil which has been introduced into his creation against his design. While many of the saints have become entangled with this device of human wisdom for relieving the Almighty of what men consider wickedness in the existence of sin, they have not after all attained the end designed, since they must either hold that this enemy was under the control of God, or that he was not. If he was under the power of God, then there is nothing gained by the unscriptural theory on the subject, since the devil could have done nothing but what he had received power from above to do. If, on the other hand, God had not power to prevent the introduction of sin into the world which he had made, then he is not almighty, and he cannot certainly do all his will in saving his people from their sins. Evidently this is not the God of salvation. The truth as revealed in the Scriptures requires no such human devices for conforming the doctrine of God to the notions of men. While no finite intelligence can comprehend one thought of God beyond what is written by inspiration, the Spirit of truth leads the saints into those things which are given them to know, not by dint of study, but by the light of the knowledge of the glory of God which shines in the face of Jesus Christ. When thus enlightened in their own personal experience each of the saints is a witness that God is the Savior of sinners, of whom every one can truthfully claim to be the chief. Conscious sinners will rejoice to trust in that salvation, while confessing that it is a great mystery. They will not be so much concerned about how they became sinners, as how God can be just and the justifier of such ungodly and justly condemned rebels as they know themselves to be. It has not been given to sinners to sit in judgment upon the righteousness of God; the love of God shed abroad in the heart of a sinner causes him to adore the riches of that grace by which sinners are made holy and without blame before God in love; thereby destroying the works of the devil.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers: but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

PLEASE BE SURE

remission of sins to the world; and thereby try to save them. But all of the above, and much more, Jesus did not try to do, but absolutely did; not in order to the salvation of the world of mankind in general, but of his people in particular. He gave his life a ransom for them, by which he redeemed them from all iniquity, and purified unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. For all of them Jesus prayed, but for the world he did not pray. Is there any reasonable ground to base the conclusion upon that he is anxious or even willing to save those for whom he would not pray? Jesus prayed for all the Father gave him, those he loved, and to whom he manifested his love, and into whose hearts it was shed abroad by the Holy Ghost which was given unto them. Why did he not do as much for others? Only because he would not. "He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy; and he will have compassion on whom he will have compassion. So then, it [salvation] is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." "Salvation is of the Lord." "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." But "no man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him." "It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught [all of whom the Father gave to the Son] of God." Not taught about God, but taught of God. In this case God is the teacher, not the preacher. The preacher may tell us about God, but in such case we are taught of the preacher about God. But in the above cited case all that the Father gave the Son are by him drawn to the Son, as a result of their all being taught of God. "Every man, therefore [for the above reason of being taught of God] that hath heard and hath learned of [not about] the Father, cometh unto me." The alien sinner is described as having eyes, and seeing not; ears, and hearing not; hearts, and understanding not. "Dead in trespasses and sins." Now I ask, Is it not utterly impossible for a blind man to see the most brilliant light that can be produced? Is it not also impossible for the deaf to hear the loudest peals of thunder? Who of us can preach louder than God can thunder? And how can one void of an understanding comprehend what is piped or harped? He that cannot hear the sound of the trumpet will not prepare himself for the battle. It is written that "faith cometh by hearing." Well, then, the deaf man spoken of above has no chance for faith, so long as he remains in his present deaf state. But let God only give the hearing ear, and then faith follows as a result. Faith is a production of the Spirit of God, is a divine gift, and a fruit of the Spirit, without which it is impossible to please God. If the gift of faith to the sinner precedes all acts or works pleasing to God, then it cannot be true that faith was given because of the sinner's works being pleasing to God, but in order to such works. It is also written that hearing comes by the word of God. Last Sunday one of the fashionable preachers asserted, and then labored for more than an hour to force his congregation into the belief of his assertion, that the Bible is the word of God, by which hearing came; by which, and by which only, sinners believe, and from which they obtain eternal life. But our conclusion is that Jesus is the Word by which all of the above is given. "In the beginning was the Word," "and the Word was made flesh." "And this is the Word which by the gospel is preached unto you." "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it [the word] shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This is the Word that was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him. In him is life, light and liberty. The Bible is the book, the great book of books; but it does not contain grace, faith, repentance, salvation, nor eternal life. All of this is in Christ; for the Bible tells us so. The Bible is to the child of God the same that the finger-board is to the highway traveler. The finger-board points to a town, and tells how far distant, but never goes there. The Bible tells of election, predestination, redemption, grace, eternal life and salvation; but it contains them not in itself, for they all are in Christ.

W. M. LITTLE.

MAXWELL, Cal., Dec. 17, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—If one so little, so insignificant, so unworthy, as I feel myself to be, should thus address you; nevertheless from my heart, if not deceived, I cannot address you otherwise. So, entreat me not to leave you, or to return from following after you; for where you go I will go; where you lodge I will lodge; you people shall be my people, and your God my God. A few more days and the year 1893 will be numbered with the past, and this poor worm of the dust is still permitted to remain on the stage of action, for a purpose known only to him who knew all things from the beginning. It is in him we live and move and have our being; and it is not in man that liveth and walketh upon the earth to order his steps. O how thankful I sometimes think I feel that we have a great high Father who is ever mindful of and ever gracious toward his dear little ones. Just so long as they strictly adhere to the pathway of duty as laid down in the holy record, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and that love that passeth all understanding is in exercise, they enjoy peace, comfort and joy in the Holy Ghost. But on the other hand, when they leave the landmarks, and yield to the suggestions of the adversary, who is ever on the alert, going about as a devouring lion, seeking whom he may devour, they become dead to the joy of salvation; for it is written, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." Then how necessary for us to strictly heed the admonitions and exhortations of the apostles, and ever be on the watch tower, that we may not be caught in the net of deception and be dragged down into the filth and scum of the world. At this very time the words of the holy Jesus are being fulfilled; for he told his disciples that many false prophets should arise, and should deceive many. To my mind those false prophets and false teachers are the hireling shepherds who are styled by the true Shepherd "thieves and robbers," who are strangers, and whom the sheep will not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers. But they know the voice of the true Shepherd, and he knows his sheep, and calls them by name, and they follow him. But although they are his sheep, they sometimes become cold and almost lifeless, and their zeal dormant. While in this condition the artful enemy will slip in with some of his suggestions, such as, "If you were what you professed to be you would press on with undaunted zeal." Then gloomy doubts and fears will arise, and they will doubt the genuineness of their faith or their hope being well grounded. In the language of the poet,

"When I turn my eyes within,
All is dark and vain and wild;
Filled with unbelief and sin,
Can I deem myself a child?"

"Lord, decide the doubtful case,
Thou who at thy people's Sun;
Shine upon thy work of grace,
If it be indeed begun."

Yes, my dear fellow-pilgrims, we many times through negligence, not being on our guard, lose sight of our heavenly Shepherd, and our carnal nature will lead us into by and forbidden paths, and ere we are aware we are among the dogs and wolves, which will worry us and tug at us until we are almost ready to perish, and our garments are all besmeared with mud and filth, so that they are loathsome. Then it pleases the holy Shepherd, who never fails to perfect his work, to hunt his strayed sheep, and give them light to discover their waywardness. Then, like Ephraim, they will cry out, "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God. Surely after that I was turned I repented; and after that I was instructed I smote upon my thigh. I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth." Yet, dear brethren and sisters, may we with the psalmist cry out and say, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law, that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked. For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance." O rapturous thought! O sure repose! to thus be placed beyond the reach of condemnation through the holy sacrifice that was made on the tree of the cross.

Now, dear brethren, I feel that I have written enough, disconnected as it is. It is, like the poor, unworthy writer, imperfect. Yet before I bring this to a conclusion I wish to speak a few words in commendation of an article found in the dear old SIGNS of December 6th, 1893, on the subject of "Worldly Amusements." I will say that our dear and precious brother F. A. Chick has set forth the subject in its true light. I heartily concur with him in everything he has set forth, for it corresponds with my own experience in regard to this matter. From my earliest recollection, it appears to me, there has been a restraining power exercised over me to hold me in check, so that I have had no longing desire to engage in those things which the brother has named. In my young days I was diverse from my young companions. I never in my life visited a ball-room, although circumstances have placed me on two or three occasions where I have seen them perform, but had no desire to engage in their frolic. On the contrary there would a kind of horror run over me, with a secret whisper, "You are out of place." I experienced those exercises before I had thought of becoming a member of the church. As to theatre going, I never have entered one as yet. I was in one of our little towns a short time ago, and was detained for the night. A theatre was going on, and it appeared as though the whole town were running to it. In conversation with the proprietor of the tavern I remarked that I had never visited a theatre. He replied that I had missed lots of fun; to which I replied that I did not think I would be any worse off in the winding up of all things.

Now, dear brethren editors, I am much gratified to hear that our dear old SIGNS is increasing in circulation, and am truly sorry that I cannot add anything towards its circulation. Antichrist has full sway in this far western country, and they seem to think that the doctrine as set forth in the SIGNS is poison to what they are contending for. But as long as I live, and am able to pay for it, I expect to keep up my subscription for it.

DAVID KENNARD.

OCTAVIA, Neb., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BRUCE:—I have been wanting to write you for several months, but my mind has been so dark and gloomy, and my heart so cold, it has seemed impossible for me to write anything worthy of your perusal. However, I have determined at last to make the attempt, hoping and praying that the good Lord will direct my thoughts and guide my pen while so doing.

For some time my mind has been dwelling more or less upon the grand and glorious doctrine of election and predestination, which is, or should be, so dear to every christian's heart.

A little more than six years have now passed away since I first became identified with a little band of baptized believers who call themselves Old School, Predestinarian Baptists; and if we accept their Articles of Faith, Rules of Decorum, and the preaching of their much loved pastors and visiting brethren, as evidence, we shall soon be convinced that they well deserve this noble title. For my own part, I firmly believe that grand and glorious doctrine, the "Absolute predestination of all things," and the "eternal vital unity of Christ and his church," which Paul preached and so ably defended both by word and letter. But if you should ask me why I believe so firmly in the doctrine of election and predestination, I could only answer, I hope and believe that I was taught it by the Holy Spirit, which alone imparts the knowledge of God, in a greater or less degree, to all of God's believing children. For Jesus says, "He [the Holy Spirit] shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you."—John xvi. 15. Once I believed that the favor of God could be secured by the works of righteousness that poor, puny, sinful man can do. But I trust that God by his Holy Spirit has caused me to realize, to some extent at least, that all of my imaginary good works were but as filthy rags in his sight, and a stench in his nostrils.

After I had tried in my own weak, ignorant, imperfect way to do all that I could think of, and all that my misguided, Arminian friends could tell me to do, I trust I was enabled to see at last that if I was ever saved at all, it must be through the free and unmerited favor of God." "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."—Eph. i. 8, 9. But I had to be brought very low indeed before I could give up all the pet theories that had been instilled into my mind from early childhood, in regard to Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, &c. Time and again it was impressed upon my mind that I ought to come out from among those who held and taught what I regarded as such erroneous views of the doctrine of election and predestination; but I tried to quiet my conscience by persuading myself that it made no difference to me what views they held and taught, as I was not obliged to accept or teach them. Nor was it till after I had been dragged down, down, down into the deep, dark waters of trouble and sorrow, the fiery furnace of sore affliction, and the loathsome valley of the deepest humiliation on account of my sins and transgressions against a just and holy God, that I realized to some extent the heinousness of my refusal to obey the dictates of conscience, which were, I now believe, the teachings of the Holy Spirit. Nor did I fully realize it then, till after the Lord had looked with pity and tender compassion upon me, and restored unto me, as I humbly trust, the joy of his salvation.—Psa. li. 12. Then was I made willing in the day of his power to go even to these despised people, the Old School, Predestinarian Baptists, and ask permission to occupy the lowest place among them. This I was constrained to do the more readily after my unholy pride had been humbled, and all the filthy rags of my own self-righteousness had been torn from me during my terrible struggle with the great Apollyon, while in the deep, dark valley of humiliation; and I learned by reading the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES that the Old School Predestinarian Baptists felt just as I did; and instead of trying to make people believe that they were more holy than others, they deplored in nearly all of their communications their own exceeding sinfulness. To God be all the glory.

Brother Bruce, when I commenced writing this morning I thought I would pen some thoughts suggested to my mind by the eleventh and twelfth verses of the first chapter of Paul's letter to the Ephesians; but as my time is all consumed, and your patience will doubtless be entirely exhausted before you get through with this, I will close.

With kindest regards to yourself and family, I am your most unworthy brother in Christ, if indeed I be on at all,

J. T. SKINNER.

HANNIBAL, Mo., April 6, 1894.

VERY DEAR SISTER BOGGS:—Your precious letter of the 25th of February, in expression of sympathy and fellowship for me in my continued affliction, which came duly to hand, is yet unanswered. I have wanted ever since we received it to write you in reply as best I could, but have been so feeble and incapable of its performance that I have not done so; and now I am still much in the same condition, with a barren and unfruitful mind and feeble body; but the dear Lord has greatly blessed me and had compassion on me, so that I still live a monument of his goodness and mercy. I will try to send you a few lines, that you may know our state and condition.

I still at times suffer much pain, but am enabled to bear it, according to the measure of the unmerited grace of our dear Lord; for truly I am unworthy of the least of his many mercies. I cannot convey to you an adequate expression of the unalloyed pleasure which your precious letter of sympathy and fellowship afforded me, but you, sister Boggs, and brother Fetter, know already better than I can tell you; as the apostle said to the brethren, he did not write because they did not know the truth, but because they did. This knowledge comes through the blessed Spirit of truth, whom our Lord said "the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him;" but he added, "But ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." The apostle says, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity;" the eternal, unchangeable love of God, the heritage of every heaven-born and redeemed child of God. O what a glorious inheritance it is, "incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away." O can it be that such a worthless worm as I can have part in it? It was provided for such as are "ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcast in the land of Egypt." Then may not even I have hope?

You refer to the pleasant meetings we have had in Virginia in days past. Often they come into my mind also. I remember with pleasant meditation many of them, at some of which it was my privilege and pleasure to meet with you; and at one I also met our dear brother Fetter, and heard from him the unadulterated gospel of God our Savior; and ever since then the name of Fetter, and he who bears it, has been cherished by me as a true minister of the blessed gospel of God our Savior. I often think of those days when, as I hoped, the candle of the Lord "shined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkness."—See Job xxix. Now I am in affliction, and seem to be shut up in much darkness, and seldom have the privilege of hearing the gospel, though we are near the church of our membership, and have an acceptable preacher; but we are both old, and I am so feeble and crippled, except in mild, good weather we cannot go.

Your reference to John the Baptist when in prison was encouraging to me, shut up as I am, often full of doubts, and such an evil old nature to contend with. I often wonder if I can be of the blessed family numbered in Christ. The answer of Jesus sent to John is full of comfort to the poor, helpless ones of the redeemed family, and truly am I one of the helpless ones; and if an Israelite at all, one of the "hindmost," and "Amalek" often a terror to me.—Brother Keene's letter in the SIGNS.

What a treasure we have in the SIGNS. Were I able there is much in it that I would like to speak or write of, but I could add nothing to its fullness; yet it is a pleasure to speak of it. It is so difficult for me to control my pen that I often mar the subjects before I can record what is on my mind. My right arm and hand are the ones paralyzed some years ago, and are yet very feeble. We are glad to learn of your comfortable and pleasant surroundings in that beautiful country. May the dear Lord continue his choice blessings upon you all, and if it is his will build a church of believers there, you three as a nucleus for its formation, where you can meet and offer up your united voices of praise to his adorable and reverend name.

This is a poor return for your precious letter. We will be glad to hear from you again soon. Love for all saints. Sister Kercheval is pretty well and active, far more than I.

Unworthily your afflicted brother,
W. F. KERCHEVAL.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I wrote to you a short time since, requesting you to appeal for aid from the churches north and south, to assist the few Primitive Baptists in and around Memphis to build a house of worship. A lot is offered us if we will build on it within a specified time. As there are so few of us here, and all poor, and not able to give much, we thought to make the effort, rather than miss so good and kind an offer. At my age I could not hope to enjoy the privilege a great while, but I would like to see the cause progress for others to enjoy. I hope you will excuse my earnest persistence. We think five hundred dollars would build us a suitable house, and one that we would be satisfied with.

Your sister in hope,
MRS. N. J. SHIPP.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WILL brother David Bartley give his views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on Deuteronomy xxix. 8? Give the reason why those two and one-half tribes of Israel were settled without crossing Jordan, and oblige.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BROTHER Garrett D. Doremus departed this life March 4th, 1894, aged 81 years and 8 months.

It was his blessed portion to fall asleep in the full assurance of a living faith in Christ Jesus. The subject of this brief notice was a dearly loved member of the Ebenezer Church, in the city of New York. He received a good hope through grace some time during the year 1842.

The funeral services were held at the residence of his son, James H. Doremus, No. 681 Hancock Street, in the city of Brooklyn, on March 6th, 1894, on which occasion Elder Benton Jenkins spoke to the company there gathered, basing his remarks on the fifteenth chapter of Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians. On the following day our brother was tenderly borne to and interred in the cemetery at Hackensack, N. J., to await the resurrection of the saints.

R. M. S.

NEW YORK, May 10, 1894.

DIED—At her home in Appomattox Co., Va., on the evening of Nov. 7th, 1893, Mrs. Preston Stone.

She was a great sufferer with cancer. All through her long and painful illness she manifested much patience, and was meekly submissive, expressing a willingness to die. She was a faithful and devoted wife, and a kind and devoted mother. She leaves a husband and two affectionate daughters, who did all in their power for her comfort. I dearly loved my dear aunt. She seemed more like a mother to me than an aunt. Those who knew her best loved her most. She professed religion in early life, and joined a church near where she lived; but she became very much dissatisfied, fearing she was deceived, and began reading her Bible closely, and praying earnestly to the Lord to give her a bright manifestation of her acceptance with him, which he granted, and she rejoiced at home. She joined the Primitive Baptists at the Stone Wall Church, and was baptized with her husband by Elder James E. Hillsman in 1892, and was a faithful and true member until her death.

"O happy day, when saints shall meet
To part no more! the thought is sweet!
No more to feel the rending smart
Off felt below when Christians part."

LAURA L. DODSON.

WITH sadness, yet feeling resigned to the will of our heavenly Father, I am made to record the death of another member of the little church at Lincoln, Ill. On the 14th of April, 1894, at her home in Logan Co., Ill., our highly esteemed sister and mother in Israel, Frances Wendell, wife of Hon. Thomas Wendell, fell asleep in Jesus. Her disease was paralysis, other complications making her suffer much; but her end was peaceful.

She was born in Pike Co., Ohio, in March, 1821, married Mr. Wendell in April, 1843, and in 1861 moved to Logan Co., Ill., near where she died. Her life was spent in duties to her God, family and neighborhood. In May, 1873, she joined the Lebanon Church of Old School Baptists, and lived a useful life, to the honor of her profession. She was all we admire in noble womanhood, a faithful wife and mother, a friend to the afflicted and poor, and in every Christian duty she took pleasure. She will be missed everywhere, but mostly at home, of which she was the light. May the Lord comfort the mourners.

The writer was sent for, but missed the train, and so was not in time to be at the funeral. A large concourse of friends and neighbors having assembled, they were addressed by a preacher living near, with appropriate tributes of respect. On Sunday following, at the old church-house, I tried to comfort the church and a large assembly of friends and neighbors. Afterward I led into the baptismal waters an aged child, eighty-two, who dated his experience back more than sixty years.

The deceased leaves an aged husband, five children, a number of grandchildren, with the church and many friends, to mourn their loss; but the Lord knows best, and blessed be his name.

Yours in the hope of the gospel,
JAMES H. RING.

CHENEY, Neb., May 1, 1894.

MY dear foster-mother, Elizabeth L. Slack, departed this life at the residence of her step-son, in Trenton, N. J., Feb. 9th, 1894.

She had been a consistent member of the Old Baptist Church at Locktown for fifty years; and often have I listened to hear her tell of the fiery trial through which that church was called to pass, which resulted in the division. Although timid in conversation relating to her own experience, yet she was strong in her faith and firm in her belief in election and predestination. Many were the happy hours we spent in talking on the subject; and my recollections of those times are like balm to my wounded heart, now that I know I shall see her face no more. Her last hours were those of a true soldier of the cross, and no fear seemed to dim that precious hope in her Lord and Savior. Her mind remained clear to the last, and she left all her earthly matters arranged so that there was nothing to perplex those who remained to do her last bidding.

Elder Wm. J. Purington spoke in a very comforting manner from the words of her own selecting, "And now, Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in thee." Had she lived until June she would have been eighty-five years old. Although we all, whom she termed her "dear children," mourn that she has gone from us, yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we know that for her to depart and be with Christ is far better.

CLARA E. GILBERT.

FRENCHTOWN, N. J., April 29, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It becomes my painful duty, by request of the friends, and in accordance with my own wishes, to send you for publication in the SIGNS the obituary of John Paul Kessler, who departed this life suddenly and unexpectedly on Wednesday, April 18th, 1894, at the residence of his parents, brother Peter and sister Kate Kessler, at Black Rock, Baltimore Co., Md., aged 23 years and 24 days.

This young friend had been in rather poor health for the past two years, but of late had seemed to be building up again, when about two weeks before his death he was attacked with "La Grippe." From this, however, he seemed to be recovering, when on the morning of April 18th he suddenly became much worse, and in ten minutes had passed away. His funeral services were held at Black Rock on the following Saturday, and drew together the largest assemblage of people that I ever saw at a funeral at Black Rock, with perhaps one exception. Everything was done to show the respect and affection in which he was held by all who knew him in the community at large. He had never made a public profession of faith in Christ, but I learn from those who knew him that for some time he had taken an interest in reading the Scriptures, and I know that he had a great reverence and regard for the services of religion. He had been planning to take his sister, who is a member of the church, to attend the Baltimore Association this spring; and only a few hours before the end came, referring to the same thing, he had said, "I wonder where we shall stay."

Thus a young life, promising great usefulness, and to which his parents looked forward with pleasureable hopes, has been brought to a close. How dark and inscrutable are the ways of providence in our eyes! Yet his dear parents are able to say, "It is the Lord; let him do whatever he will." They have hope in the death of their son, and feel to rest quiet and submissive under the mighty hand of God. How blessed are they in this! Nothing can be so good as a spirit of reconciliation to God. It glorifies God, and it is the evidence of the power of almighty grace in the heart. The parents, brothers and sisters all have the sympathy of the community in their great loss.

I remain your brother in the hope of the gospel,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., May 7, 1894.

OUR brother, Isaac C. Reed, died April 28th, 1893.

He was born in the state of Ohio, April 28th, 1854, came to the state of Iowa with his parents in 1855, and lived to manhood, when he married Miss Melissa Brown, in November, 1878, after which they moved to Dakota, lived there eight or nine years, and then came back to Iowa in 1890, where he lived until his death. He leaves a wife and two daughters, one brother and four sisters, besides many friends, to mourn their loss. He was a kind husband and loving father. He never united with any church, but was strong in the faith and doctrine of salvation by grace, and grace alone; so that we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we feel that our loss is his gain. The writer tried to speak comforting words to the friends from Job xiv.

ALSO,

DIED—In Rockford, Floyd Co., Iowa, brother Jonathan Allen, in May, 1893.

He was born in Putnam Co., Ind., June 10th, 1833, came with his parents to the state of Iowa in the year 1849, and was married April 27th, 1856, to Miss Elizabeth Harlan. He received a hope in the Lord Jesus Christ in November, 1861, and joined the Old School Baptist Church on June 10th, 1862. The church licensed him to exercise his gift to speak of the goodness and mercy of God, and chose him as their Moderator. He had the care of two churches, Little Cedar and Providence. He leaves a wife, four sons, four daughters, six brothers and two sisters, besides many friends, to mourn their loss. He was a kind husband and loving father. They mourn not as those who have no hope, for their loss is his gain.

The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the friends from Job xiv.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHENT, Ky., Feb. 25, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER W. J. MAY:—

Yours of the 19th instant is at hand. In your letter you speak of the profit arising from a free exchange of the views of brethren by the use of the pen upon great and interesting truths recorded in the sacred word. That suggestion reminds me of a subject which has for several days past been upon my mind. With your permission I will offer to you some of my feeble thoughts upon that subject, which is found in the fifth chapter of Second Kings. In that chapter we find much of the life and character of Naaman, who was a leper. Evidently the Old Testament abounds in types, which look to and present to God's dear people great spiritual truths, which often afford them great spiritual enjoyment. We have no reason to lead us to the conclusion that Naaman was not a type which points to things that we have felt and seen in our own experience. The sacred historian says, "Now Naaman, the captain of the hosts of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him the Lord had given deliverance to Syria. He was also a mighty man in valor; but he was a leper." When that disease first manifested itself on him we are not here told. Under the Jewish law the leper was banished from the congregation of the Lord. I am forcibly impressed with the thought that leprosy was a type of sin. It is probably true that in early life that disease was not visible upon Naaman; but the time must have come when it was fully manifested to him and to others. So with you, dear brother, the time once was when the loathsome character of sin in yourself was not made manifest to you. Then the fear of God was not before your face; that fear which is the beginning of wisdom. But the time came when the loathsome character of sin was made manifest to you. Then you fully thought you had no right to a place in the congregation of the Lord. Yea, from that sacred place you felt that you were forever excluded.

Naaman was highly honored by his master because he was a man of valor. Earthly honors and earthly praise go hand in hand, and Naaman's pride was made manifest when he refused to obey the prophet, who commanded him to wash in Jordan. That pride belongs to all of Adam's fallen race.

But the sacred historian further says, "And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid, and she waited on Naaman's wife. And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy." Here was Naaman suffering from that loathsome disease, and here was that little maid who greatly desired that her lord might be recovered of that disease; and she pointed away to the prophet in whose power to cure she had implicit faith. That prophet had power to recover Naaman of the leprosy; and the glorious Son of God has power to heal the sin-sick soul. That little maid was evidently a type of the true church, which by its ordinances and by its ministry points all who are sick of sin to the great Prophet of Israel, the Lord Jesus Christ, who alone is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by him; to save them from the awful leprosy of sin. You, dear brother, like all the true ministers of the gospel, were solemnly set apart by the true church to the great work to which the Lord had called you, which was, as John the Baptist did, to point to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. That Lamb is the sum and substance of the gospel. You cannot preach the gospel without preaching Jesus in his great and wondrous character. You know no other Savior. In his dear name rests all your hope of being saved from the awful leprosy of sin. So with that little maid, she knew none other than the prophet of Israel who could recover Naaman of his leprosy. She was from the land of Israel, and that prophet was an Israelite. He belonged to the same family with her. So all the true ministers of the gospel are Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile, from whom the leprosy of sin has been forever removed by the great Prophet, the glorious Son of God.

"So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha." He could not enter that house, because he was a leper. Nor could you, nor any other of the dear saints, enter the house of the Lord while they and you saw and knew that the leprosy of sin was not healed. "And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean." The prophet sent a messenger. So when the true minister of the gospel goes to the poor, afflicted, mourning ones, he has a message to bear to them. That message is, There is a Prophet in Israel who alone can heal all the maladies of sin and make them clean.

But Naaman was a Syrian, and a great man, a captain of the hosts of Syria; just like all God's dear people are in their earthly relationships. We all want to have our own ways. We do not want to go to what we naturally regard as that little river Jordan. We want to dictate as to how we are to be healed, and we go to work under the law, trusting and believing that we by our own works and wisdom can contribute to our cleansing. So it was with Naaman, who said, "Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?" Ah, how rebellious we all are. Although we behold in us the leprosy of sin, till we, like Gehazi, are white as snow, yet we desire to adopt our own remedy. We want to wash in the rivers of Abana and Pharpar, fit figures of the modern means system. But let us turn our thoughts to Jordan, and inquire if it were little and of low degree. The name Jordan means judgment. Our great and glorious Lord went down into Jordan and was baptized of John. Thus he symbolized his baptism into death, and his glorious and triumphant resurrection, without which the leprosy of sin could never be healed. He entered the waters of that river, as he afterward did the cold waters of death, by which he satisfied the judgment of God against sin, and recovered all spiritual Israel from that judgment which declared, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Then that judgment and its awful penalty was removed. Naaman could not be healed of his leprosy by washing in Abana and Pharpar because they did not mean judgment; no more than the dear saints in this day can go to heaven or attain a state of true holiness by the ordinance of baptism. They must be in unity with him who by one offering hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. They are sanctified by God the Father and preserved in Christ Jesus. They were preserved in him from that awful judgment against sin when he went down into that baptism of death because of their unity with him.

But Naaman made great preparation to reward the prophet for his cleansing. It is written, "And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment;" and he said to the prophet, "I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant." But the prophet said, "As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused." Then Naaman's heart was greatly touched. He said, "Thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord." Dear brother, have you not seen the time when your heart was so filled with the love of God for your cleansing that you were willing to give all things earthly to your adorable Lord for his wonderful work in cleansing you from the leprosy of sin? Sometimes this feeble one has been brought to realize that this world with all its gaudy show, all its pomp and fame, is but vanity, when compared to the great and wonderful work of our God in cleansing his dear people from the leprosy of sin. But our glorious Lord trod the winepress of his Father's wrath alone, and of the people there was none to help. It was not for silver and gold and raiment, or worldly honors and fame, that he laid aside the glory he had with the Father before the world was, and came to earth and suffered that judgment against sin. O no! He loved his people with an everlasting love, and they sweetly sing,

"Love is the grace that keeps her power
In all the realms above;
There faith and hope are known no more,
But saints forever love."

It was the love of God for his people that brought him upon the green plains of earth to suffer and die, that he might heal them of the leprosy of sin.

"And Elisha sent a messenger unto him [Naaman], saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean." "Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God; and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean." Our Lord went down into the awful baptism of death to redeem his people from the leprosy of sin. He went as the child born, the son given, the everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace. He was possessed of all the attributes of God. He said, "I, even I, am the Lord, and beside me there is no Savior." He suffered on Calvary in that flesh and blood of which his children are partakers. But when in deep agony on the cross he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" then he suffered the penalty of the law which the children had violated, and in their unity with him they were redeemed. After that suffering he came forth from the tomb clothed with all the seven perfections of our God. While he suffered on Calvary they were with him, when he lay in the tomb they were with him, and when he came forth a triumphant conqueror from that tomb they were with him. So in all his great and wonderful work in passing through that judgment of God against sin they were with him, and were his. When Naaman bathed seven times in that river of judgment, the Jordan, he was cleansed, made whole. If he had bathed in that river only six times it would not have represented or prefigured the great antitype, the suffering of our glorious Lord in meeting and fulfilling that judgment which was against his people. But Naaman bathed seven times, and was made whole. All the divine perfections of his God were present and united in his cleansing. Our Savior would not have triumphed over the tomb if he had not possessed all the great and wonderful attributes of God, the seven perfections of Deity. In his great and wonderful name is embraced, and presented to the admiring gaze of his saints, omniscience, omnipresence, omnipotence, holiness, immutability, justice and love. They were all united in his great work of redemption, when he passed through and fulfilled every requirement of the judgment of God against sin. If one of those attributes had been absent when he undertook the redemption of his people, that great work could never have been accomplished. If Naaman had failed to bathe seven times in Jordan, he would not have been healed of his leprosy. The chief desire of the saints is to look by faith to him who is infinite in wisdom, power, holiness, immutability, omnipresence, justice and love. John beheld these great and wonderful attributes of our God when he said, "And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth." He is immutable, therefore they were with him when he went down into the baptism of death; they were with him when he arose from the tomb; they were with him when he ascended upon high, where he ever liveth to make intercession for his saints. They were sent forth into all the earth, and were with you, dear saint, when he quickened you and made you spiritually alive; and they will be with you through all your earthly pilgrimage, and will be with you when the icy curtains of death encircle your mortal form. They will be with you when the last trumpet shall call you from the confines of the tomb. They will be with you throughout eternity, and will attune your sainted voices to the melodies of the skies; for they are the spirits of our God, who is infinite in all his glorious and wonderful character.

This letter has been written to too great a length, and I fear you will be troubled if you attempt to read it. I may in the future give you some of my feeble thoughts as to what is prefigured by Gehazi, the servant of the prophet. Till then farewell.

HILL COUNTRY OF JUDEA, NOV., 1846.

TO THE EDITOR:—I have understood that at this season of the year, when the volume of the SIGNS is drawing to a close, you are not apt to be crowded with as many communications for publication as in the earlier part of the volume. If my information be correct, perhaps you can find a spare corner for this communication, without excluding something of more importance.

You will perceive by the place of my date that I write from the "Hill Country of Judea;" but I beg you not to conclude that I am high upon the mountain, for such is not the case. You are sufficiently acquainted with geography to know that where there are hills there are also valleys, which lie along between them. It is certainly so in the land of Judea, as every well-taught Israelite can testify. For my own part I am neither permanently located on the hill nor in the valley, and sometimes I have entertained serious misgivings whether I have not mistaken the country altogether; but if in the country at all, my present place is in the valley of Kidron, hard by the wilderness, and in one of the most barren parts of the country. It is now many years since I trust the mark of circumcision was made in my heart without hands, and I admitted to mingle with the congregation of the Lord; but it is seldom that I am permitted to go up to Jerusalem to worship, or to witness the presence of the Lord in his holy temple. But when, even from the low grounds where I spend the greater portion of my time, I am enabled to pray, with my face toward the temple, although from the lowness of my position I have to look upward, yet if the temple be in sight I always find deliverance from my distress and relief from all my burdens; and I have even sometimes thought that I could most gladly glory in mine infirmities if I might only enjoy a full view of the city and the temple. But there are seasons when the sight is hidden by intervening mountains; and then instead of contemplating the delightful privileges that I have at other times enjoyed, I am very prone to murmur and complain of such inconveniences as I find myself perplexed with in the valley. My disquietude arises from the following, among other disadvantages which I labor under, and which I cannot easily surmount. First, this valley seems such a lonely place, although some parts of it are in sight of the temple, and not very remote from the tower of David, which was builded for an armory, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men; yet from other parts more obscure I have often had to cry out, I am like a pelican of the wilderness; I am like an owl of the desert. I watch, and am as a sparrow upon the housetop. I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping. My days are like a shadow that declineth, and I am withered like grass. So lonely and depressed do I sometimes feel that I can hardly think myself suitable company for any society. Too unclean for the congregation of the Lord, and yet the vanities of the Gentiles have no charms for me.

But another affliction attends me away down here in this gloomy place. I sometimes experience such chilling damps and fogs, which freeze my zeal for God and love for my brethren. If I would sing a song of Zion, I am admonished that I am in a strange land. If I would call upon the name of the Lord, the fog is so dense in this valley that I lose the points of the compass, and hardly know which way to look for the temple; and for me to pray, without some assurance that my face is toward the temple, is sorry work indeed.

But it is not meet that I should dwell altogether on the disadvantages of my situation, although I am very prone to do so, especially when in certain moods and temperaments of mind. There are advantages here which should also be duly considered. I am amazingly heady, high-minded, and much inclined to vanity; and should I be permitted to have my own way perhaps I might soon think even Jerusalem itself hardly good enough for me. There have been times since I came into this valley that before I was aware my soul made me like the chariots of Amon. I have sometimes mounted up with wings like an eagle, have run without weariness, and have walked without fainting; but these exercises, few and far between as they have been, have generally raised me up quite out of the valley, and set me on Mount Olivet, where I have enjoyed a most commanding view of the city of my God. O how transporting to see her foundations and gates, to mark her bulwarks and tell her towers, to consider her palaces, and report her generations to come. I have sometimes thought I could judge of the emotions of Peter and John when they said, "It is good to be here," and like them I have longed for permission to prepare for a lasting residence upon the mount; but my Lord, who knows infinitely better what I can bear of prosperity and of tribulation, what is for my good and for his declarative glory, causes the vision of the mountain to pass, and I at once settle again into the valley below.

I have spent so much of my time for the last thirty-four years in the valley, if it were not that I am a most unaccountably dull scholar I might give the readers of the SIGNS a statement of some of the advantages and of the discouragements of this location; but alas for me! when for the time I have spent in learning I should be able to teach others, I need myself to be taught more perfectly the first principles of the faith of God's elect.

It is consoling sometimes to remember that Jesus used, in the days of his incarnation, frequently to visit this valley; and often, when he would impart to the saints some special lessons, he took them out of Jerusalem, led them into this valley, crossed over the brook Kidron, and ascended with them into the Mount of Olives, where he was wont to sit and teach those things which his Spirit, which he promised to send after his ascension, should bring again to their remembrance.

When I remember that on the very night in which he was betrayed he selected this spot for his agony, here he entered the garden, poured out his supplications with bitter groans and crying, that here he sweat as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground, I feel mortified and ashamed that I cannot watch with him here one hour. I find it profitable, however, trying to spend my time in this consecrated spot; for here my proud spirit is reproved, my heart is melted within me, and here I am led to rejoice in the assurance that Jesus, the High Priest of our profession, has been tempted in all points as we are, and that he knows how to succor them that are tempted. But then again, how soon my unstable mind forgets all the advantages of my situation, and I become again dissatisfied, and my soul is disquieted within me. In my low estate in this valley I have sometimes been permitted to "drink of the brook in the way," and my head (Christ) has been exalted.—Psalm cx. 7. For the brook Kidron runs through this valley; but there are seasons of drought, when this brook yields no supply to my thirsting soul. In my solitude such visions flitter athwart my mind as to lead me to doubt the reality of my hope in God, my interest in the blood and righteousness of the Redeemer of sinners, and of my having ever been in reality born again. These trials sometimes overwhelm me with lamentation and woe. Then there are other times when the evidences of my adoption by grace are no brighter, but instead of sorrow and grief I seem to be as insensible as steel; so easy, stupid and careless that I shudder to think that I cannot shudder, and I mourn because I do not mourn.

But I have in this valley many serious conflicts; and the most potent adversary that I ever encountered is known to every Israelite by the name of "Unbelief." I have often been astonished at my own weakness to resist his crafty insinuations. Many a time after I have enjoyed a banqueting season with my Lord, when he has strengthened my confidence in him as my Lord and my God, and when my faith has arisen so as to triumph over all my doubts and fears, old Unbelief has dropped in, with such sleight and deception as have led me to regard him as an angel of light; all my powers of resistance have been at once paralyzed, and I have been led by him a captive at his will. Through his influence I have been led to doubt all the promises that my Lord had ever made to me, and indeed that he had ever made any, and even that he had ever taken me into his banqueting house, or spread the banner of his love over me. "What a delusion!" says he; "for you think that a holy God can love so vile a creature. What have you ever done that looks like following the meek and lowly Lamb of God? True, you have had some pleasant exercises of mind, have felt some zeal, and have fancied yourself in his presence and embrace; but if these impressions and emotions were genuine why do they not continue? Where is your gratitude? If you were a saint you would feel, act and walk as one. You said your mountain stood firm and strong; but where is your mountain? Do you call this valley a mountain? How preposterous! Your hope is only suited to sunshining weather; but you see it will not serve you in the dark." He often points me to the world, and demands of me, "Are the children of God as worldly-minded, as carnal, craving, and desirous of the flattery and vanities of time and sense? Why are you so glued to earth that you can scarcely find time to visit your closet, or attend the public worship of God? Why is it that you can easier spend dollars for the vain decoration of your body, which shortly shall feed the worms, than shillings to relieve the pressing wants of suffering humanity, or meet the requisite expenses of the church of God? Why so frequently does a little rain, or snow, or mud, or heat, or cold, serve as an apology for absenting yourself from the company of the saints, if you in reality prefer Jerusalem above your chief joy?" To this language I often find myself unable to reply; and Unbelief shuts me up in the castle of old Giant Despair, where I fret and mourn and weep until my gracious Lord comes to my relief, and renews the pledges of his unchanging love, bids me look away from all my vileness, and look alone to him. I confess that I have felt mortified and ashamed that, after proving by more than thirty years' experience the veracity of my God and the deception of the lying adversary, I should still be persuaded to discredit the oath and testimony of my faithful Lord, and listen to the lies of Satan. Often have I resolved in my heart that I would never again be guilty of the like fault; but as often have I found my own strength to be weakness and my wisdom folly. To my cost I have learned the truth of the declaration, "They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercies."

But perhaps I have written enough in my allegorical style, as I do not wish to burden your readers; but it would afford me satisfaction to know of your readers if a person can, in their opinion, be exercised as I have been, and yet be a child of God and an heir of glory.

GERA GETHER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 3, 1894.

MY DEAR BROTHER GRAFTON:—

While I was reading the SIGNS last evening your face came between my eyes and the paper to such an extent that I had to lay down the paper; and my reverie and companionship were so pleasant that I feel I must write to you. I think I have sometimes fully as pleasant a visit with my brethren when I am alone as when I am in reality face to face with them. Perhaps you will laugh within yourself when you read such a confession, and say, He is a day-dreamer, or mayhap he has a soft spot somewhere in his brain, or he is peculiar. But nevertheless I enjoy such quiet meditations; they are very pleasant to me, and I do not want to get rid of them. In these things my soul is comforted with this item of my hope, that if for Christ's sake I am weak and foolish, then "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." It has always been my ambition to be something in the world above the ordinary. That was a worldly ambition, and mixed with pride, with a desire for vainglory; and since I have been in the church I have not been free from such vain desires. The precious hope that has been given me of a life in Christ Jesus has not, I am sure, changed one iota the old carnal nature. The change of feelings with regard to the old nature has been produced by the light of faith shining in the darkness, and making manifest the vileness and depravity which before was hidden from me. The very same sin which before my hope I rolled as a sweet morsel under my tongue, now has become a stench in my nostrils, and is to my quickened senses exceeding sinful. I realize, too, by this light of faith that all the things which I have in times past set my heart upon do perish with the using, while my hope leads me into the beauties and the glory of the kingdom of God's dear Son; which kingdom, being set up, it is declared will never crumble, but will last forever and ever. As I said, since I have been in the church I have had vain and foolish ambitions. I know they have all been of the flesh, having no part in Christ's kingdom or its affairs (which is a kingdom of love), except to drag the conscious sinner down, and envelop him in gloom and despair. So I believe I can say of a truth that there have been times in my experience that I have been willing to be led anywhere and made anything in Christ's kingdom for Christ's sake. True love exalts the object which it exercises; and when in exercise the whole desire of the subject is to be like the object loved, and never to bring the object down to a level with self. True love always seeks its superior, causing a longing desire to attain to worthiness of the object loved. Christ is the object of the love of every child of grace; and this is the ultimatum of the hope that I cherish, that I am a child of grace. Jesus was meek and lowly of heart. O how I long to be meek and lowly of heart; and how I grieve to find my vile nature asserting itself in every horrid form imaginable, manifesting anything but a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Jesus "made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant." This is contrary in man to every natural inclination; and when I have found a willingness in my heart to be anything for the love of Christ, I know it has not come out of my stock of natural qualifications. I can truly say at such times that the kingdom of love does overshadow me; for nothing short of God's love shed abroad in the heart will incline finite man to meekness or contrition, neither to debase himself, nor make himself of no reputation among his brethren. There are certain forms of pride which belong to me that I despise, yes, I hate them; and they are of that mean and contemptible sort that I am ashamed of, and yet I cannot get rid of them. Veritable thorns are they in my flesh; and I have at last come to the sad conclusion that they were born in me, and will likely go to the grave with me. Sometimes I think I do not want to get rid of the lusts of my flesh, so long as they bring me sorrow and distress and grief; because, as Jesus was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," I could not be a follower of him and not grieve and be sorrowful. The more plainly I am made to see (through manifold temptations) my totally depraved nature, when being lifted above them, or made strong to bear them, the more I realize that his grace is sufficient to overcome every enemy, and that his blood cleanseth from all sin. Therefore I feel that I can sometimes say that I am glad I am a sinner, and thankful that I am conscious of my exceedingly sinful state; for that is one of the best evidences that I have, and enables me to say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." Just now, and for twenty-four hours past, the sweetest Scripture in all the record to me is that which I have partly quoted in this letter, "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," &c.; and while I am rejoicing in it, and am willing to be a fool, that I may be wise in the Lord, yet all the time I am conscious that there is a something in me that makes me ashamed to appear foolish, and the same something causes me to desire to appear wise in the eyes of the world. I feel to be like the troubled sea, restless and uneasy, tossing to and fro, wave upon wave, distressed because I am restless, and restless because I am so contradictory; doing the things I would not, and failing in the things I would do. But as the sense of sweet peace and rest hangs as a drapery about me, as I dwell with delight upon the Scripture which clings to me, I seem to look below the troubled surface of the sea into its transparent depths; and methinks I see not only a quiet restfulness, but the glory of the heavens is reflected in exquisite loveliness and wondrous beauty and brilliancy. Then, glancing into the soul that reflects the far more brilliant glory of the presence of the Savior of sinners, I can readily understand how the bride (the church) could sweetly say, "He is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely one." I can also understand (looking upon my foolishness) why God did choose the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and the weak things to confound the things which are mighty. "And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are;" for the very reason, because of which I am glad and rejoice in my heart, "that no flesh should glory in his presence." This seems to me an all-sufficient reason, based upon the purpose of God in infinite wisdom. It causes me to see also that the carnal mind is not to-day bathed and steeped in sin, and to-morrow rejoicing in the wisdom and mercy of God, but that it is sin itself, and all the time "enmity against God." The sinner, however, who is raised by the blood of Christ into newness of life in Christ Jesus, having the mind of Christ, does rejoice in his finished work. The reason that "no flesh should glory in his presence" also seems plain. The just and holy God cannot look upon sin, but he is well pleased with his beloved Son, in whom is perfect righteousness;

A SPECKLED BIRD.

DEAR BROTHERS BEEBE:—I very seldom get to dear old Broad Run; so the SIGNS OF THE TIMES brings about all the preaching I get, though the so-called churches around here are numerous. There are a few of us here who, as I humbly hope, know the truth; and sometimes we are allowed to meet each other, and I do enjoy the privilege. If one so unworthy as I may dare to pray for the welfare of Zion, and for the prosperity of our dear paper, it is my wish to do it. Will you at some time write on the subject of the "speckled bird," mentioned Jer. xii. 9? I feel that you know what it is to be pecked at by all the other birds. May he who is able to keep us all, ever keep you, is the humble prayer of your unworthy sister,

"Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her."—Jer. xii. 9.

The expression to which our sister refers is evidently designed to signify the peculiarity of the people whom God has chosen for his own possession in distinction from all the nations of the earth. This is the sense in which the Lord speaks in the text of his heritage. Nothing exists, visible or invisible, but that is the creation of God; and in that sense all things are rightfully his. But it is in the sense of his election of grace that he speaks of his chosen people as his heritage. So Moses sung, "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance."—Deut. xxxii. 8, 9. The subjects of divine grace were given to our Redeemer in the everlasting covenant before the worlds were made; therefore nothing which has occurred since the worlds were made could have been the occasion or cause of that election by which they were thus chosen in Christ Jesus. This essential truth must be observed in examining every sentiment claiming to be involved in the doctrine of the gospel. Nothing is truth unless it confesses that the eternal love of God is the original cause of the whole provision of divine grace for the salvation of his people from their sins. This love is revealed in Jesus as the only way of life and peace. But it is also clearly declared that in the unspeakable gift of his Son God commendeth his love to his own chosen people. The suffering and death of Jesus did not happen without any purpose, nor was there any uncertainty whether the design of infinite love should be accomplished by the dreadful sacrifice of the sinless Son of God. He laid down his life for the sheep of his own fold; and when he died on Calvary there was no sin of any of his members but that was laid on him. In his death justice received its utmost demand in the life of every one for whom his blood was shed. He could be subject to the dominion of death only as identified with his body, the church. That body includes every sinner whom he loved with that everlasting love; and they are each completely freed from sin by the atonement which was fully made when Jesus died.

Many figures and illustrations are used by the Spirit of truth in the record of this unspeakable mystery of redeeming love. The subjects of salvation are embodied in the one bride, on whom the love of God is set. All the most expressive similitudes afforded in the natural world are brought to typify this unity of Christ with his eternally loved people; yet each of these figures must come infinitely short of describing that unity as it completely identifies every object of divine love with Jesus as head over all to the church, which is his body, and the fullness of him who filleth all in all. The mystery of this will of God is known to the saints exclusively by the revelation of the Spirit of truth. Not even their own natural mind can receive the light of this divine knowledge. None of them can communicate it to his brother, or to his best beloved companion. Indeed, even after they have seen the glorious vision of the grace of God that brings salvation, they often long for a repetition of the sight, but can have no power to recall it to their own view. For this cause they are tempted to doubt the reality of what they know has been shown them.

In the immediate connection of the words to which our sister directs attention the Lord says, "I have forsaken mine house; I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies. Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out against me; therefore have I hated it." From the record of the rebellion and perverseness of the chosen nation of Israel it is easy to understand how this charge could justly be brought against them as a nation. While they were favored above all their fellow-men in having the special covenant which God had given them, and to which they had solemnly pledged allegiance, they were continually rebelling against the very precepts which they had professed to love. Yet the Lord dealt mercifully with them; while he visited their transgressions with severe chastening, he heard their cry from the depth of affliction, and delivered them out of their distresses. Herein is portrayed the faithfulness in which God deals with his saints. When suffering under the rod of divine judgment it always appears to the smitten ones that the Lord has become their adversary. They cannot understand why their cry is not heard and answered; and in the extremity of their suffering they conclude that their hope in time past was delusive, and that the Lord never spoke to them the words of peace which had afforded comfort in their hour of trouble. Then in his providential dealing with them they hear the voice of the Lord speaking condemnation against them. With Jeremiah they can say, "Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day." Then it seems that the heritage of the Lord is arrayed in opposition to his directions, and that it is turned away from following after his commandments.

While it is indeed true that the Lord's chosen and redeemed people are among the religious nations as a peculiarly marked bird among the fowls of the air, and as such they are the objects of enmity in the world, there is in this fact incontestible evidence that they are followers of their Lord. He was despised and rejected by the world; even they who were his own natural kindred esteemed him not. In following him it is needful that his saints go the same way in which he led. He said to his disciples, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." This is the portion assigned to them who will live godly in Christ Jesus. It is not an unfortunate and unforeseen obstacle which has fallen in the pathway of the saints. Jesus as positively promised them that in the world they should have tribulation, as that in him they should have peace. So, it is written, "Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her; the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob that his adversaries should be round about him." The Lord loves his own children too well to allow them to find a dwelling place in this world of sin and sorrow. He uses the afflictions and tribulations of their present experience to break the bands which bind them to earth, and to drive them to find the perfect rest ordained for them in the presence of their Lord, where there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand where are pleasures forevermore. God prepared the worm which smote the gourd of Jonah, as well as the gourd of which Jonah was exceedingly glad. In the sight of those who dare to judge the God of heaven it may seem inconsistent that he should thus destroy his own work; but those who fear God will accept his word in preference to all the human philosophy ever devised by enemies and persecutors of the saints. He has done his pleasure in creating the smith that bloweth the coals, and bringeth forth an instrument for his work, and also in creating the waster to destroy. The waster was not created to aid in the work of the smith. The purpose of God is not less effectually accomplished in the waster than in the smith. Each in his own place contributes to the manifestation of that eternal purpose in which God is glorified in saving his people from their sins. While no created mind can comprehend the mystery of God, he has for the comfort of his saints revealed the fact that he works all things after the counsel of his own will. That will is pledged for the blessing of his heritage; therefore even in choosing Jacob in the furnace of affliction, and in the waste, howling wilderness, he has given assurance that it is the best place which infinite love can select for his afflicted and poor people. In this truth they have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them. In it is the assurance that no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper, and that every tongue that shall rise in judgment against them they shall condemn. "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isa. liv. 16, 17.

From these expressions of the inspired testimony, as well as from the whole Scripture, it is clear that the Lord designed that his heritage should be different from the birds round about, which are against her. The multitudes have always been found in opposition to the little flock whom Jesus assured that they should receive the kingdom. But the opposition of the birds round about, who are against her, is not all that this "speckled bird" has to encounter. Her peculiar character is not more a mystery to the birds round about than to herself. While conscious of the marks which distinguish her from those other birds, she is by no means satisfied with her own marked appearance. She sees in others much to admire, while in herself she finds nothing in which to exult. She could better endure the opposition of her companions if she could regard her own marks as indicating that she had a right to claim them as identifying her with the heritage of the Lord. But every time she examines herself she is left in more perplexity with regard to the real nature of her own evidences. There would be comfort for her in the knowledge of her peculiarity if she did not know the evil of her own heart. In consideration of this consciousness she regards it as presumption in her to claim to be the heritage of the Lord. Yet this peculiarity is confined to those who are enlightened by the revelation of God shining in their heart. Each subject of divine grace is made to bear the distinguishing marks of this "speckled bird." The whole church of Christ has no other experience but that which identifies every one who is led by the Spirit of God. Consequently they all bear the same evidences that constitute the whole body of Christ that peculiar people, zealous of good works, whom God purifies unto himself. They bear one indelible mark which cannot be concealed or counterfeited. They love the perfect holiness of God, even though they seriously feel that it condemns them to despair. They hunger and thirst after that righteousness, and find in that poverty by which they are oppressed conclusive testimony against their hope. This mark is found in no other bird. Their heart always condemns them, and if left to their own mind they must sink in despair; but God is greater than their heart, and knoweth all things. His knowledge secures their justification. Among all the religious nations there is none bearing the marks which render this heritage of the Lord so emphatically "as a speckled bird." In being unitedly "against her" the religious birds round about bear unwilling testimony that she is the heritage of the Lord. They can unite in opposition against this "speckled bird," even as Herod and Pilate could be made friends that day when Jesus must be crucified. But still the name of the Lord is the refuge and strength of his own heritage. He will never leave nor forsake his mourning dove, even though she must endure the hatred of all the birds round about. Her secure shelter is under the shadow of the Almighty. She is still the peculiar treasure of her Redeemer.

Much more might be said in describing the peculiarities which distinguish this "speckled bird" from all the birds round about. But what is written is submitted for the consideration of our readers, and especially of our inquiring sister. May the Lord draw all his chosen ones, that they may fly as a cloud, and as doves to their windows.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

PLEASE BE SURE

To give us the same name in which your paper is coming when you send a renewal of subscription. The best plan is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing your name, taken either from the margin of your paper or from the wrapper in which it comes.

who, having redeemed us by his blood, the apostle could well say, "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The flesh having no part in this wonderful and gracious work of salvation, but warring against it, could have no glory therein; and when man glories in man, or self, he has not the mind of Christ nor the Spirit of Christ. Being made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, we do glory in his presence. He is to us the altogether lovely one. We are pleased with him because we love him; and we love him because he has been merciful to our unrighteousness. God also is well pleased with him. All we can know of God is in that which is revealed unto us through Christ; therefore we come unto God by the only way, the living way.

I hoped, dear brother Grafton, that I would succeed in writing you something interesting. You will be the judge, however, of that. You will know that I mean well, and in that I hope to be satisfied. I suppose you are quite busy now preparing for the association. I hope to meet you at Rock Springs. We are all as well as usual; and when I say all, I mean all the people in Philadelphia in whom you are especially interested. My family unites with me in love to you and all your family.

Your fellow-pilgrim, I hope,

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have just received and read this very interesting letter from brother James McDonald, and I hope you will give it a place in the SIGNS, for I deem it highly commendable to our people.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

W. J. MAY.

WASOTO, Ky., Dec. 3, 1893.

ELDER W. J. MAY—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I will now try in much weakness and in the fear of the Lord to comply with the promise I made to you at the Sand Lick Association, and in doing so you will bear with my many blunders and imperfections. The subject, you are well aware, is one that is controverted by a great many; but this should make no difference with us. We should be still, and know that the Lord is God. God by David said, "Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."—Psalm xlii. 10. God is a being that inhabiteth eternity, who created all things for himself, according to his own eternal purpose, after the counsel of his own will. He made of one blood all nations that dwell on this earth. He rules in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. We, poor, finite beings, in his sight are but as grasshoppers. We are but creatures, subject to his laws, and can only know that he is God when Christ reveals him to us.

When God created the world he placed just such beings in it as he pleased or chose to put there. He made all good. It is said that he finished his work and rested. Among the many good things that God made was a good man, and gave him a good law. Here was a good natural man (not a spiritual man), subject to the law which God gave him. The penalty of disobeying the law was death. Man was put in the garden where the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil were, with free access to all the trees of the garden, of which he might freely eat, except the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. He was forbidden to eat of it. The penalty of transgressing the law was death. Sin entered, and death by sin; so death has passed upon all of Adam's race.

We will first show what sin is. "Sin is the transgression of the law."

—1 John iii. 4. What law is sin a transgression of? Any and all laws that ever were given to man by God, the great law-giver of the universe, from Adam to Moses. Where there is no law there is no transgression; and as sin is the transgression of law, and God gave the law to man, I ask, Did sin proceed from the law?

No. How then did it come? By the disobedience of one man sin entered into the world. Not by the commandment of God, but by the disobedience of the one man sin entered. God made the man that sin came by. Did not God do right? Is he not a Sovereign? Does he not rule in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth? Here is his decree in his law, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Did death come by the decree? No. How then did it come? By sin. Sin entered into the world, and death by sin. It was all by the disobedience of one man. I have never been able to see anything of a sinful nature come from one of God's decrees. Sin entered, and death by sin; and death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Where there is no law there is no transgression. Can we charge God foolishly, and say that he ought not to have given man the law, for fear we will make God the author of sin? God forbid. Sin is dead without the law; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. Why did not God let sin remain dead? It was not his pleasure to do so. His children were dead in sin. They did not know sin except the law (or commandment) had said, Thou shalt not covet; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and the poor sinner died. Then it is that he sees he is already lost, and not going to be lost. He now has something to show him what sin is, and how wicked he is, being corrupt in all his ways. To be carnally minded is death. We are in a state of death, and in that condition we will remain until God reveals his Son in us, and enables us to trust in him alone for life and deliverance; for it is said in God's good book that "the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." I am not the wise, says the poor sinner, when light first enters into that wicked and deceitful heart to show him what sin has done for him; and now he begins to hate all his ways, and tries with all his power to get out of that wicked channel which he has been in so long, but all his efforts fail. He cries like a child, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" We would find no deliverance from that death, dear brother May, if grace had not been given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. It is grace that saves; that is what grace is for. If we had not had grace in Christ when we fell in Adam we would not have been here to cavil about the doctrine of the predestination of all things, as well as other points of doctrine.

The fall of man and the introduction of sin made room for Christ and grace. Grace saves; Christ redeems. The Spirit quickens, and the poor child lives. Then he can say of a truth, "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."—Eph. i. 7.

Now, of all we have written this is the sum. God made a good world, good animals, birds, fishes, fowls of the air, and a good man, and gave man dominion over the other good things that he had made. He gave to that good man a good law; and man by disobedience fell from that good state into a state of death. He became sinful, lost all his goodness, and a curse was put upon him. Here is a bad man, sinful and corrupt, but in a good world, where everything is good but man. Nothing now is congenial to his nature. What must be done? He must be driven from the garden, and a curse put upon the earth, and upon the beasts, fowls and fishes, for man's sake. None of those beasts that were cursed had done anything to be cursed for; man had done it all. He must now eat bread in the sweat of his face until he returns to the dust from whence he was taken. This is God's decree, and cannot be changed. Yet God has a people who are called in the Scriptures elect, chosen in Christ before the world began, whom Christ came to save, or redeem. "In whom we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."—Eph. i. 11. Predestination, according to Webster, means purpose; the purpose of God from eternity respecting all events; God's purpose in all events. In the Scriptures it cannot mean less. The terms "ordain" and "appoint" do not always mean predestination. When the disciples were multiplied, the Grecians murmured that their widows were neglected. The apostles told them to look out seven men, full of the Holy Ghost (honest men), and appoint them over this matter; and again, they were to ordain Elders in the churches. But when these words are used by the apostles in relation to God's work it means predestinate. In Acts it is said, "As many as were ordained [predestinated] to eternal life believed." Again, "God hath not appointed [predestinated] us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ." Predestination shows to us God's purpose, his appointments, his ordinations, in his dealings with his children, and with all the race of men, both saint and sinner. Men and devils are all controlled by him. Some tell me that God permits men to sin—that he permitted Adam to sin. I dispute it. In all the places that I find the word "permit" it is a direct authority from Christ. Permit is to authorize; therefore if God had authorized man to sin I do not think he would have punished him for it.

Sin came without authority from God, the great law-giver; for sin is a transgression of law. Man in nature is not satisfied with God's ways and commandments, and is always trying to get something better. God says, "All flesh is as grass." Man says it is not so. Christ says, "Without me ye can do nothing." Proud man says he can. Christ says, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him." The Arminian says, You can come if you will. But, poor, deluded soul, you have neither will nor power. All the title I have for heaven and immortal glory is in Christ, in the blood of Christ, which cleanseth me from all sin. He has made a full, complete and ample atonement for all the sins of all his people, the past, present and to come; and I have a little hope that I am one of that number.

I have been trying in much weakness to preach Jesus, the way, the truth and the life, for thirty-three years last August. My first text was, "It is finished!" and I have been trying to preach a finished salvation all the time since. I have no righteousness of my own; I have to look to Christ for all. I believe in the eternal, unconditional and personal election of all God's children. I believe in the predestination of all things that come to pass in time. I believe that man by nature is totally depraved, so that he cannot do anything good. I believe that the saints will be preserved by grace, and cannot fall away. I believe that the elect will all be called, quickened, born in time, so that none of them will or can be lost; for Christ says, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." These are some of the things that I believe and try to preach. You will look over this long scribble and pardon my many blunders. If I knew that I could do any better I would not send this. It is the best I can do.

Believe me to be your unworthy brother in Christ,

JAMES McDONALD.

MERRIFIELD, Fairfax Co., Va.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I hereby inclose a few new names for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, together with my own remittance for the year 1894. I am a very poor agent indeed. I cannot present a case as I feel it. I have no gift in that way, which, doubtless, all who know me personally are aware of. Yet I do sometimes feel so pressed for utterance that I feel I must give vent by my pen to what my mind seems to have in view from time to time. And when I do so, and look it over, behold, there seems nothing in it to comfort or console a poor, tried soul sojourning with me in these low grounds of sin and corruption; so I lay it aside, hoping for something better, which I know they are worthy of. But alas! all my anticipations fall short of the mark. My mind is at this moment caught back to more than a quarter of a century ago, when my Redeemer appeared to me in a voice, as if a man were at my side, and told me that he was the end of the law for righteousness to them that believe, coupled with a thus saith the Lord, "Go, tell it to the brethren." But I conferred with flesh and blood, and all my days have been sorrow and corruption since. I have time and again tried to tell my first experience, in order to make reparation; but when I get to this point I fear I have been mistaken all the way through. I cannot tell it as I saw it then. Not that its vivid color has faded in the least, but I feel so far away. The joys of that moment have been marred by disobedience, a separation from all that is good. But in that moment so many years ago, Jesus was to me the end of that law of sin and death. I was no longer under its curse. I did not feel its killing power. My sins were taken away; and not only so, but justification was mine to enjoy, in that it was as if I never were guilty, never were under the curse. I could see, like one of old, that there was no more curse; for the Lamb that was slain was found worthy to open the book of life to my soul; and not only to die for me, but to take away my sins, make an end of them, with all their enormity, and even the end thereof, which is death; setting me free, with a new song in my mouth, which could never have been sung by me before, for it was praise unto his dear name. This was the theme that was to employ my tongue when I came to the brethren, to tell them of Jesus and his love, and where the law ended as revealed to me, and of the liberty felt, and to be enjoyed afterward by those dear souls that can do nothing else but believe, because of the great revelation that has been given unto them. This, dear brethren, is belief. It is the very evidence of all that can be hoped for. It is the things not seen with mortal eyes, but felt and handled by those spiritual impulses of the heart. It is that which we denominate faith, the great purifier of the heart. It is the gift of God, which overcomes the world of darkness and death; for it is Jesus, who is all in all. Yea, in him we are given all things. I often read of some poor soul crying out that their hope is so small; and I feel the anguish too in my own breast. But, dear one, just reflect a moment. Jesus is himself that hope. Does he look small to you? Has it come to your mind that there is really insufficiency in him for all your needs? I answer, Nay. Then your hope is a good hope; and while you may fear that you have had but little realization of it, and you are afraid to rest upon it, where else can you rest? The law of sin and death is at an end with you. You have been enabled in your experience to feel that the door to that prison house has been opened; and there is that stone whereon the law was written rolled away by the angel of peace to your soul, and you no longer look for the living among the dead; for the letter or law killeth; but that Spirit which whispered in your heart so long ago is life, and that life is found in the person of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the embodiment of that hope which is the anchor of your soul. We often go to our brethren for instruction when groping in darkness and much bitter weeping, when our eyes are weary with watching, desiring instruction in spiritual things, not thinking but that they can give us the comfort we so much desire; little thinking at the time that all comfort must come from beyond the watchmen. We ask, Where is my Redeemer? Where is he whom we would embalm and keep with us, to have and to go to, just as we desire? And our own voice seems to come back to us as an echo, repeating the sound, "Where?" Now, dear soul, herein I am but repeating my experience in this struggle. No comfort has ever reached me just here. But when a dear one stands before me and tells me the bitterness of my very soul, then I forget my misery for the time being, and could embrace the messenger in my very arms. But there is a feeling sense of duty here, and a lesson to learn daily, that your sorrows and your joys are to the comfort of your brethren; so go and tell them of Jesus and his victory over death; tell of that great Spirit that is the end of the law for righteousness to the believer; not to an unbeliever; for none but believers can be called brethren, in the sense that I am now speaking of. Therefore it is unto them we should tell this for their comfort, no matter whether we ourselves at the time expect any benefit to accrue to us or not. We should not stop to consult self in this matter, but as the answer of a good conscience toward the Giver of all good gifts. Thus it would be a blessed privilege to tell of Jesus and his love, how he made himself known to you, by calling you by your own name, or in other words, making himself known to you personally; for then, and not until then, can you tell the brethren anything. And while you may think you have nothing to tell, that is just the way to feel; for self has then but a poor footing, and then we know how bitter you feel. Yet Jesus was sweet to your soul when he came forth from the confines of death, a mighty conqueror, as you in your experience came forth from under the law of sin and condemnation. Now, as in the case of one whose name signifies bitter, you have begun to sing with the poet,

"I would, were he always thus nigh,
Have nothing to wish or to fear;
No mortal so happy as I;
My summer would last all the year."

But, dear brethren, what comfort or consolation would you be, while in that mood, to your poor, little, sick brother or desponding sister whose very name is bitterness itself? But let the bitter tell of its bitterness, and let each meet the other, and feel a brother's sigh, and with him bear a part, then joy from heart to heart will be the result, and God will be praised, in this very self-abasement. Ere we are aware, while the door is thus closed to all righteousness of our own, and the little one has come to tell the brethren how Jesus met him, they who are listing will hear the music of the hymn in sweetest strains coming forth from the lisping tongue,

"He breaks the power of reigning sin
And sets the prisoner free;
His blood can make the foulest clean,
And has availed for me."

Yes, a full end is made of sin, the prisoner is free, and so free that he cannot come into condemnation, as the law to them is no more. It has lost all its condemning power in our Redeemer; for in him was a sacrifice that was acceptable. Thus once for all, dear trembling child, all debts were canceled. Although in this world you have tribulation, and the adversary is spreading before you a long account of your shortage, which is enough to frighten the strongest, do not forget the doctrine of foreordination, election and predestination. Ask the tempter to show you the date of that bill, and be sure to see that predestination reaches all things, lest he make a true bill against you in some way, and that would bring you into condemnation. Let us watch and be sober, and not become weary in well doing. If we heed the Lord's commands, and learn of him, we shall feel that his yoke is easy and his burden light; because he fights all our battles, carries all our sorrows, and is a present help in time of trouble. Indeed the labor is ended, and it becomes a rest. It is in the world you have trouble and sorrow; but in Jesus you have rest and peace. In my first experience the law ended in Christ, and I have never been able to find Moses' grave to this day; although when doubts have come I have sought it time and again, that

I might know how he died. But how unthinking I am. Did not the Lord bury him? And if it has not pleased him to show me how and where, what is that to me? Jesus says, "Follow thou me." Then I feel little indeed, as the thought often comes up at this point, Whose am I, and whom do I serve? I then feel that the old vessel is going to pieces beneath me, and that dear brother Paul would not acknowledge any relation to me; for he served the Lord and followed in his footsteps. I sometimes think I can find a parallel in the twelve apostles for all the saints in their ups and downs in the church militant. But if I am to be counted after Judas' day, I am lost in one Matthias, whom the lot was cast for ere the Holy Ghost came to teach the all things which Jesus commanded should be done. He was a brother, no doubt; yet the lot falling on him was no proof that he could take any part in declaring the name of Jesus. Just so I hesitate to speak or write, lest I should not do the will of my Redeemer. I want to live in the confidence and lasting fellowship of my brethren; and if I am not gifted to edify, I want that they may not find in me a stubborn, unyielding heart. Years ago they took me in, a poor beggar, and have watched over me, and covered up my many faults. I have been with them in all their troubles, and I choose rather to suffer with them in their afflictions than to partake with others who were wont to destroy the peace of Zion. I feel to hope that the Lord will still keep me as in days past, in the fellowship of his saints here, and at the end of my journey allotted here still keep me, that I may fear no evil while passing over the valley of the shadow of death; and then, if consistent with his will, may my stammering tongue be loosed to praise his name forever.

Dear brethren, I often see in the SIGNS many complaints from the little ones that they are afraid to write, for fear they will say something they ought not. Now, my mind is that they are the ones the saints are not afraid of. Such ones do not tack the trough so high but what the little lambs can get a morsel now and then; and then how happy they feel. There is such a thing in the feeding of sheep that the trough is tacked a little too high; yet the food is the same. The care of the lambs is as much demanded as the sheep. The charge was given for both. Do not undertake to change the food, nor mix it. It is best as it is. When dealing out election, it is not healthful if mixed with that stuff called conditions. And when it is predestination, let it be clear and not adulterated. Let it embrace all things, and not a part. These things I mention, not that you have shunned to declare them, but that I may be understood by the timid little ones. Though they may not be able to reach to the full height, yet if they will but tell what the Lord has done for them I have no fears but that it will cover the ground, and none can tell any more. So, dear little ones, tell us of all your sorrows and joys, and we will weep with you who weep, and rejoice with you who rejoice. The poor sinner who pens these lines has made this blundering effort to call you out, that he might shake hands with you by way of an introduction, and that you may be sure we are in company, even if our bodies are separated. To all the household of faith I present a happy greeting in the Lord, and subscribe myself your little brother,

ELI T. KIDWELL.

SOUTH WESTERLO, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I will send you a few lines to let you know that my unprofitable life is still spared, the same poor, blind sinner. I have been deprived of my eyesight for the last three and a half years, and mostly confined to my room and bed, with the infirmity of old age. I cannot tell any one how lonesome it seems to be in the dark year after year. I know it is all right. The dear Lord knows what I need.

"My times of sorrow and of joy,
Great God, are in thy hand;
My choicest comforts come from thee,
And go at thy command."

I feel that I have great reason to be thankful for the goodness and mercy of the Lord. My mind is often carried back to some of the precious seasons I have enjoyed in meeting with the dear brethren and sisters, and hearing the dear servants of the Lord preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. The last sermon I heard preached was by Elder Whitcomb, nine years ago. That will not be forgotten while life and memory remain. I was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable. My kind friends have read the last volume of the SIGNS to me. I have been much comforted by the able editorials and the rich communications of the dear brethren and sisters. If I am not mistaken I have traveled the same road and can witness to their joys and sorrows, mostly the latter. I will inclose two dollars for the SIGNS another year.

I will close with much love to you and all the readers of the SIGNS.

Your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life,

RUTH A. ELMENDORF.

OWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have copied some lines which to me seem restful and quieting to those who are bearing heavy burdens in life, and are longing to be clothed upon with their house which is from heaven, to be satisfied; for it is a blessed truth that Zion's hungering and thirsting souls shall be filled. Their thirst, which is often appeased during their spiritual pilgrimage, shall be forever quenched; they shall no longer hunger, neither shall they thirst any more. They shall be satisfied, when they awake, with his likeness. Their groanings shall be forever hushed; and untroubled rest shall take the place of dissatisfied murmurings and grievous heartaches.

If it seems best to you, at your convenience you may publish the lines.

"The home where changes never come,
Nor pain nor sorrow, toil nor care.
Yes, 'tis a bright and blessed home;
Who would not fain be resting there?"

"Yet when bow'd down beneath the load
By heaven allowed thine earthly lot,
Thou yearn'st to reach that blest abode,
Wait, meekly wait, and murmur not.

"If in thy path some thorns are found,
O think who bore them on his brow!
If grief thy sorrowing heart has found,
It reached a holier than thou.

"Toil on, nor deem, though sore it be,
One sigh unheard, one prayer forgot.
The day of rest will dawn for thee;
Wait, meekly wait, and murmur not."

Yours in the fellowship of the gospel,

W. A. BEARD.

MACOMB, Ill., May 9, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Allow me through the SIGNS to express my christian love and greeting to the dear brethren and sisters who shall be permitted to meet at your several associations soon in the east. I greatly desire to meet with them again, but I am very lame with rheumatism, and walk with difficulty; yet I am able to attend my regular appointments. The 14th of June will be my seventy-ninth birthday, if I shall be allowed to live till then. May the Lord bless Zion with peace, love and unity, is the prayer of a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

I. N. VANMETER.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers: but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it. Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life April 6th, 1894, at Dunraven, Delaware Co., N. Y., Mrs. Charity Vermilyea, after a long illness of chronic consumption, aged 66 years.

Sister Vermilyea was baptized in the fellowship of the Second Old School Baptist Church of Roxbury many years ago, and left this world of sorrow and woe rejoicing in the God of her salvation. On account of poor health, and a feeling of unworthiness and loneliness in her widowed condition, she was not privileged to enjoy the association of the saints.

She has left a number of children and step-children, with other relatives, as well as the church, to mourn, whose loss, we trust, is gain to her. May the Lord comfort the mourning ones.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

OUR yearly meeting at the New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., will be held, if the Lord will, on the third Sunday in June, commencing on Friday afternoon at five o'clock.

The friends of Jesus, the only hope of lost sinners, are invited to meet with us. We have the promise of some able brethren in the ministry to be with us.

I. N. VANMETER, Pastor.

THE Old School Baptist Church of Middleburgh has appointed her yearly meeting to be held on the first Saturday and Sunday in June (2d and 3d).

A cordial invitation is given to ministers, brethren and friends, and we hope that all who can will come.

By order of the church.

ADDIE COOK, Clerk.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THERE will be a three days meeting held at the Davis school-house, beginning on Friday before the fourth Sunday in July, 1894.

We would like to see as many Baptists as feel like visiting us come and join with us in singing and offering prayer and supplication to the Lord of lords and King of kings.

This meeting will be held fifteen miles east of Purcell, Ind. Ter., and nine miles south of Burnett, near the head of Pan Creek, in Cleveland Co., Oklahoma.

POETRY.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

O how the thought delights my soul,
Redeemed from Satan's dire control,
And cleansed with Jesus' blood;
That thus from sin and death made free,
He may in Christ shout victory,
And triumph in his God.

And art thou safe, O soul of mine?
Art thou in Christ through grace divine?
Hast thou the proof within?
Thanks to my God, the stream of love
Has reached my heart from his above,
And borne away my sin.

In Christ! O how the blissful thought
Buys up the hope his love hath wrought
Midst change and grief and woe!
Were crowns and empires mine to-day
I'd freely give the whole away—
For Christ I'd all forego.

Ere time began the church was bless'd,
For her Jehovah love possess'd
From vast eternity!
Redemption, calling, pardon, peace,
Are streams which flow from ancient
grace,
Unmerited and free.

Go, trace salvation from its source;
From God it flows, mark well its course,
The whole his love sets forth!
Love brought the Savior from the skies,
Love quickens, keeps and glorifies,
And who can speak its worth?

Could blades of grass, and leaves of trees,
And every wave, and every breeze,
Ten thousand tongues employ;
Could suns and moons and stars essay
To warble out the glorious lay
In universal joy:

E'en were they joined with heavenly choirs
In notes attuned to golden lyres,
The whole would try in vain!
Not wind, nor skies, nor earth, nor sea,
With heaven's bright hosts in harmony,
Could reach the boundless strain!

O then may I, so weak, so frail,
Attempt that song which all must fail
To sing in worthy lays?
Our gracious God does not despise
The lisping voice and lowly cries
Which babes and sucklings raise.

I'll sing, In Christ I've naught to fear
If pierced at once with Death's dread spear;
'Tis dipp'd in blood divine!
His aspect may the guilty soul
With terrors and despair appall,
But life, through death, is mine.

What though a sudden blast descend,
And all the bands of nature rend,
Swift as with forked fire?
I take my flight from sin's abode,
A moment brings me to my God,
My soul's supreme desire.

Then watch, my soul, thy Lord will come,
And in his arms convey thee home;
Watch thou, and praise and pray!
With well-trimmed lamp and burning light
Wait for thy Lord; earth's passing night
Will bring thee endless day!

J. JACKS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRAMER, Ill., Feb. 1, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I feel like trying to communicate with you, and with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, who are the called according to his purpose; being called with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. We read that those who feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. Had I the pen of a ready writer I would love to write to all the dear and loved ones of like precious faith who have so often spoken comfortingly to me through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It has been food to my poor and needy soul, when cast down with many doubts, realizing that I am poor and needy; when for many days I have seemed cast upon the sea, seeing neither sun, moon or stars. But when I peruse the SIGNS I find that many dear ones testify to the same experience, and I seem to rejoice that I am not alone. Then springs up a love in my heart for them, and I feel that these trials are all for our good. Thus I feel that I can claim fellowship with them, and feel a love that those who have not been quickened into life know nothing about. These are kindred spirits, taught by the same heavenly Teacher. These know something about the new covenant, wherein it is declared, "They shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest." Their sins and iniquities he will remember no more. He will be to them a God, and they shall be to him a people. God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in their hearts. These realize that they are sinners; and Jesus came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. These are they who do repent every day of their lives. These are they who are of a broken heart and contrite spirit. The promise to these is that they shall not be turned empty away. Many who profess to be followers of Jesus think it very strange indeed when we talk about feeling ourselves poor sinners. I would say to all such, When the Lord opens your heart, if he ever does, you will see your nakedness before him, and will not then say, "If God does not save me, or give me a chance, he is unjust;" but you will rather say, "If he sends me to hell he is just." Poor sinner, where art thou? When God shall thus call to you, then, like Adam and Eve, you will begin to try to hide your nakedness, as they tried to hide their nakedness by sewing fig leaves together. But that flaming sword of God's just and righteous law points every way, to keep the way of the tree of life, so that the poor soul can see no way of escape. Sin revives. There was a time when they did not feel so; but now the hour has come when the dead hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. This is God's work with the poor sinner. It is he alone that can give them eternal life; and he manifests it at his own time. When a poor sinner is brought to the end of the law, when he sees no way of escape, and feels that he must perish, and that God is just, then Jesus manifests himself as the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. I often think of Joseph and his brethren, before he made himself known to them. O how guilty they felt when they remembered the anguish of their brother when they evil entreated him. Now their sins were brought home to them. But when he said to them, "I am Joseph your brother," what an unexpected revelation! We see now what was in store for them, even the best of the land, without money and without price. Does not this look like salvation by grace? God was in it. They had not to furnish money to buy bread. But the Egyptians had to pay for all they got, even to the selling of themselves. Why did not those Egyptians have a choice of the best of the land? It seems to me there is such a beauty in God's sovereign predestination, election and power. I feel to praise him, and say, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints!" He does his pleasure in heaven and earth, and will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. He said to Moses, "Go unto Pharaoh and say, Thus saith the Lord God of the Hebrews, Let my people go." Yet the Lord said he would harden the heart of Pharaoh, that he would not let them go, and that he would bring them out with a high and hand and an outstretched arm; and his promise did not fail. They were brought to the Red Sea, where the Lord by the mouth of Moses commanded them to stand still. Here is some heart-felt experience. Now they felt they must perish; but the power of Almighty God was there to deliver his people, as he ever is with his people. He made a way of escape when he drove back the waves of the sea, so that his people passed over dry shod. Why did not God deliver the Egyptians? He destroyed them, but had respect to his chosen. What a glorious song they sung after God had delivered them. Yes, every poor sinner sings the same sweet song when God delivers them. The apostle says, "Who hath delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver; in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us." The word of the Lord stands sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. He knows them wherever they are scattered in the dark and cloudy day.

Brethren, I have penned these thoughts to satisfy my mind. I feel that they come far short of what I would like. I have not written what I thought to when I commenced. I have been reading many of the old volumes of the SIGNS this winter. O how few of the names of the old writers now appear in its columns. Many of them have received their discharge and entered into the joys of their Lord. Also, I see the names of some who were very highly esteemed, but who have left our ranks. I hope and believe they are children of God, but it seems they have become bewitched. It is a trial to us, but in it we see the Scriptures fulfilled, that even of our own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. The people of God are all sinners of Adam's race. In Adam they were captivated by the enemy, and Christ Jesus has redeemed them, even before many of them were manifested in the flesh. Jesus is their life. Their life is hid with Christ in God. Jesus came where they were, under the law, and bore their sins in his own body. He condemned sin in the flesh. All that are born of God have Christ in them the hope of glory, and that condemns sin in them. In this sinful body we groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. It was sinners that Jesus came to save and to give eternal life. This mortal body shall be changed, and fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. Yes, I believe it is so. It is I, a sinner, that has eternal life in Christ. Eternal life has never sinned, and needs no redemption. All I know about this is what I have felt. I feel that I have no hatred toward any one because of their opinions. Nothing but truth can do us good. Truth will stand when all error must fall. The man of sin must be revealed in his time, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all signs and lying wonders. But, brethren, God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, that you should be holy and without blame before him in love. He hath predestinated you unto the adoption of children. He hath saved you, and called you with a holy calling, not according to your works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given you in Christ before the world began. All that the Father gave to Jesus shall come to him; but no man can come to him except the Father draw him. His sheep shall hear his voice, and shall be made willing in the day of his power. When he begins a good work he is able and will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Our God is in one mind, and none can turn him. He rules and reigns a Sovereign, and never tries to do anything. He has fixed all the trials of his children, as in the case of Job. God said to Satan, "All that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand." So far can Satan go, but no farther. God is able to destroy all opposition to himself, and will do it when the last vessel of mercy is brought in by reigning grace. I have no fear of any of his children being lost. His eye, which never slumbers nor sleeps, is ever over them. A mother may forget the child she bare, but God will never forget his children. They are graven on the palms of his hands, and are as the apple of his eye. He loved them even when they were dead in sin. He has washed them, and they are his undefiled, without spot, clothed with his righteousness, and not their own. Jesus is the head, and they are his body. The Head suffered the penalty of the law, therefore the law was satisfied, and the body stands justified. Jesus did not come to destroy the law, but to satisfy it and fulfill it; so the lawful captive is delivered. This is my hope for time and eternity.

Now unto him who is able to keep us from all error, and to present us faultless before his throne, to him be all glory now and forever. Amen.

FORT BRANCH, Ind., Feb. 8, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you an article on the subject of the liberty of saints. If you think it worthy of publication you may use it. While I know and realize my weakness and ignorance of spiritual things, yet I do not feel satisfied unless I write the thoughts that present themselves to my mind. Very often I write them, and afterwards destroy what I have written. I am well aware of this one fact, that no one can know or give the true spiritual meaning of any inspired sentence unless he is in possession of the same Spirit that first indited it. The mind of Christ has always been the same, and always will be; therefore whatever was intended by the Spirit to be conveyed by the word, its meaning is the same to-day.

I believe the word liberty is first mentioned in Leviticus xxv. 10. "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," &c. I understand this was given to Israel as a law or command of rest to their land, as well as a time of rejoicing; and in this time set apart they were not to oppress their brethren in any way. If they were in debt, or under bondage as servants, or in any manner, at the time of this proclamation of liberty, they and all their possessions were to be absolutely free from all contracts, obligations or bondage. They were forbidden to sell their possessions or inheritance without allowing for the redemption of the same in the appointed year of jubilee, when it was to go back to the first possessor. They were absolutely set free from all things except the commandment of the Lord. This liberty did not free them to do as they pleased regardless of their King's command. It freed them from all things contrary to his published will. If they asked what they should eat, seeing they were not allowed to sow nor reap their land or vineyards, and were forbidden to eat anything growing of itself, they were told to live of the things which God had given and prepared for them, and not the things produced by their own work. He told them he would give them an increase of the fruit of the land previous to the time of rest, or liberty, sufficient for their need, to supply them during the time of rest. Their God had provided meat to sustain them, before the day of liberty had come. They could not claim that they had any part in the production of the increase of the the fruit of the land to sustain their lives during the days of jubilee. All that was required of them was to keep his commandments, rejoice and be glad, glorifying the Lord for his great mercy manifested to them in their freedom from bondage.

Liberty is spoken of in different portions of the Scriptures, and in most places means freedom from bondage, prison or confinement. Isaiah in his prophecy (lxi. 1) concerning Jesus says, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." And Jesus testifies (Luke iv. 18) that this prophecy of Isaiah is fulfilled in their ears. Jesus is the Lawgiver, Judge, King and Priest of all, and the proclaimer of this liberty, and in him alone is embodied all things necessary to the salvation of those subjects of liberty. Those possessed of Christ's Spirit are free from all bondage. They are under no legal obligations or servitude; for Paul says, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Jesus said, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." The commandments given to Israel under the law were carnal ordinances and bondage, from which the children of God are set free, and are at liberty in Christ. It appears to me that when one can realize through the Spirit of Christ the sound of the trumpet of liberty, it most certainly is to him a time of jubilee or rejoicing, feeling a perfect confidence that his possession or inheritance is sure to him, and that the possessor of such liberty cannot be sold or destroyed. He who has created all things has promised that he will never leave nor forsake his people. This liberty was provided for them in their King before the foundation of the world, and he says they shall never perish. They are saved with an everlasting salvation. Their life is hid with Christ in God; and when he shall appear, they shall also appear with him in glory. Nevertheless while in the flesh they are subject to bondage and corruption, going astray after the flesh, like Israel of old, yet there is a time looked for by all the saints when all things that offend shall be separated from them, and the full possession of eternity will be granted them. In that jubilee or liberty there will be no such thing as bondage any more. They will then be free from all offenses and persecution; but while in the flesh they may look for such things, and have all these things to encounter, in their own carnal nature as well as in others. Paul tells the Galatian brethren, "Ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another."—Gal. v. 13. If a church or an individual member persecutes or burdens unnecessarily another, or refuses to forgive those who ask forgiveness, the Lord will judge them. Vengeance belongeth unto him, and he will repay. The Savior said, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Let us not use liberty for a cloak, thinking because we are free we can go on in malicious practices. James says, "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James i. 25. The work the christian is to do is simply that which the Savior has commanded, and to do nothing that he has not commanded. The apostle exhorts the Galatians to "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." We must refrain from partaking of things growing of themselves; in other words, the commandments of men, which they claim the child of God must do in order to inherit the blessing of God, even eternal life. The christian's experience is just the reverse; for he lives by the faith of the Son of God, after the pattern of the Israelites of old, who ate of the increase of the fruit of the land given, and provided for them before the time of rejoicing came. So the saints live upon the righteousness of Christ, who was as a Lamb slain for the sins of his people from the foundation of the world. Therefore they labor to honor and glorify the God of heaven and earth for granting to them so great and gracious a favor as the gift of his only begotten Son, that they might through him be holy and without blame, and walk in the liberty wherewith he has made them free, which is in Jesus alone, and in whom alone dwells immortality. He is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords. He is the giver of all liberty, and he says he will save us. Let us put off the old man, and live to him that died for us. He has left his will on record for our guidance, and comforts us by his Spirit. So let us walk in the way, and honor and glorify our Father in heaven.

N. TOMLINSON.

WOODBURY, Ga., Jan. 24, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Trusting that the love of God may be shed abroad in our hearts, and that the blessed spirit of forgiveness and forbearance may by the great goodness and mercy of the Lord inspire the hearts of each of us, I proceed in fear and trembling to present a small offering, having the blessed assurance that the altar on which I hope to lay my gift has a sanctifying power sufficient to make even two mites acceptable in the sight of God, even more than all that was cast in of abundance. Five loaves and two fishes, by the breaking and blessing of Jesus, were thereby sanctified and became enough to feed the multitude of five thousand, so that twelve basketfuls of fragments remained. I have felt inclined to write to you a few thoughts which I trust the Lord has sanctified to my comfort and spiritual good; the which, after you examine, dispose of at your pleasure, and all will be well.

In Rev. ii. 4 we find this language, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." We notice that "these things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks." It is addressed "unto the angel of the church of Ephesus," one of the seven churches of Asia, a church of Christ, a people taught of the Lord. They were, as we are now, sinners saved by grace, tabernacling in the vail of flesh, and subject to temptations, trials, and every form of christian tribulation. They were, as we are, "by nature the children of wrath, even as others;" who once were "without hope, and without God in the world." They, as we, after being found in a waste howling wilderness, were led about and instructed, and made a willing people in the day of God's power. We were made to behold Christ as the Savior of sinners, for which we give glory to his holy name. Having tasted the good word of God, and powers of the world to come, we rejoiced in him who is "the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely." Then we received that glorious manifestation, the love of God shed abroad in our heart, which made us triumphantly exclaim, as did Paul, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." Then did we, having tasted that the Lord is gracious, and having our feet taken from the miry clay, and placed upon a rock, sing a new song which the Lord put in our heart, even praise to his name. Call to remembrance, dear brethren, those sweet memories of the past. O the depth of love and gratitude to our Savior, which is inexpressible and full of glory. Our cry then was, Draw me, and I will run after thee. O what a precious Savior we had found, and O how we loved him and his cause. We felt that Jesus had done great things for us, whereof we were glad. O the blessedness of that peace which passeth understanding! In the faces of the dear children of God the image of Jesus was then plainly seen.

In my weak way I have set forth some of the loveliness of that "first love," from which the Ephesian saints had departed, and which I, through the weakness of the flesh, have left. The Lord have mercy on me. "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." The good that I would, I do not. To will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. Now, dearly beloved, Jesus is our Savior to-day, as he was when that still small voice acquainted us of the excellency of that glorious gospel, that wonderful salvation which takes aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, and makes them fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." He has loved us with an everlasting love, and crowned us with loving-kindness. He is a present help in every time of need. He never leaves nor forsakes us. He never suffers his faithfulness to fail. He says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John xv. 12-14. O the sacred value of that "first love!" By it we are strengthened and established, and forbear one another in love, and bear each other's burdens, and lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. That love worketh no ill to his neighbor; but when its possessor is trespassed against seventy times seven times, he is ready to forgive when repentance is manifested. It will bless, and curse not. It will instruct those that oppose themselves. It will turn the left cheek when the right one is smitten. And what can I say more? for time would fail me to tell of all the fruits of this "first love," from righteous Abel down to the present time, which all is through faith, and therefore is acceptable in the sight of the Lord. Let us therefore examine ourselves whether we be in the faith. But without faith it is impossible to please God. Against the fruit of the Spirit there is no law. Let us give heed to him that speaketh from heaven. "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?"—Heb. ii. 2, 3. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. xv. 58.

Dear brethren, if this comes under your notice, will you not for a moment pause, and in the spirit of that "first love" ask the Lord to be merciful to me, a sinner, and that I by the grace of God may present my body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is my reasonable service? For I hope I love him, because he first loved me.

Yours in hope,

MORGAN BROWN.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—ESTEEMED BRETHREN FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:—I feel a desire from some cause, I know not what, to write a few lines for the dear old SIGNS upon the important subject of the care of oxen, hoping that what I may write may be directed by the Spirit of the great I Am; and if so directed I know it will be instructive to God's children, and perhaps a comfort to some poor, care-worn and forsaken old ox. I know, if thus directed, it will redound to the honor and glory of the great and matchless name of God. I humbly trust that no other motive than that of honoring his name and comforting and instructing his dear children prompts me to thus write.

The inspired apostle, in writing to the Corinthians on this subject, referred them to the law of Moses, which says, "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn." The ox is a well-known domestic animal, clean by the Levitical law. He is strong and patient of labor. He formed a large item of the wealth of the patriarchs. It is not so much, however, the use, value and abuse of the domestic animal that I wish to speak of, only in a representative sense, his use, value and abuse being in a great measure characteristic of the use, value and abuse of the humble gospel minister. The ox is not very fleet, and consequently is of little or no value to those who desire to travel in accordance with the fast age of the world; but how useful he is when we desire a load moved. The fat, prancing horse, that makes such a nice show, will not generally pull, and consequently we have to call on the ox; and he, seemingly with the patience of Job, when called upon exerts the utmost of his ability to move the burden, perhaps getting down on his knees, and groaning and moaning beneath his burden. Although whipped and cuffed, and abused in every conceivable manner, he seldom fails to pull; and oftentimes after pulling all day, and perhaps part of the night, and receiving an inconceivable amount of abuse, he arrives at his master's crib, or near by it at least, for Isaiah says, "The ox knoweth his owner." Now what awaits him? Plenty to eat and a good shelter is what he deserves; but alas! how often he fails to get it. He is perhaps turned out in a dry pasture, to graze upon sand and rocks until needed again. Peradventure they may, if it is convenient, throw him a few shucks or rotten fodder, and tell him to eat until he is satisfied. An ox thus treated will not last long. Now, brethren, if any of you have oxen, let me implore you not to thus treat them. But how often have you known the humble gospel minister to be similarly treated! Perhaps some one will surmise that I feel that I am a neglected ox. I have not said that, neither do I say it; indeed, I have ever doubted as to whether I was a minister at all. That is, I often tell the brethren to be judges, and not myself. But I can truthfully say that many of God's humble ministers are neglected by the brethren; perhaps not intentionally, but unthoughtfully, and I write to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. I think the pastors of churches are more generally neglected than traveling ministers. This ought not so to be. If you show any preference, let it be shown to your pastor. It is very nice and commendable to treat your neighbor's ox well, feed and shelter him; but how would you feel to have him thus cared for, and your poor old ox, that has labored for you day after day, standing out in the cold rain, without any or perhaps very little feed? I imagine that many poor oxen thus treated have looked through the cracks of their stall with a moan and a groan which seemed to say, O that I were my neighbor's ox. Sometimes it is the case that we would like for our ox to make a nice show. Perhaps some grand occasion is on hand, and we expect a great many out to see our ox perform; but knowing that our ox is a little weather-beaten and thin, having had the hollow horn, caused perhaps by our neglect, we get our neighbor's ox, knowing that he is fat and strong, and a graceful mover. Again our old ox has to stand aside, and moan and groan over his condition. But by and by our borrowed ox has to go home, our traveling preacher is gone, our feast of fat things is consumed, and we will now have to go and look up our own old ox. He is now weak and care-worn, feels perhaps that his services are not appreciated, but nevertheless he has to try to pull through as best he can. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to helping our traveling brethren, but I am only pleading for the ox that is at home treading out the corn. He is the one who has to bear the burden of tending the flock through heat and cold, through adversity as well as prosperity; and Paul says that he who feedeth a flock has the right to eat the milk thereof. Again, "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof?" My humble judgment is that whenever we suffer our ministers to go a warfare at their own charges, or to feed a flock and not eat the milk thereof, or plant a vineyard and not eat the fruit thereof, we are then muzzling the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn; and it was for our sakes, says Paul, that this Scripture was written, that he who plougheth should plough in hope. If we receive of our ministers spiritual things, is it a great thing if they reap our carnal things?

In conclusion, I will again repeat that I do not feel to be a muzzled ox, but I trust that I rejoice in the Lord greatly that the care of the brethren for me hath flourished to some extent; and I trust that I have learned, in whatever state I am, to be therewith content. I know how to be abased, and I know how to abound. I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry; both to abound and to suffer need. Should this scribble find its way into the columns of the SIGNS I may perhaps write more on this subject in the future.

Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God

WEARY ONES.

To the wisdom of the natural mind it must ever be a mystery why infinite love chose the special objects of divine grace to suffer affliction and tribulation in all their sojourn in this polluted world. Even their own thoughts often question the reality of that word of assurance on which the Lord has caused them to hope in his salvation. Indeed, they find more trouble in their own accusing reflections than in all the assaults of outward adversaries. This is the experience of those patriarchs and prophets who are presented as patterns for the guidance of such as are called to follow them in the way of holiness. Reason could find nothing to sustain the hope of Abel when he was slain by the hand of Cain. So far as was manifest to the natural mind, the malice of his murderer had triumphed, and the voice of faith in him was silenced forever, when his blood was heard crying unto God from the ground. But by faith he being dead yet speaketh.—Heb. xi. 4. So, through all the long line of those ancient wanderers whose faith shines in the heaven of revealed glory, where they are established as stars for the encouragement of the saints in all ages. The chosen vessels of divine mercy have ever been afflicted and poor. This has not been merely a theoretic and imaginary suffering; nor has it been poverty which could be relieved by a liberal outlay of the wealth of earthly treasures. With all the resources of the kingdom of Israel at his command, David could say in truth, "I am poor and needy." Such as know this destitution cannot rest in their poverty. They are driven by necessity to seek a more satisfactory condition. In this effort they are subjected to continual weariness. Not only does this result from their earnest labor in seeking to improve their condition, but even in their involuntary groaning they suffer much weariness as is unknown to any others. So Job complains, "My soul is weary of my life; I will leave my complaint upon myself; I will speak in the bitterness of my soul." Such weariness is never felt by those who are able to find in themselves the righteousness in which they can trust for acceptance in the sight of God. While such characters are indeed ever toiling, they are confident of such ample compensation for their services in the world of glory that they never doubt the possession of infinite wealth in their own right, and that they are justly entitled to all the rest they wish whenever it suits their inclination to enjoy it. To them the complaint of the afflicted saints, like the groaning of the Israelites to the judgment of their taskmasters, can signify nothing but that the complaining ones are idle. Their remedy consists in binding heavier burdens upon the weary ones, and in breaking their bones with reproaches.

In the abundance of his mercy and grace the Redeemer of Israel has made provision for the relief of all such destitute and weary mourners, who abhor themselves as unworthy to receive his favor. He says, "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary."—Isa. l. 4. With divine melody that gracious word sounds in the gospel of salvation as Jesus says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Never did such a word of peaceful rest fall from the lips of any created being, and never was such infinite love and mercy heard by perishing sinner. All guilt is swept away by the joyful sound; and the sinner who confesses that he justly merits death and destruction, is translated by the omnipotence of that life giving word into the marvelous light and liberty of the kingdom of the Son of God. Yet the promise secures to the subjects of this grace the inheritance of sorrow and weariness in the present world. They must through much tribulation enter the kingdom.

To the weary one it is evidence that he never knew the love of God when he finds his heart full of sin and rebellion against the law of his mind. This peculiarity identifies them who have the Spirit of Christ. They love holiness and would do good continually and exclusively, but evil is present and iniquities prevail against them, so that they cannot do the things which they would. In their weakness and despondency they are unable to refute the accusation of their adversary, who is ever ready to challenge their hope. When he cites their inconsistent conduct as bearing witness against their professed love of holiness, they must acknowledge the justice of that charge. Then he follows up the advantage by denying their claim to that love for righteousness which is not found in their conduct and conversation. This seems a legitimate conclusion from their actions. Under this severe sifting they would certainly fall into despair if their dependence were in their own strength. But the mighty word of the Lord is their present help in this time of trouble. He gives the victory when their power is exhausted. None but the Captain of their salvation can give this wonderful deliverance. In vain may they be told by their brethren, and even read it in the inspired Scriptures, that these are the marks of the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ. They can no more be comforted by such words than they can gather strength from the wind. But when Jesus speaks it is a word fitly spoken, and is as apples of gold in pictures of silver. The efforts of loving brethren seem but to mock the distress they would relieve; but when the voice of the Beloved is heard, the very darkness immediately glows with infinite light and assurance. Then the sorrow of the mourner is turned into joy; it is not simply taken away and joy given instead of it, but the very grief which oppressed them is made to shine with divine assurance that they are followers of their suffering Lord. Then their weariness is made a joyful rest to their soul.

We cannot define the weariness of those who are the subjects of that consolation which is provided in the good word of the Lord more clearly than by quoting from a private letter from a young brother to whom it has been given to suffer much of the conflict by which the disciples of Jesus are identified. (See communication of "M." on page 174.) Doubtless many of our readers will be able to recognize their own experience in the bitter complaint which he has here recorded against the ground of his hope. The deep groaning of the prisoner gives clear evidence that he is partaker of the sufferings of him who cried out of the depth unto the Lord, and who was heard in that he feared. When the Lord shall appear for his deliverance out of the snare of unbelief, he will doubtless be able to rejoice in God as his present help and refuge. Until that victory shall be ministered unto him we can only assure him in the language of the apostle, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Cor. x. 13. Only as God makes this way to escape, can any sufferer be delivered in this wonderful way. The only way that finite reason could devise for escape would be to avoid bearing the temptation; but such is not the way which is ordained by the delivering grace of God. He will bring the remnant "through the fire," he will refine them in the crucible of tribulation, and purify them unto himself as his peculiar people. It is not until he hath tried them that they come forth as gold. But they are not more secure in the heaven of ultimate glory than while they are passing through the fires. May effectual grace sustain our brother through his conflict.

of love and peace shall be with you. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all.

A. H. WILLIAMSON.

IT IS GOD'S WORK.

"FOLLOW me." This was the Savior's command to his disciples, as he called them. It is thus he calls them still. This command was obeyed by them whom he called while in the days of his flesh, and it is still obeyed. No one can have any reason to boast on account of this obedience, nor claim any credit for it; but on the contrary it is cause for unbounded thankfulness and praise to God, for it is his own blessed work in us. "Twas all of his grace we were brought to obey."

To one of those who, in obedience to his call, had left all and followed him, he said on one occasion, "Whither I go thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards." This word to Peter (John xiii. 36) is shown in the thirty-third verse to include them all; and yet he said to them (xiv. 4), "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." Thomas disputed this, not yet knowing that this knowledge of that wonderful way is not in the natural mind, but is the knowledge of faith, and is in the experience of the child of God.

This following of Jesus, the dear Savior, is not a command to be taken into consideration by the one to whom it is given, and obeyed or disregarded according as he may decide to act upon it. When the Lord speaks to the lightnings they say, "Here we are."—Job xxxviii. 35. When Jesus said to Lazarus, who was in the grave, "Come forth," "he that was dead came forth." In each case we at once recognize all the power as being in the word of command. We cannot even say that in the case of Lazarus the power was in a life and a will that had just now been imparted to him, which he immediately put into exercise. The bonds upon his hands and feet, and the napkin covering his eyes, forbid the thought that even this much of the work was his. So neither is it by any power of his own, nor by his own employment of a power bestowed upon him, that the poor sinner rises from the death state of nature, comes forth from the darkness and bondage of the law, and follows Jesus. God does not merely work in him to will, and leave him to accomplish the work to which that holy will inclines him. That would leave him in a wretched state indeed, forever feeling his just condemnation, but never able to deliver himself from it; forever hungering for righteousness, but never satisfied. The gospel is a revelation of better things than that. It is the power of God all the way through—the power of God unto salvation. "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do."

"How strange is the course that a christian must steer." Could Peter have had the least thought that he was following Jesus when he failed in his attempt to approach to him on the water, and began to sink? Could it possibly have occurred to him that he was following his dear Lord and Master when his sweet, self-complacent feeling of self-confidence was rudely broken up, and he stood before himself as the vilest, wickedest, weakest, meanest creature in the world? Can any of us to-day have the comforting assurance that we are followers of that Holy One when we see ourselves as so vile that we cannot but loathe ourselves—so unholy, so corrupt, that if we undertake to stand upon any of our works before God, to rely for comfort upon anything we have thought or spoken or done, we are as one sinking in a horrible pit, in the miry clay? Yet did not the dear Savior sink down into the lowest hell under the terrible load of his people's sin and shame? To follow him is to go where he went. Each of his children must bear his measure of the sufferings of Christ, must drink of the cup he drank of, and be baptized with the baptism wherewith he was baptized. The road to heaven and eternal joy lies that way.

This is necessarily a bitter experience, a dark and thorny road. It is a being daily "delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh." We cannot be comforted while we are thus suffering shame and self-loathing on account of our sinful natures. We cannot get used to this suffering so as not to mind it. We cannot keep in mind that this is the christian's road, the way of life, so that the experience of bitterness becomes sweet at the time. We cannot arrange to make it anything less than death. We cannot make our brother who is groaning under the bondage of corruption to-day, and yielding to doubts and fears, remember yesterday's sweet assurance so as to resist the doubts of to-day. But when the Lord speaks, and in answer to our prayers to have the trouble removed says, "My grace is sufficient for you," then we cannot only rejoice again, but we can be reconciled to our bitter lot here, to be only a vile sinner, hating ourselves, because of the hope of final deliverance, and because of the present experience of the power of Christ resting upon us, delivering us even here from the power and dominion of sin. We can even glory in our infirmities, and rejoice in tribulation, because of this precious evidence that we are experiencing these dark and bitter things as followers of Jesus; and that as we are partakers of his sufferings we shall also be partakers of his joys. "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him."

At such times how we long to be enabled to deny ourselves, and take up our cross daily and follow the dear Savior. How we long and pray that self may be out of sight, and the old man be put off, and that the meek and lowly and unselfish Spirit of Christ may control and direct us in all things, so that our daily life may "be as becometh the gospel of Christ."

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., May 16, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The inclosed letter from sister Mary Parker belongs to all the brethren as well as to me, so I send it for publication in the SIGNS. It will give an understanding of her present painful condition of body, of her sad and lonely condition of mind, and of her resignation to the Lord's will, and her longing for the rest and peace of heaven, where she will dwell forever with the dear Savior, who has given her "everlasting consolation and good hope through grace." It will also answer the many inquiries that are continually made of me concerning her. May the Lord sustain and comfort her, and all such suffering ones, while they have yet to remain in this vale of tears.

The orders for her book have been very few for some time, and any attention which the sympathizing friends may be moved to continue to her will be timely. The Spirit of the Lord is always a sure and safe guide. May we all be directed by him, and be willing and obedient to his holy teachings.

Your brother in christian love,

SILAS H. DURAND.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, May 9, 1894.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—Your letter was very precious and comforting to me. How I felt to praise the Lord for his goodness and tender care of me in providing for my needs, when I saw the bank-check you were so good and kind as to send me. I have been very ill since I was moved, and my condition was of so grave a nature that I was obliged to have medical aid. My attendant physician desired assistance, and the fees of the two rendered my funds very low, and I felt troubled and perplexed, when your precious letter was handed me. I was not only quieted by the needed aid, but my soul was fed and comforted by your consoling words. O the goodness of our covenant-keeping God! How effectually it overshadows me, notwithstanding the terrible fears and doubts, the thick dark clouds that shut out the light of his blessed countenance, and the sore trials and afflictions which it is my lot to so long endure. How restful it is when, like the dear disciples amid the storm on the Galilean sea, we see nothing but the angry waves, the raging billows of our frail life's sea, we behold our blessed Savior walking amid the storm, and hear his dear voice say, "It is I; be not afraid." Yes, indeed, we find after all, notwithstanding we thought Jesus no longer near, no longer ready to help, to hear and answer our cry, that it is indeed he; and that this trial, affliction and trouble through which he causes our feet to go is but to try the strength of our love for him, and strengthen and build us up in faith and trust and belief in his dear name. It has long been a dark night-time with my soul. Ever since the death of my dear sister I have been filled not only with sorrow that she is no more, but my soul has been filled with a nameless unrest and indescribable longing to be loosed from the painful bands which bind me to earth, to join my loved ones on the sinless shores, to depart and be forever with Christ. So intense became this longing, so melancholy did I become, that my reason at times seemed to totter, and my afflictions never before seemed so unbearable. The fact that I can never again walk about or go on the beautiful green earth, inhaling the fragrance and bloom of sweet spring-time, listening to happy bird-notes, or enjoying the beauties that nature now scatters everywhere, never seemed half so hard to bear. Can there be another so sorely tried, or one who seems so nearly a useless lumberer of the ground? Then comes the cry, O that I could depart and be with Christ, that he would take me unto himself, where I might nestle near his side and praise him forevermore. Do I not long for this to a degree that makes it a sin? I fear so. O how have I prayed him to remove it if it be so; to take away the unrest and intense longing, if it be his will that I yet remain in the furnace awhile. This morning, when I opened to the fifth chapter of First Peter, reading the entire chapter with comfort and peace flowing into my soul, when I came to the seventh verse and read, "Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you," there came to me a feeling of quiet, a breathing as it were of light and peace and joy into my soul, as I have not felt for many weeks. Most precious to my soul seems this sweet portion of the word; and I think my heart is filled with thankfulness that our heavenly Father has left us the rich magazine of grace, wherein lies a hidden mine of such soul-cheering promises for the weary and heavy laden, a balm for the wounded, a panacea for all who are of a broken heart and a contrite spirit.

The consultation of physicians regarding my condition, of which I wrote you, resulted in them all giving up the idea of taking the dropsical effusion by artificial means. They decided to try to build up my system with tonics, and render me more comfortable. Whether it will result in even temporal good a little time alone can prove. They were frank to say that no permanent good could be attained. O! do pray for me, all of you; and may I have the prayers of the saints at large, is truly my desire. The association will soon convene at your place. May God be with you, and may it be a season of refreshing from our dear Lord. O how I would love to make one in your midst. How my hungry soul would feed on the rich food that is handed to them from the great Fountain source through the earthen vessels, or by the dear under-shepherds, whose feet shall come shod with the bounteous preparation of the gospel. Will you not remember me in dear love to those who are loved of the Lord, and who love Jesus? Surely I do love the Lord's dear people. Dear sister Bessie's last letter was very consoling to me, but I have not been able to write her nor any one. Dear sister Attie Curtis continues to cheer me with her "sweet song in Israel." Other lovely, consoling epistles have been sent me, which I have greatly enjoyed, and deeply regretted my inability to answer promptly. I would love to comply with your request to write a line for the SIGNS; but can it be that the dear ones would care to read it if I did? Can it be that any of the Lord's dear people who have never seen me, who know little of my condition, have love for me, a patience and sympathy for me in my long and sore affliction? O! if I but knew they do, gladly would I tell them something of my physical sufferings, and of my spiritual struggle, my doubts and fears, my joy and upliftings, after grappling long amid the raging billows of the mighty deep.

Please pardon the length of this letter, dear Elder Durand. The family are all out this afternoon. I am alone in my room, and write simply because I cannot stop, and to shake off the feeling of deep silence and loneliness. How lovely it would be to ride or walk forth amid the beauty and gladness of this perfect day in nature. How pure seems the air, how clear the sunlight, how glad and beautiful the whole earth, although I am only catching glimpses of its beauty through the windows. If I only had a wheel-chair, and could be moved to the door or window, or go out on the veranda, shaded as it is by the many branches of overhanging trees, how glorious it would be.

But I am quite exhausted. Give my best love to all the family, including yourself and the dear little ones. May God abundantly bless you with a feeling sense of his dear love, and abiding faith and belief in his tender watchcare over you all.

In deep affliction your unworthy sister in much christian love,

MARY PARKER.

SOUTH FALLSBURGH, N. Y., April, 1894.

MY DEAR ELDER JENKINS:—It is with the utmost reluctance that I begin this, and with great uncertainty if you will read it, or if it will be committed to the flames. I have long cherished the hope of some day being able to tell that little band of pilgrims at New Vernon the reason of my hope, and have waited more than ten years, and find it is utterly impossible for me to do it; so I have thought of writing a few of my early exercises, and ask you to read them on the next church meeting day; but it is with great hesitancy that I undertake it. It is not because I am naturally bashful, for there is, I dare say, no other subject but I could easily tell them all I know about it. I can readily talk on any other subject that I know anything about; but when it comes to speaking on this all-important theme it seems I am not equal to it, and of my experience and myself I am filled with much fearing and trembling, and am made to realize my ignorance and nothingness in such a manner that it is simply impossible for me to say a word. If this does reach you I beg you to use your better judgment in regard to reading it to the church. If I had been able to tell anything when I came to the church, or at any time since, I would not have undertaken this surely. Should you think best not to read it, do not think it will hurt my feelings. I know you will act honestly in the matter.

It is now ten years since I have had a name and place with you there; but what does that amount to in the eyes of him with whom we have to do, if I have no part nor lot in that inheritance which fadeth not away?

I was very young when I first had serious impressions, and have spent many hours trying to think of God, his omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience, &c., until it seemed I would lose my mind. I had great fears in regard to my eternal welfare, but set myself to work in the natural way to try to gain the favor of God by my good works. I would lie awake nights trying to think how I would guard every word and action the following day, and the following night would weep over my failure in not doing the deeds of the law. Thus I tried day after day and year after year, until I trust I was made to see my best works as filthy rags in the sight of God. I finally came to know that I could do nothing, and awoke to the knowledge of being a condemned sinner in the eyes of the Lord. I cannot tell you what I endured. Such a fear of hell, it seems to me, no mortal could have suffered more from. I wished myself in the place of every bird or beast that my eyes rested on. I had read in my school-book, "There is a spirit in man that can never die." I became very melancholy, and seemed to grow worse, until I was afraid to sleep, lest I should awake in torment. I felt just as sure of being engulfed in the hell which the Methodists picture as I was of death itself. After one night of severe mental suffering it dawned upon me that I could not go there except it were God's will. Before that I had felt that the Lord had left me to Satan entirely, and had forgotten, as it were, that I existed; but it now appeared to me that it was God instead of the devil that was ruling my destiny, and that he (God) would even temper the agony that was in store for me. O! the peaceful feeling which came with that thought I cannot describe; and that dreadful fear of hell I never had afterward. That was when I was not far from ten years old. I had not then the slightest thought of it being a work of grace, if indeed it were. I thought that to be a christian one had to pass through some wonderful change, that would not only change the heart, but the flesh, with the natural inclinations. I had no idea at that time that God's children were so tormented with sin and folly, doubts and fears. The christian's warfare was wholly unknown to me then, so of course I had no hope whatever; and feeling my just condemnation, I knew many gloomy hours. The only thought that kept me from utter despair, seemingly, was that God rules, and that "If my soul were sent to hell,

His righteous law approved it well."

And I often felt that I could trust him, and I believe I loved his holy name even when I had no assurance of being one of his children. I lived in that state of mind for years. After I had been convinced that man could not save himself, and that the religion I was surrounded with was false, contrary as it was to my natural feelings to have it so, I would yet go and hear them, thinking perhaps I was mistaken; and every time I heard them, the more firmly I was convinced it was from the head instead of the heart. I longed to live free from sin, and to do that which I believed was right in the sight of God, even after I could not trust in works of righteousness that I could do for salvation. After several years I was visiting near New Vernon. I always seemed to like to hear the Old School Baptists preach. I loved to hear them ascribe praise to God, and speak of his wisdom, power and goodness, and of Christ's suffering, and his people's finished salvation, though I did dislike to have any one know that I went to hear them. I thought, O if I could only go, and no one know it. I was afraid they would think that I thought I was a christian, when I felt sure I was not. But at the time I allude to, Elder Gilbert Beebe preached, and I never shall forget that sermon. I felt that he was talking expressly to me, although we were not in the least acquainted. He said if one had been led thus and so, it was an evidence they were a child of God. He seemed to tell the exact way I had been led, although I had never mentioned my troubles to any one. I was astonished to hear him, and it seemed that hope at once sprang up in my heart, in spite of every effort I could put forth to think that it must all be a mistake; and that hope, I believe, has never been wholly obliterated from that day to this, though many times in my weakness I have presumed it was gone; and if it has been the work of God, I believe that same hope will never utterly leave me until I behold his face in righteousness. At times it has been the joy of my life, and again the thought of my sinfulness and ignorance in connection with it has almost driven me to despair; but when I lose sight of self, and only behold the finished salvation, the blood of the Lamb that was slain to redeem his elect people, and with the assurance it was able to reach and cleanse the vilest sinner, that hope revives, and I am made to rejoice in that glorious plan. In much weakness,

MARY. M. DUTCHER.

MAY 1, 1894.

DEAR ELDER BEEBE:—I am about as tired in body and mind now as I ever expect to be, and live. I am tired of pretty much everything, but most of all tired of myself. If it were not for natural ties of affection I think I would be content to see the end of time. Life is not worth the living, it seems to me, apart from an active feeling of interest in spiritual things, and it is not my portion to be thus interested. I wonder sometimes that I do not awake in horror at my condition of indifference, coldness, and growing deadness of feeling; but I do not. The Bible is a sealed book to me. If I open it I find nothing there written for my comfort: it is meant for others, but not for me. I feel that I am a fool for following after God's people, for I have no right to be named with them; and why I continue to follow after them, feeling as I do, is a mystery I cannot fathom.

It is very kind and loving of you all so repeatedly to assure me of your brotherly regard; but I wish very often such expressions were left unsaid, for they hurt me in remembering that I am unworthy of the confidence you seem to have in me.

It seems so strange to me that while I am feelingly cold and indifferent concerning the things of the kingdom, yet I do not take a correspondingly lively interest in the things of the world. I find myself many times wishing I could throw my whole attention into matters which tend to worldly prosperity; but even that is denied me, for I do not seem to have any inclination that way. I am in a "don't know" place. I don't know that I have a good hope through grace. I am hoping for something perhaps; but what it is, it is hard to tell. Sometimes I fear it is a hope of annihilation; for I must confess that oftentimes "My soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life." Comfortable experience, isn't it? If I were able to tell just what exercise of mind I habitually travel in, I am afraid you would think twice before expressing yourself so confidently of fellowship for me.

The strongest evidence I have that I am experimentally ignorant of a good hope through grace, is that I am inconsistent in my conversation with those who are of fearful mind lest their own hope is a delusion. It has happened not only once, but scores of times, that I have tried to comfort some who testified to a like experience with my own, by attempting to show them how the testimony of Christ was confirmed in their experience, when I could not in examining myself feel any assurance that I knew whereof I spoke. I am inclined to think that a good deal of my conversation or talk springs from a natural disposition of liking to hear myself talk, and not from any experimental knowledge of the matter. I sometimes think it would be an evidence to me of a work of grace in me if my tongue were restrained from uttering things which I know nothing about. Some people say it is a comfort to know that our times are in the Lord's hands, and we cannot change them; but is it a comfort? I don't know. I very much fear I would change my times if I had the power to do so. It would be a time of singing of birds with me, if I could choose it. I would dwell in the house of the Lord forever, if my mind were satisfied. So you see I have not yet learned with what I have to be content; and if the last three years of my life is an index to what the future has in store for me, I very much fear I shall never realize contentment.

I did not mean to write in this strain when I began, but it is too late in the evening to begin another letter; and as you cannot think any less of me than I deserve, I will let it go.

I am unworthily (ought I to say it?) your brother in hope of eternal life,

M.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed "Until March," with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers: but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

MARRIAGES.

ON April 25th, 1894, at the residence of the bride's father, by Elder C. M. Cooper, Mr. Thomas E. Ring, of Cheney, Neb., son of Elder James H. Ring, and Miss Cicily Irwin, daughter of Elder Isaac Irwin, of Tecumseh, Neb.

By the same, at the home of the bride, on May 6th, 1894, Mr. Harvey Stahl and Miss Minnie McFarland, youngest daughter of Elder S. R. McFarland, both of Stanton Co., Neb.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At our home near Iron Hill, Md., May 1st, 1894, Minnie R. Frazier, beloved wife of Ephraim R. Frazier.

Minnie had been a sufferer from consumption for several years. She spent the summer with us last year; and although very weak when she came, she greatly improved, returning in the fall to her home in Wilmington, Del. The disease was slowly but surely gaining, and April found her weak and feeble. Her heart longed for our country home, and she thought with the bright sun and pure, fresh air she would again get back her lost strength. Only nine days went by, when she passed sweetly and gently away, to be forever with the Lord, as we trust. Minny was given rare virtue, and a sweet and gentle disposition, always speaking in charity of others. Six years had almost numbered her married life, years of true happiness. She said the greatest cross would be to give up her husband. She thought the Lord would give her dying grace when she had need of it. She manifested a childlike trust in God. May the Lord, who is ever good and kind, be very near to her husband, leading him by still waters and into green pastures, healing all his sorrows.

M. S. CAMPBELL.

IRON HILL, Md., May 23, 1894.

DIED—March 17th, 1894, brother Jefferson McKean, in his 78th year.

His complaint was called Bright's disease of the kidneys. He gradually went down for about two years, when death came to his relief, and he longed to go home. I had the privilege of visiting him several times in his sickness, and generally found him comfortable in mind. He was baptized a great many years ago, and united with a church in Steuben Co., N. Y. The little company of Old School Baptists near Shohola, Pike Co., Pa., received him into their number about two years ago, and his membership was placed in the church at New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y. He leaves a lonely and sad widow and one son, with many friends, to mourn; but we believe that eternal happiness is his to enjoy in all its fullness, where there is no past, no future, but one eternal now.

Brother Fred S. Brink, of Middletown,

N. Y., spoke very much to the comfort of the living on the funeral occasion. May the good Lord be very near to comfort the mourning ones in their sorrow.

D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, Pa.

By request I send for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the obituary of our dearly beloved sister, Nancy Tomlin, the widow of Elder Azariah Tomlin, aged 79 years, 7 months and 26 days.

She was born Feb. 5th, 1813, in Columbia Co., Ga., and was married to Azariah Tomlin Oct. 27th, 1831. In 1861 they moved to Arkansas. She was baptized in August, 1864. She was the mother of seven children, one son (the late Deacon W. L. Tomlin) and six daughters, and had quite a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She died at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. John Glossup, near Lacey, Ark. She was a most excellent woman, a generous and charitable neighbor, ever ready to administer to the needy and to relieve the afflicted as far as lay in her power. She was a kind and affectionate wife, and a true, zealous and careful mother. Her example of life is worthy to be imitated by all whom she has left behind. All who knew her loved her. My feeble pen fails to speak her praise. We cannot sorrow as those who have no hope, for we feel assured that she is now in the presence of him whom she adored and loved to the end; and when he shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and the dead in Christ shall be raised first, her weak, afflicted, natural body will be raised in honor, in power, in glory, a spiritual body, fitted to enjoy that eternal weight of glory that awaits all the redeemed of the Lord beyond this vale of sorrow and tears.

Your sister in hope,

C. ANNA NORWOOD.

HAMBURGH, Ark., May 12, 1894.

Mrs. Mary Libby, of Berwick, Maine, died April 29th, 1894, aged 86 years and 10 months.

Our deceased sister was the wife of our brother, Deacon Ivory Libby. They were married in the year 1829, and eight children were the fruits of their union, of whom five are now living. During the long period of their married life they lived happily together, and now in his old age our dear brother is called to mourn the loss of his companion. Our beloved sister was baptized by Elder Gideon Cook, of Great Falls, N. H., in December, 1832, and afterward had her membership with the church in North Berwick (Oak Woods). Ten years ago last October sister Libby was stricken with a shock of paralysis, and during those ten long weary years of helplessness and confinement the gracious and faithful God was her support and consolation. It was very grateful to my heart to listen to our aged and afflicted sister speak of the Lord's great mercy and compassion, and of herself as a poor worm of the earth, so sinful and unworthy, whose only hope was in the grace of God. A few days before her departure I visited her; and though it was with difficulty she could speak, she expressed her desires "to be gone" from these scenes of affliction and sin to be with Christ, which is far better. She asked me to sing to her, which I did. One of the verses of the hymn was,

"No more shall we mourn that thy face thou'rt concealing,

No Satan, no sin, base intruders below;
But ever behold thee fresh glories revealing:

Amen! hallelujah! come Lord, even so."

At the funeral of our sister the writer preached from the words contained in Psalm xvii. 15. May the Holy Spirit graciously administer the consolations of Christ's gospel to our bereaved brother

Libby during the remnant of the days appointed for his sojourn in this world.

ALSO,

Mrs. Mary Hanson, of Sanford, Maine, was born Feb. 8th, 1819, and departed this life April 19th, 1894.

The deceased was a member of the North Berwick Church, and was baptized by Elder Wm. Quint, Sept. 19th, 1886. For many years before uniting with the church our sister was called by the grace of God to an experimental interest in the Lamb of God, whose precious blood cleanses from all sin. She was one who was well-established in the doctrine of Christ, and whose delight and comfort, her meat and drink, was in the truth as it is in Jesus. These things are pleasing and comforting remembrances of our departed kindred in our Lord Jesus Christ. Our sister's health began visibly to decline some two months before her eyes were closed in death to all the scenes of this vain and sinful world; and now absent from the body, we believe she is present with the Lord.

"Immersed in the ocean of love,
Her soul doth triumphantly sing,
Till Christ shall descend with a shout from above,
And make all creation to ring.

"Our bodies in dust shall obey,
And swifter than thought shall arise;
Thus changed in a moment go shouting away
To mansions of love in the skies."

At her funeral I preached from the words, "There shall be no night there."
—Rev. xxii. 5.

FRED. W. KEENE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Sims departed this life Jan. 14th, 1894, after a lingering illness of pulmonary tuberculosis.

Her maiden name was Sims. She was born in Henry Co., Ky., in September, 1828, and moved to Boone Co., Mo., in 1830. She was married to R. S. Sims in 1847. Eight children were born to them, seven of whom remain to mourn their loss of an affectionate mother. One son preceded her in February, 1865. Mrs. Sims never united with the visible church, but the fruit of the Spirit was manifest in her life, and witnessed by all who knew her in her everyday life. If she had enemies they were at peace with her, and therefore were unknown as such, as all speak well of her. She evidently believed the doctrine of God's unlimited predestination and unconditional election, for she feasted on the preaching of Elder John Copland, a staunch advocate of that doctrine. She was taken with her last and fatal malady on Feb. 7th, 1893, and suffered nearly eleven months, which she bore with christian meekness and fortitude. We have evidence that another redeemed sinner is now singing the song of redemption where affliction and sorrow are unknown, while we poor sinners mourn, but not as those who have no hope. The remains of Mrs. Sims were interred at Goshen Church on the 16th day of January, 1894. The writer was called upon and preached a discourse to a large assembly of friends of the deceased, using as a text Romans vi. 23.

To the bereaved husband, children and friends I would say,

"Hear what the voice from heaven proclaims

For all the pious dead;
Sweet is the savor of their names,
And soft their sleeping bed.

"They die in Jesus, and are bless'd;
How sweet their slumbers are!
From suffering and sin released,
And free from every snare.

"Far from this world of toil and strife,
They're present with the Lord;
The labors of their mortal life
End in a large reward."

ORDINATIONS.

PURSUANT to a call of the Middletown Church, Delaware Co., N. Y., a council convened with the Lexington Church on May 16th, 1894, to consider the propriety of ordaining brother RANSOM W. SANFORD to the full work of the gospel ministry.

The council organized by choosing Elder James Miller Moderator, and brother F. Mackey Clerk.

The different churches in the association were called upon in their order, and responded as follows by their messengers and letters:

Lexington Church—Elder J. Miller, L. M. Cole, B. F. Barkley, E. Ballou, E. Moore, F. Mackey.

Second Church of Roxbury—Elder Clark, James Avery, C. W. Keator, J. S. Carroll.

Halcott Church—Elder Miller, J. Scudder, R. Miller, C. Mead.

Olive & Hurley Church—Morris Seacord.

Schoharie Church—Elder Clark, G. W. Guernsey.

Jefferson Church—Elder Miller, E. Hicks.

Gilboa Church—Elder Clark, D. M. Leonard.

Andes Church—Elder Miller.

Clovesville Church—Elder Miller.

Middletown Church—Elder Miller, O. Smith.

The candidate was called upon to relate his christian experience, call to the ministry, doctrinal views, &c.

The council retired, and all expressed themselves satisfied, and the ordination proceeded as follows:

Ordination sermon by Elder Clark from 1 Timothy iv. 16.

Ordination prayer by Elder Miller.

Laying on of hands by Elders Miller and Clark.

Charge by Elder Clark.

Right hand of fellowship by Elder Miller.

Prayer and benediction by the candidate.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

OUR yearly meeting at the New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., will be held, if the Lord will, on the third Sunday in June, commencing on Friday afternoon at five o'clock.

The friends of Jesus, the only hope of lost sinners, are invited to meet with us. We have the promise of some able brethren in the ministry to be with us.

I. N. VANMETER, Pastor.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THERE will be a three days meeting held at the Davis school-house, beginning on Friday before the fourth Sunday in July, 1894.

We would like to see as many Baptists as feel like visiting us come and join with us in singing and offering prayer and supplication to the Lord of lords and King of kings.

This meeting will be held fifteen miles east of Purcell, Ind. Tex., and nine miles south of Burnett, near the head of Pan Creek, in Cleveland Co., Oklahoma.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE permitting, Elder H. M. Curry will preach at the Ebenezer Old School Baptist meeting-house, 154 West 36th St., New York, on Sunday, June 3d, at 10:30 a. m. and 3:00 p. m.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EVER since the SIGNS OF THE TIMES has attained its wide national circulation we have been importuned by our subscribers, as well as by those who have had no special interest in sustaining the publication, to open our columns to advertisements; but never having had any experience in that line of business we have hesitated to make the venture. Since the commencement of this volume, however, there has been a combination of circumstances that has encouraged us to make the experiment, and we therefore make the following announcement, viz.:

We will receive for the last page of the paper suitable and reliable advertisements at the following net rates, viz.:

CORRESPONDENCE.

1 CORINTHIANS XV. 35-38.

"BUT some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare [naked] grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—When I was at Hopewell, N. J., in March, brother James Hill requested that I should say something through the SIGNS upon the words quoted above. I have now taken my pen to comply with his request. In what I may here write I desire to say no more than the Scriptures themselves have said upon this theme. We cannot attach too much importance to the resurrection of the dead, because Paul tells us that without it there is no salvation. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain;" we are yet in our sins. Therefore redemption is inseparably linked with the resurrection, or the raising up of the dead. Besides the fact that the apostle has testified that there is no salvation without it, and that Christ is not raised if the dead rise not, and that our preaching and our faith are both vain unless this doctrine be true, we may also judge of its importance by the many times it is spoken of in the Scriptures of truth. I have been trying to look this up of late somewhat; and leaving out some places where it may be doubted by some whether the resurrection is the theme, there are more than twenty places, some of them embracing whole chapters, and some extended portions of chapters, where the resurrection of the body is dwelt upon in its various bearings upon the hope, the faith, the joy and the life of the believer. David speaks of it as the consummation of his desire and hope.—Psalm xvii. 15. In Daniel xii. 2 the resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked is declared by him who revealed such wonderful things to his chosen people. It was proclaimed by the Savior in the days of his flesh, as recorded in Matthew xxiii. 31, Luke xiv. 14, John v. 28 and John xi. 23, and I cannot take space to refer to all the places in the Acts and the epistles where it is the express purpose of the writer to teach this doctrine, besides all the places where it is incidentally referred to. Surely, then, the theme must be of the utmost importance for believers to contemplate, and for us to write and speak about. Paul surely thought so, for he bids his brethren comfort one another by his words about it.

I have heard it sometimes intimated that it was not a profitable theme for us to speak or write about, upon the ground that, as it was something beyond our experience, to speak of it could be no more than speculation upon our part. True, we may indulge in speculation upon this theme to our own hurt, but so we may upon anything that is revealed in the Scriptures; and it does not seem to me that the danger of mere speculation should deter us from trying to ascertain what the Scriptures have to say about it, nor from speaking and writing about what they say. We have not experienced death yet, and still it is a proper theme upon our tongues and pens always. Besides, if it be but mere speculation to speak or write about the resurrection of the body, why do those who were moved by the Holy Ghost speak so often of it, and say so many things about it? Many things which are declared of the works of God we have not felt in our own persons, and many things are declared of God that we cannot experience in our own persons, as for instance his omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence; and yet we believe them, and it is our duty to declare them simply upon scriptural testimony. In like manner it is our right and duty, it seems to me, to declare our faith in the resurrection, though we have not yet experienced it. I have never desired to indulge in vain speculations upon this, nor upon any other Bible theme; but I have desired to search the Scriptures, and to understand their testimony, and to receive and believe it joyfully, even though they testify of things which my reason rejects and counts absurd. I have long ago given up all idea that we ever shall, while we dwell in human flesh, be able to see all the oneness and harmony of the word of God. If God has declared two different things in his word, it does not hinder my believing both because they seem to my narrow mind to contradict each other. Why should it? God, who cannot lie, has said both things; therefore both are true. My reason may say if one be true the other cannot be; but let my reason be a liar, and God always true. If our God has testified to us the resurrection of the dead, it becomes us, it seems to me, to read and consider his testimony reverently, and with implicit faith in every word which he has given us upon the theme. Surely, were it not good for us to contemplate it, he would not have made any revelation in the Scriptures concerning it. That other men speculate upon it is no reason why the people of God should stand aloof from it, or cease to rejoice in it or speak of it.

There are some things which the Scriptures declare concerning the resurrection that I desire to briefly refer to. They speak of it always as being in the future; never as being in the present or the past. In the faith of the child of God it must therefore be a thing to be looked for, something yet to transpire, because the faith of a believer, or that which God reveals to him, cannot be contrary to the teaching of the word of God in the Scriptures. Their testimony is that there shall be a resurrection; not that there has been or is, but there shall be.—See John v. 28 and John xi. 23; also 1 Cor. xv. in full, 1 Thess. iv. 15; and other references equally plain that might be made. Surely I scarcely need refer to Paul's language in 2 Timothy ii. 18, where he says concerning two of the brethren that they had erred concerning the truth, teaching that the resurrection was past already, and thus had overthrown the faith of some. It has seemed to me that these two men fully believed in and taught that Christ was raised from the dead, but from this had drawn the conclusion that as there was no further resurrection for him, so also there could not be for his people. They had perhaps believed and taught that when Christ arose, his people were also raised up, which is, in a certain sense, a most blessed truth; but they had also proceeded into the error of denying any other or any further resurrection. This, the apostle says, was a word that did eat as a canker, and corrupted and overthrew the faith of some; and what is meant by this is fully explained by him, when in 1 Corinthians xv. he says that if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised, and our preaching and your faith are both alike vain, for ye are yet in your sins. Such teaching as this, that the resurrection is past already, if received, will like a canker eat into and destroy the whole body of truth; and by and by, when its work is completed, it will entirely overthrow the faith, and leave no assurance of salvation for the sinner at all. Add to all this the further fact that if the body is to be raised at all it must be in the future, since we know that it is not yet raised up, and it would seem that the evidence is conclusive that the resurrection is yet future.

Further, the Scriptures teach that all men shall be raised up, both the righteous and the wicked. If the question be asked, Is there any difference between the resurrection of the righteous and that of the wicked? I have no reply to make, for the Scriptures, so far as I have been able to discover, are silent upon this subject; but as to the fact of the resurrection of both it seems to me the testimony is plain. The language in Daniel xii. 2 seems to teach this; at least I have not been able to satisfy my mind with any other explanation of this text of Scripture. But whatever may be thought of the Scripture just referred to, the text in John v. 28, 29, cannot certainly be questioned. Its meaning seems plain; and if any language can tell us anything, surely this Scripture teaches the resurrection of all men, as well as that it is in the future. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." This cannot possibly refer to that work by which dead sinners are quickened into life, for this he has set forth in verse twenty-five, saying, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." But in verse twenty-eight Jesus does not say, "And now is," but simply, "The hour is coming."

Still further, the Scriptures teach that the resurrection is of the body; not a raising up of the soul or of a spirit, but of the body, the mortal body. It does not seem to me that there is any need of any difficulty as to the use of the word "body." There is nothing to show that it is used in any other than its most common sense (just as I use the word when I say my body, your body, &c.) in the many places where the resurrection is treated upon in the New Testament. In other connections the word "body" is sometimes used figuratively, but not when speaking of the resurrection. The text at the head of this article, to which brother Hill called my attention, uses the word "body" four times; and in the chapter the word "flesh" is used several times. Besides, in verse four, and in all that is said of the resurrection of Jesus in this fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, his body is evidently meant, since we know that it was the body of Jesus which was laid in Joseph's new tomb. In verses forty-two to forty-four the pronoun "it" can refer to nothing but this mortal body. In fact, here also the word "body" is used four times; and whether the adjective natural or spiritual be applied to it, it is still the body. Still further, Matthew, who was one of the twelve, and who wrote by inspiration as well as an eye-witness of all these things, gives a wonderful testimony concerning this matter. In chapter twenty-seven, verses fifty-two and fifty-three, he declares, after recounting the crucifixion of the blessed Lord, and the awful events that attended it, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Many questions have occurred to me concerning this testimony of Matthew, and may occur to others, which I cannot answer, because the Scriptures do not satisfy our curiosity concerning them; but so far as the purposes of this argument are concerned those questions are neither here nor there. Whatever questions may arise, they do not disturb the plain statement of the fact here narrated. It does not effect the weight of this testimony in the least that none of the other evangelists record this event. To all who believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures at all, one witness to an event is as weighty as a thousand could be; for to them God, who cannot lie, speaks in the testimony, whether it be by one or by many. There are many other things which Jesus said and did that are recorded by but one of the evangelists, but the truth of them is not to be doubted because of this; therefore we need not doubt the truth of this narration, though only one writer records it. The text referred to declares that this was one of the awful events attending the crucifixion of the Son of man. The vail of the temple was rent in twain, the rocks were rent, the sun was darkened, &c. Now notice, first, that it is said, "The graves were opened." Notice, second, they "came out of the graves." Notice, third, they came out after his (Jesus') resurrection. Notice, fourth, they went about Jerusalem and appeared unto many, just as Jesus himself after his resurrection appeared unto many. But what I chiefly want to call attention to is this, "Many bodies of the saints which slept." Many bodies; not many saints, but many bodies of saints. This differed from the raising to life again of Lazarus, or the widow's son, or the ruler's daughter, because those instances were before his resurrection, and this was after. Those could die again; but it seems to me impossible that these could die again. They were, to all the disciples who saw them, the evidences of the power of Jesus' resurrection; and as he being raised from the dead could die no more, so it seems to me these also were conquerors forever through him. But this is a digression. The one thing which I would emphasize is this, the bodies arose. This is true, whatever may have been the design or purpose of God in it all, and whatever may be the lesson taught us by it; but besides the plain scriptural declarations to which I have referred, there are other things testified of by inspired men which to me seem to bear with weight upon this question. The resurrection of the body of Jesus, to my mind, has always settled the matter that our bodies shall be raised up; also, I have never been able to see how the power of his resurrection can be fully experienced by us only as we can see that by it our own resurrection is secured. Paul uses precisely the same language when he speaks of our own resurrection as when he speaks of his resurrection.—See 1 Cor. xv. 12-20. Surely the word "resurrection," as applied to his people, must have the same meaning as it does when applied to him. As he is a conqueror over death, hell and the grave, so must his people be, else his victory is of no use to them. The victory of Jesus was fully accomplished when his body was raised up; and in like manner we shall be finally victorious when our bodies shall be raised up. If our bodies are not to be raised up, then our victory will not be equal to his. The translation of Enoch and Elijah, and the assurance of some being alive and on earth when the end shall come, who shall be changed, has always seemed to me a full and certain pledge of the resurrection of our bodies also. To this also my mind has always added the ascension of our risen Lord. This much has always seemed to me true, viz., whatever may be said truthfully of the present state of the bodies of Enoch and Elijah, and of the glorified body of the Lord, will be also true of the bodies of all the saints after the resurrection. Enoch and Elijah will have no pre-eminence over the rest of the glorified saints. I would not seek to know more than is revealed; but surely the bodies of Enoch and Elijah are glorified in heaven. They did not see death; but our divine Master did see death, and millions of saints have seen it; but at the end those who have seen it and those who have not will be alike. This secures the resurrection of our bodies and their glorification, as well as those of Enoch and Elijah. Another consideration has always had weight with me. I will state it in this manner. The redemption of the chosen vessels of mercy will not be full and complete unless it shall be as broad as the curse. All who fell under the sentence of death must receive life, else the redemption is not full. To make the thought that is in my mind simple and plain I will state it in this way. If the curse was upon the body, as well as the rest of what makes up man, then the redemption must reach the body also, else the curse retains a victory over a part of the field, and the sinner is not fully redeemed. These are some of the considerations which have always seemed to me to shut us up to a belief in the resurrection of the body, besides the plain scriptural declarations to which reference was made at first. All the objections that I have ever heard urged against this doctrine have never contained one plain quotation of Scripture, and have always amounted to a denial of the omniscience, omnipresence and omnipotence of God. To say that the bodies cannot be raised up because wild beasts have eaten some, and cannibals have eaten others, and some have been burned, and their ashes spread upon the winds of the air and the waves of the sea, is simply to forget and deny the power of God. These are the objections of feeble, natural reason, and millions of such arguments weigh nothing against one plain declaration of God's word.

Now, in the text named at the head of this article, to which brother Hill called my attention, the apostle is not arguing to show how the dead are raised, but simply to prove the fact of the resurrection. When men should say, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" they did not mean to ask for information, but simply to deny the fact of the resurrection, and to confuse Paul, by a question which they judged he could not answer; and Paul is not arguing in reply for any purpose but to assert the fact of the resurrection. This one thing must be borne in mind as we consider this whole chapter; because, Paul would here say, there are mysteries in the resurrection which our wisdom cannot solve, and which God has not revealed, does not in the least weaken the testimony for it. Why, he would say, you all know there are mysteries in the planting and upspringing of the seed which you sow that no man can explain; yet you know that the seed, though it dies, lives again. So I know that the bodies which die will live again, though we cannot explain all the mysteries that are connected with it. We sow a homely seed in the ground, and it dies and decays; but what a glorious body rises out of it! So the body is sown in corruption, in dishonor, in weakness, and a natural body; but it is raised in incorruption, in glory, in power, and a spiritual body. We who have borne the image of the earthly shall bear the image of the heavenly. No words nor thoughts of ours can describe this change; this we ought not to undertake. But the language is most emphatic that the same body that is sown is raised—is changed; not exchanged, but changed. It is sown; it is raised. It is the same body, not another. If it were another body it would not be a raising up, or resurrection. If Paul meant to teach the manner of the resurrection, rather than simply the fact of it, in the text mentioned by brother Hill, and his illustration of the grain of wheat were applied to its furthest limit, then we might go on to argue that there would be many bodies springing up out of each one body, because one grain of wheat produces many grains when the harvest comes; but this would be manifestly absurd. It is not safe to go beyond the object which Paul had in view all along, viz., to just assert the fact of the resurrection of the body.

I will quote Paul's wonderful testimony concerning the unspeakable importance of this doctrine and leave the subject: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept."—1 Cor. xv. 12-20.

I leave these somewhat scattered and awkwardly expressed thoughts with brother Hill and all who may care to read them. I trust that they will at least call up to our minds the hope of the resurrection, for which Paul said he was called in question.

I remain your brother in the hope of eternal life,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., May 23, 1894.

THE OX AND THE MINISTER.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—My ignorance and weakness have often caused me to suppress inclinations to write for the SIGNS; but I feel impressed at present to write some upon the above subject, and leave it to your better judgment whether to publish it or not. I should decide that I was greatly favored of the Lord if I were blessed with light and liberty to write such things as would be profitable to even half the readers of the SIGNS. In writing and speaking to the household of faith I have never decided that I was too wise and perfect to be free from all error. The old man (Adam nature) and the new man (divine nature) both exist in every sinner that has been born again; and just as sure as the old man dictates anything to speak or write for the gospel there will be error set forth. I believe this is why Paul says, "Let God be true, and every man a liar." It was the old man in Peter that denied his Savior; and none of us are any better by nature than Peter was. Everything should be tried by the standard of truth.

The ox and oxen are often spoken of in the Scriptures; and Paul refers to the command not to muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, and says, "For our sakes this was written." In this he illustrates the minister with or by the ox. The ark was brought up from the land of the Philistines by two milk kine, upon a new cart. No yoke had ever come upon the necks of those kine, and their calves were shut up at home; but the milk kine went up the highway lowing, and took the ark direct to Israel, to the people it belonged to. This new cart and the ark must point to Jesus, the ark of the eternal covenant in the new dispensation; and the milk kine must point to the first called ministers of the Jews and Gentiles. No gospel yoke had ever come upon their necks, but they went up the highway, where the Spirit bade them go, and preached Christ, the only true covenant given to the people; and in many places where this covenant doctrine was proclaimed there was confusion similar to that among the Philistines, and the people were ready to get rid of the ark that bore it. Such effects are witnessed in places to the present day. The minister of God to this day feels the strain of leaving behind his companion and little ones, and going out often to suffer reproach, affliction and persecution; but Israel must have the covenant, and he is tied to the cart by the "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." He goes up the highway, often sad and mourning, the old man clinging to the family at home, and the new man seeking the comfort of Israel. But I am dwelling too long here.

The ark was brought up from the house of Abinadab, upon a new cart, and the oxen stumbled. If I have any call to the ministry, these oxen must represent such as I am; for I have stumbled many times, as this writing shows.

The laver in the temple was set upon twelve oxen made of brass, three looking north, three looking south, three looking east, and three looking west. These are supposed to point to the twelve apostles of the Lamb, looking to the four quarters of the earth, seeking the kingdom of God among all nations. In one of the first visions recorded by Ezekiel he says, "I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the color of amber, out of the midst of the fire. Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures," &c. "They four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side: and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle."—Ezekiel i. 4, 5, 10. John had a similar vision upon the isle of Patmos. He records it as "four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle."—Rev. iv. 6, 7. These living creatures and beasts had wings about them. We are not to suppose that these inspired men saw any freak of nature. These living creatures with four faces, and four beasts in different forms, must point to the different characteristics of the ministers of God. It is expressly stated that "whithersoever the Spirit was to go, they went;" and the history of the apostles shows they were governed entirely by the Spirit. I do not know that I understand the fire which Ezekiel saw infolding itself, but I remember that John said, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire."—Matt. iii. 11. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they [the disciples] were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts ii. 1-4. These living creatures came forth from this baptism prophesying in every different tongue, to the great amazement and wonder of the people. Peter was conspicuous among them, with the face of a man, the boldness of a lion, the keen sight of an eagle, and the docility and obedience of an ox. After this there was a fire of persecution kindled at Jerusalem, and the disciples were scattered, and went everywhere preaching the word. But I am taking too much space on this line. If you or any of the readers of the SIGNS have an opinion of this fire I should be glad to see it in print.

The ox is a beast of burden, and is used for many different things. They have been ridden, worked to the plow, the cart, the wagon, the threshing machine, &c. The ministers of God are all men of great burdens, and follow different avocations for a livelihood, from the high place of a statesman down to the unpleasant and burdensome place of a ditchman. The ox is not different in nature, and is raised up with other cattle. In order to help tame him for the yoke it is best to separate him from the rest of the herd, and tie him up near the house, feed and handle him some, and then break him to the yoke for service. The ministers of God are not different by nature from other people, and are raised up with and like all others, to walk according to the course of this world; but it is necessary that they should be called by grace, and separated from the rest of the world, by being brought into the house of God, and kept near the sanctuary, where they are fed upon different food for awhile, and handled by older ministers, to tame them for the yoke of the gospel, for the service of the Master and the church. We do not receive any except such as have become docile enough to come under the hands of the presbytery.

The ox when first brought under the yoke is awkward, and has to be guided by his master into the different highways, and trained to all his duties. Some are stubborn, and have to bear the lash to make them go; while some are wiry, and run ahead, and have to be held back for a time. The minister is also awkward when first brought under the gospel yoke, and has to be guided by the Master into the different duties devolving upon him; and some of them are reluctant, and have to bear sufficient chastisement to make them obedient, while some seem to be anxious to go ahead, and overdo their part of the work, and have to be restrained at times. The ox will work single or double, but sometimes will horn his mate, and cripple him if he can. The minister will work by himself or with a yoke-fellow. Some of them will become jealous of their brother's welfare, and take turns to cripple him if they can. The ox will sometimes break his record, leave the team, and get into mischief. Some of them seem to know when roasting ear time comes round; and when they get into a neighbor's field, and get well filled, no kind of food at home suits them. If he is fed with the rest of the oxen he will walk all around, keep the others from eating if he can, trample on the corn and hay, and make it as offensive as possible. The minister sometimes will break his good record, and go off into mischief. When one gets into the Arminian field he is not satisfied to eat the old home food any more with the saints, and will trample the doctrine of election and predestination under foot all he can, and make it look as hideous as possible.

The ox is often worked hard and abused all day, and turned out at night to get sustenance in the forest; and when he gets old and unfit for service he is not hunted up and cared for. The minister is often worked hard, sometimes leaving his home on Friday morning, and is gone until Monday night, weary and worn out, and then has to continue his toil at home for the sustenance of himself and family; and when he gets old and infirm, and unfit for service, he is often neglected. But I am taking up more space than I am worthy to occupy, and had better try to come to a close.

Dogs are also spoken of in the Scriptures, and they represent something; but I will not expose the substance. A dog has a slick tongue, and can eat the finest dainties from a king's table, and if necessary can eat putrid meats and carrion with the crow and vulture; and if he gets a little sick he can vomit. The ox has a rough tongue, and subsists mostly on rough food. He may choke, but does not vomit, like a dog. A dog will kill and scatter sheep, but the ox will not do that. A dog will suck eggs, and tree a skunk, but the ox will not. A dog was never used for sacrifice, but the ox was so used often under the old covenant. The minister has been sacrificed often under the new covenant in many ways, and has gone groaning and mourning with wounds received in the house of his friends. Nearly all the apostles sealed their testimony with their blood, and there were thousands of ministers among the martyrs of the dark ages.

I must close. Yours in hope of life beyond this vale of trials and afflictions,

P. J. POWELL.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I am reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES weekly, and have received much comfort from the principles and experiences written by the dear brethren and sisters, which seems to give new strength to my hope in Christ. It has been in my mind for some time to write some of my thoughts. The brethren often ask me why it is that I do not write and let the people of God know that there are a few according to the election of grace in this part of his vineyard who have been taught in the old school the truth as it is in Jesus. I feel unworthy and illiterate; and when I would do good, evil is present with me. I feel like telling how I have been preserved and brought to my forty-eighth year. When in my eighteenth year I went into the army and served as a soldier. At that time I thought very little about eternity and my soul's condition. My earthly father had made no profession. My mother was an Old School Baptist, and told me as I left home to go to the war to be a good boy, and if she never saw me any more in this world she hoped she would meet me in heaven. Her heart was broken to think that her boy was going to a place where men would be killed. I thought very little about the hardships just before me. When I got to the regiment I met a Missionary Baptist minister, who took a liking to me, as I was young. In his preaching he would make many

"I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."—Psa. xxxvii. 25.

To understand this expression as literally applicable to those who are chosen of God unto salvation, and as signifying that they are not subject to the poverty which is implied in being forsaken, and in begging bread, would cut off all those who are established by the testimony of the inspired record as beloved saints. So far as all natural support was concerned, the Captain of our salvation was himself forsaken when all his disciples forsook him and fled, and in the language of the psalmist, he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" It is also written of him that he was hungry. The correct understanding of this text will not conflict with this record of him who had the witness of his God attesting his perfect righteousness. The experience of Job could not be reconciled with a literal application of this declaration, since his righteousness was witnessed by the Lord himself, and that testimony was declared before the severe trials through which he passed. Instead of promising to his followers prosperity and wealth in the world, our Lord assured them that in the world they should have tribulation. And Paul tells Timothy, "But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured; but out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." From the whole volume of sacred truth the same assurance is applicable to every one who will come after Jesus. It is manifest, therefore, that the Spirit of Christ which was in David, did not speak of that bread which is derived from the cursed ground, neither is the character specified one who can claim to be more righteous than his companions in his own depraved nature. In the judgment of God there is no difference among the condemned children of Adam. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." This positive statement forbids the claim of any of the children of Adam to righteousness in any degree. This peculiar excellence belongs exclusively to "Jesus Christ the righteous."—1 John ii. 1. He never was forsaken even though his chosen disciples left him alone. In that hour of desertion he says, "And yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me."—John xvi. 32. In following him his disciples must know what it is to be brought into such loneliness as he experienced when deserted by his chosen and beloved people. Yet even when all earthly friends are withdrawn, and they can see no evidence of any support or refuge, it is the good pleasure of their Father to give them the victory over unbelief and sin through the abounding grace revealed in the Captain of their salvation. As when they were brought out of Egyptian bondage by the power of God, Israel could claim no honor to themselves for the victory, so in every deliverance of his afflicted and poor people, it is clearly shown them that they have nothing to boast of their own faithfulness and power, but that all the glory belongs to that God who has given them the victory. Thus every trial and affliction through which they are brought affords a new occasion for thankful assurance that God is their very present help in trouble. By personal endurance of tribulation each of the saints is qualified to bear witness that the grace of God is sufficient for the support and strength of those who are utterly destitute and completely stripped of that righteousness in which the natural mind always confides. This is not learned by tradition received from men, but through much tribulation.

While the experience of every saint attests the truth of this testimony it is only necessary to notice the history of David as given in the Scriptures to see that in a natural sense this declaration could not apply to the writer himself. He was repeatedly driven to extreme straits, and compelled at one time to solicit and receive the protection and aid of that mortal enemy of Israel, Achish the king of Gath. To finite intelligence then he was himself forsaken and begging bread. But through all that mysterious chain of adverse circumstances the hand of his God was leading him to the victory over every enemy, and to the throne of Israel, to which he had been anointed by the commandment of the Lord. As in the case of every saint, the Lord brought him by a way that he knew not. Many times that way was hidden under such darkness that it seemed evident that the Lord had forgotten to be gracious, and would be favorable to him no more. Yet even in his providential dealing the Lord never had forsaken his chosen servant. Every affliction which he was called to endure was given in the same love which had called him from the keeping of his father's flocks to be the king of Israel. He was made to confess that "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes." This is the testimony of faith; it can never be learned by the natural mind. Looking at the things which are seen, the saint always feels that he is forsaken; but faith beholds the hidden strength of God as his shield and defense. Neither in the vigor of youth nor in the infirmity of old age, can the saints depend upon their own care and strength for protection. They must be kept by the power of God through faith unto that salvation which is ready to be revealed in the last time. None can be included among the righteous but those who are justified freely by the grace of God through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. God has commanded the blessing, even life for evermore, upon all the chosen inhabitants of Zion. He will never leave them nor forsake them. Their perfect righteousness is found alone in Jesus, who of God is made unto them wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption. The very same individuals who are thus secured in the protection of righteousness, are in themselves guilty sinners, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. Herein is displayed the mystery of redeeming grace and the love of God. The unchanging truth of God preserves his people in the only perfect righteousness of Jesus Christ. Even though his children forsake his law he will not cast off those whom he foreknew. His rod of chastisement shall attest the never failing faithfulness with which their God remembers the covenant which he hath made with their Redeemer.

When the tempter has withdrawn the eye of the saint from the truth of the divine promise, it is easy for him to make it appear that the provision of grace does not include such a sinner as he knows himself to be. Then he can find no consolation in the promise which is confirmed by the oath of God. Instead of claiming to be of the seed of the righteous, and therefore entitled to trust in the grace of God, the things which are seen give united testimony that there can be no hope for such a polluted sinner as he knows himself to be. When brought to this despairing condition, although the religious world has plenty of such bread as feeds carnal pride, the perishing one has not even the wish to be fed with such food. Only that daily bread which is the gift of God, can satisfy such poor children of Zion. They are not forsaken when they ask of God for supplies of every needed good, neither is it begging bread when they cry unto him for that which he has provided for the support of his own children. He has given to them his unfailing promise, saying of Zion, "I will abundantly bless her provision; I will satisfy her poor with bread." With this sure supply ever ministered by the Spirit of truth, there can be no occasion for the children of Zion begging bread.

Doubtless there have been occasions when the cruel adversary has wrested this text to the distress of some of the poor and afflicted saints, when they have been oppressed with doubts under temporal destitution. Reason cannot grasp the wonderful truth that our God gives suffering and privation to the subjects of his grace in the same great love which chose them in Christ before the world was made. Only when led by the Spirit of God can the saints themselves receive adversity as the choice of infinite love for their good. When they depend upon their own minds for understanding they say, "Surely all these things are against me." It is by faith alone that they can rejoice in the privilege of suffering affliction. When the saint seeks in his own strength to comprehend the unknown way in which the Lord leads him, he always becomes bewildered and falls into the snare of doubt and unbelief. If his natural mind could see the way it would not be a way which he knew not. Then the word of the Lord would not fit his case. There is no other way in which the Lord brings the blind but that which requires them to walk by faith, and not by sight. To finite understanding Jesus appeared to be forsaken when he was taken, and by wicked hands was crucified and slain; but the inspired apostles testify that all the rage of the wicked only fulfilled the purpose of God. "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done."—Acts iv. 27, 28. In this eminent example the afflicted and poor saints have the pattern by which they are sustained under their darkest trials. When reason can discern no way in which they are to have the victory, they can see in their Redeemer's conflict severer sufferings than they are called to endure. He secured the victory, and he will give it to every one who follows him in that way of conflict.

This sweet assurance is shown to the saints in their earliest experience, and the same consolation of the gospel of peace is their support even down to old age. The same vital relationship which secures this gracious deliverance to the children of God when they first hear the voice of their Savior, must still be their only trust when they have grown old in the experience of the faithfulness of their covenant God. They only find in old age the confirmation of that sweet assurance in which they were first made to trust in the unchanging truth of that word of the Lord upon which he has caused them to hope. All the tribulations of the saints make them more perfect in the knowledge that "Salvation is of the Lord." However they may sink in deep mire where there is no standing, and the earth with her bars may be about them forever, they shall find this immutable truth attested in their utmost destitution. Their God will sift this precious seed among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth.—Amos ix. 9. They may seem to be forsaken; but they are still “kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.”

As there is none righteous, no, not one (of all the race of Adam), when brought to the test of divine judgment, it must be confessed that Jesus Christ is the only character who can bear that descriptive title. Only those who are made free from sin by his holiness are the seed of this Holy One of Israel. Of every one who dwells in this secret place of the Most High it is written, “He shall dwell on high; his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure.”—Isa. xxxiii. 16. In this abundant provision it is certain that the seed of the Righteous can never be seen begging bread.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

WITH our first number for March we discontinued the notice headed “Until March,” with a view to withdrawing our extraordinary offer to old subscribers as an inducement for them to procure new subscribers: but we have received a number of letters from very efficient brethren complaining that the time has been so short, and the weather so inclement, that they have not had an opportunity to get out among the brethren and friends as they would like to do, and requesting us for an extension of the time. We will therefore, until further notice, continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space, but we are now prepared to furnish any of them that may be desired.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express.

propositions to stir up sympathy. I tried my best to get religion. He told me if I would profess religion and write it to my mother it would be a comfort to her. As I was a child of wrath, even as others, I took his advice and went to work in that direction. It was not long until he had me stirred up with sympathy for my mother, little brothers and sisters. My father was also in the army, and the family at home had a hard time in making a living. I had a great weeping time, during which the minister got me to thinking that I was all right, and that all I lacked was to be baptized. I did agree to live better than I ever had before. After nearly two years I got back home, and was glad, of course. I then thought I would live a long time, and soon forgot my promise. The young people loved to hear me talk about the war, and of what I had learned. Of course I learned a great many antics. While in this condition I hung the salvation of my soul away off in the future. I very well knew I was not desiring to get religion in the least.

I will now try to show how God brings about his own events according to his own eternal purpose. In his purpose all the heirs of promise, the chosen in the covenant of eternal love, are predestinated, and in the right time and way he brings about the events according to his own will. It was in my mind to go to meeting one Saturday, four miles from home. When I got there I found very few people assembled. I went into the meeting-house, and the old father in Israel, whose name was Brooks, said that a portion of Scripture had fastened on his mind that morning, and he felt that he must go to meeting, although he did not know what the result would be. He said the Scripture on his mind were the words of Jesus, and read as follows: “Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live.” It seemed to bring my mind to wonder if the dead in the graves should hear the voice of God and live again. I did not think I was dead. He said, “Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.” Up to this time I had never felt myself to be a dead, helpless sinner in the sight of a just God. The old preacher said he believed the church of the true and living God was complete in the wisdom and purpose of God before the world began. I was shocked at this thought of the church being complete, and felt that I was left out of it. My flesh began to tremble, my heart began to beat faster, and in a moment I said, “Lord, have mercy on me, a poor, lost sinner.” I arose to my feet and left the house, feeling as I never had felt before. I believe that right there the good Lord had taken away the stony heart, and given me a heart of flesh. If I am not deceived, right there eternal life was implanted in my soul, the effect of predestination and election. I know it was not my good deeds that brought about these feelings. It seemed that my sins rolled up in my mind as I had never seen them before. I went on in this condition for several months, during which time old father Brooks, after preaching one Sunday came out of the stand and said that if there were any present who felt to have no friends, and that if they died in their present condition they would be lost, they were the ones he could sympathize with; and if they would come and give him their hand he would try to pray for them. I went forward and asked him to pray for me, a lost and ruined sinner. He thanked God for what he had seen. I thought very strange of his feeling thankful for my bad feelings. He went to prayer, and prayed for all the others, but never brought up my case at all. Then I felt that surely my case was an outside one. I was brought to the point that if I died in that condition I wanted my last words to be, Lord, have mercy on me, a justly condemned sinner. One Sunday evening there was a drizzling rain, and everything looked gloomy to me, and I thought I would never see another day. There were some youngsters at my father's, who were singing, and they asked me to help them. I told them that I could not. They asked me what the matter was. I told them I did not know, but I felt very bad. After a while I pulled off my clothes and lay down on the bed. I thought if I could fall asleep it might be that my trouble would wear off. In my meditation I felt that I was sinking down in a terrible condition. It struck my mind that in the morning my poor body would be cold in death, and my soul would be in endless woe. I thought, O my soul! how can I stay here? I felt to be getting cold. I felt for my pulse, but could not find it. I arose from my bed in a moment and partly dressed. I walked through the house and opened the door. I remember running through the yard till I came to the well, when I threw my hands on the curbing and dropped upon my feeble knees. My last words were, “Lord, save, or I am gone.” It seemed that in a moment a light which is indescribable and full of glory sprang up in my troubled soul. There was a space of time in which I cannot relate what took place. I have no knowledge of how I got away from that well. The first thing I knew there were several persons in the yard, and I was praising God for what he had done for poor me. Pen and tongue fail to express the feelings of a new born soul. I felt that night that I could tell just where salvation lay. I believe that is a gift. The next morning the weather had cleared, the sky was blue, and I felt happy to think I had not died in that condition. Soon the thought entered my mind, What have you done? Why did you act in such a way? Here was set up a worship that will never end until this body is brought to earth by the hand of God. I love God because he first loved me.

It was not long until I dreamed of being baptized, and it seemed to be a comfort to me in my dream. I studied the matter over and over until I got very restless in regard to the duties I owed to my God. I believe the good Lord gave me strength to discharge all the duties I owed to him, although I confess I am full of imperfections. When I would do good, evil is present with me.

The above was mostly written in June, 1893, but sickness and misfortune have kept it back until now. I am left alone with eight motherless children, and I am crippled with rheumatic pains. In 1892 I missed making a crop, and owed a large doctor's bill. I aimed to continue taking the SIGNS, but am so financially pressed that I will have to ask you to stop sending it. I have been so that I could not go to meeting, and the SIGNS has been a great comfort to me. I love the principles it holds forth, and would still love to read it. When you think of sister Parker and others in their afflictions, think also of poor me.

E. F. GILLILAND.

RIDDLESBURG, Pa., April 3, 1894.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—I must say that I was disappointed when I saw my little letter in the SIGNS, as I expected you would write on the subject. I had only outlined a subject for you, as I thought. It is now eleven o'clock at night. I have tried to sleep, but cannot, and therefore will try to write a little on the subject myself, if the good Lord will give me liberty.

Man in his natural state is only a creature of God, and only knows of God as he is historically taught, or as one man can teach another. In that state he knows not the true and living God, being dead in trespasses and sins. Therefore he looks upon the fall of man with sorrow; and the sorrow of the world worketh death. If it had been possible for man to not fall, he would only have had natural life; but God intended the fall of man, to bring about his purpose and grace. This man dead in trespasses and sins must be made spiritually alive in order to become a child of God; and it must be eternal life. Surely anything dead cannot make itself alive. A fountain cannot rise above its head; neither can corruption bring forth incorruption. God is eternal, and he gives eternal life to his people. In that relation as children they can and do rejoice in the fall of man, and also rejoice in the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, who is the Captain of their salvation, made perfect through suffering. It requires eternal life to manifest an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ. But the religionists of the world teach that man can become an heir of God by his own will-power, and that the work of the minister is to make heirs of God. A man preached that kind of doctrine here last Sunday, and it is preached almost everywhere; but in the kingdom of God it is not preached. It seems to me that the natural man, if he understands natural things, ought to know better. The very nature of a will teaches better things than that. When a man makes his will, he wills to his heirs. The administrator of his will administers to the heirs. He does not try to make heirs, neither does he offer to those who are not heirs. He cannot add to nor diminish the number. It is all settled and fixed by the one who made the will. Jesus says, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."—John vi. 39. That glorious inheritance is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for the redeemed, who are kept by God's almighty power, ready to be revealed in the last time. I often wonder,

"Why was I made to hear his voice,
And enter where there's room;
While others, left to their own choice,
Would rather starve than come?"

Now my mind is drawn from what I have been writing, and is taken back to my first experience. I had been taught that there was a God, and it seemed to me from what I had been taught that he was like a big man; that if I did good he would love me, and if I did badly that he would hate me; that there was a devil also, and I had him pictured out as a terrible brute, and was a great deal more to be feared than the other. Indeed I was taught in such a way that I feared the devil most. As there was nothing but sin in me, I loved to sin, and could not satisfy myself in sin. But when in my nineteenth year I attended a protracted meeting. I did not have a good thought, nor fear of any kind before me. The congregation were singing, when quick as lightning something struck me dumb and dead. I was blind and deaf, and knew nothing. Those who sat by me said I exclaimed, "My God!" and dropped off my seat. I cannot tell how long I was in that situation; but when I did come to know anything I was at the mourner's bench. How I got there I knew not. Others said they took me there. But I did not want to be there. If only I could get where no eye could see me, I thought I would be satisfied. They told me to pray; but I could not pray. I could not look up. I always knew I was a sinner, but I had never before felt sinful. The preacher asked me if I wanted to be baptized. I said I would do anything to get relief; so they baptized me. But we could not get along well together; for they talked of being good and doing good, while I felt just the other way. I finally heard an Old Baptist preach, and I knew he preached the truth; but I tried to believe that others also did the same. During this time I was reading the Scriptures and talking about the Scriptures. I would read what was called that horrible doctrine, the Old Baptist doctrine, and heard others abusing it, and I tried to hate it. I finally got where I did not hear an Old Baptist preach for a time. I would read the Bible, and there find election, predestination, effectual calling, &c., and would say, "My God, must I believe it?" I had talked against it, and had tried to hate it, and the people that preached it. It finally came about that I could not get along unless I talked it. Then I began to want to hear an Old Baptist preach again. I could think of sermons I had heard in my boyhood, preached by Elders Furr and Correll and Ash, as well as others, but could not hear them. Finally I wrote to Elder Correll, and he came to me. I thought I had never heard such preaching in all my life, and O how I loved it. I loved him, and all who talked in that way, with a love that is different from anything of mankind. Then began another trouble; for I had hated this people, and hated the doctrine they preached, and it seemed to me I could not be forgiven. Sometimes I could neither eat nor sleep. I wanted to be with them, and to live with them, and needed just such a God and Savior as they preached. Yet I felt as though it could not be. I was working in a mill at that time, and I sat down in great sorrow. It seemed that I dropped asleep, and heard a voice behind me saying, "Peace be unto you." I can never forget that time. I never before had heard, nor have I since, such a voice. I arose and went to the house and told my wife about it, and she made fun of me. Others said I was getting crazy. Be this as it may, when I look to Jesus as being my all in all I enjoy that peace I then had. When I feel that peace I cannot doubt; but when I view myself I am always doubtful.

Now, brother Jenkins, do with this just as you please. If you burn it and never let anybody see it, all will be well with me. If it is not asking too much, please write on the subject started in this letter, as I did not intend writing what I have written.

Your brother, I trust, in Christ,
WM. MELLOTT.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have a letter written by sister Ella M. Parrott, residing near Yatesville, Morgan Co., Ill., to the members of the Otter Creek Church, at Girard; her membership being in said church up to the time of her marriage to John Parrott. She then asked for and obtained a letter from Otter Creek Church, of Concord Association, to join Union Church, of Morgan Association. Sister Parrott's letter we highly appreciated, and would like to see it published in your valuable paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, provided it meets your approval. I have her consent to its publication.

TO MY LOVED ONES:—This evening, as the shades of night are here, I feel like writing a few lines to my dear brethren and sisters, who have always been near and dear to my heart ever since I had a hope in my blessed Savior. It must be the love of God, which passeth understanding, which unites our hearts in such sweet bonds of union. Words fail to tell the desire of my heart to be with you once more. At times it seems more than I can bear. My sky is nothing but dark clouds. I feel that God knows what is for my good and for his glory, and I hope that in his own good time he will throw the mantle of his love over me, and that all my dark clouds will have a silver lining. Dear brethren and sisters, will you ever know the deep love I have for you? It has been the great desire of my heart, ever since I had a hope in my Savior, to be with the saints and to talk of that kingdom which is not of this world. How I tremble as I write these lines, to think that one so unworthy as I feel myself to be should try to write or talk of that kingdom. I was not well when you were all here last summer, and now it seems like a beautiful dream. Since then I have been so sick that nothing in my life seems real. At times during my sickness my life seemed so dark that death looked cold and dreary. At other times my hope in my Savior was so bright that it seemed if I should raise my hand it would be in heaven, so near seemed my soul to the beautiful world where all tears are wiped away. In the lone hours of the night how precious to me was my Bible, how sweet the dear old hymns, and O how I loved to think of the sweet old story of Jesus and his love. And when morning would come, I could then look out on the beautiful world and feel grateful that I had a being, and that I would one day be like my blessed Savior; for we have the promise of the life that now is, and of the life that is to come. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory, and be like him. What a blessed thought, to be like Jesus! I feel that I would like to talk to all of you to-night. There are many things on my mind. O how I would love to hear your dear voices, as in the happy days of the past, telling of Jesus and his love.

But I must be content, knowing that our heavenly Father doeth all things after the counsel of his own will. I pray that he will make me submissive to his will. I think I feel like a little child in its mother's arms, feeling a perfect trust in my blessed Savior, though unworthy of the least favor; yet the Lord is crowning me with loving-kindness and tender mercies every day of my life. O may I walk closer in his footsteps, is my prayer from morning till night. My heart is filled with tender love for you all, and it causes the tears to flow from my eyes. The Lord knows what is good for us all, and has said that all things work together for good to them that love him. My christian love to you all, and may it be God's will to crown you with his richest blessings through life. I hope it will be God's will for you to come and see me next summer. My christian love to all the members of the church at Girard. How I would love for some of you to answer this letter. I have as great a desire to hear from all of you as I have to hear the blessed gospel preached, which is so dear to my life. We had a lovely meeting last Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Elder George Murry was with us. I never heard better preaching. Words fail to tell how precious his preaching was to me. I thought of you all, and could see your dear faces, which are so dear to me, and wished you could be with us to hear that sweet gospel, and sit at the feet of Jesus together once more.

Dear brethren and sisters, I will close, for I fear you will not want me to write again. I hesitate to send this letter, but I have such a desire to see you all that it seems like I must send a few words, as it is not God's will for me to see you.

Your little sister,

ELLA M. PARROTT.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—There is no disguising the fact that now is as delusive and dangerous a period as the history of the Baptists has ever shown. There is a widespread corruption of the name, the faith and the practice of the professed Old School Baptists, and it behooves the true servants of Christ to weep rather than to rejoice at the sad condition. I can recall no Scripture more pertinent than the last two chapters of Ezra, a few points of which I wish to apply. Yet while I realize my own weakness and ignorance, I dare not but be faithful to the truth, let it hit where it may. I also realize that my own nature is as much inclined to love the evils and abominations referred to as were the ancient people of God; but that makes no excuse for me or for them. I might be led by a sort of fatalistic faith to say, Ah, well, evil is an element of human nature, and we must adopt a stoical indifference, and pass it by in silence, were it not that I find another element combined in my being, an irresistible crying unto God for deliverance from it. Such makes me feel akin to Ezra as the oft repeated intelligence of Israel's transgressions were reported to him; and while he recognized the divine hand in all the prophecies that God had caused to be proclaimed for and against Israel, including their transgressions, their captivities for punishment, and also their deliverances all to transpire in perfect and predestinated order, yet he never disapproved of the sovereignty of God. —See Ezra i. 1, compared with Isa. xlv. 28; before Christ, 712, while Ezra built before Christ from 536 to 456, being 90 to 176 years after the prophecy. Also Isa. xlv. 1. Ezra trembled at the word of God, and was astonished as the trembling princes reported the evils of the people. This is the characteristic of God's true servants. Instead of feeling to excuse, or to pass idly by, or to speak slightly of, or to blasphemously ridicule the relation of evil to predestination, they cannot but tremble, weep, and inquire in the temple for the word of God. This they are predestinated to do; and the same rule is equally applicable in this as in Ezra's age.

When Ezra had neared the end of his work of restoring the walls of the temple, there were tidings of the intermarriage of the children of Israel with the daughters of the land, contrary to the express commandment of God. Even now there is, and has long been, local unions and affiliations with the antichristian daughters of the land. One minister professing to be an Old School Baptist once said to me in justification of receiving Methodist baptism, "It is necessary to not be too particular when first establishing churches in a new section." There are now many localities where professed Old School Baptists not only have New School baptism, but are continuing to receive them. It is no wonder that their children are mixed, and speak half the language of Ashdod, so relevant is their language to their paternity. Nor is it strange that we can trace the relation of means to their many other principles and phases of disorder. Human sympathy and paternal love often take the place of the love of God in deciding as to the just relationship of members to the churches; and it is sure to bring dishonor to the cause of Christ, a marrying of this world to the sons of Zion. Expediency is often made in some places the rule, while the word of God is cast aside. Ezra, however, was not slack in purging this spot from Israel, and one hundred and twelve of the sons of eighteen divisions and families of Israel were found to have strange wives, and some of these had children by them; but this did not prevent their being brought to the same test of putting them away, and to offer sacrifice for their sin. Likewise also did Nehemiah, after cleansing Israel from the same abomination, pray, as I do this day concerning these Baptist corruptions, "Remember them, O my God, because they have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites. Thus cleansed I them from all strangers, and appointed the wards of the priests and the Levites, every one in his business; and for the wood offering, at times appointed, and for the first-fruits. Remember me, O my God, for good."—Neh. xiii. 23, 29-31.

Now, brethren Beebe, I humbly hope God will remember me, whether you and the readers of the SIGNS recognize me or not. I have seen the hand of God here in the churches of the old Greenville Association, how their hearts are the more sweetly running together since they have been cleansed of these evils; and while I feel humbled at the loss of some whom I once held in such high and holy esteem, I feel to hope that they may be enabled to return again purified and single to the solemn feasts and offerings of Zion.

As ever, in love,

A. B. BRES.
